The NEWS has received a call from Elders R. A. Berry, of Kanarra, Iron county, and J. T. Tanner, of Beaver, who are on their way home from a mission to the Southern States. Since their release from missionary labors they have made a brief visit to the Eastern and Northern States, going by steamer from Savannah, Georgia, to Baltimore, and then visiting Washington, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Independence and other points of interest. Both are in excellent health and spirits. They will stop over in Salt Lake until Thursday.

Elder Berry left home March 25, 1892, and was assigned first to the North Carolina conference, where he labored five months. He was then transferred to the South Carolina conference, remaining there till released. He received kind treatment from the people and enjoyed his missionary labors, which were mostly in the country districts.

Elder Tanner left home March 9, 1892, his first field being in South Carolina. After being there about a month he was called to North Carolina, and five months later was again sent to South Carolina, where he remained till his release. He also was kindly received by the people. His labors were chiefly in the larger cities.

Both Elders arrived in this city this (Monday) morning. Their experience is that the prejudice against the Latter-day Saints is far from being as strong as formerly, as the Saints are becoming more properly understood. The Temple dedication, accounts of which were sent to all parts of the country and were generally read, contributed largely to this. The visit of the Tabernacle Choir to the World's Fair also was an important factor in this respect. Many of the leading men of the South were at the Fair, and attended the musical contest, and what they learned there through the presence of the choir has been of material aid in giving the better classes of society in the South a more correct and favorable view of the Latter-day Saints than was held formerly.

Elder H. N. Lunt, of Cedar City, Iron county, made a pleasant call at the NEWS. He arrived here Tuesday, May 1st, on his way home from his mission to Great Britain, whither he left February 16, 1892, and will continue his journey south tomorrow morning. Elder Lunt's first missionary experience in Great Britain was in the Manchester conference as traveling Elder. Later he was appointed to preside over the Liverpool conference, retaining that position until his release to come home. He reports considerable improvement in missionary prospects the past year, with an abatement of the prejudice against the Latter-day Saints and increased success attending the labors of the missionaries. The feeling of unity and earnestness which exists among the Elders is all that can be desired. Brother Lunt's health was excellent, and his labors in the Gospel cause were highly enjoyable.

THE Y. L. M. I. A. CONFERENCE.

The members of the Young Men's and the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement associations of the Utah Stake had a very enjoyable time in their annual conference, which commenced Friday, May 5 and closed Sunday. The ward choirs of the Stake during the conference have given three concerts in the Stake tabernacle which have been greatly enjoyed, and showed a great improvement over the concerts given a year ago at the Young People's conference. The Young Ladies' conference was held Saturday and was well attended. Territorial President E. B. Taylor was in attendance and addressed the young ladies in a pleasing and encouraging manner. The portions of Friday and Saturday not devoted to concerts were taken up by business meetings of the two associations.

Yesterday the Y. M. M. I. conference was held in the tabernacle and was largely attended. President Joseph F. Smith and Elder B. H. Roberts were down from Salt Lake City, and Stake President Smoot and his counselors, together with the Y. M. M. I. Stake officers and other prominent workers in educational matters occupied the stand. The report of Stake Superintendent Keeler of the condition of the Y. M. M. I. A. was very encouraging, showing an increased interest in mutual improvement work in the Stake. Prof. Brimhall, Prof. B. Cluff Jr. and Elder B. H. Roberts also spoke, urging upon the members of the association study and intellectual development, making the knowledge of the principles of the Gospel a foundation upon which to build their educational structure.

In the afternoon President Joseph F. Smith delivered an eloquent and instructive discourse.

In the evening Elder B. H. Roberts lectured upon the subject of agnosticism to a large and attentive audience.

AT ABINGDON.

Elder J. D. Owen writes from Abingdon, Berkshire, England, where he and Elder Albert Seare, both of this city, are laboring, that they are meeting with good success in their missionary labors. The town is the old home of Elder Seare's father, and the estimable character which the latter, who now resides in this city, had in the town and neighborhood has proved of great advantage in securing for the missionaries kind and honorable treatment. Elder Owen relates many experiences that himself and companion have passed through, one being in connection with open air meetings which they have been holding in Abingdon. The people attended their meetings very largely, and the Elders had excellent opportunity, which they availed themselves of, of presenting the principles of the Gospel. At a meeting just previous to the time the letter was written they had got through with the service, which had been listened to attentively by a large audience, when a minister followed, denouncing the Mormons, but admitting that the two young men who had been speaking had preached Bible doctrine. When he concluded, the crowd demanded that the "boys" speak in their own behalf, which they did. The minister again began, but the audience objected to his being abusive in his language and would not listen. The outcome was a challenge to meet the minister at his home next day, which the Elders accepted, and the interview was of a prolonged and pleasant character, the reverend gentleman treating the young missionaries with marked courtesy. They explained to him the principles of the Gospel, they were preaching, replied to many objections he made, and at their withdrawal he invited them to come again, saying he had obtained from them much valuable information. The people of the whole town were awakened by the proceedings to an interest in the discussion which had taken place, and the Elders were receiving many and frequent calls to explain the principles of the Gospel.

Says the Carbon county (Wyo.) Journal: Dr. Ricketts has performed the operation of resection upon John Childs who was accidentally shot a few days ago. He took from the upper end of the humerus from fifteen to twenty pieces of bone, some of them two and one-half inches long and more than one-eighth of an inch wide. Dr. Stuver assisted by administering chloroform. The operation lasted one hour, and the patient has visibly improved since that time. It is still a question whether the arm will be saved, but every effort to that end is being made.

The foreign trade of Mexico, says the Bullion, is at a very low ebb, and importations that are paid in gold or in depreciated silver dollars, are greatly diminished, while the demand for certain lines of European foreign goods has continued, prices of all such commodities having reached a point beyond the purse and means of the Mexican consumers, enterprising citizens have embarked in numerous industries, and are now producing many articles heretofore obtained from the workshops and factories of foreign nations. Thus it would seem that England and Germany's crusade against the white metal will react violently against their own commercial interests.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

ST. PAUL, May 1.—After being tied up for eighteen days almost completely from end to end, the Great Northern system will now resume work, the great strike being declared off tonight. It is practically a victory for the American Railway Union and President Debe, although the commercial bodies of the two cities were largely responsible for the result.

DENVER, Colo., May 3.—State Veterinarian Grosswell left today for the western part of the state, having been notified by inspectors that thousands of diseased Utah sheep are crossing the line into Mesa and Routt counties. Governor Waite will call out the militia, if necessary, to stop the invasion.

SONORA, Cal., May 3.—A lone highwayman held up the stage between Sonora and Milton last night, and in the presence of the passengers blew open an iron safe with giant powder. A valise and sealskin sack belonging to a passenger were blown to pieces, and the robber got nothing. He ordered the driver and passengers to go on and not look back for five minutes. They obeyed.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—By direction of the assistant secretary of war, the few remaining Indians composing company I, Second infantry, at Fort Omaha, Neb., and company I, Sixteenth infantry, at Fort Douglas, have been discharged, thereby practically wiping out the organizations and marking another step toward the total abandonment of the scheme of separate Indian companies.

LONDON, May 4.—Twenty and ten years' imprisonment respectively were the sentences of Guiseppe Fernaro and Francisco Polti, the dynamiters, today. Fernaro cried, "Vive l'anarchie," and was seized and held; Polti shouted, "Shame." While being taken from the court Fernaro said through the interpreters, "Today you make laws, another we shall make them."

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 4.—A new light has been shed upon the recent lynching of three negro barn burners at Tuscomb, a town in North Alabama. The negroes were taken to a bridge over the Tennessee river and after putting ropes around their necks the mob made them jump to death. Closely following this tripple lynching, notices were found pasted to the electric light poles at Tuscomb. The note reads:

"To the People of North Alabama:

"Many dark deeds have been done in your section, such as burning, stealing, etc., and have been done at the expense of the white-caps organization. We never had an organization in north Alabama until March 23, and now it numbers 453 in three counties of the best people in the state, and we are here to stay and try to protect the property of our people and do all the good we can. When the law is too slow, we take it in our own hands. We have just eleven on our docket to go as the three did last Saturday night. We have them on trial in our court and want just a little more evidence. Take warning.

"(Signed)

"NORTH ALABAMA WHITE-CAPS."

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The secretary of the interior has rescinded rule 114 of the rules of the practice governing motions for review on decisions on public lands to take effect June 1. The following rule, making an important change will be substituted:

Motions for review and motions for rehearings before the secretary must be filed with the commissioner of the general land office within 30 days after notice of the decision complained of, and will act as a supersedeas of the decision until otherwise directed by the secretary. Each motion must state concisely and specifically, without argument the grounds upon which it is based. On receipt of such the commissioner of the general land office will forward the same immediately to this department, where it will be treated as "special." If the motion does not show proper grounds for review or rehearing it will be denied and sent to the file of the general land office, whereupon the commissioner will resume the suspension and move to execute the judgment before rendered. But if upon examination proper grounds are shown the motion will be entertained and the parties notified, whereupon the moving party will be allowed thirty days within which to file an argument and have the same served upon the opposite party, who will be allowed thirty days in which to file and serve an answer; after which no further amendment will be received. Thereafter the case will not be reopened except under such circumstances as would induce a court of equity to grant relief against any judgment of the court at law.

All rules or parts of rules inconsistent herewith are rescinded.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., May 4.—The Union Pacific depot at Lookout, the first station west of Laramie, was burned this morning. The fire was started by sparks from a passing locomotive. The loss is $2,500.

SCOTTSDALE, Pa., May 4.—A riot occurred at the Painter works of the McClure Coal company at 6 o'clock this morning. The company made an effort to start this and other plants on Tuesday, and today the women determined to drive the "blacklegs" from work. With tin pans, clubs, coke forks and urrooms they marched to the coke yards. Sanford White, the mine superintendent, Ewing B. Roddy, the bookkeeper, and a lot of deputies were on guard. A shot was fired to scare the women, men rushed to the scene, and White opened fire on the crowd, which numbered over a hundred.

At the first fire three men fell wounded, one shot through the thigh, one through both legs and the third in the neck. The women carried off the wounded and the infuriated men set upon White and Roddy. White was beaten over the head, knocked down, kicked and bruised about the body. His recovery is doubtful.

A big Hungarian bad White down and was standing over him with an axe when he was knocked down by James Tarr, the store clerk. Roddy was at first thought to be badly injured, but he escaped with only slight bruises. While all this was going on, the deputies, who had begun to use Winchesters, shot one woman, who is said to be dying. It is now believed that at least sixteen were shot.

ST. LOUIS, May 4.—The announcement by Mrs. Ballington Booth at the Midland congress of the Salvation army, that Bishop D. S. Tuttle, of the Missouri diocese of the Protestant Episcopal church, had joined the army created considerable excitement. It was further announced that he is the first bishop in the world to join the army. It seems, however, that the bishop has not joined the army proper, but only that branch known as the "Salvation Army Auxiliary League."

AUSTIN, Tex., May 4.—The treasury of Texas is today without a dollar, a condition of affairs that has not existed for twenty-five years, during which time its revenue balance has ranged annually from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000. Before the end of the year there will be a deficiency of several hundred thousand dollars and it is doubtful if the state will be able to meet the interest on its bonds, amounting to $4,000,000.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., May 5.—A report has reached here from Union county, Ark., to the effect that a negro at Miles' switch, Ouchita county, was taken with some kind of a breaking out which was thought to be smallpox, and a doctor was sent for but he did not choose to attend the case. He was put in a cabin, to which some one set fire and the negro, being unable to effect his escape, perished in the flames. One report says he was shot and then burned.

BOSTON, May 5.—The Commercial Bulletin says of the Boston wool market: The total sales for the week were 1,176,100 pounds against 2,414,500 pounds last week and 1,795,798 pounds for the same week last year. The total sales show a shortage of 18,400,000 pounds for the same time last year. The receipts to date show a shortage of 32,872 bags domestic and 67,369 bales foreign.

The week has been dull and featureless. Manufacturers are more discouraged over the outlook than six weeks ago and on account of this fact, coupled with the broken stock account for the small sales, our imports of foreign clothing wools have shrunk to about ten per cent of those for the same month last year.

PHILADELPHIA, May 5.—Although dispatches from Sir John N. F. announce that the proposed expedition to Ellesmerland to search for traces of the Swedish arctic exploring expedition headed by Bjorling will be abandoned, the friends of the five men who composed the party are informed that the Peary auxiliary expedition, headed by Henry C. Bryant, and sent out by the geographical club of this city, will explore Ellesmerland for any records that Bjorling may have left there. Ellesmerland is about thirty-five miles west of Peary's rendezvous and Mr. Bryant, who is familiar with the story of Bjorling's ill-fated journey, says that even before he heard of the failure of Prof. Sten's expedition, he had made up his mind to visit Ellesmerland for the purpose of learning something of Bjorling's fate.

The story of Bjorling's fate is sad and at the same time interesting. As a student in a Swedish university he won a prize of $300, which was to be spent in original research. The young man decided to make the Arctic regions the scene of his operations, and in the spring of 1882 with a fellow student named Kallstenius, he came to St. Johns, where he hired a small fishing schooner. With a crew consisting of a Scotchman, a Dane and an Italian, Bjorling started northward early in the summer of 1882. The vessel was wrecked on Carey Island, which is uninhabited, and a Scotch fishing schooner some months afterwards found the wreck and records by Bjorling, which stated that on August 25, 1882, the party would cross Jones Sound to Ellefmereland, which is believed to be inhabited by Esquimaux who have never yet seen the face of a white man. The captain of the fishing smack took the records to Europe and his story induced the friends of Bjorling to organize the expedition which has just been abandoned.

It is a curious fact that in August, 1892, just three days before Bjorling left Carey island, the Peary relief expedition conveying Lieut. Peary and his companions back to civilization, passed within sight of Carey's island. At that time the island was obscured by a fog and the expedition continued southward, oblivious of the fact that five brave men were on the bleak island watching and praying for assistance that would have been gladly given them. Mr. Bryant is not very hopeful that any of the Bjorling party are alive, but he hopes to find an authentic report of their existence in Ellefmereland.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Sena Hazelton, Vermont, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Venezuela.

Among postmasters nominated was A. H. Snow, for Box Elder, Utah.

LANSING, Mich., May 5.—Governor Rich has appointed John Patton Jr. United States senator to succeed Senator Stockbridge, deceased, until a successor is elected by the legislature next January.

GRAND JUNCTION, Col., May 5.—The citizens have determined to memorialize Congress to build two large canals to reclaim over a million acres in western Colorado and eastern Utah. The estimated cost is $5,000,000.

BERLIN, May 5.—The Prussian Unterhaus on Tuesday last by a vote of 237 to 92, passed the evangelical church law amendments. This law permits that church in future to regulate certain matters by its own authority. Such matters heretofore have been decided by the Diet. The bill is a great concession of ultra-orthodoxy, and will have the effect of driving from the church thousands of high-educated, broad and liberal-minded men. The measure was passed in the teeth of the liberal opposition, and by the assistance of the center party, who want to see orthodoxy strengthened in every church.

This will bring about a general uprising of Liberals, and already a call has gone out from a dozen churches. The professors of the universities are taking the lead and have determined to make strenuous efforts to fight what they class as the most serious attack upon freedom of thought in Germany. It is stated the bill will make ineligible for any church office any one who declines to declare a literal belief in a material trinity.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 6.—The Courier-Journal, in an editorial today, declares that Breckinridge should be beaten for re-nomination. The paper says: The situation in the Ashland district is unprecedented, and makes it imperative that every journal which has the good of the party at heart, which cherishes the honor of its state and which appreciates its obligations to society, shall protest with all its power against the re-election to Congress of Colonel W. C. P. Breckinridge.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 6.—The town is wild with excitement at midnight over the sensational scenes witnessed in the Methodist church tonight. After the noted preacher, H. C. Morrison, had finished his sermon, the pastor, Southgate began to talk about the attack made upon him yesterday by Colonel Breckinridge at the opera house. He said that he was willing to lay down his life, if it need be, in defense of the virtue of the women of the congregation. Southgate then added that he was sorry his original remarks before the Y. M. C. A. had not been printed in every paper in the land.

"I repeat those remarks," said he. "I again say that no decent Christian can afford to vote for this man."

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., May 6.—The police are working upon the theory that an organized band of kidnappers are at work in this city. In addition to the mysterious disappearances of W. H. Harrison, a well-known traveling man, and two little daughters of Patrick Day, as told in these dispatches yesterday, the disappearance of three other small children is now reported.

Yesterday evening Mrs. Day's two little daughters left home to gather greens. At night they failed to re-appear, and although a search for them has been kept up ever since, nothing in the nature of a clue to their whereabouts had been discovered. Besides these one other child is also missing. All are under the age of 12 years.

These mysterious disappearances, the strangest part of which is that they all occur in broad daylight, have so alarmed the parents that little ones are guarded with the utmost zealousness.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 7.—A Washington special to the News says that the proposition of the woolen manufacturers to the Senate committee on the wool tariff is as follows: The McKinley tariff to remain untouched until January, 1895; then a reduction of 10 per cent to be made, followed annually by a similar reduction until absolute free trade conditions are reached. This schedule has, it is understood, been submitted to the New England manufacturers by the Democratic woolen manufacturers and they have agreed to it, and it is claimed that virtually all woolen manufacturers of the United States have signed the petition.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 7.—About midnight a mob of 200 went to the mines of Thomas Price, Horse Creek, Walker county, where the miners refused to join the strikers, put dynamite under the boiler and engine and blew them up. They destroyed the main ways of the mines, supplies and other property. At the Victor mines they blew up a railroad car loaded with timbers. Several other cars they turned loose down hill. Sheriff Guthrie telegraphed Sheriff Morrow and the governor for assistance and the mob dispersed. He then countermanded the appeal. Several ringleaders are being hunted. Governor Jones has put troops upon orders. An attack on Pratt City and the Coalburg miners are feared.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Probably few members of Congress realize just how strained the situation in Hawaii is today. A letter dated April 5th, received by C. C. Moreno from R. W. Wilcox, Honolulu, puts the case in this way: "Every Hawaiian expects to learn of the final decision of the Hawaiian question on the arrival of the steamer Mariposa, which is expected on the 12th. They look only for fair play on the part of the Senate. They ask simply that the Senate will support Cleveland's policy for the restoration of the status quo ante the 16th of January, 1892, when Stevens, the Jingo representative of the United States overthrew the legitimate government and established a missionary oligarchy, which is a curse to us and a disgrace to modern civilization. The Hawaiians are keeping the peace, notwithstanding the insults they have received from the provisional government, for they wish to show every regard and courtesy to President Cleveland and his policy. A bloody revolution will follow, however, if the Senate fails in its duty and throws contempt upon the honor, integrity and justice of the policy of the chief magistrate of the United States toward Hawaii. Whatever the Senate may do, you may be assured that I will do my duty to my country, and that very soon."

"A. M. Damon, minister of finance of the provisional government, has given his assurance to Samuel Parker that the provisional government would retire in a body and surrender control of the kingdom to the queen as soon as it learned that the Senate approves of President Cleveland's policy. The scheme of the provisional government for inducing the Hawaiians to forswear their independence and forsake their queen turns out a complete failure. The Chinese have organized as a body to secure the restoration of the queen, in case the United States Senate fails to do justice. The Japanese have taken the same course. These bear in mind that they are all apart from the Hawaiians themselves and from the white foreigners. The Hawaiians are going to hold a mass meeting next Monday to denounce the fraudulent constitutional convention and the mock republic set up by the missionaries."

MILTON, Cal., May 7.—The down stage from Angels to Milton was held up this morning by a lone highwayman. He demanded the Wells Fargo box, which was given him. Then he handed a letter and a package to the driver, to be sent to Sonora, saying they contained the articles he took from the Sonora stage last Wednesday.

FORT SMITH, Ark., May 7.—Judge Parker, who presides over the Indian territory, and who has probably made a closer study of the Indian problem than any other man in this country created a sensation here today by utterances during his address to the grand jury, which are significant, in view of the present agitation of the Indian problem. He said, in part:

"The government of the United States has made many pledges to the Indians which have never been redeemed. When these people were removed to the territory the government said to them: 'Not only will we give you homes and farms in fee simple, but we will protect you in your rights. We will give you every protection against lawlessness; we will see that every refugee, every bandit, every murderer that comes into your country is put out.' Not one of these pledges have ever been kept."

SAN FRANCISCO, May 7.—James B. Elliot, business manager of the Chronicle, narrowly escaped death from a pistol shot fired by James Rudolph, a well known local politician, in the Chronicle business office shortly after noon today. Rudolph entered the office and was making a noisy demonstration in abuse of Mr. M. H. De Young, when Mr. Elliot interfered. Rudolph drew a pistol and the business manager closed with him.

An exciting struggle ensued, and Rudolph discharged the weapon at Elliot. The ball ranged downward and struck a silver dollar in Elliot's trousers pocket, saving him from serious if not fatal injury.

Rudolph was arrested and charged with assault to murder. He has a very bad record, having spent some years in San Quentin for a murderous assault. He was for a long time the body guard of ex-Boss Buckley. His grievance against Mr. De Young appears to have been wholly imaginary, and was perhaps the outcome of a recent protracted spree.

NEW YORK, May 7.—There was a procession on Broadway yesterday which excited the liveliest interest and curiosity among pedestrians. It was constantly followed by a crowd that at times numbered upward of 2,000 people. On the east side of the street a black Percheron stallion, an equine giant in stature and muscle, looking for all the world like stone engraved pictures of Thersites, Bucephalus, the charger of the Greek King Alexander, stalked up town in sullen anger. In front of him walked a man who held in his right hand the end of a taut rope, which was attached to a ring, and the ring pierced the horse's nose. His head was tightly wrapped in four ropes, which first passed through the bit rein and to these four strong men armed with whips were clinging, two on each side. Another keeper followed, carrying, among other things, a heavy iron rod, with a sharp cruel looking hook at the end of it.

The horse is valuable and came from Iowa. On account of his man-killing propensities and general viciousness he had been shipped to New York in order that Prof. Gleason, the famous horse tamer, might have a chance to subdue his demon-like temper, if possible. The stallion is a superb looking animal. He is a registered thoroughbred, and was imported as a two-year-old, for breeding purposes; he was sold but developed so vicious a temper as a three-year-old that he was sent to his present owner for less than was paid for him. All attempts to tame him have failed. He has killed three men who were careless while in his stall, and has maimed several others.

The "Iowa black demon," as he has come to be called in that state, had not left his box stall for three years, until he was shipped from Bedford last Thursday. The railroad authorities would not receive him until he was confined in a strong crate. When the train started the stallion made kindling wood of the crate before the first station out of Bedford was reached, and it was feared he would throw his ponderous form through the side of the car, but his head was securely held in bondage by heavy rope halters. The animal exhibited no particular bad temper after leaving Jersey City or en route to Madison square, but after he had been placed in a stall there it required the combined efforts of six or seven men under Prof. Gleason to release the bridle and head rope, and this dangerous task consumed nearly two hours' time. The beast snapped at everything in reach like a mad dog, and managed his forelegs like an expert boxer. No blacksmith has ever been found plucky enough to shoe him.

RICHMOND, Va., May 7.—The trial of Seymour S. Cadot who is charged with embezzlement of large sums of money from the Live Oak distillery company of Cincinnati, was suddenly interrupted by the death of J. H. Knowles, Sr., father of one of the jurors.

This has been a singular case, considering the fatality which has attended it. Soon after the proceedings against Cadot began, George Yost, secretary and vice-president of the Live Oak Distillery company, died quite suddenly at his home in Cincinnati. A few days later Mrs. Cadot, wife of the accused man, died. Shortly after this Miss Schmidtlapp, daughter of the president of the Live Oak company was taken ill and her father called from Washington while he was en route for Richmond. Now the father of one of the jurors passes away.

ATHENS, Cal., May 7.—Another severe shock of earthquake was felt here and in the Atalanta district today. Passengers on board the steamers traversing the straits state that they distinctly saw the earth trembling to such an extent as to cause part of the fortifications of Chalcois to fall.

LONDON, May 8.—The Argentine consul general has informed an Associated Press reporter today, that he has learned from an outside but trustworthy source that a revolution has broken out at Buenos Ayres. The Argentine legation has heard nothing.

GAINESVILLE, Tex., May 8.—One of the most destructive cyclones ever known in the Chickasaw nation has blown down twenty houses. One, occupied by B. C. Humphrey and family of six, was demolished and the occupants were scattered in all directions. Mrs. Humphrey will die. Frank, the ten-year-old son, received fatal injuries.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 8.—Francis Murphy, an American engineer and mining man, returned to this city from Mazatlan, Mexico, states that he was a member of a search party that left Durango about five weeks ago to find the whereabouts of H. L. Denton, C. P. Hall, Frank Turnstall, Americans, and two Mexican guides, who started from Salto, state of Durango, on a prospecting and hunting expedition into the Sierra Madre mountains. The men mentioned left Denver, Col., some months ago in company with a Mr. Freeman, who is purported to belong in St. Louis, and two New York gentlemen. The three latter together with an Indian guide and several Mexicans arrived back at Salto before the expedition was sent in search of their companions in a half starved, ragged and badly used up condition. They reported that they had run short of provisions in the mountains, lost their way and become separated from Denton, Hall and Turnstall and the balance of their party.

A relief party was immediately organized, two American miners and a number of Mexicans constituting the searchers.

The bleak and almost inaccessible parts of the Sierra Madre range were explored. In a ravine nearly forty-two miles from Salto, part of a camping outfit belonging to the missing men was discovered. A blind trail was followed for miles over the most ragged and inhospitable of the mountain region.

At one point a pole had been driven into the ground, to which had been fastened a torn shirt; also piece of paper, on which was printed with a pencil the words:

"Out of provisions; no water; have struck out for the foot of this canyon."

Five miles in a westerly direction from this signal the bodies of Denton and Hall were found lying on their backs. Several camping utensils, a Winchester rifle and a number of cartridges were scattered about the spot. The bodies were partly devoured by coyotes, but were easily identified. The clothing had nearly all been torn from Hall's body. Denton's remains were badly disfigured.

The remains of the two men were buried with solemn ceremony and a mound of stones raised over them.

No further time was then lost in pushing the hunt for Turnstall and the Mexicans.

The search party was divided, one half going north and the other half going eastward. A blind trail led the north bound party into a part of the mountains that could not be traveled through and the searchers were forced to turn back, their own provisions running low and the water supply being too far removed for safety.

The other party was entirely unsuccessful in finding any trace of Turnstall although it remained out for nearly ten days.

It is supposed that all the missing men have died of starvation.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., May 8.—The state weather bureau reports that the recent hot weather in the Sacramento and San Joaquin valley has more than offset the rains of last week, and grain crops are in a more precarious condition than before. The grain in San Joaquin is almost a total failure, and is much below the average in the Sacramento valley.

UTAH'S INDUSTRIAL ARMY.

MURRAY, Utah, May 2, 1894, 2:15 p. m.—The industrial army is still here, in about the same condition as yesterday. Some of the men are for pushing right on, some are inclined to desert, and others think that if a move is not made soon the force had better return to Salt Lake and make a permanent camp at least until the way is opened for them to get railway transportation east, as most of them realize the inadvisability of attempting such a movement on foot. All, however, are in a state of expectancy that Carter, who is expected back from Salt Lake in about an hour, will bring some word as to what course will be followed. There is a rumor that he has made a quiet arrangement with the railway that if the men move on tonight there will be means of their getting a train to carry them farther east. The ranks of the army are growing thinner by some deserting and returning to town and by others taking brake-beam passage on eastbound trains. All is quiet. No indication of disorder.

MURRAY, May 2, 3:45 p. m.—The army is still here, and Carter has not yet arrived from the city. It is said he is on the way, and has decided to resume the journey south.

The men are hustling about and getting ready to move. It is expected that they will start for Utah county, taking up their journey in about an hour, and will probably proceed as far as Sandy and camp there for the night, unless a train comes along which they can board and get out of the Territory with. Very few of the men are willing to turn back if transportation can be secured to the East. The people here anticipate that they will be well clear of the army before sundown.

FROM DAILY OF MAY 3RD.

About 200 men, probably half of them "industrialists," gathered on the vacant corner opposite the Metropolitan hotel on Third South street at 12 m. Thursday in anticipation of the final report that was to be made of the committee's efforts to get the Rio Grande Western to haul the Carter wing of the unemployed army east. There was considerable denunciation of the railway company for going back on its bargain to take the army to Denver for $1,000, but generally the assemblage was peaceful.

At 12:30 the committee expected—L. Johnson and J. R. Meakin—had not arrived, but John Stubbs hove into sight and the men crowded around him. He announced that up to the present the committee had been unsuccessful in its negotiation with the R. G. W., the officials of which had said they would not have the army for love or money. They would be liable to a fine of $200 for each man landed in Denver and would not take the risk. Stubbs further said that the citizens' committee and the ladies' general relief committee would wait on the railway again, and it was anticipated that tomorrow a train would come along so that the army at Murray could steal it, and thus get to the East. He also stated that the committee would report at 1 p. m. or as soon thereafter as possible.

At 12:45 "General" Carter arrived from Murray and Stubbs, who had been drumming for recruits for the "reserve industrial army," came up and received the report. He mingled among the men, talking to them about their prospects, but like them was uncertain of the outcome. He reported the army at Murray as in good spirits and anxious to start the journey south tonight.

The men at Murray complained that they are very short of shoes.

By half-past one this afternoon about 600 people had assembled. The registration of the "reserve" had been going on, nearly a hundred names being secured. At 1:30 the committee which had been working with the railway reported that there was no hope of assistance from that quarter. The railway officers had practically said that the men could starve where they were before it would afford them transportation. This news called forth a considerable outburst of indignation from part of the assemblage.

At 1:40 p. m. General Carter mounted an improvised platform and began to address the crowd, which occasionally cheered him. He explained that he had been working so hard that he was about worn out, and therefore had prepared his speech which he would read.

This address, which was evidently prepared for last evening, was furnished the reporters; but the "General" failed to forward the card rates for that kind of advertising, so the NEWS cannot accommodate him with giving it in full. He essayed pathos in some places and courage in others; became abusive at times, and tried to be prophetic at other times; nor was his address confined to the type-written copy. He took occasion to call the Herald a liar, and of course roasted the plutocrats. He thanked the people of Salt Lake who had been generous, and gave the railroads, the Mayor and the Governor fits. In conclusion he gave the interesting information, as to the negotiations with the railroad, that the R. G. W. had offered to carry the army to Grand Junction for $500, to Denver for $1,000, to Kansas city for $1,500; the $1,000 offer had been accepted, and the Governor, Mayor and leading Democrats had gone to the railway officials, who went back on their agreement, and were thus guilty of "the most cowardly deed ever perpetrated on the people."

He was followed by a local auctioneer, but the speech of the latter contained nothing that was new on the subject.

MURRAY, May 3.—The Carter army began breaking camp at 3 o'clock, and are now on the way to Bingham Junction.

FROM DAILY OF MAY 4TH.

Sheriff McQueen came up from the new camp of the "industrial army" this forenoon. The men he says are waiting for developments at the old lead smelting works at Bingham Junction. They are still fondly hugging the hope to their bosoms that a freight train will materialize for their benefit. Should they continue to be disappointed, as there seems to be every reason to believe they will, then it is thought they will take possession of the first train they can capture.

Sheriff McQueen went down to Bingham Junction at 1:20 this morning on a special train consisting of but one car and an engine. Soon after leaving the car to mingle with the men and consult with their officers a rush was made for the engine and an effort made to capture it. The hold up was very near successful, but the train hands fought like tigers and threw the army men off while running at the rate of six miles an hour. One of the men was badly hurt. General Carter said to a reporter today he had sent a physician to attend him and could not state at this time whether his injuries would prove fatal or not.

General Carter was up on business again today and still has hopes that arrangements will be made for him and his men to travel by rail. At least he says so. To a NEWS reporter he said: "There are 430 men in camp now. Most of them suffered from the cold last night. We expected 1,000 loaves of bread down from Salt Lake yesterday afternoon, but they didn't come and the men were pretty hungry. All they had for breakfast was two boxes of crackers that I went to a store and bought. They have since got provisions but not enough, however, to amount to much."

"In the face of the declaration of the Rio Grande railway officials to furnish you transportation, what do you propose to do?" asked the reporter.

"We propose to go and the Rio Grande will carry us, too. There is no mistake about it; I hope to convince the officials of that road during the day," said Carter, "that it will be to their interest to take us out of the Territory."

The "home reserve" of the industrial army paraded the streets today with General Carter enveloped in an American flag at the head. A meeting was held at the corner of West Temple and Third South streets, on the vacant lot, and was called to order by the chairman. General Carter addressed the crowd and depicted the great sufferings of the men as they lay last night along the railroad tracks near Bingham Junction. They had very little covering and cold and hungry, the most miserable night was spent. He scored the railroads generally and stated that the Rio Grande Western had acted treacherously, having agreed to carry the army for $1,000, but thereafter refused after the money had been raised. He said that they would compel the railroad to carry them and "On to Washington" was their motto.

Mr. Boyle followed in a red hot speech, the brunt of which was brought to bear against Gov. West and Mayor Baskin. He said he had "fought and bled and died" under the Stars and Stripes and was in favor of forcing recognition to the demands of the army by all peaceable means or they would shed human blood to do it if necessary.

A good deal of money was subscribed on the grounds, and the tenor of the speeches was to force the railroad to take the army away.

General Carter's commonwealth army is still camped at Bingham Junction. Carter was in the city May 5th and Sheriff McQueen went down to the camp in the afternoon. There is a good deal of talk about the army giving up in despair and disbanding. Another apparently well founded rumor has it that the leading officials of the Rio Grande Western will arrive here to-night to listen to a proposition concerning transportation. In the meantime all is uncertainty.

TO HELP THE INDUSTRIALS.

A meeting of sympathy was held by the "unemployed" workingmen of the city May 2nd in the interest of the industrialists who marched to Murray under the delusion that a Rio Grande Western train would materialize for their benefit.

The gathering was at the Walker Pavilion and was fairly well attended. John Stubbs was chosen chairman and in an introductory speech he denounced in his characteristic manner the Rio Grande Western officials, Mayor Baskin, some of the councilmen, Governor West, the President of the United States and in fact everybody who failed to see eye to eye with himself in the "army" movement. After catching his breath Stubbs offered the following declaration:

We, the workingmen, in mass meeting assembled, hereby declare our disapproval of the course which the Rio Grande Western Railway company has pursued in refusing to convey to Kansas City the Salt Lake contingent of the industrial army, when a fair equivalent in money was offered them by the Salt Lake committee, and we specially urge them to reconsider their decision and give every facility to aid the unemployed in their journey east.

Second, we, as American citizens, protest against the unconstitutional manner in which the government of the District of Columbia treated the industrial army on the Capitol grounds, when seeking redress and legislation in their interest; and we specially desire Congress to take our case immediately into consideration so as to avert a pending revolution.

Third, we, the laboring classes, shall form ourselves into a reserve industrial army, having for its purpose the upholding of the interests of labor, and we pledge ourselves to support, by all lawful means, the industrial army on its way to Washington.

H. L. R. Jones then made a speech and introduced the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the action of the executive board of the Knights of Labor, announced yesterday at Des Moines by Grand Master Workman Sovereign, and supported by President Debs, of the American Railway Union, that Kelly should ride out of Des Moines or every railroad in Iowa should be tied up, strikes the keynote for the solution of the transportation question for the industrial army.

Resolved, That when railroads discriminate against one class of American citizens and refuse to transport them, the mass of American citizens being in sympathy with that class, it is just to determine that the roads shall not carry other classes until they desist from such unjust discrimination.

Resolved, That the Salt Lake army contingent, under General Carter, now camped at Murray, must be furnished transportation over these mountains to Denver or Pueblo on their way to Washington.

All resolutions offered were then adopted. John F. Meakin and E. W. Reese also spoke and Jones moved that if no arrangements had been made by 12 o'clock May 3 for the transportation of the industrial army that 5,000 citizens, if that number could be secured, march in a body to the Rio Grande offices and see if they could not outweigh the influence of Governor West and Mayor Baskin, and induce them to take the army eastward. Carried unanimously.

THE "ARMY" ELSEWHERE.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The commonweal army was astir early today upon the Brightwood heights with preparations for the procession to the Capitol. There was an early breakfast on eggs, bread and coffee. The tents were packed into wagons and the army was in line before nine o'clock. All the men carried staves on which fluttered white flags with the motto, "peace on earth, good will to men; but death to interest on bonds."

It looked as if a circus was in town. There was little of interest in the walk up the Pennsylvania avenue to the Capitol grounds. The procession moved up B street to the top of the hill, where a broad expanse of avenues sweeps toward the east front of the Capitol. Mounted policemen stretched from curb to curb made ingress toward the Capitol impossible. The squad of police in front of the army went straight ahead. It was a ruse to carry the procession past the Capitol. Half a block up B street, Browne halted the column and dismounted. He turned over his horse to his attendant and then he went to Coxe's carriage and spoke to the general.

Coxey kissed his wife, sprang from the carriage and made his way toward the entrance of the Capitol. Browne followed, bearing a banner. The rank and file of the army stood in the street, but the officers spurred the crowd after Coxe and Browne. B street was impassable. Coxe sprang to the stone paving of the east front of the Capitol grounds and with a bound was inside the fence amid a tangle of shrubbery. Browne followed. The first officer tied his horse to the fence, climbed the fence at a bound and darted into the scrubbery. Other officers followed. Small trees, bushes and flower beds went down before the sweep of horsemen and the yelling crowd which followed. Coxe and Browne dodged through the bushes to an open area on the east front. There was a crash when the fugitives, officers and mob from the street met a wall of officers and people in the open. The people shouted. Coxe and Browne were lost for a moment. The policemen stemmed the rush after a minute, an officer using his baton freely. Coxe slipped unobserved through the struggling mass and bounded up the east front entrance to the Capitol. He was up to the tenth step before he was recognized. Then the officers closed in above him. The great crowd recognized him and a shout went up from every corner. Coxe turned to the crowd and raised his hat. He was pale. Captain Garden, of the Capitol police, stepped to the side of him, and Lieutenant Kelly, of the city police, held the other arm. The officers formed solidly about him. The crowd below was kept back by the menacing clubs.

Captain Garden took Coxe by the left arm and Lieutenant Kelly by the right, they moved down the steps, the solid ranks of officers following.

At the first step the great crowd greeted Coxe and officers with shouts. Again the mounted police charged and it looked as if there would be trouble, but the little knot of officers pressed forward with Coxe in the center, flanked by the mounted officers.

Carl Browne was a shining mark on account of his conspicuous costume, and the most aggressive portion of the crowd followed him. As Browne broke through the foliage half a dozen mounted police charged after him. When he reached the foot of the Capitol steps there was an exciting dialogue between him and the police. Two policemen threw themselves upon Browne and grabbed the flag of peace, smashed the staff, seized Browne by the shoulders and thrust him through the crowd several hundred feet to the sidewalk. The clubs fell upon the men's shoulders, but whether Browne was hit could not be seen. The officers rushed him through the crowd, he trying to shelter his head, shouting "I am an American citizen; I stand on my constitutional right." The dramatic marshal was dragged to the police station. When the police had escorted Coxe to his carriage, he clambered into the vehicle and a loud cheer went up from the crowd. Then the policemen lost their heads and falling upon luckless colored women, clubbed them. The army had not broken ranks in all the tumult. The humble bass drummer started the rhythmic "boom" upon his instrument and the commonwealers fell into step and with Coxe bowing to the right and left amid cheers, the procession turned down Second street to the south and started to the new camp in the malarious region of the extreme southern part of the city. Christopher Columbus Jones, of the Philadelphia contingent, was also arrested.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 1.—Grand Master Workman Sovereign arrived in Des Moines today, with the avowed intention of throwing the influence of the Knights of Labor in an effort to secure a train for Kelly's army. Asked what he would do if refused a train, he said: "I can only repeat that Kelly shall not walk out. The army shall ride, though every road in Iowa be tied up. I do not say the K. of L. could take such action of itself, but with the aid of the American Railway Union, should a move be made, it will be successful."

SPOKANE, Wash., May 1.—As a regiment of commonwealers passed out of their barracks this morning they were surprised to see 200 United States soldiers. The bluecoats had come in at sunrise from Fort Sherman, thirty miles distant. At 1:20 a. m. they received telegraphic dispatches from Gen. Otis at Vancouver, and 5 o'clock saw them in Spokane. They brought twenty days' rations and have gone into camp in the outskirts of town. The plan is to have them here in a position to be dispatched either east or west to protect trains against seizure.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 3.—Kelly's army is in desperate straits. Starvation stares the men in the face and the demonstration of the laboring people as a last resort was not a success. Only one hundred men marched to the state house. General Weaver led them. He told Governor Jackson that his delegation wanted to know if there was any power in the executive to secure a train. He said not a laboring man in Des Moines would countenance the violation of law, but all were anxious to prevent the disbandment in Des Moines of the suffering industrial army.

TACOMA, Wash., May 3.—Three hundred of the 1000 industrials encamped at Puyallup, marched up the track eastward this afternoon, congregating near Orting. Early this evening they seized a fast eastbound Northern Pacific freight train, and are now climbing the grade into the Cascade mountains.

The balance of the army at Puyallup has been ordered to march on double-quick time, under "General" Cantwell, up the track, where an effort will be made to hold the train till they arrive.

Marshal Drake has just been notified. He will leave at once with a force of deputies in pursuit. Probably the militia will follow.

HARRODSBURG, Ky., May 3.—C. Peter Springer, a Mexican war veteran and a Coxey enthusiast, with a half-dozen companions, left here this evening for Washington in a balloon to join the commonwealers. Springer is the same party who contributed $100 to Miss Pollard during the progress of her trial.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Coxey and his lieutenants, Browne and Jones, were arraigned in the district police court today for violation of the Capitol grounds act. The court room was filled, Populist members of Congress constituting a notable part of the assemblage.

The empanelling of a jury occupied two hours. The secretary of the board of trade was peremptorily challenged by the defense. Maloney then made the opening statement for the prosecution.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 4.—Kelly's industrials are disheartened. At breakfast time the commissary officers reported 1,000 loaves of bread on hand but scarcely enough meat and coffee to supply the officers' mess. Governor Jackson is endeavoring to secure cheap rates to the river but is not confident of success. To carry the men to the Mississippi at full fare would cost $6,500, and the railroads will accept nothing less. It is the general impression that Kelly will be starved out and the army dwindle to a corporal's guard before the river is reached.

VALPARAISO, Ind., May 4.—Gen. Randall arrived at Hobart with his army today. They "confiscated" all the bread and crackers in town and there was considerable rioting. Resolutions passed by the Valparaiso citizens, demanding that the army be prohibited from entering the city, were handed Randall, but he said they would march to Valparaiso nevertheless.

GUTHRIE, Okla., May 4.—The Oklahoma division of the army of the commonwealth held a grand rally to-night. About 400 "soldiers" were present. After a number of stirring addresses a resolution was adopted, deploring the unlawful action by the Washington authorities in preventing Coxey from speaking, and calling for immediate action upon the part of Congress "to bring a lawful judgment on the guilty persons concerning this diabolical outrage."

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Dr. G. P. Geringer, who has a tract of land near the city, offered the Coxey army a camp there and to pay them $500 if they would clear the ground of underbrush. The proposition struck Coxey favorably, but Browne was unwilling to move the camp so far and the offer was rejected.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 5.—A proposition to float Kelly's army down the Mississippi river on rafts is under consideration. It is feared Kelly will not be able to take over 800 men out of the city with him, and 800 will be turned loose on the city. During the past week 100 men brought here by the army have been jailed. The citizens committee disbanded today, notifying the army that they can do nothing more.

TRAPPED BY YAQUIS.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., May 2.—News is received here that the Yaquis have once more been victorious in their warfare with the Mexican troops. Once again the Indians have ambushed the forces sent against them.

The report says a force composed of soldiers taken from different regiments, accompanied by a party of national militia from Mexico, were in pursuit of the Yaquis in the Sierra de Bacateta. On the afternoon of the 5th day of March the trail led the pursuers into a long, deep, narrow defile in the Sierra de Bacateta. The walls of the canyon were almost precipitous, rising to a height in some places over 2,000 feet and covered with ambush.

Half the dangerous locality had been traversed with no sign of life nor motion from the cliffs towering above and the men were beginning to breathe easier, when suddenly huge masses of rock and boulders, loosened from the cliffs nearly 1,500 feet above, came bounding from wall to wall down upon the hemmed-in column, crushing horses and riders into shapeless heaps. Higher and higher rose the war cries of the well-armed Yaquis, who now began firing volley after volley directly into the struggling mass below, where all was confusion.

In such confusion it was impossible for the commands of the officers to be heard, but finally the colonel found a wounded bugler with yet life enough to sound a call. In a few moments, although still in range of those deadly rocks and rifles, those of the wounded able to move with assistance, were started back down the canyon, while those who were able to offer resistance fired volley after volley at random into the bushes on the cliffs and had the satisfaction of occasionally seeing a half-naked Yaqui leap convulsively from his hiding place and come whirling down through a thousand feet of space.

The number of killed cannot be accurately stated, but out of the column of 500 men it is said that at least 200 are either killed or wounded. An additional force of 100 militia has been organized at Hermosillo and Guaymas and the campaign against the rebels will be vigorously pushed. Torres himself and a small party of soldiers retreated to Guaymas, where according to one version that has reached Ensenada he has been placed under arrest because of his failure. This is not believed to be true. At any rate all the Mexican troops of Lower California, Sonora and Sinaloa are to be mobilized at Guaymas and another campaign organized against the Yaquis, but whether General Torres is to lead or not remains to be seen.

It is said that Don Jacinto Cerda, a young doctor, after the encounter in the canyon, left a place called La Mesa, with a small escort to attend the wounded and on passing a place called Arenas, fell into an ambush prepared by the same party of Yaquis. According to the report he was slain in a most cruel manner, the savages first flaying his feet and making him walk on them. They finally lanced him.

A FEARFUL LANDSLIDE.

ST. ALBANS, Quebec, (via Lachevrotiere), May 1.—Samuel Gauthier, a farmer of St. Albans, his wife Emily, their sons Joseph and David Gauthier, and a brother, are buried under a hundred feet of earth by the terrible landslide of Friday last. For miles there is nothing but desolation. Where the St. Anne river was once nearly a mile wide it is now only a narrow stream, raging and surging in a vain attempt to break its new bounds. Woods, houses, cattle, all are gone and nothing is left but barren ground of uneven height for six miles back. Here and there the debris of the ill-fated farmhouses, granaries and out-houses are seen in little heaps, tangled up with uprooted trees, and carcasses of dead cattle, but the most of it has been swept into the river and carried, long since, into the St. Lawrence, and thence toward the ocean.

The shores of the river are of peculiar formation and rise 150 feet above the level of the water, except for a mile or so where the slide occurred. Here, for about almost seven miles back, the earth has a gentle declivity and is nearly level with the river, whose bed had risen at least sixty feet. What the scene must have been when the earth began to move can be imagined. The lower soil of the river bank is composed of clay, honey-combed by the water, that for years back has filtered through from the mountains. It was 5 o'clock in the evening when these clay banks caved in, and with the hundreds of tons of sand on top slid into the river.

The farmers were just preparing for supper. The noise was terrific, but was followed by a sudden calm, for the roar of the falls had been smothered in the crumbling earth. The ground, however, kept on vibrating as from an earthquake, and the farmers for miles around rushed out of their houses for shelter, which they did not know where to find. After the first panic was somewhat allayed they went back, but the river had slowly risen, snow and ice, which is still plentiful here, helping to strengthen its power. The water rose for miles. It was fully 100 feet high, when the earth began again moving, first slowly, then faster and finally so fast that those who were fleeing were thrown down. It is a miracle, indeed, that no more human lives were lost.

It was a very fortunate fire in some ways, for had it occurred at night there would undoubtedly have been some loss of life.

William Dillon was instantly killed at the Ida Bell mine, Cripple Creek, Colo., on Friday. After touching off eight shots in the shaft he gave the signal to be hoisted to the surface, when within a few feet of the top, one of the shots went off, and in attempting to jump from the bucket and catch the top curbing, he missed his hold and fell a distance of sixty-five feet. The body was badly mangled.

Judgment has been rendered in the court against Alturas county, Idaho, for $84,160.41. This, says the Statesman, represents the principal and interest on the Alturas county court house bonds. Alturas refused to meet the interest after the county was divided, claiming the new counties should pay their portion of the indebtedness. The case will undoubtedly be appealed, and, if the judgment be affirmed, Alturas will be forced to meet the obligation alone.

Fred Borchett, of Cherry creek, observes the White Pine (Nev.) News, reports that several cattle, the property of ex-Governor Adams, made their way to the mudholes at Goodrich's hot springs. Several have been taken out, but the flesh on their legs being cooked by the hot water in the springs, they had to be killed. The governor's men have moved the herd south so that there will be no more danger. This is the first time that stock has been known to perish at these springs.

On Tuesday afternoon the entire city chain gang at Los Angeles, Cal., made a dash for liberty. Four of their number made good their escape, while the remainder surrendered when the guards began firing with revolvers. Investigation revealed the fact that the legirons were neatly filed at the joint, requiring but a gentle tap to sever the bond. The men have objected to working in the sun, and it is presumed laid their plans carefully with the hope that if a general break was made the majority would be able to escape from the two men who guarded them.

The boarding house up at the Silvernite mine, at Crested Butte, Colo., which is owned and operated by Chicago capitalists, was burned on Wednesday morning at 1 o'clock. The fire was caused by a defective flue and spread with such rapidity that by the time the inmates were aroused it had gained such headway that they had to fight bravely for their lives, saving but few articles of clothing. Four men walked three miles through the mountains, clad in blankets. All the men lost sums of money, the superintendent's footing up to over $800.

The San Francisco and San Mateo Railroad company has been attacked by the sheriff to satisfy a judgment of $10,000 recently awarded by a jury to Mrs. Mary Mahoney. Some months previous Mrs. Mahoney's husband was killed near Ocean View by an electric car. She clearly proved negligence on the part of the motorman, and the jury awarded her the amount stated. The company immediately secured a stay of proceedings and agreed to file a bond to pay the judgment in the event of defeat in the Supreme Court. This the company did not do in time, however, and Mrs. Mahoney's attorney took out an execution on the company's property.

George Fox, of Angel's Camp, Calaveras county, Cal., has a two-year-old colt which is to a certain extent a natural curiosity, says the Lodi Review. For some months past the colt has had a tender spot near its right ear, and recently it resulted in an open wound. After trying in vain to heal it its owner decided to take the animal to a doctor of Stockton to have the wound treated. The doctor after a careful examination made an incision with his scalpel, and taking a pair of strong forceps in his hand, he drew from the place a well-formed molar tooth, in form, shape and color exactly like those in the colt's mouth. The colt improved at once and the wound is healing.

An important amusement enterprise is being arranged for Los Angeles, Cal., by parties who have had wide experience in the business. It is to be a zoological garden, says the Express, something like the famous Woodward garden at San Francisco and the similar resorts of Cincinnati and other eastern cities. It is proposed to occupy 40 acres of ground and have an aggregation that will be a continual attraction to people everywhere. The location is not definitely fixed upon yet, but several are under consideration and all are within a few minutes' ride by street car. It is said the enterprise is backed by ample capital and an agent has already been retained to negotiate for animals.

Jennie Young, the eighteen-year-old daughter of a prosperous farmer living at Omro, twelve miles from Oshkosh, Wis., arrived at Pueblo, Colo., on Sunday evening to marry Frederick Swanson, a miner, with whom she became acquainted through correspondence two years ago through a Chicago matrimonial bureau and to whom she has since been constantly writing and exchanging pictures without the knowledge of her family. She came West telling them that she was going to visit a cousin in Cripple creek. Swanson was not the kind of a man she expected and she refused to marry him, and has made him buy her a return ticket to her home. She says she will stay in Colorado for a time to see the sights.

Henry Gannon, in the employ of a dairyman some three miles from Folsom, Cal., committed suicide on Tuesday by cutting his throat. On Tuesday the cattle were removed from the upper ranch to the home farm. Gannon was left in charge of the former place. During the night the milk house took fire and was entirely consumed. This seemed to have affected his mind, for as soon as he had finished his string of cows he walked to the gate of the corral, saying, "Goodby, John," as he passed his brother, who was still milking. Taking a razor from his pocket he swept it across his throat, making a gash that extended from ear to ear, nearly severing his head from his body. With such force was the blow given that nearly the entire edge of the razor was broken. The deceased was a native of Switzerland and aged about 45 years.

Justice Cordell's court in Walkerville was the scene of an incident recently which served to break the usual monotony of the judicial grind, remarks the Butte (Mont.) City Miner. Mrs. Nuxon of Chicken flat was arraigned for disturbing the peace and the case was continued. She could not give bonds and the court instructed the constable to put her behind the bars of the county bastille to await trial. The constable was proceeding to execute the order of the justice, but Mrs. Nuxon objected. She told the constable he was not man enough to take her to the city jail. When he approached her to put nippers on her wrists she said: "Wait till I take off me coat and tie up me hair and I'll make trouble for ye." The minion of the law waited and the delay was fatal, for in the next moment the cyclone struck and the constable was tessed over the shoulders of the irate herculean female. Two moments later she was using him as a judicial moprag; finally she was secured and sent to jail.

A party of residents of Lovelock, Nev., are preparing to explore a cave on the eastern shore of Humboldt lake, says the Lovelock New Era. This much is known of the cave—the two entrance chambers of immense proportions are strewn with skeletons of human beings, but beyond the galleries are precipitous and lead down to a place where a lone explorer would not care to enter.

The Piutes have a tradition that in the dim past, when their ancestors first settled in that vicinity a race of cannibals inhabited that region. The Piutes made war upon them and the cannibals were defeated, and 2,000 of them sought refuge in the cave. The Piutes built huge fires at the entrance to the cave and smothered the cannibals with smoke, and the relics found in the cave are the skeletons of the cannibals and the weapons used by them in warfare.

The sheriff and deputy sheriff of Otero, N. M., have just returned from a chase of 1,000 miles after Daniel Lisneros, bringing their man with them. Lisneros is one of the principal members of the Las Vegas secret society, the majority of whom are under arrest on numerous charges of robbery and murder. He is accused of being implicated in the hanging of a man named Mase two years ago.

The largest tree in the world lies broken and petrified at the end of a defile in northwestern Nevada, says the Santa Rosa Democrat. The following story of the colossal petrification is told: "Close to the Baker county line we came to an opening in the rocks about wide enough for our wagons to go through, and on either side loomed precipices 500 and 600 feet high. The crevasse was about fifteen miles long, and at its end, just to the right of the trail, we found a number of petrified tree stumps of different heights and sizes. In their midst on the ground, lay a monster tree, somewhat imbedded in the soil. It was completely petrified, and from the clean-cut fractures of the trunk, seemed to have fallen after its petrification. At its butt this tree was quite sixty feet in diameter. We measured its length with a tape-line, and it was 666 feet long. No limbs remained, but in the trunk were clefts where apparently limbs had been broken off. Where the huge trunk was broken squarely off, the center seemed transparent, and the growth marks showed in beautiful concentric rings. Its natural appearance was handsomer than any dressed marble or mosaic I ever have seen, and we all expressed the opinion that it would make a wonderfully beautiful floor and interior finish for some grand building.

Among the steerage passengers on the steamship Peru which left for China yesterday (says the San Francisco Chronicle of Sunday) was Ah Chung, who was pardoned by Governor Markham during the past week after having served sixteen years' imprisonment at San Quentin for a murder he never committed. Ah Hoy was guilty of the murder of Lee Ah Ngong, and during the years that Ah Chung has been in prison Hoy had been living in Chinatown and growing rich. That he was sorry for Ah Chung is shown by his latter acts, but he did not permit his sympathy to interfere with his money-making or to land him in San Quentin, where he belonged. Ah Hoy finally accumulated sufficient money to return to China and buy for himself a home and enjoy life without labor. Six months ago, before going to China, Ah Hoy called upon an aunt of Ah Chung and confessed to her that he, and not Chung, had killed Lee Ah Ngong. He gave to the aunt a large sum of money with which to employ an attorney to secure a pardon for Ah Chung and to pay all his expenses to China. He also agreed that when Chung reached the Flowery Kingdom he would be presented with funds sufficient to keep him as long as he might live. After making these arrangements Ah Hoy at once took a steamer for China. There was no more delighted or happier passenger on the Peru than Ah Chung.

This is the third time this spring that a number of sheep have been killed by dogs.

John J. Carroll, whose case was before Justice Thomas Culpit, of Park City, today, will have an opportunity of answering before the grand jury to a charge of assault with intent to murder. The crime committed was of a most diabolical character, and if the intent of the perpetrator had been carried out would have resulted in the death of several persons. The evidence implicating Carroll is purely circumstantial, but presents a strong case against him. His bonds were fixed at $1,000 to await the result of an investigation.

The crime for which Carroll was arrested is exploding giant powder under the steps of John Bogan's residence on Main street, Park City, on the morning of May. On that occasion a terrific report startled the town, breaking the windows in houses along the street and creating consternation in the locality. The actual damage done was not very great, owing to several sticks of giant powder failing to explode. As it was, however, the long flight of steps was partly demolished, four large panes of glass in the front of the house were shivered to atoms, and several articles in the house thrown down. The people in the locality said the explosion caused the earth to shake as though there was an earthquake. Had the powder been rightly used and been all exploded, it is likely that all the occupants of the house would have been killed.

The connection of Carroll with the outrage is believed to be due to domestic troubles. He has been addicted to drunkenness and to ill using his family. Some time ago Mrs. Carroll left him and went with her children to live with Mrs. Bogan. Then Carroll's two daughters were persuaded to go back and live with their father, but in a drunken spree he acted as violently toward them as he had to his wife, and assaulted them with a knife, they having to flee into the darkness and storm to save their lives, and remained out all night. Afterwards they again obtained refuge with Mrs. Bogan.

Recently Carroll has endeavored to persuade his wife to return to him, but her former experience deterred her from doing so. On Thursday night he tried to get her to go up the canyon with him, saying he had rented a house there and wanted her to see it. He said he was going to take the temperance pledge. She refused to go, however, feeling that her life would not be safe, and subsequent events indicated that her fears were well grounded, as the giant powder outrage points to the fact of an attempt to murder her.

The circumstances connecting Carroll with the affair are: He should have been at work Thursday night, but was not, being at Bogan's at 10 o'clock, when he came to see his wife, and because she would not go with him cursed and swore like a pirate; he was seen in the Union tunnel, where the Ontario company keep its powder, about midnight; just as the explosion occurred he went into a saloon near by; his past record as a powder user is against him, as on a former occasion when his wife left him and took refuge at the residence of a Mr. Winn, Carroll exploded giant caps on the roof of Winn's house; at another time, when the Union concentrator was being built, Carroll had a quarrel and began throwing powder into the boiler room, causing the men to rush out of the building, but fortunately none of it was ignited.

LADIES' MEETING.

Sisters Zina D. H. Young and E. B. Wells returned Wednesday, May 2 from Utah county, where they have been attending the meeting of the sisters. On Monday, April 30, the Relief society conference of Utah Stake was held at Lehi, Mrs. Mary John presiding. There were two meetings, at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. as usual. The Lehi meeting house was filled. Bishop Cutler and a number of brethren were present. Reports from the Relief society of Lehi, American Fork, Alpine, the several wards of Provo and Pleasant Grove were given, and interesting speeches were made by Counselors Marilla Daniels and Debora Bothings of Utah Stake, also Bishop Cutler, Sisters Young and Wells. The subjects were the cultivation of faith, the bearing of testimony, the sowing of grain, building halls to meet in, the circulation of the Woman's Exponent, and such other matters as pertain to the labors of the sisters in this charitable and philanthropic work.

On Tuesday, May 1st, the Woman Suffrage association of Utah county held a semi-annual convention at which delegates were present from Spanish Fork, Lehi, American Fork, Pleasant Grove and several from Provo, Mrs. Electa Bullock in the chair. Besides reports of work addresses were made by Mrs. Marilla Daniels, Mrs. Snyder, Mrs. Ellen Jakeman, of Provo, Mrs. Fannie Stuart, of Pleasant Grove, Mrs. Agnes Lewis, of Spanish Fork, Mrs. M. Thurman Gadday, of Lehi, Mrs. Sarah Boyer, of Springville, and Olive B. Huntington, of Springville. Mrs. Wells gave some facts and figures and a choir of young girls from Spanish Fork rendered sweet music, which added much to the enjoyment of the audience. Refreshments in great variety and abundance were served in the hall to all present after the morning session, by the ladies of the Provo W. S. A.

After the convention adjourned a special meeting of the Relief society was held at which speeches were made by several sisters, though President Zina D. H. Young was the principal speaker.

At 7:30 the same evening a special meeting of the Relief society was held at American Fork, Mrs. Ellen Clark presiding. There was a good attendance of the sisters and a few brethren. Bishop Robinson and Counselor Webb were present on the stand, and addresses were made by Sisters Shilby, Clark, Zina D. H. Young, E. B. Wells and Bishop Robinson. The subjects were very similar to those spoken upon at Lehi and much encouragement was given in all the meetings to the good work being accomplished by the society, its great growth and wonderful advancement, in this and other lands.

AS TO SPRAYING.

MANTI, April 30th, 1894.

I have just read an article in the SEMI-WEEKLY of April 24th about spraying trees—a subject in which I am interested. It gives directions to spray with a mixture of one pound London purple to 200 gallons of water to apple, pear, plum, cherry, etc. I will now give my experience of one season. I bought a sprayer last spring, and sprayed as the direction given in the pamphlet I received with it, namely: Mix one pound of London purple to 160 gallons of water; I sprayed three times, the most loaded ones four times, 10 to 12 days between; but I could see there were not many worms killed, I think about four-fifths of the apples contained worms, but the fruit was bigger than some years before, and but very few fell from the trees before they were ripe, compared to former seasons. I was the only one that sprayed an orchard in this locality, and I cannot expect the full benefit of spraying until my neighbors do the same; but I think there might be some other ingredient mixed with the London purple, in order to destroy the pests. I would be glad to hear some further information, as I think the London purple is not sufficient to reach the desired effect. Does anybody know of an addition to the London purple that will not injure the trees?

OBITUARY NOTES.

MARY BRIGGS.

Mary Briggs, beloved wife of Ephraim Briggs, was called to the great beyond at Bountiful, Davis county, on April 30, 1894, after an illness of more than seven weeks. She had been ill heretofore on several occasions. Her immediate death was caused by a complication of diseases; first pneumonia, then consumption, and finally a touch of typhoid fever.

She was the daughter of Mary and John Evans and was born on the 20th of September, 1853, eighty-two miles east of Salt Lake City. She was married on December 28, 1874.

Her death seems the more sad on account of her being just in the prime of life and having to leave a family of young children, the youngest being only about three years old. She was the mother of eight children, six of whom survive her. The funeral services were held in the Bountiful Tabernacle April 26, at 2 p. m. Elders Amos Cook, Joseph J. Holbrook,

C. R. Jones, Henry Rampton and John Stable Sr. spoke words of consolation to the large audience which had assembled upon the occasion. About thirty-five vehicles accompanied the remains to their final resting place.

JONES.

Last Sunday word was received in Beaver that Sister Jane Jones, commonly known as Jane Kelley, had died at Pine Creek hill on her way home from the Temple at Mantli. The report proved to be correct. About a week previous to this in company with her husband and others, Sister Jones left her home in Adamsville to go to Mantli to do some work in the Temple there. After this was accomplished the party started homeward and the first day out the lady took sick. She gradually sank until Pine Creek hill was reached, some 15 miles north of Beaver, when she died.

The funeral services were held in the Adamsville meeting house on Tuesday, the 24th inst. A very large concourse of people assembled to pay their last and respects, for the lady had many friends in Beaver county. Appropriate remarks were offered by Elders W. H. Bakes, J. F. Tolton, J. J. Griffiths, John R. Murdock, Bishop George Munford and President C. D. White. The remains were followed to their resting place in the Beaver cemetery by 37 vehicles.

Jane Jones was born at Cefn Coedy Cymmer, Breconshire, Wales, on the 10th day of April, 1829, and died April 22, 1894, aged 65 years and 12 days. She was one of a large family, and while still young learned to be industrious, which trait she has carried through life. When she came of age she married Benjamin Kelley and lived at a place called Ryd y Carr, near Merthyr Tydvil, Glamorganshire, Wales, where the Gospel found her. She emigrated to Utah in 1863 with her husband and one child—a daughter. Her husband had poor health at the time, which finally resulted in his taking off. She afterwards married Brother Jno. J. Jones, of Adamsville, and moved to that place from her former home about the year 1890. To Brother Jones she has been married seventeen years. At her death she left one daughter, her only child, eight grandchildren and many friends to mourn her loss.

Sister Jones was a faithful Latter-day Saint, always very generously disposed to the missionaries in the old country and ready to donate of her means for the forwarding of the work of God at all times. The last work she did, as already stated, was in the Temple for her dead friends.—Beaver Utonian, April 27.

THE DEAD.

Peaceful be their Rest.

THOMAS.—At Wigan, Lancashire, England, April 2, 1894, of bronchitis, Sarah Thomas, aged 67. Her faith in the Gospel remained unshaken to the last.—Millennial Star.

STANDING.—Mrs. Mary Standing, widow of the late James Standing, at her home on Bear river, in Box Elder county, Utah, May 4, 1894, of paralysis, in the 69th year of her age.

KENDALL.—In Nephi, Utah, April 30, 1894, of old age, Elizabeth Kendall. She was born in the city of Bath, England, September 12, 1814. In 1844 she first heard the Gospel preached. She and her husband became members the same year and emigrated to Utah in the year 1853. She was chosen first counselor in the first organization of the Relief Society in Nephi and always has been an ardent worker amongst the sisters in looking after the poor. She leaves two sons and one daughter, and she died a true Latter-day Saint.

Funeral services were held May 2, 1894. The speakers were Elders William Paxman, J. C. Ostler, George Ostler, John Ostler and Wm. Knight.

GROWTH OF FAITH AND WORKS.

Discourse Delivered at the General Conference of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Saturday, April 7, 1894, by

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

Beloved hearers, I rejoice greatly in the opportunity that is given us in this Conference. The testimony that has been given by the brethren who have spoken has been so varied and diversified that it would seem as if every inquiring mind must have found something that he could take home to himself and feel that he had been fed, edified and enlightened in the knowledge of the truth. The growth of the work of God in these latter days brings to us from day to day such new developments of experience as to call forth also corresponding instructions suited to our every condition; so that as varied as our circumstances are, or may be, we get line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, for all the conditions through which we are brought to pass; and it brings to those who are truly living their religion increased testimonies of the truth. Those who were in the world living honestly before God according to the light they had, prior to the revelations of the present dispensation by the Prophet Joseph, were in a position of justification. Nevertheless, there was a constant yearning for something more, which we did not yet possess; and in looking around and trying to find that something else which would satisfy the human soul, we could not find it among our fellows. They who claimed to be our teachers had it not to give to us. We were told we must not pry into mysteries, and that what had been revealed and laid down was all they had the right, or the power, to offer us.

When this Gospel came to us and we were permitted to look into it; when our near kinsmen came and told us that God had raised up a Prophet, that He had given new revelations, that He had revealed a record called the Book of Mormon, behold, what did we find? We found that in searching these principles thus revealed, there was that which satisfied this hungering and thirsting that we had after something more. We found that in giving obedience unto these principles there was given us in turn from the heavens a testimony that made us to know, and that verified the word of the Lord wherein He had promised that if any man would render obedience to those doctrines he should know, and that knowledge should be increased. We commenced thus searching, and in that search we have been successful to find that which satisfies the soul, even the most intelligent among mankind, when they apply humbly at the feet of Jesus for the knowledge of the truth and the testimonies of His Spirit. Finding a fulfillment of His promises at the very threshold of our search into the order of the kingdom of God, we were thus satisfied, thus fed, thus strengthened, and led to feel that for these testimonies we could offer ourselves, all that we were and had, and lay our lives upon the altar, for the knowledge which God had thus given unto us. This was the solid and satisfying start that we made in our search for the truth. And oh! what blessing it gave to the repentant sinner to know that by going down into the water and coming forth out of the water, under the hands of one authorized of God, his sins were forgiven and remitted; and further, to receive by the laying on of hands that gift of the Holy Ghost which should abide with him. It abode with us, and led us from knowledge to knowledge, from faith to faith, increasing our light, and it has been growing brighter and brighter, as the faithful can all testify to this day.

With the knowledge of every new principle our joy has been increased, our cup has been filling up; and if we have been active laborers in the ministry, our influence and power have been increasing and extending, not merely with our fellow men on the earth, but with the heavens, so that the blessings and favor, intelligence and revelation to which the Saints are entitled, have been increasing and growing brighter and brighter until the present time. The great and grand object with us is that they shall by our faithful lives grow brighter still until the perfect day, when what we now see in part we shall then see in full, and when we, having placed our evil propensities under our feet and triumphed over them by the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ and by our testimony, shall obtain the crown in the kingdom of our God. The pathway to this is through obedience to every principle that has been revealed, and that shall be revealed, making it a part of our lives and practice.

The Lord graciously told the brethren in the early days that "the Priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and your lives have been hid from the world with Christ in God." What a glorious development! What! the Priesthood come down from the days of the ancients, through the dark and bloody channels of war and rumors of war, crusades and persecutions? Yes, certainly. It is evident the eye of God has been over us, and the eyes of His angels have watched over the continuation of the fathers down through the generations that have come unto us. This is shown by the very fact that the Lord has cared for a lineage which has given you and me the right to the Holy Priesthood, and has awakened our souls to trace back that lineage as far as it can be discovered by records, or dreams, or visions, or revelations, or by the Urim and Thummim, until we go back with our labors on that lineage, and thus return the only grateful acknowledgment we can make to them for being our fathers and mothers and giving us such honorable birth, and at such a period of time, when the Priesthood is revealed again, and that we can receive blessings of untold worth, that we never ourselves shall know the full value of, until we overcome this mortality, put on immortality and enter into the exaltation which is promised unto the faithful.

Speaking concerning the testimony of Elder Lyman about those who have sought to rise up and appear to the world as having a right to the Presidency. They claim to have obeyed all of the revelations which were given to the Prophet Joseph. The Prophet received the word of the Lord that it was our duty in Nauvoo to build a temple, which, said He, "my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name." Yet concerning those who make the claim to being the only true Latter-day Saints on earth, we have not heard even of their undertaking to build a temple; while we have built half a dozen of them. I need not stop to talk about that. We are on the road to exaltation, in intelligence, in fellowship with the angels and with the just made perfect, and are already made partakers in some measure of the powers of the world to come.

How glorious it was after that Elijah had come and revealed this ancient order of things concerning the fathers and the children in the Temple at Kirtland, in pursuance of what the Prophet Malachi had said he would do, before the great and terrible day of the Lord! How our fathers that have gone before have turned unto us! And so have we turned as children unto our fathers, to love them and to seek after them, and to know that we cannot be made perfect without them, nor they without us. It is a glorious work. People come into the Church and gather with the Saints almost from the antipodes. They have received the Holy Ghost, and what does it do? It makes them just as one of the Apostles anciently said: "God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying, Abba, Father." They naturally incline after the lineage of their fathers; and if they have not obtained it, they persevere until they find one who shall teach, instruct and lead them along unto eternal life. If they cannot find their lineage, they feel afflicted and distressed and cut off in their parts. This is that feeling which comes upon the people when they receive the Holy Spirit that makes them to cry, Abba, Father. They want to know the spirit of the fathers and the doctrines of the Gospel revealed unto them. We have great reason to rejoice in God, who has revealed these things. Soon after the Prophet Elijah appeared in the Kirtland Temple, the Prophet Joseph was led to teach us the doctrine of baptism for the dead.

Oh, what a world of labor that has given us! What a joy it has imparted to us! Many felt that they would die cheerfully if they could give to their fathers and mothers who were dead the blessings that they enjoyed in the Church of Christ? Yet there are many who have not yet put off the ways of the Gentiles, and have not come to this sensibility. We have only just begun with this labor, and perhaps some of us have not begun just right. I recollect when the Prophet Joseph first revealed the baptism for the dead, some went down in the river and were baptized, men for women and women for men. But the Lord soon gave to the Prophet Joseph to organize and systematize the whole thing, and so He will about this order of the fathers being turned and united, bound and sealed to the children, and the children to the fathers; and we will yet have the privilege of seeing our generations connected back. If we continue on and inherit eternal life, we shall see them connected clear back, no doubt, to ancient Noah and to our more ancient Father Adam. In the early days of tribulation in the Church the Lord encouraged the brethren by telling them that they were laying the foundation of a great and mighty work. I recollect how it used to cheer us up in the midst of our persecutions.

If we are living correctly before the Lord, our testimonies increase, our light grows clearer and clearer, and we are strengthened in the way of righteousness and truth. I testify that during the past year I have realized more abundantly the freedom of the Holy Spirit, more blessing and manifestation of the power of God among the people, than before. The blessings, in the increased flow of the Spirit that have come upon them since the dedication of the Temple in this city has been like an endowment of the whole people. Brethren and sisters, cling to it. Be diligent in keeping the commandments of God, abiding in the covenants, seeking to do good, and in your temporal things to provide for your wants, and not depend upon falling Babylon. If prophecy is fulfilled in us today, what about that prophecy that says that a great cry shall come up from Babylon, "and the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more?" Brother Brigham tried incessantly to persuade us to establish home industries here; provide our own boots and shoes, and our own clothing; and he talked to the sisters about making their own hats, instead of sending our money abroad as we have done for everything that we wanted. We have been like a carcass with eagles gathered around.

They have found that we are a good people to trade with. We have had the credit of keeping our promises, and we have earned a character in the East as being a people that have the fewest number of bad debts of any territory or state in the West. They love to come and deal with us, persuading us to buy this, that and the other. If we would be constrained to make our own boots, shoes and clothes, and patronize home productions, we could soon get the balance of trade on to the other columns of our ledgers. Why cannot the Latter-day Saints take this as a piece of counsel from the authorities of the Church? Let us also raise our own provisions. There is no part of the broad land of Zion that yields better wheat, better grain of nearly all kinds, better potatoes, or better fruit. We were renowned from ocean to ocean for our choice fruit until the worms and insects got into it and made it undesirable; but if we will turn to the Lord with all our hearts and put away our wrong dealing wherein we strew our ways to strangers He will turn away the destroyer for our sakes, and will make everything again to bloom and prosper for us. Then the merchants from abroad will be able to say that nobody buys their goods, because we will have the goods of our own manufacture.

What did the angel of the Lord who brought the Gospel through the midst of heaven to every nation, kindred, tongue and people say? He said, "Fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come." Do we not see that His judgments are spreading destruction all around us? But we have not yet had to taste much of them. He has been uncommonly merciful unto us, making our fields to abound with plenty, and giving us to rest in peace here. His judgments are in the earth, and in all our calculations we ought to remember this.

Let us keep in mind the parable of the rich man, whose ground brought forth plentifully, and who thought to build larger barns to hold his produce. He said within himself, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." What was the result? The Lord said to him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?" We should be frugal and enterprising; provide for our necessities and for those who may come to us, and become an independent people. We can do it if we will. All these necessities come out of the earth. It is the farmer that should be the independent man; get up an cultivate his land in the season thereof, and at his convenience he can read his newspapers and his books. There is no branch of human labor that gives a man such a variety of exercise for all his faculties as does that of good agriculture. The farmer is the man that should be encouraged. The miners could not dig the mountains down nor open the bowels of the earth if they had not bread to eat. The gold and silver would have to lay there till eternity came and went if they did not have the victuals to eat and clothes to wear. President Young was sensible and wise in this. He told us if we would raise the bread and dinner, others would come and do the uncertain work of digging down the hills.

My brethren and sisters, this our great work, as I have said, opens new methods of conduct, new features of corresponding doctrine and precept to guide us. If we but keep our lamps trimmed and the Holy Ghost burning in us to give us understanding in all our ways, the pathway of our feet will grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. May the Lord grant this to be the common lot of His people, and the particular lot of every man and woman that will take the revelations of divine truth for the light of their counsel, keep the commandments and covenants they have made diligently and faithfully to the end; God will help us according to His own good pleasure, to accomplish the work He has assigned unto us. Amen.

FUTURE HAPPINESS.

The following letter from a well known and highly esteemed lady in this city to an intimate friend in England, who in her girlhood was well acquainted with some of the Latter-day Saints, and whose brother joined the Church and died in Nauvoo. It relates to a subject of supreme importance, and no doubt will be very interesting reading, not only to those of the gentler sex, but to others who may have the privilege of perusing and pondering over it:

My Dear Mrs. B.—Your kind letter of April 10th was pleasantly received, though I was sorry to hear your health was feeble. I have pondered your words expressing a desire and willingness "to do anything possible to enhance your happiness in the future state." This manifests a good spirit, and I conclude we both will agree that the only thing either of us can do for the attainment of this object "is to do the will of the Father." Even our Lord and Savior came not "to do His own will, but the will of His Father." "He that loveth me keepeth my commandments."

I am astonished at the prevalence among professing Christians of the idea that they have "only to believe in Jesus to be saved," when in the plainest of words we are warned "that faith without works is dead." When the righteous young man came to Jesus he was told to "sell all thou hast and give to the poor"—the sick man to "dip seven times in the pool." Peter at the feast of Pentecost "commanded repentance and baptism." Now to us, in our day, has come direct commands from our Heavenly Father as forceful and as binding on this generation as anything ever was binding that has come to man from the heavens in another dispensation.

Dear sister, my family were wealthy people of high social standing in England. I forfeited the loves, pride and ambitions of my girlhood for a higher love, pride and ambition, for the Gospel of Jesus Christ as brought to us in that land by a humble, uneducated servant of God, in 1851. Since then I have tried in my weak way to make the requirements of that Gospel the supreme endeavor of my life. Its operations upon me have been the same as upon every person who has made it his chief aim, until hundreds of thousands can bear united testimony that the Holy Ghost has led them from truth to truth until they have absolute knowledge that this thing so despised as "Mormonism" is the work of Almighty God.

Daily my thanksgivings are offered that I heeded that great instruction, "Come out of her my people, that ye partake not of her sins that ye receive not of her plagues." Tens of thousands of those who in years past have known something of "Mormonism" will mourn that they failed to keep this command; failed to plant their posterities and interests with the people of God.

From your remarks I conclude you have had some affiliations with the so-called re-organized church. If so, please permit me to quote you the words of Isaiah, that in the last days the house of the Lord should be established "in the tops of the mountains," and to ask how long in reasonable probabilities the Saints and the world would have to wait before this prophecy would have fulfillment through the action of the so-called re-organized church or all the combined churches of Christendom? Again, my husband is a living witness that the Prophet Joseph Smith foretold before his death that "the Saints should become a numerous host in the fastnesses of this western world." I ask you, has the re-organized church sought to help or have they sought to hinder the fulfilment of this prophecy? sought to aid or to hinder the raising of this Temple of God "in the tops of the mountains?" Have they followed or have they utterly neglected the example set by the Prophet Joseph in building a Temple in Kirtland; and in Nauvoo, where he introduced and emphasized the holy ordinance for the dead? If this doctrine is a cardinal, vital element embraced in the salvation purchased by our Lord and Savior; if the words of the holy men are true, that this great work of the fullness of the dispensation of times "shall be cut short in righteousness," then will great responsibilities rest on all professing Latter-day Saints who have treated this matter lightly. The little band of patriots who have followed in the footprints of the Prophet Joseph under unspeakable difficulties have by the grace of God fulfilled and honored his words, thereby honoring God who sent him, and tens of thousands of honest souls who never heard the Gospel in the flesh have been ministered in this holy Temple.

Jesus being dead in the flesh "but quickened by the spirit went and preached to the spirits in prison." Paul said, "If the dead rise not again why are ye then baptized for the dead?" Always, everywhere, wherever God has had a people, those whom He acknowledged as His people, with Prophets through whom to give His word, there have been "Tabernacles," "the Ark of the Covenant," or "Temples." And yet to day boasted Christendom is so far from God and His ordinances of salvation that if we were to give them our Temple all complete—they would not know enough to use it for the holy purposes for which their God and our God had it built.

You manifest a desire "to do something to add to your happiness hereafter." If you could have but a scintillation of the happiness men and women have here in this life when they go into this Temple and administer for their dead and receive there and then a testimony that is accepted—testimony that the captives are set free, you would lose all anxiety for your future state, and would contemplate death as a new birth, as an introduction to unspeakable happiness; would realize that when you put off this mortal body you would go as a savior who had come up on Mount Zion. Indeed, my dear sister, I am superlatively happy in being able to bear my testimony that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is all that it purports to be. It robs the grave of all victory and death of all sting. It would seem strange to any but a Saint to witness the love and interest that my husband takes in your family and the families that he knew in old Berkshire county. This of itself is a testimony of the love begotten by the Gospel. If you would permit me the liberty of an adviser, I would say, take the remnant of your strength and days, come to Zion, perform the works necessary for the uniting of the living and the dead of your kindred. I make you a promise that if you solidly make God and the doing of His will the first and foremost thing, your health shall improve, your days be lengthened and peace such as you have not known shall rest upon you. With you, I am well along in years and in a short time we shall both test the great realities that lie before us. I shall hope before then to meet you in the flesh.

Very affectionately your sister,
LOUISA KING SPENCER.

WEATHER AND CROPS.

The past week was, for the most part dry and cold, with frosts during the fore part, although they did little damage. The closing days of the week were somewhat warmer. The rain and snow of the previous week left the soil in good condition for germination and growth. Therefore the past week has not been an unfavorable one for crops, and they all look well, although the cold and frosts have prevented rapid growth. The injury to fruit by frost has been very slight, and the prospect for a large yield is still fine. Apple trees are now in full bloom. Strawberries are ripe in Washington county.

Though wheat has grown only slowly, the cold weather tends to make it stool out well. The ground is in good condition for potato planting. Early garden truck is up and looking well. Sugar beets are reported to be growing slowly, and need more moisture. Grain now has to be watered.

Snowville—Weather dry. Lucern has been watered the first time. Trees are budding out.

Lake Station—Crops very backward. Light shower on the 22nd.

Plymouth—Frost on the morning of the 2nd, but no damage. Crops making a fine growth.

Yost—Wheat beginning to show up, but everything seems extremely backward.

Deweyville—Weather cool generally; three frosts. Apples and pears ready to blossom. Crops doing fairly well.

Box Elder—Weather dry with considerable frost in the fore part of the week, damaging tender plants. Spring grain is up.

West Portage—The rains have brought out the winter and spring grains, which now look favorable. Lucern four inches high. Ground in good condition.

Bear River City—The week has been very cold, with frosts nearly every night, though lucern and other things do not seem to be injured. But nothing seems to be growing.

Benson—Fall wheat is doing well; cold weather tends to make it stool out. Lucern somewhat injured by frosts.

Lawiston—The cold weather is keeping grain back. I am a little afraid frost has hurt the fruit some.

Newton—Potatoes have only been planted to a limited extent yet. Lucern is doing well.

Millville—Frost on the 1st and 2nd, but not severe enough to damage fruit. Seeding is being pushed on the later, wet lands.

Cache Junction—Frost on the nights of the 1st and 2nd.

Randolph—The past week has been better than usual for the crops. Early spring grain is up and looks well.

Peo—Cold winds most of the week; ice formed on the 3rd and 4th. Cold winds have kept the crops back. Grass on range looks well.

Rockport—Grain, lucern, etc., is backward. Some early vegetables are up.

Upton—Crops and garden seeds all in. Frosts at night, but not injurious.

Hoytville—No storms this week. Ice on night of 2nd.

Croydon—Most of the week was fair, but windy, which dried the land. If dry weather continues, irrigation will soon be a necessity.

Wallsburg—Growth of crops is very slow, caused by the dry, cold weather.

Charleston—Rain on night of 1st. Slight frosts on 2nd, 3rd and 4th. Grain coming up nicely. Soil in fine condition.

Heber—Fore part of week cold, and slow grain-growing weather; last three days warm and spring-like weather.

Grouse Creek—Frosts during first three nights of week retarding growth of crops, yet wheat and lucern have done fairly well.

Uintah—Dry week; a little rain on the 1st, followed by severe frost during the night. Peaches and apricots damaged some. There is yet a fine prospect for fruit.

Harrieville—Dry, but cold. All products seem to be doing well.

Huntsville—Hard frost almost every night; nothing can grow much.

Kayaville—Past week cold, and crops have not grown much; they are, however, in fine condition.

Layton—Week very favorable to all crops. Only cold night was that of the 2nd, when there was a slight frost. All the early garden truck is up.

Herriman—On the 1st and 2nd sharp frost; week ended warmer; no damage to fruit.

Sandy—Part of the week has been cold; some days quite warm and sunny.

Gale—North wind retarded growth of vegetation. Ice on 3rd, which made lucern and leaves of trees turn yellow. Last three warm days has caused rapid growth.

Grantville—Frost during week did little damage to fruit, and crops in general are looking well.

Tooele—Careful examination shows that frost did not do so much damage to fruit as was reported. Grain grows slowly.

Centre—Frost more or less during the week, and storm threatening on Friday.

Vernon—Ice night of 2nd; did not seem to do any injury. Grain mostly up and looking well.

Pleasant Grove—Owing to so much cold wind, the spring grain has not come up good, and looks thin. Planting corn and potatoes now.

Springville—Good growing weather past week; no frost to hurt.

Spanish Fork—Everything looks nice since the rain and snow. Grain crops are improving slowly. The drilled grain is far ahead of the broadcast sowing.

Lake Shore—The storm was of great benefit to crops. Sugar beets have greatly improved since. Corn and potatoes are being planted. Irrigating has commenced.

Payson—Crops advance very slowly; cold weather retards growth of garden truck. Beet crop has a good start this year.

Santaquin—Some frost, but not enough to hurt fruit. Balance of week very nice and warm. All spring sown grain and lucerne is up.

Nephi—Crops doing well. Fruit trees in bloom.

Levan—A favorable week for crops. All small grain up; looking well. Apricots were damaged some by frost on 2nd; nothing else hurt.

Little Salt Creek—The past week has been warm and sunny, which proved beneficial to the crops after the past snowstorm.

Moroni—Whole week has been dry and cold, with frosty nights. Have commenced watering grain.

Wales—The snow in beginning of week was what was wanted, but left cold nights after it; no harm done. Grain beginning to snow up some.

Fountain Green—The storm was good for crops in this place; fields are looking fine and green after.

Leamington—Last week windy and dry. Crops since storm of former week doing well.

Oak City—Past week has been fair for crops. Everything growing nicely. All fruit trees are heavily loaded with blossoms.

Solpio—Excellent growing weather. The storm of last week did much good. Frost of 3rd and 4th did not hurt much.

Holden—Fine growing weather. Everything looks well. Sunny days and warm nights, good for corn and potato planting. Frost on 3rd did some damage to grapes and plums.

Richfield—Hot and dry weather. Fruit trees all in blossom. No damage done through frost.

Sigurd—Slight frost first two nights of week; quite warm the last two days. Spring grain all up and looks fairly well. Fall grain and lucerne growing fast now. Potatoes about all planted.

Monroe—Warm weather will make crops rush, as the ground is soaked. Grain is growing excellently. Fruit prospects are good.

Joseph—On the 22nd, frost and ice. Generally better growing weather. Potato planting has commenced.

Loa—Wheat is coming up. Still sowing oats. Frost every night but one. Do not depend on spring storms to bring up grain here; sow it in the dust and water it up.

Thurber, April 28—Lucerne just beginning to show green; grain just coming up.

Teardale, April 28—Snowing on 28th. Rain much needed. Wheat pretty much all in. Oats yet remain to be sowed.

Caineville, 28th—Weather too cold for rapid growth. Good prospect for fruit. Seeding not yet finished.

Orton—Heavy frost on the nights of the 3rd and 4th. With this exception the week has been good for growth of crops. Spring wheat looks well, as also lucern.

Orderville—A hard frost on the night of the 28th killed a great deal of fruit. Apples are in full bloom. Lucern is frosted and grows slowly. Crops are backward.

Kanab, April 28—Cold, dry winds every day, with frosts at night. On the 27th three inches of snow fell; all melted on the 28th. Crops made but little growth. Limited amount of corn and potatoes planted. Lack of feed on the range.

Pinto, 29th—Light hail and snow on the hills on 28th; a little fell in the valley. Wheat is showing up nicely, but grows slowly. Garden truck is up. Plums in bloom.

New Harmony, 30th—Cold and windy. Light fall of snow on 27th; five inches fell, which will be very beneficial to late wheat, which is not looking very good yet. Early wheat is doing well.

Gunlock, 28th—A slight frost on the 26th; it damaged early fruit and vegetables. The spring is unusually backward.

Toquerville, 30th—Extremes of heat and cold with high winds; yet has passed without frost. Fruit and gardens are doing as good as cold will allow. Strawberries are ripening.

Virgin City, May 3rd—The weather has moderated some. Peas and potatoes are in bloom. Lucern and all other crops look very well.

SPRAYING FRUIT TREES.

To Fruit Growers and Fruit Sprayers:

Do not spray your trees while they are in blossom. In the first place it is unlawful; second, you may destroy the little busy bee, one of your best friends; third, and not least important, you are liable to destroy your fruit and thus prevent the very object you are trying to attain—a crop of sound fruit.

Any and all fruit blossoms that have the pollen entirely washed off before fertilization takes place will not produce fruit. We have abundant evidence on this point from fruit growers in different parts of the country. Mr. D. J. Davis, an old fruit grower from Columbiana county, Ohio, but now of this city, tells me that he has proven this to be true in several instances. Other trees are affected in this way. I have known the entire acorn crop to be destroyed by a heavy rain storm.

While we are in favor of spraying our fruit trees we hope it will be done intelligently and thoroughly. The trees should be sprayed for the insects that are preying on the bark, trunk and roots as well as for the codling moth. One or more of those life-destroying insects such as the wooly aphis, red spider, bark lice, scale, borers, etc., are with us always. With proper treatment these can be disposed of as readily as the codling moth, which attack the fruit after the blossoms fall and continue till after the fruit is as large as a pigeon's egg.

During the early part of the blossom there is no fruit, it simply being then in embryo at the back of the blossom. During the time that the tree is in bloom is when the fruit is formed. Nature has wisely provided honey-sucking insects, and in their eager pursuit after the honey they accomplish the very important matter of fertilization while the pistils on the end of the blossom protect it from other insects that might otherwise injure it.

We have many of what are called popular errors. One is the belief by many that unless everybody sprays and disinfects their trees, it is useless for anyone to do it. You can select a tree having fruit on it in the center of an orchard and if it is thoroughly sprayed it will produce sound fruit even if all the fruit in the balance of the orchard is destroyed by the moth. Today, if we examine some of the box elder trees, we will find many of the leaves covered with honey, which many suppose falls as a dew. Now, if we examine the leaves we will find many small, green bugs on them. They live off the leaves and thus produce the honey. If we take a microscope we can plainly see the honey on them. Again we have many animals and insects that people believe to be very injurious, when in fact they prey upon the more destructive insects and thus help to save our crops and fruits from annihilation.

Many people are more or less excited and alarmed on this spraying matter. They are very anxious to know if it is going to poison everybody and everything. To all such we say decidedly, no. Healthy people would have to eat several bushels of fruit in one day before the spraying matter would make them sick. Neither will it injure animals grazing in the orchard; and any small fruit or vegetation that may be growing under the trees it may be more beneficial to than otherwise, as it might kill off the insects, and vegetables can and should be washed before being eaten. If the spraying is properly done, unless it is desirable, there is no need of spilling much on the ground.

Now, then, if we all go to work in earnest on this fruit question we will succeed in waking up our Territory from the Rip VanWinkle sleep that it has been taking for the last twenty years or more. The only question is, will we do it? A long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together will accomplish wonders. Other states less favored with soil, climate and conditions than ours have succeeded. Then why not we? It would be another long step in the right direction towards making our Territory self-sustaining, which we all desire.

E. S. LOVESY.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 10, 1894.

WASATCH STAKE CONFERENCE.

The Wasatch Stake conference convened at Heber, May the 5th and 6th, Elder Hatch presiding.

Elder F. M. Lyman, of the council of the Ap stles, was the first speaker on Saturday morning. He spoke on the purposes of conferences, the progressive nature of this work, the Word of Wisdom and the gifts of faith, wisdom, judgment and understanding.

The Bishops reported their respective wards as being in a prosperous and progressive condition, the attendance at the meetings having increased considerably since last conference.

Saturday afternoon Elder Lyman spoke on the responsibilities of Bishops and the influence they should have over the people; the dangers of round dancing, the Word of Wisdom, organizations not of the Latter-day Saints, and the time of holding Sunday schools and ward meetings.

Sunday morning, Elder Hatch gave a general report of the Stake. He said the seven wards are completely organized; the health of the people is good; the looks of the congregation did not show hard times; we have plenty of wheat, hay, cattle and sheep, and there is not a town, city, county or school bond in the stake. He advised the people to patronize home industries.

Elder Richard G. Lambert of Salt Lake advised the people to work and economize.

Elder F. M. Lyman then spoke on home industries; advised the people to learn how to save and to get out of debt and then keep out. He said wealth is appreciated more when obtained by industry.

Sunday afternoon during the partaking of the Sacrament Elder Francis Herby spoke on the mission of the Savior and the ordinance of the sacrament.

After a hymn by the choir Elder Lyman spoke on the manner of administering the sacrament; said a prayer for the congregation should be heard by them; advised the people to settle their own difficulties.

The general and local church authorities were presented and sustained. He did not think it necessary for the audience to stand while the choir sings.

Men should treat their families properly, or they would not have them in the world to come.

The anthem "Strike the Cymbal" was sung at the close.

Benediction by Patriarch Thomas Hicken.

Conference adjourned for three months.

ALFRED BOND,
Clerk of Conference.

OUR FRUIT TREE PESTS.

BOUNTIFUL, Utah, May 6, 1894.—Much has been said regarding insects that are devastating the fruit industries, not only of Utah, but all over the United States at the present time; and for this reason I wish to have a hearing through the columns of your valuable paper.

I find that many of the old-time citizens claim that a few years ago Utah had first-class peaches and apples—not a worm to be found in an apple, and in ten bushels of peaches and plums not a defective one was to be found. Now they say our fruit is no good. Why is this the case and where did those insects come from? I answer this question by stating that but few if any of these insects that are and have been destroying not only the world-famed fruit of Utah but the trees and shrubs as well, are natives of this Territory. Then the question may be asked, as well as my statement criticized, where did they come from and how did they get here—explain yourself? I answer this question by asking another: Where did our best citizens who were and are of foreign birth come from? The answer to this question comes to me from the lips of every great and good American-born citizen: From every civilized nation under the canopy of high heaven (and some nations that are not civilized). I withhold any hesitancy concede the answer as given to my question correct. But still another question permit me to ask: Was there any distinction made between the great and good citizens of foreign birth and the low and depraved? Did not the same ship that carried many of the great minds of this nation carry in the voyage the murderer, the thief, and the scapegoats of all nations, and by so doing have we not become a dumping ground and a cesspool for all nations?

So it is with the fruit, shade and ornamental trees that have been shipped into our country. Go with me to some of our best parks in this nation and I will show you trees, shrubs and plants that represent every climate where civilization has reached; and on most of these trees, shrubs or plants I can show you an insect that represents every climate in the civilized world. There was no distinction made between the tree, plant or shrub that was free from this multifarious and pestiferous family, and the tree, shrub or plant that was free from those insects. I do not mean to be understood that all the mean people come from other countries, or that all injurious insects came from other nations—we have our share of both. My claim is that many of the worst insects are being palmed off on us—for instance, the woolly aphis, the American blight; this insect is one of the very worst insects that the apple tree is subjected to and was known in Europe a hundred years before America was discovered. This insect is to be found scattered broadcast over three-fourths of the apple orchards of the United States. The San Jose, or pernicious, scale was first found at San Jose, California, hence it derives its name from the fact that it was first discovered there. There is no doubt that this insect came from South America. The phylloxera has laid waste many of the vineyards of France for years, and now this disease, the worst of all diseases, is in our midst. The gipsy moth is another insect of foreign birth. This escaped from the cage of one who, I presume, thought he was going to confound the wisdom of the wise in his investigation of insect life. Now it has become such a plague in some of the Eastern states that the inhabitants of whole counties turn out in picnic parties with war of extermination waged.

I have neither time nor space to make mention of the imported currant worm and other insects of a similar nature that are too numerous to mention. The question that would be most interesting to the readers of this article is what kind of insects are to be found in Utah. I have this to say, that I have spent over three months investigating this question in four counties in this Territory and that after a more prolonged investigation I will attempt at least to inform my readers on this subject.

NOTES IN WASATCH COUNTY.

MIDWAY, Wasatch Co., May 9, 1894.

—The Provo river is beginning to rise and high water is anticipated. The farmers of Charleston are putting in repair their irrigation canals, strengthening dams and straightening the river course and protecting the banks against the floods they anticipate.

Each year the tilled ground at Charleston has increased. Last year the yield of grain was more than any preceding year and they expect to harvest an increased quantity this season. The energy and enterprise of the people of the place are commendable. Last season they put in a saw mill, which, it is claimed, turned out more lumber than any other mill in the valley. Now they have started a creamery with a capacity of 1,000 gallons of milk per day. This will make about 800 pounds of first class butter. They are now making about 100 pounds of butter a day of the very best quality which finds ready sale—in fact they are not now able to fill their orders. The plant is owned by the Charleston Dairy Co., of which George Daybell is president and manager, and Jas. R. Murdock is secretary and treasurer. They use a fifteen-horse steam boiler and a Sharpless separator, driven by a direct current of steam from the boiler, thus doing away with the annoyance of belts.

The town of Midway, built on a rock, is quite a flourishing place; a large percentage of its populace are Swiss and Germans.

The barn of Simon Steel, of Midway, with all its contents were destroyed by fire last night—the cause is unknown. The building contained about four ton of hay, a harness and some tools. The damage will amount to over three hundred dollars, with one hundred dollars insurance. A meeting being held in the Midway ward house at the time of the fire, very nearly ended in a panic when the cry of fire was raised. Had it not been for cool heads present injury might have resulted from the scare.

All the farmers here are engaged cleaning out their canals, preparatory to starting their spring planting.

THE EUPOREAN MISSION.

[Millennial Star, April 30.]

RELEASES AND APPOINTMENTS.—Elder W. W. Pace has been released from his labors as Traveling Elder in the Norwich Conference, and has been appointed to labor in the Scottish Conference.

Elder C. A. Carlquist was honorably released, April 7, from presiding over the Scandinavian Mission, and returned home with the company which left Liverpool April 14.

Elder J. H. Stocker has been honorably released from presiding over the Swiss and German Mission, to return home May 12, 1894.

Elder Peter Sundwall has been appointed to preside over the Scandinavian Mission.

Elder Geo. C. Naegle has been appointed to preside over the Swiss and German Mission.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

IN THE LINE OF PEACE.

The preaching of the Gospel can be successfully accomplished only under peaceful and loving influences. The knowledge of and conviction regarding the plan of salvation revealed by the Divine Master are not the work of men, but come by the inspiration and testimony of the Holy Spirit, which is a spirit of love and peace and order and consequently operates in harmonious channels. Disorderly influences and tendencies are not a part of the Gospel of Christ, but emanate from a source that works evil. This principle is deeply impressed upon the Latter-day Saints by the revelations of the Almighty, who forbids His people to engage in disputations and to exercise due forbearance toward each other and toward all men. Therefore it is that when the servants of the Lord go out to preach the Gospel they are careful to avoid contention even to an extent of being criticized, and are submissive and patient under circumstances that ordinarily arouse the natural man to wrath and action.

Occasionally the missionaries are placed in circumstances where disturbances are forced upon them by wicked and designing persons who, not being able to gain their ends by lawful means, resort to other methods. Even then the judicious Elder takes the earliest opportunity consistent with his position to leave those inclined to disorderly to conduct the quarrel themselves. An instance of this kind is related in a letter from Elder N. L. Morris, of this city, who is now on a mission to Great Britain. He tells how, at a village in Berkshire, an open-air meeting was broken into by the actions of one Shallor, and how, as the crowd which had been worked up by this individual's misrepresentations would not listen to defense or reason, the missionaries left the scene. Their retirement under such circumstances was an appropriate action; for under their calling as messengers of the Gospel of peace the earlier Elders depart from the scene of a quarrel and the greater care they take to avoid such unpleasantness the better it is for the cause in which they are engaged.

Elder Morris relates an incident in connection with his experiences which is somewhat out of the common run of affairs. The man Shallor, who has been very active for a number of years in disturbing the meetings of the Latter-day Saints and disseminating the vilest falsehoods regarding them, was invited to Abingdon by some professed Christian ministers to carry on his work there, but when he was haranguing a large crowd which assembled to hear him he angered them so that he was assaulted by the multitude and only escaped injury by dodging into a house. An old Turkish proverb says "Curses are like chickens; they come home to roost;" and Shallor got a small dose of that which he had been in the habit of inflicting on others who had given him no provocation.

The act of his being assaulted by the crowd, however, is not to be commended. The proceeding was altogether reprehensible. Bad as he may be, the demonstration against him was wrong. If he had transcended the bounds of the law there was a proper method of proceeding against him; if he had not, he should not have been disturbed, and if the people did not like what he said they had the opportunity of peacefully leaving him to himself. The assault was a lawless act which cannot be justified whether it was a in good cause or not, and it is probable that there are few people who were in the crowd where it was done who would attempt to justify it, as doubtless most of them endeavor to be law-abiding citizens.

It is gratifying to note that, while the opposition to Shallor was an indication of sympathy for the missionaries, they had no connection therewith and give to it no approval. It was brought about by certain sectarians who thought to cause trouble to the Mormons, but whose own act turned the game on themselves. The tide was against them on this occasion because of the honorable career of a gentleman who now resides in this city, Mr. Wm. Seare. The people of Abingdon well knew the upright character of Brother Seare from his long residence among them, and they would not brook an assault upon his son who was again a visitor in their town, or upon his companions.

That these occurrences will result in good will be due in a measure to the fact that the missionaries gave their influence for peace in connection with the town officers when the latter intimated that outdoor meetings might only intensify excitement. It is safe to assume that the attitude of the Elders will remain unchanged in endeavors for peace and good order, as that is the means by which the Gospel interests can be most enhanced.

THE ISSUES SETTLED.

The discussion which has been so freely engaged in regarding the awarding of university lands on the Provó bench is now likely to subside, since the parties have had an opportunity of fully presenting their claims in court, and these have been passed upon by judicial authority. The conclusion of the case of Peck vs the commissioners to locate university lands is a complete vindication of the latter, who, the court holds, could not have acted other than they did and yet carried out the law in fairness to all parties. Upon the hearing of the testimony for the plaintiff alone, the court found that the allegations against the commissioners were without foundation in fact.

The trouble probably arose over a misconception of the law on the part of claimants both in this and other cases. Title was set up for more land than the commissioners had the right to award to the parties, and as there were conflicting claims these were adjudicated with fairness to all concerned.

Now that the questions at issue have been definitely settled, disputations and recriminations should cease and whatever of ruffled feelings there have been should be allowed to calm down.

ROME'S CHALLENGE.

A few months ago the Catholic Mirror, the official organ of Cardinal Gibbons, in a series of editorials issued a strongly worded challenge to the Protestant churches on the vital question of the authority of the Bible in matters of faith and religious practice. The point made is that all Protestants claim that the sacred Scriptures are their only infallible teacher, the highest court to which any controversy of a theological nature must be referred and from the decision of which there is no appeal; and yet they almost universally disregard the law of keeping Saturday as Sabbath, a command enjoined on Mount Sinai and never repealed. The Mirror argues that the Protestants in this regard occupy an indefensible position, contradicting their teachings by their practices; they are in a dilemma; they must either adopt the Mosaic Sabbath or cease to claim that the Bible is the sole foundation of their faith.

It may be noted in passing, that the point in question is the same which was made at the Council of Trent in 1545, when the archbishop of Reggio after a long debate brought forth the following argument, which was accepted as unanswerable by that eminent assembly:

"The protestants claim to stand upon the written word only, and they justify their apostasy by the plea that the church has apostatized from the Bible and followed tradition. The profession of the Protestants is false. They do not follow the Bible alone. That volume enjoins the observance of the seventh day as Sabbath, which they reject. And they not only reject the observance of the Sabbath enjoined in the written word, but they have adopted and do practice the observance of Sunday, for which they have only the tradition of the church. Consequently, the claim of Scripture alone as standard fails and the doctrine of Scripture and tradition as essential, is fully established, the Protestants themselves being judges."

It appears then that Rome is not afraid of reviving the old controversy in this country but rather invites to a discussion which apparently has not been satisfactorily exhausted although centuries have elapsed since its beginning.

No impartial observer can very well fail to see that the Catholics have the better end of the argument in this particular instance. Not a word can be found in the Bible conveying the command to keep Sunday holy instead of Saturday. If the Protestants were consistent in their claims for the Bible, they would have to turn Seventh-day Adventists in a body. There is hardly one item of faith, as they practice it, which has any support in the Bible. The sprinkling of infants; the salaried clergy; their church government—all are foreign to the Scriptures. Some of their doctrines they have inherited from Rome; others they base on what they infer from Bible texts, all the time pretending that they are teaching only the word of God, as if their conclusions were equal in authority to the inspired writings. By denouncing as false the convenient Roman tradition and claiming the Bible only, they have placed themselves very much in the position of the ingenious gentleman who sat astride on the very branch he was sawing off from the tree and finally fell with it. Protestantism is too illogical to bear the test of a philosophical investigation.

But Romanism cannot successfully establish itself on the weakness of its adversaries. It would be the utmost folly to conclude that because the Protestant churches are wrong the Catholics must be right. With regard to the point in controversy it is enough to say that although the Biblical books now extant do not contain any specific command to change the Sabbath to the first day of the week, yet there are satisfactory proofs that the first Christians celebrated that day as sacred in remembrance of their risen Lord and Savior, in addition to the observance of the Jewish Sabbath. But when the old dispensation expired with the fall of the holy city and temple, the Sabbath observance was gradually superseded by the observance of the Lord's day and this practice became so general that the Emperor Constantine at last, to please his Christian subjects, legalized that day as a holy day. By this imperial edict substantial proof is furnished that the observance of Sunday dates back to the earliest Christian time. That is, it dates back to a time when the Church was still in a position to enjoy the presence of inspired men and listen to their counsel; when the Divine presence was manifested in signs and wonders; when the leaders of the Church could say: "Thus saith the Lord." On this fact the change is accepted by those who, as the Latter-day Saints, believe all that God has revealed wherever the record of the revelation may be found, be it in the Bible or in other true histories of God's dealing with men.

And here is, as we conceive it, the only true and consistent position indicated. The Protestants repudiate, they say, all that God has revealed except that found in the Bible. Their position is absurd, for supposing that the Lord should have revealed a truth to Luther, that truth would be no less sacred than those revealed to Paul. The Catholics maintain another absurdity when they claim for the decrees of their own church Divine authority. Such decrees would be binding if the church had not apostatized from the truth; if it had retained the controlling influence of the Divine Spirit. John says: "Whoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." Consequently, if it can be shown that the Roman church has changed, expunged and added to the doctrines of Christ, a fact too notorious to need proof, it follows that her decrees have no longer any claim upon the obedience of men. Just so long as the Church was guided by the Spirit, so long its tradition and general history are of value for the determination of truth, but no longer. The presence of God's Spirit in the Church is the cause of revelations of truth, but when that Spirit withdraws on account of transgression, there can be no just claim of Divine authority for that which is taught by uninspired men.

BE CAREFUL WHEN SPRAYING.

On several occasions correspondents of the NEWS have cautioned owners of orchards to be careful in the handling of the poisonous liquid prepared for the destruction of the insects. That the spraying may cause serious accidents was shown a few days ago by a peculiar case of poisoning which is reported from Santa Clara, California. A ten-year-old boy named James Britton went into an orchard near town and stood watching the Chinese spraying their trees. After he reached home he was taken sick and his body swelled up. The boy was evidently suffering great agony. The physician who was sent for, after a brief examination, declared the little patient suffering from Paris green poisoning. It was supposed that during the spraying, he had inhaled some of the mixture, while some of it had got into his eyes. By prompt application of suitable remedies the little sufferer was placed beyond the reach of danger. The case shows that too much care cannot be exercised in the spraying of orchards.

DOING WELL.

The people of Lowestoft, England, and vicinity do not appear to have any reason to complain that they are not receiving sufficient warning of the restoration of the Gospel in this age, for not only are the missionaries performing diligent labors there, which have been continued for years, but the chief newspaper of the locality presents the testimony of the Elders in such a direct and impartial manner that there is no need of mistaking its import. The kind treatment and respectful consideration which the Elders have received in and about Lowestoft doubtless is due in a great degree to the journalistic courage and fairness of the Lowestoft Courier.

The latest issue of that paper to hand gives an extended account of the Latter-day Saints conference held there on April 22, with a comprehensive synopsis of each speaker's remarks. The way in which these were treated may be seen in the following report of what was said by Elder A. H. Lund, President of the European Mission, at one of the meetings:

President Lund addressed the assembly on the sacredness of the administration and worthy partaking of the holy emblems of the body and blood of the Redeemer. That one must be pure in heart, and in love, fellowship, and peace with his neighbor; that the mind should go back to Calvary, and remember what the Savior there suffered for us. By partaking of the Sacrament worthily they witnessed unto our Heavenly Father that they were willing to take upon themselves the name of Christ, and to remember Him and keep His commandments. He further spoke upon the necessity of being humble and relying upon the Spirit of God for guidance. The principles of the Gospel were without number, and it was broad enough itself to reach all men. They should always endeavor to walk in this life as if we knew our Heavenly Father was watching us, and not do anything we should be ashamed for our neighbors to see. We should not be ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for that is the power of God unto salvation.

The addresses of the other Elders received similar treatment, the ideas being presented clearly and without comment, so that the reader could comprehend just what the speaker had desired to express. The good work of the Journal in aiding to spread the Gospel message will be highly appreciated by the Latter-day Saints and will not fail of eternal reward. Mr. Arthur Stebbins, editor of the paper, appears to be of that class which weary not in well doing.

THE GREAT COXEY FIZZLE.

General Coxe, when preparing for his great march to Washington, was confident that he would be able to lead a host as numerous as grasshoppers into the capital and that the mere noise of their wings and the density of the masses would induce Congress to pass his bills for good roads and non-interest bearing bonds. At least he repeatedly expressed himself to that effect. He modestly calculated that at least 100,000 unemployed would rally to his antislavery banner. The thousands counted on, however, never came and instead of an imposing army, he led a handful of stragglers into Washington, a mere circus parade. Now he has been in the shadow of the Capitol for two weeks and it is time for his sympathizers to review what he has accomplished so far.

On Mayday he gave his grand parade that was to be the first step towards the salvation of the country, and managed to have himself and lieutenants arrested for trampling down the grass on the Capitol grounds. That is about the sum total of his practical achievements in two weeks, but how that is to be a factor in the work for the amelioration of the condition of the laborers of the country is not clear. Quixote's gallant attack on the windmills is not more ridiculous than Coxe's Washington campaign; nor was the single-handed fight of the madman of the north with the Turkish army at Bender more ill-advised.

True, Coxe has managed to get himself before Congress, but this result might have been obtained without all the bluster and swaggering in which he has been indulging. Senator Sherman had already volunteered to introduce his good-road bill, but the valiant general refused the offer for reasons best known to himself. The common way of reaching the ears of the legislators did not suit his purpose, evidently. He was determined to raise a storm in some way and profit by the confusion.

Coxe has demonstrated but one thing, that he is not the redeeming messiah of America's laborers; that his method is not the means of their salvation. People acquainted with the man do not hesitate to say that he is a broken down sport and gambler who has taken this means of replenishing his own sinking funds. We are further told by Miss Mamie, the "godde-of liberty," that her father intends inflicting upon the country a series of lectures, a statement which probably furnishes the key to the closet in which his secret motives are kept. If he wanted cheap notoriety whereby to secure audiences and money, he has undoubtedly gained his object. But deceptions of this kind can only succeed for a limited period. Those men who followed him on the weary march to Washington, suffering hunger and exposure while he was riding comfortably in a carriage and enjoying first class hotel accommodations, may awake to the fact that they were fooled by a skilful will-o'-the-wisp arrangement, and resent it. Certain it is that the invasion of the Coxeyites of Washington will produce a little impression on the institutions of the country as would the discharge of an Indian arrow against Ensign Peak, and be equally resultless as regards the laboring interests of the country.

Y. M. C. A. JUBILEE.

It will be fifty years next month since George Williams, then a London clerk, now an esteemed merchant, brought to the point of organization the first Young Men's Christian association. The semi-centennial anniversary of this occurrence will be observed in a great jubilee, lasting from the first to the seventh of June, and attended by the parent association as well as by delegates from associations all over the world. The Church of England has placed at the service of the convention Westminster abbey and St. Paul's cathedral, but the congregations will merely be preached to in those historic buildings, and will not themselves preach. The opening service will be in the abbey, and the bishop of London will preach; later the bishop of Ripon will preach at the public thanksgiving service in St. Paul's. There will be various receptions, at one of which Mr. Williams, the founder, will make an address of welcome, and another day is to be distinguished by a reception by the mayor and corporation of the city of London in Guildhall; the whole jubilee winding up with an excursion to Windsor castle by special permission of the queen. The proceedings at the regular meetings of the convention will be carried on in English, German and French; and the delegates will lunch and dine all together in a great pavilion on the banks of the Thames, and there will be speaking and music.

A MATTER OF TRAINING.

An item of frequent observation is the fact that a person deprived of one of the natural senses of hearing or sight often develops one or other of the remaining senses or some of the mental faculties to a remarkable extent. For instance, a deaf person not infrequently has a wonderfully keen eyesight or marked delicateness in the sense of feeling, while one who is blind will develop a most acute sense of hearing. The ability to do this modifies to a slight extent the affliction of a person deprived of one of the senses named, though of course it does not supply any part of the deficiency.

A notable instance of where the development of a faculty in the manner stated was of material aid to the afflicted person is that of Owen P. Jones, an old resident of Utah, who recently died at Brigham City. Mr. Jones was deprived of sight when he was about thirty years of age, through an accident. He came to Utah, and after brief stays in several places, settled down in the capital of Box Elder, where he became a mail carrier. It is related of him that the way in which he was able to deliver letters and papers correctly was this: He would have the postmaster read to him the addresses, and would arrange letters and papers in the order of his route, as he knew every home in town. Then as he went on his rounds the mail would be in its place, and he remembered every person for whom he had received anything. If a person met him on his rounds and inquired for a letter, he would readily and promptly respond, and if there was one he knew just where to find it. He accomplished this by a constant exercise of his memory toward the desired end.

What was accomplished by the blind man in this regard is a suggestion that, as the development of the particular faculty which became so noticeable was wholly the result of training, a similar result might be attained where desirable among people not so afflicted. The looseness that characterizes the methods of many people is usually the result of a neglect to closely apply the mind rather than any inaptness on the part of the person. The senses may be made more acute by judicious training; the memory, the power of concentration of thought, and other mental faculties, may be improved, strengthened and developed by careful cultivation. It is largely a matter of self-education—a fact that it is important to keep in sight by those who earnestly seek to develop their faculties to a high degree of utility.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Utah people have been elated at the success which has attended the establishing of the sugar factory here, and already have learned to feel that it would be a calamity not to have it a permanent institution of the country. The sugar consumption of Utah is yet largely in excess of the local production, and we cannot rest satisfied until the Territory becomes an exporter instead of an importer. In the country at large $110,000,000 is the value of foreign sugar imported, in addition to the cost of transportation, thus showing the enormous field there is for the sugar industry of the United States. The cost of the annual purchase of sugar, therefore, is not less than $125,000,000, or greater than the average value of the wheat exports of the nation for the past ten years, and far more than the value of the product of its gold and silver mines for the same period.

The Chino Champion in arguing for a larger sugar production for California, gives some interesting facts that are equally applicable to Utah, as follows:

1. That we have a market for sugar at home at the present time which will consume the product of at least 1,000,000 acres of land; that the per capita consumption of sugar here is rapidly increasing, which, with our great increase in population, creates and insures a constantly increasing demand, our imports of 1891 exceeding our imports of 1889 by more than 500,000 tons.
2. That the production of beet sugar is increasing much more rapidly than that of cane sugar.
3. That the production of sugar beets here at a profit has been clearly demonstrated, and, therefore, has ceased to be an experiment.
4. That the culture of the sugar beet, when understood, is simple, and does not require skilled labor.
5. That beets can be sent direct from the harvest field to the manufactory without further preparation or storage.
6. That the culture of the sugar beet does not require any considerable investment of capital by the grower.
7. That the implements required for the production of sugar beets are simple and inexpensive as compared to those required for the production of wheat.
8. That the soil upon which beets have been successfully grown is left in prime condition for other crops.
9. That we have a large area of comparatively low-priced lands upon which sugar beets can be grown successfully.
10. That the profit of the grower is greater than the average of other crops.
11. That four months after the crop is planted it can be harvested and at once converted into money.
12. That with patient and persistent application and investigation any person of ordinary intelligence can successfully produce the sugar beets upon suitable lands within the belt described.

BACK THEM UP.

It was suggested in the last issue of the NEWS that influences were being brought to bear to place the City Council in a position of consenting to and harmonizing with the extravagant policy being followed in the direction of some public affairs. Thus far the Council has not shown a disposition to accede to these demands, and may not do so. The general effort has been to carry the city safely through to a settled and prosperous financial condition. It is this effort which has replaced the the municipality's credit in its enviable position. The work before the Council, however, presents some serious and difficult questions which, as pointed out in the NEWS, inevitably involve an increase of taxation that will be a heavy burden upon the property owner. How to make this burden as light as possible is a problem that will require in its solution much thought and good judgment.

As the taxpayers have a direct interest in these matters it would seem injudicious, and even unfair, to leave the councilmen to bear alone the burden of pressure brought against them. There is a great deal of talk about being progressive and of making public improvements and giving employment to local workmen, all of which is good in its place and when given a close construction. But when it is made the vehicle of securing needlessly lavish expenditures of the taxpayers' funds, while at the same time some of those taxpayers can get barely enough food and clothing to supply their wants, it is a most dangerous and disagreeable element to deal with. Such a contingency suggests that it would be appropriate for the taxpayers of Salt Lake to make their voices heard and fully understood in this matter. There is no occasion for noisy demonstration or denunciatory talk. Citizens, especially those who have large property interests, can give to individual councilmen their views on the subject, and the Council will then realize just what public sentiment is behind it in any move it may make. The success of the reform ticket last November was a declaration that the property owners were averse to taxation and municipal debt without limit. The only way to prevent their being further imposed upon the people is for courageous and determined retrenchment and economy on the part of the City Council, and even then it is doubtful if the whole ground can be covered. But whatever action the Council takes in this direction should be supported and commended by the people in whose interest it is, so that their representatives will not be overslaughed by adverse criticism from those who do not have to pay the municipal fiddler.

In it all there is no need or demand for ceasing public improvements or delaying them to the extent of working hardship. But there is need of cutting off expenses where no direct and immediate benefits accrue to the citizens. There are some things which the City Council cannot help to any great extent, and it should not be blamed therefor. One of these is the procedure on the city and county building. Some of the matters thereto pertaining are tied up by a contract on which some light should be shed for the benefit of the public. The Council is further handicapped in being legally compelled—in the view of some advisers—to take a course not always and altogether in harmony with its own desires and views. But there is responsibility on the part of the present members for future action in all these concerns; and an understanding of that responsibility and steps in satisfactorily discharging it will be materially aided if the taxpayers take a sufficient interest to back their representatives up in every legitimate, honorable and consistently economical measure.

INDUSTRIALS NOT PEACEFUL.

It has been claimed all the time by the sympathizers of the so-called industrial armies that they consist of peaceful, law-abiding citizens marching to the seat of our national government in order to present petitions bearing on the financial depression under which the laboring classes are said to be suffering. All such pretensions now appear utterly foolish, in the light of the events of the past week. All over the West the "armies" have shown a disposition to transgress the laws of the country and defy the power of the government—in fact to go as far in this direction as the safety of their own precious lives would permit. They have not hesitated in appropriating the property of the railroads, interfering occasionally with the speedy transmission of the mails, on which so many interests of the country depend; nor have they neglected to assume all sorts of threatening attitudes, hooting and jeering the lawfully constituted authorities. A case in point is the conflict at Provo on Saturday. The militia proceeded to the scene of disturbance with unloaded rifles. The Carterites defied the Governor to attempt the arrest of the ringleaders, declaring that they would rather die than submit. They armed themselves with clubs and other weapons, apparently determined to fight, and submitted only when the command was given to the militia to load their guns, and this was done in full view of the defiant crowd. If this is the conduct of peaceful, law-abiding citizens, then most of the fellows now languishing in the country's jails may claim those virtues, for very few of them would refuse to surrender to the authorities when the demand is emphasized by the muzzle of a loaded gun.

The fact of the matter is that the victims of the Coxey craze all over the country may not in the first instance have planned any design against the laws or the government. But by their mad undertaking some of them have placed themselves in a position where conflicts with law are unavoidable. They were from the first warned by their true friends to desist from a scheme disastrous to themselves, but they chose to close their ears to sound, conservative advice and listen to the declamations of demagogues. Their experience ought by this time to have taught them that they cannot execute their Quixotic enterprise without breaking the law, and as this fact dawns upon them they ought to disband and look for constitutional means of making themselves heard, provided they have something to say. Certainly those who at heart are loyal citizens, although carried away in a moment of enthusiasm to join the marching ranks, will return home after having seen the consequences of their first steps. It is not cowardly to do so. It is more cowardly to persist in a wrong course after its error is apparent. Those who continue in their effort to steal trains and defy the authorities should forever cease pretending to be peaceful citizens; they chill to the center any feelings of sympathy that may exist for them and will henceforth be regarded and treated simply as enemies of society by all who place the country's welfare above the interests of a political party.

The danger to the country lurking in the conditions on which the Coxey movement depends has been often referred to, and it has not been much exaggerated. If the "general" succeeds in keeping his band around Washington until Kelly's contingent arrives, there will be a considerable body of idle men gathered in one place. Should other "generals" be able to join, the crowd will be still greater. Browne thinks 5,000 men will be in camp within a short time. Suppose these men get hungry and desperate. Lawlessness will certainly follow and crimes be committed. What will the result be, if the mighty labor organizations represented by Sovereign and Debs, the latter of whom at least has declared himself in sympathy with Coxey, take a decided stand in the matter? This question only the future can solve, but it would be a good deal better to prevent the necessity of solving that problem. If ever superior statesmanship and union of action for the good of the country were needed, this is the time. Whatever just, constitutional measures may be decided upon by those whose duty it is to deal with the problem for its prompt solution, will be cordially endorsed by loyal citizens of all parties.

THE "ARMY'S" CHAMPION.

A correspondent writes to the News from Provo:

The army here are peaceable and do not steal nor commit any depredations. This is true up to this writing, and knowing your regard for truth it is but just to say so through the columns of the News.

We are very glad, though somewhat amused, to hear this; but we beg to say that the same "regard for truth" forbids the publication of the remaining parts of our correspondent's lengthy letter. The News has no personal quarrel with the "army" or any of its members; but an outfit that steals trains, riotously insults the law and its sworn representatives, and when not engaged in more serious business, sits down in idleness and impudently expects food and supplies to be brought freely by those who have to work for their own support—it must look elsewhere than to the News for tributes to its good order, its peacefulness, its law-abiding character, and its claim to sympathy and respectability. Incidentally, too, it must have different leadership and listen to more worthy advisers than this man Carter and all of that ilk.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

A condensed review, by the New York Mail and Express, of an article that lately appeared in the Presbyterian and Reformed Review from the pen of Rev. E. T. Bloomfield, presents some interesting facts regarding the recent growth of Protestant Sunday schools throughout the world. These schools, Dr. Bloomfield says, have now a membership of more than twenty-two million persons, counting teachers and pupils. Nearly half of these are in the United States, while 86 per cent speak the English language or live in English-speaking countries. It is remarkable that while Europe and the United States each has a Protestant population of about 50,000,000 the former has only about 8 per cent of the Protestant Sunday school membership of the world, while the latter has 49 per cent. It is also noticeable that in Roman Catholic countries the Sunday school which is essentially an institution of English-speaking countries, is gaining in Europe. Germany, although Protestant, has not been favorable heretofore to Sunday school work, but in 1874 there were in that country 1,218 Sunday schools, with 86,418 teachers and scholars, while in 1893 there were 5,900 schools and 784,789 members. The increase in population was 12 per cent, and in Sunday school membership 81.9 per cent. Hence, while the membership is not very large, the tendency in the direction of Sunday schools is marked. During the period mentioned there were slight losses in Ireland, Spain and Portugal, and more marked gains in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, France, Russia, Finland, Austria, Sweden and Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Greece and Turkey in Europe. Schools are also reported as growing rapidly in China, Japan and India.

Readers of the News will remember that at the recent Deseret Sunday School Union meeting in this city, statistics were presented showing that over 83,000 persons were enlisted as pupils and teachers in the great Sunday school cause among the Latter-day Saints—a number which, in proportion to the Church membership, will be found without an equal in any religious body or in any country in the world.

UTAH AND IRRIGATION.

The Irrigation Age for May might almost be called a Utah number, in view of the many articles in its pages written by Utah men and the many allusions to Utah methods and means of reclaiming sterile soil by industry as applied in irrigation. On one of the early pages a map is presented showing the "striking comparison between the promised land of Canaan and the Salt Lake Valley," which, the Age says, "strikingly exhibits the topographical similarity between the Promised Land of the Bible times and the Promised Land to which Brigham Young led the Mormon Pioneers of 1847. In both localities a River Jordan connects a body of fresh water with a Dead Sea, and the surrounding mountain landscape is almost the same in both cases. How much this strange likeness may have appealed to the imagination of Latter-day Saints it is not easy to say, but it is by no means difficult to understand how even a sentiment might take very firm hold of a people's mind, especially a people having just such an historical environment as the Mormons."

On another page are portraits of President Woodruff and Bishop Thomas R. Cutler, the latter being referred to as manager of the Lehi sugar factory, in a lengthy article discussing the question of irrigated sugar beets. Of the former gentleman, the Age says: "We present the portrait of the memorable Willford Woodruff, who in his eighty-fifth [eighty-eighth] year is still the active head of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He has lived nearly fifty years of his life on a twenty-acre irrigated farm and his experience has fully illustrated the soundness of Brigham Young's industrial policy alluded to elsewhere in this issue of the Age."

The article thus referred to is headed, "Brigham Young's successful policy," and this is how the policy is treated:

Against the folly and error of the one-crop country, east and west, there is one bright example of success through diversified production which cannot be too often recalled. It is the example of the builders of Utah. They went to that beautiful land a little less than fifty years ago as a band of fugitives. They were cut off by high mountain ranges and great distances, then untraversed by the iron horse, from civilization. They had no assets, save the brain of a masterful leader of men. Whatever may be thought of the religious doctrines then sincerely held and practiced by the Mormon people, Brigham Young was a very great man. He was animated by the spirit of the empire-builder. In all-round practical sense and capacity to do a great many things well, he much resembled Benjamin Franklin. Finding himself in what appeared to be a hopeless desert, he formulated an industrial system to which he adhered to the day of his death. So perfectly was he able to enforce it that every Mormon farmer and artisan labored with the brain of Brigham Young. He said the farm unit should be twenty acres. He said each family should produce first of all what it consumed and then a surplus exchangeable for some other form of property. The surrounding mountains were bursting with mineral wealth, but he said it should lie there untouched, because of all things he abhorred the spirit of speculation. He had founded his state upon industrialism. The world knows the result. Each farm of twenty acres supported its owner, and in a very few years the people became absolutely free in an industrial sense. Not only did the system produce enough to satisfy all the wants of the people, but it produced a surplus capital for banks, factories and stores. Not only that, but a surplus of many millions for temples and missionaries. There are no Mormon recruits in the "industrial army" of today, and there never will be.

In addition to these references there is discussion of a speech delivered before the late Legislature of Utah by Col. Chas. G. Stevenson, the well known engineer of this city (with portrait); the announcement that the declaration by ex-Gov. A. L. Thomas of the position of Utah membership on the national committee of irrigation has led to the selection of Mr. Wm. H. Rowe for the place; excellent papers on "Experimental Farming in Utah," by Prest. J. W. Sanborn, of the Agricultural College; on "Simple Earthen Dams," by Mr. Samuel Fortier, the well-known engineer of Ogden; and on "Tree Irrigation and Spraying," by J. C. Lemon, a successful farmer and fruit-grower of Ferron, Utah.

LET US REASON TOGETHER.

These men who have banded together for the purpose of petitioning Congress for certain legislation have done so, they say, with the object of obtaining work. They are unemployed and hope by legislative enactments to create a condition of industrial prosperity that will benefit the working men all over the country. They believe that the government is at fault, and propose, by imposing numbers, to enforce their views and effect a change.

In the blind enthusiasm prevailing among the "industrialists," fed by the frequent harangues of their leaders, the chances for a calm consideration of the proposition are, we fear, but slim; yet it would seem unkind not to endeavor to point out some of the fallacies that underlie the whole movement.

In the first place, it is a matter of doubt, to say the least, whether Congress has it in its power to provide work for a portion of the country's unemployed, virtually at the expense of the rest of the people. If the government should engage a number of unemployed, establishing industries of various kinds, the result would most likely be the depression of the various private industries, crippled by a competition of gigantic proportions. There would soon be more unemployed to provide for and the number would increase until the government at last would be converted into a vast employment agency. The effect has been felt in places where convict labor has been employed in competition with free labor. To rush to Washington, then, with demand for work at the hands of the government is at the very best to seek a remedy in shifting the burden from one shoulder to another, were the petition acted upon favorably—if this is the petition—since people would be given work at the expense of depriving others of their daily bread.

In this country legislation is supposed to facilitate and regulate and aid individuals in creating and enjoying means of subsistence. Those who are out of employment are supposed to utilize the vast resources of the country and become self-supporting by their own industry, skill and ingenuity. A free country in which every citizen is a sovereign means the universal recognition of this principle. It is the foundation and chief cornerstone on which it is established and maintained. It follows that when men turn to the government for paternal legislation, they virtually abandon this foundation of liberty and inaugurate a regime foreign to our institutions. In the present movement, therefore, the germ of a revolution can plainly be discerned, inasmuch as it is proposed to substitute for the existing individualistic conditions one of socialism. It is plain talk but nevertheless true, that the followers of Coxey and the other "generals" are revolutionists in their poor way, for they have engaged in the business of directing the affairs of the country by means unknown to the Constitution and the laws founded thereon.

In the next place, the course they pursue is entirely contrary to their own interests, provided their object is to obtain work and a living. No corporations have provided more labor for the unemployed than the railroad companies, both direct and indirect. Vast armies of workmen have found profitable employment in constructing the lines, building the rolling stock, operating the roads, etc. Through these iron highways vast tracts of land have been made valuable for cultivation and the products of the mines had not been available except for the railroads. On these the material prosperity of this country depends to a large extent. And yet these "armies," pretending to petition the country for work, go about interfering with trains, stealing expensive engines, threatening to tear up tracks and causing the lawful owners of the property irreparable loss in various ways. Can anybody for a moment imagine that either the government or private corporations under the circumstances will invest in railroads, extending or building new lines for the sake of developing new regions and finding new resources? It should be evident to the dullest brain that the course pursued by the "industrialists" in this matter is suicidal to their own interests. If the rule be established that railroad property is to be subject to the pillage of any band of unemployed, then capital must necessarily withdraw from such investments, and the chances of obtaining work therein must become correspondingly less.

From whatever point of view this strange movement is considered, it is indefensible, and no real friend of the workmen can encourage it. As revolutionary in its tendencies it must at last bring the strong arm of the law down upon it; and since it has the effect of destroying instead of creating resources of work and subsistence, the sooner it is brought to an end the better. The country needs peace and union of effort to pull through the wave of depression from which it is suffering, in common with the rest of the world. Revolutionary unrest and riotous agitation among the industrial forces can only defer the era of prosperity which, until these evidences of lawlessness appeared, was just about to burst upon us.

"THE REPUBLIC OF IRRIGATION."

Since Thomas Moore wrote his famous work describing the imaginary island of Utopia, where the enjoyment of the greatest perfection in politics, laws and the like was depicted as bringing man to the highest pinnacle of human happiness, the schemes to bring about this ideal condition probably have increased rather than decreased. Some of these have been of the most impractical character, while others have contained a measure of useful ideas; some have sought to do away with a large proportion of human toil, like the Fruitarians who are now looking toward Hawaii as the place to form a colony where men and women may dwell and subsist on the fruits, vegetables and grasses that nature produces unaided, and clothe themselves only in nature's garb, while others have sought to utilize all the energy of brain life and physical effort available. But as yet the land of utopian bliss is an "undiscovered country" even in prospective to those who work with human forces alone.

The latest scheme containing suggestions of a practical nature that has been put forth as a means of attaining independence and equality, and at the same time securing to all its beneficiaries a competency of this life's necessities, is by William E. Smythe, editor of the Irrigation Age, in what he designates "The Republic of Irrigation." Mr. Smythe does not lay claim to being the originator of the chief idea which underlies his plan, but gives credit for the suggestion as coming from what he designates the industrial system of President Brigham Young as it was followed in Utah in early days, when the small farm of 20 acres was settled upon and made, by irrigation and careful cultivation, to produce that which its occupants consumed and also a surplus exchangeable for other property. Mr. Smythe's honor in this connection is his plan for making that system applicable to the Great West, or Arid America as he styles it.

This arid region as he describes it he divides into four sections which present four different phases of the problem. These sections are: First—Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, eastern Colorado and Wyoming; second—western Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Nevada, Idaho and Montana; third—eastern Washington and Oregon; fourth—California and Arizona. The problem of securing the greatest productiveness from each of these sections he holds has been fully and satisfactorily solved in a process of irrigation suited to each. Within the area described there is to be found, he considers, the remedy for industrial ills that afflict the country, "the one broad field remaining on this continent for agricultural and industrial expansion," where labor may not be only absorbed but rewarded with the means of living, and where "the problem of how to find the highest average prosperity for the common people may be solved."

The details of Mr. Smythe's plan are far from being perfected, though the general plan is outlined. The task of working out these details is yet future, but secondary to the design that is set forth. Some of it is to be accomplished at the next National Irrigation congress. It is proposed to there map out a number of schemes of diversified farming, applicable to different localities, forms of administration for proposed model colonies, plans for economical and attractive architecture, and the best manner of training settlers in methods of scientific and intensive cultivation under irrigation. Mr. Smythe himself promises to undertake to "marshal the brains and the heart of Arid America in order to hasten by downright practical means, the making of the new civilization," and will leave it to be determined "how the results of these labors shall be applied, whether by giving them common publicity or by the creation of model colonies under a business administration to be hereafter developed."

The scheme in brief is to form a vast co-operative movement backed by the sympathy and capital of the country, and the practical experience of the farming community, to locate colonies all over Arid America, and to establish systems of irrigation whereby the land may be brought into cultivation and be made to yield its strength under careful treatment and diversified crops. The farm unit is to be twenty or forty acres, as may be agreed upon, probably the former, and none are to be allowed more. Of this amount each man may become the owner, with all the privileges of water thereto. Taking this general scheme for a basis, Mr. Smythe goes on to say:

No man will ever accumulate a great fortune upon twenty acres, but no man who heeds the Divine injunction, "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread," will ever be poor on twenty acres of irrigated land scientifically cultivated. The reclaimed areas will be densely populated. The result will be near neighbors and social, educational and religious advantages within the reach of all. The farmers of Arid America will enjoy the sweet, pure life of the country at its best, and they will also realize the most desirable advantages of neighborhood association. This means a revolution in country life. It will be more like the ideal society of the ancient Greeks than like the dreary, lonesome life of the farming population in the older parts of the United States.

As an argument for the imperative necessity of farm ownership to be with the occupants, and to guard against a monopoly of the soil, it is pointed out that "for more than a hundred years this republic has offered an asylum for those oppressed by pope and king, and yet we are very far from a realization of that quality of independence dearest to the human heart. This is security in the support of one's family. The sharp and sudden business convulsion of last summer, followed by the long period of depression, again taught the world that no man is independent who does not live under his own roof, and support his family from the products of his own acres. In the best sense no man is independent who works for another. He cannot tell at what moment a threat of tariff-tinkering at Washington, the cessation of silver coinage in India, or the collapse of a boom in Argentina or Australia, may render his fancied security in employment a precarious dependence for the support of his family."

Whatever may become of the scheme, and its probable failure or success because of the interest that may be aroused in it and the human element to be operated with, there is much in it to afford thought for philanthropists and statesmen. Arid America is a vast field for intelligent combined labor and satisfactory returns therefor. How it is to be utilized is a problem whose importance has not dawned yet upon the mind of the nation at large. If Mr. Smythe can secure for it a thorough comprehension on the part of the country's leading men he will have accomplished a mighty work. The practical and beneficial nature of many of his suggestions has been established by experience in the arid region. The enlisting of sufficient interest in his scheme to reduce it to perfect practicability and the securing of aid and material to carry it out are something wholly different in the present temper of politicians, philanthropists, the laboring classes and people generally.

It is stated by the Helena (Mont.) Independent, that about three weeks ago Gottlieb Wierszinski, a tailor, and Louis Chairmack, a shoemaker, left Helena to go to Alaska. Wierszinski is now in the hospital at Spokane, slowly recovering from three pistol shots in the head, inflicted by his traveling companion. When the men left here Wierszinski had about $300 with him, part of which was in drafts. From letters received here by his friends, it is apparent Wierszinski was shot for the purpose of robbery. The men, on reaching Spokane, had either started out to walk out of town and catch a freight train, or else Chairmack had induced his companion to go with him to the spot where the assault took place. After being shot and robbed Wierszinski was left for dead. He was found by some people, however, still alive, and taken to the hospital in Spokane, where it was found that his wounds were not very serious.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IN THE ANTIPODES.

The annual conference of the Australasian mission was held on April 6th, 7th and 8th, 1894, at Waiwhara, Te Mahia, New Zealand. The following named brethren from Zion were present, viz., President William Gardner, Elders Wesley Gibson, William Douglas, L. C. Rasmussen, B. Goddard, James E. Fisher, C. B. Bartlett, W. F. Nebeker, Joseph C. Jorgensen, M. C. Nielsen, L. G. Hoagland, B. H. Hollingworth, Edgar Best, George Bowles, James Barrow, R. E. Scott, J. Johnson, C. H. Embley, T. J. O'Brien, J. C. Allen, L. Bradford, R. L. Bird, D. H. Packard and H. C. Jex. Brother C. Hardy, president of the Auckland branch, was present.

Conference was called to order by the president of the mission at 10 a.m., and opened with singing hymn 166; prayer by Elder William Douglas, and hymn 80.

President Gardner greeted the Saints and Elders who had assembled from various parts of the islands to worship God. He referred to his recent appointment and his feelings in assuming the responsibilities of such a position. He spoke upon his early experiences in New Zealand, when laboring in Waikato some years ago, and the changes that had taken place since then; was pleased to see the spirit of love and union manifested at the opening of conference, and earnestly exhorted the Saints to live righteous and upright lives that they might receive the blessings promised to them.

Elder L. C. Rasmussen, president of the Tauranga conference, after giving a brief report of that district, sustained the counsel given by Elder Gardner. He testified that, after many years of slander, misrepresentation and persecution, the tide had turned in favor of the Latter-day Saints. The work of God is spreading and the power of the adversary has been weakened. He testified to the fulfillment of prophecy in the establishment of the true Church of God in the latter days. Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream was clearly explained, and its literal fulfillment was traced through the rise and fall of empires, until God established His Church by direct revelation through Joseph Smith the Prophet.

Elder William Douglas reported the good condition of Te Mahia conference, in which were seven branches of the Church, most of which were in excellent working order. Energetic efforts had been made in preaching the Gospel unto the outsiders, many of whom were very friendly while others would not listen to the warning message. The prevalent evils among the Maori people were commented upon, and the Saints were earnestly urged to forsake all evil and live exemplary lives.

Hirini Whaanga, a native Elder and influential chief, also bore his testimony to the Gospel and the faithful labors of the Elders of Israel among his people.

The first meeting of conference closed by singing hymn 105; prayer by Elder L. G. Hoagland.

The afternoon meeting commenced at 2 p.m. The congregation joined in singing hymn 40; prayer by Elder Te Kepa, of Muriwai; hymn 166.

Elder Wesley Gibson, president of Hawkes Bay conference, reported the condition of the Saints; rejoiced that many of the weak branches had been strengthened and that the members were increasing in brotherly love for each other. He commented at some length on Paul's counsel to the Hebrews (Heb. vi. 1, 2), showing that the same principles were now being taught in all the world by the servants of God. Latter-day Saints believed and accepted these doctrines, and must sacredly observe their covenants in order to be saved in the celestial kingdom of our Father. He earnestly pleaded with the Maori members to observe the words of the Apostle Peter (1st Peter i. 5, 6, 7), that brotherly kindness, virtue, knowledge, and Christian charity may characterize their daily lives.

Elder L. G. Hoagland expressed his joy in listening unto the words of the servants of God, and testified that the Church of Jesus Christ, restored in the latter days, was the true Church of God. The conference of Wairarapa, over which he presides, was stated to be in a favorable condition, though the branches had been diminished through many of the members moving into other parts of the conference. He gave a good explanation of the parable of the ten talents, and closed his remarks by urging the Saints to be alive to every duty.

Elder B. H. Hollingworth expressed his gratitude in being privileged to labor amongst the Maori people, who were of the seed of Abraham. His love for them was great on account of their kindness to the Elders from Zion. He represented the Ngapuhi or Whangarei conference, where he observed that the Saints were improving in knowledge each month, and the Elders were constantly baptizing new members. There are seven branches under his jurisdiction. He earnestly desired that the spirit of God may be poured out upon all His Saints and testified to the saving power of the Gospel of Christ.

After a few remarks by Hoani Tautahi, a native Elder from Ngapuhi, the meeting was dismissed with singing hymn 117. Prayer by Elder Fisher.

An evening meeting was held, commencing at 7 o'clock, which was opened with singing, "O My Father," to Zion's new and favorite tune; prayer by Elder Te Wirihana; hymn 88.

Elder Jos. Jorgensen, after giving a favorable report of the Saints residing in the Waiapu conference, spoke upon the duties of the members and the necessity of observing the counsel given by the Elders of Israel. He testified to the joy always experienced in meeting in these annual conferences.

Elder C. B. Bartlett addressed the conference and reported the Bay of Islands district, over which he presides. He spoke encouragingly of the Saints living in that part of the vineyard, where eleven branches of the Church were organized. He bore a faithful testimony to the divine mission of Joseph Smith, who had received revelations from heaven in these days for the guidance of God's people. The precious truths of the Gospel were commented upon, and the Saints were counselled to resist the temptation of Satan, that they might receive eternal life in the presence of God.

Ngawaea Polpoi, a native Elder from Te Mahia (our Maori orator), was listened to with breathless interest, as he fluently reviewed the history of Lehi and his sons, showing how the Maoris inherited the dark skin through the disobedience of their ancestors. This native Demosthenes most eloquently portrayed the Gospel plan of salvation, and with appropriate gestures, he forcibly emphasized these saving principles and urged all his people to render obedience to the laws of God.

Elder James Barrow, Arapata Neha and Wita Rewarewa also addressed the meeting, which was brought to a close by singing the hymn on page 166, "We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." Prayer by Nikero Te Koro.

The second day's conference was opened at 10 a.m., on Saturday, April 7, by singing hymn 22; prayer by Elder Rasmussen; hymn 24.

Elder James E. Fisher, president of the Poverty Bay district, stated that the four branches in his conference were doing well, and the presidents of the same were alive to their duties. He gave suitable counsel to the members assembled in conference, and desired that all would be strong in magnifying their callings.

Elder George Bowles felt well paid for his long and tedious journey on horseback to the conference. Felt exceedingly thankful for all the blessings enjoyed by the children of God. He dwelt upon Paul's declaration, "One faith, one Lord, one baptism," contrasting it with the teachings of modern Christianity. He spoke upon the necessity of entering in at the straight gate and walking in the narrow way to eternal life.

Elder John Johnson was the only representative from the South Island, but he stated that the members there were rejoicing in the spirit of the Gospel. The Saints were not absent from the conference through indifference, but the great distance rendered it impossible for them to attend. A spirit of earnest inquiry was now manifested amongst the Europeans in Waiapu district and every opportunity is taken to proclaim unto them the Gospel message. He urged all to seek for the Spirit of God to lead into all truth, stating that it was necessary to live pure and righteous lives to retain that Spirit with us.

Rangitere and Hirapaea, two native Elders, then addressed the Saints, after which the congregation sang hymn 152; prayer by Rangit Kawea.

The afternoon meeting commenced promptly at the usual hour, with singing hymn 115; prayer by Iharaire Wehikare; hymn 93.

Elder M. C. Nielson greeted the Saints in the name of the Lord Jesus and, while associating with such a large number of members in conference, he was reminded of the organization of the Church, sixty-four years ago, with six members. He showed the marvelous growth of the Church, and how Elders had been called to all parts of the world to proclaim the truth. These servants of God went in all humility to all the nations of the earth to call them unto repentance. He rejoiced greatly at the progress of the good work amongst the Maories.

Elder Charles Hardy, president of the Auckland branch, testified to the good spirit often manifested amongst the European Saints in Auckland in years past, and regretted that they were deprived of the special labors of the Elders. The Maories have been greatly blessed with the ministrations of these servants of God, and he exhorted the members to faithfulness, lest the Elders be taken from them and sent to a people more worthy.

Elders Nebeker, Embly, Wiremu Takana and Matenga Waitaniwha also spoke encouragingly to the Saints.

Meeting closed with hymn 74; prayer by Ngatoto Maere.

A Priesthood meeting was held at 7 o'clock, where suitable instructions were given by President Gardner. About seventy members holding the priesthood were present, and much time was spent in answering questions and explaining the duties of the members.

Simultaneously with the above, a sister's testimonial meeting was held in an adjoining "whare," or Maori house, presided over by Elder W. Gibson. Twenty-seven members bore their testimonies.

The third day's conference meetings were commenced at 10 a.m. on Sunday, April 8th were opened by singing hymn 118.

Elder B. Goddard, President of Manawatu conference, reported the labors of the Elders in that district. Four branches and three Sunday schools were in good working order, and most of the members diligently performing their duties. He complimented the Saints for their great faith in the ordinance for the healing of the sick; referred also to his labors amongst the Europeans, and his visit to the South Island. He warned the people against the evils of horseracing, adultery, witchcraft, drunkenness, etc., referring to the teachings of the Apostles on these and kindred subjects.

Elders Best, Bird, O'Brien, Bradford and Jex also spoke briefly and bore their testimonies.

Meeting closed with singing hymn 65; prayer by Elder Packard.

The sacrament meeting was held at 2 p.m., and a very large number of Saints were present. The opening hymn (80) was sung by the congregation; prayer by Te Naera Hotutu; hymn 128.

The Lord's Supper was administered by Elders Gibson and Douglas.

Elder B. Goddard, the mission clerk, read the annual statistical report for the year ending Dec. 31, 1893, which showed a total membership of 3,194, including 841 children. These were organized into seventy-three branches. The total baptisms during the year were 135, children blessed 106. The mission was subdivided into fifteen districts, in which thirty-three Elders from Zion were laboring.

The general and local authorities of the Church were duly sustained by the conference. Seven native Elders were also called to assist the Elders in their labors amongst outsiders.

Elders Gibson, Douglas and Rasmussen were released from their labors in the districts over which they presided, but in view of their knowledge of the Maori language, and their great ability to preach to the Maoris, it was deemed advisable to retain their services two months longer for speech labor amongst the native tribes who have not yet been visited.

President Gardner closed the conference with an earnest address to the members. He referred especially to the Book of Mormon and Ready References, both of which are translated into the Maori, and in circulation amongst the people. He spoke words of encouragement to the Saints, and exhorted all present to greater diligence.

Meeting was dismissed by singing hymn 28; prayer by Hori Te Poipoi.

A testimonial meeting was held in the evening, and a most enjoyable time was spent listening to the faithful testimonies of forty members. Elders Scott, Allen and Packard also addressed the meeting.

Thus closed another eventful conference in Maoridom, and the Saints and Elders all rejoiced in being privileged to participate in such a feast of fat things. The Spirit of God was abundantly poured out and a continual song of praise gladdened every heart.

B. GODDARD,
Clerk of the Australasian Mission.
WAIROA, Hawke Bay, New Zealand, April 14, 1894.

NOTES ON THE "HUI TAU."

Waiwhara, a small Maori village on the Te Mahia peninsula, presented a lively appearance during the time of the annual conference of the Australasian mission. At any other time it must be a lonesome though very pleasant spot. The Maori wharves, all primitive structures, built of reeds and native grasses, were erected near the beach, at the foot of the sloping green clad hills. Stretching out to the east was the mighty Pacific, calm and placid as a sea of glass.

Great preparations had been made for the accommodation of the visiting Saints who came in large numbers from the Bay of Islands in the far north, to Waipounamu (Middle Island), in the south. A spacious building 60x20 feet, had been specially erected (of native reeds) for the conference meetings. It was dimly lighted at each end, by the doorway and aperture for ventilation. A small table and rough bench served as a stand or pulpit, at one end of the building, and flax mats were spread down each side of the hall. Upon these the congregation was seated, or squatted, and during the service all imaginable positions were assumed for comfort. As these mats also serve as the beds of the natives, there was an abundance of blankets, pillows, etc., and hence the natives were able to lie at ease. The deacons paced to and fro through the center aisle, armed with long rods, and occasionally poking drowsy members of the congregation, to prevent them falling into the arms of Morpheus. The argus eyes of these vigilant officials were often fixed upon the Elders, who were also compelled to lie upon the mats, as there were only two chairs in the village. The brethren would often chat till late in the evening and were aroused early in the morning, hence it was no wonder if, in a four hours' testimony meeting, some were found "nodding" and the watchful deacon enjoying the opportunity of giving a "Kaumatua" (Elder) a gentle (?) reminder.

The conference commenced on April 6th, though many of the Saints and Elders arrived a few days before that time. Each company was received with the usual Maori greeting, the "Haka," or war dance, being repeated daily. This peculiar, though cheering, reception has been previously described in the News. Of course, the indispensable "hongi" was freely given, and duly appreciated by all comers, especially the newly arrived Elders from Zion. The writer being detained by storms and steamer delays, did not arrive until the first hymn had been sung, and hence, after meeting, the greetings came by wholesale. Many of the Saints desired to give forcible demonstration of their "aroha," (love) and after about 200 such impressions, the nasal proboscis was almost demoralized.

A good spirit prevailed during all the meetings of the "Hui tau," and much good will undoubtedly result from this happy reunion.

The Australasian mission now comprises sixteen conferences under the presidency of Elder William Gardner.

Forty-four Elders are at present laboring in these districts preaching the Gospel to all classes. In addition to the two Australian districts, a new field has been opened in Tasmania, where Elders Lewis, Pond and Sister Pond are spreading the good news.

Three Elders anticipated receiving their release to return to Zion at this conference, but were happily (?) disappointed; Elders Gibson, Rasmussen and Douglas are fluent speakers in the native tongue, and it was therefore deemed expedient to retain their services till June, in order to do some active work amongst a number of native tribes that have not yet received the Gospel. A number of exemplary Maori Elders were also called to assist in this special labor. The Elders assigned to Maori work in the various districts have few opportunities of visiting distant tribes, as the members need constantly visiting in the various branches and, if neglected, fall into sin. The assistance of the above named Elders, therefore, will be of great aid to the mission and will accomplish great good. They will be released to return to Zion in the month of June, and a few of the most faithful Maori members will accompany them.

The natives possess the spirit of gathering, but circumstances have hitherto rendered it inexpedient. There is probably no people better prepared for temple work than our Maori Saints, many of whom possess an unbroken ancestral record for more than five hundred years.

The names of Hirini Whaanga and his wife Mary will be lovingly remembered by the majority of Elders who have labored in this mission. Brother Whaanga is one of the leading "rangatiras," or chiefs, in the Te Mahia district, and the Elders have always found a cheery welcome and happy home under his hospitable roof, and many of the brethren have learned to love and esteem their Maori "mother," Mary Whaanga, for her uniform kindness. They have now made all preparations to leave for Zion in June next, and it has been suggested that the Elders there should give them a cordial reception on their arrival. Such an event would not only cheer and bless the new arrivals (the first Maori Saints permitted to return to the ancient inheritance of their ancestors), but the news sent across the waters will tend to encourage and strengthen the Saints here. Some of the Elders may now have an opportunity of atoning for their negligence in writing, for it is a common topic here that the majority of returning Elders fail to fulfil their promises to correspond with those who have extended to them every kindness during their sojourn in their midst. The News has previously called attention to this subject, but apparently the counsel is unheeded by many. Brethren, redeem your promise! If you have forgotten how to write in the Maori "reo" send us your letters and we will "whakamaori" them.

The following experience will probably explain the abrupt termination of the above appeal. The foregoing was hurriedly written in the saloon of the small coasting steamer Te Kapu, while lying peacefully in Wairoa river, waiting for the tide. When the vessel sailed out and crossed the bar it encountered a rough and turbulent sea. Pale and anxious faces indicated the coming struggle as the little steamer tossed, plunged and plowed through the large and angry waves. The anxiety was increased by the fact that several vessels had been wrecked in the vicinity a few days previously.

Passengers and many of the crew were quickly leaning over the sides of the vessel, gazing with steadfast and melancholy faces into the "deep blue sea" and occasionally freely contributing to the welfare of the flimsy tribe below. Fortunately the sad experience only continued about five hours, and terminated when the sheltered harbor of Napier was reached and the "iron horse" was gladly substituted for the "ocean flyer."

Prior to leaving the scene of the conference, the natives and Elders assembled in front of the large meeting house for the farewell ceremony. Their attention was attracted by a large procession of young men and maidens in the distance approaching with slow and measured steps, chanting farewell songs in solemn, though melodious tones. The native sisters waved silk handkerchiefs and ribbons, as they sang and danced the "Haka," at the conclusion of which they skipped forward and tied these tokens of love around the necks of their parting friends, chanting in the Maori tongue:

Go, go, ye Saints, to your distant homes,
Far, far away,
We bind these gifts upon you all
To unite your love to ours.

A semi-circle was then formed and the departing Saints and Elders passed around bestowing the farewell "hongi" on old and young. It was an affecting scene, and many of the Saints and Elders shed tears of affection at the parting, as some will probably never meet again until, with shouts of joy, they are welcomed into their eternal mansions on high.

The horses were then mounted and the cavalcade moved slowly away to the shouts of "Haere ra! Haere ra!"

The Saints in Maoridom verily believe that "faith without works is dead." The provisions consumed during the "Hui Tau" were reported as two tons of flour, 3,500 pounds of sugar, nine tons potatoes, four tons sweet potatoes, thirty-eight sheep, besides large quantities of pork, beef, plums, rice, etc., etc. Including the erection and repairing of meeting houses, etc., the estimated cost of this conference was about $1,200, non-members of the Church contributing a great portion of it, besides assisting in waiting upon the visiting Saints.

The Elders have now separated for their various fields of labor, carrying with them many happy reminiscences and blessed and strengthened by the profitable teachings and timely counsel.

The "Ready Reference" translated into the Maori language are selling quite rapidly, and they will prove of great value to the Elders, and also to the Saints who love to chant these scriptural passages in their daily meetings. It is earnestly hoped that ere long arrangements may be made for the publication of Church literature here, in both languages, as there is now a great demand for printed matter amongst all classes. The Elders also are very anxious to scatter the truth broadcast, that it may "sweep away the refuge of lies."

PHOENIX.
TAMAKI, New Zealand, April 17, 1894.

IN FAIR KENTUCKY.

BURFORD, Kentucky, May 8, 1894,

As each succeeding week rolls by, and your valuable paper reaches us, we who are actively engaged in the missionary field experience great pleasure in reading, among the many items of great worth, the interesting accounts of missionary labors you publish from time to time; and believing that others who are placed in like circumstances to ours would be interested in hearing of our welfare, we take the liberty of writing you an account of some of our experiences.

Kentucky, in the past, has been more famous for her production of the beautiful in man and beast than of converts to the Gospel, few of her people having rendered obedience to the laws of divine truth. Notwithstanding the facts that for years past the Elders of the Church have been earnestly striving to scatter the glorious truths of the Gospel among the people dwelling in this beautiful land, they have met with but very indifferent success. They have, however, been undaunted in their endeavors to reach the honest in heart and as a result, their industry are now beginning to realize some of the fruits of their labor; for every where they go they are enabled to make good friends and now have many honest-hearted people earnestly investigating the truth of what they teach. We are safe in saying that for years past the good people of dear old Kentucky near read their Bibles with such intense interest as they have since they met with our Elders.

The work has probably made more marked and rapid strides in this direction in Ohio county than in any other part of this field, where Elder F. C. Johnson and companion have been successful in bringing a considerable number of people to a knowledge of the truth. It was in response to an invitation from them that we, in connection with others of our brethren, met on the morning of May 8 on the water's edge to attend to some of the sacred ordinances of the Gospel.

Those who are familiar with the natural beauties of Kentucky at this season of the year will need no further description of her present condition than to be told that she is now at her best; and on the morning of the 3rd all nature seemed to smile in approval of the sacred events about to transpire.

Long before the appointed time a gaily crowd had assembled from far and near to witness the impressive ceremonies performed. These consisted of singing the songs of Zion, prayer, and some very pointed remarks on the subject of baptism and authority. It seemed useless to endeavor to express the feelings of deep joy and unbounded happiness of the Elders as they witnessed seven honest-hearted souls submit themselves to the servants of God in obedience to the command of the Lord.

From the water's edge we adjourned to the hospitable home of brother Geo. W. Jewell where we held another meeting and attended to the confirmations of those who had been baptized, and the blessing of their children. Here again we were greatly blessed and the Spirit of the Lord was poured out upon us in rich abundance and we can but believe it will result in great good to the cause we all so dearly love. Indeed we may say there are already a number of people here who have declared themselves desirous of following the example of their friends and neighbors in the near future. We have every occasion for rejoicing as we witness the workings of the Lord on our behalf and see the deep rooted prejudice that for so long has had possession of the minds of the people, vanish from before the force or reason as the falsehoods so freely circulated concerning the Latter-day Saints are pierced by the light of truth. In this we see the fulfilment of predictions made by our modern Prophet and the answer of the prayers of the best people on the earth. And thus may it ever be the earnest prayer of yours fraternally,

LOUIS R. WELLS.

Indian Chief Hunkup, of Kaneeb, thinks Governor West is a business chief and understands how matters should go. The Indian gets his idea from the promptness of the Governor in acting on a matter which the dusky warrior was interested in. The chief sought the release of Alexander Salquist and John Doe Indian (other name unknown), who have been in the penitentiary for larceny, the particulars of which appear in our Provo column. The request for their release was placed before the Governor today, and as the Indians had made recompense for the stolen property and the circumstances justified executive clemency, the Governor at once granted the pardon and the aborigines were released.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

The Park City Record states that the Latter-day Saints in that place are preparing to erect a new meeting house.

The Ontario drain tunnel at Park City is now draining the mine, and the flow of water is so large that work is interfered with.

Some of the farmers about Spanish Fork are fearful of the ravages of the grasshoppers there this season, as the pests are being hatched out in large numbers.

The preliminary hearing in the case of Charles Thiede, charged with the murder of his wife at Murray recently was finished May 10. It resulted in the accused being held to await the action of the grand jury without bail.

Colonel Henry Watterson, whose coming to Salt Lake has been announced so frequently by the local press the last few days, arrived here direct from Helena Wednesday morning. His arrival was two days earlier than expected.

The Rich-Cache mining company held a meeting a few days ago, and made arrangements for the prosecution of work on its property during the present season. Mr. J. E. Wilson was appointed secretary to succeed E. S. Kimball, who is about to leave for the Southern States.

Dr. Benedict, his son Chauncey and Richard Jennings expect to leave Salt Lake on a trip around the world about the 7th of June. According to present arrangements they will sail from San Francisco and go direct to China. The entire trip will cover a period of ten to twelve months.

Frank Archer alias Harry Harder, an employe of the Windsor hotel, attempted self-destruction at that place Friday by taking morphine. Archer is about 20 years of age and a citizen of Denver. He has been in the employ of the Windsor for the past two months. At latest reports Archer was still in a low condition and recovery is doubtful.

The Home Fire Insurance company received a telegram of which the following is a copy, this morning: "The Vernal Furnishing company's place of business was burned today. Building and goods were entirely destroyed."

The institution was insured by the Home company for $4,000. The insurance was divided evenly on the building and stock.

The Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing society officers are rustling for the success of the Territorial Fair next October. In addition to circulars sent out to leading men in every county the manufacturers are being personally urged to prepare exhibits and to aid in making an exposition of Utah products that will be the grandest and most extensive ever shown in this Territory.

Mrs. General Grant and party passed through Ogden Friday morning. The stop at the Junction city was very brief, being only long enough to transfer their car from the Southern Pacific to the Union Pacific. The party was in charge of J. R. Grant, one of the ex-President's sons. Mrs. Grant is said to be aging rapidly and is becoming quite feeble while her eyesight is failing fast.

Mr. B. F. Grant, chairman of the executive committee on the Midwinter Fair, announces that a dispatch has just been received from Mr. Goodman stating that the Southern Pacific has agreed to issue round trip tickets from Ogden to San Francisco for $20.85. Negotiations are still in progress as to the time for which such tickets are good, but satisfactory arrangements will soon be made.

An unusual sight here on Monday was a woman accompanied by four children, the youngest five months old, begging assistance. She had left a drunken husband and was making her way westward, with the hope of obtaining employment. She obtained a sufficient sum to provide shoes, food and other necessities, and to take them to Pocatello, where she had friends, and hoped to obtain work.

On Monday the Wellsville folks celebrated May day, and people from nearly all outlying farms participated. During the afternoon flames were seen arising apparently from the residence of Samuel Steatham, three miles away. A crowd of men and boys on horseback soon reached the scene and removed the contents of the house, but the building itself was entirely destroyed. No insurance.

It will be unpleasant news to the friends of John Rumel to learn that he is living at his home in a precarious condition. Dr. Benedict passed Thursday night with the patient, and at one time it was thought that he could not live until morning, but he rallied about midnight and his condition seemed to improve. But as he is seventy-six years of age and very much weakened physically the hopes for his recovery are slight.

The great mining camp of Mercur was brought into closer communication with the capital by the opening of the telephone line for business. The office at the other end of the line is in the store of the Mercantile company, of which E. B. Shoebridge is manager.

The next important advance which the town of Mercur expects to witness is the construction of the tramway by the Mercur mining company.

PROVO, Utah, May 9.—About noon today Mrs. Joseph Park, of the Second ward, went out to look for her little two-year-old boy, whom she had missed a very short time before. She found him in the ditch in front of the house with life apparently extinct. Neighbors worked with the child for about two hours trying to restore life, but failed. He had evidently fallen off the foot board across the ditch. A doctor was summoned, but failed to arrive before all hope of restoring the child was gone.

O. K. Olson, for a long time a Hanauer smelter attache, died at his home about seven miles south of this city Sunday. Death was due to an accident with which he met on Saturday while oiling machinery at the smelter. In a manner unexplained he was caught in the belting and thrown violently forward several feet. When picked up he was unconscious and remained in a comatose state until yesterday morning when he expired. His back bone had been broken and he was otherwise hurt.

Now that Price, Carbon county, has been made the county seat, the Telegraph of that place asks for three other things which it deems essential to the welfare of the town, i. e.: The holding of a term of the district court there; the completion of waterworks by finishing the reservoir and piping the water to all parts of town; and the expulsion of the Chinamen. The reasons given why the latter should be done are that the Chinamen refused to "pay a poll tax last year;" that the "laboring men of the town worked on the roads and walked the streets idle for want of employment while the Chinamen drew salaries;" and that "the miserable hovels that these Chinamen live in are very distressing eyesores."

Julia Howe, a daughter of Amos Howe, of the Seventeenth ward, met with a painful accident in City Creek canyon late Saturday afternoon. The young lady is a student of the Church University and with some of her school companions went up the canyon on a sketching expedition. It seems that she went across the stream on to a deep snow bank, the crust or surface of which gave way beneath her weight. She fell into a deep opening and entirely disappeared. A young man who saw the accident hastened to her assistance and also went down. Another young man then went to the rescue of the two and it was with considerable difficulty that they were gotten out.

The funeral services over the remains of Sister Ann Green and Miss Emma Towler, both of Mill Creek ward, were held in the meeting house in that ward at 11 a. m. Thursday, May 10th. Elders James F. Walters, Daniel Lund, H. H. Harris, Elias Morris, George G. Bywater and Bishop James C. Hamilton were the speakers. Testimonies of the virtue, integrity and faithfulness of these sisters were strong and numerous, and many comforting, instructive remarks were made and most excellent admonitions were given.

The house was well filled with the immediate mourners and their many friends and sympathizers. A large cortege followed the remains of these worthy daughters of Zion to their last resting place.

Lawrence Kimball, of Bates & Kimball, dealers in drugs, stationery, etc., who is now in Arizona, has sent Mr. Bates a live specimen of a Gila monster, a reptile of the lizard family, says the Park City Record. It is so poisonous that its very breath kills all kinds of insects that come within its reach, while there is no antidote known that will counteract the deadly poison of its bite. Ammonia, taken inwardly, gives relief at times but is not reliable, and the Mexicans and Indians of the Gila country hold them in mortal fear. They are familiar with the rattlesnake, centipede and tarantula, but the sight of a Gila monster makes them turn pale with fear. Mr. Bates has prepared a glass cage for the reptile, will give it hot sand to lie in and keep it alive as long as possible. It is a genuine curiosity, and Mr. Bates is justly proud of it.

Mayor Holbrook received a telegram on Saturday from Fillmore, signed by J. Greenwood. The telegram reads: "Have two caskets ready for morning train; one for Orson Holbrook's child, other for Joe Ray's; both were drowned today. Ray will be on train." The caskets were shipped Sunday, Mrs. Holbrook going down to attend the funeral. Mayor Holbrook says that his brother's child was a little girl, about five years old. Mr. Ray's child, he thinks, was a boy about the same age. Mrs. Orson Holbrook and Mrs. Ray are sisters, and Mayor Holbrook supposes Mrs. Holbrook was on a visit to her sister, and that both children were drowned in a creek near Mr. Ray's house.

Mr. Ray was in Salt Lake City at the time of the accident.

The Owyhee county, Idaho, papers report that a rich strike has been made in the Poorman group of mines, near Silver City. The Avalanche says: The ore is found in the face of the north Oo drift of the Belle Peck tunnel. The pay streak has been very rich for the entire distance but has now widened out and is nearly pure metal. It assays thousands of dollars per ton. The ore is on the west wall. At noon today the east wall was cut disclosing fully a foot of ore equally as good as the other. This gives them about 18 inches of very high grade gold ore. The Poorman will outrival its early production. The management considers it to be the same chute as that cut in No. 3 several years since and known as the Sommercamp chute. The latter yielded some $50,000 from a very small piece of ground. The present strike is about 200 feet deeper, and the vein is from 4 to 8 feet in width.

Secretary Herbert, of the United States navy, was the guest of the city May 9. He arrived at 3 o'clock that morning in his private car Delaware, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Leila Herbert, his niece, Miss Edith Buell, and Mrs. Micou, the young ladies' chaperone, and Lieutenant Reamey, the secretary's aide.

At 10:30 the secretary and his party attended an organ recital in the Tabernacle which had been specially arranged for them. They were highly delighted at what they saw and heard while there and later were taken to the Fort, accompanied by Governor West, Hon. John T. Caine, and Mr. John Q. Cannon, who represented his father, Hon. Geo. Q. Cannon, to whom the Secretary had sent telegraphic notice of his coming. On their return to the city the party partook of an elegant lunch at the Templeton hotel, at 2 o'clock, and at three o'clock were booked for a run out to Saltair on a special train.

Deputy Marshal McGowan, of Jackson county, Mo., arrived in the city at 4:30 Wednesday afternoon, armed with requisition papers for the man Charles Allen alias "Albert Burt," the subject of the repeated habeas corpus proceedings in the Third district court during the last week or ten days. According to the officer's statement Allen—or Burt—is a decidedly bad character, having been a unit in a tough gang of colored thieves in Kansas city prior to the summer of 1889, and who burglarized the houses of prominent citizens of that place. Frank Bracy was arrested eventually, and received a sentence of ten years. The arrest of Burt followed, and Thomas Hines was also arrested. Both were duly punished. Burt has a five-years' sentence to serve, and has indictments hanging over him for grand larceny, receiving stolen property and breaking jail.

Governor West today signed the requisition papers and Allen will soon leave here now.

The students of rhetoric in the B. Y. Academy held a lecture contest Thursday evening. Five of the lady students challenged five of the gentlemen; each lecturer to select his or her subject. The challenge was accepted, and a good audience greeted the ambitious contestants in the assembly room of the academy. The following named students lectured on the subjects named: Mary Stimson, "Surface of the Moon;" Willard Hanson, "Light (Physical);" Mary Lewis, "School Punishment;" Ernest Cornwall, "Rainfall of Utah;" Ella Hougard, "Peru as found by the Spaniards;" John Nash, "History of Lake Bonneville;" Helen Winters, "Queen Esther;" Edwin Smart, "Coral Polyps;" Laura Lyman, "The Trojan War;" Daniel Hanson, "The Primitive Astronomer." The lectures were interesting and, considering the short time that each student could devote to his or her subject, instructive. The judges awarded to the ladies 87 points of excellence and to the gentlemen 84.

The funeral services over the remains of Elder John Strong were held Sunday in the First ward assembly room, under the auspices of the bishopric of the ward. A very large attendance showed the high esteem in which the deceased was held. Many of his collaborators testified to the good qualities of the departed. John Strong was born August 18, 1829, in Kendal, Westmoreland, England, and was the son of John Strong and Agnes Miller Strong. He emigrated to America in 1853, and lived in Salt Lake City till 1855, when he came to Provo where he has since resided. Brother Strong was a kind, unassuming man, of a lively and genial disposition, and made friends of all with whom he was brought in contact. In spite of several months' illness he retained his cheerful disposition up to the time of his death. He took part in the Echo canyon war in 1857-8, and has faithfully performed all duties incumbent upon him since his residence in Provo. The sympathy of the entire community goes out to his wife and children (11) who are left to mourn the loss of a devoted and kind husband and father. Elder Strong leaves eight brothers and sisters and a large number of other relatives.

The Sunday morning Rio Grande train from the west brought to this city in a special car the members of the Woman's National Press association who left Washington, D. C., on April 14th for a tour through the southern and western states.

The party was met at the depot by a delegation from the Utah Woman's Press club. Among the ladies were Mrs. E. B. Wells, Dr. Ella Shipp, Dr. Ferguson, Dr. Pratt, Mrs. A. W. McCune, Mrs. O. F. Whitney, Miss Babcock, Miss Esther Cannon and Miss Reese accompanied them about the city in the drag Utah. All of the visitors were very much delighted with the beauty of the city and freely expressed themselves on that point.

They attended the services at the Tabernacle in the afternoon, and at 4 o'clock were taken out to Saltair in a special train provided by General Manager Clayton, of the Salt Lake & Los Angeles railway company. They were tendered a reception on the pavilion, where Mrs. Wells delivered an address of welcome, which was responded to by Mrs. Lockwood, president of the association. Later in the evening they returned to the city. The party resumed their eastward journey on the 8:30 train, assuring their entertainers that they had just passed one of the most pleasant and prosperous days since leaving home.

Frank J. Cannon, manager of the Pioneer Power company, was in Salt Lake May 15, having returned from his visit to the East in the interests of the company. He was accompanied on his return by experts who have come to Utah to enquire into the enterprise with a view of investing a large amount of capital with the power company and industries to be connected therewith. These gentlemen will spend sufficient time to thoroughly perform their work. They are G. A. Purbeck, the head of the house of G. A. Purbeck & Co., of New York, with branch offices in London, Paris and Amsterdam; Colonel Thomas S. King, consulting engineer of the New York elevated railroads, and Warren H. Loss, a contracting engineer well known in America, Mexico and Canada.

Mr. Cannon says the most emphatic assurances have been received that the necessary capital will be furnished to carry out the project. It is the purpose to not only make available the immense water power of Ogden river, which is the largest stream furnishing a considerable amount of power in proximity to a city of considerable size, but to secure definite arrangements by which industries may be established to utilize the power to advantage. The company also designs to reach out and aid the industrial development in other places and directions. The idea is, that while outside capital is necessary to meet the heavy expense of opening up such a vast industrial field as is proposed, the people shall go to with a will and perform the work of building up and establishing the industries themselves and not wait for neighbors or strangers to come, and do it for them.

As to the time when actual work on the power dam will begin there can be nothing said until the experts now inquiring into affairs reach the conclusion of their labors and make their report.

FROSTBURG, May 15.—Owing to the miners' strike 1,800 men in this and surrounding towns and many families are on the verge of suffering.

THE YANGTSE KIANG.

(Copyrighted by Frank G. Carpenter, 1894.)

ON BOARD A CHINESE STEAMER 600 MILES FROM THE MOUTH OF THE YANGTSE KIANG, March 27, 1894.

HAVE been riding for days upon the great Yangtse river, and I write this letter in almost the center of the Chinese empire. I am within less than a hundred miles of the Chicago of the celestial land, the vast city of Hankow, and am passing through the country where the Chinese mobbed the foreigners a year or so ago, burning down the houses of the missionaries, and killing some of the English officers of the Chinese customs. Last night I left Kiukiang, a big trading center at the mouth of the Poyang lake, and during the past two weeks I have passed a half dozen cities of the size of Cleveland or Washington, and have traveled through about the same number of great states, having an aggregate population of something like one hundred and fifty millions of people. All the towns I have visited I have found packed with a throng busier than you find on lower Broadway at noonday, and I am amazed at the immensity of this great Chinese empire and its enormous population. I entered the Yangtse at its mouth, where it flows through the Chinese province or state of Kiangsu. This is in the center of the east coast, and it has an area about as big as that of Pennsylvania. It contains more than half as many people as the whole United States, and its population is equal to that of the British Isles. The state of Ganhui, which I next entered, is no bigger than Kansas, but it supports twenty-seven million people, and the state of Hupeh, in which I am now traveling, has over twenty millions. This great river itself has millions who are born, live and die upon its waters, and at every landing I see a thicket of poles, each of which springs from the home of one of the millions of families which make up China's boat population. I am amazed at the wonderful resources of the country.

My eyes bulge out at the muscle and industry of its people, and my head buzzes in trying to understand the curious sights which are crowded upon me.

China's great rivers are among the wonders of the world, and the Yangtse Kiang is the king of its kind. It has a greater volume of water than the Nile or the Amazon, and it has built up a greater country than Egypt along the low lands of China. In approaching it from the ocean I found the waters dis-colored by its muddy fluid many miles out at sea, and it turns the salty brine yellow for sixty miles from its mouth. Here it is about as thick as pea soup. You draw up a bucket and in a moment its bottom will have a thick sediment of mud. I had been warned not to use the spigot which runs from the bottom of the boat into my bath, but this morning the boy had made it too hot and I tried to cool the barrel of filtered water in the tub with about a gallon from the Yangtse. I thought the amount was so little that it could not affect the rest. The result was that the clear water became the color of mud and my bare foot left an impression on the bottom as marked as that of the savage which so scared Robinson Crusoe on the desert island. It is a sort of a gritty silt, but I am told that there is no river on earth which brings down a sediment more fertile. The whole of the great plain of north and central China has been made by it. This plain is seven hundred miles long, and it supports more than a hundred millions of people. The Yellow river runs through it a hundred miles north of this point, and this river, in combination with the Yangtse, has built the foundations of one-fourth of the Chinese empire. Today it is estimated that the amount of dirt they carry down from the highlands of Tibet and of China is so great that it forms every two months an island a mile square in the sea and at the mouth of the Yangtse. I sailed by the Tsung Ming Island, which is thirty-two miles long and about ten broad. It has been built up within a hundred years or so, and now has cities and villages and supports more than a million people. The sea at the mouth of the Yangtse is filled with little islands, many of which have grown up within the memory of men now living, and along the low banks of the river I can see the strata of soil which it has brought down from year to year. At some points these lines of sediment are from one to two feet thick, and they are of as marked colors as strata of rock. The river has a vast volume of water. A line of freight water-tight cars reaching from New York to Chicago and carrying twenty tons each could not hold its one day's discharge into the sea, and its rise and fall at the city of Hankow, about six hundred and fifty miles from its mouth, ranges during the year from forty to fifty feet. Within the past ten days the river has risen thirteen feet and it is now going up at the rate of a foot a day.

The rise in the Yangtse Kiang is so great that embankments have to be built along its course for more than 1,000 miles. All of the country I have passed through is diked, and this, not only as to the river, but also as to every creek and canal connected with it. Central China is more cut up by waterways than Holland, and there are more dikes here to the square mile than you will find in the Netherlands. Sailing along the Yangtse you see these dikes in every direction. They are about twenty feet high and from thirty to forty feet wide at the base and their tops form the roads and paths of the country. Along them you see all sorts of Chinese characters trudging along, their figures silhouetted against the blue sky. Here goes the great freight car of China. It is a wheelbarrow and a native coolie pushes it. Behind him comes another species of the same, a man carrying two great loads fastened to the ends of the bow-like pole which rests upon his shoulders. Next you see a brightly dressed girl, wearing red pantaloons and a blue sack, carrying a parasol of paper and looking very gay as she hobbles up the bank. You note mandarines riding in blue chairs carried between two bare-legged coolies, who trot along in front and behind, and among the nobles, the common people on foot.

Here and there you may see a sheep or a hog, but the horses are comparatively few, and the only cattle are the half hog half cow known as the water buffalo. You see these working in the fields pulling rude ploughs or turning the wooden water wheels, which are used in some parts of China for irrigation. They are for all the world like the Sakiyehs of Egypt, and there are many things about you which remind you of the land of the Pharaohs. You see no cattle or horses dragging burdens upon the embankments, and the canals and rivers, in fact, take the place of roads. In all this part of China, it is said, you can go to every man's house in a boat. There are numerous creeks that empty into the Yangtse. The mouths of these are filled with junks, and on them and the canals, which cut up the land like a net, you see the masts and sails of boats walking, as it were, rapidly over the green fields. Often there will be several lines of these boats running parallel with the river, their white sails growing smaller in the distance, until they form white specks upon the dim line of the horizon. The cost of making and keeping up this series of embankments must be enormous. The Yangtse changes its course every now and then; it cuts away the soil and new dikes have to be built. In many places there are several rows of earth, one behind the other, and the remains of discarded embankments are everywhere visible. In the summer the river rises and floods everything not so diked. Houses are often swept away, villages are destroyed and the land becomes a great inland sea. All along the course are the vestiges of past floods, and here and there you see graveyards that the river has eaten into, and you note the gaping holes left by the coffins. At one point, about 100 miles from where I now am, I saw a coffin extending half way out of the bank. It undoubtedly contained a skeleton, and the wood was rotten with age. The water was then within a foot of it, and by this time it must have been washed out to sea. Here and there we could see men irrigating the soil by tread-mill pumps, worked by half-naked celestials, and everywhere man seemed to be waging a brave fight with nature and getting the best of it.

Speaking of coffins, I could see them now and again lying on the river banks. They were generally covered with a thatch of straw, and this is a common way for the people to dispose of their dead. They have not enough money to give their friends a decent burial, and they lay the coffins out until they can earn the funeral expenses. Near Shanghai I saw houses for the storing of dead babies. They were little one story huts, with a window or hole near the top. The fresh coffins are put into this window and placed upon the ledge, half sticking out. The next comers push the coffins on the window into the charnel house and put their own infant dead into their places, to be shoved in turn by those who follow them. As the scenery along the Yangtse, however, it is a general idea that China is one vast plain, covered with grave mounds. I saw some graveyards, it is true, but they were comparatively few. The people bury near their houses when they can, and the graveyards were probably far back from the river. They used the elevated spots and hills. A large part of the country is rolling, and the idea China consists of one vast flat plain is incorrect. Where I am now writing I am surrounded by magnificent hills, and all along this great river you find breaks of rolling country. I saw the snow on the mountains when I came up past the city of Kiukiang, and at Ichang, above here, there are gorges which compare with the canyons of Colorado in their magnificent grandeur. There are 1,000 miles inland, and the sources of the Yangtse are two miles above the sea.

These gorges are narrow chasms, with a current so swift that the boats which pass up them have to be hauled along by gangs of men, and the water in them, it is said, sometimes rises 100 feet above its ordinary level. They are comparatively short, and if they could be passed by steamers the vast region of the Yangtse could be tapped, and steamboats could travel 2,000 miles into the interior. There is still talk of building steamers small enough and powerful enough to withstand the current of these gorges, and it is not an impossibility that the whole of interior China will at some time be opened up by steam.

The Yangtse today is one of the greatest trade routes of the world. China is said to have more boats on her waters than all the rest of the world combined. She is the best watered country in God's green earth and has more wonderful waterways. Suppose you stretch a river wider than the Mississippi in an almost straight line from New York to Chicago. Suppose it to be navigable for the biggest ocean steamers for that distance from May to October, and let ships from Russia, Germany, England and other parts of the world sail through it and load at its wharves. This would be about what can be done on the Yangtse and Kiang below Ichang. If you wish to carry out the comparison, however, you must let the grand river extend further west. If you could stretch it on a straight line it would go to Denver, and still be navigable for large boats and barges. You must push it on further west to San Francisco, and you are still five hundred miles from its source. It is said to be three thousand five hundred miles long, and it has to rise in the mountains of Thibet and has tributaries all along its course. It taps two great lakes, which give it canal communication with other provinces, and the most of the tea of the world comes from the land south of it and is shipped across the Poyang lake, near where I now am, and sent to Hankow for sale.

In coming into the Yangtse its mouth is so wide that it is hours after you see the muddy color of its waters before you can distinguish the banks, and for the fifty miles of our journey we passed through what seemed to be a great inland sea, ranging from twenty to fifty miles in width. Our first hills were passed about fifty miles inland. I found its width to be more than a mile, and it holds that width nearly all the way from Shanghai to Ichang, a distance of about one thousand miles. It contains many long, narrow islands, and it now and then branches out into different streams or cut-offs from the main bed of the river, which at high water materially shorten the course. It is as full of modern steamers as the Mississippi, and has in addition the thousands of odd boats and junks of the Chinese. I could fill this paper with the mention of the different kinds of crafts and their loads, and among the ships there are many which would be a surprise to American seafarers. There are Chinese life boats, for instance, everywhere. They are low junks with oars and sails, and they watch the river during the storms and pick up such sampans and fishing boats as they are overturned. They are under control of the districts through which they go and form a sort of a river police.

Now and then they capture a smuggler or a pirate, and here and there outside of some of the villages I saw boats which had been cut in half and set up on end. I asked what they were, and I was told that they had belonged to pirates and thieves. The culprits had been caught and beheaded, and their boats were thus put up as warnings to their brothers to beware of the law. Such boats are usually put up at the places at which the crimes were committed.

Everywhere you meet with native and government officials. The different provinces have their customs officers, and they levy a heavy tax on all the native boats, each official gets his squeeze, and the taxation is terrible heavy. The customs collected for the general government are in the hands of foreigners, for the emperor cannot rely upon the honesty of his own officials, and so an Irishman, Sir Robert Hart, collects his duties for him, and his boats and officials are at all of the leading ports. You see their customs officers scattered all along the banks of the river, and at high water they sometimes use the little huts of bamboo, which are brought down in the crafts from the upper Yangtse.

This valley of the Yangtse Kiang is a vast garden. All along its course the grass is as green as Egypt in winter, and two or three crops a year are everywhere grown. In looking over the landscape you see no fences or barns. The people live in villages made of thatched huts, with walls of plaited reeds, which they plaster inside and out with mud. Sometimes the huts stand alone in the town, and at other times they are joined together in blocks. The best of them are not more than twenty feet square, and the average farm house has only one story. The earth forms the floor. You could, I venture, build a good one for $5. The houses stand flush with the slimy mud sidewalk, and the filthier and dirtier this is, the better it seems to please the people. Each village has a clump of trees about it, and in looking over the valley you see hundreds of these clumps, and realize the force of the statement that the whole empire is one vast village. Many of the villages, I am told, consist of only one family or clan, and the Chinese are said to take better care of their relatives and to work together better than any people of the world.

The best of the towns here are close to the river, and we have passed many walled cities, with pagodas and temples rising above the other ridge-shaped roofs. At some of the bigger centers this ship stops to take on and discharge cargo, and I have gone through a number of cities since I came to China the names of which I had never heard. Take the city of Nganking—not Nanking, the old capital of China, you have all read of that—but Nganking. How many of you have ever realized that it existed? Well, we have just left it. It is a city of about a half million people and is bigger than St. Louis. It is the capital of the state of Ganhu, which has a population of more than one-third of the whole United States, though it is not as big as the state of New York. It lies right on the banks of the Yangtse, about 150 miles above Nanking, and it has miles of walls about it. These walls are twenty-five feet high and so wide that you could drive a buggy around the city on the top of them. Nganking is well built and rich now, though it was nearly ruined during the Taiping rebellion, back in the fifties. At that time the rebels held it under siege, and food became so scarce that human flesh was used, and, it is said, was sold in market places for its weight in silver. The city has now a great native trade, though it is not one of the treaty ports, and foreign steamers cannot stop at it. It has one of the finest pagodas on the Yangtse. It is a seven-storied tower of rose pink, rising, as it were, right from the banks of the river, to a height, I judge, about half that of the Washington monument. It is many-sided and its top is decorated with a beautiful cap of bronze, which is built in rings, like those of some of the temples in Siam to a point. This tower was being repaired when I visited it and a framework of pole scaffolding extended from its base upward to a height of more than one hundred feet. Upon this hundreds of Chinese masons and painters were working, and away up on the sixth story I could note little fly-like celestials clinging to the wall and patching up the ravages of the weather. I was glad to see it, for it showed me that there is at least one place in China where the monuments of the past are respected, and where both the religion and the temples have not gone to seed.

D. A. & M. SOCIETY.

The directors of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society met at the society's rooms in the Constitutional building Saturday, the 12th, at noon. President John R. Winder held the gavel and the directors present were Messrs. Peters, Sears, Bamberger, Cragun, Hatch, Empey, Simon, Melville, Willey and Secretary Pyper.

The chairman announced the standing committees appointed by him as follows:

Executive and Building—Bamberger, Jennings, Simon, Sears, Empey, Premiums and Exhibits—Peters. Empey, Willey, Bamberger, Melville. Finance—Jennings, Cragun, Peters, Hatch, Holdaway.

Printing, Advertising and Transportation—Sears, Holdaway, Simon, Willey, Cragun.

The secretary stated that he had examined into the list of life members of the society and the majority of them were dead. A list of the living ones was read as follows: Wilford Woodruff, Richard Ballantyne, R. T. Burton, G. B. Bailey, J. M. Benedict, Mrs. Arthur Brown, William Barber, George W. Bryan, John T. Caine, H. B. Clawson, William Calder, Charles Cooper, Henry Dinwoodey, A. E. Dericques, T. W. Ellerbeck, B. R. Eldredge, H. J. Faust, G. L. Farrell, Aaron F. Farr, Lorin Farr, Isaac Goodwin, Daniel Graves, H. J. Grant, F. A. Hammond, W. S. Hussey, L. G. Hardy, Joseph Harker, T. R. Jones, Mrs. Priscilla Jennings, David James, Thomas W. Jennings, Theodore Letson, T. A. Mitchell, J. D. T. McAllister, George Morris, A. F. McDonald, W. S. Miner, A. M. Muir, Mrs. W. C. Morris, J. Martin, H. P. Mason, H. Pembroke, A. H. Raleigh, W. C. Rydahl, Samuel Roskelley, George Romney, John Redding, E. K. Sheets, Samuel Smith, J. Squier, A. O. Smoot, Charles Shumway, J. S. Smith, H. A. Woolley, Fred Simon, Charles Twelves, Joseph E. Taylor, William Thorn, J. R. Winder, G. W. Ward, B. Warner, Thomas Watups, Thomas Watups Jr., George B. Wallace, John H. White, Brigham Young, John W. Young. Many of these gentlemen had been members for more than thirty years.

On motion of Mr. Simon it was agreed to furnish each one of these members with neat certificates of membership and the printing committee was authorized to have the necessary lithographs prepared.

The Utah World's Fair committee sent in a communication advising the board that in pursuance of an act passed by the last legislature the commission had decided to turn over to the D. A. & M. society thirteen large show cases, together with all the cases, show bottles, etc., used in the agricultural exhibit at Chicago. This property was valued at about $2,500 and the commission required from the society the sum of $150 to pay the expense of caring for the property.

On motion of Mr. Bamberger the offer was accepted with many thanks, and a committee of three, consisting of Messrs. Simon, Empey and Sears, was appointed to select the necessary cases.

A financial statement rendered by the secretary showed the society was about even on May 1, 1894, and the appropriation of the last legislative assembly, $7,000, was ready to be paid in warrants on the order of the board of directors. This amount was to pay the expenses of two years and premiums for this year. On motion, the secretary was authorized to draw warrants from the auditor for the whole sum of the appropriation.

Numerous inquiries from prospective exhibitors were referred to the committee on premiums.

The president stated that he had formulated the letter recently published in the daily papers in relation to a live stock exhibit and the secretary had received many replies from stockmen, some in favor of the live stock department and some against it. Many of them thought the stock had received such a set back that it would be useless to attempt to show them. Others thought the live stock show was the chief attraction of the fair.

Those opposed, or not inclined to show, were J. P. Freeze, Walter Templeman, W. P. Brown, L. G. Hardy, A. L. Burnham, W. O. Greer, William B. Preston, R. T. Burton, while those in favor of the show were J. W. Hanborn, Thomas Matthews, White & Sons, Reed Smoot, J. McCoy, J. H. Truman & Sons, B. R. Eldredge, J. T. Alexander, E. H. Parsons, J. C. Mackay, Heber Bennion, F. H. Hanson, Samuel Bateman, E. E. Ellison, Geo. Bromley, John Hapgood.

The matter was earnestly discussed, the president fearing failure in any attempt to get the stock men to exhibit and some directors fearing failure for the whole fair should the stock show be omitted. Finally, upon being put to a vote, the directors declared in favor of the stock exhibit, cut down the premium list in that department, and referred the same to the premium committee.

The annual membership fee was fixed at $1. This was $2 in 1892.

The president announced that he would immediately appoint the supervisors, the delay in that regard being caused by the uncertainty of a live stock show.

A petition for the merry-go-round privilege was laid on the table for the present, the board considering it too early to discuss sale of privileges.

On motion of Mr. Peters the President and secretary were authorized to formulate an address to the citizens of Utah calling for their sympathy in this movement and especially urging the offer of special premiums and the purchase of life memberships.

A cut of 20 per cent was made in the secretary and janitor, and of 25 per cent in the per diem and mileage of the directors. This was done to be in line with the directors' announced policy of economy.

On motion George D. Pyper was elected secretary of the society. This action was partially considered at the last meeting and finally postponed until this meeting of the board.

Adjourned subject to the call of the president.

BEAVER ITEMS.

BEAVER, Utah, May 8.—The attendance in court was largely increased this morning, the room being completely filled.

There is but one murder case this term, that of Jake Wicketts, for killing his squaw, last year. He was arraigned yesterday afternoon and counsel was appointed for him. Considerable difficulty was experienced in getting him to understand the indictment and the proceedings generally, the interpreter having to do a good deal of explaining. This morning he pleaded not guilty. There is some little sympathy for Wicketts because of the hardship spoken of and the belief that he has a good defense. His counsel are preparing to make a stubborn fight for him.

In the celebrated case of Wade Nicholas, on application for a writ of habeas corpus, to extricate him from a 15 years' sentence in the penitentiary, Judge Barton yesterday ordered a further hearing. The case was argued and submitted last December. It will soon be disposed of now.

After some preliminary proceedings this morning, the grand and petit juries were empaneled, after which a recess was taken till 2 p. m.

The grand jury presents singular circumstances of all but one or two being Mormons, and those who are not now have been. The judge's charge was lengthy and decidedly able and fair. Thomas Blackburn was appointed foreman of the grand jury.

BEAVER, May 9.—The trial of Ellison, charged with stealing valuable ore from the Horn Silver Mining company, at Frisco, occupied all yesterday afternoon and is still going on at 3 o'clock. The prosecution reduced the case to petit larceny, because of a doubt as to the amount proved to have been taken.

The grand jury is busily at work. It has brought in several indictments already but it is not known who they are against or for what.

BEAVER, Utah, May 10.—The case of the People vs George Ellison, for grand larceny, as reported yesterday, was concluded late yesterday afternoon. Defendant was found guilty of petit larceny. The people have been thus subjected to the expense of a case which a justice of the peace could properly have disposed of for one-tenth of the expense.

Civil business occupied the most of the subsequent time.

Four arraignments took place this morning, two adultery, one burglary and one grand larceny.

The grand jury are steadily at work and the business already contributed by them, in addition to what was already filed, gives every promise that this will be the longest term for several years.

BEAVER, Utah, May 11.—The jury in the case of Davidson vs the Consolidated Implement company yesterday afternoon found for plaintiff for the whole amount claimed.

In the case of the People vs Smith, battery, the jury found the defendant not guilty.

Contrary to general expectation, the case of Indian Jake Wicketts, murder, was called for trial this morning. The evidence for the prosecution was altogether circumstantial and they rested for a connection upon the almost incoherent statement of the deceased shortly before death, the squaw saying that her husband ought to have a rope around his neck and be strung up. When the people rested their case the attorney for the defense immediately moved to dismiss, and after tolerably lengthy arguments the motion was overruled.

Defendant is a remarkably well-appearing Indian, and elicits a great deal of sympathy.

The case comes on again at 2 p. m.

Before the regular proceedings this morning, Dr. Ely, a rather youthful looking medical practitioner, entered a plea of guilty on the charge of adultery with Mrs. Weggeland, who is also under indictment for the same offense.

BEAVER, Utah, May 12.—The trial of the Indian Wicketts was concluded late yesterday afternoon. The proceedings at times were decidedly unique and the service of an interpreter, aided occasionally by members of the jury, was brought into requisition. The case was submitted by the attorneys without argument. The court's charges as usual were very fair and tolerably lengthy. The jury was out two hours and came back with a verdict of involuntary manslaughter, with a strong recommendation of mercy.

This was the mildest verdict the jury could find except acquittal, but the Indian's attorney was not satisfied and in open court denounced the verdict as not in accordance with law or facts. Everybody else, however, seems to think it a great victory for the defense and the attorneys will proceed no further.

The case of the People vs John Campbell, assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of John Blackburn, last December, is now on trial.

BEAVER, Utah, May 14.—On Saturday afternoon Jennings, indicted for obtaining money under false pretenses, suddenly and mysteriously disappeared. His attorneys had previously succeeded in having the demurrer to the indictment sustained. The case was immediately resubmitted to the grand jury, which subsequently found a new indictment, but while this was going on Jennings was also going on. As soon as the indictment was found and the warrant issued, Deputy Marshal Tanner realized the situation, and started with a fast team for the fugitive, rightly surmising he would make a break for his ranch near Meadow Creek, Millard county.

Jennings had an hour and a half the start, but Tanner beat him in the race, and was waiting in ambush till Jennings entered the house.

The deputy returned with his prisoner yesterday. The latter claims he had no intention of escaping, and says his attorneys misled him.

The long-winded water case of Riddle vs Reese is not yet concluded. When it is over, criminal business will be resumed and pushed with lengthened hours. The court and everybody else are evidently getting tired at the sluggish manner in which business is being dispatched.

BEAVER, Utah, May 15.—The water case of Riddle vs Reese occupied the whole of yesterday afternoon. This morning, Judge Bartch, gave the plaintiff a qualified verdict, awarding each of the parties water in proportion to their respective needs as crop growers. The decision is generally regarded as quite equitable, but the plaintiff doesn't seem to fancy it much.

Joseph A. Saw, indicted for unlawful cohabitation and adultery, pleaded guilty to the former charge. The case was dismissed as to the latter. Sentence will be pronounced hereafter.

In the case of the United States vs Albert Stratton, adultery, a plea of not guilty was entered. The case was continued for the term.

A case that has acquired some celebrity by reason of a recent escapade of the defendant, Jennings, previously recorded, was then taken up. It occupied the rest of the morning hour without being concluded. The day opened with a heavy snow storm, there being about two inches on the ground. It has been snowing at intervals ever since and is quite cold.

James McGarry, owner of the "White Cliff" mine, at Indian Creek, had an assay made of gold ore yesterday, showing $9,742.50. He is going to take several tons of it to Salt Lake. He has a two foot vein.

HOW THEY ARE SOUTH.

Andrew Kimball returned Thursday from a business trip to the south. He says the people of Central and Southern Utah exhibit a most commendable feeling toward the home industry movement. The leading men partook of the spirit at Conference and all the people are feeling it. Local industries are feeling encouraged, and good work is being done.

At Beaver the woolen mills which started up recently now employ thirty persons, and it is expected that this number will be increased shortly. The mills manufacture an excellent quality of goods. The Beaver people all seem interested in building up local works, and are pulling together for that end.

At Parowan the tannery and shoe factory turn out about $28,000 annually. At the tannery experiments have been going on for nearly a month at using canaigre root in tanning leather. It is believed by those making the tests that canaigre will prove valuable to use with other tanning materials. The shoe factory is getting out a nice article, the styles being as good as the imported. Parowan also has furniture shops, etc., and is quite a home industry center, and the people have practical ideas on the subject.

Cedar City also has a tannery in operation, and this with other industries is progressing. Of course some of them are small at present, but they are fairly well up in proportion to the population. The leading men of Cedar City have an abiding faith in a prediction once made regarding that place, that it would yet become the "hub" of the manufactures of Utah. The prospects in that line, in the opening up of the coal, iron and other mines, are now strongly favorable.

Mr. Kimball also has a good word to say for the Spanish Fork shoe factory, which is doing a good business in its line. At Fillmore there is a first class cheese factory which is turning out a splendid article.

The Fillmore people are also moving commendably in the way of securing increased quantities of water and bringing into cultivation a large additional area of land. The reservoirs there bid fair to be a great boon to the country.

At Kanosh similar good work is being done, in utilizing the water which heretofore has been running to waste through the town. A canal has been taken to convey a considerable stream on the higher lands, and the young men of the place are exhibiting an enterprising and progressive spirit in getting this land under cultivation.

The water supply spoken of, Mr. Kimball says, is steadily increasing, in some places being double what it was formerly, or more. Where all that was available used to be carried in one ditch to a few farms there is now sufficient to irrigate large areas.

The merchants in the south show their sympathy with the home industry cause by purchasing and furnishing to their customers the home goods wherever available. Altogether, Mr. Kimball says, the people are feeling well and are attended with prosperity.

IMPORTANT TO THE SAINTS!

To the Saints in Zion:

For about ten years the energies of the Elders laboring in the Australasian mission have been devoted to spreading the Gospel amongst the Maoris, and hence very little attention has been given to European work. In all parts of the mission a spirit of earnest inquiry is now manifest, and Elders are being assigned to preach the Gospel to the Europeans.

Latter-day Saints who have friends or relatives in New Zealand, Australia or Tasmania are respectfully urged to send their names and addresses, or letters of introduction, and the Elders will endeavor to visit them with the Gospel message.

As this mission is far removed from headquarters, it is somewhat difficult to obtain literature, and donations of tracts or Church literature will be greatly appreciated, and will be of more value than stamps, as the latter cannot be used here.

The co-operation of the Saints is earnestly solicited. All communications on this subject should be addressed to the clerk of the Australasian mission, as under, B. GODDARD, POKIRUA, Wellington, New Zealand.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder C. F. B. Lybbert, of Vernal, Uintah county, Utah, called at the NEWS office May 15th, having returned last night, May 14, from a mission to Europe. Elder Lybbert has been absent since April 14, 1892, laboring all the time in Holland except a short time previous to his return home which he spent among friends and relatives in Denmark. He says he has enjoyed good health during his absence and felt well in every other respect.

Elder Riley G. Williams, who arrived on Sunday May 13, from Tennessee, called on the NEWS May 15th. His residence is at Kanarra, Iron county, but for over two years past he has been laboring as a missionary in the Southern States. Elder Williams left home March 25, 1892, and was assigned to the Middle Tennessee conference, where he labored the whole of his mission, being hospitably received by the people and meeting with good success. There has been a great improvement in the feelings of the people towards the Latter-day Saints the past year, affording considerable contrast from the condition which existed previously. Elder Williams says the change for the better may be dated from the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple. There are many people eager to listen to the Gospel, and the prospects for the immediate future are most gratifying. The health of Elder Williams was good during his mission, which he regards as covering the most interesting period of his life up to the present.

UTAH'S "INDUSTRIAL" ARMY.

On pages 698-699 of this issue will be found earlier news of the Utah Industrial Army in Utah County. Herewith are later particulars of the stirring incidents connected with the movement:

FROM TUESDAY'S DAILY, MAY 15.

Four deputy marshals and two guards brought down from the penitentiary, shortly after 9:30 this morning, in a Rapid Transit car which had been specially chartered for the purpose, the twenty-six men belonging to "General" Carter's army of Industrialists, to answer the charge of contempt arising out of the stealing of the engine at Lehi Junction between 1 and 2 o'clock last Saturday morning. The "General" himself, who was released on bonds yesterday afternoon, was on hand to meet and greet them on their arrival at the Dooly building, attired in full uniform. He took his seat a little later at the bar table and sat throughout the morning in close proximity to the defendants' counsel. His co-defendants were accommodated with places on two long benches arranged just underneath the clock on the east side of the court room.

Great interest is manifested in the proceedings by the outside public, and as early as nine o'clock the approaches to the Third District courtroom were thronged with a "mixed" crowd of persons, composed principally of workmen, all bent upon securing a good place in that portion of the courtroom allotted to spectators. A court bailiff had been stationed at the entrance, and no person, unless he had special business there, was allowed to pass in until the opening hour—ten o'clock—had arrived. Then when the chance came there occurred a grand rush for seats such as is seldom seen there, and in a few minutes every available chair had been seized upon. Within the bar, too, there was quite a large muster of lawyers and others.

The attorneys engaged in the case are Waldemar Van Cott and Judge J. A. Marshall, representing the prosecution; for the defendants D. D. Houtz and M. M. Warner, of Provo, with Col. Allen Miller associated.

Promptly on the stroke of 10 o'clock Judge Merritt inquired—Are you ready, gentlemen, to go on with this contempt case?

Both sides answered in the affirmative, Attorney Van Cott asking that the defendants be at once arraigned.

Judge Marshall asked that the charge against the defendants be read and that they enter their pleas. Also that the affidavit of Mr. Young, on which the order of the court was issued on Saturday, be read.

Clerk Dunbar then read the charge, the affidavit, and called the names of the defendants, as given in these columns yesterday, and each of whom, in turn, rose to respond and by their attorney pleaded not guilty. The taking of testimony then began.

Provo, May 15.—This morning the weather was cold and rainy and it is said that but for this fact the Industrialists would have broken camp and marched East. A number of citizens were at the camp with wagons to haul the provisions and baggage of the army, arrangements having been made yesterday that the Industrialists would march to some camp ground selected by themselves, and believed to be near the mouth of Spanish Fork canyon.

On account of the weather the departure was delayed, with the understanding that if the weather permitted the march forward would be taken up at 8 o'clock. The weather is now pleasant and preparations are being made to leave camp. Provisions to last for several days have been contributed by the citizens, and they will be taken to the new camp. There are over two hundred of the industrialists still remaining in camp.

There is a rumor afloat that 400 Industrialists are expected to arrive from Salt Lake City today, but nothing positive is known in regard to this. The Industrialists are quite hopeful that General Carter will be released and able again to direct the movements of the army.

At 1:30 o'clock the industrial army broke camp and took up the march for Springville, where it is the intention to camp this evening and in the morning the march will be resumed for the new camping ground. One hundred and sixty men marched out of Provo. An advance guard left last evening to locate camp grounds. In addition to those who walked out several rode on the baggage wagons and about thirty left on a R. G. W. freight car. Many of those were crippled and unable to walk.

The industrial army spent Sunday in camp. There were about 200 men there Sunday afternoon; they expected to wait till Tuesday to learn the result of the examination of General Carter and the other men who were arrested on Saturday, before they proceed on their way east, which they say they are determined to do. One man was very sick. They are rather short of leaders, but look for some one to take charge if the officers are detained in Salt Lake City.

An amusing incident occurred Saturday evening after the militia had formed on the street north of the camp ground. A little girl was bringing her cows home from pasture. It was necessary, or at any rate convenient, for her to pass through the lines in order to properly perform her task. One of the boys in blue told her she could not pass through the line. She looked at him for a moment in an amused and bewildered way; then she struck up his gun which he had placed in front of her and went about her business, paying no attention whatever to the remonstrances of the militia man.

General Carter was arrested Saturday evening on a warrant issued by Justice Wedgewood, charging him with inciting riot, and was taken before the justice for arraignment. His attorneys, D. D. Houtz, M. M. Warner and E. A. Wilson asked that his bail be fixed. Justice Wedgewood placed Carter's bail at $500.

Deputy Marshal Fowler then read a warrant from Judge Smith's court, charging contempt in taking property in the hands of a receiver appointed by the court. A Salt Lake deputy marshal came up serenely and read another warrant from Judge Merritt's court, also charging contempt. The general now being thoroughly arrested, the question finally came up under which charge he should be held. Prosecuting Attorney Gash, upon a suggestion made by Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Howat, dismissed the charge of inciting riot, and General Carter was taken to Salt Lake City to appear before Judge Merritt. The Governor and militia returned to Salt Lake Sunday morning.

THE "ARMY" ELSEWHERE.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Congressman Pence, of Colorado, in the police court today, made the closing argument in behalf of the commonwealers.

District Attorney Bierney discussed the case calmly. He spoke of the senator from Nebraska, looking far over the heads of the jury to talk to his constituency on the distant prairie, a member for Kansas talking to the corn fields of his state, and the gentleman from Colorado talking to his open mouthed constituency.

The jury in the Coxey case returned a verdict finding Coxey, Browne and Jones guilty of carrying banners on the Capitol grounds, and on the charge of walking on the grass, Coxey and Browne guilty, and Jones not guilty. Motion was entered for a new trial.

SACRAMENTO, May 8.—The industrial army camped at Sutter's fort expected to move eastward on a train at 4 o'clock this evening, but was disappointed, as "Colonel" Carpenter, alias Inman, and Captain Logan, custodians of funds amounting to about $800, cannot be found. It is thought they have decamped.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., May 8.—Most of Baker's army moved this afternoon to Arcade, seven miles east of the city, where it is supposed they intend to capture a train. The remainder will move tonight. They are considerably broken up and dispersed.

PUEBLO, Colo., May 8.—At 6:30 o'clock this evening, as an engine of the Denver & Rio Grande railroad was taking coal, the fireman being off the engine, it was suddenly surrounded by fifteen of the men under General Sanders, who came in Saturday as a Coxey band. They took the engine and ran the locomotive down to the Missouri Pacific tracks, where six coal cars, that had been left a short time before, were coupled on. The whole band boarded these cars, and, attaching the Rio Grande engine, started for the East at a lively gait. Four miles out they met an engine which was coming in for the purpose of taking out the regular passenger train, as all the rolling stock has been kept near the town since the Cripple Creek men arrived. The engineer reversed and is keeping ahead of the industrialists. The latter stopped their train at Boone and took coal and water.

The engines passed Nephesta going fifty miles an hour. The superintendent has an engine and car overturned in a cut at Olney, so that the runaways can get no farther than that point, and they may experience a collision. A train will start from Pueblo at 10 o'clock in the morning with the deputy marshal and thirty officers to overtake the band. The seizure prevented the movement of United States mail.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 8.—Kelly's boats are almost completed and the army will leave Des Moines tomorrow.

PUEBLO, Colo., May 9.—The Cripple Creek Coxeyites who seized a train here and started east last night got around the obstruction near Olney, caused by the ditching of an engine, by laying a new track and resume the journey. Superintendent Derby has ordered the water drawn from all the tanks along the road and obstructions placed in the way of the train wherever possible, by wrecking engines. No regular train is moving on the road in Colorado today.

PUEBLO, Col., May 9.—The Coxeyites' stolen train encountered another obstacle near Arlington, eighty miles east of Pueblo, where four engines were ditched by order of Superintendent Derby. The Industrials are now laying a track around the obstruction. Sheriff Moses has been all morning trying to raise a posse to capture Sanders and his army, but so far he has not been able to secure more than forty men. The railroad authorities are in communication with Judge Hallett at Denver with regard to securing Federal aid.

The Industrials are stalled at Haswell, twelve miles east of Arlington, by four engines being ditched in a cut. At latest accounts they were tearing up and relaying the track.

At Ordway the water in their engines gave out and they obtained a supply from a well, carrying it in their dinner pails and coffee cups.

Sanders' Industrials have got beyond Haswell and are going east. Another engine has been ditched at Diston, 119 miles from Pueblo.

ATCHISON, Kans., May 9.—H. P. Waggoner, general attorney of the Missouri Pacific, left here by a special train this afternoon to meet the Colorado branch of the commonwealers with the stolen train. He expects that U. S. Marshal Nelly and 200 deputies will accompany him from Topeka.

The manager has instructions from the general manager to arrest every man in the commonweal army.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., May 9.—Col. Vinette, of the second Los Angeles regiment of the commonweal and his seven comrades were taken before Justice Knox on a complaint charging them with attempting to evade the payment of railroad fares and they were held to answer, bail being fixed at $100 each, in default of which they were remanded to the custody of the sheriff. The regiment is going to pieces.

TACOMA, Wash., May 9.—Supt. McCabe, of the Northern Pacific, says all the commonwealers are now east of the Cascade mountains. They were not allowed to go through the tunnel and walked over the mountains. Trains are running regularly. The charge that the employees of the company at Puyallup assisted the commonwealers to get away in box cars have not been disproved, but no employee has been discharged there on account of any connection with the commonwealers.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 9.—Kelly's army was afloat at noon and bade good-bye to Des Moines. Most of the boats in the fleet were rigged with oars or sails improvised from army blankets. Commodore Kelly is expected to reach Runnels, twenty miles away, tonight. Because of the numerous sand bars the men are frequently compelled to wade and push the boats. They have provisions for several days and the towns along the route are preparing to contribute liberally. Prof. King led the flotilla on an aquatic bicycle. The start was witnessed by a large crowd who cheered loudly.

TOPEKA, Kans., May 10.—The State Journal has information from Horace, Greeley county, Kansas, that the Coxey train reached that point at 11, having got around the obstruction at Chivington, Colo. The sheriff of Greeley county wired Governor Lewelling for assistance. The Missouri Pacific has placed obstructions between Horace and West Belkirk.

SALINA, Ka., May 11.—Bailey Waggoner's special train with U. S. deputies passed through here at 10 o'clock and reached Genesee at noon. The posse now numbers over one hundred. Nearly all are armed with Winchester rifles. Marshal Neely has write for the arrest of the entire army for stealing a train and interfering with the transmission of the mails. The train is running swiftly and expects to get as far west as Scott City by 4:30 p.m.

SHERIDAN LAKE, Col., May 10.—Sanders's Coxeyites stopped here half an hour, hoping to get food. The citizens gave them only one sack of flour and a little tobacco. Although hungry when the general called "all aboard" they climbed on the cars and cheered good-naturedly.

Saunders said the railroad company had gone to the expense of thousands of dollars wrecking engines, but Superintendent Derby had sent him a dispatch giving him the right of way, and he expected to ride clear through to Washington.

HOISINGTON, Kans., May 10.—The Coxeyites reached Horace at noon. They turned the engine which before had been running tender first and started east. There are about 800 men armed with clubs.

HORACE, Kan., May 10.—Sanders's Coxeyites are waiting here at 1:30 for an eastbound passenger train to pass. They have abandoned the stolen Rio Grande engine here and seized the best one in the yard.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—The House committee on public buildings and grounds has agreed to report bills for public buildings at Helena, Mont., and Boise City, Idaho.

KANSAS, Mo., May 10.—The wild train reached Horace, Kan., about 2 o'clock. There they found an eastward-bound passenger and mail that had been held by the company. The wealers commanded the crew of this train to move, and after an exchange of dispatches with the superintendent, the train sped away. Regarding that train as a safe pilot, the wealers' special kept close in its wake.

The wealers had now a first class locomotive, having abandoned their rusty old switch engine at Horace, Kan., and appropriated the best passenger engine they could find in the round-house.

Without mishap the runaways reached Scott City, which they approached warily. They saw fifty feet of track torn up in front of the station there, and one hundred men with one hundred rifles lined up on the station platform. The engineer reversed quickly and "threw her wide open." Before the waiting and trembling deputies had time to think, their expected antagonists had disappeared in the direction whence they came. Then the deputies breathed easier and were once more courageous.

SALINA, Kan., May 10.—Marshal Neeley served the writs on the Coxeyites at Scott City with a posse of twenty-eight men, saying if they refused to surrender the train the government would be asked for troops to enforce the order in the federal courts.

The capture of the stolen train was effected at Scott City, Kansas, at 5:30 this evening, the wealers having been compelled to return to that city by the train sent to Modoc. Shortly after the train was stopped Marshal Neeley served the writs of replevin. There was a short conference between Sanders and his officers and it was decided to camp on the prairie all night. Sanders asked permission of the mayor for such a proceeding and the request was quickly granted. In a few minutes there were two dozed bright bonfires burning near the track and a party of hungry, tired Coxeyites around each. They had little with them to eat, but their mite was eaked out by contributions from citizens until by 8 o'clock nearly all of the commonwealers had been fairly fed.

Shortly after supper, or about 9 o'clock, Sanders and his army decided to surrender unconditionally, and it was immediately arranged to take the entire number, 450 of them, to Topeka under arrest. The coal cars were sent to Pueblo, and the engine on Sanders's train was hitched to the train of passenger coaches. Into these coaches the commonwealers were bundled and about midnight started for Topeka.

TACOMA, Wash., May 10.—Sixty Coxeyites captured a single gondola coal car at 12:40 this afternoon at Cle-Elum, on the Northern Pacific main line, fifteen miles east of the Cascade tunnel. The Industrials guarded every switch, so that the men were powerless to interfere. The coal car was quickly shoved to the main line. Sixty Coxeyites braced their shoulders against the end and sides and gave the car a tremendous shove. From Cle-Elum to Ellensburg the distance is twenty-eight miles. At exactly 12:45 the sixty men jumped aboard the car, then in motion, and started for Ellensburg. The heavy car rolled along at an easy speed, reaching Ellensburg, according to the railroad reports, at 8:07 p. m.

NORTH YAKIMA, Wash., May 10.—Fifty-nine of the commonwealers were arrested late this afternoon when encamped near the city, and marched under a heavy guard of deputy United States marshals, armed with Winchester rifles, to the county jail. These were some of the men who captured the train last night and had the encounter with the marshals.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., May 10.—The last of the so-called industrial armies that invaded this city some weeks ago has gone. This afternoon Colonel Parker and his 500 men from San Francisco marched out of the city and went into camp on the river bank below here, whence tomorrow they will embark on a steamboat and return to the city by the sea, having despaired of getting transportation eastward from here.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Typhoid has developed among Coxey's men and the entire camp is in a state of alarm and of great agitation. The army is dwindling, owing to desertions and discontent is on the raise.

PORTLAND, Or., May 11.—Portland's Coxe army, which a week ago contained 600 men, has dwindled away, until today it numbers less than 40. They are scattered along the Union Pacific in small squads between this city and Utah, riding on freight trains whenever the opportunity is afforded.

TOPEKA, May 11.—Gov. Lewelling has given permission to Sanders's Coxeyites to camp on the state house grounds. There will be a meeting at the court house tonight to consider the problem of the unemployed on their way to Washington.

TOPEKA, May 11.—Sanders's 400 Coxeyites, captured at western Kansas last night, in charge of U. S. Marshal Neeley, arrived at Topeka at 1:35 this afternoon. They all wore red badges. As the train pulled into Topeka the industrials were singing.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 11.—The industrials at 2 p. m. were still locked in the cars. John Sherman Sanders, general of the army, said to a reporter: "We are feeling first rate or will when we get something to eat. We are greatly obliged to the government and the Missouri Pacific road for providing us with cars, feeding us and speeding us on our way to Washington, where we are bound to go."

NORTH YAKIMA, Wash., May 11.—Another collision occurred between deputy marshals and commonwealers about 4 o'clock this morning, and two of the latter are now confined in the hospital, suffering from gunshot wounds. Word was received during the night that 125 men had captured two freight cars at Ellensburg and were coming down to liberate the Coxeyites imprisoned in the county jail. The marshals marched to meet the industrials, and stopped their cars by means of throwing a rail across the track at a point two miles from this city. The industrials scrambled off the cars and started to run, but were brought to a halt by bullets from the rifles of the marshals. Two of the men were wounded, but not seriously. The others, to the number of 120, were marched to the county jail and locked up.

ELLENSBURG, Wash., May 11.—Word has just been received that four of the commonwealers who started down the Yakima river this morning in a boat were drowned by the upsetting of the boat. The boat contained twenty-five industrials in all.

ROCKLYN, Cal., May 11.—The slayer of the commander of the industrial army marching out from Sacramento was Constable Fleckenger, and the victim Colonel Paisley. At 4 o'clock the army, under command of Lieutenant General Smith, 700 strong, seized a freight train at Arcade station and came to Rocklyn. Engineer Williams, a member of the party, was placed under arrest by Constable Fleckenger. Smith and Colonel Paisley protested. Fleckenger pointed a pistol at Smith who jumped to one side, whereupon the constable shot Paisley. The industrials started to lynch him. Smith, however, aided him to escape. The citizens, fearing further trouble, liberated Williams.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 8.—Postmaster-General Bissell has received an invitation on a handsomely engraved silver plate to attend the exercises of the letter carriers of San Francisco at the Midwinter Fair on May 26. He is unable to accept.

DENISON, Texas, May 8.—Governor James Wolf, of the Chickasaw nation, indicted by the grand jury on a charge of embezzling between $25,000 and $75,000 of the per capita fund, has been arrested. After the arrest he removed Judge Joseph Kemp from the Chickasaw bench and appointed Isaac Burrows his successor. Kemp has refused to give up.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 9.—As a watchman in the Santa Fe railway yards at Argentine was passing a string of empty cars on a side track he heard groans. Bursting open the doors of a car he found in it a man almost starved to death. The man was W. A. Sweeney, formerly a waiter in the Albany hotel, at Denver, Colo., and he had been in the car four days without food or water. He had entered the car to ride to Salina, Kan., where his parents live, and the doors had been locked by trainmen. He was so weak he could not get out. He was taken to a hotel by the city officers. After he has recovered sufficiently to travel, he will go to Salina.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 9.—Mrs. Mary A. Sterner, the elderly woman who lost her sight suddenly on Sunday last, from a flash from a trolley wire, was stricken with paralysis and died within two hours. Just before she was stricken she regained her sight. Her son was pouring medicine into a glass for her at the time, and she joyfully announced that she could see. Half an hour later her entire left side was paralyzed and she again became blind. Within two hours she died.

Her physicians say that the paralytic stroke was directly caused by the flash that blinded her.

LONDON, May 9.—At Newmarket today the 2,000 guinea stakes was won by Lord Rosebery's Ladass.

NEW YORK, May 9.—The Herald's Caracas dispatch says: A terrible earthquake took place in Venezuela, April 2. Reports from districts affected tell of terrible loss of life and destruction of property. The cities of Merida, La Guinias, Chiguara and San Juan, situated in the northwest of the republic, are reported totally destroyed. Many villages are said to be wrecked, but details are not yet to be had. The convulsion extended to parts of Columbia.

Full details will come slowly, but it is probable that ten thousand people have perished, and it is certain that the greatest suffering prevails in the places visited by the earthquake.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 10.—The executive committee of the Midwinter Fair decided today to reduce the admission from 50 to 25 cents on Sundays and to 25 cents on week days after 5 o'clock.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 10.—Not since the beginning of the strike, not even in connection with the wild scenes that attended the killing of Engineer Paddock has there been such excitement as is developing in this region, particularly in the southern end, or Fayette county section. The introduction of outsiders to take the places of the striking coke workers has been commenced. The strikers, especially the Slaves and Poles, are simply furious.

ST. LOUIS, May 10.—A special to the Republic from Noel, Mo., says: At 8 o'clock this afternoon seven men, armed with Winchester and revolvers, rode into Southwest City, Mo., and robbed the bank, getting all the money the bank contained, between $3,000 and $4,000. They evidently came from the Territory, and were experts. They did the job in a very business-like manner. Two of them were stationed on the sidewalk, one entered the bank with a sack and the others guarded the horses.

About 100 shots were fired by the robbers, and four prominent citizens were badly wounded. The robbers were about ten minutes going through the bank. Afterwards they mounted their horses and started for the Nation at a full gallop. A posse was made up and started in pursuit, but the robbers have a good start and will probably get away.

HONOLULU, May 8, per steamer Alameda via San Francisco, May 10.—The election for delegates to the constitutional convention was held yesterday, and passed off in a very quiet manner. No royalist candidates were in the field, and consequently no special interest was taken in the election.

The cumulative ballot system was used, and 7,747 votes were cast. As each voter was allowed six votes, the total vote was 1,291, out of a possible 1,700. The Portuguese voted solidly for their two candidates and elected both. Returns from the other islands are not yet in, but as there was very little opposition to the American union opposition party ticket, no contest is expected.

BALTIMORE, May 10.—Congressman Brattan died today.

Brattan has been lingering between life and death ever since the session began. He had heart disease and Bright's disease.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—The number of Chinese registered in the entire country is 105,812, of whom 67,877 are in California and Nevada; 4,669 in Montana, Idaho and Utah, and 1,781 in Arizona. The Chinese population by the last census was 107,485.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—The President today nominated Chas. D. Walcott, of New York, director of the geological survey, vice John W. Powell resigned.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 11.—Efforts are now on foot by leading business men of Minneapolis and other cities of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Montana to organize what shall be known as the Northwestern Home Trade association. Its purpose is to create on the part of consumers a preference for goods manufactured and sold by northwestern merchants. Circulars are now being sent to business men at all northwestern points asking their attendance at a convention which will be held in Minneapolis May 23rd, for the organization of the association.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., May 11.—Arrangements are being perfected for raising the strike at Cripple Creek regardless of the Miners' Union. It is stated that 600 or 700 men have been sworn in as deputy sheriffs, or will be, and hardy, determined men are being chosen for the bitter work expected. They will be heavily armed and supplied with plenty of ammunition. Protection will be given those who wish to work for $2.75 for eight hours, and it is the intention to let only Americans go to work. Warm times may be looked for.

LONDON, May 11.—A dispatch to the Standard from St. Petersburg says: Arrests have been made on a large scale recently as the result of the discovery of an organization, with widespread connections, called "The Friends of Political Liberty."

Hundreds of persons are supposed to have been arrested, and among them are a number of prominent officials.

Mme. Kernaletskaya, a fashionable dressmaker here, and several of her apprentice girls, were suspected of being connected with the organization and were also arrested.

NEW YORK, May 12.—The understanding between the Panama Railroad company and the Pacific Mail Steamship company by which the railroad chartered the ships of the steamship company temporarily on this side and ran them between Colon and this port under the name of the Columbia line is at an end, and on June 15th the railroad company will put on other steamers.

CORVALLIS, Ogn., May 12.—Dr. J. M. Applewhite, treasurer of the state agricultural college, lay in wait late last night near this place and shot Charles Kenyon and Mrs. Kenyon. On complaint of Kenyon, Applewhite and Mrs. Kenyon were arrested recently on a charge of adultery, for which they were indicted by the grand jury. Mrs. Kenyon turned states evidence and the charge against her was dismissed and she returned to her husband. The charge against Dr. Applewhite is still pending. The shooting affair is the outgrowth of the liaison, and is supposed to have been done in a fit of jealous rage. The shooting occurred near the Kenyon farm house, three miles from town. Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon were riding in a wagon when Applewhite stepped out and began firing. Kenyon returned the fire but missed. He received a painful flesh wound and Mrs. Kenyon only a scratch. The affair terminated by Applewhite dragging Mrs. Kenyon with him and disappearing. Sheriff Osburn with deputies and half a hundred citizens are in pursuit of the pair and there is a fear that Applewhite may be lynched.

NEW YORK, May 12.—The Danish steamship Island has brought six families of Laps for Fort Clarence, Alaska, to be employed at the Reindeer station.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 12.—The Mexican minister of finance said in the Chamber of Deputies that notwithstanding the continued depreciation of silver the general condition of Mexico has improved in the last six months.

Mexico's foreign interest in gold obligations has all been met and would continue to be respected, at least until the meeting of Congress in September, when the minister hopes to see the financial conditions much improved, especially regarding silver.

The printing office of La Republica, the daily newspaper recently confiscated because of the opposition to President Diaz's administration, will be sold and the proceeds retained by the national treasury.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, May 12.—The torpedo boat Ericson, the first United States war vessel ever built in inland waters, was launched today in the presence of several thousand people. Addresses were delivered and there was a parade of military and civic organizations. Miss Carrie Kiene named the vessel.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 12.—Several persons were killed in anti-semitic riots in southern Russia during Easter. At Ekaterinosl workingmen broke into shops owned by Hebrews and maltreated Hebrews. One hundred rioters were arrested.

NEW YORK, May 12.—The steamships which sailed for Europe today carried $2,900,000 in gold, making the total of shipments for the week $8,000,000.

NEW YORK, May 12.—The bronze statue of Christopher Columbus, executed by the Spanish sculptor Sunol, was unveiled with becoming ceremonies in Central Park this afternoon.

ST. LOUIS, May 12.—A novel proceeding was enacted at a social meeting of harbor lodge No. 28, U. S. Association of Pilots. It was the formal initiation of Miss Callie French, said to be the only female pilot in the country. Headquarters were crowded with pilots from all parts of the St. Louis district. It was the first time in the history of the organization that a woman was admitted. Miss French is 22 years old and knows the Ohio and Mississippi rivers thoroughly from Cincinnati to New Orleans. She spent 15 years on the river with her father, Captain C. O. French, who runs a boat between Cincinnati and New Orleans.

LONDON, May 12.—Home Secretary Asquith has absolutely refused to order the release of Mrs. Maybrick, or even to reopen her case for the purpose of introducing new evidence.

BROOKLYN, May 13.—Just after services at noon today, and while Dr. Talmage was shaking hands with members of his congregation, fire burst out between the pipes of the organ and within ten minutes the big tabernacle was doomed to total destruction.

Adjoining the church was the Hotel Regent, eight stories in height, with a frontage of ninety feet on Clifton avenue and extending back 200 feet to Waverly avenue. The fire spread from the tabernacle to this hotel and then to the dwelling houses on Green and Oliver avenues, opposite the tabernacle, the wind carrying the blazing cylinders in such quantities in a southeasterly direction that dwelling houses on Washington avenue, two squares away, and also the Summerfield Methodist church were set on fire by them, but the greatest loss on any one of the structures did not exceed $15,000.

The total loss, however, reaches over $1,000,000.

The fire spread with lightning rapidity and before sunset had destroyed property worth nearly $2,000,000.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 14.—Henry Dillard, a young student from Henry county, Va., died here at Quarantine of smallpox. On May 1 he attained his majority and came into possession of a fortune of $100,000. In a few weeks he would have received $50,000 more. He was sick only a week.

LONDON, May 14.—The Brazilian legation has received the following: "Rio de Janeiro, May 14.—President Peixoto has broken off diplomatic relations with Portugal. The President has sent the Portuguese legation the passports."

SAN ANTONI, Tex., May 14.—Jas. Parkinson Taylor, lord high sheriff of London, died here of paralysis of the brain. He was en route to California when the illness compelled him to stop.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The Speaker laid before the House today the resignation of Barnes Compton, of the Fifth Maryland district, who leaves Congress to accept the office of a naval officer at Baltimore. The proceedings were interrupted by a burley negro in the gallery shouting, "Mr. Speaker of the House of Representatives." Instantly the House was in confusion and directed the doorkeeper to remove the man. The doorkeeper was unable to oust him for some time, the negro endeavoring to deliver his alleged divinely inspired message to the effect that the Lord had commanded him to come to the Speaker and order him to pass the Coxe bill.

UNIONTOWN, May 14.—The coke strikers are showing a more lawless spirit today than ever before. At Ferry the strikers drove the men from work. At Fairchance a workman was taken out by the strikers, tied to a post and whipped.

The region is excited over the reported attempt to blow up the Morgan tunnel on the New State Line railroad with dynamite, to prevent the shipment of coal from the Monongahela river mines. The strikers have leased 1,000 acres near Hill Farm and camp out with the evicted families.

AUBURN, N. Y., May 14.—Lucius P. Wilson, "Dink," died in the electrocution chair at the penitentiary at 12:43. Wilson was one of the gang that killed Detective Harvey, who attempted to arrest them in Syracuse for burglary. "Dink's" brother Charles is now awaiting trial for the same crime, and may also suffer the death penalty. His record, if possible, is worse than that of his brother. Once he was with a Colorado ex-convict named McDermott, who shot a Denver officer dead, when detected in committing burglary. Charles went to California where they committed burglaries. They were arrested at San Francisco and sent to San Quentin prison for five years. Wilson gave the sheriff the slip.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The appeal of John Y. McKane to the United States Supreme court was decided against McKane today.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Supervisor of Indian Schools Moss denies that Apache Kid, the noted outlaw, was an educated Indian, a statement which has been used as an argument against educating the redman.

UTAH'S "INDUSTRIAL" ARMY.

FROM THURSDAY DAILY, MAY 10.

The Carterite "Industrialists" are now the guests of Utah county, and while there is murmuring and discontent in not a few of the companies, many others are very glad, said a gentleman who came up from there this morning, that they are in a land of plenty and living without work. The camp is pitched near Lehi, and the citizens of that place last night contributed generously to the larder that had been so many times filled by the people of Salt Lake, and later by the residents of West Jordan and vicinity.

Carter still eats at hotels and restaurants, handles the cash and harps on his oft repeated hopes that the Rio Grande Western will relent and convey them far beyond the boundaries of the Territory.

A subordinate officer of the army who came up on the train last evening said to a News reporter that a good many of the men were becoming discouraged and were deserting. But the cutting down of the ranks he declared was more than offset by new recruits who dropped off from passing freight trains and were mustered in.

FROM FRIDAY'S DAILY MAY 11.

Superintendent Welby, of the R. G. W., was in Provo yesterday for the purpose of keeping an eye on the movements of Carter's army, should they attempt to capture a train.

Several men who claim to be members of the "army" reached the city yesterday.

Marshal Knight made a visit to the industrial army at Lehi yesterday. In an interview with General Carter he was informed that the army would move to American Fork this morning; from thence they would move to Pleasant Grove and then to Provo. The "general" said he believed he now had 250 men. He was in hopes of getting transportation, but thought it possible he would have to break up his men in companies of fifty to do so.

FROM SATURDAY'S DAILY, MAY 12.

There was a good deal of excitement in town Saturday when the Governor issued a call for the militia to suppress a riot at Provo, in response to a requisition from the sheriff of Utah county. The cause of the commotion was the attempt of Carter's industrial army to get an east-bound train. It was stated that a Union Pacific train was stolen early this morning at Lehi Junction, and the army had gone on to Provo where there was trouble.

Governor West received the following telegram from Provo at 7 o'clock this morning:

Hon. Caleb W. West, Governor of Utah:—Following is a copy of a telegram to the United States marshal: I believe the county officers are not strong enough to control. We should have protection. A. E. WELBY, Superintendent Rio Grande Western.

Later the following was received by Marshal Brigham:

PROVO, Utah, May 12th.

To U. S. Marshal:

Carter's band of commonwealers stole Union Pacific engine and car at Lehi Junction and ran train over our main line to Provo yards, where they left the track. Now endeavoring to get train back on track; probably will succeed. They threaten and are now attempting a seizure of our property. Are blocking all through business and stopping U. S. mails. All mail trains tied up. We demand that you protect the company's property and business and transportation of mails with sufficient force. Company will furnish special train at Salt Lake depot for your force.

A. E. WELBY,
General Superintendent.

Some time after a telegram, of which the following is a copy, was received by the Governor:

PROVO, Utah, May 12.
Governor C. W. West:

I have warrants issued under laws of Territory for arrest of Carter's army of 500 men now here engaged in placing engine back on track. They refuse to release engine and cease work or be arrested. I cannot command sufficient force to execute warrants. I call on you to furnish militia and force sufficient to secure peace, quell the riot and execute the warrants. Answer immediately. JOHN A. BROWN, Sheriff of Utah County.

To this appeal the Governor replied that he would respond just as soon as the militia could be assembled.

At the U. S. Marshal's office active steps were immediately taken for securing the services of a staff of special deputies to co-operate with a portion of Marshal Brigham's regular force at the scene of action. Clerk Swan was kept downright busy for fully a couple of hours afterward in making the necessary arrangements for the departure of the men, but it was not until 11:30 that they got away on the special train which had been provided by the U. P. Railroad company. The deputies numbered thirty in all, including the following members of the permanent body. Deputies Boman Cannon (who took charge), Abe Dyer, J. B. Timmony, J. B. Cummock and L. L. Archer.

Attorney Waldemar Van Cott went before Chief Justice Merritt, in chambers, just before the opening of court this morning and obtained his Honor's signature to the following order:

Oliver Ames, Second, et al, plaintiffs, vs the Union Pacific Railroad company et al, defendants.

On the affidavit of J. H. Young, the U. S. marshal of Utah is hereby ordered and directed to take such ample and necessary force of men, and use such necessary and proper force, to recover from one "General" Carter and others whose names are unknown, but who are known as the Industrial army, the engine and two cars and such other property as such Industrial army may have, and which said army has withheld unlawfully and forcibly from the said plaintiff; and the said U. S. marshal is hereby directed to arrest and bring said men and army before this court to answer for contempt.

Very soon after receiving information of an official character concerning the trouble in Utah county, Governor West as commander-in-chief of the Utah Militia, notified Adjutant-General Ottinger to assemble the two companies of infantry, A and B, and a section of the battery as quickly as possible in front of the Executive Mansion, and to be ready to march from there at 12 o'clock noon.

The execution of this order was attempted but failed in part, as the members of the Norden and Denhalter companies were widely scattered about the city, some at work, others at home and others whose whereabouts were unknown.

In the meantime hundreds of excited and curious citizens thronged the street in front of the Governor's office, awaiting the latest news from the scene of the trouble.

Early this morning the United States officials at Fort Douglas were communicated with and asked for a Gatling gun, which they immediately sent to this city. It was the same formidable weapon of war concerning which so much was written and said during the recent "industrial" disturbance at Ogden. It was conveyed direct to the Rio Grande depot and placed on a flat car provided for the purpose.

It was after 2 o'clock when the members of the militia had the last of their accoutrements on board the special train at the Rio Grande Western depot.

The regular Sanpete train on the R. G. W., due out at 2:30 p. m., did not go today, owing to the situation at Provo, but shortly after the hour named the militia train of three cars speeded southward. There were on board the Governor, Secretary, Gen. Ottinger and Col. Tatlock of the National Guard, Lieut. Lester of the regular army, one company of militia (the Denhalter rifles), and a Gatling gun from Fort Douglas.

It was rumored that when it became known that the militia was called out parties belonging to Carter's army made preparations to derail the train somewhere near the point of the mountain but no word of any actual attempt has been received. This morning quite a body of men supposed to be sympathizers with the army headed for the south on foot.

PROVO, Utah.—Carter's band of Coxeyites seized a Union Pacific engine here today, attached it to Rio Grande Western cars and started east. Before getting out of town the train was derailed by an open switch.

PROVO, May 12, 1:15 p.m.—Last night about 8 o'clock engineer E. J. Blake was called upon by a delegation from the industrial army who informed him that they had possession of his train and wanted him to run them East. He went with the men and found the entire army, numbering 200 men, loaded in one passenger car and two box cars, pulled by U. P. engine No 1,029. Mr. Blake took charge of the engine and started to run east on the Union Pacific. It was discovered that a mail coach was attached to the train; that was returned to Lehi Junction and another start made. At Lehi the train switched on to the Rio Grande track and the journey continued to Provo. When nearing the depot several torpedoes placed on the track exploded. The engineer informed the army that this was a danger signal. He was told to go on.

At the depot at Provo, where the train arrived at 4 o'clock, a man was noticed at the switch, and as the train approached he pulled it half open, which caused the engine to become derailed. The army remained in the cars till morning when they camped on a vacant lot west of the U. P.

depot. As soon as they were able to see, the men commenced to pull the engine back on the track which they succeeded in doing by 12 o'clock.

Marshal Fowler requested the men to desist from their attempts to place the engine back but they paid no attention to him.

At about 11 o'clock a squad of men took the hand car belonging to the U. P. section hands and rode towards Springville, it having become known that several rails had been taken up by the R. G. men to further obstruct the train in case it should leave Provo. A large crowd of citizens gathered at the depot and watched the men working at the engine and around the camp ground.

Mayor Holbrook ordered the saloons closed. He took up a collection with which a quarter of beef was bought. When that was brought to camp, which was about 11 o'clock, it was put in the box car and the army also began to move their provisions in from the campground, which showed they intended to move out as soon as possible.

The northbound U. P. passenger did not pull out this morning; the engine was killed, as was an engine on the Rio Grande Western, and as soon as the army arrived this proved a necessary precaution, as the army attempted to take possession of the two engines and would doubtless have continued their journey had they been able to use the engines.

General Carter is not with the army and they say they do not know where he is. They also say they do not know who is in charge. Col. Miller and Captain Faugh and other officers are seen directing the men. They are all orderly and have not scattered around town.

It was rumored in the forenoon that Governor West and a company of militia were on their way to Provo and some of the army left on a hand car for the north. It is not known if the object was to obstruct the track and block the train carrying the militia.

Provo, May 12, 8:15 p. m.—At 1:30 o'clock a special pulled in with about forty deputy marshals armed with Winchesters in charge of Deputy Bowman Cannon. The train stopped about two blocks west of the depot. The posse was greeted with hooting and groans as they passed the army. Superintendent Young and Attorney Van Cott came down on the special.

The men of the army were massed on their camp ground and at one time there appeared to be danger of a collision between the members of the army and the local officers, but quiet was finally restored and the army men kept back within the lines of their camp. Three groans were given for Governor West. Judge Harvey W. West, Mayor Holbrook and city officials were spectators at the scene of war, and a very large concourse of citizens gathered around the camp.

Mayor Holbrook ordered all citizens of Provo to disperse to their several places of abode. This order was not very generally observed. Capt. Faugh asked the members of the army to observe order and act like men, and all would be right.

It is stated earlier in the report that the army succeeded in getting the engine on the track. This is an error.

The engine was still derailed when the posse came down.

Some delay now took place. The posse had warrants for the arrest of the army, but nothing was done for some time, the officers apparently being in some doubt about the proper course to pursue.

The army formed in hollow square on their camp ground. They were addressed by Captain Faugh and Lieutenant Burns. Both counseled good order and moderation. In reply to a question by Lieutenant Burns as to whether they were ready to go back to Salt Lake City, all the men yelled, "No!" "Washington!"

Lieutenant Burns then said: "Well, if you want to go to Washington you shall go, but we want to go peaceably."

Word was brought to camp that General Carter was under arrest in Provo. This news was received with three cheers for Carter. Three cheers were also given for the people of Provo.

Carter drove in about 1 o'clock and was arrested by Deputy Marshal Fowler.

"Old Abe," the eagle, is perched on the camp ground and seems to take a philosophical view of the situation.

Provo, 3:25 p. m.—The railway trains have been released and all are running. Everything is quiet now, with no indication of further trouble. Nothing more will be done by the officers here till the militia arrives, which will be in a short time.

Provo, May 12, 3:30 p. m.—The special train which left the Rio Grande Western depot at 2:10 this afternoon had on board besides those already named Col. Clayton, U. S. District Attorney Judd and Assistant U. S. District Attorney Howat. The last two officials were provided with law books which they were perusing closely when not in consultation with the governor.

The run to the camp of the industrials was made without particular interest. The militia train was the first that was run on the R. G. W. today.

All is quiet at this time, but there is great suspense.

Provo, May 12, 4 p. m.—All of the officers of the industrial army have been taken into custody by Sheriff Brown. The main characters quietly submitted to arrest and are now being marched up town to the city jail. Further developments are awaited with interest.

FROM MONDAY'S DAILY, MAY 14

It was nine o'clock on Saturday night when the deputy marshals, headed by Deputy Bowman Cannon, arrived at the Union Pacific depot in this city with the twenty-seven men whom they had arrested at Provo, the names of the defendants being as follows: General H. E. Carter, Quartermaster W. B. Lowry, Wm. Rhodes, M. Sullivan, W. H. Carrington, W. H. Griffin, John Peter Mason, James Cassidy, Louis Shaffer, J. Smith, Chas. Burns, Ben Morrow, C. T. Mitchell, E. C. Crouch, John Thompson, H. A. Faugh, N. Newell, Edward Moore, Charles Van Buskirk, Chas. Wilson, Samuel Gregory, F. C. Glidden, W. F. Eblin, J. H. Kerr, Wm. Andrews, A. B. Day, Frank McRea.

A Rapid Transit street car was in waiting just outside the depot, and in this they were all conveyed up to the penitentiary, where they have been kept since that time.

The attorneys for the defendants (D. D. Houtz and M. M. Warner, of Provo) went before Chief Justice Merritt, in chambers, yesterday, about noon, and applied that Carter, the "chief," be admitted to bail pending the hearing of the contempt proceedings. Attorney P. L. Williams, on behalf of the Union Pacific Railroad company receivers, suggested that in the event of this application being granted the bail should be fixed at not less than $1,000. At this sum Judge Merritt fixed the bond. The "general's" friends and sympathizers made strenuous efforts to raise this, but were unsuccessful; so Carter passed Sunday night also within the penitentiary walls.

It had been confidently expected that the hearing would take place this morning before Judge Merritt in the Third District Court, and consequently a very large number of persons had congregated inside the Dooly building just before the usual hour for opening court. When the Judge took his seat, however, at 10 o'clock, it was remarked that none of the attorneys in the case were present, and his Honor at once made an announcement in reference to the matter which disposed of it for today at least.

He said—In the matter of the contempt proceedings against H. E. Carter and others, I understand the defendants are not ready to go on, and therefore I direct that the clerk make an order reducing Carter's bail from $1,000 to $250. I do not want to keep the man in the penitentiary if it can be avoided. In regard to the other defendants I was willing to make the same proposition, but they say that they don't want bail, and elect to remain where they are at present. It seems that the attorneys for these men are now at Provo, and could not get ready in time to proceed with their defense this morning. So the case will come on tomorrow morning peremptorily, whether there is any showing or not.

The subject then dropped and Judge Merritt went on with the regular business of the court.

The required bond was forthcoming at 11:45, the bondsmen being Messrs. Henry W. Lawrence and George A. Snow, and shortly afterwards Carter was released from the penitentiary.

This afternoon Carter addressed a meeting of about five hundred persons. Nearly all of the home reserve members were present and they loudly applauded their "general" as he approached and commenced to speak. There was a noticeable absence of the "fire" that usually characterizes the released heroes' talk, though he was very denunciatory when he referred to the local officials.

He was followed by the man Boyle, who emptied the vials of his wrath on Governor West, whom he designated as a "howling idiot," a "rebel maniac" and a "Kentucky coward."

Another meeting will be held this evening and still another tomorrow afternoon at one o'clock.

John Stubbs, who was arrested by the police on Saturday night on a charge of inciting to riot, was about the streets mingling with kindred spirits this afternoon. And he was in a very happy state of mind. One reason was that the charge against him had been dismissed though just how that was done is not quite clear. His name was inscribed on the register of arrests when he was taken into custody. For some reason, however, it was never transferred to the trial docket, and while it is claimed the case was dismissed at the request of the prosecution, the clerk of the court knew nothing of the matter and had no record of any such action.

PROVO, May 14, 12:30 p.m.—Everything is quiet in the camp of the industrialists. There are still about 200 men in camp. They will remain till Tuesday, when they intend to march East. In the meantime they are anxiously awaiting news from Salt Lake City in regard to General Carter and the rest of the imprisoned industrialists. They have been advised that no objection will be raised by the Rio Grande Western Railway company to their boarding empty freight cars in squads of fifteen or twenty and leaving for the East in that manner. This they refuse to do, as they all want to go together. The "army" has guards stationed on the line of the camp today for the purpose of preventing members of the army leaving the grounds and also to keep citizens out. The order, however, is indifferently observed. Three deputy-marshals are guarding the Rio Grande Western Railway property, but no attempts at anything like disturbance have been made today.

Sympathy for the Carterite "industrialists" at Provo is on the wane. It is safe to say that that kind of stock has been discounted 100 per cent since Saturday. The fellow feeling that apparently characterized the conduct of so many was not approved by the majority of the citizens and as time advances even those who gave a quasi-encouragement to the commonwealers begin to realize that the community was dangerously near the brink of full fledged riot and that the men who precipitated that condition were made up principally of a band of beggars and idlers.

The "army" is still camped upon the beautiful greenward near the depot. The commissary is covered by a big canvas tent in the middle of the plot and is doubtless as well filled with the choice products of the earth as any military larder in the possession of Uncle Sam. Perhaps not since the enlistment of the Carterites have they fared better than at Provo. Bread, beef, potatoes, tea, coffee, seasonable vegetables of all kinds have been contributed in generous amounts. All the men have to do is cook, eat, lounge about, play ball and crack jokes.

There are indications, however, that there will be a cessation of the free feeding business on a large scale. Several prominent citizens are of the opinion that the "army" should be put on rations. With the opportunity for gormandizing removed they think the ranks will dwindle much faster than now even.

A feeling of revenge for the interruption they received on their stolen ride, and the subsequent arrest of their leading men fills the breasts of many of them, and some boldly declare that they will play even with the Rio Grande by tearing up a stretch of that company's track at a point in Spanish Fork Canyon that will send an ill-fated passenger train with its load of human freight to the bottom of some deep abyss.

To prevent such wholesale death and destruction methods, the railway officials will see to it that close and constant watch will be kept over the road and the lives and property of themselves and patrons protected. Superintendent Welby, is especially a victim of abuse, and is denounced in the most violent terms. "The home reserve boys in Salt Lake" said one of the commonwealers "say he ought to be lynched."

"Lynching is too good for him," cried another. "He ought to be dragged behind an industrial train to Washington and his carcass thrown on the Capitol grounds."

A noticeable feature and a matter of common comment by those who have visited the army's camp is that the men are considerably better clothed than the average laborer. Some of them even wear starched shirts, collars and cuffs and Derby hats and neckties are numerous.

It is estimated that nearly two-thirds of the men have deserted since they left Salt Lake. One squad of sixty broke ranks on Saturday night after Carter's arrest and small delegations have been moving out ever since until less than 200 remain. The latter are the most useless characters of which the army was composed and are genuine "dead beats." They state they will patiently await Carter's discharge, that they will go on to Washington no matter what happens. "But," say they also, "We will never go afoot."

Superintendent J. H. Young, of the Union Pacific, came up on a special from Provo this morning. In discussing the situation there as it was when he left he states that the army is being gradually thinned out by desertion. It is difficult to estimate the number of those who have quietly slipped away as a good many recruits are constantly dropping in. Some of these come down from Portland and the Puget Sound country, and others from the west. These take the places of the deserters and are glad of the opportunity for resting and feeding.

As the east-bound passenger train over the Rio Grande reached Provo last night there was a lively scramble in the army's camp. It was discovered that one car was loaded with a band of Indians bound for Grand Junction. The red men were thrown from the car by the Carterites who immediately took their places to the number of forty or fifty, and went on with the train. It was thought at one time that there would be a desperate fight between the Indians and the "army," but the former submitted to the rather rough handling to which they were subjected in a manner that was really surprising. Their resistance was brief and not at all vigorous. Now they are also guests of the Garden city. They camped last night in a field not far from the industrialists and are now awaiting an opportunity to peacefully resume their journey.

An unrecorded item of interest in connection with the calling out of the militia on Saturday was related to a News reporter today. Soon after the Norden and Denhalter companies were drawn up in front of the "army," a big, burly Carterite attempted to pass the picket line. He was told that he would not be allowed to do so. He insisted and began cursing and finally grasped the bayonet of the gun of Corporal Hupfer of the Denhalter company and endeavored to place himself over the "dead line." The result was that he was struck severely under the chin two or three times. He still kept trying to get out and did not desist until the point of the bayonet was thrust into his right shoulder to a depth of an inch and a half. With a cry of pain he released his grasp of the gun and turned his attention to the wound he had received and from which the blood flowed in a considerable stream. He gave the militia men no further trouble. And thus was the first blood drawn in the history of Utah "industrial" army warfare.

A rather singular and ridiculous coincidence is related concerning a resident of Provo who declaimed loudly against the authorities for stopping the "army." They were, he said, free, independent, American citizens, and should be allowed to proceed on their journey uninterrupted. Later in the evening the Carterites were seen prowling about the gentleman's warehouse in a suspicious manner, and he at once asked that official protection be given to his property. He was told in a rather curt manner that the men were "free, independent, American citizens, and should be permitted to proceed uninterrupted." He saw the condition in which he had placed himself and changed the tone of his request as follows: "Well, then, I want somebody to see to it that this—mob does not rob me blind tonight."

CITY CEMETERY.

On Saturday a reporter visited the city cemetery and was shown through the streets of the city of the dead by the sexton, C. E. Angell, Esq., who has been in charge since the early part of last month. There are two large tanks situated in the upper part of the cemetery, designed to contain a supply of water for irrigating the lawns, etc. About three weeks ago Mr. Angell caused these to be cleaned out preparatory to being filled for spring work, but investigation disclosed that the tanks were unsafe and, by order of the City Council, they have been repaired of City Engineer Young.

In the meantime the weather became warm, and the lawns have suffered some from the lack of water. But now that tanks are in good order, the lots will be watered and well cared for, as part of the cost of the work is paid. Many owners of lots complain that flowers planted over the graves of their loved ones are stolen. Many such cases are reported to the sexton, and while he was walking with the reporter two complaints of this character were made, the parties stating that they would willingly pay a reward for information that would lead to the conviction of the thieves. The sexton is of opinion that these thefts are mainly the work of children; but he is determined to prosecute the first culprit who shall be detected.

The house on the ranch known as the Oscar Rogers ranch near Laramie, Wyo., was destroyed by fire on Saturday night. It was located on Horse creek. No one has been living there for some time.

Hon. Tim Kinney, says the Rock Springs (Wyo.) Miner, hurried back from Salt Lake City to Nebraska to put on the market 14,000 head of sheep which he has been feeding there. At present prices he will realize $14,000 more than he would a month ago had he marketed them then.

It is estimated by competent parties that Colorado is annually sending over $800,000 to eastern states, principally Illinois, for condensed milk and evaporated cream. Steps are now being taken to raise the necessary capital to establish a condensed milk factory in Colorado.

The proposition before Congress to reduce the area of the Yellowstone park by over 1,000,000 acres will meet the uncompromising disapproval of every resident of this state, says a dispatch from Cheyenne, Wyo. The people of Wyoming are in favor of retaining the original wild grandeur of the park.

Sheep shearers, says the Weiser (Idaho) Signal, are beginning to make their appearance, preparatory to harvesting another season's raw material for the railroads to haul East, for the manufacturer to make into cloth for the railroads to haul back again for us to buy with the money received for the original raw material.

Laramie, Boomerang: John Fischer at his place of business has one of the finest specimens of trout ever seen in the city. It was caught by Dr. Burrell last summer above Wyndham's ranch in the Laramie river and weighed 10½ pounds. It was skinned and the skin sent to New York to be mounted. It is seen in a case now and is as natural as life.

Although eighty bodies have been incinerated in the crematory of the San Francisco Cremation society at Cypress Lawn cemetery, San Mateo, the dedicatory exercises of the crematory were not held until Sunday afternoon. A mock incineration showing how bodies are treated was given for the instruction of those who were present.

Oranges at the grove of the Arizona Improvement company near Phoenix are now as large as marbles, says an exchange. The blossoms are now all gone, staying but a few days. The trees were late in blossoming but have since made up for the delay in the rapidity with which the fruit is forming. The crop next season will be phenomenal in quantity.

The Boise (Idaho) Statesman says: Lieutenant-Governor Frank B. Willis arrived yesterday from Challis. He estimates the damage by the recent fire at Challis at $40,000. He figures the loss of his hotel and contents at $25,000. There was $10,000 insurance on the building. The lieutenant-governor says the Wheeler building was the only other building insured. The loss on it was about $1,800; insurance, $1,000.

The Caldwell, Idaho, Tribune says the canal companies of Canyon county have directly increased the cost of water 60 per cent, and in addition assume to regulate the quantity. "Their method of supplying water at $1.50 per acre and then assuming to say how much water shall be used on an acre has the appearance of a cinch, and every move made by these institutions compels the belief that they are menaces and a curse to the country."

The story of Mrs. L. R. Stockwell's sad condition has excited much sympathy for the afflicted actress, says the San Francisco Chronicle. The friends of Ethel Brandon, as the sick woman is known to theater-goers, remembering the many charitable acts performed by her, intend proving in a substantial manner that her efforts were not unappreciated. Plans for a monster benefit have been drafted that bid fair promise to yield a golden harvest.

George B. Smith, of Reese river, has been killed in Nye county, Nevada, by being shot through the side and the back of the neck with a shotgun, says the Austin Reveille. He left home yesterday morning to go into the hills about five miles above his home, where some sheep were ranging, and carried a gun. His wife, several hours after, went to the hills and found his dead body, which was brought to town today. It is not known at the time of going to press who did the shooting.

Work on the Saguache reservoir site, says the Colorado Crescent, is being pushed rapidly forward. Nineteen teams with scrapers are continually at work. The trench in which the discharge pipes are to be laid are being dug; this trench will be filled with concrete, which will enclose the heavy iron outlet pipes. The stones for the mason work are being dressed for the walls. The rock used strongly resembles granite and is taken from the mountain side at the southwestern end of the dam.

A good deal of excitement prevails in Livingston, Montana, over the mysterious disappearance of W. S. Gardner, a line repairer employed on the Northern Pacific railroad. About ten days ago Gardner secured a few days' lay-off, saying he was going over to Butte on a visit. He wired his wife, who was then visiting in Tacoma, that he would meet her in Helena and return to Livingston. He failed to keep his appointment, and nothing has been heard of him since. It is now believed that he has met with foul play.

The most brutal murder committed in El Dorado county, Cal., for many years was perpetrated near Latrobe on Monday night. Ellen Robinson, an aged widow, living on her ranch, was stamped to death and her house plundered. Her body was found outside the door, the lower jawbone broken and all but two of her ribs crushed. The skin and flesh over the fractures showed the nail marks of a boot heel. The bed clothes and contents of a trunk were scattered in confusion about her bedroom. The police are investigating.

Charles H. Reed, chief clerk of the Idaho house of representatives, has been indicted by the Canyon county grand jury, on a charge of forgery. It is alleged that he raised a school warrant for $8 to $108, secured the money and, it is understood, subsequently returned it, but this did not serve to stay the prosecution. It is expected the case will be heard at the term of the district court now in session in Caldwell. The accused has held many positions of trust and responsibility, and the indictment is a great surprise to his friends.

The work of excavating a canal for utilizing the water of Humboldt lake for irrigating purposes has begun in earnest, says the Lovelock, Nevada, New Era. Three hundred feet of canal have already been cut, ranging in depth from seven to twenty feet, and in width twenty-two feet at the top to eight feet at the bottom. A dam has been placed in the Bay slough to keep as much water as possible away from the workmen while running the canal north from the slough. The lake front is dotted with cabins, and a number of claimants have carried lumber through the water to islands to build houses by which to hold 160 acres when the lake is drained.

Mrs. L. R. Stockwell, better known to the stage and to the world as Miss Ethel Brandon, is lying ill almost unto death in St. Mary's Hospital, San Francisco, says the Chronicle. She is stated to be a wreck physically and almost mentally. Her attenuated form lies on one of the cots in the woman's ward, and her dearest friend would scarcely recognize in the wan and wasted features the handsome leading lady of yore. Her condition is due somewhat to mental worry, because of the conduct of her daughter, Polly, who was married a little over a month ago to the son of Frederick Warde, the tragedian.

The Seventh Day Adventist association has commenced to make arrangements for the annual conference to be held at Bushrod park, near Berkeley, California. The district takes in California, Nevada, Utah and Arizona. There will be representatives from all these places at the conference. This will be the largest gathering of Seventh Day Adventists ever held on this coast says the San Francisco Chronicle. The local committee have made preparations for 400 tents in the park, where the people will live during the conference. Besides these there will be a big tabernacle, 100x150 feet, in the center of the park, where all the general meetings will be held.

An amusing incident is recorded from Sauvie's Island, Or., where a herd of cows were recently deborned. In the herd was a cow which had no horns. She always had to take a back seat, and if she ever came within reach of a pair of horns was sure to feel them, and was often "horned." One day all the rest of the herd were driven into a corral, and the poor "moolley" was left out. What was her surprise and joy a little later to see the others coming out of the corral with bloody heads and no horns. She took one good look at the first victim and then sailed in fairly wiped the earth with her, till she bellowed for mercy. Then another came out and was put through a similar course, and so on with the whole lot, and from that day to this she is the boss of the herd, and feeds in the choice spots and leads a gay life.

When the International Vaudeville opened at the Metropolitan theater at Sacramento, Cal., on Saturday, the company was thrown into confusion by the service of an attachment for $200 against the owners of the company. The complaint was sworn to by Delmore Wilkins, a young clerk in a leading San Francisco dry goods store. Amberg & Matema, the owners of the Vaudeville company, together with J. H. Todd, lessee of the Metropolitan, successfully resisted the service of the attachment. The Vaudeville people claim that every cent of salary due the troupe has been paid, and that return trip tickets to New York were bought in the east for every member of the troupe. They insist that the reason of the attachment is that Wilkins formed a strong attachment for two of the members of the troupe, and that the sole and only reason for the service of the papers is that he wants the girls to return to San Francisco with him, which they appear willing to do. The row isn't over yet.

The San Francisco Chronicle records the death of Joseph Sullivan, the "Oakland giant," which occurred on Sunday morning. Sullivan was a well known character. He came from Chicago when quite young, and was about 26 years old at the time of his death. The measurements of the deceased, taken a short time ago, are as follows: Height, 7 feet 8½ inches; foot, 14 inches long; chest, 4 feet around; length of arm, 3 feet 8 inches; from top of head to chin, 15 inches; around the waist, 3 feet 8 inches; from tip to tip of fingers with arms outstretched, 8 feet 7 inches; weight, 350 pounds. Sullivan had a small hand for a man of his size. He wore a 9 glove. When taken from the little room where he died it was found impossible to get his body around the narrow passages in the second story, and it was hitched to a rope and lowered by means of a pulley. Since death the body had stretched considerably. There was not a hearse large enough in Oakland to carry the remains. As a result the undertaker in charge built an addition to his hearse for the purpose of carrying the immense coffin, which was 8 feet long, 19 inches deep and 2 feet wide at the bottom.

BEAR LAKE STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Bear Lake Stake of Zion was held in the tabernacle at Paris, May 5th and 6th, 1894.

There were present on the stand Elders A. H. Cannon, of the council of the Apostles, and S. B. Young, of the council of the Seventies; Elders Wm. Budge, J. H. Hart and Wm. L. Rich, of the Stake presidency, members of the High Council, presidency of the High Priests' quorum, also most of the Bishops of the Stake.

Saturday morning, 10 o'clock—After the usual opening exercises, Elder Wm. Budge made a few remarks, after which quite a number of the Bishops reported the condition of their wards; followed by Elder A. H. Cannon.

Saturday afternoon the Bishops reported their wards, and Elders J. H. Hart and Seymour B. Young occupied the remaining time.

Sunday morning.—Reports were given of the High Priests' and Elders' quorums, and short addresses by Elders C. H. Bridges Jr., returned missionary from the Samoan Islands, and Geo. Schick, returned missionary from Germany. Elders Wm. L. Rich and S. B. Young occupied the remaining time of the morning services.

Sunday afternoon—Sacrament was administered and the general authorities of the Church and Stake were presented and unanimously sustained. Elder A. H. Cannon occupied the chief part of the afternoon, Elder Budge making a few closing remarks.

A very enjoyable time was had throughout the conference. The chief subjects spoken upon were the proper training of the young and rising generation, encouragement of the backward to reform, obedience to the Priesthood, to seek counsel from the proper source, to refrain from undue criticism, the benefits derived from obeying the Word of Wisdom, and general instructions to officers in the Church. The visit of the brethren from Salt Lake was greatly appreciated by all. The meetings, in particular on Sunday, were well attended. The choir under the able leadership of W. N. B. Shepherd discoursed sweet music, rendering some fine pieces.

Yours respectfully,
J. U. STUCKI.

PLEASANT GROVE ITEMS.

PLEASANT GROVE, May 11, 1894.—George Meyers, of Highland, near Alpine, lost his wife on Monday of diphtheria. Last evening one of his daughters died; and this morning another girl succumbed to the malady; aged respectively 9 and 11 years. His eldest daughter, aged 18 years, is at the point of death from the dreadful scourge, and other members of the household are afflicted with the same disease.

Carter's army are encamped between here and American Fork—about 250 strong. Some of the men will engage in a game of baseball with the American Fork boys at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Frank M. Driggs leaves for California today. He goes west to be present at the closing exercises of the deaf mute school of that state, in the hope of adding to his knowledge of the art of teaching the unfortunate mutes at the Utah school for the deaf. He will doubtless take in the Fair at San Francisco.

A district conference will convene here tomorrow for two days' session.

WASATCH COUNTY ITEMS.

HEBER, May 6.—The Stake conference convened at Heber at 10 a. m. yesterday with an excellent attendance. Elder F. M. Lyman, of the council of the Apostles, is here and delivered some most timely instructions. The Bishops of the different wards of the Stake made reports that showed their wards to be in good spiritual condition. The congregation gave earnest attention to the speakers.

The Republicans of Wasatch county held a mass meeting yesterday and continued in office their present county central committee. Thos. S. Watson is chairman and Wm. E. Harner secretary. They are preparing for the fall campaign.

Wm. Blake was appointed Bishop of Center ward last night in place of Bishop Cluff, who has moved to Arizona.

The town of Heber is one of the neatest in the Territory and presents a very thrifty appearance.

Wasatch county is free from debt. There are no school or town bonds, and there is less mortgage and indebtedness than in any similarly situated county in the Territory; of this fact the people are reasonably proud.

SWEDEN.

A new railroad will be built between Malmo and Lund.

King Oscar will visit Copenhagen in June.

Ex-postmaster A. W. Sodergren, of Orebro, died at the age of 72 years.

M. E. Delbanco's large oil factory in Maelndal was burned to the ground.

Miss Augusta Nilson, the well-known Swedish missionary, died at Lamu, Africa.

The condition of the crown princess is said to have slightly improved, but the change is surely only temporary.

Mrs. K. Jonasdotter, who recently died at Bjorko, at the age of 106 years, was the oldest inhabitant in Sweden.

The Stockholm dailies have contained articles in which they urge the Associated Press to send a representative to Stockholm.

The whole Swedish army will be furnished with new uniforms, the patterns of which will be much simpler than those now in use.

Only 1,388 persons emigrated during the three first months of this year by way of Gothenburg as compared with 6,370 during the same period in 1893.

Colonel G. A. Toli, of the Dal regiment, has been appointed major general and commander-in-chief of the sixth division of the Swedish army.

The Danish crown prince and crown princess have been visiting in Stockholm, and several magnificent court festivals have been held in their honor.

Mrs. Margareta Svenson, of Ingsberg the mother of banker Svenson of New York, who is said to be worth at least $6,000,000, died at the advanced age of 100 years.

In accordance with the law of Sweden, the education is compulsory of deaf and dumb children, who are between 7 and 9 years of age, and extends through an eight years' course at the School for Deaf and Dumb. Children beyond that age have a two year's course of instruction.

Practical housekeeping schools have been founded in several towns of Sweden, as at Upsala, Gothenburg, Lund, etc. At Gothenburg the largest brewery, that of Carnegis, has founded such a school for daughters of the workmen of the brewery, with the special purpose to teach them everything necessary to become good and useful housewives for workmen, and, if not married, good servants.

The inhabitants of the city of Vadstena, where during the middle ages existed a nunnery, possess a very great skill in lace making. This kind of work was practised with great talent by the nuns in that celebrated convent, which was founded by St. Brigitta during the 14th century. Although Queen Louise, the wife of Charles XV, by several means tried to support and encourage this home-sloyd, still it was found difficult to develop it to any higher degree.

NORWAY.

Ibsen is reported ill, suffering from rheumatism.

HOW FAR CAN IT BE DONE?

A great many things have been written and much more has been said in regard to the general habits and methods of life as shown during the last few years of prosperity. Charges of excess and extravagance have been freely made, economy has been suggested and enforced, precept has led to counsel, and inaction has followed that as naturally as light follows darkness. It has been assumed—demonstrated it is said—that living has been too fast, and expenditure too great for continuance, and that continuance meant insolvency and distress almost beyond recuperation.

That there is a great degree of truth in such statements goes without saying. At the same time some of our conclusions may be erroneous and our theories more than crude. At all events, comparison determines at last the wisdom or impropriety of expenditure alike of the peasant or the millionaire!

There is nothing on this earth, no matter how priceless, but owes something to the expenditure of human labor; and there is nothing outside of primitive element, or in it so far as we know, that is not native to and belongs to earth. The gold watch, the glittering jewel, the trophies of sculpture and painting, represent the skill and genius of man, and become almost fabulous in estimated value, in great part because of expended labor. The Indian sees nothing in art or books; his wickiup is more attractive than a royal palace; a pair of beaded moccasins are finer to him than a French calf boot is to the city dude; and his dusky bride, saturated with sagebrush smoke, conquers his taste readier than could any of the queens of fashion. And yet in him there is a reaching out for something which arrests his attention or claims his fancy or use. A small looking-glass takes his lariat, a few string of beads his buffalo robe, he trades buckskin for paint, and his bow and arrow for a blanket. A little extended intercourse with the whites, and for an old musket, a little powder, a box of caps he will swap his pony, nay almost his squaw.

And through the superior prowess and enterprise of the cultivated races, the love of variety, the desire for possession, has become abnormal. The earth has been ransacked to gratify taste, and at the bidding of wealth the earth and its products have become transformed, glorified and advanced. Surplus has been exchanged into every conceivable form to gratify the desire for strange, novel and unique productions; until as ages have passed, these heirlooms of architecture, of tapestry, and of precious things have been wonderfully increased. Mental culture has fostered trade and barter, until whatever was once rare has become the heritage of ever-increasing numbers. Grand old parks, wonderful sculpture, marvelous pictures, strange vegetation and beautiful flowers, at the instance of wealth are giving continuous object lessons which are elevating the taste, informing the judgment, and purifying the soul of many.

The wealth of individuals flows back again, by route circuitous or otherwise, to every artisan, to every inventor and discoverer, just as the blood flows in the human system to its extremities, carrying sustenance and vigor. Even the reckless exuberance of the spendthrift goes out for something which is mainly the product of some man's toil, and ministers bread where there was no special intention. Nor can it be said that this drift of the rich man, when seen in the poor, is all the result of imitation. Rather does it appear to be innate and universal, and to have its limits outside of real necessity. The Indian already alluded to does not stand on that. The civilized man of means as a rule is far beyond this thought. The multitude shows the same trait; and he who would limit himself to the sheer necessities of life would be deemed a crank and only fit for the asylum.

Look at this Territory—at the first condition of the Pioneer! Note the progress of today in the interior and exterior of their homes! See their lawns and flower gardens, their shrubbery and fruit trees! There are besides all the appointments of science, convenience, life; and even art and literature are beginning to exert their beneficent sway, leading onward and upward a community who have earned and deserve it all. Much of this would have been extravagance in the days of the Pioneer. To some they are so now, just as architecture and music is to the Quaker in his meeting house, or painting and pictures and elaborate dress in their homes and on their persons. And yet the Creator has showered beauty and magnificence on the earth. There are countless things which seem marvelously superfluous when placed alongside nature in her economical moods—for she hath these at times, and brings man through eras of privation, disaster, famine and pestilence, that he may learn to appreciate the good and eschew the evil. In fact, the intercommerce of man and the exchange of the products of earth, seems to have been decreed of Fatherly wisdom, and "but for the intervention of wise men who were fools," this exchange would be as unrestrained as the ebb and flow of the tides, and as natural as the rising and setting of the sun; and there is not a petty store in Utah but testifies to this design, for it is the manifestation of a primal instinct, as much or probably more, than of design or of intent.

Aside from the special thoughts of a peculiar people, who dreams when men are talking of their wool interests that there is worn in Utah wool from all around the earth, and that differences in climate, in animals and in fabrics seem mutually adapted to each other? Who notes, spite of our generous soil, that grains are imported here in one form or another for our daily food? Who realizes, with the proved susceptibility of our valleys, that sugar is grown in the tropical belt and refined for Utah's people? When do we take into account our consumption of tea, coffee, tobacco and rice, and think that the Japanese and Chinese, that the Southern States and South American republics have revenue from and toll for us? Who has estimated the fact that England supplies us with biscuits, with preserves, with pickles, and sauces and mustard? Who is able to understand why France sends us peas, mushrooms, capers, sardines, olives, etc., etc., or why Germany furnishes this far-off land with fruit, preserved beyond our native or national enterprise and skill; or why olive oil from Palestine, Spain or Italy should be in so many of our homes? Then you can see in the same store fish from Newfoundland, from England, from Denmark, from the coast of eastern Maine to the waters of Alaska, Oregon, Washington and California; and if meats are our desire, many States furnish their quota and some reaches here from beyond the sea, as does cheese, such as Roquefort, Dutch, pineapple and others all familiar, in our city at least. Not only are we indebted for these edible products, but glassware, china, crockery, mirrors and bric-a-brac are of German, French, Austrian, English, Japan and Chinese origin, as our salesrooms prove to limited observation, to say nothing of ten thousand articles of hardware, iron, tin, copper, wood, not alone such as barrows, step-ladders, etc., but more complicated machines, and plows, harrows, tools of every kind that are of continuous use!

It is amazing how dependent or interdependent we are, shall we say, and surprise is so complete that we ask if this is due to local apathy, or is it the result of an instinct, a foreshadowing of irrepressible and necessary intercourse, for reasons which rest in the bosom of the Great Ruler and Arbitrer of nations as of men? Nor would such a conclusion be altogether unphilosophic from a human standpoint, so long as we provide the medium of exchange, whether that be wheat, wool, fruit, silver, copper, coal or other product laid in these mountains or grown in these prolific valleys and desirable elsewhere. From our special standpoint as a community culled from the nations for missionary effort, for a new social order, as holding the oracles and the Priesthood, and destined "to be as a city set on a hill," there are doubtless reasons for all the counsel which has been given. If the overthrow of Babylon is imminent, if we have been gathered for a special salvation, if we are intended under a "thus saith the Lord" to "come out and be ye separate," there comes a different phase over the whole matter, and upon the conclusions as to this, rests the future policy of this famed and multiplying people! How far shall isolation be pushed; shall social economy determine this, or shall we wait events evolved by the Master mind? After all, if a community could by any pressure become absolutely self-sustaining, would not that indomitable industry create a surplus, and would not the outside world be justified in relating that arrogant superiority save on the basis of mutual exchange? Non-intercourse has its limits; the genius of this age would brush away obstruction as did British rule when opium was the demand of the Chinese, although the governing classes of both countries deprecated the moral issues which were interwoven into the question! There can be no objection to legitimate effort for the prosperity of our co-religionists, and wilfully blind stupidity only fails to see as a virtue in this mountain community, the universal practice of all religious, social and political organization.

Self-preservation says, "Stand by each other;" common sense says "Prefer your friends;" religious sympathy says, "Do good unto all men, but especially to those of the household of faith;" the counsel of our best men is, "Create what you need as far as possible;" "Limit your desires to your own resources;" pay your debts honorably, and avoid new ones if you can;" "be true to yourselves, your cause and God," and make the "brotherhood of man" an actual fact in life's routine, reaching out to the strangers when those near by are well provided for; and so shall come union, strength, stability and that power which will eventually circumscribe the world. But amalgamation—in all things—is foreign to the genius of the Gospel and the intent of its professor.

MORMONS AT ABINGDON.

A few days ago the NEWS had an account of some of the experiences of Elders J. D. Owen and A. J. Seare, of this city, at Abingdon, England, where the Elders were well received by most of the people notwithstanding considerable opposition which they had to contend with. The efforts of certain sectarian ministers who had sought to have the Elders driven out by inciting the people to violence had not been successful, as the people refused to give heed to the false and wicked assertions against the Latter-day Saints. Particulars of more recent occurrences than those above related have been received in a private letter from Elder Nephi L. Morris, of the Fifteenth ward of this city. Elder Morris is president of the London conference of the British mission, in which Abingdon is included. He refers to the events heretofore recited, and then gives the following account of some of the additional efforts of some of the ministers to get rid of the missionaries:

"Certain reverends of the town openly protested against the Elders teaching baptism as necessary to obtain salvation and made other trifling objections, but to no avail; the sympathy of the town was with the Mormons. So to meet a great end great means were employed, and one Charles, alias James Shailor—a disciple of Jarman, was sent for, and London was relieved of his odious presence for a short time. For a week it was advertised that he would be at Abingdon to 'expose the crimes and murders of the Mormons,' and he is credited with the remark that in fifteen minutes after he had spoken the Mormons would be driven out of town.

"According to the Elders' desire I went down to Abingdon. On the Saturday evening preceding the Sunday upon which Mr. Shailor was to appear, we held a splendid meeting on the Market Place.

"At 2:30 Sunday afternoon, according to advertisement, our opponent showed up with a confederate who held up a horrid picture of a half nude woman stretched upon a table, with a 'Mormon priest' standing at her head with drawn saber about to behead her, and the husband and children of the 'Mormon woman' witnessing, in a most unconcerned manner, the awful deed. Mr. Shailor spoke for a few minutes to a throng of at least 2,000 townspeople, but was somewhat confused by questions and jeerings from the crowd. Soon scraps of orange peel, rotten bananas and other offensive articles began to patter upon him and his companion and their canvas above them.

"At this point the throng would listen no longer and began to sway from side to side and with an awful force rushed in upon Shailor, who was in a most uncomfortable manner carried down the street by the crowd, and barely escaped personal injury by quickly entering the Temperance hotel. The disorderly and disgusted crowd returned to the market place and called for us to speak, but desiring to quell the confusion we announced a meeting for the evening and withdrew. In the evening it rained slightly, but beneath the town hall we held forth to at least a thousand interested listeners. We had only spoken about forty minutes when the police made the request that we close at 8 p. m., so we complied, and while St. Nicholas's clock rung 8 we dismissed. The next two evenings we held large but very orderly meetings. The excitement, however, seemed to intensify until the whole town had lost its equanimity.

"Mr. Shailor appeared on the streets on Wednesday evening, just in front of the door through which he found safety after his first attempt. A large audience listened to his awful harangue for over a half-hour, though he was frequently interrupted and thereby greatly irritated. As he was announcing a meeting for 'adults only' on the following night in the Temperance hall, and was concluding his address, some rude fellow from behind gave him a shove and sent him sprawling to the ground. Confusion followed. The crowd rushed upon him but he scrambled into the door and found refuge.

"The next morning we were officially requested to assist the officers in maintaining the peace by holding no more outdoor meetings. The move was taken to prevent Mr. Shailor from being the author of any more confusion as our meetings always had been orderly. We of course complied, and instead of preaching on the streets we engaged the Corn Exchange, a large and spacious public building with a seating capacity of about 800. A printer in the town very kindly run us off nearly a thousand hand bills gratis, announcing our meeting of Friday and Sunday evenings. We distributed them and when Friday evening came the hall was prepared and about 700 people were comfortably assembled to hear the other side of the 'Mormon' crimes and murders.' When the three 'boys' (for such we were called and are) stepped upon the stage a round of applause greeted us. The audience frequently expressed approval of the refutations of Shailor's infamous and untruthful allegations. During the lecture evidences were given of the character of the Mormon people, taken almost exclusively from the disinterested opinions of Englishmen who had visited Utah.

"On Saturday we went out to a neighboring settlement and tracting it announced that we would hold an open air meeting on the green on the Sunday afternoon. While there we caught a glimpse of Shailor, who was there with some relative. According to arrangements we went over to Swinton, accompanied by about a score of Abingdonians. Just before we arrived Shailor dismissed a meeting at which he had filled his crowd with anti-Mormon ideas and Jarman's stories. Many of them were intoxicated as well. We felt that there was a splendid reception awaiting us but went ahead. For fully three quarters of an hour we laid down the first principles of the Gospel. While the second speaker was addressing the crowd, Shailor commenced to hold forth on the margin of the audience, so we closed, and began to hand a few tracts around.

"The scene then became one of pandemonium, with Shailor stirring up the crowd by accusing us of being murderers, cut throats and every other thing vile and low. We were jeered at and suggestions were made to put us in the ditch, etc. Nobody would listen to us or reason, so we remained quiet and gave ear to our very gentlemanly opponent for some time. A few respectable folks were disappointed at our meeting being broken into, but the majority seemed to be in their element. Finally I got their attention and asked whose testimony they would accept in regard to our people, that of such men as James Barclay, M. P., Burton, captain in the British army, Paul Robinson and Thos. Cathing, prominent journalists of London, all of whom had been to Utah and lived among the Mormons and wrote disinterestedly upon the subject, or that of Shailor, who had never been off English soil. A reply came, 'we'll believe him that ain't been there!' and the crowd seemed to acquiesce. At this we retired.

"In the evening we held a splendid meeting in Abingdon, and had about 400 attentive auditors. Many of those present assisted us in paying for the rent of the hall and a splendid feeling prevailed. The opposition with which the Lord enabled us to cope so successfully here has verified the saying of Paul, 'for we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.' Shailor has widely advertised 'Mormonism,' even more so than Elders can generally do, and where the other side of the question is listened to more good than harm is done. While I do not deem it politic to spend much time with such characters yet there are times when it seems to be necessary in our defense of truth. Much good has been done here and the outlook is very encouraging that some few may be brought into the Gospel light.

"Quite encouraging reports came from all of the districts in the conference and an improvement is apparent in regard to the general feeling toward our people of late."

DIED IN PROVO.

John Strong, an old and highly respected resident of Utah county, died Friday at 1 o'clock p. m. He had been suffering for some months past from Bright's disease of the kidneys, and this was the cause of his death. Brother Strong was a man about 60 years of age, genial and kind to all with whom he was brought in contact. He leaves a wife and a large number of children, two of whom are married, to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband and father.

OBITUARY NOTES

JOHN S. HANSEN.

MAYFIELD, Utah, May 1, 1894.—I am requested to send you notice of the death of John S. Hansen, a respected young man of this place. Brother Hansen is the son of Simon and Martha M. Hansen. He was born at Gunnison, Sanpete county, December 28, 1869, and died at Mayfield at his mother's residence, May 1, 1894, it is supposed, from spinal and heart disease. Brother Simon Hansen, the father of the deceased, is now living in New Mexico. It will be a hard blow to him when he hears of his boy's death. The young man suffered very much, but bore up under the pain manfully.

His funeral service took place May 3. The meeting house was filled to overflowing—a good proof of the esteem he was held in by the community. The speakers were Bishop C. A. Madsen of Gunnison, Bishop N. C. Christensen of Sterling, ex-Bishop O. C. Olsen and Bishop Parley Christensen of Mayfield. Their remarks were timely and suitable for the comfort of the bereaved. The deceased leaves a mother and a sister here in Mayfield to mourn his loss, who have the sympathy of the whole community. JOSEPH CHRISTIANSEN.

MARGARET CRAWSHAW.

BRIGHAM CITY, May 11, 1894.—Died in Brigham City, Wednesday, May 9, of old age, Sister Margaret Crawshaw. At about 5 o'clock in the morning, when her son William, who was her only attendant, arose, he found her in bed lifeless.

Sister Crawshaw was well known to the early missionaries in England, and always kept open house for the Elders traveling in that country. Her husband Levi and herself were baptized in the Tottington branch of the Manchester conference in 1841, and emigrated to America in 1867, coming to Brigham City in 1871. Her husband died in 1884. She was a very unassuming woman and a firm believer in the Gospel as taught by this people. The latter part of her days was spent almost entirely in her own habitation with her son William, who has been constantly with her since the death of his father. She was 84 years of age, was the mother of fourteen children, but only two—William and Robert, of Wellsville—are her only relatives in Utah.

THE DEAD.

Peaceful be their Rest.

SWIFT.—At the residence of her daughter, Jane E. Van Tassel, in Woodland, Wasatch county, on April 27, 1894, of general debility. Ann Swift, formerly of South Africa, aged 74 years, 3 months and 21 days.

DOWNES.—On March 2nd, at Manchester, England, Ann Downes, daughter of Samuel and Betsy Downes, and only sister of Mrs. Frederick Langton, of the Twenty-second ward in this city; aged 46 years.

MYERS.—At Alpine, Tuesday morning, May 8th, 1894, of diphtheria, Mary Ann Whiting Myers, wife of George Y. Myers, age 34.

Also Belle Myers, Thursday evening, at 6:30 of the same disease, age 12 years and 3 months.

Another child, name Grace, died Friday morning, May 11th, aged 8 years and 2 months. All were of one family—mother and two children. The father and seven children are left.

Some of those are very sick.

NATTRESS.—In this city, May 11, 1894, of old age, Joseph Nattress. He was born at Westgate, Durham, England, April 28th, 1814, where he embraced the Gospel. He came to Utah in 1860.

THE LINKING OF GENERATIONS BY THE LAW OF ADOPTION—EQUAL- ITY IN TEMPORAL AFFAIRS AND HOW TO ATTAIN IT.

Discourse Delivered at the General Conference of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, April 8, 1894, by

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

This is an immense congregation, and in order to edify those assembled it will require the presence and assistance of the Spirit of God. It would seem presumptuous for any man to arise to address such an audience of intelligent human beings if he were depending upon himself for that which he should say. I sincerely trust that in the remarks I shall make I may be assisted by the faith and prayers of those who are present.

I look upon this as one of the most interesting conferences that has been held for a long time. It must be gratifying to the Latter-day Saints to receive, as they do, the continued evidences that God is with the people, that He has not forgotten His promises, and that He has the oversight of the affairs of His Church, and regulates and conducts those affairs according to the counsel of His own will. I never attend a meeting where the Spirit of God is manifested in power without feeling profoundly grateful in the reflection that God is with us, and that He condescends to honor us and to testify to the people by giving His Holy Spirit. This, also, brethren and sisters, is a consolation and a comfort that no human tongue can describe: to know by testimony from the Lord that we are in the path that He has marked out for our salvation; to know that we have a standing among the people whom He acknowledges to be His, and that through His condescension we have the communion of the Holy Spirit. It is a consolation to know, when light is needed, when questions arise which require more than human wisdom for their solution, that we have access unto our Great Creator, and that through the spirit of revelation which He has promised to bestow, we can know and understand for ourselves. What mighty importance attaches to that which was explained to us this morning by President Woodruff! How wide-spread and far-reaching is the ordinance to which allusion was made, by which children will be sealed to their parents, one generation connected with another, and the whole human family be brought within the family of God, to be His recognized and acknowledged sons and daughters, bound together by the power of the everlasting Priesthood and in the new and everlasting covenant which He has given to man. What a glorious system of salvation spreads out before us in the contemplation of that which the Lord has revealed! What a feeling of tenderness and love wells up in our hearts in thinking that we are the children of God, and that we are and shall be bound together by ties that never can be broken! How this draws us together and makes us feel interested in one another! How it causes our souls to expand as wide as eternity; not confining our hopes and our labors to any individual, or to any one family, but embracing in our feelings the entire brotherhood of man.

Certainly the Latter-day Saints should be the most thankful of any people upon the face of the earth. You travel throughout the earth and ask the wisest and the most learned what object our Creator had in placing man on the earth, in surrounding him with the circumstances with which he is environed, and what He has in view for him in the future, and who could answer you? I know that religious denominations have their explanations concerning the future; but how unsatisfactory they are! How little there is in them to comfort and cheer, to create hopes and anticipations that are bright! Even the Indian, when he talks about his happy hunting grounds, probably expresses a more cheerful view. In the sectarian world there is vagueness. In the pictures they present as to the future life there is nothing that is really satisfactory. Very few of them believe that these ties which make our human lives so delightful will be perpetuated in the eternity to come. The great majority believe that husbands and wives, parents and children will be nothing to each other in the eternal world; that is, their relations to each other within the family circle will be no more close or definite than their relations to beings without that holy tie. Now, the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ has taught us that ties are formed here which are eternal in their character; that family associations are created that never can be dissolved; that men and women are bound together for eternity; that man is not without the woman, nor the woman without the man, in the Lord; that they have their children; and that the greatest blessing they can enjoy is to have confirmed unto them forever the privileges which they possess in this life. There is something grand in the contemplation of this glorious principle. It gives certainty unto every man and woman who will seek for it. The woman is not lost, the man is not lost. However obscure and insignificant we may be, we cannot be lost sight of. We will be felt after and brought out, unless we have committed unpardonable sins, and somebody will take interest in us. There is no one in the whole family that will be so insignificant as to be forgotten. This creates peculiar feelings in our hearts, and it ought to make the Latter-day Saints a broad and expansive people in their minds, and I have no doubt it will have that effect.

I look for the communication that was made today by our President to have a great effect upon this people. It will stimulate our love for our families. At the same time it will check any feeling of building up anything like tribes among us. It will attach us to our own kindred and race. It will promote the love of race in our hearts, and it will give our children something to live for; for when a man comes of a family that is an honorable family, there is something that appeals to his pride to do nothing that will bring discredit or disgrace upon his name. Our lineage is not known to all of us. We may not know our origin; but this we may be assured of: that we who have received the truth are choice spirits. The Latter-day Saints have shown their integrity, their valor, and their independence of character in the midst of contumely and reproach, of persecution and hatred, and the threatened loss, in many instances, of employment, property and life. They have come out from the world and have been indifferent to its popularity. They have espoused the principles of truth and righteousness, and valued them more than any other earthly consideration. Where do you think this nobility of character has come from? It has come from ancestors who obtained promises from God, through their faithfulness, in regard to their posterity. Our ancestors may have come through poverty and obscure channels; and some of them may not have possessed any noted characteristics; but when our ancestry is known it will be found that the noblest men and women of God have been the progenitors of this people. God has chosen us for a great purpose. He has brought us out of the world, has shaped our lives and the lives of our parents, and has thrown around them His providences, for the purpose of bringing a people forward in the last days that would help lay the foundation of His kingdom and be willing to bear every persecution and trial connected with it. Of this I feel assured. I can testify of it, and know it to be so. As was said this morning, the communication which the Lord has designed to give to us through His servant enables us to see how we can honor the ancestry through which we have come, and also prevent the breaking of the ties that should connect us with them, and avoid confusion and disorder in regard to these matters.

There are many things that the Lord will give us revelations about from time to time. He has done this in a marvelous manner thus far. There has been nothing that we have needed for the progress of the Church that has not been given. We have built these Temples, and we are doing a very important work connected with them; and it is necessary that that which we do should be done aright. It is necessary that adoptions should be correctly made. Think how important this is! It affects the whole human family. How important it is that we should know the plan that the Lord wants carried out, and not the plan that man wants! And there will be many things revealed from time to time. You will see difficulties probably in carrying this out, and it will require the wisdom of heaven and the word of the Lord to settle points connected with it; but the Lord is able to give the necessary light. His hand will be manifest, and we shall see how good and kind He is to us in making communications upon every point that is necessary for the progress of His work.

There are other matters that I would like to mention this afternoon, if I can get the Spirit to do so. We have heard from President Joseph F. Smith a little concerning secret organizations. I do not know any subject that needs to be spoken upon with greater plainness to the Latter-day Saints than this.

Of course, there are many other things that we need to be warned about. We need to be warned about these false spirits that are going abroad. I do not suppose there ever was a time when there were so many delusive spirits going abroad among the people as at the present time—false Christs, false prophets, and all sorts of things to lead away the people of God. Everything, it is said, will be shaken that can be shaken. God is going to have a pure people. Those who commit sin and persist in it, will lose the Spirit of God and be removed from among the people of God. We may expect that sinners will leave us, and that we shall have men and women falling into the dark because of transgression; but it is our duty, as watchmen upon the walls of Zion, and as the shepherds of the flock of Christ, to lift up our voices and warn the people of the dangers there are around them, and to point out the path of safety, that they may not stray away from the flock and be devoured. We therefore feel to warn the Latter-day Saints in regard to these delusive spirits. We warn you to be on your guard, to watch carefully, to pray earnestly, to live in purity, so that you shall have constantly the light of the Spirit of God to be with you. Do not be carried away by every wind of doctrine, nor by deceivers; but listen to the voice of the Spirit of God, which bears testimony to you in your hearts concerning the truths which you hear. You ought to be able to tell the voice of the true Shepherd from all other voices, so that no one assuming sheep's clothing and professing to be what he is not can deceive you. It is your privilege to recognize the voice of the true Shepherd, and to know by the testimony of Jesus whether that which you are taught is true or not.

There are now many societies being formed that make great professions. They claim to be benevolent societies and to do great good to the people. I have not the least objection to this. I would not say one word to cast any reproach upon any organization, by whatever name it may be called, that has objects of this character in view. It is not my purpose to decry them. It is not my purpose to belittle philanthropic efforts by individuals or by societies for the welfare of their fellow creatures. The Lord forbid that I should ever do anything of this kind! It is not in that spirit that I allude to these things. But I want to say to the Latter-day Saints that the Lord has organized a system which is perfect in all its details. There is no need to have it supplemented by anything of man's device. It is that thought which I desire to impress upon the Latter-day Saints. God has founded Zion, and the poor of His people will put their trust in it. There is nothing lacking in this organization. There is no benevolent society that exists, or that can be formed by human beings, that will reach the wants of the children of men as effectively as the organization which the Lord has given to us, and of which we now are a part. I know that there are men who have very plausible and attractive ideas concerning the evils that exist in society and the manner of correcting them. Attempts to correct them have been made for years and years; but they have not resulted successfully. I can state, without the least fear of successful contradiction, that the Latter-day Saints have done more as an organized society towards redeeming the people and correcting the evils that exist in society, and under which society groans, than any other organization on the face of the earth. I make that statement with a full understanding on my part of its meaning and extent. And that which we have done is only the beginning of that which we propose to do in the Lord's good time. The Lord has not left us in ignorance concerning these matters. This doctrine of equality that the anarchists, nihilists, socialists and such people dwell upon (some of them are resorting to the most dreadful violence to carry out their schemes), is understood by us, for the Lord has revealed to us how and to what extent it shall be fulfilled. He has given us the law with a great deal of plainness. But we are not prepared to carry it out. The leaders of the people are doing their best in teaching the people the primary principles of equality; but it will take time, it will take the power of God, it will take circumstances that will almost compel us to adopt that which God has revealed, in order to carry out that which He has laid before us as a duty that we must perform. I want to say to you that the day will come—and it will be brought about by the Latter-day Saints—when there will be such an equality in all things among us that there will be no want, no deficiency of any element necessary for man's happiness, no monopoly; when one man will not have more than he can use and another man be destitute. We are aiming at that, my brethren and sisters, and we are the only people, I am free to say, that can entertain the least hope that they will ever accomplish it. These secret organizations may throw down thrones; they may destroy dynasties; they may cause blood to flow in torrents; but they will never accomplish this reform that we shall achieve, and that, too, by peaceful methods—by the operation of laws which God has made plain, so plain that, as the Bible says, a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein.

The Lord has given enough to the earth to make all its inhabitants happy. There is no element that is not in sufficient abundance for all. And it is contrary to the will of God, so He has revealed to us, that one man shall possess so much above another—one wallow in luxury while his neighbor goes destitute. He has taught us the way by which this shall be corrected. This being the case, shall we turn our eyes from the Zion of God in this or in the other direction, looking for something better? If we do, we despise the wisdom and counsel of God; we throw aside that which He has revealed in the greatest plainness, and we turn our backs upon the history and experience of this people.

Let me say to you that it is in vain for men to endeavor to patch up systems to remedy the existing evils. They have not the wisdom to do it. You can see the condition of the world in consequence of man's wisdom being exercised. On every hand there is confusion, turmoil, strife. There is poverty and misery on one hand and luxury and a superabundance on the other hand. This is not right, and it will be corrected. How? Well, the Lord attempted it in the early days of this Church; but the people did not have faith. He is now schooling us. We shall have faith sooner or later, and we shall be chastened probably till we do it. I do not want to prophesy any evil concerning Zion. I do not want to threaten. I have none of the spirit of gloom about me connected with Zion. I feel to prophesy good always about Zion. But the Lord will bring us through circumstances that will open our eyes, and cause us to see the value of the counsel that He has given to us. We should teach it to our children. We must unlearn the traditions that we have received from our fathers. Those traditions teach us that it is the duty of each one to look out for himself and to care but little for his neighbor. We have got to unlearn that lesson. We have got to live for the benefit of all. But, like all benefactors, in doing so we shall very likely be misjudged. Did you ever see a man that was a benefactor, from the Lord Jesus down, that was not loaded with opprobrium, and misunderstood? Jesus set us the example of self sacrifice. What a life His was! The Redeemer of the world, coming down from the mansions of glory, taking upon himself mortality, living in humility, and doing all that He could for man's redemption; yet He was hung upon the cross, crucified between two thieves! So it has been, to a greater or less extent, with every man that has attempted to benefit his fellow man. He must expect to be misunderstood, to be misrepresented, and to have his motives traduced. He must not expect to have the love of those he is trying to save. He may have a little of it; but men are so ungrateful by nature that they do not recognize their true benefactors. It requires the Spirit of God to enlighten the mind. You Bishops who have labored incessantly; you Presidents of Stakes, you Apostles, and all who have labored among the people, you know by experience that your labors are not appreciated as they ought to be, that your motives are frequently misunderstood and traduced, and you have to labor with the expectation of getting reward from the Lord and with the satisfaction of having the approval of your conscience. So it is in relation to this whole people. We are the benefactors of mankind; but we do not get credit for that which we are doing. We need not expect to get the praise of the world, or even ordinary credit. Nevertheless, the labor devolves upon us. We shall, doubtless, see evidences of selfishness in carrying it out, and advantage will be taken by one and another before this system can be fairly introduced among the children of men.

In these remarks I refer to what is known among us as the United Order. I know that many have thought that this has passed off; that it is a phantasy, an idea that cannot be carried out; that it is impossible, as human nature is constituted, to make it practical. Probably many among us entertain that idea. But I can assure you that this is not the case. It is the plan that God has devised, and I want to hold it up before you if I can, so that you will see it and understand that God has devised a plan that is far superior to that which men have concocted. And it can be and will be carried out. By what means has Satan power today over the hearts of the children of men? It is by the misuse of this world's goods. Would there be any thieving if men did not have property as it is now? Here is what the Lord said sixty years ago:

It is wisdom in me; therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship.

That every man may give an account unto me of his stewardship which is appointed unto him;

For it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures.

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and built the earth as a very handy work, and all things therein are mine:

And it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine;

But it must needs be done in mine own way; and behold this is the way that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints, that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low;

For the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves.

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

He will go with the rich man under whose table Lazarus would pick the crumbs that fell, and whose dogs licked the sores of the poor man. Lazarus went to Abraham's bosom; but the rich man, as this says, lifted up his eyes in torment, being in hell.

In another part of the revelation the Lord says:

And again, a commandment I give unto you concerning your stewardship which I have appointed unto you.

Behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken;

And if the properties are mine, then ye are stewards, otherwise ye are not stewards.

But, verily I say unto you, I have appointed unto you to be stewards over mine house, even stewards indeed;

And all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses, or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy and sacred writings, which I have reserved unto myself for holy and sacred purposes, shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds, or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives;

Or in other words, if any man among you obtain five talents, (dollars,) let him cast them into the treasury; or if he obtain ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise;

And let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it;

And there shall not any part of it be used, or taken out of the treasury, only by the voice and common consent of the order,

And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order; that any man among you say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help men in my stewardship;

If it be five talents, (dollars,) or, if it be ten talents, (dollars,) or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship,

Until he be found a transgressor, and it is manifest before the council of the order plainly that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward;

But so long as he is in full fellowship, and is faithful, and wise in his stewardship, this shall be his token unto the treasurer, that the treasurer shall not withhold.

This is the plan that the Lord has devised. Will this be abused? Some men say, "Yes; the men that are wise and prudent, and good managers will work for the rest, and the idle man and the poor manager will derive the benefit." That is the argument used. But the Lord who has devised this plan will be able to provide means to carry it out successfully. On what principle can you make men equal in earthly things, in order that they may be equal in heavenly things, unless it is upon some such principle as this? Here are men who have labored their entire life for the benefit of this people. Are they any poorer for it? Here is the oldest man among us, the people's leader, the longest in the service of God—Wilford Woodruff—who for years and years worked in his Apostleship and never drew a dollar to support himself or his family. Here is Lorenzo Snow, eighty years of age, who did likewise. Ask these two veterans in the cause of God if they have not worked incessantly and without thought about themselves for the work of God, supporting their families as best they could; and ask them if God has not blessed them abundantly for all they have done. Do they begrudge the labor they have bestowed upon this people? And when I allude to them I also allude to their predecessors, from Joseph down, who labored night and day, in season and out of season, for the benefit of the people. Have they lost anything by it? No, they have not. God has been with them, and has rewarded them. So it will be whenever we carry out this Order. There will be men, doubtless, that will labor harder and to greater profit than others; but God will reward them, because they are carrying out His purposes and seeking to elevate their fellow beings, laboring with an eye single to the glory of God and the salvation of the human family.

I do not know that you understand how this will be done. Suppose that we have our stewardships appointed to us, each according to his family. That was the order. Edward Partridge as the Bishop of the Church, was instructed in very early days to assign to the people property, each according to his family. Now, a man takes his stewardship. He has his land, his cattle, his horses, or whatever his vocation requires. It is assigned to him. He manages it, and makes a profit on it. Is that profit his? No; that goes into the treasury, for the benefit of others who may need. But suppose he is a wise steward. He manages his affairs in a way to bring profit. He wants more capital. When this is brought before the council of the Order, and it is allowed to him, if the circumstances are such as to admit of it, he makes increase with that also. But he does not build himself up. He does not take all the profit of that business and consume it upon his own family. He does not take it and build fine houses, or spend it on horses and carriages, or on elaborate furnishings. He does not do this, only so far as will be compatible with the general weal. All will be built up together. But will all, under these circumstances, have the same? If this Order were established, would every man have the same sized house, the same sized garden or field, the same number of fruit trees, or the same number of cows? Why, no. That is not the equality that the Lord means. The Lord will give to us according to our circumstances and our wants. Some families will be larger than others. Some men will need more cows than others. Some men's business will require more horses than other men's business will. In this way there will be differences. Then there will also be diversified circumstances. Every man will have the opportunity of exercising all his talents. There will be no restriction. He will have the opportunity for the exercise of the most commanding talents. The field will be before him, and he will have means to carry out His purposes and plans, if they be wise and such as his brethren will think prudent and judicious. Thus the poor will have their wants supplied, and there will be no want in the land. The equality which the Lord teaches us to look for is this:

And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, or the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just;

And all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talents, that every man may gain other talents, yea, even an hundred fold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church.

So that each man in his stewardship will not be laboring for himself; he will be laboring for the whole, every man and woman being looked after, having a common interest, through inheritance, from our Great Creator, who created this earth for us. He did not create it for a few, not for a class, not for an aristocracy, not for monopolists; but for every one of us, each of us having an equal claim on the elements, and all laboring for the whole human family. Every want supplied, every proper desire of the heart gratified, until misery will flee from the face of this fair earth, until want will be unknown, until the cry of the widow and the fatherless and the distressed will not be heard in the land. The heavens will not be pierced with the cries of suffering humanity, and neither man nor beast will be destitute of that which is good for him. This is the plan which God has devised. It may require what many trained as we have been under the old and existing conditions may look upon as sacrifices to bring it about; but it will come; for God has devised it, and it is the only plan by which we can ever get into the celestial kingdom and become joint heirs with Jesus Christ. He has set us the example of deserting all things in the heavens, leaving His power and high estate to come down here and suffer for his brethren and sisters. We must look to Him and follow him.

The lesson that I would like to impress upon our hearts—for in speaking to you I speak to myself—is, let us teach our children these principles; let us teach them that they are in the earth, not to labor for their own gratification, and to accumulate wealth for themselves, but to benefit humanity, to be a blessing to their race, to fill the earth as far as they can with gladness by their presence, that we may raise an unselfish race of men, men that will have higher aspirations and aims than the mere gratification of their personal wants, passions and appetites. Teach the children self-denial. It is a thing that is much needed among us. Brethren and sisters, I want to say to you that as sure as God lives this Order will be brought about; and it will be with us as it was with the children of Israel who came out of Egypt—if we do not do it we will be removed, and a generation will be raised up that will do it; for God is going to carry out His purposes, and no power can prevent it. Remember the condition of the children of Israel and what befel them. Their carcasses fell by the roadside in the wilderness, because they would not come up to the standard that God had revealed. They not only perished, but the Melchisedek Priesthood was taken from their midst, and everyone over twenty years of age that came out of Egypt, except two, of all the hosts of Israel, laid down his life in the wilderness. We do not want to be in this condition. We want to live, and our children to live, and to be the heirs of all the ages. We want to lay the foundation of this great work in this manner; for it is the great reform that cries aloud to be carried out among mankind at the present time.

Our circumstances at present do not admit of our entering upon these things. There are many changes that will have to occur in order to make that which I have said unto you practical. Laws perhaps will have to be changed, because they might interfere with this now; and it might not be wisdom for us under the present circumstances. I do not speak of this because I think it ought to be carried out immediately. I do not want you to go away from this Conference with the idea that I, as one of the First Presidency, am giving counsel to you to carry out the United Order. What I have desired to do is to draw your attention to the fact that God has revealed a plan, and that you need not go after every will-o'-the-wisp, every false guide, every deceptive light that may appear, and think, "Oh! if I join this, we shall have the millennium right off." I speak on this to warn you; to put you on your guard; to show you that the Lord's plan is broad enough to cover the whole subject and to furnish all the relief that could ever be desired by human beings. I trust that we will be a stable people. We have the credit in the world for being united; and I would say to you, do not act unwisely and foolishly. When you hear any new doctrines, political as well as religious, do not be deluded by them and run after them; but maintain your steadfastness. You have divided on party lines. Do not split up into fragments because you have done this. Do not think you are manifesting your independence by cutting loose from everything; but be a stable and a conservative people, and act up to your convictions. Maintain the influence that God has given you, and by your wise course cause it to increase in the land, so that men from all parts of our nation will look towards this community and say, "There in the Rocky mountains the Mormon people live; they are a reliable people; they mind their own business, pay their debts, are punctual in their engagements, are an honest people, are not all the time running after office, but are content to maintain good government." Let us get a character of this kind. We have it to some extent, and let us maintain it. I want to say that whenever you see men aspiring for office and planning to get office, do not encourage them. Let the office seek the man, and let us not be plotting and resorting to all sorts of dodges to secure success to our party, in order that some of us may get into office. Such arts are despicable. They are the arts of the low politician. We want to stand on a higher plane, and look at these things as men who have been enlightened by the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and try to maintain our credit; for I say to you, that the people in Washington or in Kane County in the south, or in Cache or Rich County in the north, or anywhere else in the territory, cannot be guilty of folly without its reflecting on the entire people of God. We are a part of a great whole in that respect; and the Saints in Idaho or Arizona can do foolish things and entail a great deal of trouble upon the Church in this country because of their want of wisdom. Therefore, be wise. Why do I say this? If you get into trouble, to whom do you come? You know how it has been in our troubles that commenced nine years ago. We looked all around and where could we see friends? To whom could we appeal? Why, the eyes of this people turned to the men who were their leaders, who had planted these settlements in these mountains, and who had made everything successful that they had put their hands to. The people appealed to them to know what they should do. So it will be always when there is trouble. Therefore, it is the duty of leading men to counsel the people in wisdom—not to take away the people's agency—to avoid snares and to pursue a course that will avert trouble, so that we will not have burdens to bear. I do not say this because of any desire to interfere in the least with political matters, but to give you a little counsel on these points.

I pray God to bless you and to fill you with His Holy Spirit, and to help you to remember the excellent instructions you have heard during this Conference, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ON THE WEARY MARCH.

On the 3rd of September, 1846, Lieutenant A. J. Smith, who had been accepted by our officers to act as colonel pro tem in place of Colonel Allen, deceased, began to show his sympathy for the sick by ordering them out of the wagons. He swore if they did not walk he would tie them to the wagons and drag them unless they attended sick call and took medicine. This the sick did not like to do and had refused because the doctor was known to be a bitter enemy to the Mormons, and had been heard to say he did not care a d—n whether he killed or cured; but the lieutenant was told in a way not to be misunderstood that before the men would take the poison stuff they would leave their bones to bleach on the prairies. Lieutenant Smith was not a Mormon. He belonged, however, to the regular army and the honor to lead the Battalion was conferred on him simply because he was a West Pointer. The right of command belonged to Captain Hunt, of Company A.

The weather for some time back had been extremely dry and warm, drying up the creeks and streams so that water was scarce and very poor. Many of the men were taken sick with chills and fever and almost famished for want of water to quench their raging thirst.

One night the camp was aroused by the cry: "See that star, how it moves!" I heard Captain Davis, of company C, exclaim, "See! see! I declare it does move!" At this I got up and went out of the tent to see the wonder. I looked but saw nothing of the kind described, while a number declared that a star in the east did move up and down and sideways, and in all directions. That very evening one of our brethren died; it was believed his death was caused by taking Doctor Sanderson's medicine. This was at the crossing of the Arkansas river.

The country was alive with all kinds of wild animals. The grass was eaten off so close that I thought a sheep could not get a living, and yet the buffalo we killed were in good order. Some days we could see at one sight 500 to 1,000 buffaloes feeding in big and little herds in all directions; and the day we left the Arkansas two came running near our lines when a volley of musketry was discharged at them breaking the leg of one. The other made good his escape without a hole in his robe for aught I know. That day and the day following the men suffered with thirst, gave out by the way side, and had to be hauled to camp in wagons.

On the Cimmaron we had to dig for water and when obtained it was so brackish that man and beast scarcely could drink it. For ten days we did not see timber and our fuel for camp use was "buffalo chips." We passed one place where we counted the skull bones of 81 mules said to have perished a year before during an equinoctial storm. Our guide said there were 160 mules perished and most of the men with them.

On arriving in Santa Fe Colonel Cooke, by order of General Kearney, took command of the Mormon Battalion. A detachment under Captain Brown of Company C, with all the sick and infirm, was sent from Santa Fe to winter at the Pueblo on the Arkansas. In that detachment I had a dear sister and brother-in-law. I felt lonesome after they left and missed their company very much. They left Santa Fe on the 18th of October, and the next day at noon Colonel Cooke took up the line of march for Saint Francisco, California, as it was called then, and understood to be our place of destination.

To escape the deep snows in the Rocky Mountains our road went now south down the Rio Del Norte for 800 miles, thence west to the Pacific coast. Soon after leaving Santa Fe we were placed on three-quarter rations. Afterwards we were reduced to one-half and subsequently to one-quarter rations.

While marching down the Rio Del Norte we passed a great many Mexican towns and villages, and every night our camps were visited by the Mexicans, who brought to camp wood, corn, beans, meal, apples, grapes, wine, whisky, goat milk, goat cheese, onions (the finest I ever saw), tobacco and molasses, to barter for old clothes, old boots and shoes, brass buttons, pocket looking-glasses and combs, old shirts and pants. They seemed to prefer such articles to money, and well they did, for it gave us a chance to treat ourselves to some of the luxuries of the country as well as to increase our scanty stock of provisions. We saw large flocks of sheep and goats, herded by Mexicans dressed in leather with blankets around their shoulders. The Mexicans had bows and arrows and dogs. Some of the shepherds carried a long staff with a sharp point. To me it all looked novel. In the evenings after going into camp some of the messes organized themselves into a debating club to gain information on different subjects brought before the school, and discussed pro and con. The fact is the boys felt well then, although living on less than half rations. The standard dish in camp was soup made from the jelly-like flesh of extremely poor, given-out cattle that could not keep up with the command. We only regret that we did not have full rations even of that. I remember that while marching through the province of Chihuahua we met a party of Mexicans who had been out trading with Indians. The messes brought dried meat, but owing to it being so fat and oily, it was believed to be horse flesh; but let that be as it may, I thought it was the best meat I had ever eaten. On the 16th of November we camped at a place where William Garner, one of my messmates, said there were indications of gold, and I understood that Lieutenant Stoneman said the precious stuff he believed was there. Near camp one of our men found a lot of antelope and deer skins stored away in the rocks. They probably belonged to Indians. H. W. BIGLER.

SANPETE STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Sanpete Stake convened in the Manti tabernacle on the 11th of May, 1894, according to appointment. There were present of the Council of the Apostles, Elder F. M. Lyman; of the Stake presidency, Elders Canute Peterson, Henry Beal and John B. Maiben; the High Council was well represented, presidency of High Priests' quorum, Bishops of wards, a very large gathering of the Saints.

Meeting opened at 10 a. m. by singing and prayer, after which the following-named Bishops reported their several wards: W. T. Ried of Manti North ward; L. S. Anderson, Ephraim North ward; Peterson, Indianola ward; John Bartholomew, Fayette ward; Stewart, Millburn ward, all of whom made exceptionally good reports.

Elder Henry Beal of the Stake presidency, commended the Saints for the attendance on the conference, gave report of the condition of the Stake as good, also commended the Bishops for good reports made by them—from his observations during his labors among the Saints believed they were true.

Elder F. M. Lyman instructed the Saints upon the requirements of attending fast meetings and remembering their fast offerings for the support of the poor, that being a duty enjoined of the Lord upon the Saints; also that it is the duty of the Bishops to direct the labors of resident Priesthood in their wards.

2 p. m. Meeting opened as usual. Remarks were made by President Canute Peterson and Elder J. B. Maiben; statistical and Sunday school reports were read, the names of sixteen Elders and Seventies were presented and sustained by the conference to be ordained High Priests.

Elder Maiben presented the general and Stake authorities, all being sustained by unanimous vote.

Elder Lyman spoke against the practice some of the young people indulge in of leaving meeting during service; gave instructions as to what reports would hereafter be necessary to be presented to the quarterly conferences—Sunday schools, Relief Societies, Improvement associations will hereafter hold their several conferences and there will be the proper place to report; advised the settling of difficulties as quietly as possible among the parties directly interested.

Elder George Christenson, Stake superintendent of Sunday schools, gave notice of Sunday school conference to be held in Ephraim June 2nd and 3rd, 1894; Sunday school jubilee, Gunnison, June 7; Mount Pleasant, June 21, and Moroni, June 22.

Sunday, 10 a. m.—Elders McAllister addressed the Saints upon the several labors necessary to be performed for the dead, with very good suggestions on rules of conduct necessary to be observed by the living.

Elder Lyman explained the cause of the absence of Presidents Woodruff and Smith, also the duties and obligations the Saints are under to each other. A very pleasing incident of this meeting was the juvenile choir of 78 children under the very efficient management and leadership of Prof. Smyth.

2 p. m. Opened as usual. Sacrament prepared and administered by the two bishoprics of Manti.

Elder Lyman said he desired to see a uniformity in the administration of the Sacrament and gave instructions in relation thereto, also in blessing the sick. The law of the land having forbidden the practice of plural marriage, the Lord has instructed the Saints to yield to the law, but those having plural families are to provide as well as they are able to without discrimination. Men holding the Holy Priesthood in their conduct should be exemplary, should not allow themselves to join secret societies, as there is in the Church all we need; we should not go back to Babylon as these societies have nothing in common with Church discipline; when men accept office under the government they have to take an oath to support the government, which is right and proper. He spoke against card-playing and gambling; round dances are to be condemned; advised against going in debt and to get out of debt as soon as possible. Quoted President Woodruff as saying that at the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple the keys were turned that would open the floodgates of troubles and calamities upon the earth.

The name of Charles R. Davies for Bishop of the Ephraim South ward was presented and sustained; also George Taylor for alternate High Counselor; both were set apart by Elder F. M. Lyman assisted by the presidency of the Stake.

After singing, benediction by President C. Peterson; and conference adjourned for three months to meet in Mount Pleasant.

GEORGE TAYLOR,
Clerk of Conference.

PRESENTATION TO THE TEMPLE.

The following, which was handed to the gentleman addressed at the time the furniture was delivered, is self-explanatory:

Lorenzo Snow, President of Salt Lake Temple:

Dear Brother—In behalf of the ladies of Davis county, and as a token of our esteem for this sacred edifice, we present a set of furniture and the portrait of Mrs. Aurelia Spencer Rogers, the founder of the Primary associations. The first organization was effected at Farmington, August 11th, 1874.

The furniture was designed by Utah ladies and was made by Utah workmen. On the wood is carved the "Sego Lily," the floral emblem of the Territory; and on the silk the native sagebrush is represented. The total cost of the furniture is $500.

The cost of the picture is $67.

These were Davis county exhibits at the World's Fair.

MRS. LUCY A. CLARK,
MRS. JANE HOLT,
MRS. ATHALIA M. STEED,
MRS. ADA WILLIAMS,
Presentation Committee.

The handsome suite, which comprises six pieces, is home production in the most complete sense, both as to materials (including the silk used in upholstering) and workmanship. This furniture has been given place in the principal room in the Temple. The picture presented at the same time has the portrait of Mrs. Aurelia Spencer Rogers, surrounded by a bordering of the likenesses of a large number of the primary association students of Davis Stake, all beautifully and skillfully colored.

A coal famine has been precipitated in Boise City. There are several cars of coal at Nampa for local dealers, but the condition of the Union Pacific bridge makes it impossible to get them over.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

FARMERS, SAVE YOUR CROPS!

The people of Utah were never addicted, and are not now, to rejoicing over another's misfortune. That most odious form of selfishness which sees in another's need an opportunity for personal gain and aggrandizement has ever been as foreign to the people living in Utah's valleys as it is to the religion which brought most of them here. They have rejoiced in the welfare of their neighbors to right and left, and would be glad at any time to know that prosperity was the portion of the whole human family, and that peace and plenty brooded calmly over the entire earth.

And yet since there are varying seasons of abundance and famine, of health and plague, of prosperity and distress, it behooves us, as a community, as it does every rational individual, to acquaint ourselves with the conditions around us, so that we may intelligently consider how far and in which direction we may most effectively contribute of any probable surplus toward the relieving of any imminent deficiency. This duty relates not only to ourselves, as governing our own action in its aspects of thrift and profit, but to those with whom we may thus deal, as an assurance of what and how much they may expect from us and on what terms.

Now, the grain, fruit, forage and vegetable crop prospects in Utah are most flattering. The season has been propitious. Kindly rains have made every growing thing look promising, much snow held back in the mountains guarantees sufficient water to supply the absence of the later storms, and a large acreage of agricultural land has been brought under the plow. Happily, the recent low prices of farm products have not deterred our landowners from essaying once more the making of a living from the soil; and so far as concerns food in plenty for man and beast, there is every assurance of well-filled granaries, cellars and barns.

From California, on the other hand, come dismal reports of parched fields—a prospect of heavy shortage in wheat, necessitating importation, and in hay, requiring purchases from abroad or the sacrifice of stock. And already, in sagacious regard for this condition, agents of the western railroad have been seeking information in various Utah counties as to the amount of these necessities that can be spared for the Golden state. They want to buy our surplus, and anticipate no difficulty in finding an active market for all we can supply.

Circumstances promising so favorable a change in the returns for labor expended in agricultural pursuits ought not to be overlooked or forgotten by the farmers of this Territory. Those who make it part of their business to subscribe for and read a reliable newspaper will hardly need any warning from us against trading off prematurely and without adequate compensation their prospective crops. The path of business wisdom and foresight lies in holding on for the present to all they have or expect to have for their season's work. There is likely to be a strong demand for all not needed for home consumption, and with demand will come of course better prices. As it is, the hard times have affected the thrifty farmer less than any other class in the community; the prospect now is that his line of business is likely to experience a genuine boom.

GOD IN ALL.

In his account of the fire by which the big Brooklyn tabernacle was destroyed on May 18, Dr. DeWitt Talmage is quoted as saying among other things:

Personally, I feel not the least item of disheartenment nor less faith in God, nor less hope for the future. This long procession of disasters is inexplicable—like what occurs in a family, four or five dying from scarlet fever. We must simply accept the fact. Our tabernacle has been burned three times and it has always been burned on a Sunday. It is a mystery which I adjourn until the next world shall let us know. It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth good in His sight.

Commenting on the last statement a contemporary takes occasion to say that the Lord is not concerned in such affairs; when children die from scarlet fever it is because men have neglected the sanitary arrangements, for which the Almighty is not to blame; and so the burning of the tabernacle was the natural result of imperfect construction or the work of an incendiary. "The Lord does not go around burning churches on the Sabbath day."

The question here raised is one of much interest, involving as it does the true relation of the Almighty to His children on earth, as shown in His providence. It must be admitted that there has been in the religious world too much tendency manifested to ascribe everything to the Lord, giving but little room for the exercise of the free agency of man. Thus calamities have often come as the immediate result of the violation of natural laws either through wilful disobedience or ignorance; for which man himself is responsible. But this is not all there is to it. It would indeed be sad to have to think that human beings were left entirely to their own sagacity or to chance to find a way through a world, so full of seemingly unfathomable mysteries, so dangerously stormy, so impossible to control by mere human force. Had man no better theology than that he would be doomed to wander about in a labyrinth without the guiding thread of an Ariadne to lead him out to light, freedom and happiness.

Holy writ and human experience concur in the testimony that there is a Divine providence overruling in a general way all the affairs of the universe, great and small. Bible writers are unanimous in representing God as the originator and the sustainer of creation. He formed the world in the beginning, and His work is continued from age to age. In the same way God is seen in history. The sacred writers view the revolutions among nations, no less than the progress of kingdoms and republics, as part of the government of the Lord. And not only that, but individual lives are said to be the subjects of His fatherly care. Peculiarly expressive is the language of our Savior on this subject when He says: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows." Whatever construction may be put on this metaphorical language, it certainly conveys the truth that there is a Providence to which no human affairs are too insignificant.

On this great truth faith rests. Were there no such Providence faith would have no foundation. It would sink into nothingness and with it religion, the superstructure reared on that first and all-powerful principle.

That the Almighty works by means of natural laws does not change or modify in the least the truth set forth. God never did anything except on natural principles, some of which are understood by man and therefore not considered wonderful, while others are not known and consequently called miraculous. Were we to reason that the hand of God cannot be traced in a case of sickness and death or a conflagration, because the former came as a result of imperfect sanitary regulations and the latter was caused by electricity, then the reasoning is equally sound that the great deluge was not the work of the Almighty; nor indeed creation itself, for it cannot be denied that the infinitude of worlds and systems of worlds, strewn throughout the immense space like dust exist and are regulated according to laws as natural as that which causes the falling of a leaf in autumn and the renewed verdure of the field in spring. If the power of God is manifest anywhere, it is everywhere.

In the revelations given to the Saints upon this subject, the true relationship between God and His children is set forth in clearness as never before perhaps in the history of man. As God represents Himself as the Father, a parallel is suggested. Any wise father would educate his children as far as in his power lies with a view to rendering them in every respect capable of coping with the problems of life. To attain this end he would give their developing faculties full liberty, and yet all the time guide the efforts in the right direction. The child is all the time working its own way onward toward perfection, and yet never without the guiding control of the educator. Both these factors are equally necessary.

In a similar position is the child of the Eternal Father placed. He is laboring to obtain an understanding of the principles that govern the universe and the knowledge which brings life eternal, but he is not left to himself in this effort. The Father's guiding hand he can see and feel throughout life. Sometimes he falls, or errs or goes astray; sometimes afflictions are necessary to bring him to realize his duties, or to strengthen his faith or to generate virtues he would not have under other conditions. Therefore with the eye of faith he can perceive God even in some of the events of life which to the eye of the unbeliever have no redeeming feature, and he can believe that even afflictions will, if endured in a true Christian spirit, end in joy and eternal happiness.

THE STONE CROP.

In a recent report on the value of building stone produced in the United States during 1893, compiled by the special agent of the U. S. geological survey, Utah is credited with being one of the nine slate producing states of the Union. The total value of that product for the year was a little over two and a half million dollars, our Territory's share in this sum being only 850 dollars' worth. The difference between what we did produce and what, with proper encouragement, we can produce, could not be expressed in such small figures.

The recapitulation of the report referred to shows that the aggregate valuation of all kinds of building stone produced in the entire country for last year reaches the figure of twenty-two millions of dollars, a falling-off of about fifteen millions from that of the year 1892.

THE STATEHOOD BILL.

Those who do not expect too much are not apt to be very badly disappointed. Good news comes to them with a relish unpaired by regrets at its delay, and without complaint or disappointment because it might have been better. Their calmness is not always to be regarded as hopelessness, nor is their silence amid the clamor of promises and pretensions, in any sense an evidence of indifference. There is a large and in many respects an admirable class of people who may almost be deemed fatalists, in that they accept the idea that whatever is to happen will happen, and whatever is, is right.

The great majority of those for whom the News speaks entertain views somewhat similar to these. On this tremendous question of statehood, for instance, which as a shuttlecock has been kept in the liveliest kind of play between rival politicians here at home and at a distance, they have been content to maintain a steady thinking, a resolute hope, a courageous endeavor, but an entire absence of bluster, bragadocio or blame. They have desired the inestimable boon of self-government with all the earnestness that a patriotic, intelligent community could be capable of; but they have not gone crazy over it. They have tried repeatedly to get admission into the national sisterhood, but repeated failure has not soured them, or caused them to give up in despair. Their faith all the time has been that they could stand the injustice of continued territorial vassalage as long as the country itself could afford to impose it upon them. And when at last others of influence and prominence took up the cudgels and made Utah's claim their own, the people here calmly looked on with quiet interest, with sincere good wishes, with almost amusement at the enthusiasm and the swelling pledges with which this, that and the other agency was thrust forward to bring about instant the consummation desired.

We congratulate them on the patience and the equanimity thus displayed; on the sober loyalty of which they have given proof; on the faith in the final outcome which has sustained them through many disappointments. And we congratulate them most sincerely on the fact that statehood is brought one long step nearer—in quick defiance of the predictions of croakers—by the reporting of the bill to the Senate from its committee on territories. Of course this does not insure immediate passage and approval of the bill; but it marks the surmounting of one more barrier in the way, and seems to indicate that there can be no longer reason to expect unfavorable action from any source or unnecessary delay from any cause.

STRETCHED THE LAW.

The opinion of Attorney General Olney, given in the Washington dispatches today, comes as a rather sharp rebuke to Judge Morrow, of the United States circuit court in the California district. The Chinese exclusion law provides that a Chinese merchant who has been to his native land and returns to this country must prove by two credible white witnesses that for one year prior to his departure for China he was engaged in the buying and selling of merchandise at some stated place and that his name was included among the names of members of the firm with which he claims connection.

A case came before Judge Morrow a short time since in which he attempted to define the provision requiring the Chinese merchant's name to be embraced in the firm name, and in doing so made the ruling which the U. S. attorney-general now decides is wrong. Most of the Chinese doing business have a title under which they operate and in which none of the names of the firm partners are designated. These titles represent "good luck," "novelty," "good business," "cheap store," or something similar, just as is the case with many white men. Under the judge's ruling not one of the merchants doing business this way could be admitted into the country, notwithstanding the fact that he might be well known to be a merchant; the mere incident of his not using his individual name to designate his business is held to be sufficient to exclude him from identification as a member of the firm.

Last week Collector J. H. Wise, of San Francisco, decided to carry out this ruling in its full spirit. Between forty and fifty Chinese were on the steamer Rio de Janeiro, and he notified them that they could not land. The Mongolians were greatly surprised, for all of them were merchants and were well known to have been idle tied with Chinatown business houses for years. They were notified that the order excluding them was based on the fact that the inspectors could not find the names of the merchants embodied in the firm names under which they had been doing business. By this proceeding forty-five Chinamen were lodged in jail to await court proceedings. Their attorneys knew it was useless to apply to the circuit court, for Judge Morrow already had ruled on the question against their clients. So the court of appeals was applied to, and the matter also was placed before Attorney General Olney. The opinion expressed by the latter will have the effect of releasing the imprisoned Mongolian merchants and permitting them to land without further trouble, though the anti-Chinese men will make a fight in the court of appeals to get a decision contrary to the view taken by the attorney general.

This application of extreme and unreasonable constructions to the statute, such as appears to have been done by Judge Morrow, has an effect directly antagonistic to the intent and proper enforcement of the law, and is exceedingly unwise on the part of those who advocate excluding the Mongolians from the United States. If it was desired to have the law repealed and the bars thrown down to the Asiatics, there could be no more effective way than to give strained and harsh constructions of the statute, and thereby arouse sympathy for those who are discriminated against. The Chinese exclusion law as it stands at present, enforced in a spirit of fairness and earnestness, seems to be good enough to effect its ultimate purpose of ridding the country of Chinese, without making its operation unnecessarily harsh; and it is a good thing that the administration, through the attorney general, has put a check on a bigoted and cruel application of the statute.

ONE SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM.

Any reasonable plan for the amelioration of the condition of the unemployed is of interest in this time of industrial unrest and clamor for reform. At present four gentlemen interested in the labor movement are visiting California with a view of finding some suitable location for the establishment of a colony. This will necessarily be in the nature of an experiment, but they are confident that they have found a solution of the employment problem. The gentlemen referred to are W. H. Madden, of Chicago, president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor; William O. Pomeroy, of Chicago, general organizer of the American Federation of Labor; J. J. Jaffray, secretary of the Belvedere Federal Labor Union, and John Mee, of New York, president of the National Culinarian Alliance.

The plan as explained by Mr. Madden to a newspaper representative, is quite different from anything heretofore proposed, and aims at meeting two existing evils. Were it generally adopted it would not only provide employment for millions but also render the tendency of the population to crowd the cities much less than at present. According to investigation there are, he says, in this country three million farms of 160 acres each unoccupied, but on account of the destitute condition of the unemployed they cannot be utilized. The proposition therefore is to establish co-operative farming communities on a semi-socialistic basis.

Each colony will have a block of land two miles square, or four square miles, containing 108 farms of twenty acres each. In the center will be a plat of common property containing 360 acres, in which each person who takes a farm of twenty acres will become owner in part. This part, however, cannot be sold or otherwise disposed of. It always remains the property of the community, while the twenty acre farm is negotiable; the owner can do with that what he pleases. In the central plot the houses of the colonists will be situated together with the stores, meeting house and other public buildings. Every man gets a house located in this central plot together with his farm, but he is at liberty to build on his farm too and live wherever his convenience is best suited. Outside the circle of 108 residences will be 170 acres of public pasturage and gardens, all common property. The organizers of the colony will plant the farms for the buyers and only offer the land for sale when it is made self-supporting. Then the purchasers are expected to pay the cost of it all in yearly installments, of the products and profits of the soil.

The plan as outlined seems to possess many features of a commendable nature, and with good management it ought to be a success; the minor details would, of course, have to be adjusted as the development of the community would require and in accordance with the experience gained. The fundamental principle, that labor ought to be directed and applied to the great sources of production, is certainly correct. And that this country could be made to sustain a much larger population than it now has, if a greater proportion of labor were expended on the soil, cannot be doubted. If it is true that 480,000,000 acres of agricultural land is idle in the United States, there ought to be work enough for every unemployed laborer who is willing and able to be self-sustaining and contribute his share towards the prosperity of all.

ENGLAND SCARED ABOUT INDIA.

The dispatches have lately made reference to the uneasy feeling prevailing in England on account of the probability of an uprising in India before long. People all over the United Kingdom are rehearsing to each other around the fireside the incidents of the terrible Sepoy revolt in the fifties, which at the time attracted the attention of the world, but which at this time are almost forgotten.

The cause of that insurrection was the dissatisfaction with European rule prevailing in India, and only waiting for a suitable opportunity to break out. This came when the government resolved to introduce in the army a new kind of rifle with greased cartridges. This was considered an attack on the religion of the natives, inasmuch as they were required to tear the cartridges with their teeth, thus bringing their mouths in contact with animal fat—a sacrilege in the eyes of the Hindoos. The government withdrew the new cartridges, but the excitement had already reached a point beyond control. The cry of assault upon creed and caste was raised and soon the revolt rolled its thunders over the provinces of the peninsula. Europeans were massacred in great numbers. The Mogul dynasty was proclaimed with capital at Delhi, and for the next two years the government had its hands full in restoring peace and order.

The fact that the rebellious spirit then manifested has never been subdued entirely, although kept in check, is admitted and the fear of a repetition of the events is natural.

The present panic owes its origin to the discovery that thousands of mango-trees throughout the province of Behar have been smeared with mud mixed with pig's and cow's hair. The work was done with such secrecy that no clue to the authors of it has been obtained. The supposition is that these daubs of mud are a secret signal to the initiated to hold themselves ready for some great event, and the question is, What great event can there be prepared in secrecy except an attempt at an insurrection? Another explanation is offered by Indian officials, who suggest that the episode is nothing but an attempt to divert Hindoo pilgrims from one sacred shrine to another. This theory, however, is not accepted as satisfactory.

It is well understood that the Indian people are suffering under the rule of England, and their condition has not been bettered by the recent financial experiments in the country. A correspondent from London to a New York paper says stories are told of taxation so fearfully increased that a native who last year was assessed at 4 rupees now pays on 45, and this dissatisfaction has been augmented by the work of surveyors who have radically altered the land boundaries in some districts, to the infinite disgust of the people. The idea among the natives is that the Europeans cannot carry on a successful campaign in the heat of the summer, and many are therefore apprehensive that before long the English will have to fight for their lives in India and reconquer the country.

GUILTY OF CONTEMPT.

From the ruling of Judge Merritt in the case of the Carterite leaders, charged with contempt of court in stealing a train on the U. P. railway, which road is in the hands of a receiver, we apprehend that there will be little dissent among the sober-minded and law-abiding element of the community. Barring Carter himself, those who were adjudged guilty openly confessed that they had committed the act complained of, and if they get their deserts they will be given free food and lodging for the larceny in addition to that which they are now receiving for the contempt. In this view of the case, the extreme mildness of the sentence of five days' imprisonment will be excused; otherwise the punishment will hardly be deemed as at all fitting to the crime.

As to the man Carter, who disclaimed any participation in or knowledge of the act of train-stealing, but who as the leader of the "army" and as its most open-mouthed champion cannot be said to have shown any too much respect for peace, order, respectability and good sense—he deserved in all conscience and propriety a taste of the same medicine administered to his underlings and associates. There is no particular honor in the role which the group are now called upon to enact, but such as there is he ought to be given his due share of; where glory is being distributed generously among the "colonels," it would be manifestly unfair to leave the "general" undecorated. In conclusion the News may be permitted to suggest that whereas Mr. Carter's followers have less to fear from anybody else than from Mr. Carter, if that gentleman has anything to fear more than from himself it is from those who in this controversy have maladroitly tried to pose as his friends.

DESTRUCTIVE STORMS.

California is known as the land of fruit and flowers and balmy summer, and to those who fancy that it is free from disastrously cold spells it will be interesting to read of the effects there of the storm of Monday and Tuesday last. Wind, rain and snow combined in a most unpleasant manner fatal alike to the interests of live stock owners and to tillers of the soil. The destruction among sheep was especially severe, and of the large number that were being herded in the hills it is estimated that at least one-third have perished. From Sonora to Strawberry, a distance of 82 miles, it is said the roadway was strewn with dead sheep. At one place near Fresno 4,000 were found frozen to death in one heap. The snow was two feet deep on top of them. There were thousands of animals which could not be reached on account of snow, and if they escape freezing there is likelihood of starvation before the snow melts. In the Sonoma and Bennett valleys immense damage was done to crops. Corn, potatoes and beans were laid low, and many vineyardists will lose the greater portion of their grape crop.

Following close upon the disastrous drouth in the Golden state, this visitation makes it appear as if the people there are the objects of a series of afflicting events that will work severe hardships upon them notwithstanding the rich and varied resources of their state. For a year of disaster to follow in the wake of a year of financial depression such as has been experienced would make a burden heavy to bear.

While sympathizing with California in her misfortunes, Utah has reason to be grateful that the elements have dealt kindly by her, and that notwithstanding some measure of hard times produced by the machinations and the unwisdom of men, the rains and the snows, the winds and the sunshine have been so controlled by an almighty Power that the industrious husbandman and the careful flockowner have full promise of abundantly rich returns for their toil. And by the way, the remarkably constant immunity which Utah's vales enjoy from the floods, the storms, and the drouths that afflict her neighbors east, west and north brings into special prominence the fact that it was a more than human wisdom which led the noble Pioneers of 1847 in the selection of their mountain home.

STATEHOOD BILL AS AMENDED.

The NEWS has received the amended copy of House of Representatives bill No. 352—in other words “An Act to enable the people of Utah to form a constitution and state government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states.” This is the interesting measure which was cracked through the lower house of Congress with such admirable speed and unanimity early last December, passing on the 18th; and which, coming to the Senate on the 18th of that month, was read twice and referred to the committee on territories, where it remained until May 17; being then reported with amendments to the Senate by Chairman Faulkner, as first told the local public by this paper. It now reposes on the Senate calendar, its number on the docket being 452.

With the bill as it passed the House the attentive reader is already familiar. Present interest centers in the amendments made by the Senate committee, which it is expected will be approved by the whole house, and unless serious objection is made in the lower house, will also receive the approval of that body. These amendments are not numerous; they are confined to such changes as will postpone the admission of the Territory until after the election in November, 1895, and the seating of its representatives and senators until the 4th of March, 1896. The original bill provided:

Within twenty days after the passage of this act the governor shall by proclamation order an election of the delegates aforesaid in said Territory, to be held on such day as he may in such proclamation designate, not less than sixty nor more than ninety days after the issuing thereof.

The amendment strike out the foregoing and substitutes the following:

The governor of said Territory shall, on the first day of August, 1894, issue a proclamation ordering an election of the delegates aforesaid [to the constitutional convention] in said Territory to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November following.

The original bill provides that the delegates to the convention thus elected should meet on the third Monday after their election, etc. The Senate amendment provides that “the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government in said Territory on the first Monday in March, 1895,” and shall be authorized to form a constitution and state government for said proposed state, etc.

The other amendment occurs in section 4, where the bill as passed by the House provided that “at an election to be held at a time fixed in said ordinance” (the ordinance formed by the convention for submitting the constitution to the people for ratification) “the qualified voters of said proposed state shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution,” etc. As amended by the Senate committee, the section now provides that this election for the ratification or rejection of the proposed constitution by the qualified voters of the proposed state shall be held “on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1895,” and the next section continues the provision that at this election the representative in Congress, the governor, and other officers provided for in the constitution, may be also elected.

These are the only changes suggested by the committee on territories in the upper house of Congress; and as stated, they merely indicate a little more delay in Utah's admission than might have been necessary if the Senate should have promptly passed, and the President as promptly signed, the bill as it came from the House.

STOP AIDING THEM.

The people of Salt Lake City never have been ungenerous or inhospitable to those who have come asking for succor. Their liberality has been exercised without stint or discrimination to all who have applied for aid. They have a firm conviction of duty in giving of their substance to those that stand in need, and in not permitting those who suffer to make petitions in vain. They have left it to be a solemn obligation to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and administer to the wants of the sick and afflicted, according to their ability, and still are willing to do so, preferring to supply the wants of ninety-nine undeserving persons than to take the chance of turning aside one who is worthy of assistance.

But in the interest of the self-preservation of the people there is a limit to this contributing for the support of others. While the residents of this section of the country hold the views stated regarding the sustenance of those who are in need, they also have a firm and deep conviction that it is an improper thing for the idler to eat the bread or wear the clothing of those who are willing to labor. The people of these valleys will divide to the full extent with those who should receive sustenance from them, but they conceive it to be no part of their duty to give comfort, or aid, or encouragement to the loafing, idle vagabond who is unwilling to labor for his own support and who is a menace to society and an enemy to good order and government by his idle, lazy habits and beggarly instincts.

In the conditions that have developed in the last few days regarding the influx of unemployed persons on the way east there is no question as to the limit of hospitality having been reached and a point arrived at where the line of distinction must be drawn. There have been deserving men, and probably there will be more, to feed; there also are unworthy persons whose demands should not be acceded to, but who should be given to understand that their imposition on the people has gone far enough. In the last issue of the NEWS was given an account of a detachment of the “Industrial Army” which was located on Pioneer square. These men were furnished good food and plenty of it at the expense of the city;

they now demand that they be supplied with blankets and clothing. They also state that they do not want to work. Their captain left a $2.50 a day job, which kept him employed three-fourths of his time, to take up the occupation of an idle and pestiferous dead-beat. When he and his men were asked if they would take work at a figure which at least would provide them with food, clothing and lodging all they could do better, they contemptuously replied that they would not—that they were not “dollar a day men.”

Now right there is the place to draw the line. Living here are taxpayers and citizens who would be glad to get employment at a dollar a day to provide food and clothing for their wives and little ones; men to whom the square meals given to these “army” tramps would be a treat; residents who will be called upon to bear a share of that expense even if their homes have to be sold by the tax collector. It would be far more charitable, more humane, more just, for the city to take one from each of a half hundred families so situated and give them a good square meal occasionally because they are deserving, than to continue to feed idle vagabonds who are unwilling to earn what they eat.

In such a situation it was unlawful to feed those men in the way it was done. A mistake has been made, and may be excused because of a preference to lean to virtue's side rather than permit anyone to suffer. But to perpetuate the mistake will be a gross outrage on the taxpayers and deserving people. This gang of men who will not work should be fed if fed at all only as prisoners and should be confined and made to work as such, while their insolence in attempting to levy a tribute of blankets and clothing on the citizens of Salt Lake should meet with prompt and vigorous refusal. Let them leave, work, or go to jail. As the idle vagabonds they have declared themselves to be, let them be given no aid or encouragement. Let the food and clothing go to more deserving persons. Some of these may come along with the “army” or in other ways, but there are many of that class right here, and that afford excellent opportunity for that commendable kind of charity which “begins at home.”

A SWEDISH COLONY FOR UTAH.

The Svenska Folkets Tidning, a paper published in Minneapolis, Minn., says there are a number of persons in the East interested in a plan for sending colonists to Utah. A meeting was recently held at Rockford, Ill., on which occasion the report was read by a committee previously selected for the purpose of investigating the country. The place selected is in the vicinity of Corinne, Box Elder county, and the committee had found everything satisfactory. Samples of the agricultural products of the locality were exhibited and much admired. The subject of the practicability of the plan was discussed at length and resulted in fifty-three persons signifying their willingness to start for Utah. The intended colonists are said to be Swedes.

In the locality mentioned there is much valuable land to be transformed into prosperous farms and comfortable homes, and the right kind of settlers, bringing with them industrious and frugal habits, should do well there. Such settlers will be as welcome to this Territory as anywhere in the world, and they will find as good neighbors and as true friends as can be found among the children of men. It has been and still is the firm belief of the majority of the people here that the time will come when the valleys of the mountains shall be recognized as one of the most desirable spots on earth, and that people should flock here for refuge in times of danger. As years go by and the scroll containing the history of the nation is unfolded, it becomes more evident that the expectation will be verified. With the arrival of new settlers the particulars about the country will be better known; the mist of dark fables will be dispersed and more people will come to dwell where peace and loyalty reign supreme. Utah is destined to emerge from the obscurity into which she was once so undeservedly plunged, and her people are to be understood, not as represented by those who never knew them, but as they are, the messengers of peace and good will to all.

OUR DEBT-PAYING POLICY.

An eastern friend, who recognizes the evils of the present financial system, but whose remedy is the issue of large quantities of paper money, invites attention in a recent letter to an incident of history, and the result of it, that perhaps may have passed from the minds of many who at this particular time will be interested in recalling it. We all know, says he, how the soldiers in the Civil War were paid in greenbacks, and how, by successive acts of legislation, prompted by "lobbyists," the bonds, purchased originally with greenbacks, have been made (interest and principal) payable in gold. Also, that by contraction of the currency the value of the debt represented by those bonds has been vastly increased, and the value (in money) of the farmer's products equally decreased. In fact, it would take more of the country's products, as wheat, corn, cotton, etc., at the present prices, to pay what now remains of the national debt than to have paid the entire debt twenty-five years ago at the prices at that time. So, while we have paid about three-fourths of the face of the debt, and paid it nearly twice over in interest, we still owe the entire debt when computed in our products at the present prices.

Do we all know that, as our friend asserts we do? It is a grim and indisputable fact, nevertheless; and yet, when men talk about the necessity of our acting courageously and independently of countries where the rule of the Shylock is known to control in everything, we are told that we are a "debtor nation," and cannot do as we could if we were not. But we are not helping matters by issuing more interest-bearing bonds—which was done only a few weeks ago, and is again being urged as a necessity, if we would keep up the requisite gold reserve in the treasury. Plain, every-day people cannot of course be expected to look at these matters with a financier's eye; but there seems to be a woful lack of persons with that kind of an eye who are able to rise up and explain the inconsistencies alluded to, and point out when and how, if the old rule is still going to be followed, the relief is going to be brought about.

GETTING THEIR EYES OPEN.

It is no new thing to the people of Utah to witness the surprise and in a sense disappointment of usually well informed visitors here, who have come filled with lamentably and absurdly mistaken views of the conditions and characteristics of those who reside in these valleys, but who have been amazed at receiving incontrovertible evidence that their former sources of information were wholly untrustworthy. One of this number is the postmaster of Tipton, England, who made a trip to Utah last summer. The gentleman on his return home told of what he saw here, and so great was the interest manifest that a short time since he was requested to give a public lecture on the subject and responded.

In his opening remarks he describes the uneasiness he felt at making a visit to this Territory, owing to the awful tales he had heard, some of them direct from the lips of an anti-Mormon lecturer who had resided here, and who gave "graphic accounts of lawlessness, treachery, violence and immorality with which he said the Territory of Utah was reeking." The Tipton postmaster then goes on to say, "With my mind well stored with this useful information, it was with mingled feelings I drew near to this worse than heathen country. Before I left my native land, friends tried to dissuade me from taking a journey so perilous, and if I did persist in going to be well provided with revolvers, knives, etc., for my defense."

He reached the quiet city of Provo on a Sabbath morning, July 2nd, and on going cautiously up the street was somewhat reassured by the sight of a Methodist church and a Baptist chapel. Then he put up at a hotel kept by a Mormon, by whom he was shown the tabernacle, B. Y. Academy and other buildings of interest. Regarding the day there he said: "The Sabbath day at least was kept, for quiet reigned, and on the gentle breeze was borne the songs of praise from the house of prayer;" and of his first evening in Utah, at the hotel with its proprietor, he stated: "When the evening meal was over and the sun was setting in the west, we bowed our knees together to our common Father, and with a peace I cannot describe retired to bed and to rest." He went to Nephi next day and spent the Fourth there, witnessing the celebration. He says:

While the performances were going on I put down mental notes. Here was a gathering of the whole city, from the infant in arms to the hoary patriarch. There was not one shabbily dressed sister or seedy looking brother in the whole company—not a rag, not a tatter, not a speck of dirt, not a poverty-pinched face. The street arab and the gutter children were non-existent, but joy sat upon every countenance and glee flashed from every eye. There were many dons among the gentlemen and the ladies would have done credit to the Tipton mutual. I said to my friend Adams, "Where are the poor?" and he proudly answered, "Sir, we have none." I said to myself, "Where is the assassin, and where the man of blood? Where the women driven about like slaves, and what of the 'bigotry' that brought together Mormon, Presbyterian and Methodist to mingle in the same hymn of praise and bow together at the same throne of grace? My feelings of dread and doubt had given place to peace and tranquility. I had sympathy with Ruth when she said, 'This people shall be my people, and their God shall be my God.' There was certainly an enchantment, a fascination, that would have kept me here, but another motive sped me onward."

The lecturer gave an amusing account of an argument which he had with an old gentleman who held some extremely radical religious views, and at its conclusion remarked: "I have rubbed against and dined with the humble farmer class, taken a good square meal with the well-to-do tradesman and fruit grower, and have hobnobbed with the millionaire of Salt Lake City, but nowhere did I find a foe unfair or one to try to take a mean advantage." He told how he visited different parts of the Territory, his impressions of Salt Lake City where he was the guest of N. A. Empey, Esq., of his attendance at the Pioneer Day ceremonies in the Tabernacle, and closed his address with the following language: "Life among the Mormons is worth living, and if all the nations of the world were as sober, industrious and as righteous as Utah we should be at least 1,000 years nearer the Millennium."

Utah has suffered greatly from misrepresentation in the past, but the intelligent people of every nation are learning to realize the fact that such a condition as has been described by her enemies does not and never could have existed here. It is beginning to dawn upon the world that the inhabitants of this Territory, Mormon and non-Mormon, are as a rule, thrifty, honest, industrious, peaceful and enterprising citizens whose virtues are not excelled by any other community on the globe. People are getting their eyes open to the truth, and in this respect the past year perhaps presents a record that excels any previous similar period.

JEFFERSON ON CREDIT.

Anent the arguments pro and con on the situation of the United States as a debtor nation and remedies for existing financial evils, the following from a letter by Thomas Jefferson may not be devoid of interest. It never was published until a short time ago, when it appeared in the New York Sun. It was found recently by Major G. P. George, of Richmond, when he was looking over some papers left by his grandfather, Alexander Donald, who was a merchant in Richmond, and to whom the letter was written. It is dated July 28, 1787, and in it Jefferson says:

Among many good qualities which my countrymen possess, some of a different character unhappily mix themselves,

Most remarkable are indolence, extravagance and infidelity to their engagements. Cure the two first, and the last would disappear, because it is a consequence of them, and not proceeding from a want of morals. I know of no remedy against indolence and extravagance but a free course of justice. Everything else is mere palliative; but unhappily the evil has gained too generally the mass of the nation to leave the course of justice unobstructed. The maxim of buying nothing without money in our pocket to pay for it would make our country one of the happiest upon earth. Experience during the war proved this, as I think every man will remember that under all the privations it obliged him to submit to during that period he slept sounder and awaked happier than he can do now. Desperate from finding relief from free course of justice I look forward to the abolition of all credit as the only other remedy which can take place. I have seen, therefore, with pleasure the exaggerations of our want of faith with which the London papers teem. It is indeed a strong medicine for sensible minds, but it is a medicine. It will prevent their crediting us abroad. In which case we cannot be credited at home.

There probably will be some difference of opinion among financiers of today as to the practicability of the nation or the people doing business without the credit system, but there are a good many people in the country who wish they had followed in their purchases the suggestions made by the great patriot and statesman. Doubtless Jefferson himself was in a similar frame of mind when, thirteen years after he wrote the letter, he returned to private life so seriously impoverished through general business depression that he was not sure of being allowed to leave Washington without arrest by his creditors, but with such a strict sense of honor that led him to in time discharge his debts to the uttermost farthing.

PROMPT ACTION NEEDED.

This Territory is fast being made the dumping ground not only of men who cannot get employment but of tramps and criminals from the Pacific Coast who are being shipped into Utah by the Southern Pacific railway. These men gather into California from British Columbia on the north to Mexico on the south, and are being sent east over the railway and unloaded here. The avenues for their further movement eastward are practically being closed. In Wyoming they are promptly rejected and turned back, and there is no knowing how soon Colorado will take a similar stand and leave with us nearly the whole crowd to bring serious trouble upon the Territory. As it is, the opportunities for their going east via the Rio Grande Western are very limited, but they are being directed thither. Most of them have to remain on the way, and consequently the section of country along that road from Ogden south and east is being sorely afflicted with their presence, and surely will become more so unless immediate steps are taken to make a change.

On the present occasion the people look, as they have a right to do, to Weber county to close the gates against this incoming horde. As has been suggested heretofore, that county holds the key to the situation. It has been stated that local officials there, when the "armies" have come upon them, have aided them to continue in this direction with a view to letting them get farther east. It is now time to stop this procedure and to prevent these "armies" being dumped in any part of the Territory. This step is demanded by the welfare of the people who are being made to suffer.

The courts already have indicated how this can be accomplished. The authority of restraining the Southern Pacific from unloading or leaving indigents, criminals, or persons liable to become a public charge or who are a menace to good order is vested in the courts of this Territory and the duly appointed officers, when application for the exercise of that authority is made by the proper parties. Weber county, having the terminus of the Southern Pacific railway, where the dumping place for these indigent "armies" is, is in the position to protect this Territory from further imposition by applying to the court for an injunction forbidding the railway company from leaving here any more of the so-called "Industrialists," or any of the tramps that may travel by its trains. If the Southern Pacific or those farther west who are dealing with it in this matter are desirous that these men shall be helped on their way east they can make arrangements to transport them to where they will not be a charge on this Territory. What is asked is that they cease unloading them here.

If the injunction suggested be applied for there is no question that the court will grant it as the law provides, and thus the matter can be settled once for all as far as Utah is concerned. In making this request upon Weber county the people feel that they are doing only that which duty requires in the present exigency, and they ask with full confidence that the Weber county officials have such an interest in the Territory's welfare that they will act promptly and courageously in the premises.

DO NOT ADVOCATE ANARCHY.

The stand taken by some of the newspapers in regard to the so-called industrial movement is truly amazing. It becomes more and more evident with every day that it is a menace to communities in its way as well as to the safety of the traveling public and the institutions of the country; its true character of anarchy is slowly being unveiled and the germs of revolution are faintly discernible in its aspirations and demands; yet some who pretend to speak for the people, for law and order, denounce the constituted authorities because these do what they can to restrain the devastating flood in its mad rush through the land. Thus one cotemporary in criticizing Judge Merritt's action in landing a band of train stealers in jail argues that if men want to go to Washington why shouldn't they?

The fact that they are poor men is surely no good reason why they should be deprived of the ordinary privileges of untrammelled locomotion guaranteed to every American with his freedom of person. It will be a sorry day for the country when the doctrine is recognized, especially from the bench, that rich men are free to go and come at pleasure, but that poor men are not.

Unfortunately for this mode of reasoning, it does not touch the real issue at all. Dishonest sophistry shines through every line of it. Nobody denies the right of anybody to go to Washington; nor is it contended that rich men can come and go at their pleasure while poor men cannot. But the question is, whether any band of men can be allowed to go to Washington for the purpose of influencing by force the legislators in their behalf; and further, whether any band of men, rich or poor, can march through the land demanding to be fed and clothed at public expense, and to steal railroad property, resist the authorities and turn things topsy-turvy in a general way. Traveling is free enough, as far as the ticket is paid for, but it has never been understood that the liberty of this country includes the privilege of banding together for the purpose of begging and stealing.

If the laborers have a grievance let them unite in an intelligent effort to bring this before the country in the way the Constitution provides and send as many petitioners to Washington as they can afford to send honestly. If the people's representatives refuse to listen, retaliate at the ballot box. The poorest citizen has just as much political power in his hand as the millionaire, and since people of the latter category are in the minority, there is no reason why the poor should not rule the country by constitutional means, provided they are united and intelligent enough to know what they want and honest enough not to sell their birthright to scheming politicians for less than a mess of pottage. If the "Industrialists" had followed such a course, they would have gained the sympathy of the country, but as it becomes evident that they have chosen a policy fraught with danger to the country, they must be met with stern determination. The country has already decided that the Union must be preserved even at the cost of a million lives. States cannot tear the bonds tied by our fathers. Should it become necessary, it will again be demonstrated that the Union must be kept sacred. One class cannot with impunity rise in rebellion against another class of citizens.

At present the duty is urgent upon the press, as upon all who exercise influence upon public affairs, to plead with the misguided ones and show them their error without partiality and without vilification. The movement is yet in its beginning, but should it continue the time may come when the voice of the wise may be as useless as an argument with Niagara or an appeal to a prairie fire. There should, it seems to us, be no doubt as to the present duty of the press in the matter of a movement so conspicuously unconstitutional and dangerous as that now going on in the country.

DESCRIBING THE killing of a burglar in Chicago day before yesterday, a dispatch says the victim was shot in the barroom and in the act, but it fails to mention the equally important fact that he was also shot in the stomach.

A SAD FATALITY.

FILLMORE, Utah, May 15, 1894.

A gloom of sadness has pervaded every home in our fair city for the past three days owing to the death by drowning of two beautiful children of prominent families in our midst.

On Saturday, the 12th, Mrs. Virgin Holbrook made a visit to her sister-in-law, Mrs. Joseph E. Ray, taking with her her little daughter Florence. She there met her sister Ella, the wife of Mr. Dudley Reese. During the visit their three children, Evelin Reese, aged 7 years, Florence Ray Holbrook, born Sept. 20th, 1889, and John A. Ray, born Jan. 21, 1890, asked permission to go and gather wild posies, but were strictly forbidden by their parents and were told of the dangers from Indians in the neighborhood and the high waters in the raging creek. Notwithstanding these cautions the childish passion for flowers impelled them onward in the search. Just one block east from Mr. Ray's residence is Chalk creek, and across it is a frail foot bridge to accommodate residents upon the other side. This bridge is fifty-four feet long, made of a few props and stringers and upon these is laid a single inch board from twelve to fourteen inches wide, with a rickety crooked rail for grown people, three feet high.

This death trap the little ones assayed to cross, and Evelin Reese got safely over; Florence dared not venture, but Johnnie Ray, the man of the party, crossed over a time or two, to assure little Flossie that there was no danger, then taking her by the hand, he backed along the narrow board leading his timid cousin to the center of the stream, where the rushing whirl of the muddy waters unstrung the nerve of one or both, and they fell four feet, into the deep water together. Evelin saw her cousins go to their death and tremblingly recrossed the dangerous bridge and hastened to inform the assembled mothers of what had happened. Two other little ones a block below reported seeing a little white hand sticking out of the water.

Soon a hundred people gathered to search the onrushing waters for the children—amongst them the distracted mothers; and it would be a heart of stone that would not be moved in sympathetic grief when Willie Hatton and Lefe Huntsman brought to the creek banks a half a mile below where they had fallen in, the bruised and broken idols of their homes. Strong men's eyes filled with tears as they saw and heard this sudden grief. Mrs. Holbrook, who is a delicate woman, could scarcely look upon the jewel that twenty minutes before had glistened with life and love, whilst Mrs. Ray worked for an hour in the creamery (in seeming oblivion of all the world around her) with a desperation born only in a mother's hopeful heart, until exhausted nature fell limp and lifeless to the ground.

It was 4 o'clock p. m. and both children must have been instantly killed by the mad waters beating them upon the rocks of the precipitous creek. Flossie's father, Mr. Orson Holbrook, was at his farm seven miles from home, whilst Johnnie's father was in Salt Lake City and by a miscarriage of the telegram only got the sad news at 10 a. m. Sunday. With three relays of horses he reached home from Juab, forty-eight miles, in four hours and a half. These times of sorrow teach one lesson, that every clean heart in sympathy proves "all the world a kin."

The two children were known to everybody in our city. Flossie was the charm of the home amid the grown-up brothers and sisters, with singular intelligence; whilst Johnnie Ray was known to everybody who traversed our streets, as the miniature athlete, the precocious idol of his father. They were the babes of numerous families, the culminating fruition of ripened love. When yellow sheaves are gathered in, there is a robustness in sorrow; but when the stern reaper ruthlessly thrusts his sickle into unclombed vines, there is a tenderness in grief that levels all hearts as molten gold; and by the crucial test of sorrow we learn that the "dark beyond" is but the figment of a godless mind, and under the influence of the Gospel the opaque veil becomes a thin transparency, through which we hold communion with our loved ones, and weld the links of fatherhood that leads back to the Eternal One.

The funeral services were held at 10 o'clock today and were conducted by Bishop T. C. Callister. Elder F. M. Lyman, of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, made a hasty drive of 25 miles from Scipio to be present, and arrived to find the meeting house filled to its standing capacity. It was a touching sight to see six little boys bearing the corpse of Johnnie Ray, followed by six little girls dressed in white bearing gently into the house the remains of lovely little Flossie. The pure white caskets were placed side by side. The choir, to plaintive music, sang the hymn on page 354; the opening prayer was offered by Elder George Crane; the choir sang "Rest of the Weary." Then Elder Lyman addressed the large and attentive congregation, commencing with the words, "But Jesus said, Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." He then told how, twenty-five years ago, his eldest son fell into this same river of rapid, muddy water, but his life was saved by the rescuing hand of Horace Owens. For an hour he fed hungering sorrow with the bread of life and the logic of death, lifting the pall that hung over our town, and giving hope and consolation to all. He was followed briefly by Elder John Greenwood. The choir sang, "I Am Waiting by the River," and benediction was offered by Patriarch Joseph D. Smith. Then the great audience filed past the silent little ones, who lay like sculptured innocence. Their bruises looked like the vandal touch upon unappreciated beauty. A large cortege followed to the grave yard, among whom was Elder Lyman, who has been the comforter of this sad day. A. BIRD.

IN OKLAHOMA.

Elder J. A. Stephens writes from Marshall, Oklahoma Territory, under date of May 16, as follows:

The Elders of Oklahoma are well and having good success and are commencing to reap the reward of their labors; many are being baptized and enjoying the blessings of God.

Sunday, May 13th, at Marshall, Elder A. N. Wallace baptized Torance Burns, an old man 75 years of age, who seemed very faithful and has been longing to see the weather open up so that he could arise from his sick bed and go down into the water and become a recipient of the Gospel. It was a beautiful, warm day and many were there to witness the scene. After his baptism we entered into his humble home and I confirmed him a member of the Church.

There being a large congregation gathered together we held a meeting and Elder A. N. Wallace addressed the congregation upon the first principles of the Gospel and warned them of the restoration of the same.

We met with the Saints on Sunday and anticipated in the exercises in Sunday school.

This little branch is making good progress and enjoying the blessings of God. Elders Davis and Levi Holt are energetic workers for the progress of the Marshall branch. We will leave for Stillwater, fifty miles east of here in the morning, to open up a new field of labor, where we expect to be crowned with success.

This leaves the Elders and Saint's in good health and enjoying the blessings of God. J. A. STEPHENS.

STAKE CONFERENCES.

BANNOCK.

The quarterly conference of the Bannock Stake of Zion was held Sunday and Monday, May 13 and 14, in the Music hall, Rexburg. There were on the stand Elders Heber J. Grant and Abraham H. Cannon, of the council of the Apostles, the Stake presidency and Patriarchs and most of the Bishops.

Conference called to order by President T. E. Ricks, Sunday, 10 a. m.; he reported the Stake in good order and fully organized; the prospects were good for a fruitful season; all have enough to eat, and there are no difficulties among the people.

Several Bishops reported their wards, corroborating the president's report.

Elder Abraham H. Cannon addressed the meeting, treating upon the hard times and the lessons they should teach the Latter-day Saints—dependence upon the Lord in times of prosperity as well as adversity, economy and unity should be the result. He gave some striking examples of the power of unity and desired to see Latter-day Saints speedily come to such standard. Spoke also of the evils from disregarding the word of wisdom.

Sunday, 2 p. m.—Elder John Evans, returned missionary from Great Britain, reported his labors in that land.

Elder Heber J. Grant occupied the afternoon. He was greatly pleased with the progress of the Saints in this Stake since their settlement ten years ago. He advocated strongly the cause of home industry and self-sustenance. The Latter-day Saints make great pretensions and the Lord will require much of them. If we would keep the word of wisdom as we ought we would soon be the wealthiest people in the world.

Monday, 10 a. m.—Elder F. S. Bramwell, of the Stake Sunday school superintendency, reported the Sunday schools in good condition; there are thirty-seven schools, with an average attendance of over 8,000.

Elder Heber J. Grant again addressed the Saints. He spoke of the alarming increase of the social evil in the world and hoped the little that had crept in among the Latter-day Saints would soon be rooted out. By cultivating bad habits they grow upon us, but if we cultivate good habits they will also grow with us; idleness brings death, but labor and thrift produce health and wealth; when we perform one good act it gives us more power to do another. The many other instructions he gave were all practical and beneficial if we can live up to them.

Elder A. H. Cannon also used a portion of the time giving much practical advice.

Monday, 2 p. m.—Home missionaries for the next three months were called and sustained.

Elders Heber J. Grant and Abraham H. Cannon again spoke, adding much to their previous good teachings, of vital importance to the Latter-day Saints.

Elder T. E. Ricks thanked the proprietors of the hall, who furnished it free of cost and made it so comfortable, as they had on previous occasions; also thanked the visiting brethren and the people for their attendance. He concluded by invoking the blessing of the Lord upon all.

Choir, by special request, repeated the anthem sung in the morning, "Praise ye Jehovah."

Benediction by Elder Heber J. Grant.

JAMES GILLESPIE, Stake Clerk.

MORGAN.

Under favorable conditions the Morgan Stake conference was held, as ever, in Morgan city, Sunday and Monday, May 13 and 14, 1894. Elder Franklin D. Richards, of the quorum of Apostles, was present on Sunday and the forenoon of Monday.

President Richard Fry, in reporting the Stake, had good words to speak of Bishops, Teachers and people generally. Counselor S. Francis referred to the good teachings that the Latter-day Saints have had as evidence of the excellent condition the people of the valleys are in as contrasted with the condition of laboring classes abroad.

Elder Richards dwelt upon the experience the Church has had, their progress, their duties as parents to children, their amusements, how to regard the teachers and teachings that come in our midst, the efficacy of prayer, the Sacrament and feast of the Passover, the duty of forgiving, the unsettled question of capital and labor as one of the premonitory symptoms that is to come now that the hour of God's judgment is at hand. It will be long remembered how plainly Elder Richards demonstrated the principle of the personality of the Lord Jesus.

Elder W. G. Smith preceded the latter remarks by testifying that the same God exists today that answered Elijah's prayer before the priests of Baal.

Elder William Rich of the Stake Presidency bore testimony to the truth and reminded the people to profit by the financial crisis in the land. Elder Robert Hogg, sen., spoke of the great work of this people being gathered from all nations and of the necessity of living so as to be more united.

Elder Alma Porter and C. R. Clark spoke to encourage all to live according to the teachings of the Gospel.

President Fry spoke on partaking worthily of the Sacrament, on home manufacture and on the evidences of the power of God among this people.

Measures were adopted for the refitting of the Stake house. After this work is accomplished it is understood that the people continue as a building society and erect meeting houses one by one in the several wards.

The choir made such excellent renderings that it received especial notice.

Conference adjourned for three months.

C. R. CLARK,
Clerk of Conference.

STAR VALLEY.

The seventh quarterly conference of this Stake convened in Afton meeting house on May 12th and 13th, 1894. It was well attended by Saints from all parts of the two valleys. The members of the High Council occupied most of the time during conference and the instructions given by the brethren were good and of a nature to build up the Saints in their most holy faith.

The spirit of improvement seems to be the order of the day, several houses and large commodious barns having been put up the last few months. The most of the people in Star Valley have come here to stay by the permanent improvements which they are building, but a few families are selling out, intending to look around in the Big Horn for a milder climate. The farmers are about done putting in their crops, and by what I can learn the acreage this year is as large as any year since the valley has been settled. We are looking forward for a bountiful harvest.

The health of the people is good; there is very little sickness in this Stake. Brother Emil Hansen, of Freedom ward, is very low at present with lung fever, but hopes are entertained of a speedy recovery.

WM. H. KENNINGTON, Sr.,
Stake Clerk.

HAWAIIAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

The annual conference of the Hawaiian Mission convened at Laie, April 5th, 1894, at 10 a. m., and continued on the 6th, 7th and 8th. Owing to sickness in President Noall's family, at Honolulu, we were deprived of his and sister Noall's presence, for which reason an extra day's meeting and Priesthood meeting were held in Honolulu, on March 31st and April 1st, when effectual instructions were given to the Saints and Priesthood. With these exceptions there was a full attendance of foreign and native missionaries, and a fair representation of Saints from this and adjacent islands, varying in distance from 100 to 250 miles. A good spirit prevailed throughout the entire conference, and the hearts of the Saints were made to rejoice through the words of encouragement delivered by the servants of God.

Joint meetings of the Sunday schools and Mutual Improvement associations were held on the morning, afternoon and evening of the fifth and the evening of the sixth. Four Sunday schools and four Mutual Improvement associations rendered interesting and instructive lessons, interspersed with Gospel precepts, essays, songs and addresses, all of which were creditably rendered, the music being exceptionally good.

The general officers of these associations were unanimously sustained and the following local officers appointed: Elders H. E. Duffin, Hyrum De Fries and Melvin M. Harmon, Superintendents of the Sunday schools of the Hawaiian Islands; Elders Matthew Noall, Hyrum De Fries, Thomas Brimley, Presidents of the Mutual Improvement Associations. There were two days of general conference, Friday, April 6th, and Sunday, April 8th, Elder Brown presiding. The general authorities of the Church were presented on the 6th, and were unanimously sustained by the vote of the people. During both days' meetings good instructions were given by the Elders from Utah; and many of the local branches were represented by their respective officers.

April 7th was set apart for the Primary association and the Relief Society conferences. The Primary children, all dressed in uniform, assembled at Lanihuli—the mission house—at 9:30 a. m., where they formed into procession and marched to the meeting house, led by the Laie band. At 10 a. m., the meeting was called to order by Sister Maggie Davis. A carefully selected program was then rendered, mostly in the English language, consisting of songs, recitations, dialogues, and Gospel lessons. The manner in which the several parts were rendered by the children gave evidence of diligent training by the sisters. The general Primary officers were sustained, and the following local officers appointed for the ensuing term: Libbie Noall as president of the Primary association, Lizzie Brown, Alice Harmon and Miliama Kekuku, as counselors.

At 2 p. m. the Relief Society conference convened; Sister Maggie Davis presiding. After the opening exercises, short reports were made by more than twenty native sisters from this and adjacent islands. The missionary sisters made some very encouraging remarks. The general officers of the Relief Societies were then sustained, and the following local officers appointed for the ensuing term: For president, Libbie Noall, with Lizzie Brown and Alice Harmon counselors, and six native sisters as assistants.

Elder Mathew Noall was sustained as president of the Sandwich Islands Mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, with John Brown, Hyrum De Fries, H. E. Duffin, Melvin M. Harmon, Walter Scholes, Thomas Brimley, William H. Thompson, John R. Jolly, George H. Fisher, William H.

Mendenhall, Henry Moss, Wilder Hatch' Libbie Noall, Lizzie Brown and Alice Harmon as assistants and traveling missionaries.

The ecclesiastical appointments for the coming term were then sustained as follows: Elder Hyrum De Fries, presiding Elder over the North and the South Hawaii and Maui conferences, with George H. Fisher and Wilder Hatch and Hiapoole as traveling Elders, in the North Hawaii conference, with Henry Moss and Ben Paahau as traveling Elders in the South Hawaii conference, and William Mendenhall, John Jolly and James Bush as traveling Elders in the Maui conference.

Elder John Brown presiding Elder, with Melvin M. Harmon and John Smith as traveling Elders in the Oahu conference.

Elder H. E. Duffin presiding Elder over the Kauai conference and the Honolulu branch, with Thomas Brimley and Nihipali, traveling Elders in the Kauai conference, and with William Thompson and Peter Mekia as assistants in the Honolulu branch. George H. Fisher was appointed clerk of the conference.

A committee of ten were appointed to outline a general course of study for the Sunday schools and Mutual Improvement associations of the Islands.

Charles Broad, Moses Nakuau and Kanihonui were appointed to travel in the interest of the Sunday schools and Mutual Improvement associations.

Temporal Appointments. — Mathew Noall was sustained as manager of the Laie plantation, Walter Scholes was appointed assistant; Melvin M. Harmon, book-keeper and school teacher, and Alice Harmon store-keeper.

Laie Branch.—John Brown, president of Laie branch, with Melvin M. Harmon and Walter Scholes as his counselors, Melvin M. Harmon, superintendent of the Sunday schools, with Nainoa and Samuel Lua assistants. Kainuawa, president of the Mutual Improvement association, with Nawahiui and Kaio as counselors. Kai president of the Relief Society, with Ruth and Lahaole as counselors. Four home missionaries were appointed to labor on the Island of Oahu.

Releases. — Albert J. Davis and family were honorably released; Elder Isaac Grace and family honorably released to return home some time prior to conference.

Something over 400 adults, and 100 children under eight years of age were in attendance all through the conference. Notwithstanding the long distances that many had to travel in order to have an opportunity to meet with the Saints and mingle their voices in thanksgiving and praise to God in a general conference, it seemed that their journey—on horseback, afoot, and various other ways of transportation—was performed with a degree of gaiety and pleasure seldom experienced by any other people under similar circumstances. Previous to the arrival of the Saints at headquarters from various districts, committees had been appointed to receive and entertain them. Eight beeves and a variety of other edibles were placed at the disposal of the committees for that purpose. By this means all our visitors were well provided for. Our meetings were all well attended by earnest listeners, desirous of gaining that spiritual food which was freely given by the foreign and local Elders who addressed the conference.

The work of the Lord is progressing favorably in this far-off country—known as the "Paradise of the Pacific," 139 souls having been brought into the fold of Christ through the ordinance of baptism during the past term. Future prospects are bright. Love, peace and union prevail in our midst.

Elder Brown closed the conference, expressing his regret for the enforced absence of President Noall and family; administered a few words of instruction and encouragement to the Saints, with a fervent desire that the Lord would still be with them, as He evidently had been during this conference; offering the benediction, and adjourning conference until the 6th day of October next.

MELVIN M. HARMON,
Clerk of Conference.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The monthly meeting of the Sabbath School workers of the Salt Lake Stake met on Monday evening, the 21st inst., in the Salt Lake Assembly Hall.

In the absence of Superintendent T. C. Griggs from the city, Assistant Superintendent R. S. Horne presided over the meeting.

After the opening exercises, President Joseph F. Smith addressed the assembly on general Sabbath school work. He did not have the privilege of being very closely connected with the Sabbath school work, but had a general interest in the cause as he had with all institutions in the Church. Read from the 12th chapter of the 1st Corinthians: "And God hath set some in the Church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." Helps and governments were established in the Church in former days by Christ and His Apostles; the same have been instituted in this day as they are necessary to the perfection of Church government. One of these helps or organizations—and a very important one—is the Sunday School. It is impossible for the general authorities of the Church to reach the children of the Saints to teach them the Gospel without the assistance of the Sunday school and similar organizations, as the instructions given in the general meetings of the Saints are not adapted to the understanding or comprehension of the young. It was highly necessary that proper influences should be brought to bear upon the children in their early youth. It is said the education of a child should begin with its mother even before its birth. It should not be left until it is able to walk and talk before an effort is made to teach it. In his experience he found that a child is very susceptible to impressions at an early age. Children scarcely a week old refuse to go to sleep in the dark if they have been accustomed for only a few times to have a light burning. Parents and teachers should seek to bring to bear upon a child a kind, firm discipline. They should insist that their will and wisdom is to be regarded as superior to the child's, ever keeping in mind that they can only be successful by using kindness always.

It is of importance that the early teachings a child receives be correct and truthful. In the Sabbath school he should be taught faith in God; a correct conception of the Creator should be given him and he should be encouraged to love and reverence the Deity, so that a desire will grow in his heart to know more about the things of God. Sunday schools were established to teach these things to the young, because parents are not able or neglect in many cases to teach religious truths to their children. It is a lamentable fact that many parents are not capable or are not in the condition of mind to teach the principles of the Gospel; and some are so negligent that they fail to send their children to Sabbath school to get what training they might receive there. The fact that religion or religious teaching is excluded from the public schools made it the more necessary that children should be trained in the Sunday school. No matter how much a person may learn or acquire of the things pertaining to this world—whatever progress he may make in science, in art or in industries—his knowledge or possessions will avail him nothing in the life to come unless he has at the same time sought to know and do the things God requires. This fact is clearly set forth by the Savior in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. Mankind cannot love each other unless they love God. The greatest incentive for us to love our families, to love our neighbors, is to love God. The "fear of God is the beginning of wisdom," and as a foundation for eternal happiness a reverence for His laws should be implanted and cultivated in the heart.

The speaker concluded by urging Sunday school workers to be earnest, to put their whole heart in their labors, to be punctual in their duties and exemplary in their lives.

The singing exercises for the meeting were by the Fifth ward choir, led by Brother M. Smith. The Sixth ward choir was requested to supply musical exercises for the next meeting.

An adjournment was taken till the third Monday in June.

E. F. PARRY, Asst. Secy.

UTAH STATEHOOD BILL.

FROM THURSDAY DAILY, MAY 17.

Yesterday afternoon the News gave its readers the earliest and the wholly gratifying information that the Utah statehood bill was out of the hands of the Senate committee on territories, and was ordered to be placed on the Senate calendar.

This afternoon, just before the hour of going to press, another and an equally interesting private dispatch was received as follows:

"Utah statehood bill passed its first reading, and was placed on the calendar this morning."

The Associated Press report of the same important incident, received at 8 p. m. was as follows:

WASHINGTON, May 17. — Senator Faulkner from the committee on territories today reported the bill for the admission of Utah.

Another step in the routine of that particular piece of law-making in which this community is most interested is thus taken, and the people of Utah are brought one step nearer than they ever were before to the American right of self-government.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

Beginning with its issue of May 26, the Millard Progress, published at Fillmore, will be an all home-print paper, having abandoned the "patent inside."

NEPHI, May 22.—The jury in the case of J. C. Graham and the Enquirer company, brought by R. R. Irvine for $25,000 damages, came into court at 3 o'clock. Verdict for defendant. No cause of action.

The Markham mill is now in full operation, says the Bingham Bulletin, running on ore from the Free Coinage mine, owned and operated by Mickleson & Butler. Mr. Mickleson tells us that they have a nice body of quite rich ore on the Free Coinage.

Neve & Child, the well known furniture dealers have been forced to retire from business. The story of their failure is briefly told by the following notice posted on the front door of the firm's house: "Closed for stock taking. J. P. Meistrup, assignee."

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah Co., May 20, 1894.—Bishop John Brown and wife will celebrate their golden wedding tomorrow (Monday). Grand preparations are being made for the occasion, and the guests will assemble at the city hall. The Bishop returned from his "hibernation" trip about a week ago. He is quite feeble.

A bunch of steers, owned by Preston Nutter, were driven through the city this morning, says the Record, of Cedar City, Iron county. These cattle are from Arizona, and were wintered in Dixie. They are bound for Strawberry Valley, Uintah reservation, where Mr. Nutter has a five-year lease on grazing lands. Another lot of cattle will pass through here within a day or so.

The Montpelier Post tells of four burglaries in Paris, Bear Lake county, Idaho, in one night last week. The blacksmiths of Hurst & Shepherd and Button & Son were both visited and tools stolen therefrom. The Paris Mercantile company and the titling office were also broken into and efforts made to blow open the safes. These attempts were unsuccessful and the burglars failed to secure anything. One of the safes had in it $1,500.

Another disappearance of local interest is that of W. S. Scofield, an employee of Simon Bros. While on a business trip to Pocatello recently, he became intimate, it is said, with a woman at that place and left with her to parts unknown. The Salt Lake police authorities have the matter in hand and have sent photographs of the missing man to the chiefs of police of all the large cities throughout the West. He has a wife and four children in this city.

John H. Rumel, another of Utah's veteran citizens, after a long period of weakness and general debility superinduced by old age, passed from mortality at his home in Farmers' ward May 19th. He was a native of Pennsylvania, and was born in the city of brotherly love, August 28, 1819. He came to this Territory in an early age and passed through many of the hardships incidental thereto. He was a respected citizen and was held in high esteem by a host of friends.

BASALT, Idaho, May 12, 1894. That dread disease diphtheria has taken another from our ranks, viz., Rose Firth, aged 8 years, whose death occurred Wednesday, May 9th, just one week after the death of her brother. Short services were held at the grave, Elders Charles Criddle and Jos. H. Dye being the speakers, and words of comfort and consolation were given, together with instructions as to the necessity of conforming our lives to the commands of God in order to regain our loved ones.

Mrs. Maren Vestegaard, of the Second ward, Ephraim, died last Saturday. She has been very quiet and unaccountable for years, living all alone. For several days the neighbors had noticed her not around, so Saturday they sent word to her daughter-in-law, who came down and found her very sick. She consented to go to her son's house. Tender hands assisted her into a carriage, but no sooner had they got her there, than she gasped and died. Work was sent to her other children who lived at Mayfield, Redmond and Emery, Emery county.

News comes from Eureka to the effect that Ed Williams, a miner well known throughout the west, met with a most violent death at that place on Saturday evening. The deceased was working on a water course for the Eureka-Hill Mining company and had gone a short distance away to get a blast of powder. He had been absent but a brief period when his companions heard a terrible explosion. Turning their attention in the direction from which the sound proceeded they were horrified at seeing pieces of the body of Williams flying through the air. The largest fragment of the body found was the head. A jury was empaneled and returned a verdict of accidental death. The deceased was 42 years of age and left a wife and two children.

A sad case of drowning occurred at Paradise on Wednesday evening, a seven-year-old boy, the adopted son of George Davis, being the victim. The little fellow had gone to a meadow some distance from home, to bring the cows home. He had to cross Little Bear river, ordinarily an insignificant stream, but now a torrent of no small proportions, on a narrow foot bridge. Possibly he became dizzy, at any rate he fell in and was drowned. As soon as the alarm was given all the men in the town turned out to search for the body, which was not found until the next morning, a half mile from the place where he fell in. Coroner King held an inquest over the body, the verdict being in accordance with the acts given above.

The annual meeting of the Territorial board of equalization for the assessment of the various railroad, telephone and telegraph companies, etc., in Utah for the year 1894-5 began at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the board's offices in the Dooly building, and the business is expected to occupy from three to four days. There were present the following members: Messrs. M. B. Sowles, president, and J. E. Dooly, Salt Lake; W. W. Maughan, Logan; R. T. Hume, Ogden; and Jos. Judd, Manti. Messrs. R. C. Lund, St. George, and J. E. Booth, Provo, will arrive this evening to take part in the proceedings of the next few days. Mr. J. J. Thomas is the board's secretary, and again occupies his accustomed seat at the business table. There is a good deal of important work to be gone through.

There are probably one hundred half-civilized Indians composing the unique little village of Washakie, which is situated about 85 miles north of Brigham, says the Bugler. Most of the families have good, warm houses, but they use them for store rooms, preferring to live outside in their tents. "Heap better health," they claim. "White man sleep on feathers and poor air—get legs like chickens." The Washakie Indians own and till many good farms. But for several years they have been unfortunate with their crops. The grasshoppers seem to have a special pick at the harvests of these aborigines. The grasshoppers' work of destruction has been so effectual for several seasons that the natives are pretty well discouraged. The prospects this year are as gloomy as ever.

SAMARIA, Idaho, May 16.—The tedious work of impaneling a jury in the case against John Hurst for the killing of Morgan Morgan commenced today. The panel was exhausted and the sheriff and deputies are out in the extreme ends of the county with an open venire after more jurymen.

Prosecuting Attorney Winters, Jas. H. Hamley, from Paris, and a Mr. Gray, of Malad, are conducting the prosecution. Judge Powers, of Salt Lake, Messrs. Stone & Evans and J. C. McDougal, of Malad, are looking after the defense.

Both sides are feeling their way very cautiously. It will be a hard fight on both sides and no doubt will be the most interesting and the most costly trial that ever occurred in this county.

The proposition to hold an intermountain convention to consider the home industry question—reference to which subject was made in the News several weeks ago—was discussed at a joint session of the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers' bureau Monday evening. It was generally conceded that such a convention would prove most beneficial to the West, and to Salt Lake in particular, and it was therefore conditionally decided to call it. An effort will be made to secure a low rate of transportation over the railroads, in order to induce a large attendance of delegates and others. A committee on finance was appointed to try and raise the necessary funds, which were estimated at $2,000; also a committee on program and rates. On Friday next these committees will present their reports, when a final decision will be arrived at in regard to the calling of the convention.

On Sunday, two small boys, one the son of Frank Robinson and the other the son of Martin Thomas, both of Richmond, were riding on the same animal. The horse began to jump, throwing both boys off. The Robinson boy was rendered unconscious by the fall, but with the exception of some bruises was not badly hurt. Thomas's boy retained consciousness but his face was badly broken and bruised and a piece of his tongue was bitten off. Dr. Adamson attended them and both are recovering.

Moroni Jessop, of Millville, was splitting wood on Monday afternoon during a windstorm, when the wind blew his hat over his eyes, and the axe alighting on his left thumb, almost severed it. He obtained the necessary surgical assistance and the injured member may be saved.

The special meeting of the City Council was attended May 16th by all of the members except Hardy. As announced in the News that evening the purpose of the meeting was to consider the bid of the New York Life Insurance company of par and interest for the $800,000 city bonds. The official correspondence between the Mayor, Mr. H. J. Grant, local agent for the New York Life and Mr. Gibbs, treasurer of that company were read.

There was a good deal of discussion on different phases of the question but finally the bid was accepted.

After the bond matter had been disposed of the gravity sewer problem was the bone of councilmanic contention and debate for a time. No definite action, however, was taken in regard to it, and further consideration of the subject was deferred until Tuesday night next.

The militia law passed by the last Legislature provides for an annual parade of the Utah National Guard on May 30. This year, however, it will not be possible to have such a parade as would be desirable were all things suitably arranged, so it is probable that whatever is done will be in connection with regular Decoration Day exercises wherever companies of militia are formed. The uniforms, arms and other equipments of the organized citizen soldiery will not be furnished by the government in time for May 30, so the Board of Control in local military affairs will endeavor to advance the work so that a good showing can be made on the Fourth of July. Considerable time and labor is necessary to have matters in good shape for an inspection and parade, and the probability is that by the time Decoration Day, 1895, comes around the Governor and his aids will have everything in first class shape for a military display such as has not been witnessed here in a score of years.

Dr. W. J. Hosford was mixing arsenic soap one day last week, says the Manti Messenger, when his small child crawled up and began eating the poisonous compound. Immediate work in clearing the stomach prevented any serious effects from the poison, for which the doctor and family were very thankful. * * * W. A. Cox Jr. met with what might have been a very serious accident on Tuesday afternoon. He was cutting timbers in the canyon and by an unlucky stroke with the ax came near severing all the toes from one foot. One toe was cut off entirely and all of them severely cut. Dr. Morrey was called and attended the bruised foot, which is doing as well as could be expected. * * * The high waters of city creek have proven somewhat troublesome to the railroad companies. Several culverts have washed out, and delayed trains especially on the Sanpete Valley line. The Western trains approach some places rather slowly and careful examinations are made before crossing some of the ditches.

Monday night Edward W. Tullidge, well known throughout Utah, passed from mortality after a protracted period of health failing and general enfeeblement.

The deceased was an Englishman by birth and was 65 years of age. He took up his residence in Utah in 1860 and from that time to the date of his death made Salt Lake his home. He possessed considerable literary ability and some of his writings will compare favorably with those of the best writers of the country. In 1869 he took editorial charge of the Utah Magazine, and later assumed the same duties on the Mormon Tribune. He was also one of the leading characters in what is known as the Golbeite movement. His history of Salt Lake City, issued under the direction of the City Council, is perhaps his best known work, although his Western Galaxy and Quarterly were journals of fine literary merit.

For many years Mr. Tullidge led a very busy life and in addition to his regular journalistic labors he wrote a number of plays which are highly spoken of by critics who examined them.

The following appears in the last issue of the Price, Carbon county, Telegraph: Last week we said the Chinamen should go, meaning that the Chinamen employed by the Rio Grande Western, as section men, should be discharged and white men employed. Last Sunday night a mob broke down the doors of their shacks, threw stones in their places of abode and in general made it very uncomfortable for the Chinamen. We are not sorry for the Chinamen, but if the object sought in attacking them was their removal then it is to be regretted. There is a right way to do everything and a wrong way. A petition should be signed by the citizens of Price, setting out the reasons why the Chinamen should be removed, and presented to the company. To assault the Mongolians as they did Sunday night will only entrench the Chinamen with the railroad company. However, we believe that the Mongolians was assaulted by a crowd of hoodlums who had been gambling with the Chinamen during the day. We suspect that this crowd lost their money gambling with the Chinamen and then assaulted their companions.

OGDEN, Utah, May 16.—The Union Pacific passenger train from Salt Lake, due here at 10:50 a.m. today, arrived 25 minutes late, bearing the horribly mutilated body of a young man of powerful physique who had been killed near Layton, Davis county. The express train had left Kayesville and was going at a rate of not less than 40 miles per hour. The engineer saw a man standing close beside the track and whistled to warn him to move farther back. The man took a step backward, but just as the train reached the point where he was he sprang forward and placed his neck on the rail, his head being towards the center of the track and his body outside.

The next instant the pilot of the engine struck the prostrate form and drew the shoulders and arms over the rail, and the heavy locomotive wheels crunched the bones of the man's body as they passed over just below the arms. The high rate of speed at which the train was going made it impossible to stop before the entire train had passed over the body. As quickly as the train could be brought to a standstill it was done, and the lifeless body, which was seen to convulse twice after being run over, was picked up and placed in the baggage car and the train sped on its way to the Junction city.

Sister Sarah A. Card, mother of Bishop C. O. Card, of Cardston, Alberta, Canada, and wife of C. W. Card, of Logan, died on Friday last, of paralysis. Her funeral took place from the Second ward meeting house on Tuesday. Her son was notified of the death and would have been here to attend the funeral but for a washout on the railway the other side of Dillon.

The remains of Mrs. Katie Hale Merrill came direct from Samos and were received in Smithfield on Monday evening. Sister Merrill accompanied her husband, Jos. H. Merrill, on a mission, in February, 1891, and died in June of the same year. When Brother Merrill was released the remains of his faithful wife were exhumed and brought home for final interment.

Peter Evanson, of the Sixth ward, Logan, died of a disease of the lungs on Monday. He had been afflicted for many years with asthma, and when the severe cold that caused his death developed, the end was not entirely unexpected.

It is the intention of Sheriff McQueen to go to Murray and make a search which may or may not be attended with sensational results. It is suspected that the dead body of a man named Miller lies buried somewhere beneath the saloon premises until lately kept by Charles Thiede, where his wife was so brutally butchered a few weeks ago. It is now remembered by Murray residents that some months since Miller, who had just before returned from Butte, Mont., mysteriously disappeared. It is said he possessed considerable money and was a frequent caller at Thiede's place of "business." His sudden disappearance, though talked about at the time, did not excite any suspicion of foul play until Mrs. Thiede's murder; but since then people begin to call to mind certain strange remarks dropped by Thiede now and then, among others his assertion that he had buried his horse, "Old Dick," underneath the billiard room, and his asking some of the callers whether they could smell anything offensive. These circumstances having been brought to the notice of Sheriff McQueen, an investigation will be set on foot forthwith; and the belief of Murray residents is that it will result in the discovery of Miller's remains. Until the digging around the spot has taken place, however, nothing can be ascertained.

SILVER IN CHINA.

(Copyrighted by Frank G. Carpenter, 1894.)

HANKOW, China, April 3, 1894.

THE silver question is a far more important matter out here in Asia than it has ever been in America. The Japanese are trying to uphold their end of the financial question by raising their prices, but the five hundred odd millions of Chinese do their business in copper cash on a silver basis, and the cost of their imports are now just double what they were a few years ago. I cashed $50 in gold the other day and received $100 in silver for it, and American dollars are now quoted in China at 212. The imports have to be bought with gold and sold for silver, and the prices must, of course, be doubled for the merchants to come out even. The prices of labor and of Chinese products have not risen, and the thousands and millions of Chinese farmers who are now coming to the cities to buy their supplies of cottons and other foreign things are charged double prices. They cannot understand it, and they won't pay them. They think they are being cheated and they won't buy at all. They simply says they can't afford the goods, and they go back home and cut up their old gowns into pants for the little girls and petticoats for the boys. The result will be a great falling off in China's imports from Europe and America, and it will act as a protective tariff to stimulate home production. There are now on foot a number of schemes for the manufacturing of foreign goods in China, and some of the Chinese capitalists themselves are seriously considering how they can take advantage of the present situation in the building of factories. The empire now has a foreign trade of something like $300,000,000 a year. Heretofore more than half of this has consisted of imports. The goods have been shipped into the open ports of the country and from thence carried in junks, on camels, on wheelbarrows and in Chinese carts all over the empire. Far beyond the Chinese wall, on the borders of Thibet and in the wilds of Mongolia you find strange people wearing English and American cottons, and many of the huts of the Thibetans in the Himalaya mountains are roofed with tin pounded out of American coal-oil cans. I see our coal-oil carted on wheelbarrows through the streets of these interior Chinese cities, and there is a great oil reservoir at Shanghai, where the petroleum is stored awaiting its shipment into the interior.

We have been sending in the neighborhood of forty million gallons of coal oil to China every year for some time, and many a Chinese home along the Yangtse Kiang is lighted with the fluid that flows from the pipes of the Pennsylvania wells.

China contains between four and five hundred millions of people. With its tributary provinces it is said to have the enormous population of 537,000,000. Since the beginning of our government we have coined all told about 461,000,000 silver dollars, not including the dimes, halves and quarters, and if the whole could be gathered together and carried to China there would not be enough to give a dollar to each of its inhabitants. China is generally supposed to be very poor. I believe, on the contrary, that it is a rich country, and it must require a vast amount to do its business. It is true there are many millions of poor, but there are also millions of well-to-do and millions of comparatively rich. There are few countries where jewelry is more commonly worn, and where the clothes of the better classes are most costly. I have seen since I came here thousands of ordinary citizens dressed in long gowns of brocaded silk lined with furs, and nearly every other woman you see outside of the laboring women wears a silk coat and silk pantaloons, while her little, pinched toes are covered with silk, silver or gold embroidered shoes. She has silver or gold ornaments in her hair and her silk headdress is often decorated with rows of pearls. Both sexes wear gold rings, and a well-to-do Chinaman expects to fit out his daughters with gold ornaments on the occasion of their marriage. They look upon the change in the prices of money as a rise in gold rather than a fall in silver, and I hear everywhere the question, "Why for makee gold so dear?" They realize the change when the have a daughter whom they want to marry off, and the rise is, in fact, so surprising to many of the people that they are selling their gold ornaments. They are bringing out the gold bricks they have hoarded and the country is being drained of its gold.

The Chinese are a great business people. Their cities are beehives of work, and they require a great deal of money to do their trading. The city of Canton absorbs about three millions of silver dollars a year. It takes millions to do the business of Shanghai and Tientsin, and there are scattered over this land thousands of native banks who do a regular banking business and some of which issues notes. There are 400 native banks in Peking, 300 in Tientsin and hundreds in Shanghai, Foo Chow, Ningpo, Hankow and Canton. All of the big cities have their stock exchanges and in these the brokers meet daily and buy and sell like our bulls and bears do in Wall street. I saw a thousand such brokers pulling, hauling and scratching at each other in the stock exchange in Peking, and I am told that many of them have recently lost great sums in betting on silver. The Taotai or Chinese mayor of Shanghai has lost, it is said, $600,000 within the last three months in buying silver, and he has, in fact, speculated himself out of office and his place will shortly be filled with a new appointee. In all of the treaty ports, the foreign as well as the native, business is really done by the Chinese. All of the foreign firms have Chinese cashiers, and these men make all of the calculations and handle all the money. When you go into a bank the English clerk will call a Chinaman to figure out your exchange for him and it will be the Chinaman who will pay you your money. If you make a deposit or pay a bill it is a Chinaman who handles every silver dollar, testing it carefully by ringing it before he accepts it, and estimating the amount and the rate of exchange with one of these boxes of balls strung on wires, which form the slates and pencils of the celestials. It is wonderful how fast these men can figure in this way. They push the balls this way and that with their aristocratic, long finger-nailed yellow hands, and in less time than you could put down the figures they give you the result. They are always sure of themselves, and if they make a mistake the firm by whom they are employed expects them to make it good. They are under heavy bonds, often running up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, and there are few defaulting Chinese cashiers. These "compradors" and "shroffs," as they are called, keep track of the Chinese market for the foreign firms. They have cashiers' or bankers' meetings, as it were, every day among themselves and report later on to their masters. They know all about the standing of different Chinese banks and firms. In speaking of them they divide them into four classes. If they say a bank is a number one bank, it is sure to be as good as the gold. If they call it number two, it is fair. If number three, its reputation is cloudy, and if four, you had better let it alone.

Chinese bank notes are more like promissory notes than our bank notes. There is not and never has been a national bank, and notes are not used as currency to any extent. The banker merely writes the amount on the note and puts his private seal or chop over it. Such notes are made out for all sums from five to twenty thousand taels, and the Chinese banker never goes back on his signature. He pays the notes when they are presented in silver or gold. The silver is usually paid according to weight, in lumps the shape of a toy bath tub, ranging in value all the way from a dollar up to fifty dollars. The usual size is worth about fifty dollars, and it weighs about five pounds. The gold is made in long, thin cakes, and is twenty carats fine. The banker stamps with his private seal every piece of silver he pays out, and even the Mexican dollars are marked thus with India ink. Every big bank or company has a man who takes all of the silver dollars that come in and fits them into holes made in a board, so that when they lie in them their surface is just level with the board. He then takes a brush and water and washes them as white and clean as though they had just come from the mint. He now stamps his chop on each of them, and this means that he guarantees their payment. Any one who has been in China will see the necessity for this. There are no shrewder counterfeiters in the world than the Chinese, and they are especially adept in the plugging of coin. They will bore holes in a silver dollar and insert other metal which will make it weigh the same as a good dollar, and they are willing to chip an atom of silver off of a large number of coins in order to make good wages out of the sale of the dust. The other day an American got a silver dollar in trade at Hankow, and attempted to pass it at the bank there. He was told it was not good, and upon his questioning the matter the Chinese cashier sent for a candle and lit it. He then held the coin over it, and, lo! in a moment it began to melt. The sides fell off, and in the center there was a piece of copper. The counterfeiters had split a genuine coin and had hollowed out the two pieces on the inside so that the copper could be fitted into them. They were then patched together so neatly that only the experienced ear of the Chinese shroff could detect the fraud.

Silver dollars will not pass in interior China, and outside of ports silver is taken entirely by weight. The only coin current in the empire is the copper cash, of which it takes 1,000 to make a dollar in silver. A thousand cash will weigh about nine pounds, and ten of our dollars changed into cash would weigh nearly one hundred pounds, and would form a fair wheelbarrow load of money. I see lots of money carried on wheelbarrows through these Chinese cities, and a common sight is a coolie going out to market with strings of these copper coins slung over his shoulder. The cash are about the size and shape of our old red cents, save that they have square holes of about the size of the tip of your little finger running through them. They are strung in strings of one thousand on ropes of twisted straw and at the end of every hundred a knot is tied in the string to mark the count. These cash are made at all of the provincial capitals, and the viceroys are expected to turn them out. They cost at the present time more than their face value to make, and copper of this kind is, in fact, here dearer than gold. I saw such coins being made some years ago at the big mint at Canton, and I watched a new machine turning them out at the rate of seventy a minute at the Kiagnan Arsenal the other day. The copper went into the machine in the shape of a hoop, of about the width of the iron hoops which we use on cider barrels, and stamps which worked through holes in a plate cut the metal into round disks, stamped the characters upon them and cut out the central hole in each coin all at a single stroke of the machine. It was worked by steam, but even at this rate of seventy per minute it turned out only about four dollars' worth of coins an hour. It is even worse at the older Chinese mints, where the coins are cast, and the copper and the labor make the production of them a loss to the men who are told by the government or the viceroys that they must furnish so many cash within a certain date. The result is that these cash are often made of spurious metal, and I have seen some of them which were so poor that I could break them in two with my fingers. At the present rates of exchange I could buy two thousand of these coins for one of our dollars; and it would take twenty to equal the value of a little American red cent, and you could buy a pound of them for a nickle. I sent my Chinese servant for ten dollars' worth of these cash today, and he came back loaded. His hands were full and his shoulders were covered with strings of cash. The picture was so curious that I had my photographer snap his camera on him as I helped him unload.

The banking system of China is the oldest known to man. According to Chinese records there were banks of discount and deposit here as far back as 2600 B. C., and the interest laws of China were made long before Columbus discovered America. There were Shylocks here a thousand years before the real Shylock was born in the mind of Shakespeare, and nowhere on earth among civilized people will you find higher rates of interest paid, more money borrowed and more debts conscientiously paid. The legal rate of interest in many of the provinces of China is 30 per cent and in others it is 36 per cent. Still millions are lent, I am told, in the shape of call loans in the seaport towns at 5 and 6 per cent, and all sorts of money transactions are entered into. China had a system of building and loan associations long before we began to exist as a nation, and all over the empire there are associations for the loaning of money, in which the different members pay so much a month on the joint capital is passed from one member to another from year to year, so that each gets a chance to use it for a part of the ten years during which such associations usually run. There is no place in the world where capital combines more readily than in China. The bankers have their guilds or associations, which fix all their rates of credit and interest. Every city has its clearing house, which settles up the business between the banks at the close of each day, and the native banks issue circular letters of credit to travelers going through the empire. There are big banks who push Chinese patent medicines, and little ones who loan out sums which we Americans would hardly think worth while borrowing. There are trades unions of all sorts and even the beggars club together and are bound by the rules of their union. Farmers combine together to buy cattle, peddlers buy and sell the custom of particular streets to their fellows, and a man who wants to get married and has perhaps not enough money to buy a wife will go into one of these loan associations to get it.

I tried to buy some pictures at Kiukiang, but found the dealer's store shut and was told that he was closed until he could get enough money from his friends to pay his last year's debts. All firms here have to settle up at the close of the year, and it is the greatest disgrace to go into bankruptcy. Bankrupts often commit suicide, and the son feels bound to pay his father's debts. It is the same with other relatives. The debts of any member of a family are a disgrace to the whole family, and rich men having failed will go to work at the most menial occupations in order to pay up. Big failures are always punished by law. If the amount is from $1,500 to $5,000 the bankrupt is banished, and if it runs above that amount his head is taken off. There is not much discussion about the matter and the law is that the bankrupt who becomes such from unavoidable circumstances is decapitated just the same as the fraudulent one. There are no lawyers and no juries and the judges or officials of the town pass the sentences. Sometimes the bankrupts carry heavy chains for weeks through the streets. At others they are put in the cangue, and not infrequently they lose their heads. If, however, the bankrupt can save enough out of the failure he can sometimes buy off the judges and thus save his head. In many cases the creditors forgive their customers their debts, and many a man at the annual settlement day, which always comes at the close of the year, has his friends come together and start him anew clear of debt.

If he cannot clear himself in some way his shop is kept shut until he announces his failure or gets the funds to continue. This prevents there ever being a great panic in China. The actual standings of the different merchants and business men are known at least every twelve months, and there is no chance for a man to continue a long career of fraud and failure. The pride which the Chinese take in keeping up the reputation of their towns, their business and their families, is very remarkable. I met at Canton one of the richest men in China. His name was Houqua, and he is said to be worth fifty millions of dollars. He has big investments in America and other foreign securities, and he supports about four hundred of his poor relatives. This man's father was the Jay Gould of Canton. At the time that the British gunboats came before the city they demanded an indemnity of six millions of dollars. They threatened to bombard the city if this amount was not paid in forty-eight hours. A subscription paper was passed around among the Canton capitalists, and Houqua put down his name for $1,100,000 and paid it over to the collectors. In the donation he said he "gave $200,000 of it in token of his affection for his beloved wife, $800,000 as a thank offering for the prosperity which had attended him in business and $100,000 in recognition of the fidelity of his son."

"INDUSTRIALISTS" IN UTAH.

OGDEN, May 15.

A detachment of the army of industrialists from Sacramento, under the command of Captain A. Ellison, arrived in Ogden yesterday afternoon. They were cared for by Chief Davenport last night and the city has made arrangements to look after them today. Nearly all of them are tradesmen. The captain stated to a News representative that they were a portion of the company which left Sacramento and of which one Colonel Paley was shot and killed. Said he, "We have been treated very well along the road, being ill-treated but once and that was when our colonel was killed at Rockwell. I expect the main body of this division will arrive in Ogden in a few days. We will make an attempt to pull out of Ogden today and will go to Washington. We hope to get through without any trouble as we are all law-abiding citizens."

OGDEN, Utah, May 16.—These seventy-five industrialists who came in on Tuesday night seized a through fruit train at the Union Pacific yards at 6 o'clock this morning and attempted to make their way east. The railway men refused to let the train move out and blocked the way. The army held possession of the train for five hours—until 11 o'clock, up to which time both parties remained firm. City Marshal Davenport finally succeeded in inducing the industrialists to leave the train, negotiating to provide them with provisions, etc. It was agreed that the army should move out on foot this afternoon toward the mouth of Weber canyon. Whether they will attempt to board another train there is not known.

Governor West spent last night in Ogden and went down to Salt Lake on the 9:10 train this morning. While standing on the platform at the depot before boarding the train for the capital, he was approached by Freight Agent Corsee of the Union Pacific and a number of Junction City business men who appealed to him to dispossess the industrialists of the stolen train.

The governor after inquiring fully into the particulars of the affair replied that in his opinion the matter should be laid before the chief of police at Ogden. That official could call upon the sheriff of Weber county and later the United States marshal could be appealed to for aid if necessary. So long as these officials had not exhausted their forces he did not feel disposed to call out the militia.

PROVO, Utah, May 16.—The industrialists camped at Mr. Cok's place in the southern portion of Springville last evening. A large barn was placed at their disposal, in which they found shelter from the rain. The people of Provo furnished them with provisions enough for two or three days and some bread was taken over today. Some of the industrialists left for the East last night over the R. G. W., although the officers say they intend to remain in camp till they learn the result of Carter's examination. Three deserters who remained in Provo were arrested last night for vagrancy.

FROM THURSDAY DAILY, MAY 17.

A detachment of California, Oregon and Montana industrialists slipped into the city last night on a Union Pacific train from Ogden. After reaching here they kept well under cover and were sleeping in a box car when the police dropped into their resting place and placed them under arrest and took them to the city jail, where they passed the day.

This afternoon the men were taken before Justice Smith and found guilty of stealing a ride on the railroad and trespassing on the railway company's property. They were all released on their own recognizance to appear in court tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. At that time it is expected they will have all departed from the city.

PROVO, May 17.

The labor of the citizens' committee in moving the industrialists to Springville is greatly appreciated by the people generally. The citizens were generous in furnishing supplies for the army, preferring to supply their wants at the camp ground to having them scatter through town soliciting food. Lieutenant Miller, who is in charge of the industrialists at Springville, informed City Marshal Storrs of that city that it was against orders for any of the men to leave and solicit food from the citizens, and asked that arrests be made of any who broke this regulation or that any infraction of the order be reported to him.

On Tuesday while the citizens' committee were gathering up the supplies for the army, subscribed by business men and others, for the purpose of taking them to Springville, three deserters went into Mr. Freshwater's store and succeeded in making him believe they were authorized to receive a box of groceries that gentleman had subscribed. They were seen going away with the box and as soon as they found they were discovered they brought the goods to the commissary wagon and turned it over to the men in charge.

The twenty recruits for the army, who had promised to go with them from Provo, as was stated by members of the army, failed to show up when the industrialists left for Springville, and not a Provo man left with them.

FROM FRIDAY'S DAILY MAY 18.

Adjudged guilty of contempt of court by Chief Justice Merritt, this morning, "General" Carter and four others of the twenty-seven defendants jointly charged with him have been fined in sums varying from $100 to $10 each, with five days' imprisonment in addition; while fifteen more are required to undergo the "jailing" without any fine. The remaining seven have been set at liberty. The crowd present in court while the judge was passing sentence was the largest ever seen in the Doly building at one time, and immense interest and curiosity were evinced in the result. There was scarcely standing room during the forty-five minutes that the proceedings lasted.

Judge Merritt, upon taking his seat on the bench at 10 o'clock, at once delivered judgment all eyes being fastened upon his honor as he proceeded to pass sentence as follows:

Carter, 5 days' imprisonment and $100 fine; the defendant to stand committed one day for each dollar he does not pay.

Nowell, 5 days' imprisonment and $25 fine. Same order in regard to the fine.

Lowry, Gregory, and Day, 5 days, $10 fine each. Same order as to fine.

The defendants Crouch, Covington, Rhodes, Van Buskirk, Morrow, Eblin, Smith, Griffin, Shaffer, Hogesen, Thompson, McKee, Mitchell, Faught and Keene, 5 days' imprisonment each—all for contempt of court.

The remaining defendants whom I have not named are discharged.

A moment later Judge Merritt added: "Take the prisoners, Marshal, and clear the court room; it is crowded too much."

Strangely enough, there seemed to be some doubt as to whether the defendants would be required to serve their time in the penitentiary or within the walls of the county jail, as the judge did not state the place in passing sentence, and it was not until Attorney Houtz returned into the courtroom and made the inquiry about ten minutes later that it was learned the penitentiary was meant.

"General" Carter received encouragement from a number of sympathizers as he left the courtroom, but did not appear inclined to talk very much.

Both he and his men were, however, in the best of spirits.

After the sentence had been pronounced a gentleman advanced toward Carter and whispered to him that the full amount required to pay the fines would be raised by subscription among certain citizens of Salt Lake, and counseled him and his followers to be of good cheer.

The defendants were taken direct from the court into the grand jury room and there they remained in charge of a couple of bailiffs until their removal to the penitentiary this afternoon.

In a short interview with a News reporter, Carter said that what had now happened would not damp the army's ardor in the least. While they were anxious and determined to obey the law, and had no desire whatever to trespass upon the rights of others, yet they were resolved upon carrying out their lawful object. If the railroad companies now refused to carry them in squads, then they would cover the ground on foot. He declared most solemnly that he was utterly ignorant of any preconceived plan to steal the train last Saturday morning, and expressed an opinion that there had been treachery on the part of certain persons outside the army's ranks.

Information received in this city this morning regarding the movements of the gang of industrialists who were dislodged from the stolen fruit train at Ogden on Wednesday, is to the effect that they reached Echo, at the head of Weber canyon, last night, and pitched their camp there.

It appears that they prepared to capture the first eastbound freight and this morning an opportunity presented itself. They soon had possession. The railway employees refused to go on or permit the cars to go without them. A good deal of parleying ensued. According to reports which are very difficult to obtain, the industrialists were beaten by some clever maneuver on the part of the train men and were frustrated in their efforts and determination to ride.

Last evening a company of Oakland industrialists arrived in Ogden city. They are under the command of Wm. Watson, who says they compose the third regiment. They camped on the old industrial camp ground, where Chief Davenport called to see them. He also procured food and sent them. It is said they will take up their march for the east this afternoon. The captain states that there will be another company of two hundred arrive here today.

PROVO, May 18.

Wednesday afternoon a man who gave his name as Louis Smith came over from Springville with Deputy Sheriff Hall. He was placed under arrest by City Marshal Storrs, of Springville, next morning, on the charge of carrying concealed weapons. Smith was a member of the industrial "army," and was pointed out by "Lieutenant General" Miller to the Springville officers as a man who carried concealed weapons and also as a man who "knew too much" and one whom the "army" would have to get rid of themselves if the officers did not arrest him. Upon his arrest he was taken to the city jail in Springville and after a short detention he was told he could leave. He asked Marshal Storrs to go to the Industrial camp and get his valise. The marshal did so, and was told by the industrialists that if Smith ever came back he would be roughly handled.

Smith gave an account of the dispute to a News reporter, saying that on Tuesday evening a number of the "army" became suspicious that he was with them for the purpose of reporting their intentions to the railroad company, and that they threatened to take his life and were only prevented by the intercession of some of his personal friends. He says that is the cause of the complaint made by Miller. Smith claims to have a brother in Salt Lake City, who is a contractor. He remained in Provo till he could take the first train for Salt Lake City and was apparently pleased to be out of the reach of his industrial friends.

About 75 of the "army" attended services at the Presbyterian church at Springville, Wednesday evening, at the invitation of Rev. Mr. Shepherd.

Two young men left Provo last evening on a R. G. W. freight car intending to join the army.

It is understood that Callahan the officer Carter expelled, is organizing the men who have left in squads over the R. G. W. for Colorado, where Callahan now is. It is said that Callahan's plan was to send the "army" out in squads, and giving the leader of each squad some money so the men might be able to eat in case citizens failed to contribute at any point. His further intention was to gather the men at one point and go on, and if necessary, again disband to meet at another point along the line of march. Carter wanted to handle all the funds.

SPRINGVILLE, May 18.—The Carterite army now encamped at this place anxiously awaited the ruling of the Third district court at Salt Lake this morning. When the news reached here that Carter and his immediate associates had been convicted and sent to the penitentiary, there was intense excitement. Consternation reigns among them and they are in a condition bordering close on to disorganization.

A committee of citizens waited on them this morning and in consultation with "Colonel" Miller and others now in charge, they were informed that the hospitality of the people of this place had about reached its limit and that they must move on. This they are not desirous of doing until they hear from Carter. But the time is not far ahead when they must get out whether they wish to or not. They have had plenty to eat so far but there will be a thinning down in the matter of charitable donations.

There are over 200 men in the army at present. There have been but few desertions the last two days and quite a number of accessions. The men say they will start into the canyon providing they are furnished with plenty of provisions but not otherwise. The citizens are so anxious to get rid of the horde that they have sent soliciting committees to Payson and Spanish Fork in their behalf hoping to get supplies enough to last the men until they can get well beyond the borders of the Territory.

The army is assembling this afternoon to discuss ways and means but none of them are very active appearances indicate that they are determined to stay until they receive instructions from Carter.

SPRINGVILLE, Utah, May 19.—The Carterite army left here at 10 o'clock this morning for Thistle 13 miles distant. They were conveyed thither to the number of about 250. The journey was made in from thirty to forty wagons. Besides carrying the men provisions were taken along sufficient to last until Tuesday.

Last night the army consultation committee in its negotiations with the citizens sought very hard to secure permission to remain ten days, but it was decided that their request could not be granted, and they were informed that they must calculate on moving today. Spanish Fork was visited by a soliciting committee of citizens appointed from this place. From there came a noble response and the provisions gathered will now last fully a week.

FROM MONDAY'S DAILY, MAY 21.

Twenty-eight more individuals forming a part of the Industrial army faced Chief Justice Merritt this morning to answer a charge of contempt of court; but inasmuch as all plead guilty, short work was made of the case. In less than three quarters of an hour after the opening of court they had been arraigned, plead, sentenced and were moving penitentiary-ward to commence their three days' sentence of imprisonment.

These men were brought down from Echo yesterday afternoon in the keeping of four deputy marshals of Weber county, and had since remained guests at Marshal Brigham's castle on the hill. The charge against them was that of having, with others of their ilk, captured a U. P. train at Ogden on Thursday of last week and another at Echo next day. Some of the defendants were "taken" at Castle Rock, having secured berths on a freight train. The entire band in the present instance was composed of wanderers from the company which left California several weeks ago on a "minstrel tour," but whose leaders bolted, taking the funds with them. The stranded body, weary and dismayed, then made their way on east as best they could, and in court most of the defendants presented a woe-begone and disconsolate appearance. They doubtless had, to some extent, the sympathy of Judge Merritt, who in passing a very light sentence expressed the belief that they had been misled by other and older heads.

By direction of the court the defendants (who occupied the same benches as their fellow army men during last week's hearing) rose one by one to enter their plea. Their names were given as follows: Richard Hornod, John Meyer, H. W. Smith, Harry Alcock, Jake McGann, Wm. Morgan, H. E. Brinnen, J. Herman, W. Champion, J. E. Friel, John White, Ernest Koning, F. Thompson, George Peterson, C. A. Hamilton, Frank Casey, Lawrence Derbner, J. H. Knight, Henry Perrine, Joe Davis, Jos. Kennedy, Dan Dorrity, Hugh McKenna, John Dorrity, Tom King, Tom Burchett, Wm. Schaffer, George Manker.

All the foregoing plead guilty, without hesitation, except J. H. Knight, Wm. Schaffer and George Manker; but they soon "came to," and joined in the general answer of "guilty."

The entire batch was riding up to the "pen." half an hour later.

A company of three score California indigents, all members of the Industrial army, arrived in this city late last night under command of one "Captain" Jesse who personally heralded his arrival at the police station. He passed the night with his men on the old Fort Square in the Sixth ward. The men were rounded up at midnight and cajoled. Instead of there being sixty as Jesse stated only thirty-nine were found. Asked to explain the discrepancy he said the men must have broken ranks while he was at the police station. They left Ogden on Saturday and had tramped hither being fed along the line of march by the towns between here and the Junction City. Some of the citizens of Kayaville assisted them as far as the Hot Springs by hauling their bedding and provisions.

The camp was under guard of the police during the night. Before daylight some of the absentees reported to their commander and this morning forty-nine members of the company whose ages ranged from nineteen to fifty-nine years registered at the police station as guests of the city after which they were taken in squads to the dining room of the city jail and fed. They ate a very hearty breakfast and returned to their camp ground on the square to await an opportunity of getting out on a Rio Grande train. There is a disposition to keep shy of the Union Pacific as they say they have no desire to become participants in the inconveniences to which their fellow industrialists have been subjected in confiscating the rolling stock of that road.

"Captain" Jesse was closely questioned at the police station today regarding his antecedents and his identification with the Industrial army movement. He stated that he was regularly engaged in work in California until recently at $3.50 a day. Finally the hard times commenced and his wages were reduced to $2.50 per day. Then even that was not as regular as he liked. He could, however, get work at $1 per day but said he refused to accept it. Asked as to whether he would not work for that figure now, he declared that he would not, neither would his men, who were not "dollar a day laborers."

OGDEN, May 21.—A band of forty unemployed men tramping their way east left here this morning for Salt Lake. From eighty to one hundred preceded them last night and are now near Kayaville. Fifty more will follow their footsteps tonight. They have abandoned all hope of help from the Union Pacific and will hereafter look to the Rio Grande where receivership and contempt matters have not yet been sprung against them. From four to five hundred more, it is reported, will reach Ogden the next few days and all have Salt Lake in mind as a temporary resting place. They will not be allowed to remain here very long, but will be pushed on as fast as that can be done.

One interesting and distinguishing feature between the men now arriving here and those who have been giving the Territory so much trouble hitherto, is that the former disclaim all connection with the Industrial army. They say they are neither part nor parcel of that organization and have nothing in common with it. They allege they are residents of the eastern states and are simply on their way home. They are entirely unorganized and are thrown together in a haphazard manner. Every man is his own "boss" and can "go and come" when he pleases. To them "generals," "colonels," "captains" and "lieutenants" are useless, dangerous and unknown commodities.

FROM TUESDAY'S DAILY, MAY 22

Yesterday "Captain" Jesse and his men were given until this morning to leave the city. They are still here at the expense of the taxpayers and refuse to leave except on condition that they be provided with shoes, blankets and provisions sufficient to take them well on their journey eastward.

They have had a "soft snap" during their sojourn in this city and are apparently loth to leave under any circumstances. They were well fed yesterday and this morning a good breakfast was sent down to them at their new camp ground near the Agricultural Park on the banks of the Jordan. Of all the transient idle men that have made Salt Lake a temporary stopping place Jesse's command is the most ungrateful.

Chief Pratt had a plain talk with Jesse, and told him that he must get out or go to work with his whole gang. The latter explained in a bland and indifferent manner that his men wanted to rest awhile here and not work. As to leaving he said they could not do that until they had been provided for. That sort of thing wasn't to be expected. The mountains could not be faced unless the men were prepared for it.

Information was received at headquarters at noon that seventy more of the Industrialists left Kayaville for Salt Lake this morning. Ten other gangs of thirty-five each are preceding them by ten or twelve miles and are due here tonight.

One of the gangs of thirty-five heretofore referred to came in from Ogden this afternoon and went down to Jesse's camp and cast their lot among his men. A consultation was held and in view of the fact that an effort would probably be made to compel them to work tomorrow they promised to take their departure from the city tonight, providing they were furnished with provisions sufficient for their immediate wants. This proposition was agreed to and this evening they will be escorted to Twelfth South street by Captain Donovan, who, when he gets to that point with the, will present them a considerable amount of bread, meat, potatoes and coffee.

The Carterite Industrialists who were marched out of Springville a couple of days ago, captured a Rio Grande train at Thistle this morning, and determined to put it to their own use. The railway men sidetracked the train and "killed" the engine. The Carterites still retain, at last advice, possession of the stolen cars and refuse to get out. They number 250. Superintendent Welby left on a special train at 8 o'clock this afternoon for the scene of the trouble.

OGDEN, May 22.—The Junction city, fortunately for its residents, is temporarily clear of the Industrial army element. But tomorrow will witness the arrival of one hundred and twenty-five more. They will not stay here very long, however, as they will push on towards Salt Lake, for which place the last batch from the coast left yesterday. On Thursday another squad is expected, and information of a reliable character is to the effect that no less than six hundred will arrive during the week. And the indications are that the influx will continue for a considerable time unless some means shall be found to call an effectual halt on the movement.

THE "ARMY" ELSEWHERE.

HYATTSVILLE, Md., May 18.—Hyattsville is thoroughly aroused over the presence of about 500 Coxeyites, who are encamped in the picturesque grove known as Little Spain, just east and outside of the town limits. Serious trouble is expected at any hour. Adjutant-General Douglass, of Maryland, was wired regarding the providing of arms and ammunition for volunteers. The citizens are determined to drive the commonwealers out of the neighborhood and are prepared to use drastic measures to accomplish that end.

Thirty deputies are patrolling the town of Hyattsville and Bladensburg. Preparations have been made at Camp Coxey for a long stay and reinforcements from Galvin's, Kelly's and Frye's divisions are expected. Brown states that 5,000 men will be encamped here inside of five days.

PHILADELPHIA, May 13.—Michael D. Fitzgerald, of Lynn, Mass., leader of the New England Industrial army, Lani Kalangrafi and Joseph Wembloth, both of this city, were arrested at a meeting tonight, held apparently as an industrial gathering. Two policemen attended it in citizen's clothes and they say the addresses, which were made mostly in Russian, called the people to tear down the government and the militia and have the red flag waving about the White House.

EDDYVILLE, Ia., May 18.—Kelly's navy made about thirty-five miles by the river measurement today, leaving Oskaloosa bridge at 1 p. m., arriving at Eddyville at 4:15 p. m. The citizens of Eddyville furnished the army with 500 loaves of bread, 500 pounds of beef and two barrels of soup. At 11 p. m. the navy broke camp and started for Ottumwa.

OTTUMWA, Iowa, May 14.—The mayor and city council met Kelly at Eddyville and told him he could expect provisions, if he camped three miles below the city. Kelly accepted the terms and the army moved from Eddyville early today.

Ten thousand people gathered to see Kelly's boats float under guard to camp.

COKEVILLE, Wyo., May 14.—The Union Pacific special train with United States Marshal Rankin and posse aboard, arrived here at six a. m. Forty-three members of the commonweal army were found occupying the seven box cars in which they arrived yesterday. They were all at once placed under arrest by the marshal. No resistance was offered. In fact, a majority of them seemed to be somewhat pleased, believing, as they did at that time, that they would be taken on to Cheyenne, 500 miles nearer their destination. All the chief officers of the army were secured, with General S. D. Breckenridge, who was arrested at Green River last night. They are, T. Colehan, Col. R. B. Breckenridge, chief of commissary, and R. T. Weed, adjutant.

It was a disappointment to the Union Pacific officials that more men were not captured, but the leaders explained that over two hundred of their number weakened after the engine and cars had been secured at Montpelier yesterday, leaving but forty-three to bring the train through. The men captured today are known as company H of the Portland division, which originally numbered 750 men. When they were discharged after their arrest at Troutdale, Oregon, they scattered out in squads and are now at various points between here and Huntington. Soon after the arrest of the commonwealers, Marshal Rankin received information that U. S. Marshal Pinkham, of Idaho, and posse were coming on board a special with warrants to take them back.

HELENA, Mont., May 14.—Hogan, the "general" who commanded the 350 Coxeyites who stole a Northern Pacific train in Butte early on the morning of April 24th and were captured at Forsythe, was sentenced to six months in the county jail. The engineer and fireman who ran the train and the forty captains and lieutenants were given sixty days each in the same jail. The other 300 will be brought into court in squads of thirty, and upon pledging their word not to engage in any more such proceedings the judge will turn them loose.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., May 14.—General Sanders decided tonight that he will not walk to Washington, but he will adopt the same method as "General" Kelly, and will sail down the Missouri to Alton, Ill., then down to the mouth of the Ohio at Cairo, from which place he will proceed to Cincinnati, where a Baltimore & Ohio train will be secured, and the army will enter Washington triumphantly over that railroad.

GREEN RIVER, Wyoming, May 15, 12:11 p. m.—The commonwealers, to the number of 150, who captured the train from the U. S. Marshal and posse at Montpelier yesterday, arrived here at 3:15 p. m. They had ridden the 143 miles in open coal cars in the crisp night air and were thoroughly chilled. When U. S. Marshal Rankin demanded the surrender of the train, no resistance was offered. They went into camp near the stock yards and each of the five companies soon had rousing bonfires at which they were warming.

12:30 p. m.—The situation in reference to the commonweal army confronting the United States authorities and the officials of the railroad, is more serious today than ever. The 150 men who arrived last night on a stolen train from Montpelier, Idaho, are still in camp at noon, but they are practically without food and are getting desperate. The people of Green River refuse to feed them. The men say they cannot starve, and they insist that the railroad company carry them on east. They are determined to ride; peacefully if they can, forcibly if they must. They have offered to surrender to the United States marshal, knowing that if they become United States prisoners, Uncle Sam will be compelled to feed them. Marshal Rankin has telegraphed Judge Riner at Cheyenne for instructions. It is his idea that the men should be arrested and taken back to Idaho and Oregon, whence they came. This could not be done, however, without the aid of the United States troops. The marshal last night asked the President for the troops at Fort Russell, Wyo., and a special train was held in readiness at Cheyenne all night to bring them here. As yet nothing has been learned what action has been taken by the authorities in Washington.

1:12 p. m.—Eight of Marshal Rankin's deputies in charge of fifteen prisoners from the commonwealth army arrested yesterday at Cokeville arrived in this city this morning at 11 o'clock. Among the prisoners was General Scheffler, who, when approached by your correspondent, denied that he had ever been in charge of the army. He said he was a stone mason and showed a membership card in the national association. He said his home was in Topeka whither he was bound when arrested. The prisoners were landed in the county jail and they shouted in chorus, when they were taken to the back door: "Keep off the grass."

GREEN RIVER, Wyo., May 15.—About 200 industrials who stole a train at Montpelier, Idaho, last night, arrived here at an early hour this morning. They abandoned the train here and went into camp nearly exhausted. The citizens refuse them provisions and it is thought they will seize another train. They are anxious to be arrested in order to reach Cheyenne.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., May 15.—Nineteen industrials, including Scheffler, were placed in jail here today by Marshal Rankin's deputies. The railroad officials have a train ready to move U. S. troops against the industrials and anxiously await orders from Washington.

2:40 p. m.—This afternoon the order came from Washington ordering the troops from Fort Russell to Green River. The train which had been in waiting all night steamed out to the fort and soldiers who had been under waiting orders quickly got aboard and the train was sent out on fast schedule time, having the right of way over everything. Four companies of the Seventeenth infantry were taken in seven coaches. They will reach Green River in nine hours.

GREEN RIVER, Wyo., May 16.—The four companies of the Seventeenth infantry arrived from Cheyenne on the special train at four o'clock this morning. The troops remained in the cars until seven o'clock, when the tents were pitched and regular military regulations were put in force. The camp was designated Camp Rankin in honor of U. S. Marshal Rankin, who is specially deserving of praise for the excellent judgment he has exercised in conducting the affairs. He apprehended the desperate company of industrials who took the train from Marshal Pinkham of Idaho and posse and held them until the troops arrived without a single mishap.

At the request of Marshal Rankin, Colonel Pollard, the commanding officer, relieved the deputy marshals this morning and placed the soldiers on guard to watch the industrials, whose camp is close to camp Rankin headquarters. Marshal Pinkham will arrive from Idaho this afternoon with warrants for the men under guard and as soon as Judge Riner can come from Cheyenne the order will be made for Marshal Rankin to turn them over to him to be taken to Boise City to be tried on the charge of larceny of a train.

The soldiers from Fort Russell arrived at Green River at 3 o'clock this morning and will aid Marshal Rankin in keeping the 200 men there under arrest. The troops will remain there until Judge Riner, who leaves for there tonight, can arrive. He will send the whole outfit back to Idaho. It is reported here that another train was stolen at Ogden this morning.

PUEBLO, Colo., May 16.—Fifty Utah industrials, whose leaders were arrested at Provo after capturing a train, arrived here today on a freight train. The remaining 400 will follow. The Rio Grande carries the men rather than have trouble with them.

OTTUMWA, Ia., May 16.—As one of Kelly's boats was coming down the river the citizens of Eldon called it ashore for the purpose of giving the men buttermilk. Deputy sheriffs employed by the Rock Island road rushed down to prevent the landing. Some one threw a stone, breaking the ribs of one of Kelly's men and rendering another unconscious. The Rock Island deputies endeavored to prevent a landing yesterday and a battle ensued. Conductor Charles Martin was struck on the head with a club and his skull fractured. Two Kellyites were arrested.

LEAVENWORTH, May 16.—Commissioner Waggener today held "General" Sanders and his army for trial, and in default of $4,000 bail each, they will be sent to jail.

KEOSAUQUA, Iowa, May 17.—Kelly's fleet reached here today and left this afternoon for Farmington, well supplied with provisions.

Kelly will perhaps go to Washington to take charge of the commonwealth armies of the United States. The difficulty at Eldon was settled by arbitration and Colonel Speed released. Eldon is still in turmoil and excitement. The citizens loudly denounce the Rock Island deputies.

CINCINNATI, May 17.—General Frye, whose command is encamped at Lawrenceburg, Ind., said today that a thousand organizers were at work and that the Industrial Army now numbers 15,000. He asserted that within sixty days he would have 200,000 in Washington.

DENVER, May 17.—An effort is being made to concentrate in this city the commonwealers from the West. Another army is being organized here. General Hegwer, commander of the Coxey home reserve, says 1000 women will march to Washington to advocate Coxey's bill.

VACAVILLE, Cal., May 17.—One hundred and fifty industrials today raided the fruit farms in Vaca valley, for the purpose of driving out the Chinese and Japanese. They took a number of prisoners and drove them ahead, mistreating them. The whole crowd is in custody.

GREEN RIVER, May 18.—Marshal Pinkham received a message from Wallace, Idaho, that Jeffreys, the leader of the Industrialists from Spokane, have rented a hall there and it is the intention to mass the men there for the purpose of capturing a Northern Pacific train. The Coeur d'Alene miners have offered assistance.

GREEN RIVER, Wyo., May 18.—The Industrials were taken before Judge Riner at 1 o'clock and upon application of the United States attorney the order for removal was made for United States Marshal Rankin of Wyoming to deliver the prisoners before the United States court of Idaho at Boise City forthwith. Two companies of the Seventeenth infantry have been detailed as an escort. The special train to transport them will leave at three o'clock this afternoon.

GREEN RIVER, Wyo., May 18.—The Industrials boarded a Union Pacific freight at Echo, Utah, today. The cars which they occupied were sidetracked. Deputies have been sent to prevent another seizure. Judge Riner accompanied by United States Attorney Fowler arrived today to give a hearing to the Idaho Industrials.

DENVER, May 18.—One hundred Salt Lake Industrials arrived in Denver today, having stolen a ride from Pueblo on the Fort Worth train.

SPOKANE, Wash., May 19.—Judge Hanford has issued an important writ to U. S. deputy marshals here. They are directed to board each east-bound freight train between Sprague and the Idaho line and warn industrials not to climb aboard. Those who disregard the warning will be arrested and conveyed to Seattle. Under this order, Deputy Marshal Hanson has sent crews of deputies all along the line and numerous arrests are expected today.

DENVER, May 19.—General Hegwer, of the Coxey home reserve, has addressed a letter to Cleveland beseeching him in the name of common humanity and good government to ask Congress for legislation to secure work to the unemployed.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—The war department has received information from Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, that the rendezvous of Industrials there threatens trouble. The seizure of a train is imminent and General Schofield has ordered the troops stationed at the post near Coeur d'Alene to assist the United States marshal in protecting the railroad property in the hands of a receiver.

MINNEAPOLIS, May 19.—A Missoula special to the Journal says four hundred and fifty Coxeyites of the Seattle-Spokane detachment captured a freight train on the Northern Pacific at Heron and started east this morning. Fifty deputies under Sheriff Ramsey left here on a special train to intercept them. The wheelers attempted to capture a train near Wallace, Idaho, but the engineer cut loose, leaving them in the cars. The situation at that point is critical.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 15.—All the differences existing between the Great Northern Railway company and its employees growing out of the recent strike were amicably settled tonight.

LONDON, May 15.—A dispatch to a news agency from Cairo says: A criminal indictment has been lodged at Paris on behalf of Egyptian notables against Count Ferdinand de Lesseps and the early directors of the Suez Canal company for the misappropriation of money. The claims amount to several million pounds and are based upon documents given under the seal of Said Pasha, the viceroy of Egypt.

NEW YORK, May 15.—Bourke Cockran created a sensation by a speech last night at the opening of the Catholic hospital. "To declare," said he, "that the Catholic church is hostile to the Republic is to declare the mother hostile to her offspring."

Turning toward the archbishop and advancing with his forefinger outstretched, he declared with impassioned eloquence that he would accept the teaching of the church from his grace with the utmost reverence; "but if the day should ever come—" here Cochran's voice rose until it echoed through the big hall—"when from the Catholic pulpit you should utter one word hostile to the integrity of this government, I will tell you that such language is heretical. You would be false to the Republic and false to the church that placed consecration oil upon your head for the blessing of your children."

A subdued murmur of astonishment ran through the hall, which was quickly followed by a great burst of applause.

RIVER FALLS, Wis., May 16.—A destructive flood is sweeping down Black River valley. A large number of dams, iron bridges and other property has been destroyed. A special from Chippewa Falls reports great destruction in Chippewa River valley. All railways report washouts and no trains from north or west will reach Milwaukee until this evening.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16.—Lodge introduced in the Senate a resolution authorizing the appointment of five senators to investigate the charges of attempted bribery of senators in connection with the pending tariff bill, and also the charges published by the Philadelphia Press Monday morning, containing allegations relating to the influence of the sugar trust upon tariff legislation. At the request of Cockrell the resolution was laid upon the table until tomorrow.

Rumors to use money to influence action on the tariff bill have been circulated but heretofore received little attention. It is learned definitely today that intimations that a money consideration could be secured for votes against the tariff have been made to the clerks of Senators Kyle and Hunton by a North Dakota lobbyist, formerly a member of Congress from a Southern state and who was identified with the carpet baggers. It was represented that Kyle should receive $14,000 and $1,000 to be retained by the go-between as his commission.

McFarlane, Kyle's clerk, promptly informed Kyle, who is now in South Dakota, and will return to Washington on Saturday. It is scarcely possible that any syndicate controlling the money necessary to attempt to purchase votes would entrust it to a man who approached the clerk.

NEW YORK, May 16.—A fire starting in the wooden building in "Jones Woods" avenue A and Sixty-eighth street, today spread over four blocks between sixty-seventh and seventy-first streets, avenue A and East river. Over $200,000 damages was done. Fifty horses were burned to death and a number of persons injured.

BOSTON, May 15.—By the torch of an incendiary tonight over a million dollars' worth of property is in ashes, over 500 families of the medium and poorer classes, consisting of over 2,000 people, are homeless, and many of them are tonight sleeping in the open air.

Women with babies in their arms, and little children huddled together have only the sky for a roof, and the few mattresses saved from the burning tenements for a bed, and no prospects of a breakfast in the morning.

The fire was started in the Boston League Park in a pile of lumber which was lying under the right field bleachers, directly back of the first base. In a moment it had leaped out to the seats and, fanned by the breeze, swept towards the grand stand.

It was several minutes before the firemen were at work. The left field bleachers were next ignited. Meanwhile the sparks had fallen upon the houses of Berlin street, and the flames surged on towards Tremont street, reaching out to the right and left until the entire square between the ball grounds and Tremont street, and extending north from Walpole street to Burke street, was a mass of burning buildings. The Sherwin kindergarten schoolhouse, a brick structure, checked the progress of the fire for only a moment. And that, too, was quickly numbered among the structures consumed.

CHICAGO, May 16.—Judge Jenkins overruled the demurrer and plea of the Chicago & Northern Pacific and Northern Pacific Railroad companies to the bill of the Farmers' Loan and Trust company to foreclose mortgage for $30,000,000 on the property of the two companies, and issued an order compelling them to plead to the merits of the bill by the first Monday in June.

NEWPORT, R. I., May 16.—The torpedo boat Cushing and Stiletto stole into harbor last night without being detected by the searchlight. The incident is regarded a remarkable naval feat, as the officers of the torpedo station were warned and made a special attempt to find the boats.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16.—The Senate, in executive session today, confirmed A. H. Snow to be postmaster at Box Elder, Utah.

LOGANPORT, Ind., May 16.—Peter Rothermel and family, Martin Carroll and family and Charles Myers and family, consisting in all of twelve persons, have been poisoned by eating cheese. Soon after eating the cheese they were taken violently ill. Physicians said they were suffering from tyrotoxicosis, or milk poisoning. None have died but three of them will hardly recover.

TUCUOLA, Ill., May 17.—Joseph Young, colored, is dead, at the age of 115 years. He claims to have been born in St. Augustine, Fla., in 1779, and was accounted the oldest man in this part of the state. He served in the late war, and took his second wife when at the age of 105 years.

ALTON, Ill., May 17.—Monticello seminary, the Vassar of the west, has a queer lawsuit on its hands. Some weeks ago Miss Harriet N. Haskett, the principal, learned that the students were receiving surreptitious notes and packages left at the store of John Roberts. She therefore prohibited the young women from going to the store. This boycott is the basis of Roberts's suit for $15,000 damages.

KUNKLE, O., May 17.—A cyclone passed one-fourth of a mile west of here at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon, killing five persons and fatally injuring two others, and slightly wounding several more.

The scene of the cyclone is a hard one to describe. Houses, fences, trees and obstructions of all kinds in the path of the storm have been carried away, and nothing is left to mark the spot where they stood except huge holes in the ground.

GALESBURG, Ill., May 17.—Professor Larkin of Knox College observatory, after watching all day the solar cyclone, says its dimensions exceed those of any storm he has seen on the sun during his career as an astronomer. It is now at its full height; its length is 86,000 miles and the width varies from 22,000 to 43,000 miles. The whole mass has a twirling, rotary motion. There are two storm centers and at a distance are spots.

RUSHVILLE, Neb., May 17.—The trip of Senator Kyle, sub-chairman of the Senate committee on Indian depredations, to the Indian reservations in South Dakota for the purpose of investigating claims against the government, is likely to result in some spicy revelations and indirectly affect certain prominent officials of the government. For some time past the Senate committee on Indian depredations has had its attention attracted to suspicious claims filed against the government, and so rapidly were they adjudicated in the court of claims that at the present time they amount to over a half a million dollars. The chances are that not one half of them will be provided for in the Senate appropriations. An inquiry is likely to be raised how judgments could be obtained on ex parte evidence. Indeed, this ex parte evidence could scarcely have been received except through the collusion and connivance of certain government officials. Among other things the testimony of some of the witnesses taken before Senator Kyle shows that prominent claim lawyers have visited the reservations and have manufactured claims against the government which have not the shadow of a foundation.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 18.—The storm which today swept Lake Michigan was the most disastrous of recent years. Eight vessels were driven ashore within the city limits of Chicago, and out of their crews ten men are known to be drowned, and in every instance boat and cargo are utterly lost. One schooner, the Myrtle, was wrecked just outside the government pier, within half a mile of Michigan boulevard, and six men of her crew went down to death in plain view of the hundreds of people who lined the boulevard walks or watched the awful storm from the windows of the big hotels which overlook the harbor.

GUTHRIE, O. T., May 18.—The Otoe Indians have closed up all fords on the reservation and erected toll bridges, compelling the people traveling overland to pay toll. The receipts have been large. The tribe is arranging to use the funds on May 20 for a ghost dance and feast. All neighboring tribes are invited.

NEW YORK, May 18.—Dr. Henry C. Meyer, charged with poisoning Ludwig Brandt to obtain the insurance, was found guilty of murder in the second degree. The penalty is imprisonment for life.

TOLEDO, May 18.—A Blade special from Amherstburg says: Two pleasure steamers, Leroy Brooks and Visitor, seized for infringing on the Canadian fishing laws, have been confiscated by the Dominion government.

MINNEAPOLIS, May 18.—A Boise special to the Journal says: The limit set by the Miner's union in the Coeur d'Alene region for all non-union men to join the union or quit work expired last night. Paddy Burke is at Wardner and says they must either quit work or fight. Governor McConnell has been advised that serious trouble is imminent and the militia is powerless. Six hundred Coxeyites are between Tekoa and Coeur d'Alene city, and if the union miners strike, the combined forces will make serious trouble.

MILWAUKEE, May 18.—The schooner M. J. Cummings, laden with grain from Chicago, foundered just south of the harbor piers this morning. The crew were in the rigging. It is reported that two men were swept overboard and drowned. The lifeboat which went to rescue the crew was driven past the wreck and capsized by the breakers at Bayview.

CHICAGO, May 19.—Thousands of spectators watched from the lake shore today the destruction of the craft beached during the storm. At Twenty-seventh street the McLaren was being pounded to pieces fifty yards from shore. Three wrecks were rolling in the breakers at Eighty-fifth street. Half a mile from shore, off Twenty-second street, two vessels were laboring in the sea. On one, thought to be the D. S. Austin, four men were seen in the rigging. The twenty-seven men on the north crib and the men at the other cribs are all safe.

PORT HURON, Mich., May 19.—The schooner William Shupe drifted helplessly all night and grounded eight miles north of the city. The tug Thompson made three unsuccessful attempts to rescue the sailors and is now out with yawl boats trying to get a line to the schooner. The Sand Beach life saving crew is going on a special train.

MANCHESTER, N. J., May 21.—An event almost without precedent will take place here Wednesday when Sheriff Chambers will sell to the highest bidder the whole town of Manchester, railroad shops, churches, schools, stores, residences—all but the citizens. This is the result of the action of the Mutual Life Insurance company of Newark, in foreclosing the mortgage held on the entire town. The mortgage was given by John Torrey, now deceased, in January, 1867. Mr. Torrey, who was a New York financier, practically founded Manchester, buying up many thousands of acres of land and laying out the town. For more than twenty years the mortgage seems to have been hidden away somewhere; people forgot all about it and property was bought and sold freely. Many of the householders are employed in the shops of the Central Railroad company and the foreclosure will prove an especially hard blow to them.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Seventeen Laplanders enroute to Alaska leave Madison, Wis., today for San Francisco, where they will take a chartered vessel for Port Clarence, Alaska, which they expect to reach on June 30.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 20.—A special to the Express from Bradford, Pa., says: The worst flood in Bradford's history is rushing through Tuna valley today. Twenty streets contiguous to the creek are inundated and hundreds of families are in the swim.

HUNTINGTON, Pa., May 20.—Within the past twenty-four hours the Juniata river and the Rextown branch have risen twenty-two feet, flooding the low farms and imprisoning entire families in their homes, who cannot be reached.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 20.—The striking miners at the Pratt mines are held responsible for the cowardly assassination which occurred at that place this morning. A mob of masked men went to the house of Walter Glover, a miner who had refused to be called out, telling him they were officers and wanted to see him. Glover opened his door, when a volley was fired. Glover's body was riddled with bullets and he died instantly.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., May 19.—A plot which for fiendishness has never been equaled in the annals of crime in this section of the country, was nipped in the bud today through the confession of one of the Keystone colliery rioters. He said the strikers had secured nine kegs of giant powder, almost enough to destroy half the city, and secreted them near the house of Foreman Heslops. This evening, had it not been for the arrest of the ring-leaders of yesterday's riot, it was the intention of the strikers to put the powder under the houses of all the bosses of the mines and set it off. The result would have been something terrible. The nine kegs of powder were secured by the officers.

PARIS, May 21.—Emile Henri, the author of the explosion in the Hotel Terminus, was guillotined at 4:04 this morning. Just as day was breaking Henri was led from the prison De la Roquette to the instrument of death. As he passed between the portals from the prison, he wore the same air of bravado that marked his conduct during the trial, and as he stepped outside the gate he cried, "Vive l'anarchie!"

ATLANTA, Ga., May 20.—General Philip Cook, secretary of state, died at 1 o'clock this morning. He was 77 years old.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., May 21.—The river continued to rise during the night and nearly the entire business portion of the city is under water. There has been no telegraphic communication with Lock Haven since 5 o'clock yesterday, when the telegraph operator was driven from the office by the flood.

SUNBURY, Pa., May 21.—The operators in the Western Union office at Williamsport were forced to abandon their instruments at 11 o'clock today. The water was four feet deep in the office.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., May 21.—Johnstown is experiencing the most disastrous flood since the big flood of May 31st, 1889. The damage will amount to at least $80,000. The Pennsylvania railroad is the heaviest loser.

It has been raining three days and at last a cloudburst occurred near Edensburg, swelling the Conemaugh to many times its natural size. The flood reached this vicinity about 3 a. m. today. At South Fork numerous small buildings were swept away. Further on, the water undermined the track of the Pennsylvania road used by the eastbound trains for almost two miles. At East Conemaugh the water beat furiously against the Pennsylvania round house and undermined the foundation. The engines were removed to a place of safety. Several bridges below Conemaugh were badly damaged.

In this city the Oklahoma house, owned by Peter Seymour, was swept away. A three-story building of P. Brown's was torn from its foundation. The iron bridge is badly wrecked. Fully $150,000 damage was done to property with the yards of the Pennsylvania passenger station. Between the freight station and the river was an artificial embankment, which gave way, carrying down the river about 200 feet of track and 50 loaded cars. In one car were five tramps, said to be members of Galvin's army. Two were drowned.

DANVILLE, N. Y., May 21.—In the Genesee valley the water is two feet above the high water mark of the great freshet five years ago. As far as the eye can see is an expanse of water, timbers and wreckage. The farmers lose hundreds of thousands in crops. Traffic is suspended on the Danville and Mount Morris railroad.

NEW YORK, May 21.—Cornelius Vanderbilt and thirty other New York millionaires will open their loan offices at Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street this morning. The organization, which will be known as the Provident Loan society, was authorized by the last legislature and originated with Rev. David H. Greer, rector of St. Bartholomews church, early in January. The society was formed with the special object of assisting the poor, and money will be loaned on personal property for the full value of the goods pledged at a rate of 1 per cent interest per month.

LIVERPOOL, May 21.—The ships are decorated from stem to stern with bunting in honor of the opening of the Manchester ship canal. The great canal which converts Manchester into a seaport was commenced November 11, 1867.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Upon the desk of Bland today was a huge bunch of la France roses bearing the inscription, "To the Next President." Paul B. Sorge, successor of the late Mr. Houck, took his seat as representative for the Third Ohio district.

SOME WORDS ON TRADE TOPICS.

Magnificent as are the prospects for agricultural abundance, and grand as the secondary rains have been; promising as is our wool crop, and systematic as are this year's arrangements for bulk shipping to the advantage of the owner—from a business standpoint this is as critical a time as any in the past, nay, it may really be more so, for with this elasticity of feeling born of hope, and the general reduction if not scarcity of supplies in the homes and camps controlled by these two great industries, there will come assuredly a certain pressure upon the storekeepers everywhere in this Territory; there will be a desire and a demand for credit until crops or returns come in, which may be greater than many can withstand; for stores are instituted for trade purposes, and while during the late pressure there may have been a good deal of caution used and much effort at collection, anxious trade is very likely to forget this past, and to feel as if now the worst had gone by, and that prosperous times were already secured because the earth is green and beautiful, because grass and grain and fruit prospects are enough to inspire the heart. But from this very estimate of abundance the wise dealer will become conservative, and question the wisdom of giving extensive credit, until there appears an outlet for this prospective surplus or superabundance which many are only too anxious to anticipate and enjoy.

Nor need aught be said that would indicate the character of an alarmist. The people have had a much needed lesson, traders have found that they could easily overreach their ability, and greater houses or firms have sensed fully that through a wide extent of credit there was a possible encroachment upon their capital, which carried with it quite an element of anxiety and risk. Scores of stores have had to cover their lingering open indebtedness by note and to buy for cash, limiting their purchases to their ability to pay, yet receiving a consequent discount which became a set-off to the interest on said notes. Through this policy, coupled with necessarily limited deal through but few houses, quite a large number of stores have avoided collapse, and are now in a condition to redeem themselves, if this caution is long enough continued. This restraint may have been irksome and unwelcome to the buyer for a store, as to the buyer for a family; but it was the only possible path of safety, as many realize today, who had probably never before been embarrassed in their business pursuits.

The man who depends upon his crops, whether wool, wheat, fruit, or other class of products, is not only inflated in feeling because of the lookout, which promises a renewal of comforts that have been in some suspense from sheer necessity; but he feels the load of indebtedness for supplies which have been long consumed, and his honor is at stake for the settlement of this claim, speedily as possible. An "old debt" is not ignored or forgotten by the honest man, any more than is "the old note" forgotten by the conscientious storekeeper; and supreme efforts should be made to cancel obligations of this character, before expending present or prospective income for supplies, even when sadly needed. As a fact "an old account" honorably settled is somewhat of a guaranty in business life, that future credit will be just as honorably and promptly met. Temptation may be altogether the other way, but the confidence that all wish for—which many say has died out—can only be sustained or secured on the basis of right and justice, if it come at all.

The people of this Territory have carried quite a load, which was perhaps unfelt when things were lively and money reachable; and the incubus of debt probably had but little terror to the majority, for when need and desire join hands, when opportunity and facility combine, when work and pay therefor seem forthcoming, when honesty and industry nerve the soul and give tone to the muscle, difficulty is overlooked; but such souls are generally sensitive and if inability to meet an obligation suddenly presents itself, it seems to paralyze rather than to incite to more exhaustive effort. This is presumed to be the characteristic of the Latter-day Saints at least. We have had occasion to know many, who if they owed a man a dollar and could not pay it, would traverse several blocks rather than meet their creditor face to face. This has been known also on a larger scale. It is the key, in fact, to the indisposition of some men in business to face the house to which they were indebted. They did not want to increase that, and have made purchases elsewhere in the hope that they would thus relieve or extricate themselves from an unpleasant position. But the first step was a false one, and instead of its proving to be the means of deliverance, it has often led to irretrievable difficulty and financial suspension. This has been seen in the wholesale trade and in the retail trade. Persons have changed—from shamefacedness—their place of deal; and for lack of true grit, of proper moral courage, have forfeited their own self-respect, and betrayed the trust and confidence of their friend.

These are conditions which environ a few in this community. The great mass of business men and buyers are of those who want to do right. They believe in honesty; they count on paying their debts; they want the confidence of their brethren, for they sense the value of unity, concord, truth and righteousness; and trickery in trade and deal, as it should be, an abomination before such men, as before the Judge of all. But human nature asserts itself from time to time with its hereditary weaknesses and probably inherited failings, right here in the gathering place, as it does elsewhere. Yet after all here is the school. The lines of progress are here also; and it will be no discredit for the people of this Territory to profit permanently by hitherto inexperienced conditions. Every wise man learns at least by suffering, if not otherwise; every thoughtful community will profit, as the individual profits—by the rigors of disagreeable experience!

Business men are not assured that money will be any too plentiful as yet, in this Territory, and they understand as a consequence that deliverance from indebtedness can only come from further prudence, economy and restraint. Many have an itching to replenish their depleted stocks, to buy liberally and freely because there is an inquiry and demand. But it is no detriment to a dealer's reputation that he buys cautiously and carefully. There is no obligation now to fill up twice a year or at any other stated time. Markets are near by, railroad facilities and freight rates are aids to the one who buys in limited quantities, and also to speak "always in the market." Besides, personal visit to the wholesale house is not as imperative as it used to be. Agents or representatives are calling all through every few days at most, and if a run is experienced on any special article, the telegraph and express are both ministers to modern trade, and vigilant business men will not hesitate in using both if trade accommodation is considered important enough at the time. There is an adaptability which makes for success whether on conservative lines or in that promptitude of action which seizes an opportunity with the rapidity of instinct, but is truly a manipulation of reserve force acquired by education and experience.

The intricacies of finance are known but to very few, and the past (?) depression has proved how little is known by the great majority of pretenders. But a man who is doing business on a small scale need not know this to perfection. He must, however, give his thought to his own affairs; he must know the amount of his own capital and how far he can enjoy credit; he can know whom to trust and the probabilities of sure collection; he must know that overreaching on his part is as fatal as overreaching is on the part of those who buy from him; he must know that a broken stock and an excessive one both work against his business interests; and he must know whether he is going to be paid in promises, in chips and whetstones, or in cash or turnable products. And the jobbing house who gives him credit expects to understand his situation, his resources, his ways of life, methods of business, and it wants to feel secure that the indebtedness will assuredly be paid according to time and promise.

Whenever there is a combination, a firm, a dealer or an individual person or customer who fails in frankness, who lacks the moral virtue of honesty, who cannot say NO in selling and buying, there is a lack of that stamina which makes the successful merchant and constitutes the decidedly honorable man!

There is nothing in all this, however, which creates any barrier to quiet, legitimate, intelligent trade. There are those who can and will buy; and all argument is simply aimed at reckless and inconsiderate forcing of business, or that inflation which is too suggestive of boom times, and which carries in its train undue anxiety and those consequences—financial and fraternal—which wisdom says we had best avoid.

IN ARIZONA AND MEXICO.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 14.

My last letter of April 20th, was written at Mesa, Arizona, at which place we held a two days' annual Sunday school conference including five largely attended meetings of parents and children, besides a Seventies' meeting, and a visit to Papage ward, four miles from Mesa, where we gave short addresses to a portion of the Pima Indians, besides singing "O my Father," by request. Sunday evening closed our labors at this place, and on Monday morning our mutual friends, Henry Rogers and C. R. Hakes, who insisted on making our short stay as interesting as possible, took us by team to Phoenix, eighteen miles, the capital of Arizona Territory, and gave us introduction to many of Arizona's officials, after which we went to see a ten acre lot beautifully laid off in shrubbery, lawns, flowers and walks, preparatory to the erection of the capitol building, shortly to be erected. We then drove four miles to the ostrich farm, where we found forty-five ostriches, weighing between two and three hundred pounds each. When their necks were erect, there was a distance of nine feet from their beak to their feet. The owner told us they could travel sixty miles an hour without apparent weariness. There was danger in approaching too near them, and a kick from them would be as dangerous or fatal as that of a horse, and when the owner himself ventured over the fence he carried a club to defend himself. Each ostrich furnishes him $40 worth of feathers annually, besides a charge of 25 cents entrance fee from each visitor. He showed us a quantity of eggs, and expected to increase his stock of ostriches this year to 100. There was going to be a race with them the following Monday; one rider was to weigh 200 pounds. I asked him how he could manage to hold himself on. He said that would be his own lookout. This was being noised through the country and some hundreds of visitors were expected. This was a very interesting visit.

We then drove to Tempe, having traveled near forty miles—our friends had eight more to travel to their homes—and we left by train at 8:30 for Maricopa, reaching Bowie at 9 o'clock the following morning.

Here we met President Layton's stage, which had two vacant seats for us to occupy, for a ride of fifty miles. Opposite Elder George Reynolds and myself sat two distinguished gentlemen, one a Catholic priest, and the other a friend of his, and at our back another passenger, and the driver, making six in all. After traveling some distance, and waiting in vain for some one to break the monotony of silence that prevailed, I ventured to open the ball for a free interchange of thought and sentiment. I told them that we had met for the first time in our lives as strangers in that stage, and had to continue for some hours in each other's company; and unless we revealed the fact as to who we were and where we came from, we should still be strangers when we separated. I then told them my name, where I was born and when, including other leading incidents of my life to the present time. I called on my esteemed colleague, George Reynolds, to follow suit which he promptly responded to, after which the young man opposite Brother Reynolds did the same, and a remarkable incident was made manifest, viz.: that the father of that young man was once a guest in the same hotel that Brother Reynolds was staying at for nearly two years. My friend opposite dotted down a good many items in his pocket book, as they fell from our lips, but he only blushed when pressed to tell us his name, etc.; he was proof, against all our entreaties, until we reached Solomonville (his destination) when we learned that his name was Zimmerman.

Soon after delivering our silent friend, we reached the headquarters of St. Joseph Stake, at Thatcher, Graham county, and the residence of President Christopher Layton, who was at home and gave us a hearty welcome. While here several preparatory meetings were held with the presidency and Stake superintendents, board of education, Seventies, etc.

At Pima, four miles distant from Thatcher, having the largest meeting house, our two days' Sunday school conference was held, to overflowing audiences. Here also we met our friend Andrew Jensen, proverbial for his industrious habit of secluding himself from intrusion while condensing historic facts of every place he visits.

After our Sunday night's Seventies' meeting at Thatcher, we bade adieu to our friends in St. Joseph Stake and traveled a few miles towards the fifty we had traveled over a few days before. We stayed at Layton, and the following day (Monday) we finished our fifty mile ride, reaching Bowie about 6 p.m. Here we stayed for the night, and on Tuesday, May 1st, we left by train at 8 a.m. and reached Deming at 12:40.

Here we found Brother Richardson, superintendent of Dias Sunday school, with a team to take us to that place, a distance of one hundred miles. After a chat with Mr. Fawson Smith, engineer of the John W. Young railway, we left at 8:30. Forty miles from Deming we reach the Mexican custom house, in which are five or six clerks, none of whom can speak English; but our driver being a good Spanish scholar we managed to pass their scrutiny without any delay.

During our one hundred mile travel by team into Mexican territory we camped out twice. There was nothing particularly surprising or interesting in the surrounding country except that that the roads for the most part are remarkably good. For many miles we traveled on the John W. Young railroad track, it being solid and level, though in many places it is considerably demoralized by washouts. To avoid the monotony of slow travel, my esteemed companion, George Reynolds, of inventive genius notably, hit upon the following suggestion: that I act as proxy and sing one verse of each song from my book, and not until I had sung about fifty could I be honorably released. Our mode of travel was to go slow, bait often, camp late, and start soon after daybreak. Our team was sure footed, and needed only the kind attention of an excellent driver to reach the end of our hundred mile ride.

At 1 o'clock we reached Diaz and were made welcome at the house of Brother W. D. Johnson, father of Bishop Johnson. At 2 o'clock we held a Seventies' meeting, and at 5 o'clock a meeting of the parents and children.

After a good night's rest we bade adieu to our friends, Friday, May 4, at 6:30 a.m.; we entered another carriage with a fresh team, sent from Juarez on purpose to take us the balance of the journey, Elder Joseph Bentley late of St. George, being our welcomed driver. After twelve hours' travel we arrived at Dublin. Winslow Farr is Bishop, and under his hospitable roof we ate, slept and rested, about fifty-five miles from Diaz.

Saturday, 5th—Up at 5, started at 6:30 and reached Juarez at 11 a.m.; had a good wash and dinner at our old friend Stowell's late of Ogden, but as President George Teasdale had been expecting us to share his hospitality, we repaired to his house, and under his quiet roof enjoyed three good nights' rest. At 8 o'clock, we attended a Primary meeting; Sunday and Monday, the 6th and 7th, held five Sunday School conference meetings, one Seventies' meeting and a social impromptu meeting composed of the leading brethren and sisters, also the choir, at which vocal and instrumental music and short addresses made a very pleasing and enjoyable entertainment.

Tuesday, May 8, at 7 o'clock a.m. we left Juarez on our homeward journey. Reaching Dublin (18 miles) the funeral service of Sister Call, who died two days previous, was about to be held, and we each spoke on the occasion, after which we resumed our travel and arrived at Deming on Friday, May 12, at 12:30, just in time to reach the train for Colorado Springs, where we arrived on Saturday afternoon, and had to remain until Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, at which time we started homewards, arriving in Salt Lake City, Monday, May 14th.

Four weeks ago last Friday night, we left our homes for the purpose of holding annual Sunday School conferences in Maricopa, St. Joseph and Mexico. We have held at least thirty meetings, and traveled about four thousand miles, five hundred of them by team. We have met with a host of friends, whose recollection of us dated from 20 to 40 years ago, and the majority of them as Sunday School children now parents and grandparents. Owing to the minute description of country and settlements recently published by Elder Andrew Jensen, no mention is made of them in this communication.

The interest manifested by both parents and children and leading authorities in every place we have visited, affords a very pleasing indication that these annual conferences will be highly beneficial to the institution we were sent to represent.

With gratitude and thankfulness to God our Heavenly Father for preserving our lives, limbs and health from injury, and many thanks to the legion of friends who have so generously ministered to our comfort, this communication closes with an earnest desire and prayer that our feeble efforts may be crowned with the blessing of God, to His honor, and the good of the rising generation of Zion.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

I noticed in a late number of the Salt Lake Daily Herald an article in the editorial columns under the caption "Equal Suffrage Movement," in which are pointed out what the writer considers mistakes made by some of the advocates of female suffrage. The writer does not seem to think the present an opportune time for pressing the claims of women to the elective franchise in Utah. If such is the opinion of the Herald, I very respectfully but emphatically dissent. I have believed, and still believe, that the people of Utah, or a majority of them, are in favor of equal suffrage. As for many years the laws of Utah recognized the right of women to vote, I assume that the people were in favor of the law, otherwise it would have been repealed by the Legislature and not been permitted to stand until the Congress, under the reserved right to annul a territorial statute, did so.

We are all looking forward to the time when Utah shall become a state, possessing full power to say who may become electors within the state. Such being the condition, I believe the present is the time to discuss the question, in order that the people may be prepared, through a constitutional convention, to settle the question.

I will say here, that I dissent from the implied doctrine that before women are endowed with the franchise a majority of the women must be converts to the doctrine. I know such has been an argument made use of by anti-equal suffragists, but it has no force; if one woman desires to vote, and is entitled to vote, she ought to do so, even though every other woman in the United States is opposed to equal suffrage.

Now as to rights: I entertain the opinion that the Constitution of the United States was foreshadowed by, and really had its origin in, the principles enunciated in that admirable document so familiar to all patriotic citizens, the Declaration of Independence, from which I beg you to allow me to make a quotation applicable as I think to this great question:

We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain undeniable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That, to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

It is not necessary to refer to a dictionary for the purpose of proving that the term "men" is not, and that it cannot be, confined to males, as we all know that the term includes persons, people and mankind of both sexes. Hence, men and women are created equal, according to Jefferson and his illustrious colleague, whose signatures are attached to that immortal political creed; according to this creed women possess the same unalienable rights that men have. Amongst those rights are "liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

If women are the equals of men, they have an inalienable right to liberty. How can they be free if the government under which they live debars them from a natural right which it grants to men?

If this government deprives women of the right to consent or object to laws by which they are governed, it cannot be truthfully said that those laws are just; and if the powers granted by them discriminate against woman because of her sex, it is clear that woman is robbed of an "inalienable" right. In this case we do not speak the truth when we assert that this government is one of the people, by the people and for the people; it would be more true to say that it is a government of women by men.

Such being the views of this writer on the subject of the franchise in question, it seems to me to be quite important for the people of Utah, if they desire to obtain equal suffrage, that they should take steps to do so at the first opportunity to insert in the Constitution a clause to that effect; it can be done at that time much more easily than to wait until some future time to amend the Constitution.

The Herald says that they (the women) "should cease to demand as a right that which men hold as a privilege;" "that there is no inherent right to the franchise in either sex," etc. Such may be the case, and it is doubtless true, as the Herald asserts, that the right to vote is conferred by law; but when a law is enacted by men, assuming a right which it denies to women, it is legitimate to inquire whether such law is founded upon the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence.

I do not like to take issue with the Herald, and hope to be pardoned for doing so in the present instance, nor would I have done so, but under the circumstances I feel that it is best for the people of Utah now to get ready for the future, and I feared that the remark of the Herald might have the effect to induce the people to waive what I believe to be an unalienable right of the mothers and daughters of Utah.

OFFICIAL CHANGES, MARICOPA STAKE

MESA CITY, Ariz., May 11, 1894.

The Saints of the Maricopa Stake of Zion all join in thanksgiving and praise to their Maker for the manifestations of His blessing to them during the special Priesthood and conference meetings held at Mesa the 9th and 10th inst., where they had assembled ostensibly for the purpose of reorganizing the Stake, and to listen to the word of God as delivered to them through His servants, Elders Brigham Young and John Henry Smith, of the Council of the Apostles, who arrived in our midst the morning of the 9th inst.

The Saints gathered en masse under the bowery and sustained by their unanimous vote the following officers, who had been previously appointed: Collins R. Hakea, president of Maricopa Stake; Henry C. Rogers, first, and James F. Johnson, second counselors; Harvey J. Harper as High Counsellor to fill the vacancy caused by the death of John M. Lewis; Chas. C. Dana, Walter B. Lewis and Joseph E. Johnson as alternate members of the High Council. Hyrum S. Phelps second counselor in High Priests' quorum; Amos Hawks second counselor to Bishop Hunsaker of Alma ward; James M. Horne as Bishop of Mesa ward, with David T. LeBaron and Warner H. Allen as counselors. The cause necessitating the change in the Bishopric of the Mesa ward was the growing deafness of Bishop Wm. Passey, who through this sad affliction felt that he was rendered incompetent in many respects to perform the duties of his office. He was honorably released, with the good will and blessings of the people whom he had so faithfully served.

The services being over, quite a number of the Saints drove to Lehi, where Soren C. Sorensen and Miss Margaret A. Macdonald, were united in the holy bands of wedlock, Elder Young officiating. After which the visiting brethren were taken to the depot, boarding the evening train bound for the Gila valley and Mexico, carrying with them the prayers and blessings of a grateful people.

Brother Andrew Jensen has been with us for the past few days searching our records, and straightening us up generally in record keeping.

AMONG THE MILLERS.

Wheat now demands double the price offered in some some sections of the country six months since, and the market is now stiff at 70 cents. The grain is also getting scarce, and a still further rise of 2 to 5 cents is anticipated by some of the dealers. Others, however, think the limit is about reached as to wheat, though a still further rise in the best grades of flour seems inevitable, as the mills cannot pay present prices for wheat and sell at present rates for flour without a loss.

Last fall some local capitalists bought heavily of wheat and stored it for the present occasion. One man who purchased largely at 45 cents per bushel today disposed of 10,000 bushels at the prevailing price. Some are holding for a still higher figure.

There is some talk of shipping in Kansas wheat if the Utah supply runs short or the holders ask too high prices for the millers to touch. It is said that Kansas wheat can be laid down here at 71 cents per bushel. As it is much inferior, however, to the Utah grain, it will be used only for lower grades of flour, while the better grades will be of Utah wheat. It is hardly probable, though, that the local market will become so close as to need any Kansas grain.

The Pioneer roller mills of Elias Morris & Co. are starting up this week and will make a good run. They have been closed some time, but by about the end of the week will be in full operation producing first class flour and other grain products, as the mills have a large supply of the best quality of grain.

The Thatcher mills of Logan have added a new brand to their mill products—that of whole wheat flour. A carload of this brand has been brought to the Salt Lake branch house, and is a most excellent article.

The millers hold their meeting next Saturday afternoon, and in the present condition of the market it is expected that some interesting business will be attended to, though but little of it will belong outside of the ranks of the millers and dealers.

William F. Fennimore, ex-county clerk and clerk of the superior court at Port Townsend, Wash., has been convicted of embezzling $527 intrusted to his charge. Fennimore was a prominent citizen. He made no defense to the charges.

Local prospectors are anxiously awaiting the disappearance of snow from the hills, says the Saratoga (Wyo.) Sun, and two weeks more will see many of them actively engaged in prospecting and others developing prospects that they have already located in the surrounding country.

Last February a well-dressed woman left a little boy at one of the charitable institutions at Charleston, S. C. She promised to call a few weeks later and pay board, but nothing has since been heard about the mother. It is now supposed that the boy, who is about 6 years old, was stolen from California.

A Japanese was found dead on the desert near Mojave one day last week with a bullet hole in his head. It now transpires that he was from Los Angeles and was going to the Midwinter Fair. He had a couple of hundred dollars in his pocket when he started, but no money was found on the body.

In pumping out wells Nos. 1 and 4, on their property at Salt Creek, says the Casper (Wyo.) Tribune, the Pennsylvania Oil company have struck an inexhaustible vein of natural gas. It is of a superior quality for both fuel and illuminating purposes. It is being used at the oil well for generating steam.

The Great Western Canal company has located a reservoir near the east lateral of the Great Western, about a mile and a half below town, observes the Idaho Falls Times. It will have an area of about 100 acres and its average depth will be about twelve feet. William Matthews has the contract to construct the same and already has a force of men and teams at work.

One hundred factory girls employed in Levi Strauss's clothing factory at Sacramento, Cal., went on a short and successful strike Monday. The firm made a general cut of from 10 to 45 cents a day on all wages, and as the girls only earn $1 a day, they would not stand it. Strauss compromised with the girls, and only half of the proposed reduction will be made.

The Paris (Idaho) Post says: Bishop West met with a painful accident

Monday last. While loading some cartridges he by mistake undertook to extract the cap from one which had been loaded with powder, resulting in the explosion of the same, taking off one of his fingers and lacerating his hand somewhat. He had the hand dressed in Montpelier and is now getting along all right.

Important changes have been begun in regard to the method of operating a number of the street car lines in the business portions of San Francisco. After nearly forty years of continuous service, the Third street horse cars are to be withdrawn from that thoroughfare, and for the next seven months that street will be without cars. When cars are again seen on Third street they will be propelled by electricity.

At the White Ash mine near Los Cerrillos, N. M., on Monday, a terrible explosion occurred, and two victims of the disaster lie in a perilous condition. The report was heard by other miners in the same entry, who went to their rescue, and upon arriving upon the scene of the explosion found the two men buried beyond recognition. Their almost lifeless forms were taken out as soon as possible and medical aid summoned.

Francis B. Henslowe, an English rancher of San Quentin, Lower California, was robbed in a most unusual manner on Monday evening at San Diego, Cal., when under the influence of liquor. He was suddenly encircled in the dark with a lariat, which tightened about his neck and choked him, while he was dragged from the street and sandbagged. On recovering consciousness he found his watch and money gone.

A week ago Oscar Dalrymple Jr., of Preston, Idaho, a young man 23 years of age, noticed that he was suffering with a cracked lip, as though from a cold. He rubbed it considerably, and the result was that it swelled, until by Sunday his face had assumed mammoth proportions. On Monday morning the young man died, the cause being blood poisoning. The sad and fatal termination to what appeared a trivial matter was a hard blow to his family and friends, says the Paris Post.

The cattlemen of the Saratoga valley, remarks the Wyoming Sun, claim that the sheepmen are running the range and will soon drive the cattle industry from the country. They say the sheepmen extend their ranges and keep encroaching year by year, until there is hardly a stream south of the Encampment, on either side of the river, that is not in their possession. The cattlemen of Snake river have organized and issued an ultimatum to the sheepmen of that locality.

It seems as though the repeated deaths on the Colorado desert, says the San Francisco Chronicle, ought to enforce the lesson on all prospectors and travelers of the absolute necessity of a good supply of water. Most of the men who have lost their lives on these desolate sands have neglected this essential part of their equipment. To take an extra pack animal for water would not entail much expense and it would probably save the lives of those who may lose their way or fail to find water in the usual holes or springs.

A young woman has been arrested at Sacramento, Cal., for wearing men's attire. Her name is Ardelia M. Benham and her home is in Indiana, where she has well-to-do relatives who keep her supplied with money. She left home a few years ago and went to California, where she stayed at a hotel in Red Bluff, subsequently rendering service as a waitress. While acting in this capacity she became infatuated with a Red Bluff citizen named Harry Glass. They agreed to run away together and in order to disguise herself she donned male attire.

A very interesting surgical operation has just been performed at Cowley's Pacific Sanatorium, Los Angeles, Cal. It consisted of removing an abdominal tumor of the variety known as lobular fibroma, and was the largest ever taken out in Southern California, weighing thirty pounds. The patient was an Indian woman belonging to Agua Caliente reservation 2 at Palm Springs, and it is the first instance where an Indian has consented to leave the reservation and travel into town for medical aid.

Some time during the early hours of Tuesday morning, says the Laramie, Wyo., Boomerang, parties broke one of the fine stained glass windows at the rear of the Catholic church and entering the edifice went to the tabernacle at the rear of the altar, where the valuable and cherished articles of the church are kept and stole some of the articles and scattered others about the altar. The sacrament was scattered about. After completing this work the parties went out of the front doors of the church, leaving them open. Some of the most valued articles of the tabernacle, so far as their intrinsic worth is concerned, were not disturbed. The damage and loss are given at $200.

The main line of the Burlington system, says the Cheyenne, Wyo., Leader, will soon be pushed from Sheridan west to Yellowstone park, either through it or south of it to Boise, and thence to San Francisco. The Montana branch, now under construction and to be completed by October 15th next, makes direct connection with all the Northern Pacific points, including Portland and Puget Sound cities and by a further advance of 125 miles to Great Falls, direct connection with the Great Northern will be made for all western points. The small reduction in wages, considering that employment will be given when it is so badly needed and considering that the climate in this particular region of country is most delightful, excellent camping places and purest water in the world, etc., will not be antagonized by any fair-minded people.

Two fishermen will never forget the sixteen-hour struggle they had for life on the bottom of a boat while drifting, says the San Francisco Chronicle, about San Francisco bay. They are Ballito Bartali and Manuel Recotal. On Monday evening at 6 o'clock, when the wind was blowing twenty-eight miles an hour, they were coming down the bay from the direction of San Mateo. When off Hunter's point a small squall struck their boat and it capelized. Both caught hold of the keel, and then they drifted all over the bay. The wind blew them back toward Redwood City, and all night long they suffered in the darkness. When day broke they were too weak to shout or raise themselves up high enough on the boat to give a signal. They were missed by the other fishermen, and as soon as the wind died down six boats put out. The men were finally discovered by some comrades between Angel and Alcatraz islands. Bartali was more dead than alive. He could not move nor speak. Both men were brought ashore, given some whisky and taken to their homes.

THREE SCORE AND TEN.

OGDEN, Utah, May 17, 1894.—Shortly after 8 o'clock last evening a large number of ladies and gentlemen met at a rendezvous previously designated, and thence silently wended their way to the residence of our highly esteemed friend and fellow citizen—Hon. D. H. Peery, and sprung on him a genuine surprise. The 18th of May is a memorable day in the history of our valued friend. On that day in the year of our Lord 1824 he made his advent on this mundane sphere; hence he has now attained the honorable age of three score and ten. This host of friends had filed into the spacious parlors of his house to congratulate him on the important event and to sincerely wish him many happy returns of the day.

Among those present on the occasion were Governor Caleb W. West, Secretary C. C. Richards and wife, Hon. F. D. Richards and wife, Hon. Lorin Farr, L. W. Shurtliff and their wives, Ex-Mayor David Eccles, H. S. Young, Esq., and Mrs. Young, of Salt Lake City, Judge C. F. Middleton, John Watson, Esq., Manager Z. C. M. I. Ogden, the Bishops of the city wards and many others.

After he had recovered from the first effects of the sudden invasion and welcoming his visitors, the company settled down to an evening's social enjoyment. Bishop Robert McQuarrie acted as master of ceremonies. For several hours the time was spent in mirth and music, song and sentiment, and brief congratulatory addresses, in which some of the speakers recounted many interesting incidents in the history of D. H. Peery. He was a victim of the civil war, in which his home was burned and much other valuable property was destroyed, and he was reduced financially during the fratricidal strife. In 1864 he came to Utah, where by his activity and under the blessings of divine Providence he amassed a large fortune, rose to distinction and established a character for truth and intelligence, integrity and honor. He has done much to build up this city. He has used his accumulated wealth well, having spent many thousands of his money to provide employment for the industrious poor. At the present time he has in course of erection or nearing completion, a large mansion, on which he is spending heavy sums, the major portion of which finds its way to many of the laboring classes of Ogden city, and who otherwise would have been living in enforced idleness, and their comforts and even necessities of life would have been much abridged. By his upright course he has established himself in the confidence and love of those who know him best. He has filled many offices of trust and responsibility in city, county and Territory, civil and ecclesiastical, in all of which he has acquitted himself with honor. Such were the testimonies borne and congratulations offered by many distinguished citizens who greeted him on the seventieth anniversary of his natal day.

Our friend, in attempting to respond to the spontaneous expressions of the good will of his guests, was so far overcome by his emotions that it was with difficulty that he was able to express his heartfelt appreciation of their manifestations of affectionate regard for him.

After partaking of a hospitable repast, bountifully prepared by his amiable wife, and listening to several recitations charmingly rendered by his talented daughter, Miss Lulu, the company dispersed, each one feeling that it was an occasion never to be forgotten.

SPECTATOR.

SHEEP OVER THE BORDER.

There is one very prominent feature in all of the clatter and din raised by over-apprehensive Coloradans on account of a few herds of Utah sheep crossing the state line from this Territory, that has never, for some reason, been brought out, and that is that a great many Colorado sheep graze on the ranges of Utah from four to six and even eight months in the year, without any talk, trouble or noise being raised over the matter.

A News reporter Wednesday evening met Mr. John A. Sharp, a well known Salt Lake county sheep man who has just returned from another trip to his flocks on the eastern borders of the Territory. He reports that they are doing very well as are the herds of other Utah men in that vicinity. Mr. Sharp is of the opinion that Colorado has acted altogether unbecomingly a neighbor in the recent attempt to prevent Utah men from crossing the state line with their herds.

Mr. Sharp says he knows personally of two or three different Colorado sheep men who winter from 15,000 to 20,000 head in Utah every year; that there has never been any objection raised on this side of the line to such a proceeding, at least as far as he knows, not even when such herds are taxed in Colorado, as they invariably are. Large herds of cattle are likewise brought on to Utah domain to graze, and while interested citizens in this Territory have felt that their rights were trampled on to a certain extent they have never created a hullabaloo about it.

In the face of these facts he cannot understand why a hue and cry has been raised about two herds of Utah sheep that were driven into Colorado territory. The Utah sheep now there are owned by B. T. Clark, of Provo, and Hyrum Eardin, of Pleasant Valley. Those gentlemen, like other Utah men, are willing to pay tribute in the shape of taxes for the few months each year they would keep their herds in Colorado.

To remove those two flocks Governor

Waite at one time proposed to call out the state troops, and armed bodies of men have kept vigil along the dividing line of the two commonwealths during the entire spring for fear that a stray lamb raised in the valleys of the Wasatch or on the great desert might turn its nose towards Pike's Peak for summer grazing.

DELEGATE RAWLINS AT HOME.

FROM SATURDAY'S DAILY, MAY 19.

Among the Utonians who came in from the East on this morning's Union Pacific passenger train were Hon. Joseph L. Rawlins, Utah's Delegate in Congress, and his family. Mr. Rawlins's arrival this time was not unexpected as is usually the case when he takes occasion to cut loose from his official duties at the Nation's capital and run home for a few days to attend to private business matters. The announcement of his coming, however, was not given publicly by himself but was rather the work of Washington newspaper men, who are very alert in securing information that will interest everyone.

Mr. Rawlins says that his stay will be brief and that he will return to Washington in a week or ten days. He was found at his office by a representative of the News early in the day and in the absence of his partner, Mr. Critchlow, who is on a visit to California, he was working away as though he had some important legal case in hand. He readily and pleasantly yielded to an interview.

Concerning the Utah statehood question Mr. Rawlins said: "All things considered it is in a very promising and satisfactory condition."

"How did it happen that such unexpected action as that which occurred a few days ago was taken?" in regard to it asked the newspaperman.

Mr. Rawlins smiled as he responded:

"There was nothing unexpected or surprising about it so far as I was concerned, as I have been assured all along that the bill would pass the Senate this session. Four weeks ago I called upon Senator Faulkner, chairman of the Senate committee on territories, and he informed me at that time that the measure would be reported in three weeks, and it was. I have no reason whatever to doubt its passage before Congress adjourns. In fact I am sure that it will pass as is indicated in the amendment providing for the election of delegates to the constitutional convention in November next. The report upon it was unanimous. No senator claims to have any objection to early admission for Utah. Very many urge that there shall be no delay and will shape their efforts accordingly."

"When, in your opinion, Mr. Rawlins," asked the reporter, "will the bill receive attention again?"

"At the earliest possible moment after the tariff question has been disposed of."

"And when is that likely to be?"

"Not later, I think, than the first of July next. Positive and unqualified promises have been made to me that it will receive consideration at that time."

"What has caused the delay thus far and why have you been despondent and despairing over the statehood matter?" was the next query.

Again Mr. Rawlins smiled. He answered the latter part of the query in the following language: "I have had no doubts or misgivings nor have I been in despair or any state of feeling approaching that condition. I have already told you that I had assurances all the time that the bill would be taken up. I was urgent in getting it on the calendar and I am very glad it is there."

In commenting further upon it Mr. Rawlins said that no substantial change had been made in the bill as it passed the House, except as to the date for holding elections. The House bill left these indefinite. Now they are fixed. The delegates to the constitutional convention will meet in February or March.

As to the Indian reservation bill Mr. Rawlins said it would also pass and become law this session of Congress. It will be taken up for consideration as soon as the appropriation bill has been got out of the way. He expected to get them through before he came home this time but the chairman of the committee on appropriations objected to their consideration by unanimous consent. He is not, however, opposed to its passage, but on the contrary, is favorable when in his opinion the time comes. It was introduced simultaneously in the Senate and House. There are 1,021 Indians on the Uncompahgre reservation and 888 on the Uintah. In the latter there are 2,400 acres of land to each Indian in the tribe or 10,000 acres to each head of a family of four persons. Under the general allotment act each head of a family will get 160 acres of land. Other members of the tribe will get 80 acres.

The bill granting a site of 60 acres from the Fort Douglas reservation for the Utah University will be taken up and passed by unanimous consent very soon after the tariff bill has been disposed of.

As to the Colorado Ute question Mr. Rawlins says Utah will have no more trouble with that. The Colorado people have decided that it would be worse than useless to press the matter further. The Colorado senators and representatives met and prepared a bill which provides for the rejection of the treaty under which they sought to have the Indians removed to this Territory. It likewise allots to the Utes land in severalty. Forty by fifteen miles are set apart for such as are not able to take land otherwise.

"As to the Wilson tariff bill," said Mr. Rawlins, "It is not such a measure as I would have framed. But it is a step in the right direction and a great improvement on the McKinley bill, and the country will be much better off by its passage."

"The sentiment of the people of the east is becoming very favorable to the free coinage of silver. Bimetallism has won many staunch friends the last six months. I think the next general Democratic convention will declare in favor of the free coinage of silver in clear and unmistakable terms. The state convention of Missouri has done so. Illinois conventions have done so. Indiana will do so and the Southern states can be relied upon to do the same thing."

Speaking of Presidential possibilities Mr. Rawlins said that although it was a little early to do any speculating, it would not surprise him to see his party nominate Senator Bland from Missouri.

Asked as to whether he did not think Mr. Bland was too far south and west to hope for that, he replied in the negative, and added that that kind of a feeling was fast disappearing.

As the time for Utah to elect another delegate to Congress is rapidly drawing near and as Mr. Rawlins's name has been suggested quietly in the councils of his party as their candidate to succeed himself, he was asked what he had to say in regard to the matter. His reply came quick and emphatic. It was, "I am not a candidate for re-election."

"Not in case it thrust upon you?"
"No, sir; I am not in the race. I have felt all along that just as soon as I had served out my term I would return to my law office and resume the practice of my profession."

With the answering of that question the interview ended, Mr. Rawlins saying that he would watch the action of Congress very close while here and be ready to leave for Washington at a moment's notice.

EMERY STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Emery Stake of Zion was held in Ferron ward, May 6th and 7th, 1894. Present on the stand, Elder Heber J. Grant, of the Council of the Apostles, the Stake presidency and many of the Bishops and leading officers of the Stake.

Conference convened at 10 a.m., President Larsen presiding. After the usual opening exercises, President Larsen gave a clear and comprehensive report of the condition of the Stake. The presidency had visited all the wards but three since our last conference; Stake organizations were completed, and peace and good will generally prevailed; the Saints seem to be avoiding law suits and all kinds of litigations; financially, the Stake is embarrassed, but the health of the people is good and no one seems to be without food.

Elder Grant then addressed the meeting. He gave some statistics from the Juvenile Instructor, showing the enormous waste of means in the United States for intoxicants and warned the Saints against the use of what God had forbidden. Providence has placed within our reach the means to make us happy if rightly utilized. We are complaining of hard times but they will continue to grow worse unless we change our manner of living. The support of home industries was then urged forcibly upon the people. The speaker gave several practical illustrations showing that prejudice prevents us from using home-made articles. "Faith without works is dead," hence we should be practical.

At 2 p. m. the Sacrament was administered by the Priesthood of Ferron. General and Stake authorities were presented and unanimously sustained.

Elder Grant occupied the remainder of the meeting. He read from Doctrine and Covenants, pages 219 and 461, commenting thereon. He spoke on the Word of Wisdom, the need of humility and prayer, education, etc.

Second day's services: Broe. F. Olsen, of Ferron; Wm. G. Pettey, of Emery; and H. P. Rasmussen, of Molen, reported their wards as in fairly prosperous condition, except carelessness in attending meetings. Elder John Curtis, a recently returned missionary, next spoke interestingly on the Gospel.

Brother Grant then continued his instructive discourse on living topics, and showed the folly of fault-finding.

In the afternoon Elders Seely and Howard, of the Stake presidency, made many encouraging remarks. Elder Grant spoke against card playing and round dancing, also explained many of the beauties of the Gospel. President Larsen made closing remarks, exhorting the Saints to diligence in serving the Lord.

The weather was fine, and the meetings well attended. The Ferron choir furnished excellent singing, under the direction of Prof. Thomas.

A. E. WALL, Stake Clerk.

HOME MADE BY Z. C. M.

The beneficial results of the late home industry agitation are apparent in nearly all branches of local manufacture, and the prospects for the future are steadily growing brighter. An instance of what is going on may be cited in the shoe business in connection with Z. C. M. I. shoe factory. A while ago that institution was overloaded, but with the home industry movement the trade in home-made shoes has so revived that the factory is now eight to ten thousand pairs of shoes behind its orders. The factory has been running full handed and full time in the endeavor to meet the demand, but the 400 pairs a day produced were not equal to the occasion. As a result the factory hands are placed on increased time, and consequently increased pay. The factory now starts in to run to 9 o'clock every night, the making of overtime being an imperative necessity to meet the present demands. It would take the factory twenty-five days to catch up in its regular business.

The overall factory also is meeting with an excellent run. It is kept going at its full capacity and in regular work for all the employees that can be accommodated. The present indication is that it will be kept going thus for some time.

Now that the home industry move is being taken up by the people generally, eastern manufacturers are seeking to reap some advantages by branding goods as home-made, and thus endeavoring to gain custom. Occasionally a merchant lends himself to the scheme; but people can avoid being imposed upon by closely examining the goods and by patronizing only reputable dealers.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Jas. H. Merrill of Smithfield, Cache county, reached this city from Samos, where he has spent the last three years as a missionary, having left for his field of labor on March 1, 1891. He enjoyed good health while absent and was prospered in his labors. He was ac-accompanied by his wife, who died in the missionary field about three months after their arrival in Samoa. Brother Merrill is glad to be home and has enjoyed his mission.

The NEWS received a call May 16 from Elder Thomas B. Brighton, of the Eleventh ward of this city, who returned on Sunday evening from a mission to Great Britain. He left this city April 6, 1892, and with Elder George Y. Smith, of Smithfield, Cache county, who went and returned with him, received an appointment to labor in the Scottish conference. There they remained till released to come home. They were well treated by the people in the various districts where they did missionary work, and met with fair success. They made the homeward voyage on the Alaska.

The NEWS received a call from Elder Keplar Sessions, of Chesterfield, Bingham county, Idaho, who is on his way home from a mission to the United States. He departed on his mission March 29, 1892, and was assigned to labor in the North Carolina conference, where he has been engaged in missionary work for more than two years, meeting with good success. He was generally well treated by the people, though he had some experience with mobs. After his release to return home he went to Colfax, Guilford county, for his valise, to start westward with. He had been previously ordered out of that place, and on the mobocrats learning of his presence there, again gathered, threatening to do him bodily injury. A number of friends, however, came to his relief, afforded the necessary protection until he had time to gather his effects, bid the people good bye and depart on the regular train. Elder Sessions says that in many sections the prejudice against the Saints has been greatly modified during the past year.

OBITUARY NOTES.

OWEN P. JONES.

Brother Owen P. Jones died in Brigham City, Jan. 3, 1894, of pneumonia. He was sick about four days, but was about to the last day or two before he died. At the funeral people turned out from far and near. The speakers were Elders R. Clawson, Charles Kelly, Alvin Nichols, John D. Peters and Bishop Valentine. They all dwelt on the good character of Brother Jones, saying what a wonderful man he was and how everybody in town would miss him. He was around every day no matter how cold or windy or rainy the weather, as he carried the mails in this city for twenty-five years.

Brother Jones was blind, but knew every place in town and most every family and person in the place; not only was he well known here but also from one end of the Territory to the other. No doubt people would wonder very much how he could, being blind, carry the mails. He had the postmaster or some one else to read the addresses to him and he would arrange them so that he could commence at a certain point and going in a certain direction his letters or papers would come in rotation. If he met anyone on the street asking him for a letter or a paper he knew where to find it, for he remembered where he put it.

He was so well acquainted with the town that some times in the night he would come across a person who had got lost and he would lead them home. Once a lady was coming home late one dark, stormy night, and happened to come along. He knew her voice. She was trying to cross a water ditch and was seeking for the bridge. He said, calling her by name, "what are you doing here this time a night?" "I have been to the entertainment," she said, "and I am trying to find my way home but I am quite lost." "Well," said he, "you will never get home this way. You are going away from home. Come with me and I will show you the way, and so he did."

He seemed to enjoy the very best of health for many years until about one week before he died, and looked as though he might live to be very old. He took a very bad cold which terminated in his death. He was very much for helping himself and others so far as he could. Before he took to carry the mail he used to go round after the threshing machine with his fanning mill to fan the grain and clean it, for the threshing machine then did not do that. He also used to put rush bottoms in chairs; in fact was very handy at most anything.

He was fond of having some one to read to him. He would buy and borrow books and papers and take them around to different ones to get them read. He had a good understanding of literature and music, both vocal and instrumental; and in early days he was one of the main violinists of the place. A great many of the people here and elsewhere have danced to his music. He was very free-hearted, and for that reason people would present him with many gifts, such as Christmas and New Years and birthday presents. He was always on the good side of the children with a little candy or a little money. He always paid his tithing and was faithful. He was born at the parish of Llanfrathen, Merionethshire, North Wales, Feb. 22, 1819, and embraced the Gospel in 1848; emigrated in 1849 to Council Bluffs and remained there till 1852, when he crossed the Plains in William Morgan's company of ten with John Morgan, walking behind his wagon all the way. He stayed a while in Salt Lake City, then he came to Brigham City and remained till the move south when he went as far as Iron county, returning some time after.

I never heard him complain or say that his lot was hard, but I have heard him many times, when others would feel inclined to complain and find fault, check them and encourage them to be patient. He was unmarried and leaves a brother to mourn his loss. He lost one eye when he was a child, and when he had grown to be a man he used to work with Brother David Peters in his woolen factory and was almost a father to him. After that he worked in the slate quarry where he was when he met with the other accident and lost his other eye. He was blind when he was first baptized, and was about thirty years of age.

JOHN EYANS.

MILTON L. LEE.

Bishop Milton Lafayette Lee was born in Tooele City, Tooele county, Utah, on February 4, 1853. He was the seventh son of Francis and Jane Vail Johnson Lee. He was baptized a member of the Church when eight years of age. In November, 1860, he moved with his parents to Santa Clara, Washington county, Utah, and on May 6, 1864, the family arrived in Panaca, Lincoln county, Nevada, where he has since resided. This was the first family to settle in Panaca.

When very young he was called to be a Deacon and filled many other offices in the Priesthood. He was married to Susanna Mathews on October 19, 1874, by President H. Wells, in the Endowment House, Salt Lake City. On the 8th day of May, 1882, he was chosen Bishop of Panaca ward, to which position he was ordained on July 2, 1882, in St. George, by President J. D. T. McAlister, and filled this office with equity and justice until his demise, which occurred on April 13, 1894, at 10:40 a.m.

He was a man of high moral character; was a good financier, and set examples worthy of imitation by all over whom he presided. He was generous and self-sacrificing and his disposition was to persuade by love and kindness. He was a leading character in every enterprise in the district where he lived, and was held in the highest esteem by the Stake authorities. For many years he was a very active member of the Sabbath school and teacher of the theological class therein. He was the father of sixteen children, and leaves a wife and fourteen children, eight sons and six daughters, in Panaca, and wife and one child in St. George, together with a host of relatives and friends to mourn his loss.

Until a month previous to his death he enjoyed health and strength. During his decline he had four attacks of bilious colic, the last of which developed into inflammation of the bowels, which resulted in his death. He passed peacefully away surrounded by his family, brothers, sisters, and many other relatives.

The funeral services were held at the ward meeting house at 10 a. m. on April 14th, and a large number of people followed the remains to their last resting place. He died as he had lived, full of faith and integrity and with the hope of a glorious resurrection with the just.

Weep not that his toils are over,
Weep not that his race is run;
God grant we may rest as calmly
When our work, like his, is done.

Till then we yield with gladness
Our Father, to Him, to keep;
And rejoice in the blessed assurance
"He giveth His beloved sleep."

J. M. LEE AND BROTHERS.

EDWIN SCOTT.

Died at Moroni, Sanpete county, Utah, May 8, 1894, as the result of an accident sustained through a runaway team, as published in the NEWS of the 11th inst.,

Edwin Scott, son of Joseph U. and Mary Berry Scott; born at Stockport, Cheshire, England, August 13, 1826; baptized in the Church in the same place March 5th, 1840. He afterwards removed to the city of Manchester, becoming an active worker in the Church there and in the surrounding towns, utilizing his spare time from his work as a weaver in the cotton mills visiting the Saints and spreading the Gospel on every opportunity. He was ordained a Priest in 1851, and an Elder in 1853. In the year 1854 he was called from the factory to labor in the ministry in opening up new fields in the Manchester conference, in which labor he was very successful, being greatly blessed with power to preach the words of life to the understanding of all. He was subsequently called to travel in the Preston and Liverpool conferences, including the Isle of Man, from which place he was sent to preside over the Norwich Conference, where he worked faithfully until released to emigrate to Utah in 1862.

He married Ann Reid, Oct. 16, 1847, by whom he was ably sustained and encouraged in all of his labors in the cause of truth, she sharing with him the joys and sorrows of life and the struggles of the early settlers of Utah, Juab and Sanpete counties. She went to the other shore about twenty months before him, since which he has, at times, been despondent in his loneliness, often talking with the writer of his approaching end and giving directions for the disposition of his effects and the arrangements for his funeral and of his and his wife's graves. Before starting on that fatal ride he told the writer and others that before the trees and bushes by which he was then surrounded bore their fruit he would be on the other side. How soon his words proved true!

He bore his sufferings with much patience, expressing his readiness to die if the Lord so willed, repeatedly testifying to the truth of the latter-day Gospel, and exhorting those around him to lives of faithfulness in the same. He had been an active member of the High Priests' quorum for many years, by the members of which he was honored and respected, as well as by the entire community, which turned out in large numbers at the funeral. In his death another good man is gathered to the fathers, by whom his unflinching integrity will doubtless be appreciated. Blessings on his memory.

ROBERT WM. BURTON.

PARK VALLEY, May 7, 1894.—On April 30 Park Valley was called to mourn the loss of one of her worthy young men, Robert Wm. Burton, the beloved son of Joseph H. and Martha Burton. Deceased was born at North Ogden, June 1, 1879. His early life was spent at Park Valley, where he passed through a great deal of suffering. When about five years of age he was taken with malignant diphtheria, which made a total wreck of his health. Soon after this he was taken with St. Vitus's dance, and when seven years old he was kicked in the face by a horse. This chain of diseases kept him in a sickly condition, until he was taken with the dropsy, which was the cause of his death.

The deceased was faithful, studious, and loving to his parents, and his kindness to dumb animals far excelled that of the average boy. He was very prompt in performing any part assigned him in the Sabbath school, or the Y. M. M. I. A. and was ever ready to perform any duty required of him by the ward authorities. Just previous to his death it was thought advisable to ordain him to the office of a Deacon but before the ordinance was performed his spirit was called back to the spirit world, to await that period when he shall be called forth from his grave to join again with his parents and friends in a state of immortality.

CHARLOTTE LOUISA BURROWS.

BRIGHAM CITY, May 18, 1894.

The angel of death has visited the home of our worthy brother and sister John and Mary Burrows, taking their daughter Charlotte Louisa. She died Tuesday, the 15th, at half-past 9 a.m., of inflammation of the lungs and bowels.

The funeral services were held in the First ward meeting house. They were very impressive and words of comfort were offered by the brethren who were in attendance, President Clawson and Counselor Kelly and others. What makes it more distressing to the family is that her father is now on a mission in England and Sister Burrows feels the loss severely, as she was their oldest daughter and a great help to the family. She was 18 years of age on the 23th of January last, was a constant attendant at the Sabbath school and Y. L. M. I. A., and the association members showed their love for her by turning out en masse and marching ahead of the hearse. Six members of the Young Men's association acted as pall bearers. A long train of carriages followed the body to its last resting place. The deceased was a lovely young lady and had the confidence of all who knew her. The dedicatory prayer at the grave was offered by Elder Peter A. Fosgreen. The family have the sympathy of the community.

DAVID BOOTH.

JOHN JENKINS.

SAMARIA, Idaho, May 15, 1894.—John Jenkins died at his home in Samaria May 2, 1894, after an illness of about three weeks. He had been ailing off and on all winter. His death was caused by a complication of diseases. He was the son of David Ann Jenkins and was born June 19, 1851, in Cwmback, near Aberdare, Glamorganshire, South Wales; received the Gospel when a boy and emigrated to Salt Lake in 1868. He came to Samaria in 1869, where he married Mary Williams and lived with his family to the day of his death.

Brother Jenkins had taken an active part in the latter-day work in this ward and Stake for several years, being a counselor to the Bishop for a few years and afterwards an assistant to the Stake superintendency of the Sunday schools.

The funeral services were held at the family residence, the Stake presidency presiding. Elders O. C. Haskins, McCrary and W. H. Gibb, Elder David Morgan and Bishops Harrison and Evans participated in the services. Brother Jenkins left a sorrowful wife and seven grief-stricken children to mourn his untimely death.

About sixty vehicles accompanied the remains to their resting place.

JOHN YARD.

FOUNTAIN GREEN, May 18, 1894.—I am requested to send you notice of the death of John Yard, of Bernice, Sullivan county, Pa. He was born October 11, 1832, and died April 29, 1894, aged 61 years, 6 months and 18 days. He was baptized in the Tipton branch of the Birmingham conference, England, and died a faithful Latter-day Saint, according to the letter I received from his wife, who is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

THOMAS WEEKS.

EMMA OVERY.

[Rock Springs, Wyo., Miner, May 17.]

On Friday morning last little Emma, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Overy, slept peacefully away. She had been ailing for thirteen weeks and was thought to be on a fair way to recovery, when her soul took its flight to the One who gave it.

Emma was 11 years of age, one of twins, and was a great favorite in the family, being a child of a very kind, gentle and loving disposition. Her twin brother survives her.

The funeral took place from the Mormon church at 2 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. So great was the attendance that many were unable to gain admittance. Nearly the entire population of Hopkins was present. Appropriate hymns were sung by the choir and solemn services held, then the little casket, covered with floral offerings, was borne to the grave and quietly laid away amid sorrow and tears. The mother, father, sisters, and brothers feel most keenly the loss of their little Emma, who had endeared herself to their hearts.

Mr. and Mrs. Overy are exemplary parents and to lose one of their brightest gems is like crushing their hope in life. The sympathy of this entire community goes out to them in their sad affliction.

DUTY OF PARENTS TO CHILDREN.

Remarks made at the General Conference of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Friday, April 6, 1894, by ELDER HEBER J. GRANT.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

It is always a pleasure to me to have the opportunity of meeting with the Latter-day Saints, and I rejoice in being present here today. I have rejoiced in the counsels that have been given, and I earnestly desire that while I may stand before you this afternoon I may have the benefit of your faith and prayers to assist me in speaking. I rejoice exceedingly in the Gospel of Jesus Christ that has been revealed in this day, and I earnestly desire that I may be able, in connection with the rest of the Latter-day Saints, to so order my life that my mind may never become darkened, that I may never depart from the truth, or break any of the covenants which I have made with the Lord. I earnestly wish to know the mind and will of my Heavenly Father and to have the ability and strength of character to carry the same out in my life. I have this same desire for all of the Latter-day Saints. I appreciate fully the fact that in proportion to our diligence, faithfulness and humility in keeping the commandments of God, He will bless us and assist us in our labors; and it is the duty of every one to seek earnestly of the Lord to learn His ways.

When I heard Brother Merrill this morning say that he had met many of the Latter-day Saints who thought it was not obligatory upon them to teach their children the plan of salvation, and to baptize them when eight years of age, but who proposed to allow their children to grow to years of accountability and then to present to them the Gospel and allow them to receive or reject it—I could not help but feel that all such individuals placed their judgment and their ideas as superior to the commandments of God; that they lacked faith in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and that they did not have an abiding testimony of the divinity of the work in which they are engaged. A man who has a testimony that we are engaged in the work of God values that testimony more than life itself; and I believe I am safe in saying that the most earnest desire of every true Latter-day Saint is that his children may grow up in the nurture and the admonition of the Gospel, keeping the commandments of God, so that they may be saved in His kingdom. It is simply absurd to imagine that if a child has the seed of falsehood and evil sown in its mind through life, you will all at once be able to sow in that mind one crop of truth and have it bring forth a harvest of truth. I remember remarking recently at a conference that we would look upon a farmer as a natural born idiot who would call upon everybody who passed his farm to throw in a few seeds of weeds, to do this for a period of twenty-one years, and then expect he could sow a crop of grain and expect to get a good harvest. I may know the multiplication table, and my wife may also, but I cannot on that account expect my children to be born with a knowledge of the multiplication table in their heads. I may know that the Gospel is true, and my wife may know it; but I do not imagine for one moment that my children will be born with this knowledge. We receive a testimony of the Gospel by obeying the laws and ordinances thereof; and our children will receive that knowledge exactly the same way; and if we do not teach them, and they do not walk in the straight and narrow path that leads to eternal life, they will never receive this knowledge. I have heard people say that their children were born heirs to all the promises of the new and everlasting covenant, and that they would grow up in spite of themselves, with a knowledge of the Gospel. I want to say to you that this is not a true doctrine, and it is in direct opposition to the commandment of our Heavenly Father. We find that it is laid down to the Latter-day Saints, not as an entreaty, but as a law, that they should teach their children:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her Stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old; the sin be upon the heads of the parents;

For this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her Stakes which are organized;

And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands,

And they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

And the inhabitants of Zion shall, also, observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

And the inhabitants of Zion, also, shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord.

Now, I the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity; but their eyes are full of greediness.

These things ought not to be, and must be done away from among them.

And again:

"Who am I, saith the Lord, that have promised and have not fulfilled? I command, and man obeys not. I revoke, and they receive not the blessings. Then they say in their hearts, This is not the work of the Lord, for his promises are not fulfilled. But woe unto such, for their reward lurketh beneath, and not from above."

The Lord has given us a commandment that we shall teach our children the principles of the Gospel and have them baptized when they are eight years of age. If we fail to keep this commandment, the blessings that are promised to us by the Lord will be revoked, and we will have mourning and sorrow in seeing our children grow up without a desire to serve God; and in after years, when we endeavor to instill into their minds the principles of the Gospel, we will make a failure of it. It is boasted by the Catholics that if they can have the training of a child until it is twelve years of age, they will defy the world to turn that child from Catholicism. If we do our duty in teaching our children the principles of the Gospel, we ought to be able to defy the world to turn them away from the truth, if the Catholics can defy the world to turn them away from error. Every father who loves the Gospel is ready and willing to go to the ends of the earth to preach it, and one of the greatest joys that any man can have is to be found in bringing souls to a knowledge of the truth. It ought to be a greater joy to us to train our children in the plan of salvation, realizing that by so doing we will be able to save and exalt them in the kingdom of God. May the Lord bless you. Amen.

"INDUSTRIALISTS" IN UTAH.

FROM WEDNESDAY'S DAILY MAY 23

Sixteen offenders were brought here from Thistle about 6 o'clock last evening by Sheriff Brown of Utah county, and lodged in the penitentiary. They are charged with taking possession of a train on Monday night and with rioting yesterday. The grand jury at Nephi will deal with their case.

About 8 o'clock this morning thirteen of the twenty-seven defendants belonging to Carter's contingent of the Industrial army who were last week sentenced by Judge Merritt to five days' imprisonment without the requirement to pay a fine were released from the penitentiary, having served their allotted term and thereby purged themselves of the contempt charged.

Carter and six others, viz., Smith, Van Buskirk, Nowell, Gregory, Day and Lowry were held. The "general's" fine, it will be remembered, was $100; Nowell was fined $25, and three of the others (Gregory, Day and Lowry) $10 each.

Having paid the fines of the four subordinate "martyrs" "Major" Hopkins took his receipts and at once made application for an order for their release. But the unexpected happened. The marshal informed him that those defendants were again "wanted"—this time for grand larceny: i. e., the stealing of the trains at Lehi Junction, for which offense they had been indicted by the grand jury at Nephi, and that, therefore, they would have to remain in the penitentiary pending further proceedings. This proved a complete staggerer for the "major" and his friends, and when the information was conveyed to headquarters it created an awful stir.

At 3:45 "General" Carter's fine was paid and he was ordered released from the penitentiary.

At 6 o'clock last evening another company of commonwealers arrived in this city from the north and encamped at the Warm springs. There are just fifty of them and they present a much better appearance than those who have preceded them from the West. They claim to be composed entirely of mechanics, and to have ousted all tramps from their ranks; indeed their books indicate the correctness of this statement. Many of them have been in this city before, having labored here during the boom a few years ago.

The city authorities conferred with this branch of the army and made arrangements whereby the city is to furnish them with one meal and they were to take up the line of march south and not make any stop in the heart of the city. The men were to leave the Warm Springs at 11 o'clock, march south on Second West to Fourth South, thence east to First East street and south on the State road.

In response to a telephone message received from Superintendent Welby of the R. G. W. railroad, about 11 o'clock this morning, Sheriff McQueen, accompanied by Deputies Welch, Montgomery, Steele and Matthews started forthwith for Bingham Junction, and there found twenty-four members of the California detachment which left the city yesterday in possession of a car attached to a freight train, the same having been sidetracked in order to prevent the party from traveling on before the officers could reach there. The men were spoken to by the sheriff and when thus appealed to by their leader, one "Captain" Redfearn, "Well comrades, will you give up?" they shouted with one accord "Yes." At the request of the railroad officials the men were brought to the county jail, where they arrived soon after one o'clock. They were a miserable, hungry looking crew and the sheriff took compassion upon them by giving them a good square meal, which one and all eagerly devoured. What disposition will be made of them had not been determined upon up to the time the NEWS went to press; but Sheriff McQueen is holding them awaiting further instructions.

As the train passed on the way to Salt Lake some of "Capt." Jesse's men, who are encamped near the smelters, gave a hearty cheer.

It is claimed by the captured party that at least thirty of their members got away on a freight train last night, bound Colorado.

PROVO, May 23, 12:30 p. m.—About noon today twenty-nine industrialists came to Provo over the R. G. W. They walked out of Salt Lake City last evening and got on a freight at Bingham Junction. At American Fork, Railroad Detective Hogue ordered them off the train. Five left and the twenty-nine refused to leave, but were again ordered off at Provo, and obeyed the order. When Detective Hogue arrived at Provo he found a telegram informing him that some of the industrialists had boarded a freight train at Springville last night and refused to leave. Mr. Hogue came up to find Sheriff Brown to get assistance to arrest the men or put them off the train. Sheriff Brown being away, and Deputy Sheriff Wilkins unable to leave, the latter telegraphed Marshal Storrs, of Springville, to furnish the necessary aid to Mr. Hogue. The men put off at Provo are under the leadership of Captain New. They expect Captain Jesse to come up today, and expect him to come on a freight.

PROVO, Utah, May 23.—Sheriff Brown and four deputies came down from Thistle yesterday p. m. with about 100 industrialists who had boarded a R. G. W. freight at Thistle Monday evening and refused to leave, saying they did not care which way the train was pulled, but they would not vacate. A stop was made at Provo and a warrant for the arrest of the industrialists was sworn out before Commissioner Dudley.

While this was being done about 80 of the men left the train and most of them walked back to Springville, but some remained around Provo. Sheriff Brown and posse continued on to Salt Lake City with those remaining on the train.

One of the men who left the train boarded an east-going R. G. W. freight car. The conductor started after him and put him off. He jumped to the ground and broke his leg. He gives the name of A. Dalton and claims to be a blacksmith from Salt Lake City. He is now being cared for by the county.

Sheriff Brown left orders with his deputies to arrest all the industrialists they could find. Ten were picked up and are now in jail, where they will be kept till their case is investigated by the grand jury of Nephi, where Sheriff Brown and others have gone to testify.

OGDEN, 23.

A joint resolution of county and city officials has been adopted to the effect that they will aid no more industrialists. The resolution is signed by Judge A. C. Bishop as chairman and by William Farrell, L. W. Shurtliff, John Watson, and H. E. Gibson, and reads as follows: Whereas, neither the city nor the county having funds available for the support or maintenance of said so-called industrial army; and whereas, we have among us large numbers of our own citizens who are out of employment and destitute of the necessary means to support themselves and families, who are calling loudly for the application of charity at home; therefore, resolved, that no further aid be extended to the members of the said so-called industrial army who may hereafter come into Ogden or Weber county.

FROM THURSDAY DAILY, MAY 24.

That Mayor Baskin is becoming more and more exercised over the infamous industrial transportation business that the Southern Pacific is engaging in for the apparent benefit of California and detriment to Utah is evidenced by the following communication which he directed at 1 o'clock this morning and forwarded to Governor West by special messenger:

Hon. Caleb W. West, Governor of Utah Territory:

Dear sir:—Since last Sunday midnight there have arrived in this city over two hundred of the Industrial Army, without means of subsistence or means to procure transportation out of the Territory. As a consequence the chief of police has been compelled to feed and watch this indigent horde. I am advised by the chief of police that the leaders of these men, and many of the men themselves, informed him that there is an agreement between the industrialists of California and the Southern Pacific Railroad company that the freight trains of said company shall stop at various stations for the purpose of permitting the industrial members to get aboard the same, to be transported to Ogden city; that in pursuance of this arrangement, they, without resistance on the part of the agents or employees of said company, boarded such freight trains and were transported to Ogden without paying any fare or without any fare being demanded of them; also informed the chief of police that there are from 1,500 to 1,800 more members of the organization on their way to this Territory, and that about 15,000 more are expected to come on said road to the Territory from the state of California within the next three months. The other railroads leading from this city and Territory refuse to transport these men out of the Territory, in consequence of which they are increasing with such rapidity as to become a serious burden upon this community, who are compelled by humanity to feed them, besides being a menace to the peace and quietude of the same.

The transportation into this Territory by the railroad company of these men, destitute and penniless as they are, is an imposition of so grave a character that there must from the very nature of the case be some legal remedy to redress the wrong and prevent its continuance, and as these men are scattered in squads in several counties of the Territory, and those yet to come, if not stopped, will likewise scatter and become a charge and menace to several counties, I am inclined to the opinion that an action will lie on behalf of the Territory against the Southern Pacific Railroad company to prevent said company from continuing the wrong which is being inflicted upon the people of this Territory by the transportation of these men. Certainly the county of Weber can maintain such a suit.

As my jurisdiction as Mayor is limited to the corporate limits of the city, I am powerless in the premises. I call this matter to your attention, as your jurisdiction as chief executive extends over the whole Territory, with the hope that you, in conjunction with your legal adviser, the district attorney, can devise some legal method to stop what must be apparent to every candid and good citizen is a monstrous wrong upon this Territory. Respectfully,

R. N. BASKIN, Mayor.
SALT LAKE CITY, Utah.

There were great rejoicings, a parade, a meeting, and dangerous and unlawful demonstrations by the "Home Reserve" Industrialists last night. They celebrated the release from the penitentiary of Carter with the red flag of anarchy and treason shaking conspicuously from the mast-head.

The meeting took place in the open air on the old "Industrial" stamping ground at the corner of West Temple and Third South streets in the presence of several hundred people. Sam Gilson was the first speaker. He was followed by Carter, Boyle and Stubbs, in the order named. The talk was wild and of an incendiary character. Profanity was freely used. Every official from the President of the United States down to the most obscure individual who had done them even an imaginary wrong was denounced in language so shameful and coarse that respectable people would not read or allow it to be read in their homes if they could prevent it. Revolutionary conduct and tactics were openly advised and encouraged. Train stealing was held up as lawful and commendable, while other "industrial" irregularities were spoken of as "unquestioned rights of American citizens."

A telephone message was received at the police station today to the effect that a gang of Industrialists who camped at Beck's Hot Springs last night were frightening the women in that vicinity with threats of violence. A squad of police were sent up and the men were marched to this city. They demanded food and rest. They got the former, but not the latter, as they were marched south at press time along the State road under the surveillance of mounted policemen. Chief Pratt says they are genuine tramps and that they refused to leave the city until he said he would throw everyone of them in jail.

Carter who once claimed to be a preacher and a pious man got drunk and went off on the rampage this afternoon. He also took occasion to condemn in language emphatic and profane everything and everybody who he supposed was against the "Industrial" movement. The matter was called to the attention of Chief of Police Pratt, who went down to the "army" headquarters and found Carter rollocking in the back yard. On being informed that he must either behave himself or go to jail he subsided and promised to keep quiet.

This afternoon telephonic messages came from the officials of Davis county to this city, asking the officers here to aid the people there in defending themselves against the depredations of the Industrialists, as the local officers were not sufficiently powerful to cope with the horde that was crowding in upon them.

The people of the county were being made to suffer severely by the "armies" en route from Ogden south, through gardens being robbed and vandalism generally being indulged in.

Upon receiving the appeal Mayor

Baskin and the board of police commissioners at once gave permission for Chief of Police Pratt and a force of policemen to proceed to any point which the Davis county authorities might designate in order to check the pillage, and the officials of Davis county were notified.

The members of the county court of Davis held a session this afternoon, the chief topic of discussion being whether it will not be advisable to stop the further advance of the Industrialists at Weber river, and prevent them coming into Davis county at all. This step is regarded as almost a necessity for the defense of the people.

The twenty-four Industrialists forming Company F of the California contingent who were arrested yesterday by Sheriff McQueen and his aids while in possession of a coal car at Bingham Junction, were permitted to camp last night in an enclosure just west of the county jail, and there passed a quiet night on beds of straw and blankets. This morning they were furnished with a good breakfast and then awaited results. The Rio Grande Western railroad officials, at whose instance the sheriff went to Bingham and made the arrest, wanted Mr. McQueen himself to swear out a complaint charging the men with riot and trespass, but this he declined to do, preferring that the railroad people should themselves accept that responsibility. The sheriff determined to hold the gang until 10 o'clock this morning, and notified the railroad that unless a complaint had been lodged by that time he should turn the captives loose. No satisfactory answer came, and soon after the hour named he telephoned down to Jailer Hills to inform "Captain" Redfearn and his crew that they were at liberty to depart when they pleased. Then followed a general packing up. While this was going forward Redfearn took a walk up town as far as headquarters and had an interview with some of the leaders. Upon his return he was asked by a representative of the News in reference to his future plans, and what line of march it was intended to take.

The captain, who wore a nobby navy blue suit, and put on airs for the occasion, most positively declined, however, to afford the very smallest particle of information for either of the local newspapers, each of which he denounced in strong terms for "what they had printed about the army." The News was, in particular, the object of his wrath.

Company F. idled within the enclosure until 1:30, when they started again for Bingham Junction, the place from which they were brought in custody yesterday afternoon. "Captain" Redfearn took some of Carter's men with him, the intention being to turn them over to "Capt." Jesse's contingent en route.

PROVO, Utah, May 24.—The company of twenty-nine Industrialists which arrived here yesterday morning left yesterday evening on a R. G. Western freight. The army boarded a flat car of an east-going freight train. About two hours was spent in the yard trying to sidetrack the Industrialists, but as soon as their car was sidetracked they boarded another, and finally were pulled out on top of a box car. No forcible attempt to remove the men was made.

At 8 o'clock last evening the Carter contingent at Springville boarded a R. G. W. morning train and were taken east. While attempting to get on the train one of the men fell to the ground. His foot was caught between the ties and the wheels of the car passed over it, crushing it badly. He was moved to Provo and this morning the foot was amputated by Doctors Allen and Taylor. He is a young man, gives his name as Parks and claims to be from Nebraska.

The man Dalton, who broke his leg at Provo Tuesday in trying to jump from a R. G. W. freight train after leaving the members of the Industrial army who were being taken to Salt Lake City, now says that he was pushed off the car while the train was in motion, either by a conductor or a brakeman. The county authorities have learned that his family lives in Salt Lake City, and will attempt to have Salt Lake county take charge of him.

While Carter's army was at Thistle they increased about seventy-five, either through being joined by members who walked or were carried there by the railroad company. Some of the army claim that wherever a few men were discovered on east-bound trains stealing rides they were put off at Thistle, and that whenever any of the army attempted to leave and go east, even in small squads, they were put off. This, if true, dispels the idea that the railroad company would carry them in squads of from five to twenty, but would not allow them to capture a train.

The twenty-nine Industrialists who came in yesterday from Salt Lake City and were side-tracked at Provo have been further augmented by stragglers who have tramped from Salt Lake. They expect shortly to have 200 men here. "Then," said one of them, "We will take the first train that goes out of Provo, and the officers can either arrest us or allow us to ride. We can't stay here and starve, and we can't get work." They thought it strange that the city marshal did not treat them as they had been treated in Ogden and Salt Lake City. There they were given a meal and told to move on, and they would "soon be able to catch a train."

At Provo the city marshal refused to feed them, and told them they would be arrested for vagrancy if they begged. Several of them started out, however, and the citizens, in many instances, responded generously to their requests for food.

OGDEN, Utah, May 24.—The Governor took the 8:30 train from Salt Lake and came to Ogden to consult with the probate judge and court of Weber county in regard to the matter of the S. P. bringing these men into the Territory. He addressed the following letter to the judge, but up to the present, 2 p. m., has received no answer:

OGDEN, Utah, May 24.

Hon. A. C. Bishop, Probate Judge of Weber county, Ogden, Utah:

Dear Sir—I transmit you herewith for your information a copy of a letter received by me this morning from Hon. R. N. Baskin, Mayor of Salt Lake City, relative to the bringing into this Territory by the Southern Pacific company of hundreds of destitute and dependent people. This subject is causing the people of Salt Lake City and other portions of the Territory a great deal of concern, and I desire to meet the county court of Weber county to confer with them in regard to the matter, and so request that you will arrange for a meeting of the court at the earliest moment practicable.

I am sir, very respectfully,
CALEB W. WEST, Governor.

FROM FRIDAY'S DAILY MAY 25.

Davis county has now come to the front and demanded legal protection against the troublesome commonwealers.

Last evening an injunction suit was planted in the Third District court, in which it was prayed that the "wealers" be restrained by order of court from entering upon the Davis county territory. The document in question ran as follows:

Thesaid plaintiff complaining of said defendants, John Doe, Richard Roe and 300 others, whose names are unknown, alleges: That said plaintiff is a municipal corporation organized, incorporated and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the Territory of Utah; the plaintiff is informed and believes and on information and belief alleges the fact to be that said defendants, whose true names are as aforesaid unknown to this plaintiff, are indigent persons, without any visible means of support, and without any lawful business or means of subsistence; that said defendants have conspired together to march into said Davis county in a body, and by begging and force and threats to extort from the inhabitants of said Davis county, food and clothing, and that said defendants threaten to, and unless restrained by the order of this court will so march into said county and extort food and clothing from the inhabitants thereof; and that said defendants threaten to, and unless restrained by an order of this court will, march into said Davis county and become subject under the law to prosecution as such vagrants, and that the prosecution of said defendants as vagrants will cause a multiplicity of suits; and that plaintiff further on information and belief alleges that unless restrained by order of this court said defendants will by their conspiracy as aforesaid unlawfully become and be dependent for their support upon said Davis county, to the irreparable damage of the same.

Wherefore plaintiff prays that said defendants and each of them and every person acting with them be restrained from marching into, upon or through Davis county, or any part thereof, and from in any manner coming into said Davis county or any part thereof.

The complaint was sworn to by Oliver Wood, sheriff of the county. Charles E. Pearson, county attorney of Davis county, E. D. Hoge and W. G. Van Horn are attorneys for the plaintiff.

Upon the complaint being laid before Chief Justice Merrill, his honor ordered that the said John Doe, Richard Doe and all persons acting in concert and traveling with them, and all their counselors, attorneys, agents and comrades, and all others in aid or assistance of them or each of them, absolutely desist and refrain from marching into, upon or through said Davis county, or any part of said county, or from in anywise coming into said Davis county or any part thereof.

Following the injunction from the Third district court Chief Pratt and a squad of twenty-two Salt Lake policemen went up to Davis county this morning on the 8 o'clock Rio Grande Western train prepared to take part in the turning back of the horde of tramps and wealers who left Ogden yesterday.

They also took with them a lot of Winchester rifles for Sheriff Wood's mounted deputies who were sworn in last night. The latter this morning numbered something over thirty. They are all carefully selected men and it is said that they can be depended upon to do nothing rash.

Sheriff Woods has already provisions enough in the field to last three days and is ready to stand a long siege should that be necessary. The productive vegetable gardens of Davis county have in many places been completely laid waste by the ravages of "Industrial" depredators, and the people feel that they cannot afford to feed the hordes of wealers that continue to come in swarms upon them. The purpose now is to prevent them from crossing the line which separates Davis and Weber counties.

Mayor Baskin talked with Governor West over the telephone this afternoon. The Governor has been in Ogden all day and stated to the Mayor that he had consulted with the officials of the Southern Pacific at that place and that they declare they will bring no more of the indigents to this Territory.

This eleventh-hour repentance on the part of the S. P. does not seem to satisfy the Governor nor the Mayor, who think the statement should be taken with the traditional grain of salt. The fact that a permanent injunction has been sought for and that the prospects of securing it were most favorable is accepted as the cause of the sudden change of front on the part of the railroad officials. The promise they make, however, it is claimed will not cause a relinquishment of the idea that the "Industrialists" at the Weber and Davis county lines must be turned back. The Davis county officials say the men will not be allowed to come this way, and they have strong support from Salt Lake. A good many of the citizens of Weber county do not take kindly to holding the men where they are at present. They think they should be permitted to continue their journey eastward, believing that to be the only solution to the question as it now stands.

OGDEN, May 25.

One hundred and fifty Industrialists who arrived in Ogden city yesterday were well treated by the officers of the city and county. A full supply of meat, bread, potatoes and other necessities which the inner man craves for were furnished them, and the men enjoyed a meal which has seldom of late come their way.

At four o'clock yesterday afternoon they formed line at the camp and having received permission from the city officials to parade the town, they started on the march. The procession was headed by "General" Smith and the brass band of the regiment, consisting of five brass instruments, a pair of cracked cymbals and a rather discordant snare drum; then came the chef and four cooks, dressed in kitchen attire and armed with all the culinary utensils which they possessed. These were followed by the main body of the regiment. The men made a respectable appearance on parade and displayed good military discipline.

On the arrival of the procession at the city hall they were drawn up in line on Washington avenue in front of the building. The "band" discoursed a program of popular airs, and then Mr. Smith, dressed in regulation uniform of blue, and an unusual display of shirt front and white silk bow, addressed the citizens who had assembled to the number of about one hundred.

The "general" harangued the assemblage for about fifteen minutes on the alleged iniquities of the present administration at Washington, and a collection was then taken up among the bystanders, after which the retreat to the camps was commenced to the martial strain of "Marching Through Georgia," played by the "band."

The companies here under command of Mr. Smith are B and D, and are styled the Third regiment of the California Industrialists. They awaited here the arrival of companies A and C, which came in at 10:30 last night and number about one hundred men. These latter companies complete the regiment. The four companies combined, and under the leadership of Mr. Smith, will take up their march towards Salt Lake City this afternoon.

Those in command stated to a News representative on his visit to their camp last night that this will be the last contingent, with the exception of the peregrinating minstrel company known as the "Industrial Minstrels." New "armies" are being organized at present at Oakland and other places in California, but they will not reach the Junction city for probably two months.

Dr. Smith who is head of this division of the army, made an affidavit relating to Mayor Baskin's letter which appeared in yesterday's News. He was engaged as a practicing physician when he joined the army. He is an Englishman, but has taken out his first papers. On these he claims citizenship in the United States—though he is not thereby entitled to it. His affidavit reads:

OGDEN, Utah, May 24, 1894.
TERRITORY OF UTAH,
County of Weber. } ss.

I, F. Deming Smith, upon oath say that I am lieutenant general of the California Industrial army, and next in command to General Kelly. That I have just heard read the letter of Mayor Baskin to Governor West, dated May 23, 1894, and say that in the main the contents thereof as published in the Salt Lake Tribune of May 24th are untrue. That there is no arrangement to my knowledge existing between the California Industrial army and the Southern Pacific railway whereby the said railway has agreed to transport the said army, or any part thereof, from California, or any other place to Ogden. I further say that the said railway has, to my knowledge, demanded fare for our transportation, but we rode anyhow and without paying fare. I also deny that there are 1,500 to 1,800 of the Industrial army now on the way to this Territory today, between Ogden and California. I further deny that 15,000 Industrialists are expected to come from California in the next three months. That I am in command of the rear guard of the army and that there are not to exceed 100 more of the army to come by the way of Ogden, and they are expected here today.

I know what I am talking about, and if there were any arrangement with the Southern Pacific Railway company, as stated, it must have been made through me, and if there were any more men coming I would know it.

DR. F. DEMING SMITH,
Commander 8d Reg. Ind. Army.
Subscribed and sworn to before me this 24th day of May, 1894.

[Seal] C. E. BRAINERD,
Notary Public.

OGDEN, May 25.—At 1 o'clock this afternoon the last delegation of Pacific coast indigents to arrive in this city from the West were still at the stock yards in the western part of town. They have been well fed and cared for in all respects and at this hour are preparing to start towards Salt Lake. They number about one hundred and fifty, while there are three hundred and fifty near the line which divides this county from Davis.

Small straggling squads still continue to come in on every Southern Pacific train and how long they will continue to do so will depend largely on the action of the county court, which is in session at this time. The result of the deliberations of that body is awaited with great interest by the citizens here.

FROM SATURDAY'S DAILY, MAY 26.

Inquiry at the headquarters of the home reserve of the Industrial army May 26 disclosed a woeful ignorance as to the whereabouts of "General" Carter. "Colonel" Boyle was the only man who seemed to know anything, and he stated that the "General" was somewhere near Grand Junction.

The following late dispatch by Associated Press, is interesting in this connection:

GRAND JUNCTION, Col., May 26.—Carter and 200 commonwealers from Salt Lake arrived here today. They will go on east.

Governor West, Chief Justice Merritt and Mayor Baskin each have been recipients of postal cards making threats against their lives. The messages on the cards are couched in the most disgusting language, and state that unless the officials named leave the city within four days they will be killed, if dynamite has to be resorted to to effect the purpose.

PROVO, Utah, May 26.—The following named citizens were arrested this morning on the charge of inciting riot: George Suft, C. W. Smith, Richard C. Watkins, A. O. Anderson and Thos. Leonard. They gave bail in the sum of $500 each for their appearance at Nephi next Monday to be arraigned on the above charge for which the grand jury has indicted them.

The indictments grew out of the actions of the men at Provo on the 12th inst., when the Industrialists were here with the U. P. train captured at Lehi Junction. The indicted citizens are claimed to have encouraged the Industrialists.

NEPHI, Utah, May 26.—The six Industrialists charged with riot at Provo pleaded guilty and were given two months each in the penitentiary. Seventeen pleaded guilty to riot at Thistle and got 30 days each. The indictment against four was dismissed, and four will be tried. There was much excitement in the court room caused by Robert Charles, one of the Industrialists, having a fit. He chewed his tongue and froth and blood poured from his mouth. One of the men tied a string around his finger, pried open his mouth with the court crier's hammer, and the man gradually recovered. The indictment against this poor fellow was dismissed.

OGDEN, Utah, May 26.—A special News courier has just arrived here on a finely mettled mustang kindly furnished by Sheriff Woods, of Davis county, from the camp of the wealers, with the information that Police Commissioners Empey and Jennings came up from Salt Lake this morning at the request of Chief Pratt and the Davis county officials, for the purpose of advising with them regarding the situation, which had assumed a particularly threatening and serious phase, shortly after last midnight. At that time it became apparent that the industrialists were very determined and desperate. They declared that they would go on to Salt Lake, even if they had to mow their way with dynamite bombs through the ranks of the specially deputized civilians who guarded them.

At the request of the Salt Lake officials Superintendent Young of the Union Pacific took along with the special train a telegraph instrument, relay and operator, it being the intention to put in a temporary station and establish a news bureau at some point on the railroad which would also be convenient as general headquarters. It was a great disappointment and inconvenience, however, to the newspaper men when the train sped on to Ogden without the instrument being placed in position. The nearest telegraph station was at Ogden, six miles from the camping ground of the indigents in one county, and the officers in another.

Restlessness, expectancy and vigilance prevailed throughout the early morning hours of today. There was no thought of relaxation or sleep. Mounted scouts kept close watch and made frequent reports of the manœuvres, and of the movements of attempted deserters from the commonweal ranks. Armed deputy sheriffs and uniformed policemen defied the invaders and at the points of their clubs prevented them from crossing the "dead line." When the army first drew on to the disputed ground, Sheriff Woods served the writ of injunction issued by the court on "General" Smith, after having commanded him to halt.

"Who cries halt?" inquired Smith in a tone of feigned surprise.

"The sheriff of Davis county," was the quick and emphatic response, supplemented by the statement that, "You must obey the orders of the court."

"But," declared Smith, who is an Englishman and has never taken out his naturalization papers, "we are Americans, and in the name of American freemen, we command you to allow us to go on."

"You have heard my decision," answered Woods, "so govern yourself and your men accordingly; understand once for all that I mean just what I say."

"But we don't propose to be stopped in this way," rejoined Smith.

"But mark you, sir, you are stopped."

"What can we do and where can we go?" was the query that came from the general.

"The gates of Weber canyon are open to you," chimed Chief Pratt. "Your presence in Salt Lake is undesirable and will not be tolerated."

"Well," said Smith, as he turned on his heel, "I don't think we will change our course. It is my opinion that we will continue our journey uninterrupted."

"Try it," said Pratt, "and we will hurl you back."

"Do you really mean to use force, and if so, pray what kind?" inquired the defiant leader of the indigent horde in a sarcastic and half mocking tone.

There was much more talk of a similar kind and Smith retired to consult with his colleagues. He had not been absent from the front rank very long when it was whispered to Pratt that the army had decided to go, even if they had to make their way through the guard line by throwing bombs among the deputy sheriffs and police.

In very short order Pratt and Woods decided that such threats should be met promptly and heroically. They at once sent for Smith and informed him that in case of the slightest suspicious move being made in direction indicated, they would simply have their men retire a distance of 100 yards or so, level their Winchester rifles and open fire. Smith became excited and as he saw the determined faces of the officers he disclaimed having anything to do with the utterance of such threats. He communicated the decision of the officers to his men and for a time there was hurrying and skurrying in all directions.

The commotion was followed by a silence that was intense. The men on both sides almost held their breath. It was a moment of awful suspense. Suddenly there was a blast of the bugle loud and shrill in the camp of the "army"—then an advance of a few steps by Smith's men toward the dead line, but they halted suddenly as they had started. Then the army band played and their glee club sang. The last selection was an effusion of "Industrialists" doggerel couched in anarchistic language and was sung to the tune "God Save the Queen." More than 300 men joined in the chorus. After this stirring performance Smith and his men held a council of war. Their subsequent action indicated a weakening on their part as they retired a short distance. Some of the men laid down and went to sleep. Others kindled camp fires and waited for daylight.

OGDEN, Utah, May 26, 1:50 p. m.—On the statement being made to Chief Pratt early this morning by Mr. Glassman that dynamite was in the camp of the Industrialists, Chief Pratt set forth to investigate the matter. He stated to Dr. Smith that he heard of this and that if he saw any funny business on the part of the army he would call his

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

A NATIONAL ORDEAL.

The Latter-day Saints have always cherished an anticipation of a time when they would take the leading part in rescuing our nation from a situation of deadly peril. This looking forward is based upon a prophetic declaration made by the Prophet Joseph Smith. It is to the effect that, in the course of its history, the country would be torn into fragments by internal dissensions, which would result in scenes of riot and bloodshed. The Constitution would be, at that time, trampled under foot and the situation become so menacing, under the tyranny and depredations of ruthless mobs, that, from every natural standpoint, it would appear impossible to snatch the nation from irretrievable ruin. When this point should be reached it should become the high duty of the Saints to raise the standard of liberty and call upon all patriotic lovers of peace to rally around it and assist them in the work of re-establishing peace and reorganizing the Republic upon the basis of constitutional principles. This exalted labor was to be accomplished and be the means of causing a new and brighter era to shine upon the people.

The attention of every thinker is now directed to the signs of the present time. This mental exercise is enforced by the peculiar character of existing conditions. Here is a pertinent question: Do they indicate an approaching dilemma which will demand just such a patriotic intervention as that defined by the Prophet? One of the features of the time is a growing disregard for the requirements and inhibitions of the Constitution. Indeed this evil genius is so widespread that it requires but little growth to make it weighty and overwhelming. This is susceptible of incontrovertible proof.

One of the strong indications of the drift in the direction of unconstitutionality is the existence and objects of the commonwealth army. It is a menace to the government, at the hands of which it demands the enactment and enforcement of measures that are clearly violative of the Constitution. If these demands were complied with the government could no longer exist, as its power would thus be transferred to an organized mob. But this disposition spreads out over the country like a great gathering cloud, which betokens an impending storm. This is indicated by the fact that the commonwealers have the sympathy and co-operation of great masses of the general populace, and next, of immense bodies of organized workmen, whose societies are spread over the land, extending to every inhabited region of the Republic. How widespread then is the anti-constitutional sentiment. Combine this situation with labor commotions, which are already precipitating scenes of riot and bloodshed, and the country is certainly confronted by the most serious situation with which its legal officers have ever yet grappled. It is only necessary to add the evidences of the decay of popular character to render the mental picture of the future results of such an accumulation of distracting elements appalling. Then let it be considered that the prospect of an early return to industrial prosperity is exceedingly dim, and the avoidance of a coming revolution will seem still more remote. If a time of national trouble is not near it would look as if causes had ceased to produce their usual results, or that there was a direct intervention of divine providence to stay the day of calamity.

As heretofore explained in these columns, the same modern Prophet referred to at the opening of this article predicted, twenty-nine years before it burst upon the country, the war of the Rebellion. He designated the precise locality where the struggle would open—South Carolina. That was the first state to secede from the Union, its separatist resolution having been passed on Dec. 25th, 1860, and the first gun was fired at Charleston the following April. Joseph Smith likewise pointed to another national ordeal, further out in the future, and indicated the section where its most destructive elements would widely prevail. This prediction evidently had reference to the natural outcome of the symptoms which are now so prevalent in the East, where secret oath-bound organizations threaten the peace of that part of the country. It will now be proper to quote the words of the Lord as they came through the human founder of the Church on Feb. 9th, 1831:

"And behold it shall come to pass that my servants shall be sent forth to the east and to the west, to the north and to the south; and even now, let him that goeth to the east teach them that shall be converted to flee to the west and this in consequence of that which is coming on the earth, and of secret combinations."

At the time this revelation was given the preaching of the Gospel was confined to this country, and it indicates that the East would be the chief seat of the great troubles that would arise in the nation through oath-bound associations. They form a mighty host and their aspect is becoming more and more threatening. It is a significant feature of the quoted passage that at the early day when the revelation was given it was not deemed necessary to take time by the forelock and avoid a defined species of trouble by teaching the converted to flee from any other direction to the west, except from the east. It is also a matter of remark that perhaps thousands of men are taking the opposite course, and are moving from the west to the east, in the vain hope of finding relief from their troubles.

Seeing that the times seem traveling toward a great national ordeal, what should be the position of the Saints in relation to every question and situation—both local and general? They should stand by the law and the Constitution, sustain them by word and, if necessary, by deed. They should display unqualified patriotism in its widest and deepest sense and never be carried away by any popular current or movement that has not truth and right for its basis. Those who participate or even applaud tendencies that are opposed to the spirit of the Constitution are not inspired by the genius of the Gospel of peace, and will have no lot nor part with the patriots who will grapple successfully with dissension and strife and cause order to evolve out of national anarchy.

LYNCHING FIGURES.

According to statistics published by the Chicago Inter-Ocean there occurred in the United States up to May 5th, this year, no less than fifty cases of lynching. Of these, four were perpetrated in Kansas, two in Ohio, two in Indiana, and one in Pennsylvania, while forty-one belong to Southern states. Of these Alabama heads the list with eleven; next come Louisiana with nine and Arkansas with seven.

Apologists for the savagery in the South generally offer the excuse that lynchings occur as a natural result of the uncontrollable feeling of indignation on the part of the white population, when the daughters and wives are assaulted by black brutes—a sense of honor requiring that the dearest heritage of man must be defended and avenged. Thus a prominent bishop of the Methodist church, last October, when a negro had been burned at the stake after first having been subjected to tortures after the manner of the most cruel savages, wrote in the Forum:

Unless assaults by negroes on white women and little white girls come to an end, there will most probably be still further displays of vengeance that will shock the world. Sane men who are just will consider the provocation. Sane men who are righteous will remember not only the brutish man who dies by the slow torture of fire; they will think also of the ruined woman, worse tortured than he.

This has been the essence of the apology offered for the Southern lynchings, but from the statistics gathered it is evident that the plea is not well sustained, for of the forty-one cases of murder by mobs in the South, only eight victims were killed for such offenses, while all the balance were accused of less grave crimes and some were only suspected.

The fact of the matter is that the frequent recurrence of killing by mobs, whether the victims be colored or white, is the outgrowth of a lawless spirit and the desire to gratify the brutal craving for personal revenge common to man in a certain stage of moral development. It is on a level with duelling, street-fighting, family feuds, vendettas and similar embodiments of the jurisprudence of a barbarous age. The people resorting to such means may be advanced in every other respect and stand in the front ranks of the nineteenth century civilization, but the very fact that they prevent the law from taking its regular course proves that they morally stand on the level of Corsicans, Afghans and Montenegrins whose first thought is of the stiletto or other weapons of the assassin. To offer any apology for such deeds is to retard the needed progress towards a higher plane of morality and is to be deplored especially when it comes from teachers of religion.

The safety and progress of any people depends on the sacredness with which the laws are regarded. When the execution of those laws has been entrusted to certain officials, the people must sustain them in the performance of their duty. To act otherwise is to break down one of the safe-guards with which civilization is surrounded. It is anarchy in its nature; it is murder. The continuation of the practice breeds contempt for the law and the executors of the law, and unless the nation some time rises in its majesty and puts a stop to the outrage, the spirit of lawlessness will spread until the hand of everybody may be against every one else, and nothing but might be recognized as right.

The law itself recognizes the exception of revenge taken by an injured party in the case of a delictum flagrans, but no excuse can be offered for any other case of killing by private citizens. Lynchings do not stop the crimes; on the contrary they seem to multiply. Horror breeds horror, and crime generates crime. It is time to wake up over the situation and bring some potent influence to bear upon the people, so as to subdue the beast within and make it obedient to the laws of the country and the dictates of an advanced civilization.

TIME TO ACT.

It is time some action was being taken to check the incendiary speech-making at public assemblages of would-be revolutionists whose avowed intention is to overthrow the government. It is in the power of the officers to put an end to treasonable utterances being expressed in the manner they were at the meeting held last night at the corner of West Temple and Third South streets. Treason against the United States consists "in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort," and the effort at the meeting to induce men to arm and proceed to Washington and overthrow the government was a direct step in levying war against the nation, and should be promptly met and severely dealt with. There is no necessity of proceeding against the body of men who are seeking redress from present grievances with no intention to destroy the Republic, but against such of their leaders as are engaged in a scheme of which they openly boast to overthrow the government by revolutionary and violent means, the action should be short, sharp and decisive. Traitors and plotters against the government must be given to understand that there is neither aid, sympathy nor toleration for them here. The people of Utah are loyal American citizens and will do their full share in maintaining the Constitution as becomes patriots; and their peace officers must make up their minds that that kind of a course is expected and demanded at their hands.

The holding of such meetings as the one referred to should receive official attention without further delay. They are not peaceable assemblages such as all persons have a right to engage in in this land. They are unlawful, riotous gatherings, seriously disturbing the peace of the community and a menace to the public welfare. Sober people are disquieted and rendered apprehensive by the murderous threats made, for while the latter are in the main directed against the general government, which may be in no immediate danger because the threateners are at a safe distance from Washington, yet there is no knowing when this work of inciting to riot and rebellion will break out into overt acts against prominent and peaceable citizens who are known to be not in sympathy with the lawless element. Already there have been threats in this direction sufficient to cause serious fears. A sworn duty of every peace officer is to prevent the commission of crime either against individuals or the whole; and while peaceable "industrial armies" may proceed unmolested so long as they do not violate the statutes, let it be distinctly understood that lawlessness either in speech or conduct will be sharply and swiftly curtailed.

THE SERBIAN COUP D'ETAT.

The political affairs of Serbia, although the country is one of the smallest in Europe, with a population of hardly a million and a half, derive interest from the fact that it always has been involved in the intrigues of the powers that contend for supremacy in southeastern Europe. Lately the youthful king, Alexander, has effected a coup d'etat whereby the people have been deprived of almost every vestige of power and the destiny of the country is given into the hands of the monarch. It is evident that the effect of this will be to facilitate any attempts of either Russia or Austria to direct the policy of the country according to its own interests.

The stroke of a year ago was effected on the advice of the king's patriotic counselors. By some crooked means the liberal cabinet had obtained a small majority in the Chamber, although it was demonstrated that their opponents had cast a majority of votes. The people protested against the annulment of the elections that brought this result about and the king planned the overthrow of his government. On April 13, 1893, he invited the regents and ministers to a dinner at the palace. At the table their resignations were demanded. They refused. But soldiers and police had already quietly taken possession of all the public buildings and the residences of the ministers. They were entrapped and had to yield. The legislature was dissolved and a new cabinet formed.

It seems, however, that the advantage thus gained was only the first step towards the usurpation of all power by the king. On May 21st, this year, Alexander issued a proclamation restoring the constitution of 1869 and abolishing all laws not founded on it. By this autocratic measure the king assumes the right to appoint one-third of the members of the Chamber of Deputies. The secret ballot system is done away with; the liberty of the press, the right to hold public assemblies and the forming of secret societies are abrogated. People belonging to the radical party of politicians have been ordered disarmed and their leaders forced to flee the country.

Such is the nature of the political change now effected in the little principality on the Balkan. Ex-King Milan, the present ruler's father, is apparently the chief adviser of the leading factor, but it is thought, with or without sufficient reason, that Russia is behind the scenes pulling the strings on which the movements of the marionettes depend. In any case, the dissatisfaction of the people is likely to lead to disorders, and these will give the king another excuse for cutting off what little liberty is left and inaugurating a rule of true mediæval despotism. Then a reason will be supplied some of the surrounding powers to step in and save the people, just as Poland once was "saved" by her mighty neighbors.

A TYPICAL PHARISEE.

A person signing himself "Beulah Citizen" writes to the Camden (South Carolina) Journal, under date of April 28, lamenting that he seldom sees anything in the papers from his section (the Beulah neighborhood), the reason being, he presumes, that "we are such a quiet and peaceable set of people." Thereupon he proceeds to get himself and his idiosyncrasy into print, by threatening "warm receptions" and "something that is not agreeable," unless certain "well-dressed people" whom he calls "tramps in disguise," but who call themselves Mormon preachers, decide to get out of his midst and move on to "some more congenial clime." In the immensity of his wisdom and the puffiness of his head, this "Beulah citizen" thinks "we have enough religious creeds in our midst now; the religious denominations we have among us already are good enough for anybody;" and he learns with intense pain that "some people have been taking them [the Mormon preachers] in and feeding them." "Away with such stuff for me and mine!" he shrieks; "and if any of those fellows come fooling around my premises with their new-fangled ideas, I propose to give them a warm reception, and one they will not soon forget."

The Beulah neighborhood in South Carolina is not very thickly inhabited, we are happy to believe, by quiet and peaceable people of the stripe of this self-advertised bigot. In every age and in all countries there have been Pharisees and hypocrites, narrow and bitter, cruel-hearted and small-souled; and yet the spirit of such men has not always prevailed, nor have they been able to stop the progress of that liberality and tolerance which considers that matters of conscience and belief between man and his Maker are not to be directed by other people's whims or to be stamped out because of unpopularity. If the Journal's correspondent is not the belated incarnation of a spirit that would have been at home and flourishing in the dark ages, he is at least very backward in learning the rudiments of Americanism. It is to be regretted that he did not give his real name, so that the Elders in their mission of peace and salvation might have been on the lookout for him. He would thus have insured himself against any trespassing on his hospitality, for with such as he, the matter of congeniality is by no means one-sided. Moreover, while the Gospel of salvation is free to all mankind, there is neither injunction nor inclination to force it upon any who do not want it. In this latter view of the case, how would it do to commend to "Beulah Citizen" one interesting feature of the Mormon creed. The Elders he refers to are no doubt observing it; it would be good for him. It is in blunt, plain English: "Mind your own business."

RELIGIOUS FANATICS.

It is strange that people who seem possessed of ordinary good sense in the every day affairs of life often are led away by a religious movement which has in it neither logic nor prudence. Another instance of this peculiar kind of work is agitating a section of California. A stranger has presented himself in the vicinity of Fresno, announcing himself as the Messiah. He says he has been placed above St. Peter and hereafter will stand at heaven's gate, welcoming the righteous to glory and sending the wicked to everlasting fire. He has succeeded in collecting a considerable band of disciples, some of the men abandoning their farms, and women neglecting their children to follow him. One woman, Mrs. William Welsh, was sent to the Stockton asylum this week as a result of his harangues. She attended his meetings and was so carried away by his remarks that she tore off her clothing and ran from house to house crying that she was making straight the path for the coming of the Messiah.

The people in the locality who do not like the stranger's preaching are giving him additional notoriety by active opposition outside of legal methods. On one occasion this week a committee of citizens waited on him and gave him thirty minutes to leave the town, under threat of death. He moved to a neighboring settlement. He claims that he can work miracles, heal the sick, cure the blind and raise the dead if he wants to, but says he does not want to do it. He claims no name, no church, no family, no nation. He says that Christ fulfilled the Old Testament and he will now fulfill the New Testament.

There is a practical side to the work of this new pretender. He lives on the contributions of his followers, and is collecting all the money he can get. To those who donate liberally he promises special blessings in heaven, which in his teachings at least are purchasable with the riches of men. Of course the money he collects is to be used for a great divine purpose, and it is quite likely that if he is allowed to go on a little longer it will develop that this especial purpose is to accumulate a snug fortune for his private benefit.

If in a country where there is so much pretense of preaching Christianity the people were taught the principle of testing doctrines and religious teachers which was promulgated by the Lord and His Apostles in ancient times, there would be less danger of any being led astray either by designing men or fanatics. But perhaps if the people were taught to apply that test it would throw a good many preachers out of a job, as it would exhibit them in their true position. The rule laid down anciently for the guidance of the people was that those only who abode in the doctrine of Christ were to be received; and "if any come unto you and bring not that doctrine, receive him not into your houses neither bid him Godspeed, for he that biddeth him Godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds;" also that the divinity of the doctrine itself was to be proven, for those who do the will of the Father were promised that on doing so they should "know of the doctrine, whether it be of God." When a doctrine is thus calmly tested by the scriptures and the testimony referred to, the position of those who advocate it is not difficult to determine.

THE PULLMAN STRIKE.

The strike of the Pullman employees, more than any other, indicates the disturbed condition of the business of the country. It has always been understood that the community of which the palace car builders is composed is in every respect all but a model of perfection, the laborers being well paid and; provided with facilities for education, amusements, recreation and all that goes to create happiness and content. The Pullman workmen, moreover, being a highly respected class of men, one would suppose, all the circumstances considered, that they would be the very last to lay down their tools in order to enforce their demands.

It appears that the company some time ago announced a cut in the wages of 83 1-3 per cent. The employees claim that they found it impossible to live on the reduced wages, especially since the employers did not at the same time reduce the rents they have to pay. The company claim that the cut was necessary because they had been doing business at a loss, taking contracts at unprofitable figures, so as to be able to provide the men work and some wages. They offered to show their books to a committee of workmen to prove this assertion, but these refused the offer, thinking that the talk of loss was merely a bluff and that a strike would bring the company to terms.

For the sake of the men themselves it is to be regretted that they did not examine the books when the offer was made. If the statements be true, that the business has been conducted at a loss, to save the men from idleness and consequent sufferings, no strike can avail, inasmuch as no employer can for any length of time afford to pay out in wages more than he actually earns. A strike under such circumstances is evidence of ingratitude likely to harden the heart of the most benevolent and result in no good to those engaged therein.

It is true that the Pullman company lately, according to accounts published, paid a dividend of two per cent to the stockholders, and this seems to contradict the statement about the loss incurred; but the dividend might have been paid out of the reserve fund instead of the earnings and is no proof of a rushing business. Judging from the falling off in railroad traffic all over the country, it is only natural to suppose that the company is content to suspend operations, giving the men all the time they may want for rest with nothing to do.

A noteworthy fact, suggested by this strike and others on at present, is that they have been declared at a time when that mode of industrial warfare would seem to be least expected. Generally the men who direct labor agitations select a time when business is flourishing and the employers have more contracts than they can conveniently fill, being dependent, consequently, on the industrious performance of the duties devolving on their hands. These strikes are phenomenal because occurring at a time when the depressed times render labor exceptionally cheap, and when the employers would probably prefer to close up. The laborers must indeed stand more united and be more conscious of their combined strength than they have ever been before, if they, notwithstanding this disadvantage, entertain the hope of emerging victorious from a struggle with capital for the maintenance of higher wages.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

The temperance societies are meeting with gratifying success in securing the endorsement of women to what is known as the Polyglot petition to governments. This petition asks for restrictive legislation regarding the liquor traffic, and if its designs were carried out the rum-selling business would be very materially reduced in its dimensions. Dramshops and places where persons congregate to buy and drink liquor would be placed under the ban of the law and the influence of company at such places to lead young men to the drinking habit would be removed. Whether the temperance people can secure such a triumph as this would bring them is a matter of doubt in the present state of affairs, but there is no question that even under the most adverse circumstances which can be pictured today their efforts can be productive of a vast amount of good.

The petition referred to has been circulated in the United States, Great Britain, Australia, Belgium, India, Chili, Denmark, Holland, Mexico, South and East Africa, Mexico, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Hawaiian Islands, Egypt, Japan, Siam and other places, and is still being circulated in new localities. Up to the 15th of the present month the report of the number of signatures of women was 1,025,570. In the list of countries the United States leads in endorsers of the movement, followed by Great Britain, which already records 850,000 signatures. Besides this, the movement has the endorsement of prominent religious societies, so that, taken altogether, the temperance people have an immense following in working out their plans.

In connection with temperance work at present is a discussion of the best methods to be adopted now going on at the temperance congress in session at San Francisco. There is an effort to have a defined method marked out for temperance workers to follow, but so many different opinions exist and such a varied array of suggestions is submitted that it is exceedingly improbable that any definite general plan will be agreed upon and outlined, and the temperance people will continue to make available any means within their reach. "The social influence of young people" was regarded as one of the most effective weapons with which to fight the liquor traffic, and there was a discussion upon this topic on Wednesday, in which Rev. Frank S. Forbes, secretary of the Utah Christian Endeavor society, took part. The key to a very important part of the situation lies in training the youth to decry the use of intoxicants in the home and at social gatherings and festivals. This accomplished, and legislation against the liquor traffic, in the next generation at least, would not be difficult to secure. But the tendency of the age is to train a larger number of children against the temperance cause than for it, and in that respect the outlook wears a rather gloomy aspect. One cause of this is that there are too many riders attached to the temperance movement by those who are engaged in it. One of these is attempted to be saddled on to it by Mr. Forbes. His suggestion regarding the introduction of the divine Leader into politics, while it may be the only way to cleanse that arena, when made in the connection in which the gentleman has placed it rather invokes antagonism to the temperance cause by reason of the pronounced opposition to a union of church and state. Those who would do effective work under the temperance banner would lay themselves and the cause less vulnerable to inroads from the enemy by keeping close rank and not overloading with too many actual or pretended reform movements.

DECORATION DAY.

The thirtieth of May, set apart as a holiday in honor of the heroes who died in order that the Union might live, is a day on which in patriotic breasts, as far as the Stars and Stripes are waving, gentle chords are touched, vibrating sweet symphonies of love, patriotism, loyalty, reverence, and the day will be kept sacred as long as admiration of valor dwells in the hearts of American citizens.

The origin of the day as a national holiday is due—as so much else that is good—to a woman. Mrs. Martha G. Kimball, whose death at Philadelphia April 21, this year, was announced in the News, on a visit to the South noticed Southern ladies decorating the graves of the Confederate soldiers. This gave her the inspiration that led her to communicate with General Logan on the subject and which finally resulted in the naming of a date for Decoration day. The idea once shaped, the nation readily responded to the call to carry it out. It was the one thing needed to give expression to the feeling of gratitude and love to those who fell for the country. And now, as years roll by, the evidence is abundant that the significance of the day will become more and more understood in its true nature.

A nation assembled around the graves of its fallen heroes is a grand spectacle, and the lessons imprinted on the minds of young and old on that day are such as to be of lasting benefit. No more eloquent appeal for true patriotism is conceivable than the voice that whispers from the dust, of the deeds done by those who slumber therein. That voice from the graves tells of the glory of living and, if need be, dying for a good cause; and it admonishes the people to maintain the institutions of the country and the liberty so dearly bought. And more than that; it speaks of the immortality of man with irresistible force of argument. It is impossible to think for a moment that the handful of dust that smoulders beneath the green sward is all there is of those great men, whose earthly career was cut short on the battlefields bathed in their blood. Can it be possible that such deeds of heroism and patriotism are to find no other reward than the soon withering flowers strewn on their graves? The idea is impossible to entertain.

If Decoration day has any lesson to teach more prominent than any other, it is this, that there is a hereafter in which virtue will be rewarded. Our fallen heroes were deprived of the enjoyment of many years of life; their opportunities of development were restricted by the cruel instruments of death, but a just Creator, a loving Father has surely some means of compensating His virtuous children for such sacrifices. The grave speaks of Him who conquered death and gave a promise of immortality to the world.

This year the celebration of Decoration day brings with it more than usual solemnity, because the country is in commotion and men's hearts fall within them for fear of what the future may bring. Such fears may be well founded; yet the thought should not be lost sight of that even the darkest hours may bring forth blessings. There are still patriots in this country as true as any of those fallen and as ready to respond to a call to save the country. Men may be called upon to die, but patriotism lives in the hearts of the people for ever. As they emergency arises heroes will be found able to cope with the situation and solve any problem that may arise. This is one of the great lessons of the day on which we decorate the graves of our dead.

A MORAL ON JOURNALISM.

We believe that all "journalists" are reputable, and better posted than the generality of men on the recognized standards of moral conduct. But all the men in the profession are not "journalists." In fact, the term in its proper sense does not apply to one hundredth of them. But the difference between a journalist and a journalistic adventurer is so marked that any man may detect the fraud on sight without the slightest chance of mistake.

The points of difference are multitudinous, but one we have in mind will illustrate sufficiently. The journalist is an educator in the best and highest sense. The president of a university is no more so, and holds no higher ideals of good breeding, manly behavior, truth-speaking, love of virtue, thirst for knowledge, good reputation. In fact he is the popular advocate of all that elevates the race, the unpromising foe of that which degrades or corrupts. He regards personal abuse as the weapons of a ruffian, and has no use for them. Secret assassins are not only ruffians, but cowards, and he loathes them accordingly. In other words, his mission is in part to encourage all men to be just, honorable and courageous, and such an idea precludes the possibility of covert plots that deal with the good name of persons or institutions.

The adventurer delights in the very things which the journalist abhors. The one kicks the character-assassin out of his office, the other invites his secret interviews and publishes his communications over a nom de plume. The one upholds public institutions for the good there is in them, and corrects their errors in a candid, open way, in which there can appear no bid for ribald correspondence, or material for popular scandal, more than the conditions of the case positively require. The other goes out on his regular expeditions for plunder of this sort. If there is anything real or imaginary falls in his path that can be construed into a sensation, either putrid or scandalous, he drags it home for editorial sustenance. In general when the journalist deprecates, the adventurer encourages. What the journalist shuns or despises, the adventurer hugs to his bosom. In short, the exertion and influence which the journalist puts forth for good, the adventurer exercises for purposes that are entirely vicious and despicable.

THE SMITH HERESY CASE.

The heresy trial of Professor Preserved Smith of the Presbyterian church is again before the public. Last year he was pronounced a heretic by the divines assembled at Cincinnati from which decision an appeal was taken to the general assembly at Saratoga, this year. From the tenor of the speeches delivered by the delegates it seems more than likely that the decision of the lower court will be confirmed and the learned professor emerge from the trial branded as a heretic.

The question at issue is, as in the famous Briggs case, whether the Bible is free from errors. Prof. Smith is charged with teaching that there may have been errors even in the original manuscripts of the Bible, thus throwing discredit not only upon the sacred books but upon their Author, who is by the Presbyterian creed supposed to be God Himself. The defendant denies the charge. He says the merits or demerits of the original are not in the controversy, for the simple reason that no original copies are known to exist any more, and there can be no intelligent controversy about the inaccuracy of a book no longer in evidence. He does claim, however, that in the Bible we have, certain inaccuracies have crept in through the failings of transcribers and the difficulty of ascertaining, in some instances, the genuine reading.

It would seem that the Presbyterian church cannot well afford to declare this self-evident proposition heresy. A couple of hundred years ago, when the scientific criticism of the Bible was still in its infancy and but little material was at hand for the stupendous work it involves, it was but natural that reformers should declare the infallibility of the Bible as against the decrees of Roman prelates. Still it is a question whether the venerable men who entrenched themselves behind the Scriptures and held the fort valiantly, ever dreamed of an infallibly worded Bible text. It is a question whether they did not claim infallibility and authority for the doctrines expressed or implied rather than for the form in which these doctrines are put forth; the life-giving spirit, not the embodiment thereof, was always considered the essence of the Bible. With the progress made in this century in branches of science auxiliary to Bible study, no religious denomination can advance its cause by ignoring the facts brought to light and persecuting those who take an advanced view.

The sacred text as we now have it is not free from errors. Transcribers were likely to make mistakes by omitting words or syllables, or by misunderstanding the abbreviations, by inability to decipher an effaced word and sometimes by well-meant interpolations. Inaccuracies from all these causes are easily pointed out, but sometimes it is really impossible to ascertain the original reading and the error has been perpetuated in the received text and the authorized translations. The fact is incontrovertible.

But a faithful Bible student will further discover that even the original text may have been inaccurate, without destroying its authority as the word of God. Inspired men were men after all. They wrote, according to their own claims, as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. But this divine influence did not teach them correct grammar or furnish them with technical terms for scientific discourses. Hence we find a variety of style and expression, all due to the human instruments used in conveying the divine will. Just as a speaker may be moved upon to utter the will of the Lord, without being able to give to his discourse the perfect form of that of an eloquent orator, so a writer may be inspired and give to the world the word of God, though in language not perfect.

Theologians who deny this fact only prove themselves incapable of grasping the truth regarding inspiration and revelation. They ignore the plain teachings of the Bible itself upon these important subjects.

VARIOUS KINDS OF "CONSPIRACIES"

In another column will be found copies of a number of telegrams that are said to have passed over the wires between two members of the Supreme court of this Territory. They relate to the trial and treatment of the Lehi

Junction train-stealers, and were sprung by the Ogden Standard of Sunday morning as a stupendous sensation, the idea being that they furnish indisputable evidence of a cruel conspiracy against the men who were to be tried for the offense mentioned; and that they reveal the bias and prejudice prior to trial which made the conviction of the accused foreordained and certain. It will be noticed that one of the parties most prominently mentioned denies the accuracy of some of the utterances attributed to him, while another affirms that the copies as published are identical with the messages received by him. With the further observation that the manner of transmitting these messages was wholly unusual, that their matter is extraordinary and that the obtaining of the whole affair—private communications as they were—to be exploited in the papers is most singular of all, the News leaves the subject to the discriminating perusal and comment of its readers.

It is not probable that the matter will be permitted to rest as it is at present. Special criticism may therefore be appropriately withheld for the time being. It will not be unjust, however, to say that the spasms of virtue just now indulged in over the "diabolism of the conspiracy," by certain parties who a few years ago winked at other "conspiracies" against fair trials and juries for accused men, should not be regarded as possessing as much force, consistency and sincerity as if they came from honest sources. As to the ethics of the proposition, it is of course a grave and despicable business to engage in a conspiracy to convict and punish men who may be innocent, merely because they may be unpopular; this latter applies to people in either a religious, a political or an "industrial" sense. It is also a serious and a risky business to enter into a conspiracy to violate the law and defy the law's commands, or to countenance and applaud such a course. Finally it is contemptible business to conspire, either as railroad, telegraph or other corporations, or as individuals, to entrap zealous officials, and exaggerate and advertise and misconstrue their motives, publishing their every personal utterance with prejudicial comments, with the object of defeating the law's enforcement, of humiliating its high representatives, and of rendering still more strained a situation which is already far too bad. All these forms of conspiracy are not only odious and unwise, but, we think, criminal. In the present instance we hope the investigation will be speedy and thorough, and that the blame and guilt with full force may be brought home to the proper parties, be they whom they may.

TEA-DRINKING.

It is generally recognized that tea-drinking has become a vice in England—that is, that the use of the beverage is now so immoderate that it is undermining the health of the nation to an extent but little behind the work of the beer can. In the United States the women are closely following in the wake of their English sisters, and by comparison with other family provisions the consumption of tea is enormous.

For some time past Miss Winifred Ellis, the prominent English hygienist, has been endeavoring to check this tendency to misery and destruction among her countrywomen, but with such poor success that she is about to give it up as a hopeless task. It was conclusively shown that the indigestion and anemia from which work-girls and servants in Britain suffer is chiefly due to inordinate tea consumption. In the slate quarries at Merioneth, in Wales, it was demonstrated also that the miserable condition of both the men and women of the district was due principally to the excessive use of tea.

Under these circumstances Miss Ellis has endeavored to introduce a change in the manner of life in this respect. She instituted cookery classes in which nutritious foods were substituted for the tea, and other and healthful drinks provided, without increasing the expense to the people. The meals were relished, but it was found impossible to wean the people from tea-drinking because the appetite for the beverage practically had made them slaves. They preferred to do without more nutritious food rather than abandon it. The teapot therefore remains in use all day long, appearing at every meal, bringing with it ill health and suffering which is shortening the lives of the present generation and increasing the ills of the next.

The inordinate use of tea in this section of country also is working serious injury. The same unhealthful effects which mark its path in Britain are evident to a considerable extent here in the evils of indigestion and a morbid diminution of blood with which so many persons, especially females, are affected. Of course there are other causes which produce these ills in numerous instances, but their existence among tea drinkers no doubt could be traced here, as in Great Britain, to a popular and enervating beverage. Its use not only is rendering the lives of those who gulp down from one to half a dozen cups of tea daily when there is no necessity for it and speeding them toward the grave faster than there is occasion for, but is having a still more disastrous effect in reducing vitality among the offspring of such parents.

There is much said and done, and properly so, against insanitary regulations which engender disease and invite untimely death. An equal need exists for a crusade against the tea-drinking vice. It is a question in which mothers especially are deeply interested and which in this community they could correct if they would. In view of demonstrated facts as to the effect of the habit referred to, it is timely for many mothers who have laid their little ones in the quiet graveyard, never again to behold them in mortality, to ask themselves to what extent they are responsible for the irreparable loss they have sustained. And when they have answered the question in accordance with reason and the facts in the case, it will be interesting to note what influence the anguish, the sorrows and the heartaches which they have suffered by reason of the loss will have in inducing these mothers to take a determined stand so far as they themselves are concerned against a crying evil, and in seeking to lead their sons and daughters from the lurking danger. The light and force of intelligence should be brought to bear to cause the abandonment of a pernicious habit condemned alike by the demonstrated truths of science and the Divine Word.

THE CRIPPLE CREEK HORROR.

The latest news from Cripple Creek, Colorado, is to the effect that private citizens of Colorado Springs have undertaken to act as peace makers between the strikers and mine owners, and it is said that they have been successful to the extent that a truce has already been agreed upon and prisoners may be exchanged between the warring factions. Everybody hopes this may end the trouble.

The transactions the last week in that region illustrate vividly, we think, the peculiar conditions towards which the country seems to be gradually gravitating. The miners struck refusing to accept a reduction of wages. The mine owners attempted to continue work with non-union men, but the strikers seized their arms and threatened to kill those who went to work. Powder was hurled into one of the shafts, the fuse lighted and the property destroyed. Triumphant yells rent the sky mingled with the deafening report of the blast as flames and smoke and lumber and iron shot upwards. The legally constituted authorities were called upon to protect the property and restore order. But the mad-dened crowds gathered and defied both the law and its representatives. They were ready to kill the deputies, asserting their demands even at the cost of cruel war.

The question therefore arises, is arbitration at this stage consistent with a proper maintenance of law? If the difference between the employers and employes are of such a nature that it might have been amicably settled, then there seems to be criminal neglect on the part of those concerned not to make the attempt from the very first. As it is, the miners have been allowed to carry things to an extreme that virtually bars an amicable settlement.

The mine owners and miners may arrive at an understanding as to the time of labor and the wages, but neither can wipe out the outrages committed. The blowing up of the Strong mine shaft was a dastardly act. The killing of the deputies was high-handed murder, and the criminals who were concerned in the deeds should be prosecuted and punished after due process of law. Only so can justice be vindicated and society feel safe. If these rioters are entitled to arbitration after they have bathed their hands in the blood of the representatives of the law, there is no reason why men of the Dalton and Chris Evans type should not also be entitled to an amicable settlement.

It may not be denied that the demand of the miners of $3 per day of eight hours is reasonable for that locality; nor that the refusal of the employers to listen to their men at first was unwise. Still they had a legal right to do so and to employ new men, if they chose to. The laborers by trampling upon the rights of their fellowmen and engaging in law-destroying acts will but injure their own cause ultimately, even if temporary victory follows them. For prosperity never attends lawlessness. Caesar may be able to carry his destruction to the point he has in view, and command the erection of a column of human beings to perpetuate the memory of his achievements, but before the monument is completed his own head, gory and repulsive, is sure to be dangling from the pole, a ghastly sight in the morning shadows. The only consistent course for the Cripple Creek miners and the one that will be for their own interest, is to deliver up the guilty criminals to the law and then settle the difference with their employers on a basis reasonable and satisfactory to all. The recurrence of such crimes should be made impossible by the miners themselves, as far as this lies within their power.

A SUGGESTION.

In the present condition of affairs there is much discussion regarding the policy and procedure in dealing with the so-called "Industrialists" movement toward the East. People look at matters from different standpoints, because of different or more or less imperfect sources of information regarding the actual conditions which exist. There is much of heated argument and many assertions pro and con regarding the intentions and acts of officers and others that have little or no foundation in fact.

The News has a suggestion to make to the Latter-day Saints, that they withhold from engaging in disputations and wranglings regarding these matters. They should be in a position to view with concern events that are progressing and to use the information gained thereby for furthering the peace and welfare of their fellow-beings. But it is unwise to descend to partisanship and heated discussions, or to become in any way parties to the contest, except as necessity may arise in the maintenance of law and order. Especially in a time like the present is it essential for the Saints to heed the admonition to "be temperate in all things."

FREE TRADER though he is, "Billy" Breckinridge's program is likely to create a strong demand for "protection for the American home." He threatens to "invade every township in his district" in his contest for renomination.

Bradstreet's agrees that "Utah is at last in a fair way to become a state;" and that "the Territory may enter upon the path to statehood before the present session of Congress adjourns."

GENERAL KELLY and his contingent, afloat on the Iowa and Illinois rivers, are in no immediate danger of arrest for walking on the grass.

CARD TO THE ELDERS.

To the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints:

DEAR BRETHREN—Certain parties who appear to be anxious for notoriety, and who desire to take advantage of the prominence and achieve the dignity which discussion with the Elders of this Church would give them, have sent to representative Elders of the Church challenges to hold discussion upon the doctrines and the validity of the authority of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. People of this kind in California and elsewhere have of late been very persistent in demanding an acceptance of their challenge—the question, for debate, as they put it, being:

First—Was Brigham Young the lawful and legitimate successor of Joseph Smith (the Seer), to the prophetic office and presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints?

Second—And is Utah the appointed place for the gathering of the Saints in the last days, as spoken by the Prophets of God, including Joseph Smith, the Seer?

We take this public method of saying to all our Elders that we consider it entirely unnecessary for the vindication of the principles of the Church, or to prove the authority of the Priesthood of the presiding authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, to resort to any such method for their vindication. We leave this for the Lord to prove and sustain, and we think it folly to submit the claims of our Church or the Priesthood to the arbitrament of man. The Lord has said, "By their fruits, ye shall know them;" and to these we can confidently point, feeling satisfied that the people who are seeking for truth and looking for the evidence which the truth always furnishes, can more readily obtain this knowledge by calm investigation and close observation than by controversy.

It is our counsel, therefore, that any Elder who may have received and accepted such a challenge take no steps whatever towards meeting his challengers, but that he leave them severely alone.

No Elder in such a position need feel that any responsibility or discredit will attach to him for declining any discussion into which he may have been drawn; such responsibility we freely assume. We wish it to be further understood that this is our counsel to all of our Elders at home and abroad.

Your Brethren,

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
GEORGE Q. CANNON,
JOSEPH F. SMITH,

First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

THE HEART OF CHINA.

(Copyrighted by Frank G. Carpenter, 1894.)

HANKOW, China, April 27, 1894.

THIS is the Chicago of the Chinese empire. It is nearly 700 miles from the sea coast and there are at this point three cities which face each other, much as New York, Jersey City and Brooklyn, which have an aggregate population of something like 2,000,000 of people. Standing on Pagoda Hill, behind the city of Hanyang, you look down in fact upon the homes of almost 3,000,000, and you see hundreds of villages, thousands of boats, in which families live and die, and have spread out before you the three great cities of Hankow, Hanyang and Wuchang. In front of you, facing the south, flows the broad Yangtse river, which is at this place still a mile wide, and which is so deep throughout its course that the biggest steamers that sail the ocean can come up here and anchor at its wharves. The city on the opposite side is Wuchang. It has, perhaps, three-quarters of a million people, and the high wall which runs around it is twelve miles in length. It is the home of one of the most progressive governors of China, and is the capital of the state of Hupeh, which is bigger than the whole of New England. Turn to your left and you see at your feet the city of Hanyang, with its vast iron works, for the making of steel rails. Beyond it across the river Han, which is so filled with boats that their masts make you think of a thicket of hoop poles, is the vast plain covered with her buildings of Hankow, which is even larger than Wuchang, and which is the commercial capital of this part of the empire. As you look over the landscape your eye meets as much water as land. The mighty Yangtse above and below you flows on like a great inland sea, its bosom loaded with a score of steamers and thousands of queer looking junks. There are boats before you which have come 2,000 miles down its waters through the deep gorges of Ichang, and mixed with them are ships from Canton, Amoy, Foo Chow and other great cities along the coast. There are tea junks from the big Poyang lake, and queer-looking crafts from a thousand different localities, each having a build and make peculiarly its own.

As you look you realize the force of the assertion that China has more boats than all of the rest of the world put together. The Yangtse is here cut into by canals and the great lagoons lying back in the country are spotted with sails. The river Han, which has flowed

1,300 miles in its winding course from its source to its mouth, has brought down hundreds of river junks and ships are being loaded at scores of these wharves for all parts of the empire and of the world. Today the trade of this place amounts to about $37,000,000 a year and every dollar's worth of this has to be carried away by water. In the years to come a large part of it will go by land and railroads may make Hankow the greatest city of Asia, if not the biggest on the globe.

The probabilities are that this place will be some day one of the great manufacturing centers of the world. There is coal and iron near here in close proximity to one another and the water communication is such that coal can be shipped here from almost any part of the empire. Already a population of more than 1,000,000 are tributary to this point by rivers and canals, and the great trunk line of future China will probably run through Hankow from Peking to Canton, taking in more big cities and a greater number of people than any other railroad on the globe. Peking has a million of people, Tientsin has more than a million, and it would be on the line only eighty miles south of the imperial capital. From thence it would cut its way further south about 500 miles through one of the most thickly settled parts of the empire to Hankow, where it would strike these cities of two million. From here on to Canton it cannot be more than 500 miles and the land is rich in the extreme and it teems with millions. Canton is one of the great trading centers of the world, and it is said to have about three millions of a population. The whole length of the road would be less than 1,500 miles and there would not be a waste spot on it. It will take but little grading, and it would, I judge, be a comparatively cheap road to build. It would be a bee line from north to south China and would be largely patronized as soon as the Chinese discovered its value. There are no people on the globe quicker to make use of a good thing and a cheap thing than these Chinese.

As it is, they have the dearest of modes of travel, and though their wheelbarrows and boats carry goods for almost nothing in comparison with the labor spent in running them, they are dear in competition with steam. As it is, the steamers on the Yangtse are kept up by Chinese freight and passengers, and every steamboat I have seen has been crowded with them. They ride first and second class, and many of them take a sort of steerage passage, sleeping in bunks in a large compartment in the rear end of the steamers.

The first railroad in China was from Shanghai to Woosung, a distance of about twelve miles. Woosung is the bar at the mouth of the Whampoa river, and this road did a big business till some of the Chinese thought it was injuring their luck, and they complained to the authorities. The officials bought the road at a high price from the foreigners who owned it, and threw the locomotive, which they said contained a devil, into the river. Some of the rails are still left, and it may be that the road will be again built in the future. One thing is very certain, and that is the moment the Chinese appreciate that they can make and run roads of their own their superstition will not stand in the way of making them, and many of the officials are experimenting to see what they can do. I saw a locomotive which had been recently built by the Chinese machinists at the Kiagnan arsenal, near Shanghai, and it runs as well as any of our engines. I was shown railroad iron—I mean steel rails—which they had made there with Chinese iron, and there seems to be no doubt but that they can manage a rolling mill very well. There is a vast deal of waste now, it is true, and this will continue as long as the work is done by the officials, who expect to get a big living out of their stealings; but it will be different when factories of this kind are started as private enterprises. Just now the chief movements in the direction of railroads are from the government, and the idea is to render China impregnable in case of war. This is the purpose of the viceroy here. He hates the foreigners, and he wants to drive them out of the country. He is using them to build factories, and he has a cotton mill run by steam and filled with modern machinery, which is one of the largest in the world. It contains a thousand looms, and it is located on the banks of the Yangtse, in the city of Wuchang. It is now making money, I am told, and it is profiting off the rise in foreign cottons through the fall in the value of silver.

Speaking of extravagance in railroad building, I doubt whether there has ever been erected a more costly plant than that which is now being put up here by this viceroy for the building of cars, the making of rails and the turning out of a full equipment for the line which is at some future time to run from here to Peking. The works are being put up by Belgians as foremen, and about fifty high-priced men are now employed here on salaries. I visited the works yesterday. They are located at the foot of a hill just above the mouth of the Han river and a short distance back from the Yangtse Kiang. Accompanied by the American consul and Mr. Burnett, an American who has lived for thirty years in the center of China, I rode in a long Chinese boat, sculled by a ragged-haired celestial, up the Yangtse banks under the shadow of the Hankow wharves. We passed thousands of boats loaded with all sorts of freight, from Standard oil cans and cotton bales to baskets of oil, boat loads of peanuts, rafts of poles with bamboo houses upon them, and through hundreds of great junks of white pine, sometimes oiled to a rich yellow and in other cases black with age. Every wharf was filled with workers, and the coolies, with great loads on their backs, swarmed up and down them like gigantic ants. The men on the boats and on shore grunted or sang as they worked and the air was filled with a noise as great and as indistinguishable as that of the tower of Babel at the time of the confusion of tongues. Passing Hankow, we reached the ship-building yards of Hanyang, where men perched in little bamboo huts, built upon four poles at least fifty feet above the ground, were twisting ropes of plaited bamboo. Each hut was not more than four feet square and was just large enough to contain the rope-maker, who twisted at the coil which lay in rings within the poles on the ground beneath. Here and all along the banks of the river there were hundreds of bamboo huts, many of them no bigger than the top of a canvas-covered wagon and of exactly the same shape. These were the homes of some of the poorest of the million of Hankow and of many beggars. I stopped and photographed some of these as we went by, much to the consternation of their owners, who ran from the camera and called me a foreign devil at the top of their voices.

One attempted to grab my camera, but I gave him a shove backward and jumped into the boat. Similar cries greeted us as we landed at the wharf, where a score of Chinese coolies were unloading the great ingots of steel, which have been brought here from Europe, to make the first rails and to use until the Chinese shall be able to turn out their own steel from their own iron. Other coolies were unloading thousands of bushels of coke, also from Europe, and tois carrying of steel ingots coke and machinery has been going on for months. One of the ships on which I sailed on my way up the river had about 100 tons of these ingots, and its hold was packed with big boxes of heavy machinery. It carried 2,000 bushels of coke, and the captain told me he seldom made a trip without a lot of material for the Hankow rolling mills. Money, in fact, has been flowing out here almost as fast as the current of the Yangtse river, and the viceroy has spent somewhere between five and ten million dollars already. The evidences are apparent that he will have to spend a number of millions more before he gets through, and at the present rate of extravagant mistakes he is likely to bankrupt himself and his state government before he builds his road. In the first place it costs him a fortune to make the foundations of his work. He has, I judge, seventy-five acres, the greater part of which is covered with buildings. There was a hill close by, where he might have located the establishment. He chose, however, the low bed of the river, which is overflowed every spring, and went to work to make it safe from the waters. Laying out his foundations he filled in this vast area to a height of fourteen feet, the dirt being carried by coolies at 10 cents a day in little, shovel-like baskets hung to the two ends of a pole, which they rested over their shoulders. It must have taken an army to do it, but it is done, and there is now a railroad running upon it a distance of perhaps a quarter of a mile from the rolling mills to the water. Upon this there were about 100 steel cars and a steam engine or two of European make at the time I entered the yard. The cars were loaded with machinery, and were being hauled to the rolling mills in the rear.

I followed one of the trains. We first came to eight large boilers, near which were what looked like vast hay stacks, but which were sheds of mats, in which he coke was stored. Beyond these there were two massive furnaces for the smelting of the ore. Each was a hundred feet high, and I climbed to the top of one of them by the spiral steps on the outside. Below me I could see the root of the vast machine shops which are now being filled with expensive works. These shops cover at least twenty-five acres, and there are here that many acres under one iron roof. A railroad runs by their side, and a smoke stack 150 feet high rises in the air behind them. Beyond them in the distance you see the buildings of the viceroy's arsenal, where he is making modern rifles and other guns, and near this is a brick works, where bricks are being made with the latest of improved European machinery. I entered the machine shops. The din of an immense boiler factory greeted my ears, and I found myself in the midst of hundreds of Chinese machinists, who were working in putting up all sorts of rolling mills and machinery. A large part of the works is already up, but it takes time to build a shop of this magnitude anywhere, and in China things go very slowly. The viceroy has been spending so much that he has reached the end of his pile, and he is now waiting to get an advance from Peking. The government, however, is getting ready for the celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the birthday of the empress dowager, and upon this will be spent enough to build a road from Peking to Canton, and the people will be taxed in consequence. It is not so easy, however, to overtax the Chinamen, as it is in other so-called savage countries, and the government is trying to economize in every way. There is a railroad being built in the northern part of the empire, and the regular appropriation set aside for this has been $2,000,000 a year. I see by today's translation of the Peking Gazette that it has been decided by the board of revenue of the emperor to omit the appropriation this year in order to use the money to whoop it up for the old dowager. It will put the road back ten months, but this makes no difference to the Chinese.

This northern railway is the only working road in China. I expect to go to Tientsin and travel over it. I understand that it has been pushed rapidly within the past year or so toward the Manchurian frontier, and that it was of service to the government in the recent rebellion there. It is for the purposes of defense that the Chinese will build railroads. The best thing that could happen to the country would be a first-class war with the foreign powers. This would lead to the pushing out of enterprise in every direction. Roads would be built, and their bottom-hole eyelids would be stretched far enough apart for them to see that China is by no means the center of the earth, at the suppose. This northern road was first built to take coal from the mines to the Taku forts and the naval ships. When I was in China, five years ago, it was only about eighty miles long. It has, I am told, now about reached the great wall, and will soon penetrate Mongolia. There are now two factions here in favor of railways. One wants them as a means of defense, and the other wants them for commercial purposes. Neither, however, would advise the bringing of foreign capital to build them; and their motto is "China for the Chinese."

We went back to the city after visiting the arsenal, which was much the same as the one I saw at Kiagnan, though not so large, by the river Han; and as we did so I got a picture of one of the railroad cars of the China of the past. It was a buffalo cart, with wheels as large as the front wheels of a farm wagon, made of a single block of wood and fastened to the axle with a wooden pin. The shafts were tied to the axle, and there was not enough iron about the whole to have made a hair pin.

The chief freight car here is a wheelbarrow made entirely different from those I have seen in other parts of the empire. It is longer and it has handles at the front as well as in the rear. Two men usually work it when the loads are heavy, and I have seen a ton carried on one of these barrows. They are made with a screechin bamboo attachment, and there is no iron about them except the tires. The pieces are pinned together with wood and tied with rawhide strings. Each barrow costs about $5 and it will last, it is said, for a lifetime. In some parts of China there are wheelbarrows which have sails fastened above them in order that the wind may help the men who push them along the road. These wheelbarrows, the Chinese cart and the boat form now the passenger cars of these millions of people. Hundreds of thousands of tons of goods are carried over the country on the shoulders and backs of men every day and the traffic of the far north is largely freighted by little, fuzzy donkeys and big, wooly camels.

NORTHERN STATES MISSION.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa,

May 21, 1894.

Having filled the time allotted to my labors here, and before leaving for another portion of the Lord's vineyard, I thought it might be acceptable to your valuable journal to receive a few items regarding the work in the old Winter Quarters of the Latter-day Israel exodus. The Iowa conference was organized May 8th 1887, by Wm. M. Palmer, president of the Northern States mission. It then comprised only the states of Iowa and Nebraska, with a membership of 51. In July of the same year Kansas was added, and in the summer of 1889 the states of Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota were included within its geographical limits.

During the seven years of its existence the number of the Elders laboring in the Iowa conference has varied from eight to fifteen. Sixty-one members have emigrated to Zion. At the close of last year there were 117 members and 151 souls, counting children blessed. Elder Wm. J. Butterworth is now president of the conference and twelve other Elders labor under his direction.

The branch at Council Bluffs, comprising 14 members, is presided over by Elder Robert Huntington, son of the late lamented Elder Robert Huntington, whose many acts of kindness and unbounded generosity are held in grateful remembrance by hundreds of Latter-day Saints. The honored widow of this worthy man still furnishes the branch here with the same comfortable hall at 104 Broadway, third floor, well furnished with chairs, chandeliers and well filled lamps. Two deacons, Robert Halladay and Brother Jones, keep the house in neat, orderly arrangement, and regular Sunday services are held there at 2:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Saints and friends stopping over Sunday in Council Bluffs and Omaha are specially invited to attend.

The press of the two cities is exceptionally fair and liberal in its treatment of the Mormon question. Every Sunday morning issue of the Bee, World, Herald and Nonpareil, and Saturday evening's issue of the Globe, contain under the headlines "Where to Worship," notices of the hour and place of meeting for all the churches of the two cities. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints enjoys equal favor with the others. It would seem proper for the many patrons of the eastern press in Utah to remember those who accord them fair treatment. The World-Herald and Globe as the staunch defenders of the party of tariff reform; and the Bee and Nonpareil, the undaunted advocates of Republicanism and protection, are quite as able exponents of their party's principles as are their eastern contemporaries; and far better informed on all matters peculiar to the interests of the great West.

In traveling here, the Utah-born Elder is astonished to meet so many who have fallen away from the Church. As a rule they are kind and well disposed toward our people. Quite a number of them are members of the Reorganized church, some are of the Whitmer faction, and even the dead and buried delusions of Strangism and Rigdonism smoulder among the ghastly ruins. While some have been to Utah, the majority are of that class who have tarried by the wayside in gathering to Zion and, after buying lands on which to build temporary homes, the rising value of real estate in the vicinity of Omaha and Council Bluffs has formed sufficient thorns and thistles to choke the Gospel seed. By far the most interesting figure of the entire group is that of Benjamin Winchester, an old veteran missionary of the Church and member of Zion's camp, who still lives and is in fair health at 420 Washington avenue, Council Bluffs. He dug the grave and helped to lay therein the writer's grandfather, Alfred Fisk, who fell a victim to the cholera in Zion's camp. He holds aloof from all other churches, unlike many drowning men who fall overboard the ship Zion; he knows too much to clutch at the straws of unauthorized factions.

In the little town of Crescent, just across the river east of Florence, President Butterworth with the writer's assistance has been holding services every Friday evening for the past month in the excellent well-furnished church owned by the Re-organized church. Elders O. W. Jones and James Casteson, who have the house in charge, have shown exceptional kindness and courtesy when we were withstood and challenged in one of the meetings by another minister of that church named H. N. Hensen (whose field of labor is in Utah); one of the above named gentlemen gave us to understand that they had no sympathy with his cavillings. The members are very hospitable, always invite us home. We have, however, a veritable home at the house of our ever staunch friend Joseph Hancock, whose kind wife is a devoted member of the Church, and whose doors are always swung open at our call day or night. Exactly the same may be said of Frank Halliday, of Council Bluffs, and several others.

The Elders throughout this mission are laboring zealously in disseminating the truth. With but two or three exceptions they report good health, and are generally trusted with the greatest kindness, although there is an almost universal indifference manifested towards the Gospel message and to the religions of all denominations.

The NEWS is one of our most effective aids. The home affairs of every day life in Utah are of absorbing interest to the Elders and Saints.

D. F. STOUT.

WHAT IS SHE?

In reading the various articles published, and listening to statements made for and against female suffrage, we are lead to wonder what kind of creatures our mothers and sisters are. For it seems that there is a diversity of opinion in relation to just where they belong among mankind, and those ideas are all advanced by men who, we think, should be willing to look upon their mothers as being far superior to many of the male fraternity who are allowed to have a voice at the polls, and who are as devoid of honor or self respect as it is possible for them to become. And yet some will say that women should not dabble in politics nor have anything to do with voting.

Is it possible that she who has done so much for the benefit of her noble sons, who has been the very moulder of their ideas and has made it possible for them to attain to such distinction, should be considered incapable of saying who she thinks will best serve the people and deal justice to herself and neighbor? Do these lords of creation ever challenge the vote of the thief who would break into their homes and carry off their hard-earned comforts? Or of the poor miserable wretch who sells his vote for whisky on election day, regardless of what might result from such recklessness?

Why not let all property owners represent their interests on election day? What harm would result from the expressed opinion of a woman for or against either political party? Do we suppose for a moment that she will stoop to anything more vile than is and has been indulged in by the male defenders of our political rights? Are we afraid that some aspiring lady who has endeavored to qualify herself for some public office would attempt to place herself before the community in which she resides as a candidate for such office instead of attending to the duties of home? What if she should make the attempt? Cannot the people place a male opponent in the field and thereby defeat her election? But we don't think there would be any trouble arise from that source. And yet we can't help thinking that there are very few women in the world who are less fitted for the various offices than some men who have been elected with flying colors, and who were a disgrace to the office. We honestly believe that there are women in Salt Lake City who would make better police justices, police, jailors and councilmen than some whose names will be handed down to succeeding generations as blots upon our fair history.

Are our mothers, who gave us our being and instilled into our minds the noblest of ideas, to be placed on a lower level than the ignorant colored population of the South who can neither read nor write? They have a voice at the polls, and by a special act of Congress. We don't blame the poor colored man for his ignorance. But we cannot help thinking that in point of interest to the nation, and the intelligence they possess, our women ought to have the right. They have to obey laws, pay taxes and be subject to rules just the same as men?

If a woman is a citizen why not allow her all that the Declaration of Independence and Constitution contemplated? And if she isn't a citizen, what is she? Respectfully,

J. D. CUMMINGS.

MILLARD STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Millard Stake convened in the Holden tabernacle Sunday, May 20th, 1894. There were present of the Council of the Apostles, F. M. Lyman; of the Stake presidency, I. N. Hinckley, Daniel Thompson and David R. Stevens; the High Council was well represented; Bishops of wards, and a large gathering of Saints.

Four meetings were held—two on Sunday and two on Monday. Elder Lyman spoke at all the meetings. Other speakers were the Stake presidency, Patriarch J. D. Smith, Elders J. V. Robinson, C. Anderson, Joshua Greenwood and Alma Greenwood. The main topics were: Home industry, economy, honesty, temperance, charity, church discipline, the wrong in card playing and round dancing, and the duties of the Saints and the laboring Priesthood in general. The speaker had much freedom and the good Spirit and peace and happiness prevailed. The discourses were interspersed with reports by the Bishops from the wards which were encouraging generally.

The General and Stake Authorities were presented by Elder C. Anderson, and all were unanimously sustained by vote of the people.

C. ANDERSON, Stake Clerk.

Those of the Saints wishing the Elders to visit relatives or friends throughout the Northern states in order to obtain genealogy or open the way for the Gospel message can best accomplish that purpose by writing a letter of introduction for the Elders traveling in the locality where such friends reside. Where an answer is desired enclose stamps.

The names of the Elders and their addresses for the summer were published in the April issues of the NEWS. Where uncertainty exists as to the address the parties can send their communication with full direction as to the parties they desire to have visited to the undersigned and it will receive due attention.

WM. J. BUTTERWORTH.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

If you want to see a sight go down in the Lehi fields (remarks the Banner), and see the army of boys thinning out the beets.

Mrs. Eliza Croxall, who has been in a critical condition for some time past, died about 1 o'clock Thursday, May 24, at her residence at 823 South First West street.

The question of reducing salaries of teachers in the Park City public schools, says the Record, is still under consideration, but will be thoroughly settled before any contracts are made for the coming school year.

Prof. A. C. Smyth is much pleased over the new tabernacle organ which arrived last Saturday, says the Manti Messenger. The new organ and re-organized choir seem to meet the requirements for music at the Sunday services.

The Central Utah Wool company has cars loaded with baled wool almost every day. Business is rushing at the warehouse, and although wool is hardly worth handling, a large quantity is being handled by this company.—Manti Messenger.

A twelve-year-old daughter of Blahop Robert Davidson was thrown from a horse at Cache Junction on Sunday evening, breaking her left arm between the elbow and shoulder. She was brought to Logan, where the broken limb was set.

News comes from Alpine that an eleven-year-old daughter of Bishop Marsh has died from diphtheria. An older daughter is suffering from the same disease. Mr. Alma Vance, of the same place, also has a daughter suffering from diphtheria.

Ludwig Elsemann, of the firm of Elsemann Bros., wool commission merchants of Boston, is still in the city making more purchases, says the Payson Globe. He states that he has already secured 300,000 pounds. A special train transported it to Boston.

Says the American Fork Item: An attempt to hold up Deputy Marshal Crookston on Wednesday evening was made by a desperate commonwealer, but Jim, in his shyness, got the drop on him, and at once ordered him to the outskirts of town, which the fellow quickly complied with.

The News is requested to publish the following: "John Allison, of No. 5 South Terrace, Jobs Hill, near Crook, Durham county, England, wishes to correspond with Joseph Nattrae, his uncle, who left Newcastle for Utah about ten or twelve years ago, or any of the family if they can be found."

A city correspondent of the News sends the following for publication: Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Stuart celebrated their golden wedding anniversary last Saturday, May 26, by giving a reception to their grandchildren. Mrs. Stuart showed them her wedding dress, fresh and bright, though stored away fifty years. The girls had great fun trying it on and imagining how grandma looked when she was a young and winsome bride.

There was a sad accident at Sugar House late Wednesday, May 23, which resulted in the death of the little three-year-old son of Paul Litz.

It appears that during the afternoon the boy was playing near his home, between Ninth and Eleventh East. He went too near the edge of Parley's creek, the bank gave way and he was precipitated into the stream. The mother heard the child scream, but could not get to him. She gave the alarm and the neighbors came to her assistance. The body was taken from the water by Mr. Smith after having remained there about ten minutes. All attempts at resuscitation failed, as life had become extinct.

Shortly after 7 o'clock Thursday an accident occurred to a motorman on a Rapid Transit street car. Mr. Sam Douse, who occupies a room on State street between Sixth and Seventh South, was the victim. When coming down the hill from A street (at which point the cars pass) Douse left his car and ran ahead to see if the other car was coming. He signaled the conductor to come on, and then attempted to board the car while it was moving. In some way he slipped and fell. The car struck him on the head, inflicting a scalp wound and bruising his face. A physician was called who dressed the wound and the patient is getting along nicely. It is thought he will be back to work in few days.

Richfield Advocate: Mr. Gottfrey Brigger informs us that today (Tuesday) all the water will be turned off from the river into the canals; other seasons this time of the year found the river full of water, but this year there is evidently a great shortage. It is reported that ranchers up the river are running all the water they can onto their places without any good right to do so. There is a convention called of all the irrigation canal companies to meet at Elsinore on the 11th of June to take into consideration the propriety of forming a company which will take in all the water supply of the Sevier river. By this means it is claimed a fairer division of the water can be arrived at.

James H. Sturgeon captured a wild goose at his place one day last week, and he thinks that he has a grand prize. Attached to the bird's leg is a very thin piece of brass, an inch long and half as wide. On this is punched with a pointed instrument, "Fremont Party, September, 1846. B. B. J."

It is presumed that the initials are those of Colonel B. B. Jackson, who was a member of Fremont's exploring expedition when it passed through this region nearly fifty years ago. The venerable colonel is on deck somewhere in Sonoma county, California, and has been written to. If he remembers having turned a tagged goose loose in 1849 the bird will be presented to the California Pioneer society.—Homer (Nev.) Index.

Mr. H. J. Grant, local representative of the New York Life Insurance company, purchasers of the $800,000 bond issue, Tuesday telegraphed to Mr. Gibbs, treasurer of the company, as to the delay in closing the deal. In the afternoon a response came that fairly made Mayor Baskin's face radiant with smiles. It was:

"Examination satisfactory; bonds may be delivered at once."

The examination refers to a careful looking into of the papers setting forth the indebtedness of the municipality. The delay was occasioned by the company sending to the state department at Washington for a certified copy of the act permitting an increase of the city's bonding power. The first payment to the city can be paid forthwith and will reach $500,000; the remaining $300,000 and interest will be payable in July.

The Beaver Valley Land and Irrigation company filed articles of incorporation May 23rd with the county clerk. The object of the corporation is to conduct the business of supplying water for domestic, municipal and manufacturing purposes and for the irrigation of land; also to construct and maintain reservoirs and canals, ditches, etc., together with necessary dams; also for the colonization, development, purchase and sale of real estate, and of water and water rights; also the building of hotels and bath houses. The general office of the corporation will be in this city.

The West Mountain Placer Mining company also filed its articles of incorporation with the county clerk about the same time. The incorporators are John Butter, of Bingham canyon, John Derr, D. A. Lombard, R. S. Somers, and W. S. Brown, of Fremont, Nebraska, and A. M. Spooner, of Salt Lake. The business of the company will be the transacting of a general mining and irrigating business. Two hundred thousand dollars is the amount of the capital stock and this is divided into shares of $1 each, which are all subscribed for.

Shortly after 7 o'clock last Tuesday the fire department was called out by an alarm sent in from the box at the corner of Second South and East Temple streets and this was followed by a telephone alarm from the People's Forwarding company's store on Second South, where the fire was burning. It started in the rear end of the store on the ground floor and rapidly spread to the upper floors and to the front, notwithstanding the department done good work and had a number of streams of water playing on the flames. The company had just received a large stock of hay, grain, etc., which was badly damaged. The loss is estimated at $7,500, with an insurance of $2,000. The building was damaged to the extent of about $250, the floors and roof being badly burned. It is the property of the Jennings Brothers' Investment company.

Another fire occurred near the corner of Fifth East and Third South street about one o'clock next morning. The fire started in the Webb bakery, which is located in the Midgley building. The firemen were called out and soon had the fire under control. Mr. Webb estimates his loss at about $75 with no insurance. His stock was an entire loss.

At five minutes to eleven Tuesday

there was a violent and startling explosion in the jail yard at the rear of the city hall, almost directly under the window of Mayor Baskin's office. The clerks of the various departments rushed pell mell to the scene to ascertain the cause, the inmates of the jail crowded close against each other in their attempt to peer through the iron gratings of their places of confinement, pedestrians poured in from State, First and Second South streets, and excitement was general.

When the excitement had subsided it was found that the trouble had been caused by a bomb, made after the order of the large Chinese fire crackers, thrown, it is believed, over from the fire station and exploded by means of a fuse or cap. From some of the strips and fragments picked up it was shown to have been from eighteen to twenty inches in length and with an interior diameter of about an inch and a half. The whole tube was evidently charged with gun powder and as it fell into an open space no damage was done. There are those who think it is the work of an embryonic anarchist but others are of the opinion that some indiscreet individual wishes to take advantage of the present dynamite talk and amuse himself at the expense of over credulous people.

Morris Goldberg, who came to Salt Lake about eighteen years ago and who was a resident of this city for a long time, has passed away from mortality. While here as elsewhere he carried on a money loaning business on an extensive scale and accumulated a large fortune. At the time of his death he was the owner of some of the most valuable business property in this city. He held a mortgage on the Wasatch or Groesbeck block for $75,000, and recently secured possession by foreclosure proceedings of a big business house south of that building. He was also the owner of considerable real estate in Ogden and Provo. A well known business man stated today that his interests in Utah would not fall far short of half a million dollars. Concerning his death the Associated Press dispatches say:

Morris Goldberg, a wealthy business man, died Saturday, the 26th, at his home in Oakland and was buried today (Monday). L. B. Goldberg, his nephew, says himself and family and brother, who is now in Chicago, and a brother of the dead man, Z. Goldberg, of Philadelphia, are the only heirs to the estate. Goldberg's will is in custody of Wells, Fargo's bank and will be opened tomorrow. Its contents are unknown, though L. B. Goldberg expects to be made executor of the will. He places the value of the estate at anywhere from $250,000 to $1,000,000.

Had it not been for severe winds and the general frost which was felt as far south even as Washington county, the past week would have been an ideal one for crops; as it was, on the whole, it was the best week yet this season.

The week began with a cold rain, which turned to snow in cold localities, extending as far south as Kane county. This was followed by a general frost over the Territory, which, on the 16th, did some damage to potatoes, tomatoes, other tender vines, and to fruit blossoms. The damage was not general, but was confined to exposed localities. The 17th and 18th were also frosty nights.

The latter days of the week were warm, but heavy, drying winds were somewhat unfavorable to crops, and reports about the amount of growth are conflicting. The week closed with a heavy rain, quite general, beginning at night on the 21st.

Crops were refreshed by this rain, and the dry soil thoroughly soaked. Grain which has been backward should now take a good start. Potatoes are being planted in the northern counties. In the middle counties fall grain is in very good condition; spring grain is somewhat thin and unhealthy. The Tooele county grain is a foot high. Corn is coming up. Strawberries are ripening. In Utah county, also, they will soon be on the market. Bees are not doing well. The sugar beet crop has not done very well lately. Lucern is promising in Millard county. In the south the water supply is getting scarcer. Lucern's are being out in Washington county. Potatoes are in bloom; the general prospect is good.

LOGAN, Cache County, May 28. —Last week might be termed B. Y. college week in educational circles. This week will be Agricultural College week. On Thursday the closing exercises of the preparatory department were held in the college building. They were principally of an elocutionary and musical nature. On Friday the commencement exercises of normal department were held in the Thatcher opera house, and were of an elaborate nature. E. G. Davis, of Samaria, Idaho, Wm. H. Griffin, of Newton, Utah, and Miss Maude Austin, of Liberty, Utah, were the valedictorians. There were twenty-two graduates of the normal department and two who had completed the business course. The speeches were interspersed with music, and Bishop W. B. Preston made the awards. Hon. Geo. W. Thatcher, of the general board of education of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, then, in behalf of said board, conferred upon Prof. J. H. Paul the degree of Bachelor of Didactics in Natural Science, and upon Prof. W. J. Kerr the degree of Bachelor of Didactics in Mathematics. A banquet in honor of the graduates was given by the Alumni association on Thursday.

Yesterday morning Hon. Geo. Q. Cannon delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class at the Agricultural college. He spoke in terms of the highest praise of the character of the education obtained at the College, where manual and intellectual training go hand in hand; exhorted the graduates to put in practice that which they had learned, and use it for the advancement of themselves and others; by this means the good work being done here would not be confined exclusively to pupils, but would extend in an ever widening circle, until at last a partial knowledge of the scientific truths and advanced methods taught here would become universal; the education gained during the college course should be regarded as a stepping stone to lives of industry and usefulness; the friends and relatives would expect them to be better qualified for the battle of life in whatever profession or trade they might choose to follow, and would to a certain extent regard them as models. Great stress was laid by the speaker upon the cultivation of habits of industry, thrift and moral cleanliness.

THE EUPOREAN MISSION.

ARRIVALS.—The following missionaries from Utah arrived in Liverpool per the Anchor steamer Ethiopia, via Glasgow, May 2, 1894: For the British Mission—Alfred S. Booth, of Provo; William A. Taylor of Fremont; James Duckworth, William G. Westwood and Geo. S. Spencer of Salt Lake City; John Kemp of Lewiston; David Jenkins of Logan; Wm. F. Pratt of Hinckley; Harvey Woodyatt of Willard and Joseph W. Huish of Payson. For the Scandinavian Mission—John A. Carlson of Logan; Erik Christensen of Ephraim; Lewis Madsen of Manti; Erik Gillin of South Cottonwood; James Larson and H. H. Danielson of Richmond; Michael Sorensen of Salt Lake City; S. O. Christiansen of Manti; John C. Wiberg of Sandy; A. P. Fillerup of Lake View. Mrs. Catherine Thompson of Ephraim, accompanied the Elders. She will visit her old home before returning.

RELEASES AND APPOINTMENTS.—Elder Hyrum Hirkham has been honorably released from his labors as President of the Sheffield conference, to return home, May 28, 1894.

Elder Wm. G. McAllister has been honorably released from his labors as president of the Scottish conference, to return home, May 28, 1894.

Elders W. D. Callister and F. H. Baugh have been honorably released from their labors as traveling Elders in the Birmingham conference, to return home, May 26, 1894.

Elders H. M. McCune and Geo. M. Thompson have been honorably released from their labors as traveling Elders in the Liverpool conference, to return home, May 26, 1894.

Elder M. A. Lewis has been honorably released from his labors as traveling Elder in the Irish conference, to return home, May 28, 1894.

"INDUSTRIALISTS" IN UTAH.

men back one hundred yards and order them to use their Winchesters. Mr. Smith denied the charge and said his army was entirely unarmed.

This move on the part of Chief Pratt has taken effect and Smith is not so rash now, knowing that the officers mean business. Before this they kept howling and hooting and these sounds, with those of the band, filled the air to the misery of all until daylight. The men slept but little and had nothing to eat until late this morning, their commissary being at the camp left last night.

At 10:30 a. m. a meeting was called by Smith, Mr. Glassman taking a prominent part. Resolutions were passed to the effect that they lay where they now are and freeze the officers out; that they send squads in all directions inside the line to cause the officers all trouble possible; and that they select a committee of two men to call on the federated trades and trades unions in Salt Lake for relief. Five dollars, was allowed, the committee selected and they will depart soon.

The Farmington city council met this morning and endorsed the action of the Davis county officials in turning back the commonwealth hordes. They also sent reinforcements and provisions to the officers, and declare that they would be given all the assistance needed.

OGDEN, 4 p.m.—The meeting at the city hall was presided over by a man named Lougherty and was attended by many of the leading citizens of Ogden. He opened denunciatory of the action of the Salt Lake and Davis county officials in stopping the army.

He was followed by Captain Withersall, an old G. A. R. man, who spoke in a similar strain.

Then Major Breeden, of the late Territorial Legislative Council, took the top step and made a ringing speech in clear and forcible terms and with an absence of personality and abuse. He concluded by offering the following resolution, which was adopted amidst a storm of applause:

Whereas, it has come to our knowledge that a band of our fellow citizens were marching peacefully through our Territory on their way to the national capital, there to present in the form of a living petition to those in authority their supposed grievances; and

Whereas, these fellow citizens were met at the northern boundary of Davis county by an armed force of police and U. S. marshals from Salt Lake City and were prevented from pursuing their journey; and

Whereas, his honor, the chief justice of this Territory has issued an injunction containing the following, to wit: "It is ordered that said John Doe and R. H. Roe and all persons acting in concert with them and all their counselors, attorneys, agents or comrades and all others in aid or assistance of them or each of them, absolutely desist or refrain from marching into, upon or through said Davis county, or from in any wise coming into said Davis county or any part thereof;" and

Whereas, we believe his honor in issuing this order exceeded his jurisdiction and unintentionally committed a great wrong against our fellow citizens; therefore

Be it resolved, that bowing to the majesty of the law with all due respect to the order of the court, and especially disclaiming any disrespect to the presiding chief justice of the Territory, we the citizens of Ogden, in mass meeting assembled, do most earnestly protest against the interference of the judicial and executive departments of the Territory to the right of American citizens to pass through the Territory of Utah; and we earnestly ask that his honor so modify the said orders as to permit the body of men to remove themselves from the Territory on their journey eastward.

FROM MONDAY'S DAILY, MAY 23.

The News "war correspondent" returned from Salt Lake to the Smith Industrial army camp on the through 7 o'clock Union Pacific passenger train this morning and when near the invisible line which divides Weber and Davis counties jumped from the platform of the rear car and started to climb the sand ridge in the direction of the encampment about two miles east of the railroad track.

The slowing up of the train was observed by Chief Pratt from his lofty place of observation, through a field glass, as was also the jumping from the train and in short order a conveyance was on the way to meet the lone newspaper man. On arriving at camp everything was found pretty much in the same condition as chronicled in the News on Saturday evening.

One change has fallen to the lot of the Salt Lake officers since then, however, that they appreciate very much, and that is that they are better provided for than they were. But even now they are not as comfortably situated as the so-called indigent horde they are called upon to guard. The latter have more blankets and provisions enough to last them three days.

There was a good deal of excitement in camp last night occasioned by the arrival from Salt Lake of one Vinson, a fire-brand of the home reserves, who informed Smith that there was great sympathy for the wealers in the capital, and that many were ready to lynch the Governor and Mayor; that the former had called out the militia to go up and kill off the Smithites, but that even the militia were so highly incensed at his honor's action that they refused to turn out at his bidding. All this tended to stir up strife and lively scenes followed for a considerable time. Pratt and Woods held a consultation with a view to stopping Vinson's inflammatory and untruthful statements and it was suggested that he be arrested for violating the injunction of the court which prohibits any person acting with or for them in the manner indicated. The conference resulted in the determination to allow Vinson to go unmolested for the time being. He left camp for Salt Lake in his car about 10 o'clock and on taking his departure counseled Smith and his men to break through the official barrier that had stopped them in their journey and proceed. This advice was not, however, heeded, although there were men in the ranks who wanted to act upon it. Others advised that such a step would result disastrously and so the matter was dropped.

In the meantime Pratt had communicated by wire with Captain Donovan to arrest Vinson at the Hot Springs on a charge of vagrancy, claiming to have ample proof that he has not worked for months and that he is a professional idler. The home officers were served with the order and Vinson was apprehended at the Hot Springs shortly after daylight this morning and brought to this city and thrown in jail.

The camp has every appearance of a regular army outpost and some of the men have seen service in defense of their country. The food, too, is much the same. Bread, pork, beans and coffee form the bill of fare. Breakfast was over when the News man arrived but there was plenty left for several hungry men and he enjoyed his meal thoroughly.

"Charles Vinson, John Hofeling, inciting riot." Such is one of the entries on the trial docket of the police court today. Hofeling was also a visitor to the camp of the "army" last night and became a prisoner at the same time and place that Vinson was placed under arrest. A News reporter sought for admission to the jail to interview the prisoners this afternoon. Vinson came from his iron barred apartment in response to the call of his name. To the reporter he said his arrest was a matter of very great surprise. When he left Weber county last night he had not the remotest idea that he would be apprehended and taken to jail on his return to this city. He says he does not know what the charge against himself and Hofeling is.

When asked as to how long he had been a resident of Salt Lake, he said "Five years." Later he reduced that period to one year. Questioned as to whether he was a man of a family, he responded, "Well, I don't care to say anything about that; it makes no difference anyway." As soon as he had made that statement he added, "I'm a single man."

He claimed to have employed an attorney but declined to give his name to newspaper men. Bail in each instance was fixed at $100, but neither had secured bondsmen at the time of the interview.

On Vinson's person were found a number of papers, some of which the police regard as a valuable clue to the identity of certain individuals who in the near future contemplated to wreak vengeance on those who have in different ways taken part in the movement against the Industrialists.

A News representative examined the documents with Captain Donovan today and among them was found what the captain feels sure is a black list. It contains the names of several of the deputy marshals who were recently called to Provo to intercept the Carterites. The names are badly written and some of them are simply unintelligible. Others can be easily read. Those that are reasonably well defined are as follows: Walker, Merrill, (ex-policemen) Dunbar, Miller, Busby, Connors, Gleason, (ex-policeman) Field, Smith, R. Burton Jr., Weiser, Bill Calder, (ex-policemen).

Immediately following these names the following significant paragraph appears: "Salt Lake Hardware company furnished twenty-four rifles."

Captain Donovan stated that there had been a good many threats made by the blatant members of the "Home Reserves" as to what they would do when the time should be opportune. Death and dynamite are terms that have been frequently associated, but until recently little serious thought was given by the police to such talk except in the case of the discovery of the bomb under the foundation of the Commercial block and one or two other instances. They think otherwise now.

A German named Weiss was the trombone player for the band of the Smith detachment of Industrials now being held at Ogden. The band is temporarily deprived of its trombone, and Weiss is in Salt Lake, having successfully run the blockade of deputy sheriffs and police. His first attempt at getting through the official lines was made yesterday (Sunday) morning, when he tried to get into Davis county along the Union Pacific track. The officers overhauled him and sent him back. He wanted them to arrest him, but they would not do so. Last night after dark he made his second and successful attempt, this time on the Rio Grande Western track. He was seen by the officers, who ordered him back, pointing revolvers at him. The officers were mounted and a fence prevented them getting at Weiss, who says he refused to stop, as he did not believe the sheriffs would shoot an unarmed man. He was allowed to go on his way, and tramped all night.

Today when he came to the Hot Springs he was met by police, who ordered him back, but he refused to go, saying he had broken no law, and if they wanted to arrest him they could. But they allowed him to pass, and he is in town looking for work. He is a bookbinder, from Syracuse, New York, and has been in America fifteen years. He went to California a couple of years ago, and worked at his trade in Los Angeles. The financial collapse there made business so dull that seven months ago he was laid off work and has been unable to get any since except a few days at washing dishes in a hotel.

Weiss says he will take work anywhere and that he has no intention of going to Washington if he can get employment. He also says this is the sentiment of the men now with F. Deming Smith at Ogden. They would have broken up into small squads and gone ahead before this only their commander would not allow it. Now, however, they are ready to break up that way regardless of what any commander may say. They have been five weeks on their journey from Los Angeles. Three days in Nevada their whole supply of food was four crackers and water daily, and they were nearly famished. On the Southern Pacific they were crowded into a box car like sardines in a box. The Southern Pacific officials allowed them to ride unmolested, and they had understood that the Rio Grande Western was to do the same.

Weiss says that all of the organized Industrial forces have gone by way of the Southern route and are collecting in Colorado.

There are a great many tramps in California who come by any route they can, and may crowd in large numbers this way, but there are no more organized forces coming at present. He says the body of men near Ogden do not want any of the armed assistance offered by some persons in this city, though there is a radical element who would do anything. These, he says, are in the minority. All the majority want is to pass through peaceably to look for a living elsewhere, and if it had not been for the officers insisting on them holding together in such a large body they all would have been in Colorado before this.

Chief Justice Merritt listened this afternoon to arguments on the question presented by Judge L. R. Rhodes of Ogden in behalf of citizens of Weber county, and "General" Smith and his "Industrial" army, asking that the injunction forbidding the latter to enter Davis county be modified. Judge Rhodes recited the facts which led up to the granting of the injunction by Judge Merritt, pointing out that there had been no summons issued upon the parties in this matter and that the statute was against the issuance of an injunction of this kind. There had been served upon the defendants no order to show cause; for on the face of the document it was a judgment of the court. It could be nothing else, and the statute was directly prohibitory of that condition. The police of this city, some thirty or forty in number, and thirty-five or forty men claiming to be deputy marshals armed with Winchesters, and each policeman wearing formidable revolvers, had taken possession of the highway where it passed from Weber into Davis county; whether so required to carry out the order of this court he could not say. Such a condition of affairs now existed there that no respectable citizen of Weber county could pass the line, and for that reason the good citizens of Weber had desired him on their behalf to appear here and ask that the injunction order be vacated. As the case now stood it was utterly impossible for the defendants to come here; it would cost them their life.

Judge Hoge replied on behalf of the plaintiffs, and while admitting that a mistake had been made in not issuing a summons, he urged that by now putting themselves into court they had admitted the defect which it was claimed existed. If the officers had gone beyond their duty they could be held personally responsible for any injury done to any individual.

Attorney Arthur Brown followed on the same side and indulged in some exceedingly strong language condemnatory of the commonweal army and its ways.

Judge Henderson followed and Judge Rhodes made the final reply.

At the close of the arguments the case was continued until tomorrow at 2 p. m., when Attorney Rhodes will be required to show cause why the injunction should not be made permanent.

OGDEN, May 25.

A mass meeting was held at the Thomas hall on Saturday night by the sympathizers of the Industrials, at which several prominent gentlemen of this city were speakers. At first it was calculated by the sympathizers to march to the Industrial camp and force their way through the ranks of the officers, but finally the conclusion was arrived at that a committee of several lawyers, who had volunteered, go to Salt Lake and seek to have the injunction modified to the extent of allowing the army to pass over the line. After the meeting several of its attendants went to the camp and consulted with the general, telling him that donations had been collected to the extent of $27.30 and that William Glassman had been appointed treasurer and that he would purchase supplies sufficient for their sustenance until they could get them over the Davis county line.

According to resolutions passed by the army, companies of twenty-five each were started in opposite directions for the purpose of causing the officers all possible trouble, but Chief Pratt took but little notice of the so-called fun which the "Industrialists" were having.

At an early hour yesterday morning the "Industrials" were up and preparing their breakfast, which consisted of slap jacks and coffee.

At about 4 o'clock in the afternoon another meeting was called, this time by Mr. Jack Blunt, who, from the remarks he made, it was thought was insane.

Then Miss Cassa Moyes, of Ogden city, took the stand and recited a Cleveland's poem. When asked by a News correspondent if she was a sympathizer with these men, she said: "Most certainly, I am." Another sympathizer now took the stand and sang The Wandering Refugee. By this time the "general" had returned from Ogden and learning of the young lady sympathizer asked her if she would make a repetition of the recitation, which she did, and after which the girl jumped upon the stand and said: "If I am told to cut my throat, I need not do it. If these police are told to commit murder they need not do it. Remember, gentlemen, you are working for wages; do not allow yourself to commit murder for the almighty dollar."

The commissary of the officers has been replenished and they are prepared and determined to enforce the order of the courts.

A large crowd of spectators and sympathizers visited the camp and donated liberally to the Industrials.

HOOPER, Utah, May 28, via Layton, Utah.—The band members of the "army" succeeded in getting into Ogden this forenoon for the purpose of drawing crowds and collecting donations. The "general" has also gone to the Junction, where he will meet the band at the Oxford saloon. He will then arrange the matter of giving a grand ball in Thomas's Hall for the benefit of his men. Mr. Glassmann will aid in the undertaking.

Before leaving the "general" remarked to a News correspondent that he received a letter yesterday from the Industrials of Salt Lake, stating that he had their sympathy and would have their aid in any way desired. To this he had returned an answer thanking them for their kind offer, and asking them to direct their aid to the legal solution of the problem and not to violence unless further heard from.

A boy by the name of Parley Edgar, of Salt Lake, who is a member of the Industrials, was chosen by the "general" to solicit in the country and obtain what help he possibly could.

Smith was warned through letter from Salt Lake that he must be careful, as Chief Pratt was after him individually.

The Ogden Standard of Sunday morning published some telegraphic correspondence between Associate Justice Smith, of the First district, and Chief Justice Merritt, regarding the cases of Carter and others arrested for contempt of court in connection with the stealing of a Union Pacific locomotive at Lehi Junction and the taking of a train to Provo. Judge Smith witnessed some of the proceedings at the latter place. The correspondence was over the Rio Grande Western telegraph line, which was placed by Superintendent Welby at the disposal of the officials for the purpose of consultation, and was regarded as private and confidential between the two judges, but was made public through the railway telegraph office, and was secured by the Standard. Judge Merritt admits the correctness of the telegrams, and says that his judgment in the contempt proceedings was not affected thereby. He explains that his statement that he concurred in the reasoning of Judge Smith referred only to the latter's going to Nephi to hold court, and not to any finding regarding the Carterites held for contempt. The telegrams as here given are in the order in which the correspondence took place, as Judge Merritt has them, and not as they appear in the Standard, which has them mixed up, giving the last paragraph of Judge Smith's closing dispatch as his first and transposing the order of Judge Merritt's telegrams, while Mr. Welby's message and the first one sent by Judge Smith are omitted. Judge Smith states that he never wrote out a telegram, but held a conversation with Judge Merritt over the wire, and that some one else must have written out the dispatches, which he says are not correct as he remembers them. Judge Merritt, stated to a NEWS representative today that the messages here given were as he received them and made replies thereto. The correspondence occurred on May 13, and was as follows, the first coming to Judge Merritt from Provo:

Judge Smith wishes to confer with you by wire. Our office is at your disposal. He will be here at 2 o'clock.

A. E. WELBY.

At 2 o'clock Judge Merritt went to the Rio Grande Western depot, where he received the following:

Mr. Loomis was down last night and left word that you wanted me to come to Salt Lake to hear contempt proceedings against Carter and others. Is this so?

H. W. SMITH.

To this the Chief Justice sent the reply:

To H. W. Smith: Loomis was mistaken. I told him and had the marshal's office send word that you could try the cases down there and not bring the men here; but as they are here, if entirely convenient for you, would like to have you here.

S. A. MERRITT.

Another telegram came from Judge Smith, as follows:

To Judge Merritt: I could not have hearing for contempt here, as the receivership has never been filed in this district. Sutherland looked it up yesterday. You know I have to open court tomorrow at Nephi, and it is important that I get a grand jury to work at once on the charges of riot and grand larceny against them. If you will hold them for contempt we can try them soon for the other crimes.

It is all important that they be found guilty and held for contempt, because we have detectives among them, and they intend to carry things with a high hand if their leaders are discharged, and it seems to be the understanding among them that they will disband if their leaders are held.

I think it very important that they have a hearing and that they be held at once for its effect, and in your place I would delay other business and take it up. A special effort will be made to get Carter off. It should not prevail. He is the most guilty of all, although there may be some difficulty in showing it. If you will attend to the contempt matter I will go to Nephi this morning and will see that the whole outfit are indicted before the week is out. I will not come up in view of your answer just received, but will go to Nephi and put the grand jury to work tomorrow.

H. W. SMITH.

To this Judge Merritt's response was:

To H. W. Smith:

I appreciate the situation and concur in your reasoning and shall not expect you here tomorrow. Your judgment is correct. Go on to Nephi. Many thanks.

S. A. MERRITT.

FROM TUESDAY'S DAILY MAY 29.

DESERET NEWS BUREAU,

Camp of the Industrial Army, Davis and Weber and County Line, two miles from Hooper Switch, U. P. Ry., May 29, 1894.

At about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the Industrial brass band having gone to Ogden and left behind the drum major, Mr. Warner, who wished to go with them, the major asked permission of Dr. Smith to go to Ogden and take the drum, which he claims was given to his little boy. The "general" thinking that Warner intended to join the Sutter Fort min-strels, who are now in Ogden, refused to allow him to go, and claimed that the drum was given to the company and not to Warner or his boy.

This denial vexed the major and he immediately plucked up the drum. Dr. Smith ordered that he be arrested, which was done. While under arrest the major took his knife from his pocket and cut both drum heads. He also gave vent to his opinion of the "army," calling them thieves and tramps.

At this the "general" ordered that he be drummed from the army. Mr. Warner, with his two little boys, aged 8 and 10 years respectively, left the camp and came to Salt Lake.

While Dr. Smith was drumming the major from the ranks Sheriff Belnap arrived with a warrant for the arrest of Chief Pratt, which quite excited the "general" and caused him to stir and flutter about in great anxiety. "This is the sheriff, boys, with a warrant for the arrest of the captain. We will now get through," said Smith; but when he saw the sheriff pass back through camp without Chief Pratt, the "general" was greatly disappointed. He immediately went to Ogden to ascertain the reason why Mr. Belnap did not serve the papers on the chief. While at Ogden Dr. Smith met his band, who were at the Oxford saloon being freely treated to beer. The "general" joined them and on having a drink or two consulted the city authorities and obtained permission from them to solicit the town. He obtained through the Standard $9, and $5.45 was donated the band on the streets. With this he bought, so he says, four sacks of flour, four sacks of corn meal, one sack of sugar, five pounds of baking powder, one sack of beans, one can of lard, several pairs of boots and shoes and other articles of need. He and his band arrived in camp at 2 o'clock this morning feeling gay from the effects of Ogden beer. When the "general" arose this morning he was in a bad humor because several articles of which they were in need had not arrived in camp.

Miss Cassa Moyes appeared on the camp ground again last night and recited the "Polish Boy." Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Vaughn arrived on the scene accompanied by their daughter, Polly, who recited "Guilty or not Guilty." Mr. Vaughn brought twenty packages of cigarettes and sang a song entitled "Justice in Utah."

Chief Pratt was requested this morning to go to Salt Lake with some of his men to appear as witnesses in the Third district court this afternoon, and at 9 o'clock started for the capital.

On their way to the station they overtook "General" Smith and party who were walking towards the station and the chief asked him to ride, but the "general" thanked him and said he preferred to walk. It was discovered later that the "general" intended going to Salt Lake but had been mistaken in the road and had gone to the R. G. W. instead of the U. P. station, so the "general" got left.

The hearing on the restraining order and order to show cause issued yesterday afternoon, under the direction of Chief Justice Merritt, in regard to the Smith detachment of the Industrial army now held by officers on the border of Davis county, began at 2 o'clock this afternoon, in the Third district court, before Judge Merritt.

Judge L. R. Rhodes, of Ogden, was again present as the legal representative of certain residents of Weber county, and of the Industrialist host under Dr. Smith's banner. On the other side were Judge Hoge, Judge Henderson and Attorney Arthur Brown.

The great interest taken in the proceedings was made manifest by the very large attendance of spectators, all the seats in the rear of the court room being occupied. A number of others, unable to gain admission, remained outside and listened to the legal arguments close to the partially opened door, which was "guarded" by a court bailiff. A host of attorneys sat within the bar.

Attorney Varian then arose and said he desired to enter an appearance and demur in regard to Warren E. Thompson and Edward McGlascan, two of the defendants who had been selected by the officers of this court as being with "John Doe," "Richard Roe" and the 300 other defendants included in the complaint on which these proceedings were based.

Judge Zane was today associated with Judge Rhodes on behalf of the defendants and people of Weber.

The arguments occupied all the afternoon, and at their conclusion a recess was taken until 7 in the evening at which time Judge Merritt gave his decision.

After reading the complaint his Honor proceeded to comment upon the prayer for relief as well as the demurrer and answer to the same. An injunction was an extraordinary remedy and should only be resorted to when there was no adequate remedy at law. He referred to the condition of affairs prevailing at the present time. It had been decided at Ogden that the Southern Pacific had no right to bring the men in, and he felt sorry the court's order had not been enforced. But the question now was, should this injunction be allowed to stand against these men, or had the court the power to grant it and prevent indigent persons from passing through the county; and if the court had the power to grant the injunction what would it do if the defendants violated it?

The statute on vagrancy was referred to, and quotations were made from the answer wherein the defendants denied any intention to extort food and clothing from the residents of the county by force or threat, and said that aside from the denial as contained in the answer, he did not think sufficient were shown to justify the granting of an injunction, although it had been improvidently granted. He continued, "I think the restraining order should be dissolved and the demurrer to the bill sustained. If these men come in and become vagrants the criminal statutes will govern them."

Mr. Varian thought as the demurrer had been sustained and it would not be possible for the complaint to be amended so as to constitute a cause of action that it should be dismissed, but the court refused to do so as the attorneys for plaintiff were not in court.

The Salt Lake police who had been on duty at the Davis-Weber county line were immediately ordered home and came in during the night on a special. The right of way of the "industrialists" is now open.

THE "ARMY" ELSEWHERE.

QUINCEY, Ill., May 23.—General Kelly's army is still here, camped across the river. They want to deck their boats over to keep out the waves of the Mississippi, and it is not likely that they will get away before this evening or Thursday morning. The trades and labor assembly last night voted $200 to the army, and this was used in purchasing provisions, so that up to this time rations have been plentiful. Their rations will soon be exhausted, however, so that unless more is contributed they will have to go hungry. The city gave them one day's rations and will give them no more.

Kelly has unbounded faith that the army will get to Washington and says that Baldwin, the aeronaut, has promised him a balloon when he gets there, from which he will make a speech and not have to get on the grass.

MISSOULA, Mont., May 23.—As the eastbound fast freight was pulling out of Noacen, a little station near the Idaho line last night, 100 men, members of the northwestern Industrial army boarded it. Major Carpenter, who is at the state line with two companies of troops, was notified and a special train bore him to the scene when the troops soon dislodged the Coxeyites and they are now camped near Forton. There are 100 more just west of there. One hundred and fifty more are coming east from Spokane and it is the intention to steal another train as their forces join. The Idaho division is guarded by troops but the Montana marshal has not asked yet for military aid. On the Coeur d'Alene branch near Iron Mountain, fifty Coxeyites climbed on a work train and attempted to get possession. The work crew repulsed them, however, and they made no further attempt. Two companies of troops at Fort Missoula have been ordered to be ready to move and are now awaiting final orders from St. Paul.

MADISON, Wis., May 25.—Fifty Montana commonwealers arrived today from Prairie Du'Chien under command of Major John D. Wilson. Over two hundred more are expected. Wilson says all will go to Chicago via Milwaukee. The railroad officials are determined to prevent them from securing trains for transportation.

LEAVENWORTH, Kansas, May 25.—General Sanders has received the following telegram from his attorney, G. W. Waters, at Topeka:

"District Attorney Perry offers to let the men go on their own recognition except your engineer and firemen, for whom bond will be given. What do you say?"

To an Associated Press reporter Sanders said he would accept the compromise and so wire his attorney. Sanders went to camp and addressed the army. The men gave vent to their feelings by cheering lustily.

The general says that they will leave here before next Monday and march to Kansas City where they expect transportation. If the compromise is not knocked out Sanders and his engineer and firemen will not be tried until September and the army will be free to go to Washington or any other place.

THE B. Y. ACADEMY.

Prof. B. Cluff Jr., principal of the B. Y. Academy at Provo, has rendered his report for the year ending today, May 25, to the Academy trustees, and has courteously forwarded a copy to the NEWS. The report contains many interesting statistics and recommendations for which we have not space in detail, but present them in the condensed form of excerpts from the report.

Prof. Cluff announces that the eighteenth academic year of the Academy closes with an enrollment of 881 students, distributed among the several departments as follows: Kindergarten, 79 pupils; preparatory school, 198 pupils; academic department, 5 pupils; commercial department, 58 pupils; M. I. normal class, 135 pupils; Sunday school normal class, 156 pupils; normal department, 285 pupils. Total, 881 pupils.

The theological department, in charge of Dr. M. H. Hardy as monitor, reports the following statistics: High Priests 16, Priests 78, Teachers 43, Deacons 120, lay members 824, non-members 29, not baptized 96, total 881. The theological department aims to develop the students spiritually, and to give them instructions in the principles of the Gospel and the organization and order of the Priesthood. Lectures were given on Book of Mormon subjects during the first semester by Elder George Reynolds, and during the second semester on Bible subjects by Elder David McKenzie.

Domestic organization, in charge of Prof. Jos. B. Keeler as monitor, reports the following statistics: From Provo, males, 144; females, 103. Total, 247. Foreign students, males, 403; females, 152; total, 555. Kindergarten, 79. Grand total, 881.

The object of this organization is to exercise care over the students, both in and out of school, and to give them practice in self-government. The results of this organization so far have been more than satisfactory. The presidents and ward visitors have been careful and conscientious in their work, while the body of students have sustained and supported them in their office.

The kindergarten, in charge of Mrs. Anna K. Craig, reports an enrollment during the year of 79 pupils, with four teachers in training. This school is a part of the normal training school, in that it affords opportunities for those preparing to teach in primary schools to learn the Froebelian methods of education, and to see how these methods are put in practice. Aside from this office, its aims are two: first, to train little children below the school age; second, to instruct those preparing to be kindergarten teachers in the theory and practice of the school.

The preparatory school, with Prof. Geo. H. Brimhall as director, assisted by Prof. W. M. Wolfe and Prof. N. L. Nelson as assistant teachers, and by the regular grade teachers, Miss Ella Larson the first and second grades, Miss Amy Brown for the third and fourth grades, Miss Irene Mendenhall for the fifth and sixth grades, Miss Tryphena Brimhall for the seventh grade, and Miss Rachel Edwards followed at the close of the first semester by Bro. O. W. Andelin for the eighth grade, is preparatory to the normal department and is a practice school for the teachers in training. Prof. Brimhall reports an enrollment of 193 pupils distributed in the grades as follows: First grade 44, second grade 10, third grade 23, fourth grade 10, fifth grade 11, sixth grade 9, seventh grade 38, eighth grade 48. The courses taught are progressive, beginning where the kindergarten ends, and ending where the normal and commercial work begins. The most advanced methods are used in teaching.

As to promotions, 17 are to be promoted from the eighth grade to higher departments, 18 from the seventh grade to the eighth grade, 6 from the sixth grade to the seventh grade, 5 from the fifth grade to the sixth grade, 6 from the fourth to the fifth grade, 7 from the third to the fourth, 9 from the second to the third, 10 from the first to the second, and 15 from the kindergarten to the first grade. As a whole both in earnestness of purpose and in mental ability, there is a marked in all the grades over any previous year.

The commercial college, in charge of Prof. J. B. Keeler, as head, assisted by Asst. Prof. L. E. Eggerston, Asst. Prof. B. S. Hinckley, Instructor, Edward D. Holt, and Prof. J. L. Townshend, reports an enrollment of 58 pupils. Besides these 65 from other departments have taken special studies, making in all 123, who have been instructed in this department during the year. On the whole excellent progress has been made by all of the students. Of the number in attendance 8 were prepared today to receive their diplomas, they having completed the prescribed work; 3 will receive certificates in special courses.

Above all else the academy is a normal training school. Students may pursue academic courses, but for these no degree is offered. To obtain the degree (Bachelor of Pedagogy) they must inculcate their intention to teach, and must pursue successfully the courses in pedagogy and psychology, as well as the practice offered in the training school. The degree is offered at the completion of four years' successful work. The work done in this department during the year has in the whole been satisfactory. The students, with few exceptions, and these exceptions have been notified of their partial failures, have been earnest, hard workers. Their success is attested by the fact but that few have failed to pass the final examination. It has been the policy of the school to admit none but earnest students, and after admittance to continue only those who by aptitude and application retain the required standard. This is done with the desire of producing a better class of teachers, better professionally and academically. Seven applicants for the highest honors of the academy are before you today. These have completed the four years' course, including practice in the training school.

The M. I. normal class, in charge of Dr. M. H. Hardy, assisted by other teachers, is under the immediate control of the general superintendency of the Y. M. M. I. A. Brother Hardy reports an attendance during the year of 135, of whom all were called on a mission by the First Presidency to attend this class, others coming by special request of the ward authorities. Instructions were given in the M. I. Manual in method of study, psychology, parliamentary law, vocal music, civil government, natural science, physiology and hygiene, and in law. Besides these, students are permitted to choose from the courses offered in the normal department others sufficient to make up twenty hours recitation per week. Members of this class have the same privileges and are subject to the rules and regulations as regular normals. Excellent work has been done in all the branches. There has been some falling off during the year, but this little, like in the Sunday school class, is due mostly to the urgent requirements of home duties. In the case of missionaries leaving, honorable releases were obtained from the First Presidency. It is intended, I believe, that this course shall continue, and if possible its efficiency increased.

The Sunday school normal class.—The aim in this class is to prepare teachers of teachers, the idea being to establish in all the Stakes or in all the wards of the Stakes normal classes for Sunday school teachers. This of course will take some time, but an excellent beginning has been made this year. There has been an enrollment during the year of 156 students, 50 of whom attended during the first semester and 106 during the second semester. These were called by the First Presidency to this special mission. The class is under the immediate superintendence of the Deseret Sunday School Union. Instructions have been given during the year in science of education, in elementary psychology as applied to teaching, in the methods of teaching, in the organization and management of schools, in the end and aim of Sunday school teaching and in the proper qualifications of the Sunday school teacher. There has been conducted every Sabbath in connection with this class a Sabbath school in which the principles taught theoretically during the week have been subjected to the tests of practice. On the whole, excellent results have so far been attained, the students being universally energetic, hard working young men and women.

In the mechanic art department, drawing and wood-work, in charge of Prof. J. L. Townshend, has during this the first year of its existence produced excellent results. One hundred and forty from all the grades, as well as from the higher departments, have received instructions in the use of tools and light machinery and in the principles and practice of construction. Besides the regular work, much work has been done by making useful and necessary articles in the academy, such as desks, tables, bulletin boards, etc. This is the most nearly self-supporting department in the academy. In needlework, under the tuition of Sister Young, instructions have been given in plain and artistic sewing, in fancy work and in dress making—cutting and fitting. Sister Young reports that classes have been conducted every day from 12 o'clock to 5 o'clock p.m., the hours of recitation being arranged with the students that other studies may not be interfered with. The cutting and fitting classes are each twenty weeks, taking up in order measurement rules, drafting patterns, fitting, and, lastly, making complete dresses. The skill attained by the majority of the students has been satisfactory and all have been able to complete the required work.

The art department is in charge of Brothers John Hafen, John A. Fairbanks, and E. Evans, all graduates of the art school at Paris, France. Instructions have been given in artistic drawing and in landscape and portrait painting in oil and water colors.

The music department, in charge of Prof. H. E. Giles, assisted by Miss Ottillie Maeser and Miss Edith Beck, has given instructions in vocal and instrumental music and in voice culture. Upon the whole the work has been satisfactory. In some cases exceptional progress has been made by the students. The good teaching in vocal music and voice culture is shown at devotional exercises by the excellent congregational singing.

Dr. M. H. Hardy, librarian, reports on hand up to date 1,310 bound volumes, 1,806 pamphlets, 43 charts. During the year there has been received, as shown by the accession book, 139 bound volumes, and 147 pamphlets. Of these the Women's club of Provo kindly presented 54 volumes, besides the valuable set of furniture, carpets, and fixtures for the library room. Thanks are due Hon. Joseph L. Rawlins, our representative in Congress, for valuable books and pamphlets sent from Washington. We desire also to thank the following publishing houses for newspapers sent to our table: DESERET EVENING NEWS, Salt Lake Herald, Utah Enquirer, Ogden Standard, Evening Dispatch, Logan Nation, Montpelier Post, Woman's Exponent, Logan Journal, Beaver Usonian, Wasatch Wave, Mt. Pleasant Pyramid, Millard Progress, Vernal Express, Central Press, Brigham Bugler, Lehi Banner, Manti Messenger, Richfield Advocate, Contributor, Juvenile Instructor, and Young Women's Journal.

The military department was in charge of Brother Emil Maeser up to the time of his departure for his new field of labor in Germany, when it was taken by Brother Arthur Dalley. The physical culture has been conducted by Miss Amy Brown for the young ladies and by Brother O. W. Andelin for the young men. The exercises have in every respect produced the desired results. In the military drill 50 have been enrolled. In the physical culture 58 young men and 52 young women.

Summer Session.—Arrangements have been made to continue the instructions in the commercial college during the whole vacation, and in all other departments of the academy for five weeks, beginning July 9th. Dr. Hinsdale, professor of pedagogy in the University of Michigan, and professional training teachers have been engaged to give instructions in the science and art of education. This summer session enables the teachers who are busy during the regular school year to pursue their studies, and thus improve academically and professionally. It enables young men, also, who occupy offices during the winter to receive needed instructions in the commercial branches.

In conclusion I will say that today closes one of the most successful years the academy has ever had, and that the prospects for the future prosperity and advancement were never brighter. In all things we feel to acknowledge the hand of God and to testify that His Spirit has been with the school guiding and directing it in its course.

The residence of Thomas L. Obray Jr., at Paradise, was totally destroyed by fire at about 1 o'clock on Monday morning. Mrs. Obray was awakened at about that time by her baby, and found the house completely filled with smoke. There was no time for the family to obtain their clothing, and but just time for them to escape with life. Two of the children were so nearly suffocated as to be unconscious, and remained in that condition for nearly two hours. The loss is estimated at between $800 and $900. The house was insured for $500.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 21.—The steamship Gaelic arrived from Hong Kong and Yokohama today. She brings China news up to April 18th. A great fire broke out at Schuch Eng, April 1st, in Anhui province. Fully 2,600 houses were burned.

A correspondent writes from Shenai that the officials of that province have issued proclamations remitting taxes and sanctioning relief from the provincial granaries. This was not done, however, until the most cruel tortures had been inflicted upon the thousands of starving people in the effort to extort from them taxes remitted by the emperor eight months ago. The relief given now is inadequate and greater distress prevails, as there has been no rain for five months.

HONOLULU, May 15, via San Francisco, May 21, per Gaelic.—The constitutional convention, the members of which were elected on May 8th, will meet on May 30th. The new constitution, as drawn up by the present executive council, will be presented to the convention for its approval, and such improvements as may be considered necessary. This constitution has been kept from the public and will not be made known until the convention meets.

The new government is to be called the Republic of Hawaii. The executive power will be vested in the president. The executive council will consist of five members. The Assembly, or lower House, is to consist of fifteen members, six from the island of Oahu and three each from Hawaii, Maui and Kauai. They will serve for two years only. A member of the assembly must be a citizen of Hawaii or a citizen of any country which has treaty relations with Hawaii and have resided in the islands for at least one year. He must be able to read and write the English or Hawaiian language, except in the case of those who voted in the recent election, to whom the requirement does not apply.

The members of both houses shall receive $400 for each session.

About 3,750 votes were cast at the recent elections. There was very little opposition on any of the islands.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Representative Doolittle, of Washington, has introduced a bill to appropriate $100,000 for ascertaining the subterranean water supplies in the states of Idaho, Montana, Washington and Oregon, lying east of the Cascade mountains, and ascertaining the localities at which artesian water can profitably be dug.

NORWALK, Conn., May 22.—William R. Ackerman, of Easton, who last summer developed signs of hydrophobia, barking and snapping like a dog but who it was thought had recovered, is again affected, supposedly by the same disease and is kept securely. For months after the first attack, the young man, when not restrained, would hop about the house and yard on all fours and snapping at everything, foaming at the mouth. Like a rabid dog, he would glare savagely and then with deep growls leap into the air as if attacking something. Although absolutely irresponsible, he never bit any one, callers keeping discreetly out of his way, but the timid in the neighborhood were terrorized by his antics and would run at his appearance.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 22.—When the Prendergast hearing was called before Judge Chetlain this afternoon the attorneys for the defense asked a continuance until June 11. The permission was granted.

ARLINGTON, Ga., May 22.—News has just reached here of the lynching of a negro in Miller county. Three miles from Co'quitt lived a family by the name of Smith and they have a 14-year-old daughter. On Sunday a burly negro attempted an assault. She fought desperately and the fiend threw her and stabbed her. The father appeared at this time and the negro turned and fired several shots into his body. The sheriff succeeded in capturing the scoundrel. Yesterday morning a crowd of about fifty men took the negro from the jail to the woods, hanged him to a limb and riddled his body with bullets.

GUTHRIE, O. T., May 22.—There is considerable excitement in Paul's Valley over the discovery of placer gold in paying quantities. A woman who formerly lived in the placer region in California has known of the existence of this metal for a long time, but has kept the matter quiet and worked the find. Companies are being organized to develop the find.

PARIS, May 22.—In the Chamber of Deputies today during the debate on the question whether the minister of public works had authority to allow employees of state railroads to attend a congress of railroad men, the premier demanded the adoption of the order of the day. The motion was rejected by a vote of 275 to 225. Premier Casimir Perier thereupon left the Palais Bourbon.

The ministers handed their resignations to President Carnot.

FLORENCE, Colo., May 22.—Seven hundred miners with a brass band started today across the country to Rouse, 78 miles away, to make the miners working there come out. The people in the coal camps in this vicinity are becoming desperate.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 22.—At daylight 100 strikers armed with guns and revolvers started for the Stickle Hollow mines where twenty men are working, to drive them out. The nine men captured by the strikers at Fair Chance last night are held prisoners. It is said a band of deputies will try to gain possession of them this afternoon. At Vanderbilt and Dawson last night 1,000 strikers assembled to bring out the negroes lately imported into the coke region. They made a big demonstration but accomplished nothing.

DENVER, May 23.—Judge J. Y. Marshall, an old settler of Leadville, who made a fortune from the Robert E. Lee mine and owns property in Salt Lake, died last night at Rico where he was practicing law.

DENISON, Texas, May 23.—R. E. Durkee arrived from the Indian territory last evening and reports discovering a number of interesting relics of the mound builders. Search brought to light quantities of human bodies, curious copper utensils and personal ornaments, consisting of spears, hatchets, battle axes, neck ornaments, etc.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—In the Senate Teller moved to lay the tariff bill on the table in order to see if the bill was the one which the Democratic majority intended to pass.

Hill, Irby and Kyle voted against Teller's motion.

Teller's motion was defeated by a strict party vote—28 yeas, 38 nays.

Teller's motion created consternation. The bells rang and pages were sent to drum up every available senator. Butler, who was found in the barber's chair, came in with one side of his face shaved.

Roll call was watched with intense interest. The Democratic line did not show a single gap and three Populists, Allen, Kyle and Peffer, voted with them. The motion was defeated, 28 to 38.

LONDON, May 23.—The race for the Newmarket stakes, 4,500 sovereigns, for three-year-old colts carrying nine stone, and fillies carrying eight stone eleven pounds, was won by Lord Rosebery's colt Ladas, the winner of the two thousand guineas and the favorite for the Derby. Douglas Baird's St. Florian was second and Daniel Cooper's Glaree third. The distance was one mile and a quarter straight.

HARRISBURG, May 23.—The Republican state convention held here today was the largest in the state in many years, the roll call showing the presence of 267 delegates out of a possible 264. General Louis Wagner, Philadelphia, was chosen temporary chairman, and after the appointment of committees the convention, at 12 o'clock, took a recess.

LONG VIEW, Tex., May 23.—At 3 p.m. today two rough looking men walked into the First National bank, one with a slicker on with a Winchester concealed in its folds. He handed the following note to President Joe Clemmons:

Home, May 23.—To First National bank, Long View: This will introduce to you Charles Specklemeyer, who wants some money and is going to have it.

(Signed) B. AND F.

The bank cashier thought it was an importunate subscription to some charity entertainment and started to donate when the robber pointed his Winchester at him and told him to hold up. The other robber rushed into the side door and grabbed the cash.

The robbers hurriedly emptied the vaults, securing $2,000 in ten-dollar bills, No. 9, and nine twenty-dollar bills, No. 20, and seven unsigned Long View bank notes, which may lead to their detection.

While this was going on two of the robbers were in the rear alley of the bank, shooting at every one who appeared, and were being fired on by City Marshal Muckley and Deputy Will Stevens.

The firing made the robbers in the bank very nervous and they hurried the bank officials out and told them to run to the horses and to mount. This was done in order to keep the posse from shooting, but as the bullets flew thick and fast the men tore loose and ran around the corner with several shots after them. George Buckingham, who was shooting at the robbers, was shot and killed. While he was down the robbers shot at him several times. City Marshal Muckley, who was shooting at another robber, received a Winchester ball in the bowels. The ball glanced from silver dollars he had in his pocket, which may save his life.

J. W. McQueen, a saloonkeeper, ran out in the alley and was shot in the body, and it is thought mortally wounded. Charles S. Leonard was walking through the courthouse yard and was shot in the left hand. The bankers all escaped unhurt.

The body of the dead robber was identified as George Bennett, a reckless fellow who had been here some months ago and married a daughter of a respectable farmer living near this place, but he left her and went to Indian Territory. The bank officers offer $500 for their arrest, dead or alive, and the citizens added $200.

CRIPPLE CREEK, May 23.—Eleven men killed, with a strong probability that the number of dead will be increased when all is known, is the record of the first day of trouble here, although the real fighting has not yet begun, as the deputies are awaiting reinforcements before beginning active operations.

At 10 o'clock this morning eleven men started work in the Strong mine, on Battle Mountain. Shortly afterwards a large party of strikers blew up the shaft house with powder, causing a loss of $26,000, and then dropped 100 pounds of giant powder down the shaft, which was also exploded, killing all the inmates.

Not more than 300 yards from the Strong shaft house, sixteen men, who had been engaged to go to work in the Independence mine, were surrounded in their bunk house and after a long parley agreed to surrender. Each one was armed with a rifle and a brace of revolvers, the arms now being in the possession of the strikers.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 24.—A riot occurred at Stickle Hollow, in the coke region, this morning. A number were killed and wounded. The exact number of killed and wounded cannot be ascertained as yet, as they were carried from the ground as fast as they were mowed down by Winchesters. At least three are dead and half a dozen seriously wounded. Not a shot was fired by the strikers. Seemingly without provocation, while the strikers were assembled in the public road fifty deputies fired upon them.

Later.—It is reported that the shooting was not all on one side. The workmen were about to comply with the command to go home when the deputies rushed into the midst of the strikers and got possession of the workmen and marched them to the pit. A deputy sheriff fired a shot which opened the battle. Volley after volley was fired by each side at close range. The strikers' ammunition gave out and they were forced to flee. It is said the strikers were advancing on the deputies when the latter fired the first shot. A large number of strikers were arrested today who had guns and five are known to be killed and eight wounded. The killed are all strikers. Three deputies are among the wounded. Rainy has ordered three gatling guns for his plants.

CENTRALIA, Ills., May 24.—Five hundred miners from the Duquoin and St. Johns mines arrived here today on a freight train and at the Big Four mine, operated by Pottenger and Davis, they demolished the machinery, filled the shaft with about fifteen feet of debris, and smashed all the glass and sash. The total damage is estimated at $2,000. The Big Four mines have been running with about thirty men who yesterday refused to come out at the request of the local committee. The strikers left the city on foot for Odin, eight miles north, to shut down the mine there. The sheriff swore in fifty deputies who were equipped with Winchesters from the armory here and left for Odin on a special train. The miners are armed with pistols and plenty of ammunition.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—The Senate committee on Indian affairs today authorized a favorable report on Senator Wolcott's bill for the opening to settlement of the Uintah and Uncompahgre Indian reservations.

LA SALLE, Ill., May 24.—A mob of coal strikers raided the shaft of the La Salle County Carbon Coal company here this afternoon and in a conflict with the sheriff and his deputies, five strikers, Sheriff Taylor and Deputy sheriffs Dwyer and Hoolihan were painfully wounded. The mob closed in on the officers, and a hand to hand fight ensued. Three men were arrested, but they were released on the men threatening to tear down the jail and burn the city hall.

The situation is alarming and the sheriff has telegraphed a request for state aid.

LONDON, May 24.—The birthday of Queen Victoria, who was born May 24, 1819, was observed throughout England, although the official celebration will not take place until Saturday. Church bells were rung, flags displayed and the royal salute fired.

OLATHE, Kan., May 24.—Mrs. Lease is a very sick woman. Several physicians have held a consultation in the case. She has sciatic rheumatism in the left leg and inflammatory rheumatism in her left hand.

BOISE, Ida., May 24.—A Statesman special from Malad, Ida., says John J. Hurst was convicted of murder in the second degree for the killing of Morgan J. Morgan in January last. Morgan had been intimate with Hurst's wife.

PORT SAID, May 25.—News was received today of a great battle fought near Lake Nyassa, between the British forces and the slavers. Makajira, chief of the slavers, attacked a British post, Fort Maguire, at the head of 200 warriors.

TACOMA, Wash., May 25.—A large cave-in occurred at the bluffs near the wharves this afternoon. Two men were killed and two injured. The dead are Major W. T. Gillespie, a well-known mining man, and Arnold Barrenberg, a stationary engineer, aged 40.

Major Gillespie was from Missouri. In 1856 he came over the plains to Salt Lake City, and for six years was superintendent of the Wells-Fargo stage line there. He then engaged in mining in Utah, Wyoming, Montana and Idaho, settling at Silver Reef, Utah, where he owned a mine and quartz mill until he moved here four years ago. His widow is now in Chicago.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., May 25.—The Queen's Own rifles of Toronto came to this city yesterday to join in the celebration of the queen's birthday. George J. Wilde, United States consul, displayed from the windows of his office an American flag in honor of the day. Some of the members from Toronto tore the flag from the staff.

NEW YORK, May 25.—The Herald's Berlin dispatch says: The people of Cassel have been excited several days on the reports of ill-treatment of political prisoners. Three thousand persons gathered on the old market square, mobbed the police there and sang the Marseillaise. A strong force of police sent to disperse them were stoned and beaten back. Hussars scattered the rioters. Many persons were injured, and 68 arrested.

MAPIMI, Mex., May 25.—The American archeologists who recently discovered a deserted city in the Sierra Madre mountains found another hidden city five Spanish leagues north of the first. The leader, C. W. Pantion, says these cities were evidently twin capitals of a wealthy district long before the Aztecs. Two connected underground passages were hewn out in the solid rock.

CENTRALIA, May 25.—Fifty Duquoin miners at 3 o'clock this morning crept stealthily to the Centralia mines. The first known of their approach was when a fusillade of bullets was fired against the mine company's office. Fortunately the guards were a short distance away. They returned the fire, and the assailants fled. As far as known no one was hurt. At 9 o'clock the troops arrived and the town was put under military guard.

MOUNT VERNON, Wash., May 25.—While four well known citizens were crossing the Skagit river in a canoe they found an old quinine bottle floating on some driftwood. It contained a paper with the following letter written upon it:

"Headwaters of South Fork, Cascade Creek, April 17th, 1894.

"I have been in the mountains for the past three weeks, snow-bound and having had nothing to eat for three days. It is impossible for me to get out alive. You will find me when the snow goes off. I am almost wild. For God's sake try and save me. I have a wife in St. Paul. Her name is Mary Jacobow. In the name of God, what shall I do? Save me!

H. J. JACOBOW."

The point designated in the letter is about 125 miles above this place, and the snow the past winter up there is reported to have been twenty-five feet deep. Telegrams have been sent from here to parties at Sauk City, 75 miles up the river, to investigate the matter.

RIVERSIDE, Cal., May 25.—The Santa Rosa quartz mine, located near Paris, has been sold. The mine was the property of ex-Governor Blaisdell, of Nevada, and the purchasers are W. W. Brevoort and W. H. Griffith, of Denver. The new owners will build a large reduction works at once.

COLUMBUS, Id., May 25.—Miss Eleanor Marks, 22 years old, of Mount Prospect, several days ago was seized with a severe cold and grew worse and apparently died. While the coffin was being borne from the hearse to the grave a faint tapping attracted the attention of the pall bearers, and upon the coffin lid being raised, Miss Marks was found to be alive. She was revived and is recovering.

Miss Marks represents that she has a knowledge of all that passed while the preparations were being made for her burial, but that she was unable to give any sign until the fear of burial aroused her into action.

LA SALLE, Ill., May 26.—While an Illinois Central freight train was bowling along toward Chicago at 10 o'clock last night it suddenly came in collision with an obstruction at the Oglesby incline, just a few miles south of this city. The train was hurled from the track into the ditch. News of the wreck did not reach here until 10:30 a. m. When the crew of the train filed into the Illinois Central station, August Baldwin made haste to report the particulars to the military authorities and a detachment of soldiers was dispatched to the scene of the wreck. The engineer of the freight says that as he crashed into the obstruction he saw a half dozen men run away from the tracks. While the trainmen were jacking up the first set of trucks of the engine, they were fired upon from the neighboring forests. It was found that the strikers had piled railroad ties on the track, but it is not believed that they intended to wreck the freight, as it was an extra train and its running time could not have been known by the miscreants. The fast night express train is due here at 1:22 a. m., and it is believed that the strikers plotted its destruction.

CRIPPLE CREEK, May 26.—The strikers seized a train at Victor about midnight and proceeded down Florence and Cripple Creek railroad to Wilbur, where the Denver deputies were in camp. At 4 a. m. a battle occurred between the strikers and the outpost of the deputies, in which Geo. Crowley, a miner, was killed and several miners and three deputies were wounded. The particulars are hard to obtain as the wires have been cut. A non-union miner was shot dead in a saloon at Victor this morning.

DENVER, May 26.—Judge Hallett in the United States circuit court this afternoon, in refusing an injunction restraining the miners at Cripple creek from interfering with the Raven mine, which is in litigation, said, "If the state government has fallen into the hands of socialists, which it has, that is your misfortune."

EL PASO, Tex., May 26.—The city council has decided that no woman shall be allowed to walk or ride in the streets of El Paso wearing what is known as the divided skirt. The councilmen declared the practice indecent and demoralizing.

ELGIN, Ill., May 26.—President Avery of the Elgin National Watch company notified the stockholders today that an English syndicate has offered $7,000,000 for the plant, and that the holders of three-fourths of the stock have agreed to the sale.

LOS ANGELES, May 27.—A sensational affair occurred in the San Jose hills, south of Covina, a little fruit town in the foothills of the Sierra Madre mountains, east of this city, day before yesterday, which may result in considerable international complications. A young Englishman was set upon by a gang of hoodlums and beaten into a state of insensibility, and was then tied to a tree in a barren spot and left to perish.

The young man is Robert Beaucamp, nephew of the archbishop of York and heir of the Marquis of Oumly. Ceau-camp finally extricated himself from his perilous position and succeeded in making his way home. He is naturally very indignant at the outrage, and will probably lay his case before British Consul Mortimer.

Young Beaucamp belongs to the Sixth hussars in her majesty's service, and was actively engaged in the last African and Egyptian campaigns.

TAHLEQUAH, I. T., May 27.—Beginning tomorrow, Treasurer E. E. Starr, of the Cherokee nation, will commence the disbursement of $6,840,000 to 24,800 Indians per capita. This large amount is the proceeds of the sale of the Cherokee strip to the United States government last year, and will be the largest amount of money ever paid out to as few people in the United States.

CRIPPLE CREEK, May 28.—Despite the efforts at arbitration the strikers have not abated their preparations for warfare, defensive or aggressive. Three new forts have sprung up on Bull's Hill. Four forts are said to be occupied by 1,000 men. They are amply provisioned and prepared for a siege in every way, except they have not a large supply of water. A troop of cavalry has been organized, and thirty horsemen are constantly scouting.

The miners' union will today decide upon the question of arbitration. President Calderwood favors this plan, but as the self-constituted committee by which it was proposed spoke only for J. J. Hagerman, and it is doubtful if the other mine owners will agree to it, its success is uncertain.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Colo., May 28.—The union has appointed a committee to go to Colorado Springs to confer with the mineowners in regard to arbitration.

Mrs. May's lodging house, where several mineowners made their headquarters, was searched last night by strikers and every weapon was carried away.

The coach from Midland was stopped at the top of the big hill above town today. On board were the union miners captured by the deputies in the fight of Friday night. Word was quickly carried to the Fort and Bull Hill and Supt. McDonald and the other two prisoners were released. Five miners, members of the union but who would not leave the Abe Lincoln mine to join in the warfare, were driven off Bull Hill today.

The Miners' union appointed President John Calderwood and Shepherd W. Maupin a committee to confer with a like number selected by the mine owners, the four to select a fifth and attempt to arbitrate.

ROUSE, Colo., May 28.—The miners at Platon struck today and joined the Trinidad and Fremont county men here, making an army of 1,800. The Rouse miners are still working. Twenty Italians coming from Trinidad attempted to seize a train at Rouse Junction. The engineer and fireman beat them off with shovels. Shots were fired and the Italians were arrested and put in jail here. The strikers threaten to release them.

DENVER, May 28.—Governor White's decision not to send troops to Cripple Creek in the absence of a request from the sheriff, was reached at midnight at a conference of lawyers who reached the conclusion (that with the first shot fired at the deputies by the militiamen civil war would have been instituted, and the governor, not having declared martial law, would have been in rebellion. The governor says if the fighting begins he will send troops. He says the mine owners should go to the courts for redress, if the miners preventing the opening of the mines. He favors arbitration.

PHILADELPHIA, May 28.—This is the day fixed upon by the Bituminous coal mine operators of Clearfield and allied districts in central Pennsylvania for resumption of work at 40c a ton. The strikers remained away from the mines. Soft coal is extremely scarce. Agents are making a profit of $1 to $1.50 a ton, whereas 10 cents was a fair profit before the famine set in. The region that competes directly with the central Pennsylvania bituminous mines are the Cumberland mines, Maryland, the West Virginia fields and Pocahontas, southwestern Virginia. In Cumberland the men are resuming work. One reason is said to be when the last, great bituminous strike occurred in 1884, the Clearfield miners failed to stand by them.

SCOTSDALE, Pa., May 28.—Three Hungarian strikers succeeded in getting through the lines of deputies at the Moyer Coke works at 11 o'clock last night. George B. Keffer, the chief watchman, attempted to arrest them, and one shot Keffer in the breast inflicting probably a fatal wound. The Hungarians fired as they ran. Keffer raised himself from the ground and fired six shots. The blood along the road indicated that the shots took effect. The body of an unknown man, supposed to be Deputy Woolman, was found in Fayette creek yesterday. The head and face were battered out of semblance to human features and the clothing was nearly stripped off the body.

BRUSSELS, May 28.—The marriage of Princess Josephine, of Belgium, to Prince Charles, of Hohenzollern, Sig. Marnein, took place today, the civil wedding at 10 o'clock and the religious ceremony afterwards in the private chapel of the royal palace. The wedding gifts were numerous, rare and costly, and included a magnificent pair of diamonds and turquoises with brooch and bracelet to match, from the king and queen of Belgium. Princess Josephine is the second daughter of the count of Flanders. Prince Charles is the younger brother of the crown prince of Roumania.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 28.—The jury returned a verdict of guilty in the case of Percival B. Coffin, Francis A. Coffin and Albert S. Reed, for wrecking the Indianapolis national bank. The defendants moved for a new trial.

DENVER, May 28.—John A. McBeth, ex-receiver of the land office, was found dead today. It is supposed he committed suicide by poisoning. He was prominent, a pioneer, also Shriner and an Elk.

PANA, Ills., May 28.—The situation in the coal mines became decidedly humorous today when 400 men refused to work because the militia were there to protect them. Gov. Altgeld has ordered the militia to leave for home, except two companies ordered to Minonk.

Written for this Paper.

SOME THINGS AND MORE!

Every man is more or less a creature of circumstances; he is the subject of sorrow, misfortune and calamity, and at such times claims, or has a claim upon others for sympathy, assistance and relief. It may be that men in possession of means are subject in part to the same conditions, in some respects at least, for sickness and death are no respecters of persons, but financial difficulty and poverty are not added to that already bitter cup which is held to the lips, and which must be drained apparently to the very dregs.

Men are invited to share in the prosperity of the well-to-do, welcome is extended to their entertainments, special seasons are brilliant with display, and congratulation assumes a thousand forms; the birth of one or the marriage of another, calls out the ready visit of "the set" or circle, in which wealth and fashion so ostentatiously revolve; yea, as the world goes, it is easy to "rejoice with those who can rejoice," ah, much more than to "weep with those who weep."

And yet amid this glare, this worship or adulation, how little genuine soul there is, how insignificant all the pretensions of friendship and the sycophancy of interest should "a change come o'er the spirit of this dream;" let the frost of failure, or the whirlwind of calamity turn success into overthrow, and the butterflies hide or flit away to more congenial skies; there is rarely a warm and ready hand stretched out, rarely a proffer of aid, not often any Samaritan to bind up the wounds received in the conflict or "to pour out the oil and the wine!"

And yet after all there is a good deal of quiet unobtrusive sympathy in the world which is known of the angels, if unheralded among men; and this way, of doing good without "the left hand knowing what the right hand doeth" is the one redeeming feature of charity or love, the one alone in fact which finds record in the heavens, for it savors of brotherhood, it is the manifestation of the divine, for He doeth good in this serene, beneficent, unnoted, yet effectual way; in silence and secrecy mayhap the blessing is bestowed—nay oft received—for the most truly thankful man is not always the most profuse in his acknowledgment of a favor well enjoyed, but the heart swells, the silent tear falls, the unspoken prayer goes out, the unextinguishable memory cherishes, and each responds in season to this sympathy which the thoughtful, sensitive soul only knows how to give or take.

That religious sentiment has much to do with this form of manifestation is assuredly true; that inspiration from the Eternal Spirit moves upon the susceptible soul of man is surely appreciated, for it is in the recesses of society mainly that this disposition to help is most decidedly felt. Those who are attuned to this, seek amid the outcasts—the pariahs of man's civilization, a field for the exercise of their benevolence; the rain of their charity is as the rain from heaven, which He causes to fall upon "the just and upon the unjust," they are in this sense both alike to Him!

Others limit in a great measure their "offerings and oblations" to their own, to those who are members with them in religious, benevolent or social organizations; the Methodist aids the Methodist who is in distress, the Catholic the Catholic, the Baptist his co-religionist; and the Jew always opens his ear and heart to the call of necessity when uttered by one of the ancient house of Israel. This is all good, because there is more or less of intimacy, the situation is more likely to be understood, or inquiry is more easy, and fraudulent pretense is not so likely to be a success. Organized philanthropy, benevolence, charity, is a power in the land, and by it much suffering is relieved; into these channels "the milk of human kindness" most readily flows, yet besides these, many a tiny rivulet carries with it the water of life; men "do good by stealth and blush to find it fame," seen or hid, known or unknown, much or little, every such act carries with it "its own exceeding great reward," the "cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple," and the "two mites" thrown into the treasury are equally certain of future recognition, when the proclaimed beneficence, the ostentatious donation will have had its full reward in the publicity given to it in the columns of a newspaper, the report of a society, or in the blatant repetition by word of mouth, where it could have been sacred as love and silent as the grave.

It is quite likely that there will be further room in society for the practice of all benevolence, until giant minds gifted of God shall arise, who will solve by inspiration's light the growing and momentous questions of these times, such as labor, crime, poverty, creation, distribution, land, wealth, marriage, finance, education, politics, the social evil, drunkenness, law, railroads, debt, war, migration, suffrage, religion, insanity, annexation, international limits of interference, tariff, pensions, silver, and many other points which crowd upon and are part of the complexities and queries of an age, upon which "the ends of the earth have come."

To meet these will be the work of time, perhaps of the millennium, but there is no reason why the duty of the day should by this community be shelved or neglected in the intervening years. President Cannon pictured grandly a little while ago the promise and prophecy of "a new order"—one in which labor for purely personal ends should be unknown, where individual talent, ability, endowment, would each be used for the good of the whole, and where as a consequence selfishness would find no place; but how many weary years would elapse before this consummation, before this dream of the Poet and vision of the Prophets will be realized none know, and "hope deferred (it is said) maketh the heart sick."

Nay, is it not pertinent to ask, whether, while nearer in time, we are not further off in practice and spirit than during any period of past history? Are not worldly methods, ideas, aspirations and affiliations more potent, far-reaching and complex than ever?

While the burthen of counsel is in favor of reparation, and against undue intimacy; while association and entangling alliances are deprecated, and the assertion is repeated ad libitum that the Gospel includes "all things" necessary for man's welfare in time and in eternity, and thousands are assured of this; are there not features of Gentile life, which, while we do not wish to imitate, yet certainly ought to be superseded by something original and as much more effective as it is possible to create?

Are there not men today embarrassed in business, who have assets beyond all indebtedness, who have held out in humiliation yet in hope that they might possibly extricate themselves? Have not such men been faithful members, devoted missionaries and good citizens; have they not honored law, kept their covenants, endured privation, vindicated the truth, been "instant in season and out of season," and yet for lack of sympathetic aid in time of struggle have unwillingly gone to the wall? Are there not men of family who have been "from the beginning," yet are now struggling in "the bare and yellow leaf" of age, to get a new or better foothold in life, who have given years to public service and duty, but lacking a few dollars or other timely aid are now in despondency, almost despair?

Would not the Jew succor this kind of men, if of their faith; would not the hand of brotherhood find relief some way, and would not a man's co-religionists of any clasp try at least to meet these conditions by some process, unless they had forgot themselves and their obligations to each other?

Are there not hundreds now in associations, for possible emergencies of life, of enforced idleness, sickness or death, who would not be there, if the Gospel had appropriated or originated similar provisions to these societies in some practical way? Can a man expend all his earnings in raising his family, in making donations, paying his tithing, building his home, and not feel that he is subject to sickness and death, and that there are consequent possibilities of hardship and poverty and dependence to his loved ones, without a struggle for preparation against such conditions?

These are queries for today and we cannot afford to wait for the establishment of "The New Order," ere we embody in our faith and practice that which secures temporal aid, security and salvation!

We can learn to take some interest in each other; to approximate toward stewardship where there is urgent necessity; to make special provision for the widow and the orphan; to have some policy in regard to the providing of labor for the willing; to move to more favorable conditions those who at great cost and sacrifice have been gathered in the missionary field; we can make association with outside organizations superfluous and undesirable by presenting well understood security in times of sorrow and need; we can stand by each other and guard the interests of our friends; we can become—more and more—"a peculiar people, zealous (if we desire it) in all good words and works."

HOMES IN SAN JUAN.

BLUFF, San Juan County, Utah, May 6th 1894.—In the San Juan Stake, embracing as it does large districts or country lying in the southwestern corner of Colorado, the northwestern corner of New Mexico and the whole of San Juan county in the southeastern corner of Utah, we have ample room for 500 families—a great variety of climate and soil.

Let us commence at Monticello, San Juan County, Utah, situated near the eastern base of the Blue Mountains; altitude about 6,500 feet above sea level; climate lovely during summer, and winters not very severe; season short in which animals have to be fed, as compared with northern Utah; timber plenty and easy of access; fuel and fencing in abundance all over the country; coal in abundance near at hand; all kinds of cereals and vegetables grow well here, hardy kinds of fruit will no doubt do well; a few peaches have been ripened here; thousands of acres of good land lying to east, south and north, unsurveyed government land. The Carlisle Brothers hold a claim on several sections under desert entry. They have been largely engaged in the stock business but are now driving off their cattle and selling out. They have been writing frequently during the past year for us (Mormons) to buy them out, but on account of the unsettled state of the Ute Indian removal bill we have not done much about it. So far as I am acquainted with the matter, I believe the moving of the Indians into this country is a dead issue; they will not come now. These claims are the best there are in this country, in fact I consider these claims the key to the prosperity of the settlers in this vicinity. With proper utilizing of the water for irrigation fifty families could find homes or a good place to make them, and by proper storage of the water one hundred families could be supplied with small farms. It is also a well established fact that dry culture for wheat can be made a success for a large belt around these mountains. Thousands of acres of good land can be found all round the region without any claim upon it. One watering for wheat or oats, spring sowed, brings a good crop. Monticello has a large amount of land fenced and under irrigation, owned by very few people who would gladly divide with good Latter-day Saints who would come and help to build up and strengthen the ward. Besides, there is the same opportunity for dry farming here as mentioned above. Monticello, in my judgment, could take twenty-five families. It is a good, a prosperous ward with a real live bishop, (F. T. Jones,) looking jealously after the interest of his flock. The above mentioned places are situated in the midst of a first-class summer range for cows, where several dairy ranches could be successfully located, near the mountain where good water and most excellent grass abounds. This country is situated on the San Juan county road leading from Bluff on the San Juan river to Moab, Grand county, where we have some thirty families forming the Moab ward. From Monticello to Moab 60 miles; from Moab to Thomson Spring station on the D. & R. G. W. Ry. 35 miles; from said station to Salt Lake City 213 miles or thereabouts.

From Monticello we will go east on good road over a fine high rolling country, covered with abundance of cedar and pinion pine with very little water except a few springs for some sixty miles, and we come to Cortez, a small town located in the fine agricultural valley of Montezuma, Colorado. Here we have some 400,000 acres of good farm land situated under two canals called the Ditch and Tunnel Co. There are comparatively but few farms located and being worked on this great body of land. There are large tracts of it yet unoccupied—title in the general government and Colorado state government. State lands, some 80,000 acres, can be purchased cheap and on very easy terms to good, substantial settlers. I am pleased and proud to say that Mormons as settlers have much the preference. The northwestern lateral to the Ditch canal is not yet worked. It is thirteen miles long, tail of ditch discharging the water into Utah. This company is anxious to have Mormon people come and settle under this part of their canal and work the lateral and have permanent water rights. I do not remember exactly the amount of land that this is supposed to carry water for, but I think I am abundantly safe in setting it at 50,000 acres, a great percentage of most excellent soil for fruit as well as general culture. The altitude is much lower than Monticello, for it is down grade from there all the way; good saw timber about ten to twelve miles east towards Mancos, and about same distance to Dolores on the river of that name, and to a station of the D. & G. Southern railway, running from Durango, Colo., on its way to Rico, Ridgway and other places to connect with the main line of the R. G. Western railway at Montrose, I believe. There, in my judgment, 200 families can find one of the best countries unoccupied that I know of for a thousand miles round this region of the Rocky Mountains—government lands free to appropriate and cheap water for working of it.

Twenty miles farther east, on a good road—much of the way through nice parks of beautiful saw timber with no under brush, some scattering ranches now and then appear wrestling with the problem of dry farming, and some are succeeding well, owing to location—we come to a nice little valley some 20 by 4 miles wide with the Rio Mancos rambling down it. This is also a railroad station on the D. & R. G. Southern. A smart little town of enterprising citizens is found here; one large, well stocked store, carrying general merchandise, owned and run by a Mr. George Bauer, a good, honest Dutchman or German; one or two other small stores, doing very little business; two blacksmith shops, one hotel and several restaurants; one barber shop, one fine central school building, where a high school is taught; one small Methodist chapel. These improvements are all found on the west side of the river. On the east, about one mile from the center of the village, we come to the Mormon meeting and school house, a good, commodious building built of logs and lumber. From here south we have a regular Mormon string-town for a distance of some ten or twelve miles down the celebrated Weber canyon till it breaks into the Rio Mancos canyon so celebrated for Aztec mummies, ruins, cave and cliff dwellers. The land on either side of this canyon is located and owned or claimed, with much of it deeded from the government, by a few Mormon families, who are dead land poor and waiting for people wanting homes to come and help them redeem the country. Land with water right can be had here from $10 to $20 per acre; good, rich land as can be found this side of the Missouri river. Besides these Mormon claims there are quite a number of ranches of 160 acres each situated on the main road leading from Durango thirteen miles east, also adjacent to the railroad, which have been recently sold under mortgage foreclosure, and are for sale dirt cheap with first-class water rights. The altitude is something over 6,000 feet; winter is mild for high altitude; fruit is being raised here in considerable quantities; market for butter and eggs good the year round; many rich mines near by this vicinity; goods, such as farmers usually buy, are about as sold in Salt Lake City; fencing and wood for fuel in abundance and coal is cropping out all over the country; saw timber in easy distance, nine to ten miles away. This, in my opinion, is one of the finest places for young men to come and be satisfied with small farms and stay at home and leave the mines and all other side labor alone and stick to the farm, where, with industry, temperance, frugality and a firm trust in God and His providence they can become very comfortable in a few years; for the country has many natural advantages. Mancos and close vicinity can furnish homes for 250 families.

We will now take a spin down into New Mexico; travel east about twelve miles over a high divide or summit into a beautiful park, dotted here and there with nice ranches carried on by the dry culture process largely; thence some eight miles down a deep canyon with a small stream flowing down it called Cherry creek. Some nice rich farms are found on either side of this little stream; saw timber nearly all along this canyon or narrow deep valley for its entire length. We leave Cherry creek by ascending quite a high mountain on a long, deep, good grade; we now come into the reservation where the Southern Ute Indians are in possession, travel some eight or ten miles down grade, good road, and we come to the Rio La Plata, thence across by ford, up quite a hill on to a beautiful mesa, still on the reservation; travel on several miles and down a steep hill onto the La Plata river; down this we travel some 25 or 30 miles. All the way there are nice ranches; the reservation is 15 miles wide, and as soon as we cross it into New Mexico, the land is taken up and fine farms and orchards line the bottoms on either side of the stream till we reach Jackson ward or La Plata, as formerly called. Here Elder A. F. Young is presiding, with some sixteen families under his watch care. The people here—all Mormons—have under claim the entire land from this point to where the La Plata empties in the San Juan, about nine miles. Here is found some of the richest and most fertile lands I have ever seen in these Rocky Mountain valleys. Many of these brethren would be glad to part with some of their land claims to good Saints who are in want of homes. Elder A. F. Young gave 40 acres of his claim to a brother to have him come and be a neighbor to him, and a good rich claim it was, too; others I believe would be glad to have good neighbors on very similar terms. This is a good fruit country, very healthy climate; winters mild, can work out all during the winter months; very little stormy weather; wheat, corn, oats, barley, potatoes and all kinds of vegetables grow well here; it is one of the best all round farming districts I know of; but a drawback comes from being some 40 miles from the timber belt, which is supplied from Mancos regions. The water question is fairly good now, as I understand they have a high line ditch completed which will afford plenty of water for present needs. Should emigrants come in they have a very fine reservoir site which can easily be put into shape for use, with the aid of new comers, and then they can water every acre of their nine mile claim. Jackson ward can furnish homes for at least 20 or 30 families.

Fourteen miles across country, a little west of south, we come to Fruitland, or Beconham, New Mexico, situated on the south bank of the San Juan river, about 90 miles east of Bluff. Fruitland is a fine place and mixed farming; a good many outsiders are wanting to sell out and will do so very cheap; some of the brethren who live here are more than willing to divide up their claims with new comers, for they are quite weak here numerically. There is lots of good fruit land here, and when I say fruit land, it is good for all purposes that land is farmed for in like climates, but fruit is preeminently the crop in this country for cash profit. The unappropriated land lies under a new ditch lately finished, and runs quite a distance above the little town. What the rates are for water I am not advised. Bishop Luther C. Beconham presides here—a good; kind, fatherly bishop, looking earnestly after the welfare of his little flock. Fruitland can furnish homes for 40 families; rather I mean can furnish first class places where elegant homes can be built up in a few years. The question of lumber same as at Jackson; all this region of country is fairly alive with coal mines.

We will take up our journey and travel westerly down the San Juan river, some 60 miles and we come to Elder William Hyde's old trading post. Our road from Fruitland has not led us very near the river but back some 12 or 15 miles perhaps, across dry, rolling country. But from here to Bluff we will be near the river all the time. From this point to Bluff is called 30 miles, interspersed with large tracts of bottom land, and some of the finest bench land, where from 100 to 1000 acres of choice land is lying waiting for the pioneer. The drawback here, and the only one, is the water question—plenty of water in the San Juan river, but it will take lots of capital and first class engineering to take it out and control it; when it is done and proven a success San Juan county will forge to the front as one of the richest counties in Utah.

At McElmo, some eight miles from Hyde's trading post, there is found, and unclaimed so far as known, a very fine body of good land situated in the mouth of McElmo wash; there are several hundred acres of this land, and free water for it that comes from miles east, the drainage of all the land in Montezuma valley that is watered from the canals out of the Dolores river spoken of in this article. I think some fifteen families could make homes in this last mentioned place; no better location probably could be found for fruit on this river.

Twenty odd miles now west and down the river bring us to Bluff, where we find the strongest ward in the Stake, presided over in a very efficient manner by Bishop Jens Neilson and his very worthy counselors. Keemen Jones and L. H. Redd, Jr. We have not much to offer from here by way of land and water unless a company should come sufficiently strong to handle the water question. Land is in abundance unappropriated lying out doors all round us, but water for it is the question. Bluff ditch carries water for some 300 acres of land which is all claimed; but had we sufficient help to enlarge and extend the ditch a few miles west, it would bring us in a large tract of very fine fruit land. The land is not appropriated, unless it be by some placer gold claims; but shouldn't wonder if some "smart Alec", a shrewd business, financial man, seeing this article, would go straightway and stake off the country for ten miles below Bluff, to be ready to take in the weary pilgrim when he shall put in an appearance.

Our fruit crop prospect was never better, but fears are entertained that it may suffer from drought soon, as it has not had but one slight watering since last fall—no rain to speak of during the winter. We were very late getting the water into our ditch this spring and before we had watered round, the river through a cold spell went down and left our ditch dry. We will have it in soon, I hope, and not have our fruit injured. Cattle are not doing well on account of drought. I have never seen our range so dry this early in the season, and the range is overstocked; sheep are coming in and it looks rather blue for the cattle man. We look for better times soon and in the mean time we aim to keep to work and help mend the times by being more economical and make or produce as nearly as possible all that we consume; to get out of debt and keep out, and cease our greed and covetousness, that the Lord may bless us.

F. A. HAMMOND.

A SISTER OF THE PROPHET.

The following is from the Carthage, Ill., Republican of May 16, and will be of more than passing interest to the Latter-day Saints, as it relates to the only surviving sister of the Prophet Joseph Smith and to incidents which are deeply impressed in the history of the Mormon people:

A representative of the Republican recently paid a visit to the home of Fred Salisbury, residing some four miles northeast of Fountain Green, and was cordially received by that gentleman and family, as well as by his venerable and noted mother, Mrs. Catherine Salisbury, who is a sister of the Prophet Joseph Smith. On the 27th day of June next will mark the fiftieth anniversary of the massacre of Hyrum and Joseph Smith in the old stone jail at Carthage. The silver-crowned patriarch who will be 88 years old in July, bears a striking resemblance to her nephew, the present Joseph Smith, son of the Prophet, and president of the [Reorganized] Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, at Lamoni, Ia. Some resemblance to the martyred Prophet, as shown in some of the photographs of him, may be noted in the features of this venerable lady, but very little.

Mrs. Salisbury, as well as her son, was ready to answer any questions relating to their noted relatives or the early reminiscences of Mormonism in Hancock county.

"We have been interviewed by authors and newspaper writers," said Mrs. Salisbury, "but we have not always received justice in histories or published stories. All we ask is a fair representation."

Mrs. Salisbury also stated that her brother's life and acts had been most cruelly misrepresented. She loaned the writer a book written a number of years ago by Mrs. Lucy Smith, mother of Joseph, which she says is the most authentic account of the Smith family ever published.

Mrs. Salisbury resided with her husband at Plymouth, in this county, during the Mormon ascendancy. She with her parents and brothers and sisters, save Joseph and Hyrum, first located near the present site of Bardolph, McDonough county, at the time the Mormons were driven out of Missouri. The major portion of the Mormons remained in Quincy two or three weeks after leaving Missouri until Joseph and Hyrum were liberated from jail. They then followed their leaders to Nauvoo, where the "New Zion" was built upon these beautiful hills.

"I heard Brother Joseph's last sermon, delivered to a great audience in Nauvoo," said Mrs. Salisbury, and a look of tender sadness lighted up those dimming eyes as she spoke. "In that sermon," continued the venerable lady, "Brother Joseph said that there was seated on the speaker's stand beside him those who were conspiring to take his life, and who would be responsible for his death."

Among the valuable relics exhibited to the visitor was a portrait of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, standing facing each other, dressed in the peculiar costumes worn by them as Prophets of the Church. "That is the position they assumed the last time I ever saw my brothers," said Mrs. Salisbury. "I left them on the Saturday (June 22, 1844,) before the Thursday that they were murdered at Carthage. Brother Joseph shook my hand, saying, 'Sister Catherine, as soon as this trouble blows over I will come down to Plymouth and make you a visit.' Brother Hyrum simply said 'Good-bye' in an impressive manner. I never saw them again in life. They were both very kind to me, and whenever there was a Church celebration or any big doings at Nauvoo they would always send for me."

Mr. Fred Salisbury had no hesitation in saying that the bodies of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, while buried secretly and at night soon after the massacre, lie in the exact spot where they were then buried, viz: in the family burying ground a short distance in the rear of the old mansion house. The bodies were deposited in a brick vault. "When Aunt Emma Smith, Joseph's widow, later Mrs. C. L. Bidamon—died in 1875, I think, five of us boys, Fred, Solomon, Don and Alvin Salisbury and Don Milkin, all her nephews, acted as pall bearers at her funeral. We buried Aunt Emma by the side of the Prophet. Of course there can be nothing left of the bodies of Joseph and Hyrum but dust. I am satisfied that the Prophets were buried there, and that their bodies have never been disturbed."

"The reason why the burial was secret," said Mrs. Salisbury, "was from the fact that a large sum of money was offered for the head of Joseph. It was thought best at the time to have the burial private, and both bodies were placed in a brick vault to prevent their being stolen."

No fair-minded person could receive any other impression from conversation with Mrs. Salisbury than one of sincerity. There can be little doubt that the Mormons have received very much unjust criticism, and it is hoped that in some future time a history of the coming, the sojourn and the passing of these people to and from Hancock county may be truthfully and impartially written.

TO UTAH'S WORKERS.

To the People of Utah Territory:

The Directors of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society have announced the Territorial Fair for 1894; and notwithstanding the temporary financial depression they have the most unbounded confidence and faith that it will prove a gratifying success. The enterprising citizens of Utah have shown in the numerous exhibits to which we have recently contributed that this Territory can and will do herself justice in all that she undertakes. The World's Fair, Midwinter Fair and the Industrial fairs have pressed hard upon each other, yet our Territory was not found wanting in any particular.

Now comes the Utah Territorial fair, which is of greater immediate interest to us than any of the others, because it will not be the product of a city, or of a county; nor will it be an exhibit gotten together for outside uses, but it will be the whole Territory's exposition, showing our progress in agriculture, manufactures, mining, art and education.

It is the aim of the society to bring together at its twenty-first exhibition, this year—the year of its manhood—an exhibit of home products surpassing in excellence anything yet seen in this Territory. And why should we not succeed in this aim? We have the experience of our own twenty fairs and of the great international exhibitions, and we can profit by the lessons learned. Of course it would be useless to attempt to imitate, even on a small scale, an exhibition which cost twenty millions, or one which cost several hundred thousands of dollars; but with the means and space at our command it is possible to raise the standard of excellence, materially increase the number of exhibits, and make the Fair more educational in its character by paying greater attention to order and classification.

But the success desired cannot be brought about by the directors alone. It rests with the people. It must have the support of the stock raiser, the farmer, the miner, the artist, the school and the fancy worker. They must bring together their products and we appeal to them at this time to keep the exhibit in mind and prepare their exhibits so that in October they will be ready to make a satisfactory showing. Do not leave it until the Fair is opened, for it will then be too late.

One of the greatest helps to the Fair is the custom of our merchants and citizens of offering special premiums for articles of home production. With our limited means we feel as if we could so easily succeed without a continuation of this generosity so willingly manifested on the part of our citizens. It is particularly needed at this time when so much is being urged in behalf of our home manufactures. Besides, the directors desire to make this department of the Fair a crowning culmination of the present "home goods" agitation.

One of the by-laws of the society provides that persons may be admitted to be life-members upon payment of the sum of twenty-five dollars, and a certificate of such life-membership shall be issued to them by the secretary, which certificate shall entitle the person named therein, at any time, to be admitted himself and also to make entries at the exhibitions of the society, without extra charge. In earlier days, when money was scarce, the privileges of life-membership were secured by most of our prominent citizens, but of late very few names have been added to the list. The directors desire to call the attention of the people to this matter and urge the purchase of these life certificates. They are living diplomas of honor, and show the holder's concern in Utah's enterprises. The funds derived from the sale of these certificates are used in offering premiums to exhibitors of home products.

In closing it will be unnecessary for us to argue in favor of the Fair as a stimulating agency for home manufactures. The great good derived from our exhibitions has always been impressed upon the minds of the people of this Territory, and all civilized nations now acknowledge the power and value of their exhibitions as aids in the promotion of industrial arts and in the development of natural resources.

By order of the board of directors of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society.

JOHN R. WINDER,
President.

GEO. D. PYPER, Secretary.

TO CASSIA STAKE.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 22, 1894.—The following is a brief sketch of a four days' trip to Oakley, Cassia county, Idaho:

On Thursday, May 17th, Elder Geo. Reynolds and myself left Salt Lake City at 6:20 p.m. by the U. P. R. R., and arrived at the Minidoka station (280 miles) on Friday, at 5:25 a.m. This brought us within forty-five miles of our destination, which distance we had to travel by team. Assistant Superintendent Robinson had already arrived to convey us to Oakley, where a two days' annual Sunday school conference was to be held on Saturday and Sunday, May 19th and 20th.

We left Minidoka at 8 o'clock a.m. and crossed Snake river at Montgomery's Ferry. The river at this point is 875 feet wide and the charge for a round trip per team $1.50. After crossing the river, which is eleven miles from Minidoka, we made our way up the Goose Creek valley, arriving at Oakley at 5 p.m., the distance from Snake river being 34 miles, or from Minidoka 45 miles. We were heartily welcomed by our old-time friend Horton D. Haight who is president of the Cassia Stake of Zion.

During Saturday and Sunday four conference meetings were held and one general meeting, besides a seventies' meeting. We had representatives from Albion, Elba, Almo, Spring Rain, Marion, George Creek and Wood River, the latter being 100 miles from Oakley, and some of the others ranging from 25 to 40 miles. Owing to the long distance that many had to travel and the length of time absorbed, at so busy a time of the season, it was deemed wisdom to test the feelings of the congregation, by vote, as to confining our future conferences to one day instead of two, but not one hand was uplifted; every hand was up for two days' conferences.

The meeting house, of hewn logs, is 80 feet long and 80 wide, with a seating capacity of 400.

The Sunday afternoon congregation was so large that many were unable to get in the house. They have an excellent choir of singers, led by Elder James Stoudart. We met many old friends who formerly lived at Kayville, Farmington and Willard, also at Grantsville and Tootle. We were much pleased with the reports of the Sunday schools by the local superintendents.

Our visit was one that afforded us peculiar pleasure, and we have every reason to believe that the instructions and encouragement the Spirit of the Lord enabled us to impart, were equally appreciated by the parents, teachers and children.

Oakley is a town of magnificent distances. No two houses join each other, not even on Main street. Oakley ward proper is  $2\frac{1}{2}$  by 6 miles. All the residents live on their own land, ranging from forty to one hundred and sixty acres, and have sufficient water for all they occupy. The planting season is over and irrigation has commenced. Large fields of lucern are growing and will be ready for cutting in about a month. Wheat, oats and barley, besides apples, pears, plums, peaches and apricots, gooseberries, currants, etc., all thrive in this climate.

On Monday, May 21, we bade adieu to our friends at Oakley at 10:15 a.m., and after a pleasant ride of forty-five miles behind a good team, and in company with a good driver (W. F. Brim, second counselor to President Haight) we arrived at Minidoka station. Fortunately there lives a man with his family at this lonely station who accommodates travelers. His name is Ephraim Harper; here we had supper and rested until midnight, at which time our train arrived, and we availed ourselves of its speed to the city we love so well, after a travel of 460 miles per train and ninety per team, thankful to our Heavenly Father for His preserving care; arrived home safe this day.

GEORGE GODDARD.

A RICH COUNTY INDEED!

GARDEN CITY, Rich county, Utah, May 22, 1894.—On Sunday, May 20, while tramping over the hills north of town, Messrs. Wm. McDouald and John H. Lutz, of this place accidentally stumbled on to a ledge of copper cropping four feet wide and about eighty feet long, which will prove an Eldorado, and a bonanza to its owners. They immediately located, and the next day began working it. It has fallen into the hands of men who will not only benefit themselves but many of our citizens. Work will be pushed vigorously. The vein is very plainly outlined, and is only six inches below the surface, from which nuggets of solid grey copper can be taken the size of hen's eggs. Your correspondent was shown samples which will assay 50 per cent copper. In fact it beats any ore, by far, that has ever been taken out of any claim in this mining region. The gentlemen have every reason to congratulate themselves on their lucky find. Great excitement prevails and the county recorder will be kept busy from this on. This claim is situated half a mile west of the county road, north of town, half way between Garden City and Swan creek. Your correspondent was informed today by these gentlemen that they do not, like many others, intend to play the "hog," but will crowd the work openly and thus benefit thereby the whole community. There are too many bolding good claims hereabout, who, if they would "live and let live," would have boomed the country long ago. But there seems to be a desire to play "freeze-out," and large mining corporations, such as some we might mention, think they have the whole world by the tail if they can scare prospectors out, and deceive the public by telling them there is no ore in these hills. We are glad to say that this new great find will infuse new life into prospectors and show the people that they have been deceived by large corporations long enough. Every pound of this ore just found by McDonald and Lutz is high grade, first class shipping ore, right from the top, so no time will be lost in finding the way to the ledge.

From now on, look out! Our time has come at last, and now capital will no more need fear to come in, and hard times with us will vanish as chaff before the wind.

Three companies from Almy, Wyo., are working various claims with splendid facilities and splendid ore is being put on the dump. The "Argosia," owned by R. A. Pope & Co., is ready to boom. Splendid specimens are being exhibited in town. All claims of any importance are being vigorously worked, except the "Daisy," owned at present by the Rich-Cache Mining company. V. EMIL.

CLOSING EXERCISES B. Y. A.

PROVO, May 25, 1894.—The closing exercises of the Brigham Young Academy occur this week. This institution, founded eighteen years ago, has steadily grown in public favor, and is today an honor alike to itself and to the great cause of which it is a worthy and efficient exponent. The history of its progress records much of the eminent labors of Dr. Karl G. Maeser, who gave to the institution some of the best years of a life thoroughly devoted to the noble profession of teacher. The academy is now in charge of Prof. B. Cluff, Jr., who, with an efficient corps of instructors, is maintaining the excellent standing the institution hitherto has enjoyed, and whose services have been eminently satisfactory to his patrons. From the academy have gone students who have reflected credit upon themselves and upon their alma mater.

Before the hour assigned for the exercises to take place yesterday, a NEWS representative was shown through the building and saw work exhibited in the different departments. In the art department was an excellent display of the products of the students, among which were very neat specimens of needle and fancy work by the young ladies, including dresses, embroidery, quilts, carpets, etc. There also was an exhibition scroll work, very unique specimens of work with a knife, pencil sketching, building designs, drawings and various other articles too numerous to mention. Suffice it to say, the exhibit was a most excellent showing of the efficiency of the institution.

At ten o'clock, the spacious assembly room was comfortably filled with friends and patrons. The room was neatly decorated with white and blue, emblems of the college society. At the back of the platform was the inscription "Our Temple of Learning," beneath which was an engraving of President Young, around and beneath which was the American flag artistically festooned. At ten o'clock, marching to appropriate music, there filed in the students upon whom were to be conferred the honors won. First came the seventh grade students, followed by those of the eighth, then the normal students and last of all the graduates of this year, seven in number.

The exercises were opened by singing under the direction of Professor Giles, which was followed by prayer by Professor J. B. Keeler. Then came an instrumental solo, succeeding which was the principal's report. Miss Nellie Holliday sang beautifully, "Our Temple of Learning," the audience joining in the chorus. The selection was composed for the occasion by Prof. Cluff.

An address was given by Elder A. H. Cannon of Salt Lake. He counseled the students as they entered upon the arena of life to prepare themselves fully for its activities and responsibilities. It is only the man who makes most of the talents given him that makes a success in life, measured by the possibilities within his reach. The successful man is the exception, not the rule. Attention was called to the words of Daniel Webster, who in speaking of competition in the profession of law, said: "There is plenty of room at the top." There is no room in the world for the sluggard. In this age of advanced thought and progress, he who delves deep into the fountains of wisdom, who places his ideal high, and attempts by every possible means to reach it is the one only in the highest sense, the ideal student. A strong appeal was made to prosecute earnestly the work chosen for life. Consider well your fitness for your calling or profession, and then devote your best energies to your life's work. The address was delivered in a forcible manner, and was heartily appreciated by all present.

The audience was next favored with a violin solo, by Prof. Clive, of Salt Lake, who responded to a hearty encore.

Certificates to members of the seventh and eighth grades, and to those of the Sunday school and M. I. A.

courses, and diplomas to the graduates of the academy were then presented by Principal Cluff; after which were addresses by President A. O. Smoot, of the academy board, and by George Goddard, of Salt Lake City. It was an interesting spectacle to witness these two venerable men, the work of whose lives is nearing its end, counseling those who are just entering life's portal to be faithful to their trusts. In closing their remarks they wished them a hearty Godspeed in their future careers.

At 2 p. m. the alumni exercises were held. Prayer was offered by the chaplain, B. S. Hinckley, followed by a fine oration by Dr. J. M. Tanner, who spoke upon the needs of today, and the progress made in educational lines. He spoke of shams in our present educational systems, and pictured to his audience the ideal of the future.

The alumni song was finely rendered by Mrs. Dr. Pike, and the sentiment to Dr. Maeser by Prof. Hardy was feelingly and appreciatingly given. In the absence of E. A. Wilson, the alumni poem was read by Prof. Nelson, in his usual happy manner. The toast, "Our Alma Mater," which was to have been given by Hon. W. H. King, was well presented by one of the graduates, Mr. W. E. Rydloch. "The Hunter's Report," by Prof. L. E. Eggertson, "The Alumni of the Future," by Prof. Cluff, and the "History of the Academy," by Prof. H. E. Giles, followed in order.

In the evening the alumni ball was given and was as usual an enjoyable occasion.

By reason of the length of the exercise, the faculty decided to have the essays read and oration delivered today. This morning at 10 o'clock, a program under the auspices of the normals was rendered, the faculty being present as visitors.

First upon the program was the class president's address, by Henry Peterson, after which was a production in blank verse, by Miss Aretta Young. H. S. Tanner was on "The Close of the Nineteenth Century," and the "Class Humor" by J. W. Booth. The class historian's address by Collie Robinson was next in order, "Prognostication" succeeding, by J. M. Jensen. "The Student's Fantasies and Realities" was made the subject of an essay by Miss Mabel T. Thurman. The valedictory was by Miss Mary Woodruff.

In the afternoon the program of exercises was under the auspices of the commercial students, the teaching force being again present as visitors. To Francis W. Kirkham was assigned the class president's address. E. D. Whiting had the subject "A Commercial Student's Aim," D. F. Stevens "A Dream," and Edgar Reid the valedictory.

Says the Helena Independent: The authoritative announcement that the extension of the Burlington & Missouri River railway to Billings will bring the trains of that system directly into Helena, by means of a traffic arrangement with the Northern Pacific, means very much for this city and state. This will shorten the time from Helena to Omaha by thirty-two hours and save over 400 miles of travel, besides giving this region greatly increased train facilities.

The manufacture of stearine candles takes in Sweden a very prominent place. Swedish stearine candles are considered superior to the foreign article in quality and illuminative power, in consequence of which they have, although dearer, displaced the foreign manufacture in the home market.

Mr. Thomas Ferguson, the new American minister to Sweden and Norway, arrived at Stockholm the other day. He was met at the Central Depot by minister W. W. Thomas. Mr. Thomas, who intended to return to America this month, has changed his plans, and will spend the summer in Sweden.

While during the last twenty years the number of mechanical workshops has more than doubled in Sweden, the number of workmen has increased more than three fold and the value of production more than four fold. Out of the 214 workshops and foundries 96 are situated in towns or boroughs and 118 in country districts.

Strawberries grow just as well in Sweden as in other countries, the same varieties occurring as elsewhere. During so-called bare winters, they must however be covered with firbrush etc., so that the frost may not kill them. Several American sorts, such as the Fillmore, Kerr's Prolific, Sharpless, etc., thrive very well in Sweden. Wood strawberries are pretty generally grown under glass, so as to obtain fruit early.

The agricultural societies in Sweden employ so-called master gardeners of the province, who must aid the public with advice and information. The horticultural societies, to the number of about 20, spread all over the kingdom, are active in promoting shows publishing and distributing publications, imparting instruction and supplying plants and seed.

Among private collections of historical art may be mentioned, before all, those at Skokloster castle, where are preserved a great number of objects of industrial art mostly brought together during the thirty years' war by Field marshal C. S. Wrangel, the then owner of the castle. Several other private castles as Vanaas, Saefstaholm, Finspong etc., possess noteworthy collections of paintings.

Unhealthy habitations are always condemned in Sweden, and public buildings, such as schools, theaters, factories, etc., may be ordered to provide means of proper ventilation, should it be necessary. Offensive trades may not be established in large towns without the permission of the Board of Health which has a right to prohibit the continuation of industrial pursuits, which are found pernicious to the health of the neighbors.

The milk retail company of Copenhagen will prepare milk in suitable bottles for children of different ages. The size of each bottle will be such as to furnish just one meal to the child. The empty bottles will be returned and cleaned at the establishment of the company before they are refilled. This new departure is not expected to be a very profitable investment; but a number of philanthropic citizens have agreed to support it, and, if it prove beneficial to the children, a society perhaps will be organized for the purpose of enabling as many poor mothers as possible to obtain this children's food.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

The spring season is coming very early in the Saratoga valley of Wyoming.

The Express says the prospects for a full crop of apples about Fort Collins (Colo.) are very promising.

Charles Moore, a fifteen-year-old boy, was dragged to death by a horse at Endicott, Wash., last Sunday.

Fruit buds in the whole valley about Delta, Colo., are said to be in fine condition and a larger fruit crop than was ever before known in that section is already assured.

Mr. Currie, the Utah sheepman who visited Halley last week, says the Halley Times, took such a fancy to this region that he intends to return soon, to make his home here.

Owing to the great amount of moisture which has fallen this spring, says the Lander (Wyo.) Clipper, the range is looking better than it has at this season for the past five years.

Silver Cliff, Colo., has telegraphic communication with the world, after a stillness of six years. The line was completed some days since, but the wires were only connected on Saturday last.

The honey crop is said to be now well under way in the Salt River valley of Arizona. Like all other crops this year, it promises to be a phenomenon in quantity and excellent in quality.

The Denver Manufacturing Exchange has concluded to give an exhibition of Colorado manufactured products at Coliseum hall during the week of the Republican League convention.

A man named Shea, serving on board the Independence at Mare Island, has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment and loss of pay. While drunk Shea slapped the face of Ensign Harry George.

The rains of the past few days, remarks the Helena, Mont., Independent, make the hearts of the stockmen glad. Sheepmen also report a big lamb crop, with the young ones in good shape.

Sam Gibson, once a noted swimmer, was arrested for burglary at Vancouver. While being taken to Nanaimo on a steamer he jumped overboard and attempted to swim ashore. The tide carried him away and he was drowned.

The California branch of the Sons of the Revolution offers two medals, one of silver and the other of bronze, to the pupils of the various high schools in the state for the best essay on Patrick Henry.

The late heavy frosts had the effect to kill the fruit prospects of that section very extensively, says the Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise. There will not be half a crop in Reno, Carson and throughout Washoe valley.

Chinese and Japanese are largely employed by the fruit growers in California. The fruit growers of Nevada will disdain to employ help of any kind this season, says the Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise.

It is commonly rumored here, says the Wadsworth (Nevada) Dispatch, that the Whitaker Hall at Reno will close for good at the end of the present term, and the pupils who desire to finish will do so at the Salt Lake school.

Miss Kittie Wilkins, the "horse queen of Idaho," has left for Omaha, says the Mountain Home (Idaho) Republican, where she went to arrange for the delivery of 100 head of horses that she recently sold in the eastern market.

Mrs. Ignacio Escaba, of Pala, Cal., the aunt and also the foster mother of the girl, Vasilia Escaba, who was murdered by her paramour, Manuel Amalio, in San Diego last March, has died from grief over the taking off of the unfortunate girl.

The porch of Antonio Bustamente's house at Yuma, Arizona, fell at midnight Sunday night, killing instantly his wife and daughter, badly injuring three other daughters and breaking his leg. A little boy sleeping with his mother escaped unhurt. Three other sons sleeping outside escaped.

The frost and cold of last week, says the Carson (Nev.) News, destroyed all the fruit that escaped the blight of a few weeks ago. Even the vegetables barely above the ground were frozen to the roots. Potato patches resemble prairies that have been swept by fire, and the loss is very heavy.

Large consignments of wool are being received by the Forwarding company for shipment to the East, remarks the Caldwell (Idaho) Argus. The recent reduction of freight rates has induced the wool men to bring their wool in large quantities. There is something near 300,000 pounds in the company's warehouse.

Augustino Capurro, an aged Italian, was stabbed through the heart in the bar-room of a small grocery store at San Francisco on Saturday night, by a countryman named Mereo Felice, alias "Kreen Kreen." The murder is described as having been one of the most brutal and coldblooded ever committed in the Latin quarter.

The case of the people against Frank Wright, charged with the murder of Blanche Cornetto at Idaho Springs on January 28 last, has been occupying the district court at Georgetown, Colo. The testimony was substantially the same as that testified to at the preliminary examination. The jury returned a verdict of voluntary manslaughter.

Laramie, Wyo., says the Boomerang, is today the headquarters of a great mining boom. The newspapers of the city have been conservative recently in making statements regarding the mining movement in the hills west of this city. It is a conservative statement now to say that miners are coming here from Colorado by the score.

Charles Acklilire, a hotel keeper, was murderously assaulted by two men at Livingston, Montana, on Saturday night. The men came from behind and struck him on the head with some blunt instrument, knocking him down and severely injuring him. His outcries brought help, which frightened his assailants away. It is thought that robbery was the motive for the assault.

S. F. Johnson, of Globeville, Colo., had a very close call for his life during Sunday evening's thunder storm. He had gone to his pasture to take in a horse and had almost reached the animal when it was struck by lightning and instantly killed. Johnson was knocked insensible and it was some time before he recovered sufficiently to make his way back to the house.

About dark last night, says the Halley (Idaho) Times, a school of fish coming up the river halted at the dam at the foot of Bullion street. The news soon spread around town, and scores of anglers hurried down to indulge in their favorite pastime. They were rewarded with good strings, caught in a very short time, all the fish being of good size. From this time on until next winter fishing will be good at all points along the river.

The red sandstone quarries at Bellvue, says the Fort Collins (Colo.) Courier, are expected to resume operations shortly upon a large scale. These quarries have been idle since early last fall, the suspension of building operations making it impossible to work them without loss, but now that business of all kinds is reviving in leading centers a demand for this kind of building material is springing up which warrants the proprietors in getting to work again.

It seems to be the general impression, says the Cheyenne, Wyo., Sun, that the soldiers at Green River and Pocatello from Fort Russell will not return for two weeks. It has been thought best to keep them near the state line to prevent the entry into the state of the many commonwealers now headed toward the East from all over the Northwest. The soldiers will remain on duty so long as there is any possibility that the industrials have any idea that they can travel over the Union Pacific.

The general merchants of Rock Springs, Wyo., says the Independent of that place, are beginning to realize some of the munificent benefits to be derived from the establishment of the new stage line. Several large bills of goods have been sold by them and shipped to the gold camps the past week, and many more are yet to come. A great amount of this business has been taken from the merchants at Rawlins, and could not have been secured otherwise than by the establishment of the new stage route.

Work on the Prescott and Phoenix road is being prosecuted at a satisfactory rate says the Denver News. The line is completed to within sixteen miles of Congress, or about 100 miles from Prescott. A force of 500 men are grading, the bridge carpenters are well along and there is an abundance of ties in sight. The completion of this line next fall, adds the News, will give Denver a new and more direct entrance to the splendid Salt river valley of Arizona and to the prosperous city of Phoenix.

Professor R. H. McDowell, of the experiment station, says the Reno (Nev.) Gazette, has planted a quarter of an acre to hops, and proposes to give hop culture a thorough test. California produces about 1,500 pounds to the acre the first year of planting, and a quarter of an acre will be sufficient to demonstrate whether hops can be profitably cultivated in this valley or not. Professor McDowell has planted them right out in the open, where the wind can do its worst, in order to test the matter thoroughly.

F. S. Mordaunt, the immigration agent of the Denver & Rio Grande, was in the city yesterday, says the Denver Republican, returning from the San Luis valley, where he has been arranging for the colonization of a large number of settlers. On May 29th there will be an excursion run from Chicago to give half a hundred prospective colonists a chance to see the fertile land in San Luis and around Grand Junction. It is expected that this summer and next spring there will be many hundred families brought from the Eastern States to Colorado.

OBITUARY NOTES.

MARY ANN GENTRY.

[Coalville Times, May 18.]

Mary Ann Gentry died in this city, Sunday, May 13th, at 5 p.m., aged 63 years, 5 months and 9 days, of cancer of the stomach.

The deceased was born in Sheepshed, Leicestershire county, England, December 2, 1830. When quite young she married Langley Allgood, by whom she had six children, only one of whom now survives. In 1871 she was left a widow, and on December 24, 1873, came to America with her son and settled in Coalville, where she has resided ever since. Twenty years ago she married Samuel Gentry, in this city. She embraced the Mormon faith in March, 1846, and was a strong Latter-day Saint at the time of her death. She leaves a brother, William Clark, in England, and one son, William Allgood, who is at present in Idaho.

Deceased was a woman who was loved by all who knew her, and a large circle of friends will mourn her death, and deeply sympathize with Mr. Gentry in his bereavement.

ROBERT SMYTH.

Died on the 23rd of May, Col. Robert Smyth at the age of 73 years and 5 months. Deceased was born in the county of Tyrone, Ireland, on the 18th day of December, 1820; was the son of Alexander and Jane Smyth; joined the British army in 1839; served 15 years; and retired from the army on the 2nd of February, 1854; arrived in Salt Lake City in 1855; was ordained an Elder in Dublin in 1852; ordained a High Priest in 1891, and served as Teacher in the Nineteenth and Twenty-second wards for 39 years.

PRUDENCE H. BARNES.

LEORN, Idaho, May 25, 1894.—Prudence Hillman Barnes, of this place, died May 23, 1894, in the presence of her husband and some of her children. She was born December 25, 1830, at Bradley, Wilts, England; embraced the Gospel at Trowbridge, Wilts, 1850; and was married in 1852 to James T. Barnes. They went to Blaina, Monmouthshire, because of persecution for being Latter-day Saints, and, living in various places in Wales, they kept open house for traveling Elders, supplying them with shelter, food and clothing. They emigrated to Salt Lake City May, 1881, in Brother Mathews's company, and besides keeping her family, with the aid of her son Robert, she saved money sufficient to send for her husband. They moved from South Cottonwood March 17, 1886, and took up a home here in Idaho.

While in Idaho Falls, where she had gone to do some trading, she had a spell of giddiness and pain in her head, and fell in the street. This was May 2; she was taken to her daughter's, Eliza A. Jones, in Idaho Falls, where she had the best attention, but she passed away quietly, having been unconscious for twelve hours. She bade her husband and children goodbye, and died at 8 a.m. May 23, aged 63 years and 6 months. She was buried at Shelton, May 24, by Bishop John S. Howard; speakers Jesse Cleverly, John S. Howard and William Clegg; and her remains were followed by a long train of friends to the cemetery.

JAMES MYLER.

LEWISVILLE, Fremont county, Idaho, May 24, 1894.—Elder James Myler, a much respected citizen, an old veteran in the Church, and a member of the famous Mormon Battalion, died in the Lewisville ward on Monday, May 21st, 1894. He died in full faith and in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

He was born at or near South Bend, Indiana, February 3rd, 1822; married Miss Julia Brownell October 5th, 1843; heard the Gospel taught by Mormon Elders in 1844, and was baptized into the Church in Nauvoo in 1845. He moved with the Saints to Winter Quarters in 1846, enlisted in the Mormon Battalion sometime in July, marched with the battalion from the Missouri river across the western part of the continent to California, shared with them in all the great hardships of that campaign and after being discharged in California returned to Council Bluffs in December, 1848. After remaining with his family two weeks he had to go into Missouri and work for breadstuffs. After working there about six weeks he returned to his family. Late in the spring he plowed some land and planted some corn and one bushel of wheat, that being all the seed grain he could obtain. He remained there until 1849 and emigrated to Utah in Captain W. Miller's company of fifty. He located in Farmington, Davis county, and resided there ten years. Had been ordained a Seventy in the Fifth quorum in Nauvoo, and was ordained one of the Presidents of the Fifty-sixth quorum in Farmington, in 1858. Served in the campaign of the Echo canyon war, and in 1859 he moved to Logan, Cache, Valley, where he established a home and resided five years. He then moved to Clarkston, a new settlement on the west side of the valley; established a new home and resided there eighteen years. He then moved to a new settlement called Escalante, in Potato valley, thinking that it would be a more congenial climate; but after remaining there a few months he returned to Clarkston, established another new home and resided there until 1883, when he moved to the Snake River country and again established himself and family in another new home where he continued to reside until his death.

On Wednesday, May 23rd, 1894, the funeral services were held in the ward meeting house, and were conducted by Bishop R. F. Jardine. The speakers were Elders H. Stokes, A. Kinghorn, W. A. Walker, W. W. Selok Sen., and Bishop R. F. Jardine. Good and appropriate instructions were given and words of comfort and consolation were imparted to the bereaved.

The body was interred in the ward cemetery. A large and sympathetic train of people followed the corpse to the cemetery and witnessed the interment and dedication.

In looking over Elder James Myler's small memorandum book, I find the following plain and forcible testimony written in his calm and solitude, which I deem worth preserving: "I have been nursing all alone about the times and thought I would write a few lines on my present feelings. I feel sure that I ought to try and improve in my course of conduct before the Lord and my brethren; and it is the greatest desire of my heart, and I know that I have to seek the Lord diligently. I know He will hear me because I have sought His help in the past in scores of instances and I know that He has rewarded me and caused my heart to rejoice within me."

Written on the 8th day of December, 1886.

Yours respectfully,

HENRY STOKES.

ABSALOM A. BYBEE.

HONEYVILLE, Utah, May 22, 1894.—Absalom A. Bybee was born in Barren county, Kentucky, February 10th, 1808; died at Honeyville May 19th, 1894.

Brother Bybee was the son of Lee Bybee and Jerusha Atkerson. He married Nancy, daughter of Richard Walker and Drucilla Jenkins, at Bowling Green, Clay county, Ind., in 1833. He journeyed to Illinois in 1840, and while stopping at the home of one John Bonnett he was persuaded to go and hear the Prophet Joseph preach and while criticizing the Prophet's remarks directed to idlers, etc., he was rebuked in a material sense and heard a voice declare that Moses and others of the Prophets had the same difficulties to meet. He was therefore thoroughly convinced of Joseph's divine mission and was baptized by Almon Babbitt in the Mississippi and confirmed by Patriarch John Smith, who promised that he would be the means of bringing many into the fold of Christ. This Brother Bybee doubted because of his illiteracy; but it was fulfilled. Previous to hearing the Prophet he was a non-believer in any religion. He brought his family to Nauvoo in 1841, and while carting logs for the Nauvoo Temple he received a blow from a lever on the cart that caused his spirit to leave the body; but it was commanded by a messenger to return to it that he might take care of his family. He experienced the hatred of mobocratic violence, and left for the West in 1847. He ran a grist mill for Jerome Benson and Brother Cooley at the Bluffs, several winters. He came to Utah in 1852 and resided in Weber county several years, where he ran Lorin Farr's mill on the Ogden river, and while there, during the scarcity of breadstuffs, his great liberality was manifest; he gave his last pound of flour, even the biscuits from his own table, to satisfy the pangs of hunger in his fellowman. In 1845 he was ordained a Seventy, and in 1884 a High Priest. He leaves a wife, five sons and three daughters, 41 grandchildren and five great grandchildren. His home has been in Honeyville for 25 years. Brother Bybee was noted for his honesty and his quiet and peaceful life, and he died a firm believer in the divine mission of Joseph Smith the Prophet.

The funeral services were held at Call's Fort school house on the 20th inst., and the remains were laid away in the cemetery of that ward according to the request of the deceased.

TRAINING OF YOUNG PEOPLE.

Discourse delivered at the General Conference of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Friday, April 6, 1894, by

ELDER M. W. MERRILL.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I am pleased, my brethren and sisters, to be here this morning, and glad to see with us President Woodruff and so many of the Council of the Apostles. The people who come from a distance to the conference have an anxiety to see and hear the Presidency of the Church, especially President Woodruff, who is so loved and honored by all the Latter-day Saints. This is the sixty-fourth annual conference of the Church. When the first was held the majority of us were in the spirit world. We had not been born. But in the providence of the Lord, we are here and associated with this work which He has revealed and established through the medium of His appointed ones. We are very fortunate indeed to have a part in this glorious work of the Lord, and He has so arranged that none need walk in the dark, but that each member of the Church may have the light and inspiration and testimony of the Holy Spirit. Every member of the Church, according to my view, is entitled to an evidence of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph, and it is within his reach to have a testimony relative to the Apostles and Prophets that direct the affairs of the Church now. Not that it is our right or prerogative to have revelation directing the affairs of the Church; but we may have the revelations of the Spirit of God for ourselves, that we may be firm and stand upon the rock, that when the winds come and the storms rage we may not be moved. We have seen occasionally unfortunate people that presumed to have revelations to direct other people. We have seen men rise up in the midst of the people, having a feeling that they were important ones and had a right, in some instances, to direct the affairs of the Church. Sensible and thinking people will look upon that class with pity. The Lord has His work organized. He has His servants appointed to labor in the various callings of the Priesthood, and He has given minute directions how and upon whom the Priesthood shall be conferred. All the quorums have their presidencies, and the Lord has given these things in detail. I have thought sometimes that, as Stakes and Wards, we did not give this matter the consideration that was necessary. There are young men who have been born and reared in the Church, and of goodly parents, who seemingly have been neglected with regard to the callings in the Priesthood. I believe that the Lord designed that the brethren should come up in their regular order in the ordinations of the Priesthood; first, deacons; secondly, teachers; thirdly, priests; fourthly, Elders, and so on.

"Wherefore, from deacon to teacher, and from teacher to priest, and from priest to elder, severally as they are appointed, according to the covenants and commandments of the church." Doc. & Cov., Sec. 107, 63 verse.

We have found sometimes young men coming into the Temple to receive their blessings who have never been ordained to the office of a Deacon and have never had any experience in the callings of the Lesser Priesthood, and of necessity they then have to be ordained Elders. I believe if this were properly considered by the Stakes and Wards in Zion, these young men would be brought into the quorums of the Lesser Priesthood in their youth; and as a rule they are willing, if there is some one to look after them and give them a little experience in their callings. We should give more attention to this, that our young men may grow up and become valiant in the testimony of the work of God. We read in the Book of Mormon of an incident that should be a lesson to us in this connection. The ancient inhabitants of this land at that time had frequent wars, and on one occasion two thousand young men took up arms in defense of their country. They were young men who had been taught, under the direction of their mothers, to believe in God, and they had mighty faith in Him; and when they went to battle they fought with miraculous strength, and so great was their faith in God that not one of them was slain. This faith had sprung up into their hearts as a result of their early training and education. This is a good example for us to follow. As parents, we have anxiety relative to our sons and daughters. We want to see them valiant in the work of God and full of faith. We want to see them willing when called upon to go on a mission to preach the Gospel, and we are very sorry if we hear them make any excuse. This being the case, it is important that we should consider the condition and circumstances of our children while they are under our care.

When they go from us, we lose more or less of our influence over them; but while they are with us we should endeavor to teach them all along the line the principles of the Gospel, here a little and there a little, as their minds are capable of understanding the doctrines of the Church. When we fail to do this relative to our young people, we fail thus far to do our duty, and peradventure we may have sorrow and regret because of our negligence in teaching and instructing as the Lord has directed we should do. The Lord has not been unmindful of this; for He has given us His word that "inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her Stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents." Doc. & Cov., Sec. 68, 25 verse. I know there is a feeling in the midst of our people (how extensive it is I do not know) to let children remain without baptism until they come to years of accountability, when they can choose for themselves. The Lord says this is wrong. God has entrusted these children to us, and we are supposed to exercise control or jurisdiction over them and to teach them in all the ways of the Lord. I have frequently heard remarks of this kind, and I have thought that such parents have yet failed to receive the testimony of the Spirit of God relative to the divinity of this work, because if we have this testimony in our hearts, then oh! the anxiety we have that our offspring may be honorable men and women in the Church of Christ. I believe we are held responsible to a degree in regard to the training and educating the young people. I believe in some cases we are willing that they should go to excesses in amusements. We let them go to the extreme in many things that are not pleasant in the sight of the Lord.

Nowadays there seems to be a mania among the people for card-playing. We often see in the newspapers that So-and-So had a nice card party, and they tell of the different games played. Now, I do not know really that there is any particular wrong in a game of cards. I am not a judge in this matter, because I have never yet learned to distinguish one card from another. I am quite ignorant to talk about cards when I do not know anything about them, am I not? But I have had some experience in considering this matter and studying the results of this social game of card playing. Perhaps it is not in the game itself, but in the fascination that results from it. People become fascinated with the game. I have known in my experience where young people would wake up in the night and get out of bed to have a game of cards. I believe that it leads to evil, and I do not think it a good thing for our people to indulge in to the excess that it has been and is being indulged in throughout the Church at the present time. We ought to exercise our judgment and consider the welfare of our children; for because of this some have turned out to be gamblers. We would not have to go far to find such cases. They have lost their faith, as well as their money, and many have died in disgrace. I am not prepared, my brethren and sisters, to condemn this amusement in toto; but I say where it goes to excess it is a bad thing. Where people sit up to unusual hours in the night to indulge in these games, I tell you it is a bad thing, because the wine and the beer have to be brought forward, that the players may be stimulated to continue the game, and whenever that occurs you may set it down that it is wrong. I believe we can run to excess in these amusements that the Lord has kindly permitted us to indulge in. We can go to excess in round dancing, for instance. It is all right and proper for people to have social gatherings and amusements; but let us see to it, my brethren and sisters, that we do not go to excess in these things. When we do, we grieve the Spirit of the Lord, and it will take its departure, "and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the Priesthood or the authority of that man. Behold, ere he is aware, he is left unto himself, to kick against the pricks; to persecute the Saints, and to fight against God."—Doctrine and Covenants, Section 121 and verses 37 and 38.

We should be considerate in these matters and look well after the welfare and the proper training of our children, because we want to see them honorable men and women in the earth. Our hearts are swelled with joy when they go abroad to preach the Gospel and they write back and tell how prosperous they are and how the Lord has listened to their prayers. What a joy it brings to the soul of the father and mother and kindred! We ought to have an anxiety in this direction. Instead of feeling, when our sons are called to go abroad, "Oh! I don't know where to raise the means, now how to send him," we ought to feel like making every effort to send our sons agreeable to the commandments of the Lord. I believe the great majority of the people do feel this way.

The Lord has called us to build up Zion and to establish His kingdom. He has called us to labor in the ministry. He did not call us here to aggrandize ourselves. Here we have veterans before us that have labored a lifetime to build up Zion. They have gone on missions, without food or raiment being left for their families; but God has sustained them. They have not labored for the wealth of this world; but they have labored for the salvation of the souls of men. Now God is honoring them; He is lifting them up before the Saints and the world, and giving them blessing and glory, and eventually will give them eternal lives. And this will be the case if we labor with all our might to sustain Zion and the work of God. I hope this may be our lot, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

THE WORKING IS SPREADING.

The following letter to Elder Joseph Hall, of Ogden, from Elder Thomas L. Cox, who is laboring among the Europeans in the New Zealand mission, will be read with much interest. It shows that the DESERET NEWS has done much good in that distant section:

MILTON, Otago, New Zealand, April 12, 1894.—I have recently received the papers—DESERET NEWS—you sent and am well pleased to note the prompt attention you gave to the matter of advertising in the NEWS for Sister Elizabeth Casto. I have received a letter from her with one enclosed for her brother, Mr. Daniels, in which she expressed her great pleasure at hearing from her relatives of whom she had known nothing for between forty and fifty years. On receiving the letter from her, I went immediately to the house of her brother with the glad news. I found Mr. Daniels sick in bed, but when I related to him the intelligence I had received and gave him the letter, he could hardly contain himself for joy. He nearly leaped out of his bed with the excitement. The following day he was up, having forgotten his illness, and could be seen around among his friends relating to them the joyful news he had received. This is the fourth incident of the kind wherein I have been the means of rendering assistance to my fellow men, where I was the instrument of bringing together long lost friends and relatives. On my travels I have frequently met people who have relatives in Utah. At our quarters in Milton we are often called upon by people of this kind, and which often leads to conversations on the principles of the Gospel, and which has resulted in adding to the list of our friends.

When we go into a place and locate, it does not take long for us to become widely known. We have a sign painted on cloth, which we tack up over the door of the place where we locate. On it is this inscription in large bold letters: "Latter-day Saints' Headquarters. Meetings held every Wednesday and Sunday; commencing at 7:30 p.m." Thus we soon become extensively known. We do a great deal of traveling in all parts of the country surrounding our headquarters, and hold meetings wherever we go as we get opportunities to do so.

Elder Charles Peterson, who is laboring in this district, has recently returned from a trip through what is known as the Tivist country, giving a fair report of his labors in that section of the missionary field. He held a number of meetings on the route, and he feels that much good can be done in that section by active missionary labor. A good feeling was extended towards him by all with whom he came in contact. In stopping in a town called Roxburgh he made the acquaintance of an old gentleman called "Captain John Russell," who gave a very interesting history of himself. He said he had been a member of the Church shortly after its first organization. He said he had heard Joseph Smith preach many times. He said also that he was with the saints when they were en route for the Rocky Mountains, and were overtaken at Council Bluffs by Captain Allen, who made the call for five hundred men from the camp of the Saints. He said he became a member of the Mormon Battalion and marched to California with them. He did not go back to the Saints when the battalion was discharged, but became a traveler in the world. He had been engaged in many occupations, among others that of the slave trade. He is now a merchant. His mind has become dark concerning the Gospel, but still he says if there is any truth on earth the Mormons have it.

Elder Peterson also gives a romantic description of the scenery and facilities of that country. It is mostly noted for its extensive gold fields. Many princely fortunes have been washed out of the earth in those places and carried away. The principal work is carried on by hydraulic power. By that process mountains are being removed from their natural position, and the gold contained in the dirt is separated. There are hundreds of men engaged in the business on a small scale, washing the dirt by hand, using for the purpose a pan that holds about two gallons, and it is presumed the miners are netting fair wages. The Chinaman has also found his way to those places and is coining cash out of the leavings of his white brethren. That section of country is also noted for its excellent farming facilities—the climate being more favorable than in other parts. It is both warmer and drier. Fruit raising there is also a great success. All the larger towns of Otago are supplied from there.

But what we value more than the natural productions of the place is the disposition of the people towards us. It seems that wherever we go the good feeling that is extended towards us is uniform and universal; and from what I hear the same disposition is manifested towards the Elders throughout the world. It would seem that the time has fully come for us to thrust in our sickle and reap—to labor with our might to bring the people to the knowledge of the Gospel. I have been acquainted with the missionary labors and have been intrusted with them ever since the Gospel was first preached in New Zealand. About eight years ago the European labors were discontinued on account of the bitter feelings that prevailed against the Mormon people, and the Elders were unable to accomplish anything. The work was then directed to the conversion of the Maoris. But things have now taken another change. The European labor is beginning to be resumed. I was the first Elder that was assigned to recommence the work, and I was sent down onto the island to direct the labors of the ministry here, about one year and seven months ago. I can say that the work of the Lord is progressing favorably. We have preached the Gospel to thousands, and I feel with good results. We have been the subject of comment by the newspapers. Some of them have spoken fairly of us, and some have not; but I am surprised to know that some of the ministers of various denominations have spoken well of us.

We are now nearing the New Zealand winter again when the cold, chilly rains will descend almost unceasingly for several months. The summer has been very changeable. We sometimes experienced all kinds of weather in the same day. As a rule it is altogether too cold for a person who is used to Utah climate. In the extreme north of New Zealand it is warmer; but even there people can stand it to wear good, heavy clothing the year round. I would advise the Elders who are coming to labor here to secure good, heavy clothing. Woolen underwear is much preferable to light wear.

The annual conference of New Zealand is now over, but none of us were present, as we were from six hundred to seven hundred miles from where it was held, and our means are very limited. Our health is fairly good at present, although I have suffered much pain in my back from the effects of exposure to bad weather, etc. Still I have enjoyed my labors so far, and I have seen the blessings pronounced upon my head literally fulfilled. It is my greatest desire to fill an honorable mission and be the means of doing much good while I am here. I feel that more good could be accomplished if we could have some tracts furnished us, which would give us access to many that we cannot get at otherwise.

With kind regards to all I remain,
Your brother in Christ,
THOMAS L. COX.

ON DESERT AND MOUNTAIN.

On the 19th of November, 1846, the Mormon battalion, marched twenty-three miles and camped by a swamp. The water we had to use emitted a bad smell and was very unpleasant to the taste. As we were nearing camp one of my messmates, Jesse B. Martin, slipped out of ranks and shot a fine antelope and brought to camp; it was a treat for our mess, though it was a risky piece of business for Brother Martin, for orders were that not a soldier leave ranks without permission. The whole country seemed to be alive with herds of antelope. It was trying to half starved men not to disobey orders. On the 20th camp did not move the guides had been ahead and they reported there was no water except at one place and after that, it was their opinion, no more water could be had before reaching the Gila river, one hundred miles distant. The guides had never been through this part of the country, but had traveled across the country north and south of our trail and knew if a pass could be found leading over the mountains to the Gila it would save a great many marches. This was what the colonel wanted. He at once called the officers of the Battalion together and it was decided to march south through Mexican settlements where the guides said food and fresh teams could be had.

It was said we were then in the province of Chihuahua, and to pass through the country where the enemy was stationed without meeting with an engagement appeared to many improbable. This idea was so strong in the mind of Father Pettigrew and Levi W. Hancock that they visited every mess in camp, requesting the brethren before lying down for the night to ask the Lord to direct our course for the best. These men had been appointed by President Young to counsel, advise and to act as fathers to the boys of the battalion, and they did it most faithfully. The next morning by 9 o'clock we were on the march, the colonel at the head of the command, on his white mule. We had not proceeded far when he suddenly called a halt, looking first in one direction and then in another. Suddenly he turned square to the right and swore he was not going all around the world to get to California, adding that his orders were for him to go to California and he was going there or "die in the attempt." The course of march was changed, and feelings of relief and thanks to God, I believe, were in every soldier's heart. Their prayers were answered.

That night we camped without water. The next morning the camp was busy watering the animals until 11 o'clock, having to drive them two miles and a half to water that had been found by the guides the previous evening after we had made camp. Filling our canteens we marched eighteen or twenty miles and again camped without water. Before reaching camp I became sick. This was owing to eating fruit that grew on a weed. It had the flavor of dried apples. It also increased thirst. Others who partook of the fruit also complained of a sickly feeling. How disappointed we were when we learned there was no water in camp, and every canteen was empty. The guides were still ahead in search of water.

Near sunset we saw in the distance a smoke, believed to be a signal that water was found. Early next morning we were on the march and by 1 p. m. arrived at where the smoke was, and there was water, but not one-tenth enough for the men. Orders were given to continue our march ten miles to where it was said water was plentiful, but instead of ten miles it was thirteen or more. The ox teams were still behind. Orders were left for them to camp here. Water was so scarce that I failed to get a drop. Only a few of the men got any to moisten their parched lips. I was told there was a nice hole of water, but the colonel and staff rode up and let their mules drink it. It was after night when the front rank reached the water, on the west side of a dry lake.

I remember how provoking it was that day, for there appeared to be a lake of water only a short distance ahead, but we could never gain on it, as it kept the same distance off. It was a mirage. That day's march was a time of suffering. Men and teams gave out, and were all hours of the night coming into camp. The following day we laid by to await the arrival of the ox teams. At this encampment we met a party of Mexicans who had been out trading with Indians. The colonel purchased a few mules and some of the messes bought dried meats. Owing to it being so fat and oily it was believed to be horse flesh, but we ate it with a gusto all the same. The next day we made 18 or 20 miles in a south-westerly direction, over a rough road; much of it we had to make crossing as we believed the back bone of North America.

On the 27th men began to lag, slip out of the ranks and lie down to sleep until overtaken by the rear guard and brought to camp. Game was plentiful—herds of antelope and black tailed deer in all directions. The meat of the black tailed deer is not so sweet as that of the antelope, though it is good game and more easily approached, I think, than either the antelope or the Virginia deer. On the 28th the colonel sent for an Indian to learn if there was a pass leading through or over the mountain. Late in the evening the guide brought in a chief of the Apache nation who said there was a trail or pass through which pack animals only could go. The next day the colonel ordered the loads taken out of the wagons and placed on pack mules to be sent over the mountain. I was detailed to lead a pack mule, but feeling so unwell, one of my messmates went in my place. At dusk the packers returned, reporting the road bad and the distance about ten miles.

By 9 o'clock next morning the battalion was on the march with pack animals and empty wagons. In descending, the wagons were let down over ledges and steep places by men holding on to long ropes attached to the wagons. One got loose and rolled down the mountain with such force as to completely demolish it.

On the 2nd of December we marched nine miles and camped by the ruins of some old Spanish buildings, where we were visited by Apache Indians, who had baked mescal roots to sell. These were sweet and nutritious, and the boys were very fond of them.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCES.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 31, 1894.

On Wednesday, May 9th, J. W. Summerhays and T. C. Griggs, by appointment, left Salt Lake City on the U. P. train to attend the above meetings. Arriving at Milford, 22½ miles, at 7:15, and finding no conveyance for their further advance, they "put up" at the "Hotel de Shanty" with "mosquito bar walls." Next morning, there being no alternative, they took the stage via Beaver to Cedar City, the latter place being reached on the early morning of Friday, May 11th, much of the journey being on a melancholy buckboard crowded with five persons and the U. S. mail, enlivened by a halt from midnight to 2 a. m. while the driver engaged in the dance at Parowan. No one at Cedar knowing of any conveyance being provided or us we engaged passage, a la buckboard, for St. George, into which place we rode at 7 p. m. and were most hospitably received by Stake S. S. Superintendent Richard Morris, wife and two daughters, although the Vermillion dust of "Dixie" gave us the appearance of being two noble red men. Soap, water, combs, brushes, towels, etc., helped our host to identify us as belonging to the "pale faced" race. Superintendent Morris soon proved himself to be a man of extended and special experience and not wanting in conversational powers. No arrangements having been made for conference meetings on Saturday, which was a disappointment to us, we spent the day in visiting friends and forming acquaintances, and particularly enjoyed a visit to the St. George Temple in the company of President David H. Cannon and Recorder James G. Bleak.

The conference convened on Sunday at 10 a. m., in the commodious Tabernacle and the exercises by the primary first and second intermediate departments under the direction of their most excellent and gifted teachers, together with their addresses on their class work, were an able exposition of the advantages of the graded system in our Sunday schools. Brother Snow, Teacher of the higher department, was no less happy in his intelligent explanation of the work being done in his department.

2 p. m. Sacrament was administered, statistical report read, and verbal reports by the Stake superintendent and the superintendent of the Panacea, Nevada, Sunday school were given, the latter having traveled 110 miles by team to be present. Sunday school missionary Elder George Spillsbury evidenced in his report also that he was an energetic Sunday school laborer. Remarks were also made by the visiting brethren.

A special meeting of the officers and teachers was then held, with a most excellent spirit of inquiry and instruction predominating.

At 8 p. m. Stake Sunday School Normal. George Miles and Superintendent Johnson made earnest reports of their labors, followed by President McArthur and the visiting brethren, thus concluding a most enjoyable occasion.

The schools of the Stake were well represented by their officers, save that of Washington, which was unrepresented.

On Wednesday, May 16, at 4 p. m., Elders Summerhays and Griggs "backboarded" it to Cedar City. Elder Summerhays, having been called home by several urgent telegrams, continued on, leaving Elder Griggs sad and forlorn. This condition was mitigated by the generous hospitality of Pres. Uriah T. Jones, Supt. J. F. Wilkinson, Stake Supt. Jos. H. Armstrong, Bishop Correy and Conductor Jos. Cosslett. Conference meetings were held in the spacious tabernacle at Cedar on Saturday and Sunday morning and afternoon, those of Sunday being particularly well attended. The reports made by the superintendency, stake and local, manifested their zeal and interest, and the absence of representatives from the large and important school at Parowan occasioned regret. A desire for instruction in S. S. work and management was conspicuous by the officers and teachers and made, by the help of the Lord, the labors of Elder Griggs quite pleasant. Supt. Armstrong possesses the esteem and confidence of his associates, while Superintendent Wilkinson has prepared a plat of Cedar City, showing the residence of every family and those attending and those not attending Sunday school; this map is a valuable adjunct to the S. S. visiting book.

The musical exercises by the singers of St. George and Cedar added much to the interest of the conferences; while the presence and courtesy of the presiding Priesthood and Bishops and leading men of the two Stakes afforded support and encouragement very grateful to those who are laboring in the Sunday school cause.

On Monday, May 21st, Superintendent Armstrong kindly conveyed Elder Griggs to Milford, where we were both entertained with kind and hearty welcome by Supt. J. C. Madsen of that place and held a Sunday school meeting in their creditable meeting house. Brother Madsen's perseverance and "push" have had much to do with the maintenance of the Milford Sunday school, and his labors are ably seconded by several other brethren and sisters. The aid of the Holy Spirit is cheerfully acknowledged in these labors, and a sense of gratitude for the kindness of the Saints with whom we met.

Truly yours in the Gospel covenant,
T. C. GRIGGS,
J. W. SUMMERHAYS.

ZION'S SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

For the benefit and encouragement of those who are interested in the Sunday schools of Zion the following brief report is penned. On Saturday morning, May 28th, Elder George Reynolds and myself left home per rail, to attend the first annual Sunday school conference in Tooele Stake, which was appointed for Saturday and Sunday, May 28th and 27th. We arrived there in time for the morning meeting, and were pleased to find our esteemed friend Elder F. M. Lyman, one of the members of the Deseret Sunday School Union Board, present, who, by the way, was also present at all our meetings during the two days. We held three conference meetings on Saturday and two on Sunday, besides one with the Stake presidency and the superintendency of the Stake Sunday schools, also with the teachers and officers of the various schools that were present, and a Seventies' meeting.

During the five meetings we had some interesting class and other exercises by the children, illustrative of the methods of imparting instruction adopted by the teachers in their various departments. We also had brief reports by the superintendents of the Stake and local schools from Tooele, Grantsville, ET City, Batesville, St. Johns and Clover. Also remarks by President Gowans and Counselor Rich, the Bishops and visiting brethren, interspersed by occasional songs from the children and choir, under the leadership of our old musical friend, Ebenezer Beezley, whose talent and labors are much appreciated by the good Saints of Tooele. Owing to the existence of scarlet fever in several families in Grantsville, many children, teachers and others were prevented from being present at the conference in Tooele (the local authorities deeming it wisdom to stop all public gatherings for the time being). This was a grievous disappointment to them. Stake Superintendent Johnson, his assistant Bro. Anderson, and Bro. Ratoliff being nearly the only representatives from Grantsville.

It was suggested that George Reynolds and myself hold a Sunday night's meeting in Grantsville in response to the wishes and feelings of the Saints, and two of the above named brethren were deputed to go and apprise the Bishop of Grantsville of the fact and request him to have the notice given out at the close of the afternoon meeting, which was at that time expected to be held; but on our arrival we learned that on Sunday morning word reached the Bishop that it would be unwise to hold an afternoon meeting and consequently our evening meeting had to be suspended also. Had we learned this fact sooner we should have had another meeting in Tooele, but not knowing it until our arrival in Grantsville, we acknowledged the hand of the Lord, and remained under the hospitable roof of our friend Anderson, whose house was soon crowded with friends (mostly singers) as a partial compensation for our disappointment in not having a public meeting. The songs of Zion were sung and remarks made for mutual benefit, until time admonished us to retire, after singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," etc., and benediction. During our short stay in Tooele we were the welcomed guests of our old friend, now superintendent of Tooele Sunday school, George Atkins. We visited the cemetery on the bench, and were delighted to see so many flowers adorn the graves of the departed, also the nice walks and absence of weeds around them.

We were next taken to the water works or tank, the like of which is nowhere to be found in Utah. One mile distant in the canyon is a large spring of beautiful clear water, and through a six-inch iron pipe this water is conveyed into a tank blasted out of solid rock, 40 feet long, 25 feet wide and 15 feet deep, nicely cemented. This water from the tank has a fall of 270 feet to Tooele city, which place has a population of about 1,000 inhabitants. Nearly 100 families avail themselves of its use for domestic purposes at the moderate cost of $7.50 per annum. The water in the tank is protected by a substantial wooden structure with a first class shingle roof. The entire cost of the water works was $20,000. Pure water, free from sediment, never failing in its supply the year round, cool in summer and pleasant in winter. The citizens who use it are much indebted thereto for the general good health in Tooele. This elevated bench affords a delightful view of the country for many miles, and the most extensive view of the Salt Lake that can be found anywhere. We were next driven to the district school building which has cost $20,000, $15,000 of which will be paid up this year, leaving only the bonded sum of $5,000 as indebtedness upon it. The building for solidity in material and beauty in architecture is not excelled, if equaled, by any schoolhouse in Utah, reflecting great credit on the architect. Before leaving Grantsville this morning we paid a visit to the Latter-day Saint Academy building, which cost $15,000, and all paid for except the small amount of $700, and that by the voluntary donations of the Saints. This fact affords a striking index to the value the Saints of Grantsville place on the religious and intellectual education of their children. Reaching home in safety at 5 o'clock p. m., and praying that God our heavenly Father will bless our instructions to the children, teachers and parents.

AFTER FRUIT TREE PESTS.

On the subjects of horticulture and agriculture we would like to say to fruit growers and fruit sprayers, be careful. We think all should honor the law which was passed by the late Legislature for the benefit of the fruit industry. We also believe that all fair-minded people will agree with us when we assert that, crude and imperfect as this law is, it is a step in the right direction.

Aside from carelessness or neglectfulness, is there any reason why Utah should not come to the front once more as a fruit producer? All that is necessary to attain the desired end is wise and judicious work on the part of the people. The trouble at present is to get the people to do this. They should be persuaded to investigate this matter thoroughly, so as to be able to recognize truth from error and reason from obscurity.

For instance, on spraying we hear of some of the most absurd, not to say ridiculous, theories advanced and some of the people are induced to accept them. Some say that the only proper time to spray trees is when they are in bloom, which is when the moth lays her eggs. In reality there is no fruit and scarcely any codling moth at that time. Even at this date, May 29, the moths are not out in large quantities; there are only a few that have hatched out from around chimneys and other warm places. They put in the most of their destructive work in June and the fore part of July.

Some people have been spraying in this city nearly three weeks, killing the bees and trying to wash the pollen off and thus destroy the fruit and break the law. They tell us that the moth deposits its eggs in the blossoms and the eggs lay dormant till the fruit grows over them.

Now when we have a conflict of opinion what should we accept—absurd stories or the evidence of scientific men who have been employed by the government for the general benefit of the country after many experiments and much research? These tell us, among many other things, that the codling moths do not lay their eggs in the blossoms. They puncture the skin of the fruit, deposit their eggs and glue them on.

Again, one man tells us that he believes that the bees are the cause of the codling moth, and if it came to a question whether he must lose the bees or his fruit he would prefer to lose the bees. Another one living in the same locality says he knows the bees are responsible, for last year he watched them bees lay their eggs under the bark of the trees and that he watched the development of those eggs with a microscope and they hatched out codling moths and other insects!

Others accuse the silk-worm moth of being the cause of all the trouble, but as they never stray off it can not be them. Nor is it possible for it to be the bees when there is only one bee in each hive that lays eggs, namely the queen, and she always lays them at home, where they can be well taken care of. It did seem strange that any sensible man would say that the offspring of bees were codling moth, but this was done. But if there are any living things that produce other than their kind as a progeny they certainly are undiscovered. That each living thing produces of its kind is a universal, natural law.

We would prefer not to print these ideas but for the fact that some people believe the absurdities and this is our excuse.

Now in regard to spraying. We have received letters asking for information and also stating what they are doing in other parts of the Territory. In some places they are doing some good work and in others they are not. In one place, south, the trees were sprayed while in bloom and there were killed twenty-eight hives of bees. This thing must be stopped or surely people will get into trouble. Nearly all intelligent horticulturists recognize the fact that the little busy bee is his best friend and without his aid we would not long have good fruit and seed. Then why try to injure the bees and yourselves at the same time?

Spraying fruit trees is simple and can be made effective if the people will use judgment. The mixture should be thoroughly mixed and be kept agitated so as not to throw the water off the top of the barrel and then throw the thickened part out at the bottom. This has been done, and has a tendency to bring the whole business into disrepute. We would urge the people not to do this, not only for the sake of the bees but for themselves and others who use vegetables which may have been sprayed and then thoroughly washed.

With proper care and attention and at a nominal expense not only the codling moth, but all the fruit and fruit tree pests that are working on and injuring the trees can be kept down. Some of those are very injurious. Among the worst are the San Jose scale and the woolly aphis. These insects are very destructive to trees and as they are getting very numerous fruit-growers should doctor them at once and save their trees before it is too late. The scales are very small and not easy to detect, but the result of their work, the withered bark and the dead wood, is easy to be seen.

LOVESEY & STAY.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 29th, 1894.

PRIESTHOOD MEETING.

The Salt Lake Stake Priesthood meeting was held in the Assembly Hall June 2, commencing at 11 a. m. Elder Angus M. Cannon, stake president, conducted the exercises. The speakers were Elders Andrew Jensen, Angus M. Cannon, Charles W. Penrose, Samuel W. Richards and Joseph E. Taylor.

After the usual opening exercises the roll was called, showing the following in attendance: One High Councillor, four Patriarchs, Counselors George B. Wallace and William C. Dunbar, of the Presidency of the High Priests' quorum, ten presidents and twelve home missionaries. All the wards of the Stake were properly represented excepting the Second, Tenth, Twelfth, Fifteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-first, city wards, and Sugar House, of the county.

The First, Second, Third, Fifth, Twelfth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-first quorum of Elders were represented by their presiding officers. Richard S. Horne, assistant Stake superintendent of the Sabbath schools, also responded to the roll call.

Elder Jensen spoke of the incompleteness of the records of many of the wards and stakes, and stated that a call is about to be made upon this stake to furnish to the Church historian complete records of its different wards and associations. Action was taken toward appointing visits to the various wards for the purpose of making up these records.

Elders Penrose, Richards and Taylor touched upon the necessity of per, forming the full duties of the Sabbath and especially of attending the regular ward Sacrament meetings. While encouraging the work of the Sunday school to the fullest extent, he felt that those who are engaged in this work should make it a point to attend the regular ward meetings.

Other subjects treated were: The necessity of the parents supplementing the instructions of the Sunday school teachers to the children; the need of overcoming the tendency toward a lack of respect for the authority of the Priesthood, this tendency being caused frequently by criticism upon the counsels of the Priesthood by parents in the presence of their children; the requirement that fully and correct statistical reports from the various wards of the Stake be furnished twice a year; the importance of having the principles and ordinances of the Church attended to for children as they grow up, records being kept of these things in the family as well as in the ward; the need of officers in the Priesthood giving full time and attention to their public duties; the need of proper consultation by these officers with counselors and assistants with respect to important duties; the importance of consistency of action with profession; the need of keeping proper supervision over children during the formative period of life.

A BIT OF TESTIMONY.

PIMA, Ariz., May 14, 1894.—Some months before the death of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, I remember hearing him say he rolled the burden of carrying the Kingdom or Church of Jesus Christ forward on to the Apostles. The Church was organized, fully equipped with all needful authority, to go forth to the nations of the earth; it mattered not what became of him, whether he went or stayed, the Church was right. I presume there are many persons living heard the same. This is the substance as I remember on this point given before an audience in Nauvoo.

I also remember when Sidney Rigdon was trying to install himself as guardian of the Church in the summer of 1844, President Young stepped upon the stand at a meeting and seeming to bear upon him the mantle of Joseph the Prophet. Had there been any doubt as to Joseph's death I would have been sure it was he speaking to the people.

I am glad and thankful for this knowledge. It is precious in these times of lo, here, and lo, there! I have been a constant member in the Church of Jesus Christ since September, 1839, and desire to continue the remainder of my time and throughout eternity with all the honest.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

RELIGIOUS DEBATES.

The counsel given by the First Presidency regarding debates upon the doctrines and the validity of the authority of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will be recognized by all who have testimony of the truth as timely in view of the circumstances stated. Therein is the expression of a policy which the Church of Christ has pursued steadfastly in ancient as well as in modern times, and it cannot be consistently departed from by those who esteem and honor the Lord as the arbiter in matters that relate to His plan of salvation. As to challenges for debate, it is a common occurrence for individuals or parties who break away from organizations of various kinds to seek to gain notoriety and prestige by contentious discussions with representatives of established institutions in order to be brought into prominence thereby. In pursuing this course they are not liable to loss, because they have nothing to lose; while the possible advantage to them is that by cunning and adroitness in debate they may be advertised as worthy foemen to those to whom they have become apostate, and thus find means of directing general attention to themselves and gaining something at the expense of others.

There may be questions which are of such slight intrinsic importance that debate thereon excites no more than temporary personal antagonism between the parties thereto—a feature regarded with concern by those who desire to avoid contention and promulgate principles of peace. But when it comes to discussing religious matters in that fashion a more serious phase is presented. Religion reaches all that relates to mankind, past, present and future, and agitation thereon stirs the soul to its inmost depths. Such agitation, therefore, as is in harmony with the divine will is that only which produces peace, harmony and brotherly love. That which yields fruit of an opposite nature is contrary to the spirit and genius of the Gospel of Christ. Not being confined to the temporalities of mortal life, true religion overshadows and absorbs all other topics that concern man, and its purity and power transcend all other considerations in time and eternity. Viewed from this standpoint it is to thoughtful, considerate, devotional people a matter far too sacred to be treated as a football whose fortunes and destiny are to be determined by the player who can kick with greatest force or deliver the most cleverly directed blow.

The principles of the Gospel and authority in the Church of Christ are of such grave importance to mankind that self-interest demands for them the most careful scrutiny and inquiry, even to the extent that they be required to present to the believer the highest evidence of divine authenticity—that of direct testimony from the Almighty. But debate is not inquiry; contentious discussion is not investigation; submitting the conclusions of an argumentative contest to the decision of a board of finite judges is not obtaining a divine and infinite witness of the right. Thrilling eloquence, impassioned oratory or subtle argument never made of the wrong a right; nor does their absence make of a single truth an error. The relative positions of good and evil are not altered by the forensic ability of advocates; and the immutable plan of salvation and divine authority to act therein are unchanged by the prejudices or scholarship of men. The spirit of inquiry, of investigation, of searching for light and knowledge, and of expounding and proclaiming the principles of truth and persuading and leading men and women thereto, is of God. The disposition to court contentious, and sometimes angry, discussion, to challenge to debate wherein not the vindication of truth but the triumph of one or other of the contending parties in the argument is the only object sought or which can be attained, is an inspiration of the evil one, and finds no approval in the Gospel plan or the genius of Christianity. Such a proceeding being in its very nature an assault upon others, its inception is in a desire, not to convince people of the truth, but to bring supposed antagonists into contumely or subjection by a measure of force, and therefore is but a modification of that spirit which, under the guise of religion, so often has lit the fires of persecutions and has filled many a martyr's tomb.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized in this dispensation by direct command of the Almighty, given through the Prophet Joseph Smith. It was set up by the God of heaven, "shall never be destroyed," and "shall not be left to other people." Its Apostles, like the Apostles of old, were chosen of the Lord and ordained, that they "should go and bring forth fruit," and that their "fruit should remain." Of its Council of Apostles the Lord said, in a revelation given through the Prophet Joseph Smith, at Nauvoo, January 19, 1841, "I give unto you my servant Brigham Young, to be a President over the Twelve traveling Council, which Twelve hold the keys to open up the authority of my kingdom upon the four corners of the earth, and after that to send my word to every creature." President Wilford Woodruff was a member of the Council at that time. The keys of the authority spoken of yet remain with and are exercised by the Council of Apostles.

The Lord made no blunder in organizing the Church. His work was not done so badly that a few years later a "reorganization" had to be effected by men, and least of all by apostates and seceders from the true fold, in order to get the work right. The originally organized Church—"the only true and living Church upon the face of the whole earth"—still exists and prospers, and will continue to do so. There is no question with its officers or members as to the validity of its authority. This was one reason why, in the contest for the Temple lot in Jackson county, the Church took no part, being content to await the due time of the Lord for the restoration of that property to its rightful ownership. The authorities were not in the business of submitting any inquiry as to the genuineness of the Church to a human court, especially one presided over by a Missouri judge. A higher Judge already had passed upon that question. It is beyond the domain of human adjudication. The certificated judgment is in the situation and condition of the Latter-day Saints whose present abiding places in the valleys of the Rocky Mountains. They alone are fulfilling the destiny marked out for the Church in the prophetic declarations of President Joseph Smith, its martyred Prophet, in laboring according to the revealed Gospel plan for the salvation of the living and the redemption of the dead. Regarding the movements of the Saints, one of his predictions, made during a visit to Montrose, Iowa, and recorded in his journal of August 6, 1842, reads as follows:

"I had a conversation with a number of the brethren in the shade of the building on the subject of our persecutions in Missouri, and the constant annoyance which has followed us since we were driven from that state. I prophesied that the Saints would continue to suffer much affliction and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains, many would apostatize, others would be put to death by their persecutors, or lose their lives in consequence of exposure and disease, and some of you will live to go and assist in making settlements and build cities and see the Saints become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains."

Occasionally Elders have been pressed closely by challenges to debate, and have felt that they should accept such challenges lest by declining they bring discredit on the cause they represent. If a case occurs that really is of such importance as that, it is of sufficient importance to refer to the presiding authorities for instructions what to do, and the inspiration of the Lord will indicate the procedure to be followed. But on no account should an Elder be the challenging party. Nor should he consent to submit the validity of Church authority to human judgment, or the principles of the Gospel to any other test than that which is given by the Head of the Church, the Lord Jesus, when He said to the Jews, "My doctrine is not mine, but His that sent me. If any man will do His will, he will know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." The Elders of the Church are not called to teach their own will or doctrine, but to deliver the message of peace and salvation which Christ the Lord has given them, and to Him must they look for its vindication and confirmation.

PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG.

The early dawn of the present century witnessed the birth of many noble spirits, endowed with superior intellect and destined to give perpetual form to the events of the age, in accordance with their own genius. Whatever changes and calamities may fail to the experience of the human race, the traces of such men will never be entirely effaced from history. Like the footprints of beings inhabiting the earth in the morning of creation, still plainly seen in the strata and telling the world today something about their life, their struggles—so the deeds of such great men will for ever and ever be traceable in the annals of men. They lived for mankind and their memory is immortal.

Among such great men of the century, the Latter-day Saints will today reverently and affectionately remember President Brigham Young, who was born June 1, 1801, in Whitingham, Windham county, Vermont. His was not a work of leading armies or navies in victorious battles; nor was he called upon to interpret a nation's policy among the subtle diplomats of the earth. His sphere was not drawn among the scientists, nor properly speaking among the explorers. And yet he was all this, and more. As the leader of the oppressed latter-day Israel to the valleys of the mountains he successfully completed a task, comparable only to that of the great law-giver of old. His mission was one of peace, but like David he erected an empire, although without bloodshed; as Solomon, famous for his wisdom, he was entrusted with the building or laying the foundation of one of the most magnificent temples ever erected; in his zeal for the Almighty and the care bestowed upon His people, he was another Ezra; he was, briefly, a Prophet of the Lord, endowed with gifts and graces and entrusted with a mission second to none of the greatest men that ever lived.

One of the Divine attributes is power to comprehend everything. To the Divine mind nothing is small, says a theological writer, because nothing is great, in the same sense as men view things. And if ever man's mind was endowed with some of this divine quality, Brigham Young's was. He was equally at home when discoursing upon the formation of worlds and the laws governing the heavenly orbs above, as when instructing the people about sowing and planting and beautifying their homes; the mysteries of creation, life and the resurrection were fathomed by his master-mind to wonderful depths; he knew how to command the respect of all and yet was tenderly loved as few; he was the "Lion of the Lord," terrible as thunder when aroused in defense of truth, and yet the friend and father of the innocent child and "the brain, the eye, the ear, the mouth and hand for the entire people of the Church."

It cannot be expected that the world at large will be able as yet to view the work of Brigham Young in its true light. Like all the great men in every century, he will be better understood and better appreciated by coming generations. And yet, if we mistake not the signs of the time, the indications prove that before long the fruits of the life of that man will be the salvation of many. In the present time of unrest, when convulsions shake the foundations of society, foreshadowing the formation of a new order of things, the great question will demand an answer, how the social problems are to be solved, and by whom? The solution cannot be left to chance. The old status seems inadequate to the new developments, and the modern ideas of socialism, nationalism, etc., seem to offer no guarantee of better success than the reigning system of individualism. In the struggle for a new social structure the doctrines laid down by the "Mormon Prophet" will ultimately be tested and found to offer the only practical and sufficient remedy for all evils. In the inauguration of a universal brotherhood, directed by men influenced by the Divine Spirit, is clearly the remedy needed. That is what the world unconsciously is demanding today. People feel the burdens of life without knowing how to make them easier. They demand something, they hardly know what. They even experiment and fail. But after a while it will dawn upon the world that the remedy so eagerly sought for has been offered for a long while by devoted servants of the Almighty. And the time will come when the world shall see and understand and gratefully receive.

The remedy is not the invention of President Young, nor of Joseph the Prophet. It is God's own doctrine, revealed through those men and expounded by them. It consists of the union of all men into a family under the rules of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the salvation of the world—not only a promise of happiness hereafter, but redemption from poverty, tyranny, suffering in this world too.

The Saints can do no better today than resolve to stand faithfully by the principles communicated by their great leaders, for the world will soon need those principles practically applied, and gratefully receive them. The Temple will be illuminated tonight in honor of the anniversary of President Young's birthday, and as the light fills that Temple, planned by his genius and commenced in sublime faith in God, let every heart be illuminated with the glorious truths for which he lived a true father and friend of the people of God!

CONDITIONAL POSSIBILITIES OF THE GOSPEL.

The atonement wrought out by Jesus Christ applies universally to the human race. "As in Adam all die so in Christ shall all be made alive." The fall brought death into the world, but, through the atonement of the Redeemer, every intelligence who comes into this earthly or probationary state will again receive his body, through the power of the resurrection.

The atonement being the basic redeeming principle of the Gospel, the application of the entire plan must be of the same character; therefore the possibilities of the whole system must be placed within reach of the race as an entirety. In other words "the Gospel must be preached to every creature." The resurrection—the universal effect of the atonement—differs from the possibilities of the Gospel in this: The former is an unconditional effect, while the latter are conditional, their attainment being the result of obedience to the laws and commandments of God.

What is here meant by the possibilities accruing from the Gospel is the degree of exaltation that can be attained by the individual through obedience to its laws. The Prophet Joseph enunciated a philosophical principle when he stated that blessings could only be secured through conforming to the laws upon which they are predicated.

The justice of God demands that the Gospel should be "preached to every creature," as its principles constitute the means of attaining to the various degrees of happiness and glory which resurrected man is destined to enjoy. No man can be consistently accused of neglecting opportunities that were never placed within his reach. Hence the theological and philosophical consistency of thinking religionists who claim that man will have opportunities for salvation beyond the grave—especially those people who have not possessed them in the mortal state. These advanced thinkers are in this regard over half a century behind Joseph Smith and the Church he was instrumental in founding. They are immeasurably further in the rear in the matter of practice. It is held by the Church that the Gospel is being as diligently preached in the spirit world as it is here, to prepare the departed for the resurrection. Perhaps the diligence in this regard in the spirit life is immensely greater, because of the more expanded character of the field of operations for the faithful Elders.

This labor is necessarily co-operative, as there are outward ordinances which the dead cannot perform in their own proper persons, they being out of the body. But this is done vicariously by the living. Christ said, for instance, "except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." The same vicarious principle through which Christ died in our stead operates in the vicarious ordinance work done in the Temples erected by the Latter-day Saints for and in behalf of the dead.

This glorious labor grows apace. The spirit of it rests upon the Church, as the hearts of the children are turned to the fathers, while the latter are turned longingly toward their posterity in delightful reciprocity of sentiment. The Salt Lake Temple completed its first working year on May 22nd. The companies of Saints who have labored there have been uniformly large. Occasionally they have been so numerous as to almost run beyond the capacity of that sacred building. The baptisms for the dead, to which one day in each week is devoted, aggregate 40,499. Endowments, (living), 1,617; (for the dead), 28,207. Ordinations to the Priesthood, 9,012—all for the dead except 10. Sealings (marriages) of wives to husbands, (living), 696; dead, 6,298. Sealings of children to parents (living), 1,631; dead, 1,995. Numerous other ordinances have been performed, the great bulk of the labor being vicarious—on behalf of the deceased kindred of the Saints. The few foregoing figures are merely presented to give the Saints an idea of the great work of salvation that is being accomplished, that the Church as a whole may know that the spirit of Elijah is resting upon the faithful. Since the teachings given by the First Presidency at the last General Conference, the work of forming a connecting chain between the Saints and their ancestors, so far as they are able to obtain clear and indubitable records, has increased remarkably. It will be observed that many of the Saints, while troubles are multiplying abroad, are electing to stand in holy places that they may not be moved when the day of the Lord shall come.

ONE OF OUR ERRORS.

The transporting of lumber to Oregon or Michigan, of coal to Pennsylvania or Newcastle, of iron to Cedar City, or of salt to Saltair would not be a more foolish and unjustifiable proceeding than is the shipping of fresh and dried and canned fruit into the Territory of Utah. If there is any one thing which more than another has been proven to be within the special reach of, and deserving of special attention from the people of these valleys, it is this very business of fruit growing. The world produces nothing better than has been grown in the Utah orchards; size, flavor, soundness, keeping qualities—everything that contributes to excellence has been developed to remarkable perfection in our home product. And yet we pick at California cherries and pears, munch Oregon apples, smack our lips over Delaware peaches and bathe our cheeks in the luscious coolness of watermelons brought even from Georgia! To round out and put a fitting climax on this policy of nonsense, we ought to eat Minnesota flour, Mexican mutton and Missouri potatoes!

But, says an objector, our fruit has deteriorated and is not able to compete with the imported article. The NEWS submits that the deterioration is quite as much in the grower as in the product; it is he who seems to be afflicted. The soil is as good as ever it was, the water is as plentiful, the air as pure; frosts come no earlier and stay no later than of yore; the sun is as kindly, and the general labor of man is as well-rewarded. Shall we then blame nature for what is clearly a short coming of our own?

It is related of an early resident of Utah, that, traveling one day through a little valley waving with luxuriant grass—said valley having since borne his name—he exclaimed; "At last I see how it is that I am still a poor man it is because I have not had great herds of cattle eating up all this grass!" With far more appropriateness may some of those who now complain of poverty and hard times bring reproof home to themselves in the matter of fruit-growing. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been and are being lost by this community every year because it does not proceed to earn and save them. If when we failed to produce that which we can produce better than any one else, we decided to go without, the fault would be in some measure atoned for by the penalty of deprivation which accompanied it. But we are even without that saving grace; we actually impoverish ourselves and send away our substance to purchase that which we are too neglectful and too improvident to have at home almost for the asking!

The NEWS is bold to say that our policy in this respect has been worse than a blunder, it has been a crime. And to the indictment thus plainly stated, without further multiplying of words or elaborating of argument we shall have to ask each head of a family mentally to stand up and plead, guilty or not guilty. In the case of those who acknowledge their error and will promise to make immediate amends, sentence will be suspended during good behavior. The others will be called up for trial on a subsequent occasion.

RAPIDITY OF FRENCH CHANGE.

The uncertainty of official tenure of a French ministry was never more clearly exhibited than in the recent defeat of Premier Casimir-Perier; surely a more trivial cause on the face of things never overturned even a French cabinet before. The question at issue really related to the rights of labor organizations to be represented in industrial congresses whether the employers of such delegates were willing to give them leave of absence or not; a French statute recognizes the existence of such organizations and is quite explicit in its statement of the prerogatives and privileges of at least such of their members as may be employed by the national government. Accordingly, when the minister of public works ordered the chiefs of state railways, and asked the chiefs of other railway companies, to refuse leave of absence to delegates to a congress of railway employees then about to meet in Paris, a strong protest was raised in the Chamber of Deputies against his disregard and violation of the law referred to. His rejoinder, that he had no desire to neutralize the law, but that the necessities of the service were his motive for the order, failed to answer the clamor of his opponents; and upon the demand of M. Casimir-Perier for the order of the day—the passing over of the subject without further inquiry, debate or review—the government was decisively defeated, and the cabinet resignations promptly followed.

That the ex-premier has presidential aspirations is very well known, and that his chances for election were superior to those of any other candidate has been generally admitted. This rebuke from the Deputies is therefore of much more significance as affecting his candidacy for the chief office in the republic than as a reversal of favor concerning his general governmental policy. For as to the latter, while he has held the premiership only about six months, this is almost as long as his immediate predecessor, M. Dupuy; who in turn was preceded by a minister whose term lasted less than four months. There have been some thirty changes of ministry since the establishment of the third republic, so that the average life of a cabinet is short; and though the last leader may not have reached even the usual average of the term, his is by no means the shortest nor one that is forced to consider itself decisively and permanently brought to a close.

AMERICA, NOT ROME.

The history of the inception and development of the system of irrigation which prevails in western America is a subject in which Utah has more than a passing interest, because of the position her people occupy relative to the introduction of that method in agriculture. In order to be in harmony with the public sentiment and to disseminate correct information, it is necessary that teachers in public educational institutions here should be in possession of the facts when obtainable, and should communicate the same to the students when giving instructions upon this subject, that there may be no misconception of historical events.

In an address given by a student at the closing exercises of a public educational institution the past week, the following passage occurs: "It is to the Romans that we must give the honor of first materially aiding the oldest of arts, irrigation, the foundation of the success of future happiness and prosperity of this great western empire, extending as it does from the hundredth meridian on the east to the Pacific on the west, from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south." While there need be no disposition to deprive Rome, or any of the ancient nations equally entitled thereto, of honor for work accomplished, an intimation that to Rome or to other nations of the Old World belongs the credit for instituting or giving material aid to the irrigation system in vogue here is not in accord with historical fact. The record of opening up irrigation in the West has been frequently published, and therefore should be familiar to all teachers in Utah schools. In a standard work, Whitney's History Utah of, the following account is given:

On the morning of the 23rd [July, 1847], after despatching messengers to the President and informing him of what had been seen and done, the camp removed to the south branch of City Creek, near the Eighth Ward or Washington square, not far from where the the Methodist church and its palatial neighbor the hotel Knutsford now stand. A meeting was there called. Orson Pratt prayed and dedicated the land and camp to the Lord, and he and Willard Richards addressed those assembled. Various committees were then appointed, and preparations at once made for putting in crops. The planting season being virtually past, no time was to be lost if they hoped to reap any results from their labors. Within two hours from the time they arrived on City Creek, ground was broken a short distance from camp—in the very business heart of Salt Lake City—and three plows were kept going the rest of the day. George W. Brown, William Carter and Shadrach Roundy ran the first furrows plowed by white men in Salt Lake Valley. Owing to the extreme dryness of the soil, plowing was at first very difficult, and more than one plowshare was broken in the sun-baked earth. But a dam having been placed in the creek, and the surrounding soil well flooded, the work was rendered comparatively easy. * * * On the morning of the 24th the Pioneers began planting, first putting in their potatoes. Having planted a few acres they turned the waters of the creek upon their little field and gave the soil "a good soaking." This was the beginning of their vast and successful system of irrigation—since famous throughout the civilized world—which has done so much toward redeeming the desert Basin, and making Utah a veritable Eden in the midst of a barren waste.

Two features contributed to the adoption of the plan of irrigating by furrows, which since has been proven to be the most satisfactory and profitable of all known methods. One was that it was the most feasible plan of getting the water, which was by no means overabundant, to the various parts of the field; the other was the experience that flooding the field often had the effect of baking the soil and rendered the growing crop liable to scorching by the heat of the sun. The events and conditions here recorded show conclusively that the irrigation system of the West had its inception in and owes its development to Utah, and Old World nations have no claim to credit therefor. In respect to that system—"the foundation of the success of future happiness and prosperity of this great western empire"—the honor for instituting and developing it belongs, not to Rome, but wholly to America, the home on earth of the earliest as well as the latest civilization.

THE PROBLEM SOLVED.

A subject uppermost in the minds of many at the present time and extensively discussed in the press is, the cause of the inequality existing among men with regard to their temporal circumstances. That some are immensely wealthy while others are comparatively poor, and still others actually suffering for want of the necessities of life, and that this has been the condition as far back in the history of mankind as records go, are stern facts. The tendency of the present generation is to regard it no longer as the unavoidable effect of a natural law—the opinion prevalent in the past among the wealthy, favored few—but as an anomaly, a result of violation of natural laws. Hence an eager desire to find the cause of it and the true remedy.

To a reflective mind it must appear strange that the bounties of nature should be so unequally distributed. Leaving out of consideration altogether the physically disabled, the slaves of their vices and the mentally weak, there still remains a large class to whom life means perpetual toil with but inadequate compensation therefor. Sinbad the Sailor is represented as having met, in his fictitious career, a monster which established itself on his shoulders, compelling him to carry it day and night and driving him with irresistible power from one place to another, until finally by a well conceived strategy he succeeded in ridding himself of the horrible burden. There are millions of such unfortunate beings in the world, carrying on their shoulders the hideous monster of poverty and want, from the cradle to the grave, without ever succeeding in finding the means whereby to throw it off and enjoy independence, but rather leaving it as the only inheritance to their children after them. This seems a great mystery, especially when it is remembered that the resources of the soil, not to mention the food supply of the ocean, are almost inexhaustible, and that the mechanical appliances for the utilization of these resources have steadily increased in number and perfection. One would think that no human being capable and willing to work would be under the necessity of suffering in this age.

Those who have considered the subject have arrived at various conclusions. It is perhaps but natural that the first impulse among the masses should be to lay all the blame on the government. That is convenient for those who live on agitation and turmoil, like certain birds of prey on the stormy waters, but none capable of a deep thought will allow himself to be carried away with that shallow idea. Governments are generally just as good as the people they govern, and it will not be contradicted that the condition complained of is as much a fact in republican France as in imperial Austria, in monarchical England and despotic Russia, although the circumstances may vary in many respects. To be sure, the position of a ruler or chief executive of a nation is a responsible one and much can be expected of his supposed wisdom and experience, coupled with those of his advisers. But there are storms which the most experienced captain has no power to avoid, throwing his vessel on the destroying rocks, and there are circumstances which no government can control. To blame the latter for all the evils of a nation is unjust and unreasonable. The clamor for its total destruction or partial reconstruction on socialistic lines will therefore be listened to with reserve by all right minded citizens. It is not believed that the root of the evil is in the governing as much as in the governed.

The claim must also be dismissed that the so-called capitalists are solely responsible for the ills of the human race. Of course when a man is in a position to turn over part of his acquired wealth to another on the condition that the latter shall pay it back several times in the form of interest and besides carry all the chances of losses, while the former is amply secured against any loss, an inequality is created which is deplorable and which is the cause of ruin to many. But it is plain enough that the man who borrows is himself responsible for the position in which he is placed. A desire for the luxuries of life beyond his means is often the cause of the debt in which he plunges himself. The capitalist may be a party to the transaction, but no one who fears debt need to rush into it beyond rescue.

If all the various causes assigned for the ills of mankind were carefully examined it would be found that they all can be summed up in one. The human family have departed from the ways of the Lord and launched out upon the sea of life without heeding the heavenly star for guidance. The mistakes committed by the religious pilots are innumerable and palpable. But they are not less conspicuous in every other department of human society. The world is suffering as a result of the departure of its nations from the principles of true religion. Its politics, its commerce, its social and international dealings are all conducted on principles at variance with the teachings given to mankind in the beginning by the Father of all, and further explained by Jesus of Nazareth, and in this day and generation by inspired servants of God. This is the true cause of all the trouble. Mankind is suffering for its deviation from the truth. Like a caravan in the desert that has killed its only sure guide, it wanders about, following mirage, on the verge of death.

The Saints have been prepared from the beginning to expect the condition now prevailing. They need not be carried away with the many new ideas presented to the world; nor need they fear the outcome. If they will closely consider their mission in the world and conform to the principles laid down in the Gospel they have accepted, they will yet be able to show to mankind a social structure reared after a heavenly pattern, like the Tabernacle of Moses in the wilderness. They will be able to solve the great problem now before the nations of the earth, and give their fellowmen what they are seeking to obtain. By faithfulness to the truth on the part of those who have it, all will finally be benefited.

THE SOUTH MINUS HER SLAVES.

A startling statement recently put forth by a recognized authority in statistics, Mr. R. H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers' Record of Baltimore, has been exciting no end of notice and, especially in the South, criticism. He asserts in cold plain English that the assessed value of property in the South is today a little less than it was in 1860, a third of a century ago—a condition which, if true, would indicate a retrogression all the more surprising when compared with the enormous increase in every other part of the Republic. Mr. Edmonds's high character for accuracy was the only reason that prevented his statement from being jeered into oblivion, and naturally this has led to close investigation of its correctness and the causes pertaining to it. The interesting fact is thus brought out that the seeming standstill, or even decline, referred to, is due to the elimination of the valuation of the slaves from the record. This important item of property was valued thirty-four years ago at about twenty-four hundred millions of dollars; deducting this sum from the comparison it will be seen that, inasmuch as the decline on the face of the returns has only been slight, the South has really made great progress in industrial growth, and its property valuations are perhaps two thousand millions greater than before the war. It is valuable as a reminiscence of a baser civilization to know just what the human chattels held in slavery's bonds were appraised at when the change was about to come; and it is not without pride that the South can point to the fact that during a little more than three decades, the earlier years of which were a period of extreme suffering, she has almost entirely recovered from the seemingly incalculable losses to which she was subjected.

AN AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

The recent action of the United States government in the case of the Brazilian rebellion is bearing fruit, and taken in connection with the government's course toward the Central American republics it indicates a trend of affairs that, following in the wake of the present commotion in this nation, may lead to radical changes in governmental affairs on this continent. Brazil has not had heretofore any special leaning toward the United States, her form of government and business relations being such as to bind her more closely to European powers than to the Republic, though the visit of Dom Pedro to the United States did much to establish a more cordial feeling.

The recent rebellion in Brazil, however, brought the opportunity for a marked improvement of friendly relations with this government. The Brazilian government being republican, it had no particular support from Germany and Great Britain, the latter practically taking side with the rebels. The attitude of the United States, however, was that of strict neutrality, and when the rebel admiral began his insolent treatment of neutral powers in the harbor of Rio, the prompt and courageous action of the American commander elicited the admiration of the Brazilians, and the United States took a long stride forward in the respect in which it was held by the greatest South American republic.

One effect of this is being manifest now in the preparations making at Rio de Janeiro for the celebration of the Fourth of July there. It is something novel for one nation to celebrate another's natal day; and while it may not be said that Brazil is officially doing this, yet the fact that the whole thing is being engineered by the Brazilian rulers, from President Peixoto down, practically gives it that effect. The proceeding appears to be entirely free from any inspiration on the part of the American residents, and to be a spontaneous movement on the part of the Brazilians to, as they say, observe the Fourth in a manner to demonstrate to the United States the good will existing toward them on the part of the people. There is to be a public demonstration, the program including a military and naval review and the laying of the corner stone of a monument to be surmounted by a statue of President Monroe, author of the "Monroe doctrine." The United States has been asked to send a squadron to participate in the naval review, and special medals are to be presented to the chief executives of both republics.

This proceeding shows a marked inclination to draw closer to the United States, and to recognize in this nation the head of the free states of America. Naturally the establishment of more intimate commercial relations will follow the feeling thus manifested and the volume of Brazilian trade will be in this direction instead of going to Europe. And in connection with the same event is the attitude being assumed by the Central American republics, where there is a strong and growing disposition to break from the Old World relations and combine with the United States. Heretofore the Central American republics have not been able to get together on any kind of a proposition, as it has been to the interest of European diplomats to keep them apart. The statement in the dispatches that a movement is on foot to effect a general revolution throughout Central America hardly can be interpreted to mean that there will be a general war inaugurated there, but is more clearly expressive of the fact that internal dissensions and outside pressure really are proving effective for consolidation, and that the creation of a Central American federation, including Guatemala, Costa Rica, Salvador, Nicaragua and Honduras will be the immediate result.

In the case of events of this nature, which seem reasonably certain to occur within a brief period, the United States naturally will be looked to for advice and perhaps for active support. The policy of the nation is to make its influence felt for union and the preservation of human rights among the Latin-American states, and this is inspiring among our southern friends a confidence in the principles of republican government such as has not existed heretofore. Give this feeling a little time to grow, and in the ordinary course of events as these are shaping themselves now, when the present disturbances in this government have been adjusted and affairs are conducted more nearly the constitutional design of sustaining the rights of all citizens, the way will be open for forming on this continent a grand American Union, with the United States as its chief cornerstone. The time is not yet, but already there is dawning upon the darkness of the present among the nations of this land not only the possibility but the probability of such a consummation.

THE EARTH REELING.

Some time ago the NEWS published an observation made by one of its esteemed friends relating to an apparent irregularity in the relative positions of the earth and the sun, the heavenly luminary seemingly slowly receding toward the south. The subject seems now to be a matter of scientific inquiry. A Washington correspondent to an exchange states that observations will be made at Washington and at Manila, in the Philippine islands, simultaneously, for the purpose of ascertaining what is the matter with the earth's axis. For some time past there has been a suspicion that the revolutions of our sphere have not been as regular as they used to be, and astronomers think it is high time to study the matter and find out the cause of it. An equatorial telescope has therefore been constructed and sent to Manila and the sky will soon be searched from two almost directly opposite points of the globe. Should the variations already observed continue, it is thought that in the course of a certain period the changes on the earth will be such as to make present geographies entirely useless. The latitude of every place of the globe will be altered, continents will be submerged and islands expand into continents; where now lie perpetual ice and snow, a tropical climate may obtain dominion, and vice versa.

Holy writ teems with predictions to the effect that a time will come when everything shall be in commotion, and particularly definite are such allusions in the message held by the Latter-day Saints to be divinely inspired. "The earth shall tremble and reel to and fro;" "the sun shall hide his face;" "the heavens shall shake;" such statements are repeatedly made. If astronomers have really commenced to inquire into phenomena which are thought to indicate nothing less than a change of the earth's position relative to the plane of its orbit, it is pertinent to say that such expressions may ultimately be proved to be literal truths, without the slightest exaggeration for dramatic effects. It may possibly soon be ascertained that the earth is rolling on with accelerated speed towards a great and terrible cataclysm.

THE NEWEST HEALTH SUGGESTION.

This is the age of reforms; and of dress reforms — like the making of books — there is no end. Formidable and imposing is the title of the very latest organization with objects in this especial direction: "The Society for the Encouragement of Loose Clothing." It was formed in London for the purpose indicated in its name, and it expects to have branches in all parts of England as well as in America. With the hope of getting the movement started in New York, a Mrs. Julia Leith is now visiting the metropolis; and pursuant to the usual program in such cases made and provided, she has been getting herself extensively interviewed by the reporters. A representative of the Mail and Express lately gave the genial visitor this much of an opportunity to ventilate her views:

We apply our principle to both sexes. We do not believe that men ought to wear tight clothing any more than women. Of course they do not, but then you will find a great many men who wear very tightly buttoned vests, which we believe to be injurious. Our idea of how clothing should be made is entirely original. I am negotiating with a tailor now to get up some models. We believe that as far as the mechanical limitations, the clothing ought not to touch the body at all, except at the points of support. This we expect to accomplish by means of a fine wicker-work, which will hold the fabric off say the sixteenth or quarter of an inch, and so permit a freer circulation of air. A man will look a little larger than he really is, but that is not to be considered when health is our main consideration. We shall also advocate the manufacture of cloth of coarser fiber than is now used for men's clothes, and we have a chemist in our society who is experimenting with certain drugs which will be incorporated into the cloth for the purpose of warding off disease germs.

It will be generally admitted, we assume, that Mrs. Leith's claim of originality for the wicker-work underwear idea is well-taken. It may also be asserted in advance that there is small hope of the notion ever becoming widely popular. And yet the theory is by no means bad, nor altogether unworthy of the enthusiasm with which its fair exponent defends it. The important point is, will the new suit look as well on the person as it does on paper? That is a demonstration which Mrs. Leith ought to feel called upon to make at the earliest convenient moment; and at the same time she should remove the delightful vagueness of her proposition as to the drug-impregnated cloth, by explaining just what germs she expects it to ward off, and how. It will be a good while before all this information can be furnished to local readers; who, meanwhile, can successfully ward off all probable disease germs in this vicinity and keep healthy and cool as well by frequent bathing in our unrivalled sulphur springs or our incomparable salt sea.

NO MORE THAN TWO.

In its treatment of the petition [of one of the local street railway companies to be allowed to lay and operate a line of rails on streets already occupied by the other company with two lines of rails, the NEWS hopes the City Council will be influenced by neither fear of nor favor to either the petitioners or the protestants, but will consider the question from the high standpoint of public convenience and general welfare. We shall leave to others the discussion of the prior rights of the company which would be injured if this petition were granted; and also the rights of the petitioner and its patrons to facilities in and through the business heart of the city. These aspects of the case have been and no doubt will be thoroughly argued by those respectively interested. This paper will merely undertake to speak for what it regards as the rights of the inhabitants of this city and particularly of those whose property comes within the district where the proposed innovation is suggested.

The breadth and spaciousness of the plan on which Salt Lake City was laid out has won for us probably more praise than any other one feature of our town. The idea of the founders was that there was room for a large city, and that in the very nature of things a large city would be built. No narrow, contracted policy huddled the settlers all on one street, or gave them a cramped building spot on any street. Health as well as beauty suggested room and plenty of it—room for water-courses, for trees, for sidewalks and driveways, room for flower gardens and lawns in front, and for orchards and vegetable gardens in the rear. As the streets and walks were wide, so also were the city lots—not too many of them to a block—large though the latter might be. In all this there was statesmanship, sound policy, good sense; it has made Salt Lake City famous the world over for beauty, regularity, cleanliness, and the evidences of home-like comfort and thrift. To be sure, recent years have witnessed some departure from the original plan; city lots have been cut up and parcelled out among many families, a few blocks have been bisected by streets and alleys, buildings have been wedged in closely in the business center, and have been pushed high into the air; and there have even been propositions to reduce the width of the streets by giving to the abutting property title to the land out to the sidewalk line. Happily the latter idea has not prevailed; it is truly to be hoped that it never will.

Now, street cars are a great convenience—an all-important and indispensable part of a live city's make-up. None appreciates more than the NEWS what these enterprises have done for Salt Lake City, nor more fully realizes the obligation the people are under to them. At the same time, we submit that our streets were not laid out for street car lines alone; and we are bound to say that in appropriating choice residence and driving thoroughfares, the local companies have gone quite as far as they should have been allowed to go, and a good deal further than the best public sentiment would have warranted. The result is, there is hardly an important street upon which one may drive without contact with the rails—hardly one where the peaceful quietude of the home is not disturbed by the early and late rumbling of the ponderous conveyances, the ceaseless whirr and buzzing of the electric line.

We shall be told that these strictures may not apply to purely business streets. But we insist that in a measure they do apply. And if certain of our best thoroughfares have been injured in the manner indicated, we deem it opportune and proper to raise a warning voice before any of them shall be quite ruined. We have no streets so wide that they will not be spoiled by three or more lines of rails; two are quite sufficient for the broadest and busiest of them—either for the welfare of the street itself and the property upon it, or for the traffic. The aggressive, enterprising spirit of the railway companies has done much for us that we ought to be, and are, thankful for; but there are certain limits beyond which this spirit works injuriously. Whenever the rights of the people are interfered with, and their comfort and convenience are unnecessarily invaded, the line should be drawn by those who have public matters in charge. It is very evident that the laying of any more railway tracks on First South or East Temple street will be of this character. We believe it will drive business away, not only local business, but the trade of our country cousins who will go to other streets to deal with stores where they can have hitching room in front for their teams. Over and above any mere selfish or speculative considerations, it will mar the beauty of the streets, and be a source of danger, discomfort and inconvenience to the people.

THE JEWS IN JERUSALEM.

The description of the condition of the Jews in Jerusalem as given by an English missionary to the London Times, and published in our dispatches, is probably calculated to arouse public sympathy with a view of increasing the flow of contributions to be handled by the agents, rather than to give a clear idea of the actual situation. It will not be denied that there are cases of distress among the forty thousand Jews now living in or around Jerusalem. Some have come there from other countries, aged and infirm, for the sole purpose of dying in the holy land and having their bones laid to rest in the hallowed shadows of the sacred hills. Others are lineal descendants of ancestors who have for centuries lived under oppression and subsisted on charity until the faculty of making a living in any other way has become almost extinct. Disregard for or ignorance of all laws of health have bred diseases claiming not a few victims, and the absence of sufficient medical aid is but too manifest. Still, all this is but one part of the story, and it contains nothing that can not be duplicated in the Jewish settlements in the larger capitals in Europe, notably in London.

The facilities for making a good living in and near Jerusalem are not at present very great, at least as far as the Hebrew race is concerned. Still, the majority of such inhabitants manage to make a little money in various ways. Some drive stage coaches and take travelers about to the surrounding cities; others keep restaurants and "locandas," or hotels; a few act as guides to tourists; others are merchants on a small scale or manage to live by changing money for others; some make shoes or clothes, repair wagons and furniture; and still others make a little by going round and (for a consideration) joining various Christian sects in order to swell the record of converts to be sent to the home board. Some are professional beggars and make money by it; not a few, engaged in various mercantile enterprises, are comparatively wealthy. The steadily increasing settlement of Jews north of Jerusalem shows numerous signs of prosperity and contentment greatly in contrast with the picture of cave dwellers painted by the English missionary.

In other parts of the country where Jews engage in agricultural pursuits the condition is still more favorable. Comfortable homes surrounded by luxuriant vineyards and olive groves testify to the capacity of the country, when intelligent labor is bestowed on it. In ancient times, during its golden age, it supported millions of inhabitants, and there is no reason why at present, with all the facilities of improved machinery and outside communication, it should not support a still larger population. The resources are there only waiting for capital and labor to utilize them for the benefit of man.

NOT FOR purposes of interest or information, but with a degree of amusement and a desire to give a little free advertising, we call the attention of our readers to the fact that "the synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church," now in session in Philadelphia, has again "adopted resolutions against the admission of Utah to statehood, on moral grounds." Utah seems to be quite as indispensable a part of the average run of synods as the benediction—it comes along invariably in the regular order of business.

A convention of coal miners of Colorado will be held at Pueblo on June 15 to consider the situation in that state.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.

COLONIA PACHECO.

COLONIA PACHECO, Chihuahua Mexico, April 6, 1894.

Today, when thousands of Saints are celebrating the birthday of the Church in a general conference capacity in Salt Lake City, Utah, I am gathering historical data in the tops of the Sierra Madre Mountains in this far off land of Mexico. In company with Elder Joseph C. Bentley and wife, I left Colonia Juarez yesterday and traveled about thirty-five miles over a rough mountainous road to Colonia Pacheco situated in the Corrales Basin, on the head waters of the Rio Peadres Verdes, which is one of the main tributaries of the Rio Casas Grandes. The Corrales Basin proper, in which Colonia Pacheco is situated consists of a country about five miles square interspersed with pine-covered ridges; the intervening flats are generally very fertile and productive, but only a small portion of the land is irrigated—that lying adjacent to the river. The townsite embraces a rocky flat which slopes gently to the south; it is covered in part with pine timber, and watered from several small springs situated from two to three miles west and southwest of the town survey; but the little stream thus brought in is only sufficient for culinary purposes, and thus only a little irrigation is done on the town lots. The farming land, which by the way is very limited, is found in strips along the river, and in smaller side valleys. The future growth of the place will largely depend upon the success the people may have in reservoiring the water. About one-half of the inhabitants constituting the Pacheco Ward live on the townsite; seven families reside at Corrales, about one and a half miles south of the townsite and up the river or creek, while ten families occupy a little neighborhood of their own in what is known as Cave Valley, seven miles north or down the river from the Pacheco townsite; in this latter place meetings and Sunday schools are held separately. The altitude of Pacheco is about 7000 feet above the level of the sea; the mountain slopes are covered with pine, oak, juniper, maple etc., and the settlement is only a few miles from the summit of the Sierra Madre Mountains, which forms the boundary line between the states of Chihuahua and Sonora. The Pacheco Ward has a population of thirty-three families or 201 souls, and is presided over by Bishop Jesse N. Smith, jun., a son of Jesse N. Smith, president of the Snowflake Stake of Zion. Christopher B. Heaton and Austin H. Farnsworth are counselors to Bishop Smith. This mountain settlement is also the home of Patriarch Henry Lunt, formerly Bishop of Cedar City, Iron Co., Utah.

The people as a rule are poor as regards this world's goods; but they enjoy the spirit of the Gospel and also rejoice in that liberty and state of freedom which this rugged mountain country affords. Though so isolated (having neither white nor Mexican near neighbors,) the spirit of sociability is kept up; the meetings and Sunday Schools are well attended, and social gatherings are often appointed, in order to keep life in the community, and preserve the cheerfulness and good feeling which are so essential for the success of remote settlements.

The Corrales Basin was one of the first places explored by our brethren early in 1885; it was done with a view to locating a colony of Saints in the heart of the Sierra Madres; but it was not till the spring of 1887 that the first Latter-day Saint settlers commenced to make homes here. Since that time the people have labored hard to establish themselves in this rather inhospitable region; and the success which has crowned their labors so far promises well for a permanent and prosperous settlement in the future.

Elder Sixtus C. Johnson and a company of settlers are here on their road to locate a new settlement in the Chichupá (?) country, about fifty miles south of Panhico.

FISH AND FORESTRY.

FARMINGTON, June 2.—As but little space in our public journals has been devoted to forestry and fish culture, may I be permitted to add my mite by way of again calling attention to those important industries? I have read an interesting article in a journal devoted to fish culture which stated that the writer made the following important discovery: Two fish were placed in one of two small ponds and he noticed that they consumed all or most of the mosquitoes in an embryo state; while the other pond produced its customary thousands, or millions of those little pests, small in size 'tis true, but big in annoying and biting power.

There are many ponds, and swampy localities where ponds can easily be constructed, in or near settlements, and if a little pains would be taken by owners, or by other parties interested in fish culture who could rent such land on good terms, many tons of healthy, palatable, brain-producing food could be easily provided for our use; and there is no comparison between the measure of happiness superinduced by a fish diet as compared with a pork and beef fed people; not losing sight of the mosquito nuisance question thus being happily solved.

Now as to forestry. In walking through meadows you will occasionally see pieces of lumber, sticks of wood or other articles that have been forced upwards by the rank growth of grass, while other similar articles can be seen apparently sinking in the ground which if turned over will show that all vegetation under them is dead and portions of the earth they are hugging so closely will adhere to them. Some superstitious people will tell you that it is all occasioned by said articles being deposited there in different stages of the increase or decrease of the moon. I will not give my theory, but I want to say that frequently I have seen axe handles, wagon and other timber worm-eaten, and have heard men say that timber is better, more durable, etc., if cut at certain seasons, not of the moon, but of the year; but until reading an article which I inclose for publication, I never heard an intelligent reason given for choosing any particular time for cutting timber. Here it is:

J. F. Sanborn, M. D., Tabor, Iowa, writes Orange Juda Farmer: A large portion of the West has so little timber that the question as to when it is best to cut it for posts and other purposes where durability is desired, is of prime importance. There are certain laws governing vegetable life which, when well understood, cast some light on the subject. Examination shows a large percentage of starch in the berry of wheat, corn or other cereal. Starch as such, while it remains unchanged, is among the most enduring of all the products of vegetable life, but it is prone to change to cane sugar under the influence of warmth and moisture, and from cane sugar to glucose.

In all fermentative action, as in the malting of barley, starch is changed to glucose, and if the fermentive process is kept up, the glucose is changed to alcohol and carbonic acid gas; and if still further continued, acetic acid is formed, or vinegar. If a berry of wheat is placed in the ground, where warmth and moisture are in suitable proportions, the starch goes through a similar change, and the carbonic acid gas is produced just as fast as the young shoot can appropriate it to its own growth. It is a well known fact that carbon is the frame work of vegetable life somewhat as the bones are of the animal kingdom. This carbon is the charcoal left after a partial combustion of the wood or plant. The carbon is derived from the air by the growing plant or tree; but in the young wheat germ, before it gets above ground so as to procure it from the air, it is furnished by the carbon in the starch, stored up in the berry of which it is a part. For a similar reason deciduous trees (those which shed their leaves) must provide within themselves the materials wherewith to supply this carbon to produce the leaves, before the leaves are formed sufficiently to procure it from the air. This material is stored up in the tree in the same chemical elements as wheat starch.

When spring warmth comes the starch is changed to sugar, which being dissolved in the sap of the tree is carried to the branches and twigs, and there in due season decomposed to supply carbon to form the leaves. When the leaves are formed so they can obtain the carbon from the air then, and not till then, does the sap cease to contain sugar. The sugar maple, white maple, box elder, black walnut, and some other trees, are so rich in sugar that their sap can be utilized for sugar making purposes if procured in early spring. Now, if a tree is cut after the starch has been changed to sugar, the worms, being very fond of this sweet, become seriously destructive to wood. The sap or the hickory is so very sweet, that if the tree is cut in February or March, it is well known that the worms in their greed for this sugar out the wood until it is sadly deteriorated by their ravages. But if a tree is cut in July or August, there is no sugar in the sap of the tree or wood after it is cut, so the worms seek some more savory morsel.

This is one reason why trees should be cut in summer. Another important reason is that if a tree is cut when the sap is full of sugar, the fermentive process, during hot weather, changes the sugar into the very elements of decay, to-wit: acetic acid; and if decay is thus early initiated, is it any wonder that posts do not last as they would if cut when these conditions could not possibly take place? In the year 1860 a fence was set in front of my office, with posts split from a burr oak, cut when the leaves were in full size and vigor. In 1882 this fence was reset with a picket fence, and when the posts were taken up they were found in good condition and worth resetting, and by reversing them some of them are doing service yet; though first set about 81 years ago. Out of some ninety posts set in 1860, only three had to be reset in the 22 years, and one, a sap post at that, is doing good service just where it was set 81 years ago. The average life of a burr oak post out in winter is ten years, but if cut in July or August it will last three times ten years; and where good timber for posts is as scarce as it is in the prairie country of the West, a knowledge of these facts becomes of prime importance, not only to the farmer, but to the railroads as well.

In further proof of the durability of timber cut in summer, reference may be made to a conversation with a reliable Page county (Iowa) farmer, who said a saw mill was set up near his residence fifteen years before. Along in June or July it became too hot for the teams to stand in the heat of the sun and eat their noon meals, so a shed was put up. One of the posts was white elm, another was a black walnut sapling, each from 4 to 6 inches through at the ground. These posts were still standing and in good condition after 15 years. Now of all trees the white elm is the shortest lived as a post. The conclusion of the whole matter is, if you want the stumps to sprout and reproduce timber, cut in winter, but if you wish to kill a tree, or if for lasting purpose, as fence posts or wagon timber, cut in mid-summer.

I will close with what I think is an important suggestion: When newspaper articles of special interest are read it is a good plan, when the papers are preserved, to write on a paper accompanying them, the headings and page and number of said articles; and if the papers are not preserved, to cut out such pieces and place them in an indexed scrap book, or in envelopes that have been used, first writing the heading of the article on the outside.

PROSPEROUS PLEASANT GROVE.

PLEASANT GROVE, June 3, 1894.—Strawberries and cream are the order of the day.

Recent rains with bright sunshine have caused the farmers to rejoice in seeing their crops grow and orchards putting forth their loads of fruit. Spraying of the orchards has been carried out by most everyone, and we trust the results will be all that is anticipated.

Decoration day was spent in decking the graves of loved ones with flowers. The cemetery was filled with people until a late hour.

On June 1st our Sunday school celebrated, it being their anniversary, in Sandberg's grove. A program that had been prepared was rendered in a most pleasing manner and the good people of this place can justly feel proud of their Sunday school. Brother Smith and his aids have the work at heart.

Mrs. T. C. Beck is very ill and all feel very anxious for her recovery.

Our trustees have been somewhat puzzled to know who out of the many applicants to secure as teachers in our schools. We think there is no need of going outside of Pleasant Grove, as we have plenty of material here and to our home teachers belong the positions, all things being equal in qualifications and wages demanded.

The good people of the Third ward are pushing to completion their meeting house, which will be an ornament to the north end.

Thorne Bros. & Co. shipped a car of potatoes on the 1st, the last of the crop. This makes about sixteen carloads sent out by them this spring, and if our farmers will be more careful in the kind of potatoes they plant and be honest in what they put into sacks, our "spude" will bring a greater revenue to them than heretofore. ### IN WEST VIRGINIA.

ANVIL, Tucker County, W. Va., May 31, 1894.—George M. Nester died at the home of his son, Lloyd Nester, at Anvil, Tucker county, W. Va., May 1894, after an illness of about eight weeks. His death was caused by droopy. He was born in Barbour county, West Virginia, on the 25th of September, 1818. He became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the spring of summer of 1891. He was very kind to the Elders that labored in this part of the country. His character was highly spoken of by those who knew him. He has one son and his family who are members of the Church and they are very kind to the Elders and are trying to live worthy of the blessings of God. The work is progressing slowly and occasionally there is one who unites himself with the Church of God and helps to roll on the good work.

We had the pleasure a few days ago of baptizing a Mr. William H. Evans, of Barbour county, of this state, and there are some that are investigating the principles that are set forth by the Elders.

Respectfully,
M. S. ROUNDY,
Traveling Elder.

STAKE CONFERENCES.

DAVIS.

CENTERVILLE, Utah, June 4, 1894.—The quarterly conference of the Davis Stake of Zion was held at Centerville, on Saturday and Sunday, June 2 and 3, 1894, in a large bowery erected by the members of the Centerville ward, President John W. Hess presiding. Elder F. M. Lyman, of the council of the Apostles, was present on Saturday and Sunday, and Elder A. H. Cannon on Sunday; also Elder B. H. Roberts on Saturday and Elder S. W. Richards on Sunday. There was a full representation of Stake and ward authorities, and the largest concourse of people that ever gathered in conference capacity in this Stake.

On Saturday President Hess reported the labors of the Stake Presidency during the last three months—that they had visited every ward in the Stake twice during this time, once holding ward Priesthood meetings, then again holding ward conferences; found the Saints in excellent condition.

The Bishops then reported their respective wards, all reporting that the spirit of love and union was increasing among the people.

Elder Lyman addressed the congregation in the morning and afternoon; subjects—fast meetings, fast offerings, feeding of the poor, and the duties and labors of the High Councilors of the Stake and Bishops of the wards.

Elder B. H. Roberts spoke at the afternoon meeting on the poor and the necessity of bettering their condition.

On Sunday Elder S. W. Richards made a few remarks on the fulfillment of the prophecies, and the law of sacrifice.

The general and Stake authorities were presented and unanimously sustained.

Elders F. M. Lyman and A. H. Cannon occupied the rest of the day, giving most excellent counsel and instructions to the Saints. Nathan Tanner Porter, of Centerville, and Ezra Thompson Clark, of Farmington, were ordained Patriarchs under the hands of Elders Lyman and Cannon.

There was a reunion of the ward choirs of the Davis Stake held at Centerville on Sunday evening, June 3rd, the choirs of South and East Bountiful, Centerville, Farmington and Kayesville participating. It was a grand entertainment, a musical treat, and appreciated by all those present, and it is to be hoped that these reunions will be held at least once in three months, for they will result in much good.

JOHN J. SMITH, Clerk.

WAYNE.

Minutes of the fourth quarterly conference of the Wayne Stake of Zion, held at Thurber, Wayne county, Utah, May 26th and 27th.

Saturday, 26th, Counselor Hans M. Hanson called the congregation to order at 10 o'clock a.m., and after singing and prayer, reported that the Stake presidency had visited every ward in the Stake and held ward conferences during the past three months; the Saints generally are feeling well and a good spirit prevails throughout the Stake. There is a promising prospect for a good harvest, and the Saints have cause to rejoice.

Patriarch Elias H. Blackburn was pleased to be able to meet in conference; referred to a motto that hung on the wall, "Life's labor is learning to live," and taking this for a text spoke for some time upon the blessings that crown the labors of a faithful Saint. The speaker also touched briefly upon apostasy, home industry and the science of the human body.

Bishop Hult E. Maxfield reported the Fremont ward in good condition; he read a revelation given through the Prophet Joseph Smith relative to the judgments God would pour out upon the wicked, and spoke briefly upon the power of unity.

At the afternoon meeting the following wards were reported in good condition: Loa ward, by Bishop Benjamin F. Brown; East Loa, Bishop Peter J. Christensen; Thurber, Bishop Wm. Meeks.

Counselor Gearson S. Bastian believed the Wayne Stake to be in as good condition as her sister stakes; he referred to some instructions given at the last general semi-annual conference. The speaker, addressing himself to the youth, pleaded with them to take advantage of the opportunities afforded them to improve their minds; spoke briefly upon the duties of ward teachers, and bore testimony that the Stake Presidency are united.

Elder John T. Lazenby referred to the early settlement of Rabbit Valley; he remembered the day when the nearest store was at Glenwood, and it took a week to get flour. The inhabitants of Rabbit Valley were then very few. Today we have stores, flour mills and other improvements in our midst and the Saints are met in Stake conference.

Elder Jos. J. Anderson addressed the Saints on the office work of the Holy Spirit, showing that it is its mission to reveal the will of the Father. He is a wise servant that applies the truths already given instead of idly waiting for some new revelation. Referred to the Sabbath school work, and encouraged parents to interest themselves in this great labor. Showed the evil results of card playing and horse racing, and encouraged the youth to refrain from these evils and seek knowledge that they may obtain power.

A Priesthood meeting was held at the close of the afternoon meeting, at which many things were discussed that will be for the future welfare of the brethren present.

Sunday, May 27, 1894, 10 o'clock a. m.—After the usual opening exercises the Teasdale, Blue Valley and Calneville wards were represented in a healthy condition, as follows: Teasdale, Bishop George Coleman, Calneville, Elder George P. Rectol; Blue Valley, Jonathan Hunt.

Elder Joseph Eckersley then addressed the Saints on the necessity of educating our children and teaching them the principles of the Gospel; said the influence of home has worked greater revolutions in the world and been productive of more good than the influence or power of any organization ever effected by man. It is the duty of every father and mother in Israel to teach their children the principles of the Gospel at home by precept and example. Every Elder should plead with God to be endowed with the spirit of his calling, for it is as important and as essential to successful labor in Zion as it is for the Elders who are sent to the nations of the earth.

Counselor Dans M. Danson read from the Doctrine and Covenants regarding the duty of parents to their children and the condemnation resting upon them if they teach not the principles of the Gospel to them. He spoke upon the power of faith and encouraged the Saints to be diligent in their labors.

2 o'clock p. m.—After the usual opening exercises sacrament was administered by Bishops Walter Hanks and D. E. Maxfield. While the Sacrament was being administered Elder Thomas A. Jeffery addressed the Saints. Every Elder should live so as to be worthy to officiate in his calling; if this were the case there would be no necessity for running for the Bishop every time a person is sick in a ward, there would be many Elders worthy to administer this ordinance. The humblest Saint is worthy of the blessings of God to attend him in his administration; the power we have with God depends upon our devotion to His commandments.

The Stake statistical report was then read by Elder Jos. Eckersley. The General and Stake authorities were presented by Counselor Hans M. Hanson and unanimously sustained by the people.

President Willis E. Robison could vouch for the truth of the reports given by the Bishops; hoped that the Wayne Stake would continue to grow and ever compare favorably with the other Stakes in Zion. He then discoursed at length upon the necessity of Latter-day Saints keeping correct genealogies and being properly enrolled on the Church records, the result of evil speaking, and blessing of exercising charity. The progress we make depends upon our own efforts; and the speaker felt to encourage the Saints to be united in all their labors and seek to approach the standard of perfection.

A Sunday School meeting was held in the evening, at which reports were given demonstrating the Sunday Schools in Wayne Stake in good condition. Elder Chas. F. Brown and Brother Wm. Meeks reported their labors while taking the Sunday School course at Provo. Timely addresses were given by Elders Jos. J. Anderson, Walter H. Jeffery and President Willis E. Robison.

A Relief conference was held on Monday, the 28th. The reports showed that the societies were doing a good work. Addresses were delivered by a number of the Sisters, President W. E. Robison and Counselor Gearson S. Bastian on the following topics: Economy, home industry, hygiene, and the proper education of our children.

THE YOUNG LADIES' CONFERENCE.

The conference of the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Associations of the Salt Lake Stake was held June 5th in the Assembly Hall. President Mary A. Freeze presided.

Meeting opened at 2 p. m. by singing, "Come let us anew," etc. Prayer was offered by Mrs. Nellie C. Taylor; singing. The minutes of the previous conference read and approved.

Pres. Freeze announced a course of lectures to be given by Dr. Lizzie Shipp on obstetrics, and a course on child training by an eastern lady, and heartily recommended as many as possible to attend.

Mrs. M. E. Irvine spoke on Obedience. She thought it proper to cultivate the spirit of yielding to a higher power, no matter what inconvenience it may cause us we should bring ourselves to that state where we can say "Thy will, not mine, be done." She also counseled the young ladies to be slow in looking at the faults of their friends, but rather to seek out their own faults.

An address was made by Miss Lucy

Maycock, her subject being "Why should we be Latter-day Saints?"

Dr. R. B. Pratt compared our faith with some of the faiths of the day—particularly Christian science, which is attracting some young people. She showed the Gospel to be a foundation-rock—something for our every day life.

President M. A. Freeze said that it is necessary for us to have the spirit of revelation to know the living Good. Christ was not an impostor or His teachings would not be good. The Spirit of testimony is not given to all—like the sunshine and the rain—but to those only who seek it. She exhorted the young to seek this spirit to preserve and protect them in the truth.

Counselor Nellie C. Taylor urged the young not to forget what Christ has suffered for us but to serve and follow Him, to listen to the words of counsel from their parents and those in authority over them.

After singing and benediction by L. S. Cartwright, conference was adjourned until 7:30 p. m.

The evening meeting was opened by singing. Prayer by Elder C. W. Penrose; singing. Mrs. Minnie Snow spoke of the necessity of the young ladies becoming better prepared to fill the highest position for woman—that of intelligent womanhood.

Dr. Maggie C. Shipp continued the subject already presented and thought that of "home making," not merely "house keeping," should be given more attention to in the associations. No one's happiness is complete without a happy home-life and all should make their home as near like paradise as possible. She explained how this is possible without great wealth—what wonders we can work with the spirit of love and kindness. She counseled the young ladies to listen to the promptings of the still, small voice and to live for the blessings in store for them.

A duet was then rendered by Misses Maude and Herma Pratt.

Elder C. W. Penrose next addressed the conference. He said his principle was, whatever he was called upon for, to do it the very best he could, and he thought this an excellent rule for the young ladies to follow. Every word uttered had found an echo in his heart. The young are the future molders of history and what we want for Zion is honorable and intelligent motherhood. Social purity should be taught to our young people more carefully. We do not go into detail as much as we might with profit. Every boy and girl can have a testimony of the truth of the Gospel if they seek it, which they should do that their faith may not be easily turned aside. The great duty of a president is to bring out all the talents in the association, not merely to direct the meeting. Elder Penrose closed by exhorting the young to acquire all the knowledge they can and to keep themselves pure and unspotted.

President Freeze then said that some time in July the associations of this Stake will hold a grand reunion at Saltair, when it is hoped that every member will be present.

Meeting closed by singing the Dology.

Benediction was offered by Miss Edith Sampson and conference adjourned for three months.

MRS. L. S. CARTWRIGHT,
Secretary.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

The price for spraying trees in Sanpete county is five cents for two sprayings.

MANTI, May 29, 1894.

The Manti Temple will close on on Friday evening July 20th, and open again on Tuesday morning August 21st, 1894.

JOHN D. T. MCALISTER.

A letter has been received at the President's office for "Mrs. Martha McCluskey, Salt Lake City, Utah." The lady is unknown by any one at the office, but if she will call on or send to the News she can obtain the letter.

Already considerable preparation has been made for the territorial Scandinavian reunion to be held at Mt. Pleasant, June 16th and 17th. The people of Mt. Pleasant know how to entertain visitors, and all who come may expect to have a very enjoyable time.

Work is to be pushed on the new county road over the mountain from Sanpete to Castle Valley at once, in order that it may be used for this summer's travel. The snow has been too deep to permit having done anything this spring, but as there is only about six miles of new road to be made, it will not be long before the two canyon roads will be connected. People will then be able to travel between the two valleys in about one third the time it takes to do so now.

Fred Wolhaupter and D. A. Maxwell came down from the mines in Gibbs' canyon, Monday, says the Brigham Vokes. Mr. Wolhaupter reports that the mine up there is improving daily and making a better showing the farther in the tunnel is driven. Mr. Maxwell came down to meet his family the same evening at Ogden, where they had just arrived from Tenino, Washington. Mr. M. has not seen his wife and children for seven years.

Sanpete county is being overrun this spring with peddlers, auctioneers, show people, etc., and the town that can't boast of some such every week is not in the swim at all. The peddlers and auctioneers are all right so long they pay their bills and behave themselves, and the show people—well they give fair entertainments; but the people who spend their hard-earned dollar for such things, or who sign iron-clad notes when debts and dues are crowding on all sides, and our local merchants almost forced to close down because of outstanding accounts—what of them?

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of Zion's Savings Bank and Trust company was held at the bank Monday at 11 o'clock; 1889 shares out of the 2,000 shares of stock were represented. The annual report showed the bank to be in a very satisfactory condition, the amount on deposit being $889,161.43.

The election of directors resulted in the following named gentlemen being chosen for the ensuing year: Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon, Joseph F. Smith, Francis M. Lyman, Heber

J. Grant, Angus M. Cannon, James Jack, George Reynolds, T. G. Webber, George M. Cannon, H. B. Clawson and L. John Nuttall.

A gambler named Alonso Burt, but better known as "Jay Gould," was brutally assaulted in Shade's saloon Thursday by a notorious character named Oscar Carlson. The men engaged in an altercation to which little attention was paid at first. After a time Carlson went out of the building but soon returned with a stone about the size of his fist. He suddenly and violently threw it at Burt striking him in the head and felling him to the floor unconscious. He was carried to his room where he was given attention by a physician and where it was thought he would die before morning. However, he was feeling somewhat better but refused to swear to a complaint against his assailant who was arrested and placed under bonds. Chief Pratt says that an officer will appear as a complaining witness and that Carlson will be prosecuted.

Major Robert T. Walker, a retired army officer and well known citizen, died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. O. J. Salisbury, at the corner of Sixth East and First South streets, at 7 o'clock Tuesday, June 5. The deceased was a native of Pennsylvania and was 72 years of age. The cause of his death was a tumor or cancerous growth in the side and from which he sought relief at the hands of the best physicians in the country, but in vain. The last two months he has kept pretty close to his room as he gradually grew nearer the end.

Mr. Walker was a distinguished gentleman and came of a good family. He was a brother-in-law of the late James G. Blaine, the latter's wife being Mr. Walker's sister. He was highly respected wherever known and had warm friends in all parts of the United States. He leaves a family of four children to mourn his death.

Justice Smith at Monday's session of court gave his decision in the case of James McCarroll, charged with selling milk without a license. It has been under consideration some days and was a test case the result of which the dairymen of the city and suburbs have looked forward to with interest. The court decided that the ordinance should be sustained and its provisions enforced, and found the defendant guilty.

McCarroll, by his attorneys, Zane and Lewis, moved for an arrest of judgment on the ground that the law pertaining to the publication of ordinances had not been complied with in that the recorder had omitted from the certified copy the important words "per day" and that he had also neglected to post notices of it in three conspicuous places and that the advertisement in the newspapers of it was null and void because of the omission of the words.

On this showing the motion of defendant's counsel was sustained.

J. M. Campbell, Esq., inspector of poor, Paisley, Scotland, writes to President Wilford Woodruff under date of May 18, with reference to James Graham, who has been "chargeable to our parish for some time past," and concerning whose birth-settlement said parish is making inquiry. "He is said to have been born," the letter continues, "in Balfour, Scotland, and is about 64 years of age. He informs us that he has two sisters in the Mormon state [sic.] and who are able to prove his birth in Balfour, being much older than he, and who left this country many years ago." The matter is referred to as "of very great importance," and the sisters, if still alive, are requested to favor Mr. Campbell with answers to a list of half a dozen printed questions. The parent's names are given as James Graham, who had a grocer's shop in Balfour, and Margaret Ewing, both dead. If this inquiry comes to the attention of either of the sisters referred to, Elder L. John Nuttall, President's office, this city, will be glad to supply the formal questions above mentioned, and to furnish other help in forwarding the desired information.

Monday Fish Commissioner Musser received a young fish about half a pound in weight, and the following letter:

LAKE VIEW, June 4, 1894.

A. M. Musser, Esq.:

Dear Sir—I send you today a fish that was caught in a slough near the Utah Lake. It is a new species to me. Please let me know what it is called. It is very pretty, and we would like to know its name and how large it will grow. These fish seem to be quite plentiful in the water around the lake.

Yours respectfully,

M. P. MADSEN.

Mr. Musser examined the new arrival and soon came to the conclusion that it was a striped bass. A consignment of this fish was placed in Utah Lake in 1890, having been sent from the Illinois river by Dr. Bartlett, and the one caught by Mr. Madsen Mr. Musser says he has no doubt is the offspring of some of that consignment. The fish is highly esteemed for table use. When full grown it attains to a weight of 15 to 20 pounds. It belongs to the Perch family of fishes, but differs considerably in appearance from the common perch.

The attendance at the conference of the Y. M. M. I. A. at Logan was not as large as had been expected. Much of the time was necessarily consumed in the rendition of reports. Presidents Woodruff and Cannon, who had been expected, were unable to come. President Joseph F. Smith and Elders Moses Thatcher and M. H. Hardy of the general superintendency, and Elder M. W. Merrill were in attendance.

On Sunday morning President Smith spoke on the duty and destiny of man, and Elder Thatcher on generosity. The reports received from the various Stakes indicated that when the Manual was first introduced there was a considerable falling off in the attendance—many members preferring programs that make the associations resemble amusement societies rather than for mutual improvement. This condition has been, to a great extent, overcome, particularly where the plan suggested in the Manual has been strictly followed. The members have become interested, and a greater degree of improvement has been perceptible.

Many valuable instructions were given, and all unite in declaring the conference a profitable one. Prof. Paul's lecture, "The Beautiful," was given for the benefit of the Cache Stake M. I. A. on Saturday evening. The subject was illustrated by fine stereopticon views. Music, both vocal and instrumental, and tableaux added to the interest.

L. G. Hardy, Esq., of this city, returned Friday evening from the south, where he has been for the past month. The report he brings of the condition of the stock interests south of the Rim of the Basin are no more encouraging than the accounts previously given. He says that at Kanab and all that region the drouth in this its third year is more severe than during the preceding two years, causing a failure of the grass on ranges and even in the hills. In looking through the country he saw not less than 5,000 head of cattle, and not a beef animal among them, they were so poor from lack of food. What little grass there is this year is so far back in the mountains from where the streams are that the cattle, which have to water at least every other day, cannot make the trip to and from. He says he has seen cows come down for water and they were so thirsty that they would fill themselves to an extent that they would fall and have to lay there for a day before they could get up.

The animals are feeding on sagebrush and greasewood. If there was plenty of browse for them the young animals would get along, but there is not. Mr. Hardy says that unless there are some good rains in June and July the animals that live through the summer will be in such poor condition that when winter comes there will be immense losses.

The crops are not suffering from the drouth, but only the range cattle. The streams from which irrigating water is taken have a fairly good supply. At Kanab, for instance, there is four times as much water as when the settlement was made first. The full effect of the drouth comes on the stock interests, which are in a deplorable condition.

The name of Dr. Smith, the commonwealth "army" general, was associated with a very ugly case Tuesday, and if the charges against him are established his followers will have to choose other "timber" to pilot them on their eastward journey.

The complaining witness is Mabel Graham, a fourteen-year-old girl, who called or rather was sent to the police station that morning to tell the story of the wrong that she claims was done her. Her grievance was unpretentiously and plainly narrated before Chief Pratt, Captain Donovan and a News representative. Shorn of its most salacious and disgusting features it was in substance as follows:

"I have been living for some time with a Mrs. Metz, a lady whose husband works for Mr. Bamberger, on Second East street, between First and Second South streets. Next door is a family by the name of Eccles. The man of the house is an ex-soldier, I understand. When 'General' Smith came to Salt Lake he joined the army and on Sunday night his wife came over to where I was stopping and asked Mrs. Metz if I could stay with her for the night, as her husband was either going away or would be out late. Mrs. Metz consented and I went. Mr. Eccles, however, came home early and went to bed. I slept in the next room. About midnight or a little after a man who I since learned was "Dr." Smith came in, the door having been left unlocked, I suppose for that purpose. Mrs. Eccles got out of bed and came into my room with me and went to bed, while Smith went in to sleep with her husband.

"The next I saw of Smith was yesterday morning, when he was washing himself for breakfast, when he put out his hand and said, 'Good morning, Lizzie.' I replied: 'My name is not Lizzie, sir, and don't care to be addressed in that manner.' He then smiled and said he didn't mean anything by the remark.

"Last night at the request of Mrs. Eccles I went back to stay at her house. A bed was made for me on the floor at the foot of her own and her husband's bed, and a little before nine o'clock I dropped down on it without undressing and went to sleep. I did not awake until midnight, when I was aroused in a very rude manner by some one in my bed. I jumped up and ran towards the head of Mrs. Eccles's bed and told them. They replied that he did not mean to frighten me, but I was very much alarmed and ran across the room and turned up the lamp which was burning very low and saw Smith crawling into his own room with his clothes partly off. I then ran out of the house and went home and told Mr. and Mrs. Metz who warned me not to go back, something I wouldn't have done anyhow, and told me to have him arrested this morning. That is why I am here."

The matter was referred to County Attorney Murphy and his assistant, Mr. Eichnor, who are making a thorough investigation of the case, and if the story of the girl can be fully substantiated Smith will be arrested.

Smith called at the Metz residence Tuesday and explained his presence in the room where the young lady was sleeping by saying that as he came in he looked through the half-open door and saw that she was partially uncovered, and fearing she would take cold went in to replace the bed covering, when he unintentionally awoke her.

Although far removed from the great Columbia river floods, of which the telegraphic dispatches tell, there is grave concern among many Salt Lake residents as to the direful results in the inundated districts for hundreds of miles throughout the northwest.

Among the most anxious in this city, perhaps, are the Union Pacific officials. In conversation with Mr. Burley Tuesday a representative of the News was told by that gentleman that the damage to property was immense along the Columbia river, and when asked to mark on the map that section of country now under water he drew a pencil from his pocket and made a circle which embraced about one-third of the states of Washington, Oregon and Idaho. Of course, he said with a faint smile that his statement was rather overdrawn, but the condition was appalling. The whole of the Union Pacific track between Umatilla and Portland, a distance of 186 miles, all of which is above high water mark, is now inundated, and vast stretches of it torn out and washed away.

Superintendent Bancroft is now and has been as near the big floods as possible for the last week or ten days, and it is not known when he will return. Thirty or forty miles of Union Pacific track is also hidden from view in the flooded region between Nampa and Huntington northwest of Boise, Idaho. Many bridges have been carried away and traffic is entirely suspended. The high water in this section comes from the Snake river as it also does on the branch line running from Pocatello to Helena where there are numerous washouts from Market Lake to Idaho Falls.

The loss that will be sustained is enormous. The cost of building the 186 miles of road referred to and which parallels the Columbia river for the whole of that distance was $25,000 per mile. In Mr. Burley's opinion, that added to what the inhabitants of Portland will lose, will aggregate millions. It is the worst calamity that has ever visited the northwest.

Latter information, however, is to the effect that the damage is not so great as at first reported.

Captain Willard Young, now city engineer, who is better acquainted, perhaps, on the Columbia river, than another Usonian, was asked for his opinion as to whether the great Cascade Locks a goodly portion of which were constructed under his supervision would stand the terrible strain they were now put to. In connection therewith he told the story of their building. They are the largest in the world, but are not yet complete. The work of building was commenced in 1878 under Colonel Wilson, who now has charge of the government buildings at Washington. Progress, however, has been slow on account of Congress appropriating only about $100,000 per year for the work. The original estimate of cost was $2,000,000. Up to date about $1,500,000 has been spent and a great deal remains yet to be done.

Mr. Young had charge of the work from 1883 to 1884 and says that it is simply stupendous and his description left no doubt as to that. It was as strong as man and money could make it and yet he fears that it may have been washed away during the present floods. The Columbia river runs very swift at that point. The fall is twenty-four feet to 3,000. The purpose was to make the stream navigable.

Said Mr. Young: "There is a very pretty legend among the Indians as to the formation of the Cascade. It is that at one time there was a great natural stone bridge spanning from the Washington to the Oregon side of the river at that point. The mountains there are high and precipitous and the gorge narrow where the river passes through. The story runs that Mt. St. Helens on one side and Mt. Hood on the other engaged in a quarrel and while great volcanic eruptions were going on, threw stones at each other in such volleys and with such force as to break down the bridge, cause it to tumble into the stream below and form a sort of waterfall, giving it the name of Cascade."

CHINESE RIOTS.

(Copyrighted by Frank G. Carpenter, 1894.)

KIUKIANG, China, May 2, 1894.

SEE the long-haired barbarians! Look at the kidnapers of babies! There goes a pig-goat blue-eyed devil!"

These are some of the expressions which are hurled at me in Chinese in every city I visit. A tall Chinaman, in a blue silk gown and big spectacles, spat at me as I walked through the streets here this morning, and wherever I stop a crowd collects and the remarks which my interpreter translates for me are by no means elegant nor polite. At Hankow I had great trouble in getting a man to go about with me. There was a well educated Chinaman, who spoke good English, but he said if he went the people would call him "a foreigner's dog," and he evidently did not want to be seen on the street in my company. I confess I don't like it. Even the babies yell at the foreigners in some of these towns. The dogs, who will not molest a strange native, recognize a foreigner by his smell, and rush for him, snapping at his heels. I carry a good club and I think that this protects me to a certain extent from both dogs and men. This is one of the most rebellious parts of China, and the Chinese here are far different from those you find in America. They are big, broad-shouldered fellows, with stronger features than the men of South China, whence our coolies come. They speak a different language and are more independent in their actions. The better classes all over the empire hate the foreigners, and the millions which the Viceroy of Hankow is putting into his factories and rolling mills are spent because he hopes by them to make China entirely independent of the rest of the world.

It was throughout this Yangtse valley that the great riots of 1891 began, and they extended from here all over the empire. They resulted in the massacre of hundreds upon hundreds of native Christians, and for a time all sorts of foreigners feared for their lives. At Wusueh one of the English customs officers and a Methodist missionary were killed by the mob and foreign property was burned and looted at a dozen different stations along the river. Today an intense dislike for foreigners prevails among the literary and official classes of the empire.

They look upon us as savages and boors, and they would it they dared sweep us from the country today. It is from them that the stories come as to the wickedness of the Europeans. They distribute books full of all sorts of lies about the missionaries, and the chief cause of every riot comes from such publications. Just before the Tientsin massacre a pamphlet was issued charging the foreigners with stealing Chinese babies and cutting them up for medicine, and the same stories were printed and shipped over the empire by the million during the riots of three years ago. At this time there were published colored prints, under the title of the "Devil's Picture Gallery." These represented in the vilest of scenes the alleged practices and institutions of the religion of the foreigners. I have secured a set of those prints, and they lie before me as I write. I have also procured a translation of the Chinese characters which surround them and which so explain the pictures that the most ignorant Chinaman can see just what they mean. The word for hog and Jesus are pronounced almost the same in Chinese and the Christian religion is called here the worship of the hog. Among the pictures are cuts of hogs, labeled Jesus, hanging to crosses, with Chinese men and women kneeling before them and other men and women going through the most obscene and licentious performances in the back-ground. One of the hogs so hung is filled with arrows, which Chinese soldiers are shooting into him, and a mandarin is directing the attack. The foreigners are represented in these pictures by goats, the words or characters representing the two being practically the same, and one of the cuts is entitled "Slaughter the Pigs and the Goats." Some cuts represent the slaughter going on, and others incite the people to rise against the "hog sect," as they call us. The pictures state that the Christian religion is a worship of lust and the pigs and goats are painted with green heads, which in Chinese typifies this. Many of the paintings could not be described, much less illustrated, in any respectable newspaper, and the whole is incendiary in the extreme. Many of the common people believe the stories. They look upon us as demons, who are possessed of witchcraft powers, and backed, as some of the publications are, by extracts from public government documents, they receive full credit.

In the blue books of China, for instance, you find how the foreigners scoop out the eyes of Chinamen for medicine or to grind up to make photographic materials. The Chinese have eyes which are invariably black. They think that their eyes have different qualities from ours, and that we are always seeking to get them. In one of these prints, which I have, two blood-thirsty villains in foreign clothes are cutting out the eyes of a dead Chinaman, while another foreigner is gloating over a saucer full of eyes, which he has just captured. The blue books of China say that the Christians shroud the dead that they may hide this scooping out of the eyes, and from my translation of "The Death-blow to Corrupt Doctrines" I copy the following:

"In case of funerals the religious teachers of the Christian sect eject all the relatives and friends from the house, and the corpse is put into the coffin with closed doors. Both eyes are secretly taken out and the orifice sealed up with a plaster. They call this the sealing of the eyes for the western journey. * * * The reason for extracting the eyes is this: From 100 pounds of Chinese lead can be extracted eight pounds of silver, and the remaining ninety-two pounds can be sold at the original cost. But the only way to obtain this silver is by compounding the lead with the eyes of a Chinaman. The eyes of foreigners are of no use for this purpose. Hence, they do not take out those of their own people, but only those of the Chinese." The writer here goes on to speak of the use of Chinese eyes as photographic material, and he shows that these eyes spread over the surface in a way to take magic pictures, which the Christians prize.

Further on in the work there is an extract from the public records, showing how a Chinese scholar cheated a missionary and saved his eyes. I copy the extract verbatim:

"In the reign of the Emperor Wan Lie a foreigner, named Pa-Ta-Li, came into Chekiang and began to persuade men to join the Christian sect, and great numbers were ensnared by him. Now, there was a certain military undergraduate, named Wang-Wen-Mu, an athlete, who, hearing that when any one who joined this sect died they secretly took out his eyes, had a desire to test the matter. So for some days he ate nothing, and word was sent to the priest that he was about to die. The priest came, and, sure enough, he had a little knife in his hand. Coming forward, he was about to cut out Wang's eyes, when he, springing up suddenly, beat him and drove him out of his house and cut off his head and destroyed his image of Jesus. When this affair came to be known in the capital the emperor rewarded him liberally."

Speaking of the medical treatment of the foreigners, these books describe just how the foreigners make them. I would say first, however, that the average Chinaman of the interior knows no distinction between German, French, English or American. Merchant and missionary are all one to him, and a great riot will kill the men in business as well as the preachers of the Gospel. These books, which have been circulated by the million all over China, state that the brains of Chinese babies are very valuable to us, and a part of the recent riots at Wuhu were caused by two missionary nuns calling some children into one of their houses. Their parents had an infectious disease, and the nuns wanted to protect the children from it. A relative of one of the children tried to take them away, but the children would not go, and he roused the people, telling them the nuns were going to kill the children and use their eyes for medicine. In a short time a mob of 6,000 infuriated Chinese was collected. The nuns were arrested and the buildings of the missionaries burned. After the riot was over a placard in Chinese was put up by the rioters inciting the people to more bloodshed. I visited the town yesterday. It is a dirty Chinese city lying on the banks of the Yangtse, and is now comparatively peaceful. The mission buildings have been rebuilt. The placard I spoke of is quite long, but a part of it reads as follows:

"The country is betrayed and the people are ruined. Human beings are trampled down and reduced to dust. Lately the Christians are building churches in every portion of this city. Every convert is paid a monthly sum of $6, and it is by such means that ignorant males and females are led to enter churches where men and women congregate together without discrimination. Now women are procured from other places and are paid to abduct children, whose eyes and intestines are taken out and whose hearts and kidneys are cut off. What crimes have these little children done that they should suffer these horrible deaths?" The proclamation then goes on to state how the children were being smuggled away and cites a number of instances of Chinese babies which have disappeared through the magic of the foreigners. It states that a year ago a woman by the name of Shen had a one-year-old child lying in a cradle, when "it was taken away in the twinkling of an eye, cradle and all, without leaving the slightest trace." It speaks of underground cells where the devilish foreigners hide the babies, and closes by calling upon the people to rise and drive out the barbarian thieves.

The riots of 1891 were general. They extended all over the empire and proclamations inciting the people to drive out the foreigners were everywhere put up. Dates were fixed upon again and again for a massacre, and the Hunanites, among other threats, said they would butcher the Christians, foreign and native, and slice them into pieces, and weighing divide them among the people for a cannibal feast. These Hunanites are the best soldiers of the empire. They come from an immense province south of here and are the most fierce of all the Chinese. They form to a large extent the great secret society known as the Koloa Hui, and they have their organization everywhere. They are especially strong at Nanking and from that point the working of the rioters seemed to be directed. There is no doubt but that the educated classes of the Chinese incite these troubles. They say they come from the people and they cannot control them, but this is evidently false. At Hankow the viceroy or governor of the state, who lives in the big capital city of Wuchang, just across the river, said he could do nothing, and thousands of Chinese students who were there to attend the examinations collected on the walls of the city to watch the people massacre the foreigners. At this time, however, an English gunboat appeared on the scene. Its commander sent his compliments to the governor, saying it was unfortunate that he could not control his people, for at the first outbreak he would have to shell the city. The messenger then went on as follows: "The commander would regret this very much, as his guns are pointed just in the line of your excellency's palace, and they will probably destroy it." It was wonderful how quickly Wuchang became quiet. Runners were sent out by the hundreds from the palace that night to all parts of the town, and one of the most rebellious cities became the most respectful and quiet. The tracts against the Christians and the books and pictures, which I have described are gotten up by the scholars of the empire. One book is called "Death to the Devil's Religion," and eight men alone subscribed to 800,000 of these and scattered them over the empire. Boat loads of these books were carried through the provinces near here and the pawnbrokers and book-sellers aided in getting them to the people. Doggerel songs against the Christians are written and taught to the children in some of the cities, and you hear their cries of derision hurled at you everywhere you go.

These pictures of which I have already written paint not only the Christians on earth, but they show their fate after death. In one all the horrors of the Buddhist hell are called to bear upon them. A hog labeled Jesus is being sawed in two by two devils, and other devils are tormenting the foreigners. One picture shows how the foreign books should be burned, and there is a great fire, with Chinese coolies bringing stacks of columns and throwing them into the fire. In the background are foreigners tied to crosses and Chinamen tormenting them. On the ground lie other foreigners, held by Chinamen, while other celestials pour down their throats, through funnels, the vilest of slops. This print is labeled the beating of the devils and the burning of the books, and the Chinese characters on margins read: "The depraved religion of the hog is propagated from foreign lands. Its followers insult heaven and extirpate ancestors. Ten thousand arrows and a thousand swords will not expiate their crimes. Their magical books stink like dung. Let them be burned and let—be poured down the throats of the devils."

Another cartoon states that it is hateful that the name of Jesus should descend to a thousand generations, and it describes how the believers should be treated as above. It states that all Chinese believers should be forced to drink slops and to defile the picture of a cross placed before them. Another shows how children are mutilated for the making of foreign medicines, and a third contains a picture of a nude Chinese woman tied down in a chair, while two villainous-looking Englishmen are cutting slices out of her for use in the manufacture of their devilish potions. Another shows a woman so tied, with her breasts cut off, and the Chinese script states that the foreigners catch Chinese girls and cut off their nipples and breasts. There are in all thirty-two of these vile sheets. They are each about twice the size of a sheet of commercial note and are printed in half a dozen different colors. The work is fairly good, from a Chinese standpoint, though it would be considered very bad in any European country.

I can't describe the effect such things have on the lower classes of the Chinese. They despise us as a nation, and they believe all such reports as these. The missionaries work among them under the greatest of disadvantages and they really do a vast deal of good. No one, however, can appreciate the awful difficulties they have to contend with, and the lies which they have to refute at every step. If it were not for the literati and scholars they could make more headway. As it is, I find their churches in every city I have visited, and I have seen a number of mission schools. In all of the points where the riots occurred they were for months in danger of their lives, and the man who thinks that preaching the Gospel to the heathen Chinese is a sinecure is very much mistaken.

"INDUSTRIALISTS" IN UTAH.

FROM THURSDAY DAILY, MAY 31.

The advance guard of the "Dr." Smith wing of "Industrial Army" arrived in this city shortly before noon today. They form the minstrel part of the organization and are anxious to give a show in Salt Lake before they leave here.

They camped at Bountiful last night and with the brazenness that has characterized their former conduct in this Territory, informed the citizens of that quiet place that they would move along just as soon as arrangements could be made to transport them and their baggage this way on wagons. That was done this morning and the people of Bountiful are heartily glad they are rid of their presence.

Smith and the remainder of his men camped at Layton last night and this morning headed this way. They will arrive here tonight says Chief Pratt, and by midnight it is expected that not less than 300 of them will be in Salt Lake.

Not a few of Smith's men declare their intention to stop here and go to work on the gravity sewer. To prevent such a proceeding Boyle and a number of other representatives of the home reserves waited on some of the city officials this forenoon and requested that the Smithites be given no work or encouragement to remain. They further asked that their own members be protected from the invaders, but were informed that under the order of the court Smith and his men could go where they pleased and would only be interfered with or punished when they broke the law.

It has been decided that they will not be given aid by the city in any way. They must look out for themselves. In case their wants are not attended to by the home reserve they will be permitted to send out soliciting committees among the citizens. How long they intend to remain is not known.

Chief Pratt at 3 o'clock this afternoon received a telephone message from the lime kiln companies near the Warm Springs asking for protection to their property from the ravages of the Smith horde. They claim that they are afraid the men will help themselves to coal and provisions and other articles that may suit their fancy.

DESERET NEWS BUREAU,

Camp of the Industrialists,

Davis County, May 31, 1894.

All was quiet at the camp of the Industrial Army, near the Davis county line, on Tuesday night. About 8 o'clock dark clouds were seen floating about the sky and the wind began to blow strongly. It looked as though there would be a downpour of rain sufficient to cleanse the camp and its inmates.

The men were almost blinded with sand, which whirled through the air, and some of them becoming tired of their situation on the sandridge packed their blankets and took up the trail for Ogden; they changed their minds, however, on finding it too severe work to cross the ridge in the storm. Others made threats that should it rain they would cross the Davis county line and make a march toward Salt Lake even if they were shot down for so doing. They finally decided that they could stand it as well as the policeman and remained.

At 9 o'clock word was received in camp from Chief Pratt, asking that a wagon be sent to the station to meet a R. G. W. special which would arrive at 9:30. This message was construed to mean that the injunction had been dissolved. A wagon was sent, and at 10:20 Mr. Sheets arrived in the camp, bringing the news that the officers should roll their bedding and march to the special, which then awaited them. This was done in a quiet manner, and at 10:30 the officers left the Industrials sleeping on the sand and unaware of what was going on. At 11:15 p.m. the train started for Salt Lake. By 12 o'clock the police were making their march from the depot to the city hall and the Industrials still slept on the sandridge. The "general," Dr. Smith, was in Ogden and knew of the course which had been taken, but failed until a late hour to communicate the news to his men at camp.

The army is now making its march towards Salt Lake City and will arrive there tonight or early in the morning. It is expected they will be given one meal in the capital and be ordered to resume their journey south. They may remain in Salt Lake City two or three hours.

Some of the people of Davis county are displeased with the action taken in allowing these Industrialists to pass through the county after retaining them on the line for so many days and putting Davis county and Salt Lake City to an expense to keep them out. If they go through without committing serious depredations, however, this feeling probably will be modified. It is said that very few of Dr. Smith's force are American citizens. Many of them speak the English language imperfectly.

FROM FRIDAY'S DAILY JUNE 1.

"Dr." Smith's followers reached the Hot Springs this forenoon and pitched their camp within the city limits. Last night they were the guests of Bountiful. This evening they will parade the principal streets of this city.

The "Home Reserves" are still collecting something for the new arrivals to eat and wear. While the two organizations are engaged in a similar cause they are not so friendly as they might be. There is great anxiety on the part of the former to have the Californians resume their journey as soon as possible.

Tomorrow night the Sutterites—sixty in number—will give a minstrel performance in the Salt Lake Theater. Originally these formed a part of the Smith "army" but were either cast out or divorced themselves from the hosts who were so long held near the Davis county line. Each accuses the other of theft and dishonesty and wishes it understood that there is nothing in common between them.

Smith and his men anticipated matters somewhat by marching up town this afternoon. They came in regular procession and paraded the principal thoroughfares behind a brass band of five pieces. Smith's diminutive form was prominent at the head of the column proper, which was preceded by a detachment of the "Home Reserves" under command of Vinson.

Several of the Smith Industrialists bore inscriptions announcing that they would give a performance at Central theater on Commercial street tonight for their own benefit. The affair will be separate and distinct from the Sutterite minstrel show at the Salt Lake Theater tomorrow night.

FROM MONDAY'S DAILY, JUNE 4.

The ordinary routine business of the county court was interrupted for a short time this forenoon by a personal application for aid from the county on behalf of "General" Smith and his army of Industrialists, who are temporarily located in this city.

The spokesman was Mr. John Whitbeck, and he stood there alone; not even the "general" had accompanied him.

"I have something to present before your honorable body," he began, and then proceeded to explain that he had been sent there as a committee appointed by the "home reserve," and also on the request of "General" Smith. The "general" was in the city with some 325 men; but whether their mission was right or wrong he (the speaker) was not there to discuss. All he had to ask of the county court was to appropriate—if in its judgment it saw fit—five days' provisions for consumption by Smith's contingent. If this favor were granted them they would pledge themselves to leave Salt Lake for good tonight. While detained on the Davis county line they were obliged to eat the stock of provisions in hand, and had thus run out. "Of course," chirruped Mr. Whitbeck, "these men will have to be fed if they remain in this city; and the 'home reserve' requested me to lay these facts before you. There is no danger of their scattering throughout the Territory if assistance is given them now; they will go straight away."

Judge Blair—We have got a good many poor of our own in this city—residents who are in very straitened circumstances.

Mr. Whitbeck—I am aware of that, but here we have 325 who do not belong to here, and if they are "left to remain" we may have more still. These men are very anxious, I know, to get away.

Judge Blair—Well, I think Davis county ought to make up the deficiency. They are the people who stopped them.

Mr. Whitbeck—I cannot say anything as to that. The court is as well acquainted with the circumstances as I am. We do not want these men in Salt Lake; we do not want them to remain in the Territory either. They claim that they are going east, and want to get back to their homes.

A conversation ensued as to what sum would be required to furnish the five days' provisions applied for, and on this opinion appeared to differ.

Selectman Bamberger said the question was simply this: If these men were here hungry, they must be fed by somebody. We could not allow them to starve. If the county court deemed it advisable to give them sufficient food to carry them out of Salt Lake county, and it was possible to see them safely through it, then this body would have done its duty; and he thought it would be a wise act.

Judge Blair—As they are here I suppose something ought to be done to get them out. If not, and they should remain, I guess the county would have to keep them if the citizens would not contribute, and their patience is doubtless pretty well exhausted by this time.

Selectman Morris remarked that inasmuch as the holding of Smith's Industrials, so called, at the line separating Weber and Davis counties, was unwarranted by law, unprecedented in the history of this Territory, and unauthorized by the authorities of Davis county, honor, fairness and simple justice should prompt restitution by the man or power that instigated the wrong. But as "these blunderers" had thus far shown no disposition to make the amends honorables, he would move:

"That inasmuch as Selectman Bamberger is the authorized representative of this court, empowered to supply the necessities of indigent poor, to him be referred this request for assistance from 'General' Smith and his Industrials, and that he have full power to act in the premises."

Selectman Cahoon seconded.

Judge Blair—This is predicated on the supposition that when the provisions are supplied they will move off at once.

Mr. Whitbeck—There is no question about that.

The motion was then put and carried unanimously.

Selectman Bamberger will take the matter under his consideration upon the adjournment of the county court this afternoon, and make the necessary inquiries before an appropriation is made. At 3:30, however, the court was still in session.

FROM TUESDAY'S DAILY, JUNE 5.

In accordance with the resolutions passed at yesterday morning's session of the County Court, Selectman Bamberger last evening took the initial step toward furnishing provender for "General" Smith's stranded contingent. He sent out to their camp 100 loaves of bread, 125 pounds of meat, and ten pounds of coffee, and upon this supply the men made a fine supper. This morning breakfast was supplied to them from the same source.

Selectman Bamberger went out to the camp this morning to make the necessary inquiries before making the five days' allowance solicited on behalf of the contingent by Mr. John Whitbeck yesterday, and at the same time to have an understanding as to whether the "Smithites" would be ready to clear out of this locality forthwith.

Upon arrival at the camp near the glass works, Mr. Bamberger had a talk with the "principals" of the party, and the list of the army's "wants," as given by them, if the things enumerated had been all furnished, would have en-talled a bill of something like $600. But the selectman "boiled down" this considerably. He will not, however, for good reasons, make public the amount actually expended until tomorrow.

It was stated to the County court yesterday that Smith's men numbered 325. Mr. Bamberger could discover only 195, at the most; and for this number he provided. The supply includes, among other articles, flour, beans, bacon, coffee, tea, oatmeal, ten bushels of potatoes, and soap. The goods were sent over to Murray about noon, and will be handed over to the army on their arrival there, en route east.

The company left Salt Lake between two and three p. m. Adieu!

THE "ARMY" ELSEWHERE.

DENVER, May 28.—"Brigadier General" Morris says the Denver commonweal army will not start for Washington till 2,500 men have been enrolled. It now numbers 682. It is estimated that 700 more are on their way to Denver. Carter with 275 Utah Industrialists has reached Pueblo en route for Denver.

Callahan, one of Carter's lieutenants left with seventy-five men, saying the Denver commonwealers were too slow for them.

Carter and 275 men are on the road from Pueblo.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., May 28.—Forty-eight of Bennett's commonwealers from Denver arrived here this morning and joined Sanders's crowd. They were all driven from the reservation and camped in a grove. The remainder of Bennett's men will arrive tonight, and the Topeka army tonight or tomorrow. Sanders says the consolidated armies will leave here on Wednesday. Sanders and his engineer have given bonds for their appearance for trial next September.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 28.—A special to the Times from Topeka, Kan., says: H. U. Artz, who was removed from the adjutant-generalship of Kansas by Governor Lewelling, will lead the Topeka contingent of the commonweal army to Washington.

HELENA, Mont., May 28.—Helena is going to lose its Coxey army. The city council has made a proposition to the men that the people of Helena would provide a number of wagons to haul their supplies and bedding and tools to Fort Benton, where lumber would be provided for them to build boats to float down the river. The men have accepted the proposition.

HELENA, Mont., May 29.—Helena succeeded on Sunday in getting rid of the Montana corps of the commonweal army, but she now has on her hands about as many of the Washington army.

The leaders say there will be 3,000 of the Washington army pass through this city in the next two weeks. Five leaders of the Washington army who were arrested last week, after they had stolen a Northern Pacific train near Arlee, had a hearing before Federal Judge Knowles today. The charge against them was contempt of court. J. W. Kelly, a brother of the leader of the army now camped in Missouri, was sent to jail for six months, as was Engineer John Ross, alias Grant, an ex-convict, who has served two terms in the Montana penitentiary, one for burglary, and one for horse-stealing. The others, William Blair, Stuart Leckie, and Thomas Davidson, were sent to jail for thirty days each.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 29.—Kelly's Industrials were visited by at least ten thousand people at the camp today. General Kelly spent the morning in making his men comfortable for their stay here, which will be until Friday next, when they will continue their journey to Washington via the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. About 100 new members were recruited today.

There is a storm gathering about the head of General Kelly of the California Industrial army. Three members of the army say they shall make charges before United States Commissioner Cawford against their commander. When the command left Des Moines it included a glee club of eleven men. They say the money earned by the singing was turned over to Kelly, who wanted to get rid of them because they knew of his alleged irregularities in the handling of the money. At Alton, Ill., they say Kelly took possession of their boat and turned it adrift, leaving them on shore. They arrived here on foot today.

ST. LOUIS, May 31.—Kelly's commonweal army divided today and 500 of them, under "Colonel" George Speed, of California, will hereafter march or float by themselves. The cause is the alleged arbitrariness of Kelly.

Judge Lubke told "Colonel" Speed that he had a perfect right to surround the commissary boats and prevent their removal and then apply for a receiver. A division of property and funds will be sought through the courts. The existing troubles do not seem to have any effect upon the recruiting, some 300 men having joined the army since its arrival here.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 1.—Kelly's navy left St. Louis after a lively scrimmage with Speed's seceders. Kelly stole a march on Speed, quietly putting all rations on board the commissary boat under guard. The Kellyites captured about a hundred boats but his men could not all get in. Two hundred marched to Carondelet, where the naval forces joined them for breakfast. Speed's followers intend to sell the twenty-eight boats they have and go overland.

After Kelly's departure, Marshall McCambridge, of Madison, appeared with a warrant for his arrest on the charge of attempting to shoot Patrick P. Holdeman, near Alton, a week ago. Kelly has not since touched Illinois.

CAIRO, Ill., June 4.—The mayor today issued a quarantine proclamation against the entrance of the Kelly Industrial navy into this city, on account of the navy having been exposed to the smallpox. The navy will reach here Wednesday.

BOISE, Ida., June 4.—Arguments in the Coxeyite cases were made today. The decision is to be rendered tomorrow morning.

MASSILLON, O., June 4.—Jacob Coxey, the incarcerated reformer, has accepted the nomination for Congress in the McKinley district of Ohio, in a letter to the People's party committee, dated at Washington, "Parlor 67, U. S. Jail." In his letter he charges England with having precipitated the money panic here, with the aid of willing allies in this country. He saw the necessity of immediate action and took it. For this he was arrested by order of the money power.

He refers to Judge Miller as "Pontius Pilate," President Cleveland as "Fiberius" and a number of prominent public men as "Congressional Judases."

CHICAGO, June 5.—Clarke's commonweal army, sixty strong, reached Chicago last night and camped in Garfield park. The army attempted to capture a train on the Chicago and Northwestern road at Des Plaines, but was driven off. The men were well supplied with provisions.

TREMENDOUS FLOODS.

PUEBLO, Colo., May 31.—The rain fall over eastern Colorado the past thirty-six hours is the heaviest ever known. In some parts it exceeds five inches. The flood here was the worst ever experienced. The Arkansas has broken the levies in six places. A sea covers an area of three quarters of a mile square in the city, and the water has risen above the first floors in the buildings. Hundreds of men in boats are rescuing the families and goods. No loss of life is reported. The five railroads into the city are tied up owing to washouts, landslides and wrecked bridges. The communication north is cut off, as the wires are all down.

DENVER, May 31.—Communication with Pueblo is cut off, all wires being down. It is known that the lower part of the city, including many business houses and the Union depot, is under two feet of water. No loss of life is reported. No trains are running west or south, owing to washouts and landslides.

A cave-in in the Hagerman tunnel on the Colorado Midland is reported, how serious, it is not known. Five spans of the Santa Fe railroad bridge over the Arkansas river at Nepesta are gone. It is feared that the whole bridge will be destroyed. The bridge on the Rio Grande, 25 miles west of Pueblo, is washed away. Large washouts occurred on both the Rio Grande and Colorado Midland between Colorado Springs and Manitou.

SPOKANE, Wash., June 1.—Further particulars from the terrible flood which destroyed the town of Condonully, Wash., Sunday, have been received.

In addition to the flood in the creek, a cloud-burst occurred, increasing the volume of water into a raging torrent. Everything was swept before the flood. Trees, houses and rocks came down upon the beautiful flat, where they lodged, forming a jam fifteen feet high at places. Nothing is left except a few parts of seven buildings. When the flood was within a half mile of town, it was seen and every one fled to higher land. All succeeded except A. Spencer, of Walla Walla, who was struck by a drift and carried to the lake, where he was rescued. A. W. Tullock, druggist who was sick, was carried down stream 200 yards and landed in a jam where he was taken out alive after the water subsided. Outside aid is necessary. The loss is complete as there was no chance to save property. Even people who put their goods on high ground lost everything.

SPOKANE, Wash., May 30.—Word reached here today that the town of Conconully, Wash., was swept away by the flood. Every business house in town was destroyed. There is much suffering among the people, as they saved nothing.

VANCOUVER, B. C., May 30.—The Fraser river has broken over and a raging torrent is dealing destruction and death. Whole herds of cattle and flocks of sheep have been drowned, while the villages on the banks of the stream are afloat. Eight lives are known to be lost, and many other bodies are reported having been seen in the stream.

PORTLAND, Or., May 30.—All the high water records were beaten here at 1 o'clock this afternoon, when the river reached twenty-eight and nine-tenths feet above the low water mark. Reports from the upper Columbia are such that a rise of at least thirty feet above low water mark is expected.

VANCOUVER, B. C., June 1.—The Fraser river rose ten inches at Westminster yesterday and last night. The water was three inches above the highest historical mark. The flood is still gaining. From points further up the river come reports that the river is nearly two feet higher than has ever been known.

Fraser valley for over 100 miles has been devastated. So great has been destruction that steamers passing through the straits of San Juan de Fuca are now encountering floating roofs of houses and barns and innumerable carcasses of hogs, sheep and cattle that have passed through the Fraser's mouth with other debris from the valley. It is estimated that over 2,000 families are homeless and that a property loss of fully $3,000,000 has been suffered.

PUEBLO, Colo., May 31.—Pueblo was visited last night by the worst flood in its history. Several thousand people were rendered homeless and property damaged to the amount of probably $300,000. Four breaks in the levee on the north side and two on the south side flooded a large district.

The Denver & Rio Grande Railroad company is a heavy loser by the flood, both from the washing out of the track and the delay of trains. There are a dozen small washouts between Florence and Pueblo on the west end, and several between Buettos and Pueblo on the north end.

On the Santa Fe the condition of affairs is fully as bad as on the other roads.

DENVER, June 1.—The Platte river continued to rise until 3 a. m. today and a raging torrent was rushing through the city. In Jerome Park, Colfax and river bottoms in the city 350 families were compelled to flee to higher ground. One boy was drowned. The Embankment and railroad track were washed away in several places. The damage is not heavy but the inconvenience is great. It will be several days before the trains can be run on schedule time. There are serious washouts on the Rio Grande and Santa Fe roads. Thirty miles of the South Park road in the Platt canyon are inundated. The loss to the railroad is the heaviest experienced in this state.

LONGMONT, Colo., June 1.—All the crops of one of the richest grain regions in the state have been destroyed. The loss is very heavy.

BOULDER, Colo., June 1.—The pipe factory, five houses, railroad tracks and all the city and railroad bridges have been washed away by the flood of Boulder creek. Poverty flats are submerged. The Sunset branch of the Gulf railroad and the Mountain road are entirely gone. Crisman and Salina, mining camps in Boulder canyon are wiped out of existence. They had a population of about 200. No lives were lost. Many placer mines are ruined. The loss in and around Boulder is estimated at $500,000. Boulder has had no communication with any outside point since Wednesday until today, as the telegraph wires were down and the roads impassable.

PORTLAND, Or., June 1.—The flood in the Columbia continues to increase and the indications are that the worst is yet to come. Last night the Upper Columbia at several points was at a standstill, but reports today show that the river is again rising about one foot in twenty-four hours.

The river is more than a foot higher than ever before known and the damage will be immense. The fertile bottom lands from the river, from the Rocky Mountains to the sea, a distance of 500 miles, are all inundated. Crops are ruined, houses washed away, and stock drowned.

Today's mails from The Dalles bring the information that the government locks at the Cascades are in danger. About 400 sacks filled with sand were sent from The Dalles to the locks, where they will be used to stop any break that may occur in the dam being constructed around the head of the locks.

PORTLAND, Ogn., June 2.—The Willamette river has reached the unprecedented height of thirty feet above low water mark. The weather east to the Cascade mountains continues exceptionally warm and the immense snow fields melting fast indicate a continuous rise for several days. At the Dalles most of the entire business portion and a large part of the residential district are inundated. Considerable apprehension is felt for the government locks at the Cascades.

TACOMA, Wash., June 2.—Ninety-five miles of Northern Pacific track between Horse Plains, Montana, and Hope, Idaho, are under water. Definite flood news was received late last night on the arrival of three delayed Northern Pacific overlands. Colonel F. D. Heustis, the railroad builder, was a passenger. He says the water was still rising when the train left Hope. Hundreds of farms along Clark's fork, never overflowed before, are devastated under four to six feet of water. Settlers rushed to the high lands, hundreds of horses and cattle were drowned. Several bridges have been washed out.

The Canadian Pacific yesterday began transferring passengers by steamer on the Fraser river from Ruby to Mission, a distance of 39 miles.

Between those points there are washouts and long sections of the track are under water.

VANCOUVER, B. C., June 2.—The Fraser river is still rising. When darkness came in last night the flood during the day had gained another inch at Westminster, three inches at Mission and four inches at Langley. At Chilliwack the flood gained six inches, inundating a large area of land that had been thought to be safe. The work of rescue still continues, and it is thought nearly all of the imperilled settlers and as many of their cattle and horses as remained alive, have now been carried to places of safety.

Funds are being raised and provisions collected for the homeless settlers. The hot weather, and a great depth of snow still remains in the mountains. There is every indication that the water will rise much higher.

DENVER, June 2.—The total loss in Colorado from floods is over a million dollars. The rivers are now receding and the danger past.

VANCOUVER, B. C., June 4.—Four million dollars will hardly cover the loss by the Fraser river flood, and there is no sign of abatement. A prominent railway officer thinks the loss of life will reach one hundred. The Canadian Pacific company has over 2,000 men working night and day. From Prevelstoke to the sea, 480 miles along the railway, is now a watery waste. The last point above Vancouver which can now be reached is Ruby Creek, 82 miles distant.

PORTLAND, Or., June 4.—The water has risen six inches. No news can be obtained from the upper Columbia region or the Puget Sound country. From the mouth of the Willamette to Cathlamet, the low lands are flooded. At some places the house-tops are barely visible, and floating houses are a common sight. Kalama is entirely under water.

In this city many wharves along the river front are snapping and cracking in an ominous fashion. On nearly all are valuable goods, which cannot be removed. The gas company was compelled to cease operations today.

The river reached the thirty-two foot mark this evening and is still rising. Hundreds of persons whose places of business are submerged have moved out and established new temporary places. In the lower portions of the city, where a great many poor persons live, the condition is most deplorable. Great numbers have been driven out by the invading waters and have taken temporary refuge wherever shelter can be found. Much distress already prevails.

CENTRAL CITY, Colo., June 4.—Letters have been sent to the officials of the Union Pacific, Denver and Gulf road stating that if trains are not run as far as Black Hawk in the next two or three days there will be much suffering here for want of provisions, and that the coal supply is already very short.

The damage from the flood cannot be estimated in figures. What will yet develop from it is impossible to say. The miners are the principal sufferers and to them untold damage is done. The Saratoga mine will probably be compelled to close down permanently and others for some time.

It will probably be a week or ten days before a train can reach Black Hawk. The first mail to reach here since Wednesday was received yesterday. It was carried from Golden by special conveyance.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

CHICAGO, May 29.—Clad in gorgeous fabrics and frigid formality seventeen Chinamen met last night and re-established the order of Tong Gee Hong in Chicago. This fraternity had existed in this city for many years, but about eight months ago was disbanded because of dissensions. The society is now arranging for a permanent lodge room which will be fitted up in oriental magnificence.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Claus Spreckles has pronounced views on the Hawaiian situation, where his sugar plantations lie. "The present provisional government," he said "is bound to go to smash. There has not been a revolution in the islands, but there will be one before long, and no mistake."

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 28.—While workmen were blasting in May street, Fredonia, Chatauqua county, Saturday morning they turned up a slab three feet long, four feet wide and one foot thick, bearing an inscription which was very clear when the stone had been washed. One side of the stone was polished smooth and bore the following words: "Vos, est U nos aetatis mancipium et morio 5th year of Antem."

Scientists have visited the spot, inspected the slab, puzzled over the inscription and made many attempts at translating. All believe that the language was directly bearing on the almost forgotten belief of Antinomianism which flourished in the old world, particularly in England during Cromwell's reign. The fifth year of Antem, the date upon which the inscription was supposedly chiselled into the surface of the slab, would be in 1654. According to history the believers in Antinomianism interpreted the 4th chapter of Romans and the 2nd chapter of first Peter in such a manner that they believed men and women might violate laws of personal purity and still be good Christians. This sort of religion at one time had many disciples and its precepts were lived up to in the years which followed the reign of the dissolute Charles II. It was finally stamped out, lost sight of and forgotten. It is believed that some of these may have found their way through the wilderness and established temples in what is now Fredonia. Here they set up a temple and lived according to their peculiar belief. Their total disappearance may be accounted for on the basis that they lost their lives by falling victims to the Indians. Today further investigations will be made in the hopes of discovering additional relics of this forgotten belief. The slab will be preserved by the Chatauqua county historical society.

OMAHA, May 29.—Six years ago Dr. and Mrs. Ramacclatti adopted an eighteen-month-old boy at the St. Louis foundling hospital, St. Louis, Mo. His foster parents have since died and he has been declared their heir, inheriting nearly $500,000.

CARTHAGE, Ill., May 28.—The Rev. and Mrs. Frank Rand of this city, have for some years acted as missionaries in the Caroline islands, they returned home from the islands a few days ago. The board, under whose auspices Mr.

and Mrs. Rand went to Ponape in 1874, is acquainted with the main facts leading up to the troubles on these islands. The world in general has not known of these outrages in detail and Mr. Rand has made them generally public for the first time.

In 1887 Spain sent Gov. Posadillo to the islands to assume charge. He began to make slaves of the natives, requiring them to work constantly and to furnish their own food.

In September, 1889, Spain sent reinforcements to the islands under command of a new governor, Carrossa. Carrossa, learning that King Paul, of the Metatabim tribes, had not proposed to submit to Spain's demands, ordered the native villages shelled and a general onslaught on the islands. The missionaries were notified that they should no longer teach, and that they must go away or suffer the consequences. Consequently the American missionaries boarded the missionary ship, the Morning Star, and went to the island of Mokil.

In the meantime the Spanish ships opened fire on the native villagers, pouring a constant rain of shells and bullets into the huts of the natives. This warfare was kept up for three days and the natives were assailed by land troops. But only three natives were killed in this battle, while the Spanish loss was 300. This was the last battle between Spain and the natives, and since then Spain has been endeavoring to compel the stubborn tribes to yield to that power.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. May 28.—The medal—presented by the French government—bearing the insignia of the Legion of Honor, has been presented to Jennie Creek, the 10-year-old girl, of Milford, Blackford county, for saving the trainload of World's Fair passengers on the Panhandle railroad last summer. While walking along the track she discovered the trestle across a deep ravine was on fire and the World's Fair express with several hundred passengers on board, was nearly due. With remarkable presence of mind the little one tore off her red flannel petticoat, ran down the track until she came in sight of the approaching train and waved her skirt as a danger signal. A number of French passengers were aboard the train.

BROOKLYN, May 29.—Ex-justice of the peace Kenneth F. Sutherland was today sentenced to two years and eight months in Sing Sing and fined $500 for election frauds in the interest of John Y. McKane, at Gravesend, last November.

LA SALLE, Ill., May 29.—One hundred Winchester and several thousand rounds of ammunition arrived today for the citizens' protective association. Col. Bennett, I. R. G., received orders to send two companies of militia to Wenona today. A special train was made up and while the troops were getting aboard a telegram was received stating that the rioters had fled. The police have found the missing Pole Braskowski who, it was feared, had been murdered as a spy, concealed in a neighbors' house.

PORT TOWNSEND, Wash., May 29.—

Frank McDavitt, a restaurant keeper, lately of Port Angeles, has turned up here as a long lost heir to an estate in Chattanooga, Tenn., valued at $50,000. He had been absent from home fifteen years and several thousand dollars have been spent in vain endeavoring to ascertain his whereabouts.

CALCUTTA, May 29.—In addition to the loss of 200 lives by the bursting of a dam, formed by a landslide in Charkupria, Kalua, the Jettina overflowed its banks in north Cachay and inundated an area of hundreds of miles. The result has been a tremendous loss of property, and the loss of life is believed to be enormous. Whole villages have been destroyed. The flood is pronounced the most severe in many years.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The steamer Grecian, which reached port today from Glasgow, sighted eighty-one icebergs in passage.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 29.—All the way from Norway, her masts gaily decorated with flags and bunting, the steamer Cragge came into this harbor at an early hour this morning, the third sailing vessel to cross the Atlantic with a cargo to be delivered at Chicago. The first vessel was the Wergeland, which reached this port May 26, 1892, and the second was the Christiania, which sailed May 21, 1893. The Cragge sailed from Bergen, Norway, April 22.

MILAN, Mo., May 31.—The Taylor boys who murdered the Meeks family are located in an old cave twenty-three miles east of this city in the Chariton brakes. A posse has been organized to capture them.

The posse which left here last night will surround the cave, and at day-break this morning an attempt will be made to persuade them to come out, and if they refuse, more men will be called and an attempt will be made to blow up the cave with dynamite.

ATLANTIC, Ia., May 29.—General James B. Weaver was nominated today as the Populist candidate for Congress from the Seventh district.

ROME, May 30.—Two bombs were exploded almost simultaneously outside the windows of the minister of finance at 11 o'clock tonight. There is no clue to the authors of the outrage.

RICHMOND, Va., May 30.—Dedication of a monument to the memory of the private soldiers and sailors of the Confederacy was the occasion of a great celebration today. There was a cavalry reunion, at which General Fitzhugh Lee, Wade Hampton, Governor O'Ferrill, Rev. William Monce and General Rosser were present. The orator of the day was Rev. R. C. Cave.

In his address Cave said: "I am not one of those who fancy that right must always be on the side of might, and speak of Appomattox as the judgment of God. Instead of accepting the defeat of the South as a divine verdict against her, I regard it but as another instance of truth on the scaffold and wrong on the throne. [Tremendous applause.] Appomattox was a triumph of the physically stronger in a conflict between the representatives of two essentially different civilizations and antagonistic ideas of government. One side was the South, led by the descendants of cavaliers, who, with all their faults, had from a long line of ancestors a manly contempt for moral littleness, a high sense of honor, lofty regard for plighted faith. At Appemator, Puritanism, backed by overwhelming numbers and unlimited resources, prevailed, but brute force cannot settle questions of right and wrong.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 31.—For over fifteen months nine seamen, against whom no charge has been made, have been government prisoners at Angel Island. They were witnesses against St. Clair, Sparf and Hansen, the would-be pirates of the bark Hesper, who killed mate Fitzgerald, after having plotted to kill all the officers and to cruise the southern seas as free-booters. The witnesses were unable to give bonds and were thrown into the government penal institution pending an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Each has been allowed one dollar a day as witness fees, however, and they will be paid their money today, when all will be released in accordance with an order from Washington.

The death watch has been put upon the condemned pirates against whom they were witnesses.

AMESBURY, Mass., May 31.—Captain Nathan Peters, the oldest Free Mason in the United States, died this afternoon. He was born in Goshen, N. Y., in 1803, and joined the Masons in 1828.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—The Senate, Senator Mills of Texas alone voting no, today passed a resolution declaring that the United States will not interfere with the affairs of the Hawaiian Islands and the United States will regard the interference by any foreign power as an unfriendly act.

Pfeffer offered a resolution which was appropriately referred, instructing the judiciary committee to report whether the government of the United States could by virtue of an act of Congress constitutionally take possession, paying compensation therefor, of all the coal beds of the country.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, May 31.—J. K. Graves, of this city, has concluded the sale of Larrabee coal lands in Wyoming. The transaction was made in Chicago, and the purchasers are eastern capitalists. The coal is of superior quality and very abundant.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—Col. Fred C. Alnsworth, chief of the recorders of the pension division, indicted for manslaughter on account of Ford's theater disaster last June, in which more than a score of government clerks were killed, is now free. Justice M. Comas of the criminal court today ordered the indictment quashed, because it did not show that the felling of the building was due to the personal neglect of Alnsworth.

NEW YORK, May 31.—A terrific explosion occurred at 3 o'clock this morning in the distillery on the ground floor of the double tenement house, 129 Suffolk street, resulting in the death of Lizzie Yaega, aged 4 years, and seriously injuring four others. Twenty families tenanted the building. The fire cut them off from the stairway. Some older persons escaped by creeping on the narrow ledge of the second story to a window of the house. Two men used a net to catch the children dropped from the windows above. Fifteen were dropped through the sheet of flames which was leaping from the side of the building. Then the elder ones jumped. Mrs. Hyman Ehrenwost broke the blanket and was severely injured. Meyer Dietrick, aged 41, was badly injured. Several persons on the top floor were overcome by smoke and carried out by the firemen. Three persons were burned to death in the building two years ago.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 1.—The Call says that J. J. Klein, a Roumanian, is conducting negotiations for the purchase of 200,000 acres of land belonging to the Mitchell estate in Merced county, and that if the deal is carried through 14,000 Roumanians will settle in California as colonists. These Roumanians are of German descent and live in Bessarabia.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 1.—The Call says: Particulars have reached this city showing that the 200 persons reported to have been killed in one of the preliminary battles at Santa Ana, San Salvador, were the victims of one of the most horrible railroad accidents ever recorded.

On May 3rd President Ezeta went to the assistance of the city of Santa Ana, which was threatened by the rebels. Fifteen hundred men were placed on a special train, which started for Santa Ana. The insurgents, learning of the approach of the government troops, removed the rails from the track on a steep grade several leagues from Santa Ana.

The train rushed along at a high rate of speed and eight cars were telescoped. Two hundred men were killed and 120 wounded. President Ezeta had a narrow escape.

PARIS, Tex., June 1.—Cephus Wright and Thompson Wade were convicted in the Federal court yesterday of the murder of Mike Peter, near Atoka, in the Choctaw nation, on January 16. All the parties are Choctaw Indians.

BERLIN, June 1.—A dispatch to the Tageblatt from Sofia, Bulgaria, says two battalions of infantry and the entire police force have issued a manifesto in favor of ex-Premier Stambouloff. The dispatches add that a bloody fight has taken place between the rebelling soldiers and the police and local troops. Many were killed on both sides. Several disturbances directed against the prefects are reported from the provinces. One official is said to have been killed. On the other hand it is reported that Prince Ferdinand has received many telegrams thanking him for the dismissal of Stambouloff.

LONDON, June 1.—A dispatch to the Telegraph from Belgrade says: The following telegram has been received from Sofia: Ex-Premier Stambouloff and the officers who formed his cabinet are under arrest. Civil war has broken out. Two battalions of troops have rebelled and demand the reinstatement of Stambouloff. They have joined with the gendarmes in an attack on the troops, who have declared for Prince Ferdinand.

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 2.—Jeff Crawford, colored, who murdered W. P. Blackburn, a white, last December, was convicted at a recent term of court and sentenced to be hanged. He was lynched by a mob before day break.

LEAVENWORTH, Mass., June 2.—Today marks a crisis in the miners' strike in this city. Agitator McGregor was forced to leave the city two days ago and returned at noon today. Three hundred Leavenworth miners received him with wild cheering. Fully as many deputy sheriffs and police met the train, but no attempt was made to arrest McGregor. The strikers paraded, causing much excitement. At 4 o'clock a committee of citizens and miners will hold a conference. The miners will hold a mass meeting tonight.

GOLDEN, Colo., June 2.—Alexander McCurdy, who horribly mutilated his step brother, Charles Berry, last winter, was this morning taken from jail and lynched, after being subjected to the same treatment he gave his victim. McCurdy was this week convicted of mayhem and yesterday sentenced to the penitentiary for three years, the full extent of the law. At 2 o'clock twenty men aroused Alex. Kerr, the jailer, choked him and taking the key went to McCurdy's cell. He was dragged to a lawn in front of the building and mutilated the same way he cut Berry. He probably died while this was being done, but the body was rushed down to Lakewood trestle over Clear creek and hanged.

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, June 2.—A. Noyes, of this city, is corresponding with other heirs, scattered all over the country to secure a division of $40,000,000 left by Nicholas Noyes, late of Newbury, Mass. Ex-Governor Noyes is a cousin, and H. E. Noyes, of Berkeley, Calif., is foremost in the matter.

WATERLOO, Ind., June 2.—The apple army worm has appeared in this country. Quite a number of orchards have already been visited and the trees look as if a fire or frost had singed the leaves. The worms pass over an entire orchard in an incredibly short space of time, and while they destroy all the fruit on the trees, this year the danger is that the life of the tree is in jeopardy.

The worm is black and about one inch long.

ATOKA, I. T., June 2.—Two companies of United States troops have moved to Lehigh. The miners have sent a committee to Caddo to interview Governor Jones today. He said it was not in his power to do anything for them, the whole matter being in the hands of the Indian agent. The men, women and children are fleeing to Lehi and Coal Gate. Some miners are drilling to fight Uncle Sam's men.

CHESTER, Ill., June 2.—A peculiar case of suicide is given out by the authorities of the prison here in the death of James Murray, a convict sentenced from Marion county for larceny. Murray resorted to all kinds of methods to avoid working. Last Monday he secured a large bar of lye soap. This he ate and was at once taken with spasms. He died a horrible death.

CLEVELAND, June 2.—Judge Ricks in the United States circuit court today rendered a decision which practically declares the Ohio tax inquisition law unconstitutional. The decision enjoins the treasurer from collecting $8,000 back taxes.

CHILLICOTHE, Ohio, June 2.—The miners have started from Wellstone to close down the mines operating near Hamden. The Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern train was stopped at Wellstone last night. All cars were broken open and the train searched for coal.

DURANGO, Mex., June 2.—A cloud burst in the Sierra Madre mountains, 70 miles south of here, washed away a camp of charcoal burners. Ten charcoal burners were destroyed.

PHILADELPHIA, June 2.—The synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church at today's session adopted resolutions against the admission of Utah to statehood, on moral grounds.

PANAMA, June 3.—The Sar and Herald has received the following dispatch from San Salvador: In the battle at Santa Ana on May 24th the government troops under General Antonio Ezeta were defeated. General Ezeta died. Six hundred soldiers were killed. General Bolanos was wounded. President Ezeta has resigned in favor of Carlos Bonilla. A counter revolution is sure to break out, as Bonilla is not generally accepted.

LONDON, June 3.—Herr Dowe, inventor of the so-called bullet-proof coat, has written a letter to the Times offering to forfeit the purchase money to anyone who buys his coat if it contains either iron or steel. He declares that his invention is for sale, at a price much under the £200,000 mentioned in the newspapers.

HONOLULU, May 26, per steamer Australia, via San Francisco, June 2. —The steamer Iwalani sailed last evening in a race with the English cruiser Champion, the prize being an island not yet claimed by any country. On the steamer Warrimoo from British Columbia was a passenger who announced that the English government intended to lay a cable from Australia to the United States, but instead of touching at Hawaii, would touch Necker Island, which is located 400 miles northwest of Honolulu. The provisional government decided to send an officer to the island with power to raise the Hawaiian flag. When the Iwalani started the Champion was preparing to leave on the same mission. The little steamer had an hour's start, and it is one of the swiftest vessels in the island service and may reach the island first.

The island is 150 miles beyond Nihoa, or Bird Island, which is recognized as part of the Hawaiian group. The former has always been considered by this government as theirs, but they have never formally asserted their claim, as it was considered rather inaccessible and valueless. It is not certain that any one has ever landed upon it.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., June 2.—At the conference between Governor Waite and the mine owners the governor demanded that all strikers should be granted immunity from persecution for past acts.

The mine owners consented to pay the wages demanded by the strikers, but refused to employ none but union men. When informed of this Governor Waite said:

"When the mine owners appoint a man to arbitrate, then I am ready to do so. I would not arbitrate with every G—d—lawyer in Colorado Springs."

Sheriff Bowers served the governor with an official notice calling for troops. Waite replying, shaking his fist:

"If the G—d—mine owners want peace, they can have it, in five minutes."

CANNELSBURG, Ind., June 3.—It is apparent tonight that the backbone of the strike has been broken. The formidable appearance of the militia is what has done the work. The Washington miners deserted their colleagues and the hearts of the Cannelburg miners are too faint and their numbers too few to do anything but submit to the power of might.

TOPEKA, Kan., June 3.—Reports from the western part of Kansas are very discouraging, and show that the wheat in that section is a total failure. There was very little wheat raised west of the center of the state, and unless the conditions immediately change there will be no corn raised. In many counties there has not been any rain for more than a year, with the exception of light showers.

WEBSTER, Iowa, June 4.—A new pest has appeared in the corn fields of this vicinity in the shape of a yellow worm, an inch long, and is creating havoc with the crop.

LONDON, June 4.—A dispatch to the Times from Tien Tsin, China, says the revolution in the province of Manchuria is greatly extending. Mounted banditti, armed with repeating rifles, have defeated the imperial troops in every engagement and occupied several important positions, including Sarsing Arsenal, in which a hundred thousand rifles are stored. The situation is so alarming that Viceroy Li-hung Chang is gathering a large force to suppress the rebellion.

WICHITA, Kas., June 4.—Silva, Young, Rigler and Brown, train robbers lately captured at El Reno, have broken jail at Pond Creek.

TUXPAN, Mex., June 4.—A terrific wind storm passed over Yahualica, 70 miles back in the county, destroying stores and dwellings, killing ten persons and wounding fifteen others.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., June 4.—Forest fires started yesterday about fifteen miles from the city on the Northern Pacific railroad. All day great clouds of smoke obscured the sun and the flames made good progress. The wind changed today and is driving the flames back. Large tracts of valuable pine will be destroyed. The timber along the Mesaba and Northern is also burning.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 4.—A skirmish took place today between three miners and five deputies, thrown out in advance of the main body as pickets. John Davis, a miner, was shot in the arm and a deputy sheriff was seriously injured. Besides taking President Woods of the Victor Townsite company into custody, the miners last night captured Clarence O. Finch, county superintendent of schools, and D. E. Wilkins, a Colorado Springs school teacher. These are held as prisoners on Bull Hill as hostages for President Calderwood or other miners who may be arrested. John Shorten, editor of the Herald, the organ of the Miners' union, has been arrested by deputies. Terror reigns in this city and women and children have been removed to places of safety.

Seventy-eight Fremont miners today joined the force on Bull hill.

LONDON, June 4.—A party of excursionists near Frailo, County Kerry, Ireland, picked up an old shell and began rolling it along the ground. The shell exploded and killed three and wounded a dozen more.

FRANKFORT, Ky., June 4.—Congressman Breckinridge spoke here today to an enthusiastic gathering of 4,000 people. He was met at the depot by 500 people, who cheered heartily. The county has always been considered as Owens's strongest point, but the reception today was certainly beyond all expectations. Many ladies attended the meeting.

PARIS, Ky., June 4.—W. C. Owens, the opposing candidate of Colonel Breckinridge for Congress in the Ashland district spoke here today to the largest audience that ever attended a political meeting in Paris. About 4,000 people crowded around the speaker.

A party of ladies presented him with a bouquet of flowers, and Owen said he regretted he had no wife to whom he could send them. Tremendous applause.

CHICAGO, June 4.—Returns from a majority of the precincts of the Fourth Illinois district, where an election was held today for judge of the supreme court, indicate the election of Carter (Republican) by about 4,000 majority.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 5.—A chamber of horrors is the latest attraction here and it is conducted under the management of the board of supervision of this county.

There is no knowing how long it would have continued to exist had not the members of the state board of control dropped in a few days ago. As a result the county authorities have been notified to abate the nuisance at once, and the imbeciles who are a charge on the county will soon be given decent quarters. The building is located on the county farm and is known as the home for imbeciles. When the members of the state board of control inspected the place they were greatly shocked by the condition of affairs and two of the members were nauseated and sick for an hour after. There is practically no ventilation, and in this hole the helpless imbeciles are left to themselves with scarcely any attention. The board decided that something must be done at once.

PITTSFIELD, Ill., June 5.—Saturday night while going home Henry Schlemmer, an inoffensive, hard working German, was assaulted and robbed. He immediately informed the police, stating he recognized a young man named Willie Morgan as one of his assailants. Yesterday while Schlemmer was going to vote at the judicial election he was met by Morgan and again assaulted and kicked in such a manner that he died shortly after. Morgan fled, but was captured and is now in jail. When he was brought in, threats of lynching were indulged in. There is still great excitement.

GUTHRIE, O. T., June 5.—U. S. Marshal Nix has received the following letter, dated June 1st, from Cushing, the scene of the deadly fight of last September:

The Daltons were in town today. After doing some trading and paying for all goods and groceries, they started to ride out, when they caught sight of Ike McCoy, of the Sac and Fox police. They made him dismount and dance in the street. They took off his cartridge belt and thumped him over the shoulders with it a few times. They did no damage or violence but rode away laughing.

Written for this Paper.

WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

It fairly staggers a manufacturer to contemplate the industrial situation at the present time!—Grocer's Criterion.

Such is the editorial comment upon this "burning question," and yet in it scarcely an inkling of that situation is given, nor to any extent is there reason assigned for it, or solution offered.

Here and there, from other sources, the facts can be gleaned, if telegrams of strikes and controversy did not supersede the notices which come by regular issue of trade journals and a local press; it is evident that collision, resistance and blood are in the air, that riot and destruction may at any time gain the ascendancy, and if this should be the case, he would be a seer indeed who could determine the limits of such an event. The great strike in the coal districts is having effect on traffic by sea and land; steamships, railroads, factories and all industrial workshops are caught in that struggle, which is said to depend upon mine-owners and mine-workers, both of whom seek for and intend ascendancy, but after lengthy conference there seems only to be an increase of irritation, fierceness and determination. Just why mine-owners should refuse the retention of present wages or deny a trifling advance is something difficult to understand; and why coal should be hurried from English shipping ports and from Nova Scotia by steamers to meet—at increased prices—an unexpected demand here, is equally surprising; for ordinary men would naturally say that it was cheaper, easier and better to pay that advance to home labor, than to speculators from beyond the seas. In Illinois some mines have been fired, and in towns where the water supply depends on coal, every opportunity is given to incendiarism beyond control. The agents of coal mines which have supplied outgoing steamers from New York have negotiated for foreign coal, which can be brought in in unlimited quantities almost, and at near competing prices, seeing that other freight under business stagnation is limited beyond all past experience.

Markets of all kinds are depressed as well, yet there is in moneyed centers a continued and increasing amount of idle funds, albeit the government reserve (it is said) is, by gold shipments, again dwindling below the safety point, as financiers call it. As coal advances from scarcity, there is a closing down of factories and a discharge of men, which in addition to the strikers already out, makes the depression only more profound; and prospectively many thousands more will be added to those already existing, for railroads are taking off trains to economize in coal, and traffic is falling off in such proportion, that if long continued, will mean suspension and insolvency all through!

It is a curious feature of the times that some four thousand men are out on strike in the Pullman carriage works, where contention has hitherto been unknown. The strike of the silk weavers of Paterson, N. J., has continued for now three months, in which some ten thousand persons are involved, with a loss of wages already amounting to over a million and a quarter dollars; while brick-workers, plumbers, painters and interdependent trades have been out for weeks at a season of the year when they are supposed to be in the full tide of labor, and accumulating a surplus for the certain idle days of winter. Then it is realized that stores are becoming depleted, that credit has passed its limits, and that wholesale and retail dealers are doing business on so conservative a basis that trade nearly amounts to a standstill, with manufacturing closed besides; so that supply is uncertain, for accumulation is not desired, and simple momentary supply will not keep the wheels going!

The outlook is discouraging, to some hopeless, and to all, one of great strain and intense anxiety.

In the mining districts of Pennsylvania and Ohio where there is an accumulating foreign element, serious troubles may occur at any moment, if not directly from the strike itself, at least from those who attempt to prevent non-union men from taking that labor refused by the strikers, save at the prices which they have already determined upon. Force, not only organized moral force, but that force which means violence and destruction, is becoming more familiar and less obnoxious to the laboring mind than ever before. Some things are done and others suggested, which would but a very little time ago, have seemed outrageous and in fact impossible.

Many remedies have been suggested but nothing decisive has been reached as yet. Representatives of labor and its combinations have interviewed managers and proprietors; but confabs have only intensified the opposition, notably with the coke furnace men in Pennsylvania at the Frick works, which seem more turbulent than others, and are in striking contrast with the course pursued in other countries at least. Two and a quarter millions is the estimated number now of strikers and idle industrial workers, which would seem to be a small percentage of the sixty-five millions of a population. But when those dependent upon this class are included, it must mean that near one-tenth of the whole are affected, outside of an immense number who undoubtedly sympathize in feeling, and are prepared to aid and abet their fellow-laborers, not knowing but that they may need reciprocal aid in an immediate future! When it is said that the three months' strike cost the silk weavers one and a quarter millions in wages it slides off the tongue glibly enough; but besides this there must have been considerable wage accumulation prior thereto, or credit, else collapse would have come earlier, though the result—nothing—might have been just the same.

This loss of productive labor is an important one to the nation, and it would seem that some national board of arbitration could entertain these disputes, and allow work to go on in the interim of discussion and conclusion. The main idea in opposition to this is said to be the lack of power in the enforcement of a decision. But surely this is less formidable than even liberty would indicate, for some moral force would be inevitable to such a tribunal, and penalty of some kind would accrue to the non-acceptor!

The loss alluded to in one line of industrial action is however but a "drop in the bucket" of abortive effort and absolute loss, and it seems surprising that no brain, no sympathizer, no leader has as yet suggested that sacrifice intelligently applied would establish works or secure an interest in works already existing; so that labor in "boards of management" could be represented! One and a quarter million dollars would surely be potent in some section of silk manufacture, yet that amount is deliberately thrown away in vain or for unsuccessful self-defense! It is admitted that labor is unwilling for sacrifice save in its own conventional way. Even in Utah, where there is an unity of interest beyond that found outside, it is difficult to consolidate on this basis, or the working shoemakers might now have owned a larger factory than Z. C. M. I., they being the first to combine. But practice showed that when Saturday night came the majority wanted all they had earned, and had nothing for permanent investment. Many years' observation of strikes here and in Europe, including their cost and failure, have satisfied the writer that many classes of labor have had in their own hands the means of their redemption, but at the instance of demagogues, millions have been frittered away on a forlorn hope, and "the last state of that class has been worse than was the beginning!"

With a vast superfluous supply of labor it would seem that some defense could be secured from the suspension of the general immigration. Five or ten years would do much toward the needed assimilation of our redundant foreign element into the American mass. Those now here would in the meantime become more familiar with our institutions, with the unwisdom of European methods, and with the utility of the ballot box as a remedy for conditions, far superior to that of revolution or destruction! Politicians may fight shy of this, as of other things which would be politic but are not expedient from a party standpoint. But the emergency is not a partisan one. The nation's prosperity, nay its very life, may depend upon this solution of pressing questions, and it would be libelous to assume that there is that lack of brain or patriotism, which neither senses the situation nor dares to apply the remedy! That there are causes for every evil is beyond controversy, and that these are reachable and susceptible of removal is surely within the genius of this Republic. Who wants to think otherwise, or to look for the Stars and Stripes to go down in anarchy and blood—thus frustrating the hopes of millions who have looked westward to the home of liberty, counting on it as a beacon light to all the world, or as a savior by example and influence to the teeming millions, who with their fathers have been the victims of spoliation for ages in the past, and whose hopes for the present and future have centered upon "the land shadowing with wings!"

SEVIER STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Sevier Stake of Zion convened in the bowery in Richfield at 10 o'clock on May 20, 1894. There were present of the Council of the Apostles Heber J. Grant and Abraham H. Cannon, of the Stake Presidency Wm. H. Clark (President W. H. Seegmiller was sick and unable to attend conference the first day), the High Council, Bishops and counselors, and other leading men were well represented, and a very large congregation of Saints was in attendance.

After the opening exercises Counselor Wm. H. Clark gave a brief but very good report of the condition of the Stake.

Elder Abraham H. Cannon said he was pleased with the good report of the condition of the Stake; referred to the high rate of mortality among many people in the world and said that even among the Latter-day Saints there are more deaths than there should be, and if we would observe the laws of nature and the laws of God this would be changed. There are too many violations among us of the Word of Wisdom, and by taking into our system those things the Lord has said are not good for us we shorten our lives and usefulness in the earth.

Elder Heber J. Grant emphasized what Brother Cannon had said relative to the Word of Wisdom. Utah today leads all the western states and territories in the use of tea and coffee; if the people in this Stake will save all the means they pay out yearly for tea, coffee and tobacco they will be able to pay all their debts and obligations.

2 p.m. After the usual opening exercises the sacrament was administered by the Priesthood of the Richfield first ward.

Bishops H. H. Bell and J. I. Jensen of Glenwood and Elsinore respectively reported their wards as being in very good condition.

Elder Heber J. Grant instructed the Saints upon the necessity of shaping our financial affairs so that we do not purchase anything only what we need and can pay for when we buy it; we ought to be charitable toward one another and in place of looking around for faults in our neighbors hunt up our own and strive to overcome them.

Elder Abraham H. Cannon delivered a very interesting and instructive discourse relative to the condition of our young people, during which he strongly urged upon the young men and women in Zion to give heed to and take counsel and advice from their parents and others older than they, and prepare themselves for the many responsible positions which are awaiting them, for by faithful and incessant labors we can attain to honor and eminence and become leaders among our race.

Monday 21, 10 a. m. Elder Abraham H. Cannon said it is not necessary for people to always have among them Apostles and prophets in order to receive revelation, as everyone holding the Priesthood, as well as faithful members of both sexes, are entitled to and will receive revelation to direct them in their proper sphere if they but live for it. It is essential for every Latter-day Saint to enjoy the spirit of discernment lest we be led astray by the many false spirits manifesting themselves among us from time to time. He also gave instructions relative to the right of members to partake of the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

Elder Heber J. Grant said it is the wish and desire of the First Presidency and Apostles that no member of the Church should join any secret society, as that has a tendency to lead people away from the spirit of the Gospel. Card playing should be discontinued and discouraged, as it leads to evil. Our young people should be counseled to refrain from round dancing as much as possible.

1 o'clock p. m.—After the usual opening exercises Elder Simon Christensen presented the general Church authorities, after which Elder Heber J. Grant read a letter from Counselor G. W. Bean in which he resigned his office as first counselor in the Stake presidency, which was accepted by the conference. Brother Grant then presented Wm. H. Clark as first and Bishop Joseph S. Horne as second counselor to President Wm. H. Seegmiller, both of whom were unanimously sustained. The balance of the Stake authorities were then presented and all the voting was unanimous.

Elder Heber J. Grant addressed the conference on the duties of those in authority in the Priesthood.

Elder Abraham H. Cannon delivered a very interesting discourse on the general duties of the Latter-day Saints.

Elder W. H. Seegmiller made a few remarks and conference was adjourned for three months.

Benediction by Elder P. C. Christensen.

The Elsinore choir, under the able leadership of Prof. Chas. Olson, furnished the sweet singing for all the meetings.

SIMON CHRISTENSEN,
Assistant Stake Clerk.

STEVENSON'S JOURNEYINGS.

PLEASANT VIEW, Weber Co., Utah, May 30, 1894.—Decoration Day was celebrated at this place today in an appropriate manner. Bands from this place and North Ogden had arrangements made to meet and mutually march to the union burial grounds of the two places and there decorate the graves of relatives and friends. On the way from Logan and on nearing Pleasant View I beheld a procession, about a half a mile in length, headed by a band playing solemn airs, and inquiry revealed the fact that it was the funeral of a missionary who nine days ago returned home from California, and who only last Sunday afternoon attended his Seventies quorum meeting and related his missionary experience. His remarks were unusually pleasant and he was in apparently good health. Two hours later he was sleeping in death's embrace. Strange as it may appear, soon after his return home from his mission he remarked that he must prepare for another mission, for he felt he should have to perform one soon. Recently his mother said she had seen his father, who died some five years ago, who said George Maycock, his son, would have to come over and help him in the spirit world.

The respect shown the deceased by this procession of over eighty vehicles was an evidence of the love his friends bore for him. The meeting house was packed full. Comforting remarks were made by Elders John Seaman, Wiley Cragin, Edward Stevenson, Joseph Bidwell, Charles Wright and Bishop Edward W. Wake. In the cemetery many were decorating the graves of the loved ones, and in addition to the lengthy cortege assembled around the last resting-place of the deceased, flowers were profusely strewn over his as well as other graves. The quiet resting-place overlooking the valley and the Great Salt Lake was dedicated by Elder Edward Stevenson.

Grand preparations were being made at Willard City, which we passed at 9:30 p.m., for the decoration of the graves of the departed.

A heavy rain amply watered the crops at Mantus, and also extending over to Brigham City, but before arriving at Willard the roads were dusty. Crops and fruit prospects all the way from Logan are very flattering.

On Sunday last the Sunday school and meetings at Willard City were visited and addressed by Elders Samuel Wright, John Quayle and E. Stevenson. A happy time was enjoyed at the quiet little town under the shadow of the lofty mountains.

On our way over the sandridge south of Ogden we saw that the crops looked well. On the line of Davis and Weber counties we passed the corralled industrial army, who lined the roadside in the hot sun. Some of the men made a showing of respectability. One said to me, "Thousands will follow us to Washington, and we will get there. We won't work; we will not starve. We are the majority; the minority has ruled long enough. Now we are going to set the Government right. They must do something. We are slaves."

"Then," said I, inquiringly, "after many days slaves will marshal themselves against their masters; is that the object?"

"Yes," said he, "that's just what it is."
E. STEVENSON.

WEATHER AND CROPS.

U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued the following weather-crop bulletin for the week ending May 29. George N. Salisbury, U. S. Weather Bureau, director:

Reports from 70 localities agree that the week ending May 29th was the most favorable to crops of any thus far this season. The temperature was several degrees above the normal, except in the extreme south. Showers fell on the 21st, 22nd, 23rd or 24th, except in the southern counties, where a long drought has prevailed, and it has been unusually cool.

In the north a spell of warm weather following the showers made all crops grow rapidly. Lucern is tall, and ready to bloom. Winter grain is coming into head. Corn and potato planting is finished in late districts, and they are well up in the earlier ones. Cut worms are destroying sugar beets on bottom lands near Spanish Fork.

There begin to be complaints of scarcity of water. The Sevier river is lower than the earliest inhabitant has known it to be. There is very little snow on the mountains in the south.

Box Elder—Showers on the 21, 22, 23 and 24; half an inch. Maximum temperature, 82; minimum, 41. Grain and everything have been benefited by the copious rains. Grain is in the boot. Lucern is sixteen inches high. Too dry for upland crops.

Cache—Maximum, 81; minimum, 35. Rain on 22nd. Weather has been warm and very good for crops. All planting finished except potatoes. Farmers smile.

Rich—Maximum, 81; minimum, 36. Showers on 22nd and 26th. Everything looks lovely.

Morgan—Most favorable week yet. All kinds of crops growing very fast. Good rain on 22nd. There is a good prospect for fruit.

Summit—Maximum, 93; minimum, 32. Shower on 22nd. Weather warm, and just the thing for crops. Free from frosts. Grass is growing very fast now.

Wasatch—Maximum, 86; minimum, 37. Snow on night of 22nd. Weather warm and had a good effect on grain and grass, which now look well. An ideal week.

Uintah—Fine weather for small grain and garden stuff. Peas are in bloom. Corn and potato planting nearly finished. Strawberries through blooming. Ranges and pasture are in fine condition.

Weber—No frost. All crops growing finely. Good rain on 22nd, followed by warm weather. Now watering lucern.

Davis—A warm rain on 21st did an immense amount of good to crops. Winter grain is now in head. Corn, cane and late potatoes are up. Cabbage and tomato plants are being set out. Spraying fruit trees in progress.

Salt Lake—Since the nice showers vegetation has been growing very fast. In some places sugar beets have not come up thick enough to pay. Corn has come up very good.

Tooele—Rain during first part of week caused rapid growth. No frost. Corn is coming up. Lucern will be ready to cut in about two weeks.

Utah—Weather has been hot. Half an inch rain on 22nd. Balance of week good growing weather. First watering of grain is almost over. Corn and potatoes are showing up good. Fruit is growing rapidly. Cut worms are destroying beets on bottom lands at Spanish Fork.

Juab—Busy week; spraying fruit trees. Warm days, and grain doing well. Corn and potatoes up. Watering small grain first time.

Sanpete—Small shower on 25th. Crops doing well. Everything with the last week of fine weather. Water is getting low.

Millard—Warm and good growing weather. Light rain 21st and 22nd. All crops looking well. Vegetables could not look healthier, or make better progress.

Sevier—Shower 21st and 24th. All crops doing finely. First part of week a slight frost.

Garfield—The water is very scarce. Sevier river now so low that it can be crossed without water getting over shoe tops. Driest spring known to oldest inhabitant.

Iron—Crops growing very nicely. Little snow on the mountains.

Kane—Weather very dry, but warm. Lucerne ready to cut in a week.

Washington—Fruits are doing well. Past week very favorable for crops. Cutting lucern. Cherries are ripe.

THE EUPOREAN MISSION.

[Millennial Star, May 31.]

ARRIVALS.—The following missionaries from Utah and Idaho arrived in Liverpool per the Guion steamer Arizona, May 7th, 1894: For the Scandinavian Mission—Anthon Pehrson, of Logan; Carl A. Johnson, of Huntville; Carl Hansen, of Spring City; John A. Jensen, of Cedar City; Charles Lundgren, of Mayfield, and Rasmus M. Larsen, of Basalt, Idaho. For the Swiss and German Mission—Alonso Francois, of Morgan, and Chas. J. Lang, of Salt Lake City. For the British Mission—Stewart Eccles, of Eden; Wheatley Gibson and Elijah W. Clayton, of West Weber; Frederick Scholes and A. C. Morris, of Salt Lake City; Joseph Barker, of North Ogden; Joseph Fowers of Hooper; Charles W. Robins of Layton; S. W. Ross, W. L. Webb and Edward Southwick of Lehi; James Tucker of Morgan; William John Lee of Ogden; Herschel Bullen Jr. of Richmond; William T. Jones of Cedar City and Wm. D. Bingham of Clifton, Idaho.

Elder Edward Southwick has been appointed to labor as traveling Elder in the Birmingham conference.

Elder William John Lee has been appointed to labor as traveling Elder in the Manchester conference.

Elder A. C. Morris has been appointed to labor as traveling Elder in the London conference.

Elder T. Jones has been appointed to labor as traveling Elder in the Welsh conference.

FEARFUL WRECK.

ECHO, Utah, May 31.—The Union Pacific track is now clear and trains are running again regularly after the terrible accident of Tuesday. The track was wholly blocked from noon till 9:30 Tuesday night, when it was sufficiently cleared to let the west bound passenger pass. This train, which left Evanston at noon Tuesday, was held nine hours between Castle Rock and Wasatch stations, Echo canyon.

The wreck occurred as follows. A force of men were engaged on the line between Castle Rock and Wasatch, and just before 12 o'clock the men were called on the train, which was expected at the station at noon, pass. The work train had just got under good headway when the crash came. The special freight had come down on orders, and should have been flagged at Wasatch, but by some blunder was allowed to go through the station without stopping. It was going about ten miles an hour, when it suddenly came upon the work train, and almost before any one could realize the situation the locomotive of the freight had smashed into the rear end of the freight train.

The workmen practically had no warning, so were unable to get out of the way, and the result was terribly disastrous. On the freight train the engineer and fireman both were hurt, but not fatally. On the work train two men were killed outright and ten or twelve others more or less severely injured, receiving broken arms or legs, lacerated bodies and dangerous bruises. One of the dead men was from Echo, the other from Evanston. The names of the injured men and one of the persons killed could not be obtained outside of railway sources. One of the men killed is James Lewis.

The men most severely hurt were taken back to Evanston for surgical attention. A crew of men were put at work as quickly as possible, and cleared the track of the wreckage. The freight locomotive was diked and badly smashed. Ten to fifteen cars were derailed and more or less badly wrecked.

E. G. Rognon, Esq., of Salt Lake, was in Brigham the latter part of last week, says the Votes. Mr. Rognon came to meet a Mr. Davis, of Paradise, with whom he rode out into the mountains toward La Plata to look at some mining property. Mr. Rognon found and inspected the grounds, of which he owns a controlling interest, and found it more than his most sanguine hopes had pictured. The property is undeveloped but it has a good vein of gold and lead bearing quartz. It is the intention to put a force of men to work on it this summer.

Many acres of Egyptian corn have been planted in the Pecos valley in New Mexico.

At Aspen, Colo., on Wednesday, a disastrous fire took place which consumed an hotel, lodginghouse and livery stable, a short distance from the Midland depot.

Organization has been completed of the Portland, Vancouver and Northern Railway company, with a capital of $3,000,000, to build a road from Portland to the Northern Pacific at North Yakima.

Lightning struck the steeple of the Methodist church at Leadville, Colo., on Monday night and badly damaged it. Several other buildings in the town were also struck.

The firemen of the city, remarks the Cheyenne, Wyo., Tribune, are meeting with great success in securing subscriptions of money for the next tournament to be held in this city next August.

Mary Farrell, eighteen years old, of Vallejo, Cal., has committed suicide by drinking two ounces of carbolic acid. Despondency over the loss of her lover was the cause.

Otto Mathiason, an apprentice at the Rawlins, (Wyo.) Journal, while out hunting recently accidentally shot himself in the left breast. The ball entered the left nipple, skipping the lung, and lodged in the left arm pit.

L. M. Earl, of Salt Lake, is in the city, says the Boise (Idaho) Statesman. He has been making a tour of this part of the state looking into the financial condition of counties to determine the desirability of their warrants as an investment.

An electric yacht is almost ready to be launched on Lake Minnequa at Pueblo. The yacht is thirty feet long and will be run by electricity by a storage battery. It will take thirty passengers and will make the round trip of the lake in twenty minutes.

It is quite the fashion, says the Dillon (Mont.) Tribune, for the trainmen who have to lay over at Silver Bow, to put in their time panning for sapphires in the old placer diggings at that place. Several of the boys have found stones of good size and flawless.

The cattlemen of Grant county, New Mexico, are hurrying their cattle out of that section, the most of them going to the sunflower kingdom. These cattle are mostly young steers and it is calculated to keep them on grass till fall, when they will be taken to the market if in beef condition or sold on the range as feeders according to their condition.

W. L. Andrews, for the last ten years assayer in the United States mint at San Francisco, has handed in his resignation, and on June 1st will leave for the East. Mr. Andrews has inherited a valuable estate in South Carolina and intends making that place his future home, where he will be close to his relatives. He is the son of the late Mrs. General La Grange and nephew of Mrs. Judge Lamar.

While hunting in the gulch on the Alum Rock road, near San Jose, on Wednesday morning, Ray Hawley, the youngest son of Major W. G. Hawley, was shot and almost instantly killed. The little fellow was not quite 14 years of age. He was accompanied by a comrade of about the same age. While sitting on a stump he drew his rifle toward him and it was discharged, the ball entering his breast.

The river continues to rise, threatening to overflow the headgates of the large canals above here, says the Idaho Falls Times. The water washed around one side of the headgate of the Idaho canal, filling it with water. Mr. Clark, the engineer, was obliged to cut the canal on the lower side to prevent the flooding of the country adjacent. It is reported that the difficulty is being overcome.

C. Mathews, who lives near the Pacific beach racetrack, San Diego, Cal., was digging treeholes Monday when he was attracted by a yellow glitter on some of the pebbles he threw out. Closer examination showed that the pebbles contained free gold in sufficient quantity to make them valuable as specimens. The stones were worn smooth and were probably pieces of float washed down from the mountains.

Mrs. Palmer, the wife of H. N. Palmer, a well known Pacific coast mining man, committed suicide Monday night at Prescott, Arizona, by drinking a cupful of carbolic acid during a fit of despondency and mental aberration. About two and a half years ago she accidentally shot and killed her ten year old son, since which time she has been despondent at times, which has been aggravated by sickness.

Three men broke into and went through five or six cars on a freight train between Carlin and Winnemucca the other night, says the Winnemucca Silver State. They burst open cases containing ladies' hosiery and silk mitts, and also secured a large quantity of tobacco. The car thieves went around Battle Mountain claiming to be peddlers, and sold considerable of the stuff when they were arrested and locked up. Shortly afterwards they escaped and up to latest accounts they had not been recaptured.

It is expected that the Burlington will be completed to a connection with the Northern Pacific at Billings by October 15. Commencing at Alger, Wyo., eight miles beyond Sheridan, the builders have begun track laying, and having about twenty miles of road bed that was graded last year to begin with, will make rapid progress. A large part of the line from that point on to Billings is being graded, and sub-contractors are stringing out their men along the route. They have about 1,400 men now.

The Rawlins (Wyo.) Republican learns that Coggriff Bros., of Fort Steele, who are among the most extensive wool growers of the Rocky mountain country, intend to investigate the wool scouring business with a view of putting in a plant, if practicable, on the Platte. These gentlemen are in position to take hold of the matter and push it to a successful issue if they see fit. They have about 25,000 head of sheep at present, 17,000 of which are breeding ewes, which will give them close to 40,000 head after lambing.

The work of demolishing the iron and heavy oaken doors that guard the entrance to the gambling games in Chinatown still goes on, says the San Francisco Chronicle. In many cases the doors are removed altogether and carted off to the old city hall. This, of course, sadly annoys the gamblers, who now do not dare to open a gambling place in any room in the first or second stories of the buildings. On the whole there has been but little gambling carried on anywhere in the Chinese quarter since the recent police scandal.

At a meeting of the Committee of One Hundred, held at Los Angeles, Cal., Monday night, the postal primary plan was adopted by a majority vote and will be submitted to the central committees of the several political parties for approval. If approved by one or all of them the plan will be given a practical trial at the coming fall primary election. The plan is looked upon with favor by citizens in the state desiring electoral reform. The plan provides that primary elections are to be carried on through the mails, ballots being sent to each voter.

A cave occurred on Monday night on the Woodbridge Irrigation company's works, two miles northwest of Lodi, Cal., by which three men narrowly escaped death. P. F. Scott and three others were engaged in an excavation for a siphon under a bridge, when the trench, eight feet deep, caved, and two laborers named Lund and Carey were buried up to their chins, and Vickery and Scott barely escaped a like fate. Lund was taken out more dead than alive, blood flowing in a stream from his nose and mouth. He has several ribs fractured and is injured internally. Carey was not seriously hurt.

The Hailey (Idaho) Times says that Sheriff Jackson has been requested to look into the disappearance and possible murder of a man who formerly lived in the Yager house, in Gimley, about six miles from Hailey. The request is made by Mrs. Leflange, who now lives in the house, and who says that there are spots of dry blood on the walls, and that a horrible stench issues from under the house. She wishes the place dug into and examined. The supposition is that a man who had money and disappeared, a couple of years ago, was murdered for his money and buried under the house. By whom this was done no one knows.

As the Cripple Creek, Colo., hack was nearing Lawrence on Thursday morning on its down trip three men sprang out from the side of the road and ordered hands up. The driver obeyed by stopping, and replying to the question as to who he was, answered Cripple Creek and Canon mail. The men ordered the passengers out and proceeded to go through them, making a careful search for fire arms. None being found nothing was taken, and the party were ordered in the hack and the driver told to move on. The whole affair consumed not more than five minutes, but everybody aboard was thoroughly scared. This is the third party from here which has been held up.

For some time there have been efforts made by the saloon men of Fresno, Cal., to have repealed the ordinance passed by the board of supervisors closing the saloons on Sunday. The efforts so far have proved unsuccessful, and last Sabbath twenty-two saloons opened their doors in defiance of the law. Immediately the Law and Order league, which was organized some months ago to assist in the enforcement of the liquor law, began sending members around town to the various saloons collecting evidence against them, and it is said that the evidence will be laid before the grand jury. These saloon-men have employed counsel, and will set up the claim that the Sunday-closing ordinance is unconstitutional.

The Casper, Wyo., Derriek says: The remains of Con Daly were found this week by William Wallis, about twenty-five miles from Casper, Wyo., and near the place where his sheep camp was located during the storm that proved fatal to him. Coroner Campfield, Mr. Wallis and two other parties started yesterday with a team and a fine metallic casket to bring in the body which will receive a Christian burial by order of P. Sullivan, who was employing Daly at the time of his death. The unfortunate young man had but one known relative in this country, a brother in California. His other relatives reside in Ireland. He had been saving, and his bank account is credited with $2,500 of his earnings. An administrator will be appointed by the court.

Vineyardists throughout the lowland districts, says the San Francisco Chronicle, are fearful lest the unusual late rains this season may injure the grape crop. Though the season is a late one this year, there is much to apprehend from the rain and possibly accompanying cold spell and frost. The chief danger lies in a vine disease, "coulure," which is caused by the rain and frost rotting the stem of the small grape berry just forming and causing it to drop off. Reports received by the State Viticulture commission from grape-growing counties show that some damage was done by the last rains and a frost which nipped the fruit and affected the lowlands of Napa and Sonoma counties. In Lake county about 1,100 acres of grapes were blighted. The main dry wine producing county of Santa Clara was not touched, and prices for that product will not be disturbed.

Employees of the Liebhart Commission company, while engaged in unloading a car of bananas Monday morning at Denver, were startled by the appearance of a live boa constrictor coiled around a bunch of fruit, and thawing out from a long cold spell. He had the car to himself for a while, but was finally killed. He measured four and one-half feet, and is said to be the largest snake ever brought to Denver in a consignment of fruit. His snakeship hailed from Port Limon, South America. Two years ago the same firm received a smaller specimen of the boa in the same manner. He was presented to the Elitch Amusement company and celebrated his first public appearance by swallowing another snake as large as himself. After this start he lived until the following winter, when the cold killed him off.

News has been received at the Southern Pacific offices in San Francisco of the murder at Santa Margarita of Manril Bailey Haynes, a freight train conductor. The shooting was done by a tramp, who immediately made his escape. On Wednesday, five minutes before Haynes's train should have pulled out of the depot, he discovered a tramp ensconced in one of the box cars. The conductor ordered the tramp off the train, and is supposed to have attempted to eject him. The murderous ruffian drew a revolver, firing point blank at Haynes and killing him instantly. The tramp immediately made for the woods, leaving his blankets, cheese and biscuits behind him. Sheriff Matthews, of Salinas, arrived on the scene with a couple of bloodhounds, which were at once put on the trail. In the meantime a tramp telegraph operator named Edward Holland has been held at Azucelon under suspicion.

On Monday Adolph Sutro, the San Francisco capitalist, who is on the shady side of 70, and J. J. Haley, attorney for the Southern Pacific railway, who is 84 years of age, had a lively time before the California board of supervisors. Mr. Sutro was asking for a railway franchise to Sutro Heights, and made some remarks in which he reflected on the Southern Pacific management. Mr. Haley replied in hot words, and Mr. Sutro characterized Crocker, Huntington and other S. P. officials as rascals. Then the two old gentlemen proceeded to settle the dispute with their fists. One supervisor, however, caught Mr. Haley around the waist and held him back while another seized Mr. Sutro's coat tails and restrained him. The belligerent veterans clawed the air for a little while, but as their finger tips would not reach closer than within about half an inch, there was no serious damage done, though the peacemakers had to put forth considerable effort to prevent a rough and tumble fight between the white-haired "boys."

BRIGHAM YOUNG.

The descendants of John Young, father of President Brigham Young, have an organization known as the Young Family Association. The first family gathering under the auspices of the association occurred yesterday, June 1, the anniversary of the birth of President Brigham Young, and was a fitting tribute to the memory of the illustrious member of the family, who has permanently left the impress of his life on the history of this land.

About 4 p.m. members of the family began to assemble at the historical Lion House. The old parlor where so many notable social gatherings have been held in days that are past was soon well filled, as were also the adjoining room (formerly the parlor of Eliza R. Snow Smith, the poetess, where she received hundreds and perhaps thousands of visitors, among them many celebrated people) and the private apartments of the late President—one of these made sacred by his death, which occurred August 29, 1877.

At 6 o'clock the long dining hall was filled with the family and friends, though it would not hold one-third of the guests.

After all had dined there was a program of exercises rendered in the parlors, opening with some explanations by Dr. Seymour B. Young and prayer by President George Q. Cannon, and music and recitations by members of the family. The great enjoyment of the occasion, however, was the fraternal and friendly greetings of brothers, sisters, cousins, uncles, aunts, nieces, nephews, and old time friends. A characteristic and loving letter from the venerable Patriarch Lorenzo D. Young, the only surviving brother of the President and one of the Pioneers, was read by Dr. S. B. Young, presenting greetings to his kindred and the assembled guests, expressing regret at his inability to attend the party. The illumination of the Salt Lake Temple in honor of the day was viewed from the several positions of the Lion House by the company, the exercises being suspended during the illumination.

FATHER WAUGH'S INTERMENT.

BEAVER, Utah, May 22, 1894.

It was stated some time ago in your valuable SEMI-WEEKLY that Father Waugh, in returning from a mission to England, died and was buried at the foot of one of the mountains while traveling in Captain Martin's hand cart company. This is correct in part. Father Waugh died at our last camping ground either at the eastern base of what is known as the "Big Mountain" or between the "Little" and "Big" mountains, but he was not buried there. On being informed in the morning of his death, and that men were already digging his grave, I hastened to Captain Martin's quarters and suggested that he see the wagon-master of the company who had been sent to our rescue and inform him that Father Waugh's family lived in the city and ask that his remains be taken to them. Captain Martin replied: "I would rather you would go." Accordingly I went, either to Colonel Robert Burton or J. D. Grant (I think the former) and made the request. He responded, "Yes, certainly;" and there and then made arrangements; and the first announcement of Father Waugh's death to his family was made when the wagon drove up to his house with the corpse.

Your Brother,
DANIEL TYLER,

INFORMATION WANTED.

Information is wanted concerning the whereabouts of Mary Coursey, who joined the Church at South Norwalk, Connecticut, and moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, about 1844 or 1845, and afterwards crossed the plains to Utah. Her son, John Coursey, last heard from her in 1852, she being then a resident of this city. He has written many times since, but has received no reply. Any information concerning her will be greatly appreciated by her son or John A. Hoffman, Great Falls, Montana, or it may be sent to George Raynolds, Box B, Salt Lake City, Utah.

middlegrained granite, very much resembling those of Aberdeen and Dyce in Scotland. The Swedish capital has very fine quays, bridges, pedestals etc., of this stone.

Few people have any idea that the united kingdoms of Sweden and Norway form such an extensive realm as they do, close upon 300,000 square miles. The population, however, is only seven million inhabitants, Sweden having almost five millions.

The city of Sundsvall in northern Sweden is the greatest lumber place in Europe, if not in the world. Timber ranks first among Swedish exports, and Sundsvall alone sends into the market nearly one-fourth of all the Swedish timber. The population of Sundsvall, including its suburbs, is 20,000.

There are seven hat manufactories in Sweden with a produce value of about $300,000 and employing 500 hands. The raw material is usually wool, but hair is also used (from the rabbit, hare, beaver and bisam.) The exports amount to an annual value of about $100,000 while hats are imported to the amount of $300,000.

The process of development, which gardening has undergone of late years in Sweden, is to be attributed not only to increased enlightenment, but also to the example given by a number of large estate owners, on which land this cultivation had for some time flourished, and the encouragement shown by the government, agricultural societies and private associations.

Among game birds in Sweden the capercaillie, blackcock, and hazel-grouse are eagerly sought for, large quantities being sent from Norrland to places lying south, more especially to Stockholm. The ptarmigan is proper to the north of Sweden and the partridge to the southern half of the kingdom. Sea-fowl are eagerly sought for on the coast, chiefly for the sake of their feathers. The eider, one of its noblest representatives, has lately, in consequence of being protected by law, yearly increased in numbers.

Among animal fats, that are largely produced in Sweden, tallow and margarine are observable. The export of tallow seems to be on the increase, and rose last year to the value of $100,000, while suet was exported for $30,000. Margarine of good quality is also manufactured, and at the head of this trade stands the Arboga manufactory. The value of the output last year was $142,000. During the same year train oil was exported, valued at $62,000. There is also a manufactory for producing fish-oil, but the output is small.

TRAVELS IN MEXICO.

COLONIA JUAREZ, Chihuahua, Mexico, April 4, 1894.

On the 31st ult. I left Colonia Dublan and traveled 16 miles in a northwesterly direction to Colonia Juarez, the headquarters of the Mexican Mission. On my way I visited the Mexican town of Casas Grandes, situated on the west bank of the river of that name, and about six miles southwest of Colonia Dublan. The town of Casas Grandes is said to contain 1500 inhabitants, and it is built partly on the river bottom and partly on the edge of the bench. Like La Ascencion its dwellings consist of low flat-roofed adobe houses; its streets are narrow and winding, and its general appearance suggestive of the people who inhabit it. This is the seat of government for the "municipal" in which both Colonia Juarez and Dublan are situated, and it was from this place that the famous document ordering the Saints out of Mexico in 1885 was issued. A company of Mexican soldiers, whose professed object is to watch the rebels are stationed at Casas Grandes.

About a mile south of the modern town are the ruins of the ancient Casas Grandes, which means "Big Houses." This is what has given name to the river, the modern town and the surrounding country. These ruins, when found by the Spaniards, several hundred years ago, appeared already then to be very ancient; and the present Mexican population seems to have no idea as to who the people were who constituted the inhabitants of the old town. The main pile of ruins cover about five acres of land; but there are several smaller ruins—apparently the remnants of large isolated houses—within a short radius. Some of the walls still standing of the main village are nearly thirty feet high, and there are traces of four or five-story buildings. Some of the rooms have recently been cleared of the debris which has filled them for centuries, which has revealed human bones, sundry ancient pottery, crude wall paintings and many other things which shows at least a degree of civilization and skill on the part of the defunct population.

Continuing the journey from Casas Grandes, I passed over a succession of hills and small valleys, and at length in crossing the last hill I looked down upon the settlement of the Saints known as Colonia Juarez, thus named in honor of the famous Mexican general who fought so bravely for the independence of his country.

Colonia Juarez, or the Juarez ward, consists of the Saints residing on the Rio Peadres Verdes (green rocks.) The town is situated in a narrow valley about  $\frac{3}{4}$  mile wide, bounded by bluffs which vary in height from 100 to 200 feet; the townsite is laid out in regular blocks, the streets crossing each other at right angles; but instead of following the cardinal points of the compass the longer streets run parallel with the valley and river from northwest to southeast. Juarez sustains a well deserved reputation for possessing fine brick residences, thrifty orchards and beautiful flower gardens. It is said to be the best built town in the state of Chihuahua; and while a number of the best houses have been built with Utah capital, some of the means which has enabled the owners to make their surroundings so comfortable and pleasant have been acquired in Mexico. There is perhaps no better fruitlands in northern Chihuahua than those cultivated by our people at Juarez, but the facilities for farming are very limited, as the water is scarce. The stock range is fairly good; the colony purchase consists of about 5000 acres of land, lying in the shape of a hatchet and on both sides of the Peadres Verdes, the feed on at least a part of this tract is good all the year around.

Juarez contains a fine grist mill situated on the river immediately east of the settlement; it is owned by Patriarch Wm. R. R. Stowell, late of Ogden, Utah, and famous from his extraordinary experience in connection with the Echo Canyon war in 1857-58. There is also a co-operative store doing good business, a tannery, a cannery, a harness and saddle shop, two shoe shops, a saw mill (situated 18 miles up in the mountains) including a planing mill, shingle mills, picket and lath mills, etc., and four cheese factories. Most of these industries are co-operative.

The inhabitants of Colonia Juarez are, generally speaking, a good, industrious and united people, exemplary in their habits and modes of living; they are all members of the Church; the meetings are well attended; not an oath or expression of profanity has been heard on the streets by even some of the oldest inhabitants; and there are only three young men in the town who are known to use tobacco in any shape or form. In February, 1892, there were 89 families or 674 souls in the colony. George W. Sevey, formerly of Panguitch, Utah, is the present Bishop; his counselors are Miles P. Romney and Ernest L. Taylor; Elder Joseph C. Bentley is ward clerk.

Apostle George Teasdale, the president of the Mexican Mission, resides at Juarez; also his Counselors Alexander F. Macdonald and Henry Eyring. Elder Teasdale occupies the house which was built for the late Apostle Erastus Snow, but which he never occupied as he passed away from this sphere of action just as it was being completed. Elder Teasdale keeps a very full and complete private journal; and as the public records of the Mexican Mission have been kept very imperfectly indeed (and in some of the settlements no records to speak of have been kept at all); the historians in compiling the history of the mission will have to depend to a very great extent upon the information which Elder Teasdale may permit them to cull from his private writings.

Colonia Juarez is a very desirable place to live in, though a better location could have been preferred; but owing to the scarcity of water and the limited amount of farming land along the river, it can not grow to a place of any great importance, according to present prospects.

When the colony was first founded in 1886, the townsite was surveyed in the open valley about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles east of the present location, but it was soon discovered that the survey had been made outside of the purchase limits and on the San Diego ranch; and thus our people were forced to move up onto their present location, in the narrow canyon-like valley, in which the present town nestles between the hills.

Juarez is 10 miles southwest of Casas Grandes, 16 miles from Colonia Dublan, 71 miles southwest of Colonia Diaz, 161 miles southwest of Deming, N. M., and 120 miles west southwest of Gallego, the nearest accessible station on the Mexican Central railway. From here I go to Pacheco, in the heart of the Sierra Madras.

OBITUARY NOTES.

EDSON WHIPPLE.

Elder Edson Whipple passed peacefully away at his home in Colonia Juarez, Mexico, on the 11th day of May, 1894. Brother Whipple was the son of John Whipple, and was born in the town of Dummerston, Windham county, Vermont, February 5th, 1805; embraced the Gospel in 1840 in Philadelphia, was ordained a High Priest by President Hyrum Smith in 1841, and moved to Nauvoo in September, 1842. In 1844 he was sent to Pennsylvania in company with David Yearsley to canvass that state and to present to the people the Prophet Joseph's views on government. While on this mission the Prophet and Patriarch were murdered. Returning home Elder Whipple was present at the meeting of the Saints and witnessed the mantle of Joseph rest upon Brigham Young while addressing the people. Assisted in the building of the Nauvoo Temple and was present at the laying of the capstone thereof, and when completed received his endowments therein.

On May 13, 1846, he crossed the Mississippi river enroute for the valley of the Great Salt Lake. Arriving at Council Bluffs, Brother Whipple, in company with others, was counseled to settle for the winter at Pony creek, about twenty-five miles down the Missouri river. While stopping here he lost his entire family, consisting of his mother, wife and little daughter, all dying within a few days of each other.

In the spring of 1847 he was called, with 142 others, to form a pioneer company to lead the way to the Rocky Mountains. He traveled in the first ten of the second division under Captain Appleton Harmon. After arriving in Salt Lake valley, when the Pioneers returned to the East, Elder Whipple remained and took charge of the property belonging to the Pioneers and of Brother Kimball's family.

He was a member of the first High Council organized in Salt Lake City. On the 13th of October he started back to the states on business for himself and discharged soldiers of the Mormon battalion; while in the East Elder Woodruff was sent on a mission to the states with an epistle from the Twelve Apostles to gather out the Saints from the East, and Brother Whipple was called to assist. After fulfilling this mission he returned to Salt Lake City in Brother Woodruff's company, and soon after returning home he married Mary Jane and Harriet Yearsley. December 9th, 1850, he started with Elder George A. Smith and others to settle Iron county, arriving at the place where Parowan now stands on the 14th day of January, 1851. In organizing Iron county Brother Whipple was appointed first associate to Judge George A. Smith and captain of a military company called the "Home Guards." In connection with George Brimhall he built a threshing machine and threshed the first grain raised in Iron County. He was a member of the first city council of Parowan and drew up the plans for the building of the Parowan fort. In 1851 he was counseled by President Heber C. Kimball to return north as soon as the mission was well established, which he did, returning to Provo, Utah.

In 1871 he was sent on a mission to the Eastern states. In 1880 he started for Arizona, and in 1886 he came to Mexico, arriving at Colonia Juarez, where he resided up to the time of his death. He was always full of strong faith and bearing a faithful testimony to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Elder Whipple leaves a wife, twenty children and fifty-six grandchildren.

JABEZ BROADHEAD.

Jabez Broadhead was born April 12, 1841, in Lancashire, England, and died April 8, 1894, at Willow Bend (Aurora), Sevier county, Utah, being three days under 53 years of age. Brother Broadhead emigrated to this country with his parents when quite young. He had lived in Sevier county fourteen years previous to his death, which was caused, after a painful illness of two years, by consumption. He leaves a wife, 12 children and 17 grandchildren to mourn his loss. He died a true and faithful Latter-day Saint. He was a kind husband, and was the father of 17 children. Brother Wm. Palmer and Bishop Wm. Stevens delivered the funeral addresses. ISRAEL.

FAITH BRINGS BLESSINGS.

Discourse delivered at the General Conference of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Friday, April 6, 1894, by

ELDER ABRAHAM H. CANNON.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I sincerely trust that the wish expressed by President Woodruff concerning the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon those who speak to the people may be fully realized throughout this entire Conference. In standing before you I desire to receive and impart such instruction as the Lord may desire to make me the instrument of bringing forth. I rejoice in the testimony of the Gospel which the Lord has given me; and though I feel my own imperfections and weaknesses every day that I live, yet I hope, through the faith and the power which God shall give me, to bring myself in time under complete subjection to the mind and will of God.

I am greatly pleased in traveling among the people to find how richly God is blessing them, especially in spiritual matters. The remark is sometimes made that there is less faith among the people than formerly, that we see fewer manifestations of the power of God, and that the saints are drifting gradually away from the old love which inspired their hearts and brought them into such close communion with the Lord our God. There are doubtless many cases of this kind—too many, considering the day in which we live and the momentous events which lie before the people; but I am pleased to note and to bear my testimony this day that the vast majority of the Latter-day Saints are striving to live their religion, and that they are in possession of the Holy Spirit of God; that they enjoy also the gifts of the Gospel. These gifts do not always come into such prominence as was the case in the early days of the Church, when almost every instance of the manifestation of the power of God was recorded; but I believe they are none the less numerous. I believe that the sick are healed by the power of God. I believe and know that the dead have been raised to life. I know that the gifts of tongues and interpretation of tongues are experienced by the people. I know that the gift of prophecy is heard frequently among the people, and sometimes from those from whose mouths prophecy is least expected. I know that in the conferences of the people there is the power of God manifested to a remarkable degree. The reason that some fail to experience the power which God has poured out upon the people is because they prefer to look upon the dark side of the picture, and do not see the glorious Gospel which God has bestowed upon us, His children. But while I testify to these things being in existence among the people, I realize that there is still much room for improvement. I realize that never before has there been so great an effort made by the adversary of our souls to lead away the Church of God, to deceive the people, and to lead them into darkness, as in the present day. On almost every hand, we hear, "Lo! here is Christ;" and even among the Latter-day Saints there have men arisen who testify that Christ has come, that He is living among the people, and they point out some personage whom they profess to recognize as the Savior of the world again come to visit the earth. These, my brethren and sisters, are the deceptions of Satan; and if you will live near unto the Lord, you may instantly discern the evil spirits which are abroad among the children of men; you may detect them when they come to you with their false doctrines and lying statements. If you live faithful unto the covenants which you have made, you will know by the testimony of the Spirit within you that when Christ comes you will know Him. There will be no need for any man to say to you that Christ has come again to earth; but by the knowledge which God shall impart unto you, by the sight of your own eyes and the hearing of your own ears, you shall be able to testify that the Savior has again come to earth, clothed with power and immortality, and bringing with Him the holy men and angels who exist with Him in the eternal worlds; and if you are faithful, you shall be caught up to receive from Him the blessings which your acts upon earth have merited.

I realize that there is indifference to some extent among the Latter-day Saints. I have thought sometimes that they have felt it was not necessary for them to seek an individual testimony of the truth of this work. They have satisfied themselves with the knowledge which their parents possessed of the divinity of the Gospel and the prophetic power which God conferred upon Joseph Smith. They are willing to listen to the counsels of the authorities of the Church and accept the theories which are advanced concerning our religion; but they do not seem disposed, for some reason, to seek for a practical and an undying testimony of the truth of this Gospel, without which no man or woman is sure of eternal life. They doubtless attend meetings because in this day it is fashionable to attend church; it is fashionable to study theology and to read the scriptures; not seeking therein the inspiration which the scriptures contain, but reading them because it is considered an excellent literary work. In this spirit many of the young people read it. They read the works of the Church because of the historical information therein to be obtained. But they do not dig down to the root of things, to gain for themselves a testimony of the truth. The result is, we find a great many young men who go forth to the nations of the earth as missionaries without the testimony of the Gospel in their hearts. Time and time again have young men told me, when they have been set apart for their missionary labors, that they firmly believed that this was the work of God, and they could go forth to the people telling them of what they believed, but as for the knowledge of which they have heard their seniors testify, this had not come to them. They have acknowledged their neglect in not seeking it as earnestly as they should. They have gone on missions, and these same young men, I believe, without a single exception, laboring with earnestness and zeal in the fields to which they have been appointed, have not been left long without the testimony of the truth; and when they have returned there is not one of them whose words I have listened to but has testified that he knew for himself that the Gospel was true, that God had spoken from the heavens, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. It is well that they receive it even under these circumstances; but better far would it be if they could receive the testimony of the truth in their childhood, that it might grow with their stature and increase with their intelligence that it might become within them a living fire, which no amount of opposition or sophistry could quench. And this testimony is within the reach of every one. God has said that none who seek Him shall be turned away unsatisfied. Sometimes the testimony does not come in the way that we have desired. We do not receive the outward manifestations which we have been led to expect. But it is not the outward appearances; it is not the healing of the sick, nor the hearing of tongues, that gives a man or a woman the greatest strength in the work of God; for those who have never seen angels, whose eyes have not been closed to the glories of eternity, and to whom it has seemed impossible for God to forbid even anything which they asked—they have turned away from the truth, lost the testimony of the Spirit, and again gone into darkness. Better far for us to possess the still small voice of the Spirit—the inward feeling which is experienced in every fibre of our organization, which tingles in our veins, which reaches the extremities of our bodies, and tells our whole being that this is the work of God. This testimony it is possible for each to obtain and to retain by a constant observance of the requirements of the Gospel of the Son of God. I have heard men relate that they have prayed to see angels, and they have seen angels through their repeated importunities before God. Those same men today are outside of the Church. I have known men who have testified that they have seen the dead raised unto life; but these same men are today outside of the Church. I have known men to testify that they have spoken in tongues, and that they have prophesied; they are today outside of the Church. I know men and women who have not seen or heard any of these things that were remarkable, but have had a testimony of the Spirit, and they are still in the Church, firm, to all appearances, as these everlasting hills that surround us. Their feet are grounded upon the rock of revelation, and they never seek the Lord in prayer but they receive an answer, when they ask for those things which are for their good.

It is fashionable in the world now to ridicule men for praying to God. Infidels make light of the petitions which are sent unto the throne of grace. God always gives to those who seek Him in prayer the things that will be for their good. What would you parents do if your child should cry that he might have in his hands a live coal? Would it be wisdom in you to place in his hands that which would burn him? Would it be wisdom in you, because your child cries for some poisonous substance, to permit it to partake of it? No; you would be unwise to do so, though he would plead with you to receive that which his childish and foolish desires might prompt. Instead of giving it a live coal, or some poison, you would seek to give it something that would satisfy it and would be for its good. So it is with our Eternal Father. We pray to Him sometimes for those things which would bring about our destruction, if granted unto us. With our limited vision we cannot grasp the result of such giving; but God, who knows the end from the beginning, and who overrules all things for good, understands what would result from our receiving the desires of our hearts, and He turns aside from us those things which we seek and which we fail to receive, and gives to us that which will be for our good. Take your own experience, brethren and sisters, in this and you will be able to see that God has operated with you, if you have been faithful, in your whole career through life. You have asked Him for blessings; they have seemed necessary to your welfare and to your success; you have not received them; your faith perhaps has been weakened at the time, because these things were forbidden you; but allow the time to pass, and in after years, looking back upon your experience, you see frequently wherein the reception of these things for which you prayed so earnestly would have been to your great injury here upon the earth and in eternity.

Sometimes in your pleadings with God for your sick you see that they do not realize the healing power of the Spirit of God. Your faith is exercised; you pray earnestly to the Lord, and He seems at times to be near unto you; you call in the Elders; they are led in a certain way, and they promise life unto the one who is afflicted; yet you see this same sick one fail and die. How does this happen? The faith of men is tried in this respect. Is it because God does not hear prayer that your sick are not healed? Is it because He has turned a deaf ear to our entreaties that He takes away from us those we love? No, it is not. It is for some divine lesson He desires to impress upon our minds that He permits these things to occur—sometimes perhaps to try our faith and see if we will be true to Him under all circumstances. In administering to your sick you sometimes see that they recover for a short time under your administration, and time and time again the administration of the Elders and the faith they exercise seems to give new life to the one afflicted; and yet after repeated trials and the repeated exercise of faith, we are sometimes led by the Spirit to pray to the Lord that He would rather take the afflicted one from us than that he should be continued in his suffering, and that we should continue to hold on to him by the exercise of faith.

It is proper for us to feel this way. It is right for us in our prayers to God not to set up our wills and our desires in opposition to Him; but when we have expressed to His, with all the faith which we are capable of exercising, our desires, either concerning our friends or ourselves, then it is the duty of every Latter-day Saint to say as the Savior said when He prayed that the cup might pass by Him, "Not my will, but thine, be done;" and even though afflictions come, the Lord will pour out upon us of His Holy Spirit, so that we may submissively yield to His righteous will and reap the blessings which even sorrow and trouble bring upon us. Better far to do this than by our faith—as I believe has been the case among the Latter-day Saints—rescue the sick from death, and yet see these same children who have been saved by our faith suffer something that is worse than death; for some children who have apparently been snatched from the grave by the faith exercised by the servants of God and their parents, have in time lost the faith, and have brought sorrow and affliction to the family to which they belong. There are things in this life far worse than death. There are sins which burden our hearts with grief far worse than to follow to their last resting place the bodies of our loved ones. It is better by far that we take to the tomb our loved ones and bury them in their purity and holiness than that by our faith and our constant wrestling with God we save them from temporal death and consign them to an eternal punishment.

I testify to you, my brethren and sisters, that the Lord is a God who is near unto us. He hears and answers prayer, and He gives to His children who serve Him faithfully the blessings which are for their temporal as well as their eternal prosperity and happiness. I would admonish the young people to seek Him while He is near. There are troubles coming upon the earth which are to try the souls of men, and those who lean upon the testimony of others are leaning upon a broken reed, and at a future day they will find themselves without the support of those whose testimony is now so strong to them. It is necessary, in order to secure eternal life, that every man and every woman should have within himself and herself the unquenchable testimony of the Spirit of God, and then whatever comes will only serve to strengthen our faith in Him, and will only chasten us to receive in greater measure the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon us. Amen.

A FERTILE VALLEY.

OVERTON, Lincoln Co., Nevada, June 2, 1894.—In the southern part of Lincoln county, Nevada, is a large, beautiful valley, well watered, which would sustain three large cities. It is about 35 miles long by eight wide. The soil is good and yields abundantly all kinds of grain, root crops, fruits (except apples) and vegetables. Especially does the sweet potato flourish. Cane and cotton also grow finely. Watermelons, squashes, etc., are produced in abundance. In fact, nearly everything that a community consumes can be produced here. The parched ground has yielded its dryness to the almond fields and vineyards. Beef and pork of excellent quality and quantity are found here; also the different varieties of poultry, the product of which brings a good price—25 cents per dozen for eggs; butter 25 cents per pound. Of the latter a most excellent quality is produced, owing to the sweetness and richness of the hay, which seems to contain all the qualities of mountain grass. The grain also produces an article of flour that for family use is unexcelled for sweetness if it does lack the ghastly whiteness of many roller mill products. The cotton plant prides itself in outstripping all other plants in the abundant yield of the crop. Flax also has been grown, not for the manufacture of linen, but for the medicinal properties of the seed. An excellent quality of molasses is made in this sunny climate, and experts claim it to be the finest article of the kind in the Territory. It certainly is a superior production.

The climate is so mild that early garden vegetables find their way to the table very early in the season. In fact the gardener rejoices in being able to produce two crops a year of vegetables, melons, tomatoes, etc. It is said one can almost see the growing of the plants. One year's growth of a cottonwood tree measured ten feet in length and an inch and a half in diameter. It takes nearly all winter for the leaves to fall. The trees are used for wood, grow very rapidly and every farmer has his wood without going to the canyon for it—and a most splendid article of fuel it is, the ashes of which can be utilized in a money saving way to good advantage.

The great stacks of hay and grain give a sense of comfort, security and satisfaction, that is a stranger to the hearts of many inhabitants of our prosperous little Territory, much less the many thousands who depend upon the labors of others for the staff of life, and who own not the ground they stand upon for a home. To secure these comforts and necessities our brethren show that they are not afraid of a little expense of bone and muscle, else they could not sustain themselves so comfortably. They dress as well or better than those in more favored circumstances, set a plentiful table, and enjoy such peace and quiet that seldom falls to the lot of people in these troublous times. No profaning is heard; the smoking, chewing and drinking habits are strangers to the "hope of Israel" here; no racing horses at breakneck speed through the streets is endured in our peaceful little town; in fact the only complaint is, and not without just cause, that it is rather too quiet.

We have an excellent Sunday School and Primary, the former presided over by Thomas Johnson, who is faithful and diligent in his labors, the latter by Sister Sue Johnson, who, in conformity with the Savior's command, "Feed my lambs," is earnest and untiring in her labors. The Sunday school and Primary are well attended. Sunday and fast meetings are also held; in fact this is a live little town spiritually, considering the fewness of its inhabitants.

There are a few pioneer families who have struggled bravely through the difficulties of a new or uninhabited country. Prominent among these is Ute W. Perkins, who has been faithful and untiring in subduing the soil and utilizing the elements. He has fought the battle alone for some time, but now his place boasts of six families, bona fide residents, and all are welcoming any of the Saints, with or without homes, to come and share with them the joys and sorrows of this favored spot. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver," and those who immigrate need to give freely of their bone and muscle in developing the country. Their labor will not be in vain in reclaiming the land. The native wire that is used for fencing grows in abundance, and our brethren here are utilizing the products of nature, instead of the manufactured article.

The climate is perfection for about nine or ten months in the year. One can work, if he so desires, out doors the year round nearly every day without discomfort, the only disadvantage being the heat, which is very depressing for about six or eight weeks in the summer season; but with a little economy, united labor and with proper machinery that difficulty could be easily remedied; also with proper buildings the heat could be so modified as to cause little discomfort in the home. This is a most excellent place for those afflicted with lung diseases, catarrh and diphtheria. The clear, dry atmosphere is especially beneficial to those thus effected. The grand purifiers of nature, sun and wind, are ever alive to their duties. The wind, however, leaves the labor mostly to the sun, as it only visits us semi-occasionally, not enough to hinder the usual labors.

There have been but two deaths in eleven or twelve years. The last occurred a few weeks ago. The deceased hardly could be called a member of the place, having been in our midst only a few weeks. The only sickness that seems to be at all common is a kind of fever that sometimes is intermittent and at others continuous. But if care and the exercise of hygienic rules were practiced, there is no reason why the best of health should not be enjoyed.

There have been so many reports circulated by disaffected parties about our beautiful and productive valley, that justice demands that the golden side of the shield be exposed to view. Those who give it a bad name are like those who cry "mad dog," and others take up the cry without knowing why, when really there is no one mad except those who started the cry. There is really no reason why people without homes of their own be frightened away, when there is such a fine opening to secure them. Land is cheap and plentiful, and as there has been and is a money famine there will, in all probability, be a bread famine to those who have neglected to be wise in season in securing land on which to produce it.

This valley contains the elements to produce a prosperous and flourishing community, the salt of the earth. Capital and labor, and the brains to utilize all if properly united, would furnish employment to a roller mill, a factory and a tannery, and also to all who were not otherwise employed. Are we to acknowledge that others are in possession of abler brains, more clever hands and greater industry and ability than our people, who profess so much and who have been taught the principle of home industry so thoroughly? Yet others are doing what we should do, and they'll get the honor, too, if we do not awake to a sense of our position and advantages.

The Savior said "The poor ye have always with you;" so we have. But we also have those who possess capital, and their names are honored and their memory cherished by the use they make of it. They can be benefactors to their race, and why not? Is not happiness the aim of all, both rich and poor? The mere possession of wealth does not constitute happiness, neither the abuse, but the use, that is evidence that the capitalist is in possession of other qualities equally as potent as wealth. We all, sooner or later, have presented to us opportunities for present or future greatness, but they seem so far off and insignificant, and the "money in it" so hid; that the golden moment is nearly always lost.

If our people understood the principles of economy, as do some who profess less than we, there would be no hides going to waste, but they would be converted into boots and shoes. The natural facilities for a tannery, for instance, would be utilized. Here the caneigre root flourishes under the most discouraging circumstances. It is destroyed at nearly all seasons of the year, according to the spare time the farmer has to devote to its destruction. But "th'ugh vanquished" it can flourish still—and maintains a vigorous existence. If it should be encouraged merely by being allowed to grow, the yield would be very great. There also is a probability that a sugar factory could be in time in successful operation.

What we sorely need is an increase of population of the right sort. Indeed the wealth of any country is in the virtue of her citizens. A country is rich according to the number of industrious, prosperous, energetic and law-abiding citizen who are true to themselves and to their advantages. If there are any of this class who wish to know more of this country, there lives here T. J. Jones, whose industry and ability to build and increase the prosperity of the Saints is well known, and whose labors in southern Utah are equally valuable; also Brigham Whitmore, the chief land-owner and capitalist in the valley, and David Cox, whose broad acres are redeemed from the desert by persistent exertions, untiring and determined industry. I am sure these gentlemen will be pleased to give to all inquirers accurate information concerning our fertile valley. C.

THROWING STONES.

McMINNVILLE, Warren County, Tenn., May 30, 1894.

We have just passed through a little unpleasant experience in our labor as missionaries in this part of the vineyard, and presume it might be of interest to the readers of the NEWS to know what occurred. I have been here about four months, constantly engaged in this county; my former partner was released to return home and I was therefore given a new partner just from the vales of Utah. We started out in the northwestern part of the county, and found all agreeable to us holding meetings in Columbia College. We left an appointment on Wednesday for Friday night, and circulated the word about the neighborhood, remaining in Evanston, that being the name of the postoffice where the college is situated. We held our meeting with a good turnout. Everything seemed friendly and quiet, we were asked after the close to speak on Sunday night following, which we gladly agreed to do.

We were kindly invited home by a Campbellite minister who lived two miles from the church. We started on our way, all three on foot, and got near a mile along, on a thick wooded road, when we were assailed with stones from the roadside. A great volley came, then the throwing stopped. We moved on untouched while the minister called, "Don't do that! Don't!" etc. We were quiet, and all walked steadily on, when another greeting of the same nature came, with increased quantity and vigor. We decided to increase our speed, and just as we got started a thud came heavy to my ear, and an exclamation of pain came from our friend who was escorting us home. He received a heavy blow on the left cheek, but we were untouched. My companion, in the bustle and excitement, stumbled into a mud puddle bespattering his clothes with mud, which drew forth a smile in spite of the danger. Soon we were safely lodged in the house of the minister. As we went back the next morning we found stones lying all along our path that had been flung there the night before. We deeply sympathized with our friend, as he received an ugly bruise.

We held meeting in the forenoon of the Sabbath in a schoolhouse near the college and had a good turn out. We were asked home, and well cared for. The neighbors came and we were invited to talk. After dinner I talked until my lungs were sore, then went to the college to fill the other appointment, as we had been required. The house being full I took up the time in advancing the first principles of the Gospel and the subject of new revelation. At the close the minister talked some, but could present no evidence of the doing away of these things, and said the best reason he could give that revelation was done away with was because we did not have any in this day. There were two bitterly prejudiced persons, who, seeing the discomfort of the minister, got up and railed on us with the threadbare stories so often hurled at the Elders. There was blood in the eyes of some of the more viciously inclined after hearing the falsehoods. I said a few words, and at the close we went into the woods for safety. We had many friends who would gladly have cared for us, but to avoid bringing trouble on them we took the course stated. The woods were searched for us by some on horseback and others on foot. We remained quiet until 2 o'clock a. m., when they withdrew, and at 3 a. m. came from our place of concealment. The ground being damp and us very warm in coming out of church I caught a cold on my lungs, having talked so much during the day; but it is nothing serious.

On coming out of the woods we walked toward town and came upon a house soon after daybreak. The breakfast bell rang as we entered, and we received breakfast, rested and felt much better. We came on to McMinnville, got letters and went back and continued our labors in the neighborhood, meeting up with many from Evanston who declared we had many friends and that they were multiplied by ten when this adventure reached the ears of the people. We are earnestly invited to come again. Citizens said they would die in our protection if required; but this will not be necessary. The Lord has turned the whole affair to good effect in our behalf, and we thank and praise Him. We are still near the scene of trouble, but all is peaceful. One of the instigators of the trouble, we learn, has expressed regret for his part of the affair. We met him the other day and he passed the time of day. We harbor no ill will toward those who took part, but think it a pity that they will take the side of error and resort to unlawful measures. We are happy to labor diligently to further the work of truth and salvation in the earth. O. S., and E. L.

IN OKLAHOMA.

CHADDICK, Oklahoma,
May 29, 1894.

My brother Joseph and I, who are laboring in this part, visited a family of Saints who reside six miles east of the City of Norman. During our visit there we attended a Campbellite meeting. After the minister spoke he gave us the privilege of talking to the congregation, who listened with great interest to what we had to say. The parson listened very attentively, and after we had got through he opposed us very much. The congregation, however, desired to hear more of our doctrine, which made their preacher rather excited. Meetings were announced for us to explain our doctrine, and at one of these, on Monday, May 18th, the preacher abused us some. Many questions were asked in regard to the doctrine we taught and some were convinced of the truth of the Gospel which we advocated.

On the following evening we had another meeting and were undisturbed.

Five made application for baptism, and on the following Sunday over two hundred people assembled on the banks of Little river. After prayer and singing "Lo, on the watery brink we stand," we baptized P. H. Rowland and wife, John Rowland and wife and Emma Graham, after which we assembled and addressed the congregation for a short time on baptism and the bestowal of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands.

We appointed another meeting and there the Saints bore a faithful and humble testimony to the truth of the Gospel. One of the Saints had a sick baby. Faith was exercised and we were requested to administer to the child. It received immediate relief, proving to the Saints that the promises of God were good. We left the Saints rejoicing and praising the Lord for His goodness toward them. Many people here are interested in the Gospel and likely will embrace the Gospel.

Our labors the eighteen months which we have labored in Indian and Oklahoma territories have been greatly enjoyed by us. We have baptized thirty-six and have assisted in organizing one branch of the Church. Oklahoma is a new field of labor, but a good one. There are hundreds who have never seen or heard a Mormon preach. There are six Elders laboring here now, and plenty of room for more. The Elders cannot do much traveling from the latter end of June until October, owing to the warm weather. This portion of the vineyard is in a prosperous condition. We make our headquarters with our kind brother and sister, P. T. and Alice Goings, who assist all they can to help the work along.

JOHN A. LOWE.

AN OPENING IN MICHIGAN.

WOODVILLE, Mich.,
May 18, 1894.

Perhaps a few lines from this part of our great country may be of interest to some of your readers, and more particularly to the many Latter-day Saint Elders traveling, as I am, preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ restored to earth in this the dispensation of the fulness of times through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I have been laboring in the Indiana conference for fourteen months. The first five months I labored in Ohio; then I was called into northern Indiana where there seemed to be a better opening for the spread of the Gospel where I labored till March 20th, when I was assigned to go to Newaygo county, Michigan, and labor to open up a new field. After some short stops on the way, for the purpose of visiting Saints and friends, I arrived here on the 1st of May, scarcely three weeks ago.

We called at the postoffice for mail, after which we made inquiries concerning a Mr. John M. Backus. We were soon informed where we would find his son, and upon finding him just a casual how-d'ye do was all that was required. "Yes, gentlemen, we have been looking for you for some time;" and by the way people began moving around we were impressed that there were others looking for us as well, for the word had gone out that the Mormons were coming to Woodville.

Upon the invitation of our friend we went out to the farm, two and a half miles south; having our valises, and there not being very much room in the conveyance, we decided to walk out. We have become so used to walking that it is almost an insult to ask us to ride.

After an introduction to the family we sat down to a dinner such as you get only on the farm, and after dinner a pleasant conversation upon different subjects. Of course it was understood that we were to have somewhat of an entertainment and we prepared to make ourselves at home. We are now settled down and ready to do what we can to enlighten the people upon the subjects of the Gospel. We have held five meetings and have a good prospect of holding more, and have given out quite a number of tracts. We held two meetings last Sunday, May 13, at a little town by the name of Hungerford. The country here has been covered with heavy pine timber, but during the last twelve years large mills have been cutting away the trees till now there isn't a great deal left, and a few years more will see all the timber cut into lumber and shipped out. It is a curious sight to see hundreds of acres covered with blackened stumps, and after night when one is walking alone among these silent watchers he is inclined to think of all the horrid ghost stories he ever heard.

Today has been raging one of the worst snow storms I have ever witnessed at this time of the year. The weather has been quite cool here up to the present, with plenty of spring rains.

We hope to be able to bring a few people to the knowledge of God and the restoration of the Gospel. The trials of the Elders are many and but for the testimony of Jesus they could not stand what they do. But they know that God has given them a testimony and at some future day He will require it at their hands.

FRANCIS A. BROWN DEAD.

The following telegram was received Saturday, May 9 by the NEWS:

OGDEN, Utah, June 9.—Francis A. Brown died at 8:15 a. m. Further particulars will be sent later.

M. POULTER.

Elder Brown was born in Milford, Otsego county, N. Y., November 14, 1822; joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints February 11, 1844, being baptized by John Lane. In October following he emigrated to Nauvoo, where he taught school, and afterwards labored on the Temple until the exodus in 1846. When the body of the Church moved west, he made a visit to the State of New York, where he married and soon afterwards removed to Kanesville, Iowa. There he again taught school and was employed in a store until the spring of 1851, when he was called on a mission to Nova Scotia. While on this mission, he visited the island of Cape Breton, where he baptized nine persons and organized a branch of the Church. Together with David Candland, his companion, he also baptized a number in Halifax and organized them into a branch. Having returned to Council Bluffs in the spring of 1853, he once more engaged in school teaching.

In the meantime his wife died, and having married again, he emigrated to Utah in 1856, locating in Ogden, where he has resided ever since. In 1860 he made a visit to California, where he had a sister residing, and in 1865-68 he performed a good mission to Europe, spending two years in Holland, where he acquired a pretty thorough knowledge of the Dutch language, and afterwards presided one year over the Nottingham Conference, England. While in Holland some sixty persons were baptized and the Voice of Warning was translated into the Dutch language. In 1889 and 1890 he again performed a good mission in Holland, being president of the Netherlands Mission.

At home he has filled many positions of trust and responsibility. For two years he served as probate judge of Weber county, for ten years as alderman of the city council of Ogden, and also as justice of the peace for several years. Previous to his departure on his first mission to Europe, he taught school for nine years, and after his return was engaged a number of years in the Ogden branch of Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution. As president of the Central Canal company, he took an active part in getting the water from the Weber river upon the dry bench between Ogden and Kayville. Since 1880 he has been engaged principally in farming pursuits. When the prosecutions for polygamy and unlawful cohabitation commenced, he was one of the first victims selected from Weber county. Having been arrested May 15, 1885, on a charge of unlawful cohabitation, we was arraigned in the First District Court in Ogden on June 30th, when he furnished all the evidence himself for his conviction and read an able plea in court, in which he asserted that he would rather have his head severed from his body than prove recreant to his wives and children and betray his trust. His remarks were characteristic of the man—noble, courageous and conscientious. He was true to what he conceived to be his post of duty, regardless of the consequences to himself. Up to the close of his life he was active in his labors for the welfare of his fellow beings and the establishment of righteousness on the earth. He held the respect and esteem, not only of his co-religionists, but of those who differed widely from him in religious belief, and he will be mourned by all classes of citizens. The world is better through the lives of such men as Francis A. Brown. Would there were more of them.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder G. M. Thomson, of Richmond, Cache county, arrived in this city on the Union Pacific train which reached here at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, June 7, the trip from Southampton to Salt Lake having been made in less than 12 days. Elder Thomson left his home May 1, 1892, and six days thereafter departed from this city with a party of missionaries for Great Britain. He was assigned to labor in the Liverpool conference, remaining in that field the whole time except a couple of months spent among relatives in Scotland and brief visits to other conferences. He enjoyed his missionary labors, which were attended with good success. Especially in the past few months there has been marked improvement in the sentiment toward the Latter-day Saints. There is now shown a marked spirit of inquiry, and where a couple of years ago the people were careful to shun a Mormon Elder the missionaries now are invited to many homes where the people are desirous to know what the Latter-day Saints believe. Elder Thomson thinks that altogether the prospect is much brighter the present season than for many years past.

Elder Wm. D. Callister, of this city, also returned Thursday, June 7. He left home May 7, 1892, and on his arrival in England was assigned to the Leeds conference, where he labored some five months. He was then called to the Liverpool office for the winter months, and in the spring took up his labors in the Birmingham conference, where he remained till released to come home. His missionary labors were attended with success, and in general he found the feeling of inquiry regarding the Gospel to be extending. He visited relatives on the Isle of Man, and was well received. His experience as a missionary has been of an enjoyable character in the opportunities he has had of presenting the Gospel before the people and the blessings of the Lord that have been with him.

Elders H. M. McCune, of Nephi, who labored in the Sheffield and Liverpool conferences; Hyrum Kirkham, of Lehi, whose field was the Sheffield conference; Frank S. Baugh, of Logan, who operated in the Scottish and Birmingham conferences, and Alonzo Lewis, of Logan, who labored in the Welsh and Irish conferences, also were among the returning missionaries. Elder Lewis stopped over a few days in New York; Elder Baugh went north to Logan from Ogden; and Elders McCune and Kirkham remained in Ogden yesterday afternoon, coming to Salt Lake on a later train. All are well, and have generally similar reports to make of their labors. They all left this city May 7, 1892, for Great Britain.

The return journey was made from Southampton, as the Alaska, which was to sail from Liverpool May 28, did not leave, the company deciding to retire. The passengers therefore took the American line, and made the voyage on the Paris, which left the quay at Southampton May 28 at 2:18 p.m., and reached Sandy Hook lightship at 8:46 p.m. the following Friday, making the trip over the long course in six days, eleven hours and thirty-three minutes. This was two hours behind the quickest passage on record, which was made by the Paris, from Southampton, but as it was over the long course and took 68 knots more to travel, it really was the quickest trip ever made by the Paris, and consequently the fastest on record from Southampton. On the full days the runs were 504, 500, 500, 510 and 504 knots. The average speed for the voyage was 20.01 knots, or 25 miles per hour. On Decoration Day an iceberg was passed in midocean, latitude 42 deg., longitude 40 deg. It was fifteen miles north of the vessel's course.

On the trip westward, from New York to Chicago the railway accommodations were anything but satisfactory, and showed a marked contrast to the courtesy of officials and efficiency of service on the roads west of Chicago. In respect to these features the West has railway service superior to the East. On the trip, the passengers report excellent treatment on board the Paris, and also on the Chicago & Alton and the Union Pacific trains, everything that was consistent being done for their comfort and safety.

KANAB STAKE CONFERENCE.

The Kanab Stake conference was held in Orderville, June 2nd and 3rd, 1894. There were present, of the authorities, on the occasion, Elders Edwin D. Woolley and Daniel Seegmiller, of the Kanab Stake presidency, some of the members of the High Council and Bishops of the various wards. Conference was well attended by the female portion of the Stake, but on account of so many of the brethren being away out of the Stake and otherwise hindered, they were not so plentifully represented.

Saturday morning after the usual opening exercises, Pres. E. D. Woolley addressed the Saints a short time on the subject of round-dancing and card-playing. He felt desirous that the Saints in this Stake should be willing to endeavor to carry out the wishes of the First Presidency in this matter, and cease the practice of these things, as he considered it to be the mind and will of the Lord unto us. Resolutions having been adopted by the High Council and Bishops that they would refrain from the practice of these evil habits in the future, an expression from the Saints assembled was had, in which the action of the High Council was sustained, without a dissenting vote.

Elder Heber J. Meeks, a lately returned missionary from the Southern States, occupied most of the remainder of the forenoon to the instruction and edification of the Saints. He was followed by Bishop Macdonald of Graham Ward a short time.

Elders James Leithead, Daniel Seegmiller, of the Stake Presidency, Richard S. Robinson, Bishops Haskel S. Jolley, Henry W. Esplin, Joel H. Johnson and Royal R. Cutler, and Elder Charles S. Craah were also speakers during conference. The subjects treated upon were the signs of the times, keeping out of debt, home industries, obedience to the council of the Priesthood, Sabbath day observance, Word of Wisdom, and many other points of interest. The general and local authorities were unanimously sustained and we had very interesting and instructive programs carried out in the conferences of the different associations and Sabbath school.

In regard to our prosperity it does not look as flattering as we would like to see it. There has been but very little rainfall during the last winter and spring in our vicinity, and in consequence there is but little grass growing on the range, and cattle have been dying off to quite an extent so I am told by stockmen.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

THE LABORERS' MISTAKE.

A Denver paper in an attempt to explain and, as far as possible, defend the Coxe movement and Colorado strikers makes the point that in times of business depression the myriads thrown out of employment universally move towards the national capitals. Why, they cannot tell, but they are convinced that the source of the evil is to be found at the seats of government, and they naturally go to the supposed source to find a remedy. "In Great Britain," the paper argues, "the unemployed move on London; in France, on Paris; in Germany, on Berlin. The area of these countries combined is not equal to that of some American states, and therefore the drive of humanity to their capitals is not so remarkable. This may now be regarded as one of the laws of a great business depression; and the movement to Washington is in accordance with it."

This plea for the anomalous movement on Washington by the "armies" may be ingenious, but it is based on a misstatement of facts and can serve no good purpose. It is true enough that in times of depression unemployed naturally congregate in the great centers of population, where the chances of employment are supposed to be greater than elsewhere, but it is not true, as the argument evidently implies, that it is a natural law that drives unemployed to combine in a movement upon the seats of government in order to force legislation their way. The scheme would be utterly impracticable in any of the countries mentioned, and were it attempted, it would be speedily put down as insurrection. Just fancy a handful of hoodlums from Hamburg, Lubeck and other cities starting out for Berlin. How far would they be allowed to proceed before they were all securely locked up? And in England, a similar crowd marching on London from the slums of Hull or Liverpool would fare no better. Some years ago the laborers in the timber yards near Sundswall, Sweden, suddenly struck, assumed a threatening attitude toward the local government and destroyed some property. But before they knew what had happened the whole crowd, several thousand strong, were surrounded by the troops commanded by the governor of the province, and a man-of-war was on its way from the capital to back the governor up if necessary. The rioters had to surrender unconditionally and the leaders were promptly sent to jail. That is how they do things over in Europe. A Coxe movement would not be tolerated in any of those countries, not even in republican Switzerland. It is a possibility only in a country like this, where the greatest liberty is enjoyed and where men may abuse their rights to a certain extent without molestation.

No right minded person can fail to feel the greatest sympathy for the worthy laborers who are suffering the consequences of a depressed trade. But it would be false friendship indeed to encourage in any way these sufferers to adopt a course destructive to their best interests; and certainly laborers commit grave errors when they rise in arms against capital. The plain reason why so many now are unemployed is that capitalists are timid and capital is idle. Is the remedy for this to create a condition of still greater insecurity and timidity? It cannot be denied that in the degree that strikers and Coxeyites menace and destroy property and inflict losses on capital, in that same degree the chances of employment and a return of prosperity will be lessened. The laborers of this country are intelligent enough to understand that without capital millions of their own class are doomed to idleness because the factories are closed, the fields untilled. Good will and good feelings between men is what is needed, and any movement with a view of promoting these is commendable while the opposite is as destructive to the laborers' interest as to the prosperity of the country.

"PETITIONS WITH BOOTS ON."

Referring to the claim of the Coxe "army" and other similar marching organizations headed for Washington, that they merely intend to present to Congress a "petition in boots," the Springfield Republican recalls a vivid incident of the war of the Revolution, not by way of parallel or justification for the recent demonstration, but as showing the superior kind of claims that in times long past was deemed to warrant this extraordinary means of demanding a hearing. No one who has read early American history can fail to remember the sufferings of the American soldiers at Valley Forge in 1778, when for days at a time they were without provisions, clothes, medicines or other lodgings than the rude and uncomfortable huts which barely sheltered them. Many of the men were so deficient in clothes that they could not lie down lest they should freeze to death, but were forced to sit round the camp fires. These soldiers were mainly the intelligent yeomanry of the land, plain farmers and mechanics, of whom Lafayette wrote to his wife, "No European army would suffer the tenth part of what the American troops suffer. It takes citizens to support hunger, nakedness, toil and the total want of pay which constitute the condition of our soldiers, the hardest and most patient that are to be found in the world."

Coming to the incident, three years later, of the threatened march on the national capital, the Republican says:

In January, 1781, when the patriot army was encamped at Morristown, N. J.—when Glover wrote to Massachusetts: "It is now four days since your line of the army has eaten one mouthful of bread"—a part of the Pennsylvania line, composed in a large degree of Irish immigrants, revolted and, under the lead of their non-commissioned officers, marched to Princeton en route to Philadelphia, where Congress was assembled. What they deemed indifference to their wants on the part of Congress roused their indignation, and led them in an orderly manner to demand redress in person. They were under the impression that Congress wasted much precious time in wrangling over questions of minor importance, and that some of the states had grown indifferent and failed to furnish supplies in food and clothing, of both of which their commander, Gen. Wayne, said they were sadly deficient, there being but one blanket between three men in that rigorous winter. The state of Pennsylvania, from which these revolvers had been recruited, had been especially backward in providing for the necessities of the army, though it was probably the richest of all the states, and through its President Reed it had but to come forward and arrange matters in the best way it could, by payment of arrears and promises for the future, to allay the dissatisfaction. Troops of New Jersey, whose ranks, next to the Pennsylvania line, included the largest proportion of foreigners, showed signs of being influenced by the bad example, but Washington interposed and suppressed the revolt with a strong hand.

The troops of New England, which had twenty regiments in the continental service, had equal reason, says the historian, for discontent; but they were almost every one of them native Americans, free-holders or sons of free-holders. The passions of the army were quieted by their patriotism, and order and discipline returned. It should also be said on behalf of the mutineers that many of them were compelled to remain in the service after their time of enlistment had expired, and were true to their country and gave up two of Sir Henry Clinton's emissaries, whom he sent to them with tempting offers, and who, after trial, were hanged as spies. There were no Arnolds among these soldiers.

Finally, adds the Republican, "It may also be said, in excuse of Congress, that it could do nothing but resolve and that the states alone could execute and furnish men, money, food and clothing. If it had not been at this period for the aid of Robert Morris and France, the worst, as Washington said in his circular letter to the New England states, that could befall the nascent states might have happened."

THE PLAGUE IN CHINA.

The dispatches bring information that in China a terrible plague which seems akin to the Black Death has made its appearance and is creating frightful havoc. The details at hand are very meager, but are sufficient to show that an alarming situation prevails. The disease first broke out in Canton, and at its appearance was characterized as a strange and remarkably fatal malady. At first it was not recognized as being similar to the awful plague which five centuries ago devastated the eastern hemisphere, but it spread so rapidly and increased in malignancy until there was no doubt in the minds of the Chinese officials that the Black Death was again in the country. Although information regarding the symptoms and course of the terrible malady is far from perfect, yet from available data physicians have concluded that the similarity of the effects of the present visitation and that of former times is so marked as to justify the claim that both are identical in character.

The symptoms of the disease as now described are as follows: A sudden attack of fever, headache, thirst and stupor. In from twelve to twenty-four hours a glandular swelling occurs in the neck, armpit or groin, hard and acutely tender. Coma supervenes, and death occurs in forty-eight hours from the onset, or sooner. Cases which linger for six days are regarded hopeful for recovery, although relapses are liable to occur. In a few cases vomiting of blood is noted; in others black spots on the body, but no characteristic eruption. These spots are indicative of the last stages. It seems allied to the "bubonic plague" which visited China in 1882, but has more features in common with the Black Death than has that disease. It claims as victims at least two out of three persons attacked.

There had been some hope that it would be kept out of Hongkong by quarantine arrangements, but the dispatches bring disappointing news on this point, as the work of death is rapidly going on there. The people had propitiated their deities in vain, and the street parades, the exploding of firecrackers, burning of sandalwood, joss-sticks, etc., being ineffectual in checking the pestilence, have but added to the excitement of the populace. Up to the present exact figures of the mortality occasioned are not obtainable, but in the city of Canton alone there were several thousand deaths before the disease had been communicated to other towns.

There may be no probability of the disease spreading to Europe on this occasion, but it is interesting at least to note the similarity of many of the conditions which exist today with those of the last great historic visitation. On the former occasion the disease began in China. For some years previous to its commencement, from 1838 to 1848, that country suffered from drouths, famines, floods, fires, storms, earthquakes which swallowed mountains, and swarms of innumerable locusts. Those who have sought to explain the origin and remarkable spread of the disease present the theory that this great tellurian activity, accompanied by the decomposition of vast organic masses and many bodies of men and brutes, produced a change in the atmosphere unfavorable to life. It is said the impure air was actually visible, appearing like a fog in the heavens as it approached with its burden of death. This latter was a feature of the more advanced condition of the plague, and was not noted in its early history.

While the atmospheric poison did much to spread the disease, it is reasonably certain that the chief cause of its extension was infection and contagion. From China it made its way to the west, reaching the Black Sea and Constantinople. From there, by contagion, it reached the seaports of Italy, and from these to the various countries of Europe. The history and lines of its advance are such that there is no question but that rigid rules of quarantine might have excluded it from many places.

The mortality from this visitation is estimated to have been in China 18,000,000 people, and in the rest of the East nearly 24,000,000. In Europe the exactness of details was obtainable. London alone lost over 100,000 souls; fifteen other European cities gave an aggregate of 800,000; Germany lost

1,244,844; Italy one-half its population; and in Europe there were about 25,000,000 people who succumbed to the disease, while Africa suffered with equal severity. The mortality growing out of the effects of the plague on society also was frightful. Many died of fear, others slew themselves, and still others directed their attention to sacrificing unpopular peoples in a vain hope of averting the calamity. In this latter procedure there were 12,000 Jews cruelly murdered in Mayence alone, while many thousands shared a similar fate at the hands of the maddened populace elsewhere.

At the present time China is in much the same situation as in the fourteenth century. There have been drouths, famines, floods, fires, storms and terrible earthquakes reaching over a period of years, culminating as before, even if not producing, a great pestilence among the people. The same disturbing elements have given the rest of the world a measure of attention, as they did just prior to the great plague. But quarantine regulations have been wonderfully advanced since that time, and the nations of the West have in their possession a weapon for defense not formerly held. It would appear to be a wise move to use this advantage in time, lest there be a repetition of "the great plague" whose record causes a thrill of horror. Above all, people should attend to proper hygienic regulations, in being cleanly and temperate, that not only general epidemics but those of a local character may be in great measure guarded against.

AS SEEN BY A KENTUCKIAN.

A reverend gentleman by the name of John L. Robinson, a preacher of the Cumberland Presbyterian faith, has succeeded in having a number of his letters, descriptive of the overland journey from Kentucky to Portland, Oregon, published in the Louisville Courier-Journal. Elder A. Bevan, writing from Henderson City, Ky., calls our attention particularly to the letter which Mr. Robinson wrote from Salt Lake City. It is in almost every paragraph a confession that he would not have been able to complain of anything he saw or heard had it not been for bigotry. For instance, the prayer that he heard at the Sunday services in the Tabernacle "was well-worded, earnest and spiritual;" and "if the man had been in a Methodist church, and you did not know he was a Mormon, there would have been any number of reverent 'amens.'" Further, "the sermon [delivered by President Joseph F. Smith] was a fairly good sermon on the principles of Christianity. In the main it was good, and it was only the student of theology that could detect its absurd and hurtful conclusions in some of the parts. This is all the worse, for error with some little truth is more hurtful than bold immorality." For the organ and the choir Mr. Robinson has words of praise, but the excellence of the acoustic properties of the building he plumply declares to be "a myth." Of course he has to fire his little pop-gun at polygamy, and he rolls his eyes in pious disgust at the "debauchery consequent upon Mormon teaching." He dabbled in the cold clear water that came from melting snow, and congratulated himself on escaping the mistake made by a fellow-minister who on one occasion while traveling in Palestine "reverently bathed his face in what he thought was water from the melting snow of Lebanon but what was really lemonade." Finally, he found unqualified pleasure in Beck's Hot Springs, "of which delightful place" he says it is "impossible to say too much in praise."

Elder Bevan reports that all the advertising Utah gets seems to have the effect of helping on the cause and that that particular conference in which he is now laboring is in a flourishing condition.

THE SILK INDUSTRY.

The Utah silk exhibit at the Woman's Building at the World's Fair, Chicago, was one of the features that attracted the greatest attention from visitors, and the ladies interested in that industry very much appreciate the wise judgment of Mrs. Potter Palmer, president of the board of lady managers, to whose encouraging suggestions this feature of the exhibition was due. It was no easy task to make a creditable showing of an industry now but little attended to, if at all, but at last a number of Utah made silk dresses, shawls, scarfs, fringes, sewing silk and twists, as well as reeled silk and cocoons, were collected. A Utah woman was also engaged to reel and another to weave, using the primitive machinery of the early days of the Territory, and the whole presented an interesting picture. In the last catalogue issued it was mentioned as one of the most interesting features in the Woman's Building and experts were unanimous in their praise of Utah's silk as being of a superior quality. It was awarded a medal and a diploma by a committee of Japanese under the department of manufacture and received similar recognition by American experts under the department of agriculture. A copy of the latter has just been received and will be read with much interest. It is as follows:

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN COMMISSION, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE ON AWARDS.

John Boyd Thacher, Chairman, Albany, N. Y.

W. J. Small, New Jersey, A. T. Britton, D. C.

A. B. Andrews, North Carolina.

Department A.—Agriculture.

Exhibitor, Mrs. Margaret Blaine Salisbury. Address: Salt Lake City.

Group 9, Class 61.—Exhibits Cocoons and Raw Silk.

AWARD.

The cocoons are of the races raised to the greatest advantage in the United States, of good quality and show advancement. As the raw silk and the threads are the result of the work of persons not skilled artisans, the quality is commendable, and gives promise of higher excellence when the industry shall have been sufficiently established to warrant continued occupation at the work. Great progress is shown.

The history of the silk industry of Utah dates back to the year 1856 or 1855. Brigham Young, when Governor of Utah, procured mulberry seed from France, and caused several acres in Salt Lake and Utah counties to be devoted to the cultivation of the trees. Sericulturists from France and Italy were employed to instruct the people in raising worms and handling the cocoons and such interest was manifested that the results were highly gratifying. In 1876 a territorial organization was effected—The Deseret Silk association, Mrs. Zina D. H. Young, president — and auxiliaries were formed in several counties. The late Alex. C. Pyper was ever an enthusiastic laborer in the cause. During one year the association paid to operators $1,600; but owing to lack of means, no permanent manufactories were established, and during the last four years no appreciable efforts have been made to raise silk in Utah.

The unanimous acknowledgement of the merit of the Territory's product should be a stimulus to renewed efforts to contribute to the markets of the world this valuable article. Some idea of the importance of the silk industry may be obtained from the fact that for about four thousand years that industry in China ranked next to the production of rice, which, as is well known, is one of the main supports of the millions of that vast empire. During the reign of James I it gave employment to 40,000 persons in England. During the religious persecution in France by which many industrious laborers had to take refuge in other countries, silk weavers found their way to England and established several new branches of their art, and such proportions did the enterprise assume that in the early years of this century 40,000 looms were in operation and $50,000,000 were paid to those engaged in the business.

Notwithstanding the repeated efforts made to encourage sericulture in the United States, notably in Virginia, Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Maine, the importation of silk to this country still amounts to $35,000,000 a year. This sum goes principally to England, France, Germany and China, not because the products of these countries are superior to those of the United States, but simply because home establishments are not able to supply the demand. It will be seen then that the silk market is one that cannot easily be overstocked. There is money in it. A Frenchman importing silk to this country, after having examined the Utah exhibit at the Fair gave his opinion somewhat as follows: "If you can raise silk of that quality, you have an unknown source of wealth, which, if properly managed, is worth more to you than any amount of gold." And the gentleman is correct. It would be of incalculable benefit to the Territory if the industry could be revived. It would give employment to thousands and turn currents of gold into the hands of the people of these valleys.

WAR, OR NO WAR?

Last Sabbath, Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, who is now making a preaching tour of the world, addressed a large audience of Californians on the subject of wars among nations. He took the ground that owing to the great development in destructiveness made in modern weapons of warfare, nations would be fearful of engaging in armed conflicts, and this fear practically would insure permanent peace. Whatever hostilities there were between people he thought would not partake of a very serious nature, but in consequence of a desire to avoid ruinously disastrous results of settling difficulties by a contest at arms, nations would fix up affairs by means of arbitration. "The day of war is past," said he; "there never will be another great war." In the same line are the more recent utterances of Henry Claws, who regards the wars of the future as likely to be more of a financial character than of tests on the ordinary battlefield.

With this practical unanimity of conclusion on the part of a great sectarian and a greater financier, it may not be unprofitable to consider the situation with a view of ascertaining whether there really is fair promise that the sleuth-hounds of bloody warfare are banished from the earth. Take the first idea, that the destructiveness of modern weapons will act as a deterrent. It is interesting to note the progress in the effectiveness of these weapons, down to the latest productions of the Lebel, the Mannlicher, and the Craig-Jorgensen rifles, for the purpose designed. The modern rifles have reduced greatly the size of the projectiles, from the ball which forty years ago was three-quarters of an inch in diameter to the rifle cartridge which now scarcely exceeds that of a small sized revolver and resembles more than anything else a short segment of steel wire finished at the ends. Statistics show that in the battles in the period immediately prior to 1860 it required 148 discharges to encompass the death of one combatant. In the succeeding 20 years the proportion was brought to 66 discharges for the death of each combatant, and it is now estimated that 49 discharges will do the work.

Under these figures the destructiveness of the weapons of today is three times as great as were those of forty years ago. The precise quality of the most modern weapons has not been definitely determined, as there has been no great war of late. The recent Chilean conflict, however, showed the great effectiveness of the modern rifle, as also have more recent experiments. These experiments, of course, could not be made on living men, so lead bodies have been used, and the Germans have made some extensive tests in this ghastly work. The report of the surgeon general of the German army gives the results of these experiments. The Germans not only succeeded in placing an entire company of corpses in line, but in order to give the tissues all the natural resistance and to give the forms the appearance of real soldiers, colored fluids were injected, the bodies armed and equipped, and exposed to fire accompanied by living horses. There were employed in the experiments 480 dead bodies, 18 living horses and 18 dead horses. These were fired on at distances varying from 150 yards to about two miles, there being an expenditure of 1,000 rifle balls. The report of the results shows that wounds made by modern weapons and projectiles are incomparably more serious than those made by the weapons formerly employed. At moderate distances up to half a mile the clothing is not forced into the wound, but the effects are frightful. All the drops of liquid contained in this part of the body, taking the force and swiftness of the projectile, and trying to escape in every direction, strike the sides of the cavity with terrible force. The bones, instead of being pierced, are crushed in mass, as by an explosion of dynamite, and the fragments are sent off in every direction through the body. The liver and heart are pulverized, the intestines torn into small pieces and lacerated in the most singular manner. The hole made by the ball in entering is scarcely perceptible; that which it makes in leaving the body is sometimes six or eight inches in diameter. It is to be borne in mind that the ball always passes entirely through the body, and through a second and third if they are placed one behind another, only stopping in the fourth. A ball striking the arm or leg destroys the member entirely. If it strikes the head, neck or abdomen, it kills infallibly. The envelope of the cartridge, which is composed of sheet steel, loses its shape when it enters the body, and often divides into minute fragments each of which takes a different direction, lacerating all it comes in contact with.

With such a showing as this it would be no wonder that conservative leaders of nations would think carefully before taking any risks on the outcome by such terribly destructive means. But history shows conclusively that the most terrific of all wars have not been those upon which nations have entered deliberately. They have been the result either of the inflamed passions of the people or of unforeseen circumstances which have forced the leaders into the conflict. And that is the situation which faces the world today. There is little or no prospect of any nation entering deliberately upon a conflict at arms. But throughout all the nations the passions of the people are being inflamed by one cause and another, and as the masses are not affected by the fear of being destroyed but when angry are bent only upon exercising their ability to destroy, the possession of improved weapons is rather an incentive than otherwise to their use in conflicts of an extensive nature.

As to the financial war the statements made are true to a certain extent. But when a man is sorely pressed financially and is being robbed and feels that by a resort to force he can regain what he regards as his own, he is very likely to take that course. So with nations; and while money is necessary to carry on war successfully, if a government has ability to secure it by force, and the emergency arises, the ability will be called into action. A financial conflict between nations is an invitation for the one most sorely pressed to resort to violence to maintain its rights.

Instead, therefore, of the fear of destructive weapons and financial manipulations being a barrier to red-handed war, the possession of such weapons and the pressure of such manipulations are more likely to produce it. The passions and ambitions of men are not restrained, neither have the nations arrived at a point where they will "hang the trumpet in the hall, and study war no more."

THE TEMPLE LOT SUIT.

A dispatch from Kansas City, Mo. states that the appeal from the decision of Judge Phillips in the so-called Temple lot suit, by which the title to a certain piece of ground in Independence, Jackson county, Mo., was awarded to the religious denomination commonly known as Josephites, has been perfected, and the case will now be passed upon by the United States court of appeals. The dispatch contains the misleading statement, that "the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints held possession of the lot for years until recently when the title was wrested from it by a decision of Judge Phillips;" which is a huge error in that the possession referred to has been held by the present appellants, the so-called Hedrickites, who, the dispatch again assumes to state, are supported by the Mormons of Salt Lake City, "who hope the higher court will reverse the decision of Judge Phillips."

The News has formerly had occasion to state that the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, beyond a desire to see the laws of the country administered with impartiality and justice, have no particular interest in the suit referred to. The Church is no party thereto in any sense whatever and its status can in no way be affected by the court's decision.

The lot in controversy was in 1832 acquired by Bishop Edward Partridge for funds furnished by members of the Church, to be held as the property of the Church. When the persecutions thickened and the Saints were threatened with expulsion, Edward Partridge deeded the property, it is claimed, to three children of Oliver Cowdery. This was in 1839. The "Josephites" base their claim on a deed of quit claim executed in 1887 by one Charles Johnson and his wife, a sister of the Cowdery children, while the "Hedrickites" claim title first through a deed of conveyance from three of the heirs of Edward Partridge and second, by adverse possession. By a process of logic which does not appear to be distinguished for clearness, Judge Phillips arrived at the conclusion that the "Hedrickites" could not claim possession of the ground, while the "Josephites" were entitled thereto both by virtue of the alleged Partridge deed to the Cowdery children and as the real "successors" of the exiled Church and consequently the true beneficiaries of the trust.

It is the first question, we suppose, which the superior court will be asked to decide, the question of the merits of the legal documents on which the litigants base their claim. The second is a side issue, not in the suit and certainly not depending on the decision of a Missouri court. The question of true "succession" is mainly one of history, not of law, but to speak of succession to a church that never was dissolved is unreasonable. True, the Church was in early days harassed on all sides by enemies on the outside and traitors within, all of whom longed for an opportunity to crush the young organization out of existence. But it weathered the storms, growing stronger and stronger as the adversaries multiplied. The Church itself by almost unanimous voice settled the matter of a successor to the martyred Prophet long before the "Josephite" movement was ever agitated. This came too late by many years to solve the problem of a successor to Joseph the Prophet, and as to the idea of succeeding the Church, the necessity has not yet arisen, and never can. The Church has had an uninterrupted historical existence since the day of its foundation in 1830 and up to the present time and will so exist until its glorious mission is fulfilled.

ELDERS ARRESTED IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Daily Register and the State, both published in Columbia, South Carolina, contain in their issue of the 5th inst. an account of the arrest, the day before, of two Utah Elders laboring in that vicinity, G. L. Braley and Alvin Smith. The charge against them was vagrancy, the warrant being sworn out by one W. D. Caughman, and the arrest was made at the house of Wm. Sloan, who is understood to belong to the Church, and who lives seventeen miles below Columbia. He wanted to resist the arrest, but was advised to yield to the officer's mandate; and the two Elders were forthwith haled before Justice Taylor, who found them guilty of the charge and sentenced them each to pay a fine of $10 or to imprisonment for twenty days. They were taken the same day to Columbia by Constable J. T. Neely and lodged in jail. The foregoing particulars are gleaned from the accounts of the incident given by both the papers named, which supply also the usual reportorial remarks on the "pernicious doctrines" taught by the Elders, etc., etc., and which add the information that an excited crowd surrounded the officer and his prisoners after the trial and made dire threats of whippings or even of "worse fare" if they ever returned to the county again. The State asserts that the original arrest included a third Elder; this was Elder W. G. Patrick, president of the conference, who was there on a visit to his fellow-laborers; but he was discharged on the ground that he had only been in the neighborhood five days.

Editorially the Register makes no allusion to the incident. The State, however, speaks up bravely for American freedom. In the same issue with the local account referred to, appears the following editorial paragraph:

Mormon missionaries may be, and evidently are very unwelcome visitors in South Carolina; they may teach false and repulsive doctrines; but the glory of this country is its religious freedom, and men who drive out even Mormon preachers with threats violate law and constitution and the spirit of liberty, as well as the teachings of Christianity.

And in its issue of the 8th, the same paper, editorially referring to a lengthy communication from the Elders themselves, which it publishes in full on another page, comments as follows:

We commend the letter of the Mormon missionaries to the people of Richland. It is a pity that South Carolinians should have put themselves in a position to receive instructions in Christianity and American liberty from Utah itinerants. But that it is needed the persecution of these men demonstrates.

The communication thus referred to makes three-fourths of a column, is signed by Elders W. G. Patrick, G. L. Braley and Alvin Smith, and appears under the heading, "The Mormons Speak—What They Say in Defense of Themselves and Their Religion." We make a few extracts:

All reasonable and fair-minded people will agree with us that there are two sides to every question, and in order to judge a matter intelligently, it is necessary to hear both sides of the question. * * * We have been and are preaching the Gospel in Richland county, as well as in a great many more counties of the state. But we most emphatically deny the charge of preaching a pernicious doctrine and we venture to say that those who make such statements are entirely ignorant in regard to our teachings. We teach a doctrine that is infallible and that no Bible believer can deny. We were arrested on Monday last, as stated in your columns, on the charge of vagrancy. But we fail to see on what grounds Trial Justice Taylor convicted two of us. If we understand the term vagrancy correctly, it is one who has no visible means of support. When we were arrested we had over $25, and we also proved this before his honor. We also proved that we were licensed ministers of the Gospel. Our accuser and the witnesses, with one exception, were men we had never seen before and were just as foreign to us as some men in China. Elder Braley had stayed with one of the witnesses two nights, but he never went to his house without an invitation. If they call this vagrancy it is something new to us. In the face of all this evidence, two of us were convicted. We were not brought to Columbia because we could not pay the fine, but because we took an appeal to the higher court. * * * If we commence persecuting any religious sect, however despised or however unpopular, on account of opinion's sake, we know not how soon the fires of Smithfield may be rekindled or the gallows of New England for witches be again erected. It is a shame that free-born

American citizens are deprived of their religious liberty in this our boasted land of freedom and equal rights to all men. Our persecutors seem to forget, or else they never knew, that it was for their religious liberty that our forefathers left the intolerance of the old world and crossed the mighty deep to come to this free land, where they might worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience. We claim the same privilege today, and we also believe in allowing all men the same privilege—let them worship how, where or what they may.

Moreover, while the Gospel of salvation is free to all mankind there is neither injunction nor inclination to force it upon any who do not want it.

By way of remarks on the episode, the NEWS feels only to say, briefly, that there is little doubt that Complaining Witness Caughman and Trial Justice Taylor will see and regret the error of their course, if they have not already done so; that our brethren will be blessed and have strong friends multiplied unto them because of the unjust and contumely heaped upon them; that the incident will be sanctified and made beneficial in every respect; and that in proportion to the humility, faith and wisdom of the Elders the labor of warning the people will be prospered, and the great work and glorious purposes of the Lord will be hastened to their consummation.

CORRUPTION IN CITY POLITICS.

Inhabitants of large cities, especially cities where machine rule has held sway for any length of time, ought to find mighty interesting reading in the developments which a legislative committee has recently been bringing to light in New York. It has long been a marvel how the police captains, justices, inspectors and whatnot of the national metropolis managed to accumulate wealth with such extraordinary rapidity. From the most moderate circumstances, these officials, or many of them, have bounded in one short term into affluence. They have made no secret of their prosperity, but have moved ostentatiously into their new and costly homes, and their families at once have begun to put on all the style of a bonanza king. Costly furniture, carriages and horses, trips to Europe, boxes at the opera, and all the other evidences of easy if not extravagant expenditure, have been before the public eye for years, and only lately has the exhibit seemed to excite particular attention.

But a change in the political complexion of the legislature at last gave opportunity for an investigation into the morale of the municipal service; and the abundance of the evidence that was immediately forthcoming shows how brazenly and defiantly the scandal has been carried on. The crusade inaugurated and bravely maintained by Rev. Dr. Parkhurst has also contributed its portion to the present disclosures. The better element of the population finally woke up to the gravity and the disgrace of the situation, so that there now seems no reason to doubt that the investigation will be searching and the outcome salutary equal to all expectations.

Certainly the results thus far are most sensational. Gross corruption in high places has been established beyond doubt. An outrageous system of blackmail, the victims being the unfortunates whose vocation is under the ban of the law, has been widespread and lucrative. Immunity from raids and prosecutions has been purchased by monthly payments, which were collected regularly by ward detectives or officers, and turned over to the superior officer, who permitted the roundsmen a small percentage for his services and shamelessly put the balance in his own pocket. Testimony of the most positive and straightforward character has established these and similar charges, and lo, there is great quaking in Tammanydom, for the end is not yet, and the beginning has scarcely been made. A scandal whose proportions threaten to exceed even those of the Tweed infamy, is an event that in all probability will have to be chronicled before the year 1894 is ended.

IRRIGATION SCHEMES.

The dispatch which appeared in the NEWS a few days ago, announcing that a contract had been let at Minneapolis for the construction of an extensive reservoir and canal system in Arizona, refers to the greatest individual scheme yet inaugurated in the United States for the reclamation of desert land. The amount of work to be done under the contract is valued at $2,000,000, and it is to be completed by January 1, 1896. It includes a storage dam 150 feet high at Horseshoe Bend, on the Verde river, a diversion dam on the stream near Mount McDowell, and 110 miles of canal work. The purpose is to reclaim 400,000 acres of land which is expected to be classed among the choicest grain and fruit raising soil in Arizona. The scheme has been under way for about three years, being operated by some of the residents of Phoenix, and by heavy capitalists of Minneapolis, Minn. The preliminary surveys have cost already a hundred thousand dollars. It is understood that actual work on the canal system will be commenced by July 1st, and it is anticipated that in eighteen months there will be flowing through the canals a stream of 5,000 feet of water per second, made constant by the Verde river and the storage of water in reservoirs during the spring freshets.

Such enterprises as these, when carried into practical operation, are a far more prolific source of wealth and development to a territory situated as Arizona is than are a good many of her mines. The investment of two millions in a canal system is the smallest item to be considered. The report on the feasibility of the scheme shows that for the extent of the ground to be covered the expense of canal and reservoir construction is comparatively small. The further investment necessary to bring the tracts of land within the canal range under cultivation is largely the ordinary labor of farm and garden work which will produce its own reward each season. In addition to this it is estimated that after 1896 the additional profit to Arizona from the cultivation of the 400,000 acres will be not less than $10 per acre, or $4,000,000 per year.

While Utah has no opportunity for a single irrigation scheme of such magnitude as the one referred to, there is ample field for many smaller ones which in the aggregate will go far beyond the figures given. The system of storage reservoirs has received little attention as yet in this Territory, reliance for water supply being placed mainly on the mountain streams, which are not so uncertain in their quantity as in many places in Arizona. But the additional acreage that could be brought into cultivation and be made to add to the wealth and welfare of Utah is yet very large. Recent efforts in Sanpete, Millard and other counties to increase the water supply for the summer months by the reservoir system are meeting with excellent success, and in the greater part of the Territory the small reservoir system could be made available with profit. Large reservoirs elsewhere have been a source of danger to their localities, and the topography of the country here is scarcely suitable for them. But there is hardly a canyon in which a system of small storage reservoirs could not be placed along the mountain stream and be made to supply, in many instances, a tenfold greater quantity of water for the summer months than is available at present, as the water now runs to waste at a season when it cannot be utilized. With the steady increase of population in the Territory and the necessity of increasing the agricultural production, the time seems close at hand when the system of small storage reservoirs in the canyons of Utah will receive close study and practical demonstration.

SILVER THE STANDARD.

Referring historically to the matter of English coinage, and how the silver pound was originally the unit of value, although the effect of recent legislation and the narrow interpretation thereof has made of gold the standard by which the other metal has to be valued and used, the Cleveland Plaindealer makes a few terse and telling points. It was in the reign of Charles II that the coin called the guinea came into existence, the name being taken from the fact that the gold from which the coin was made came from the Guinea coast in Africa, whence a large amount had been brought. This coin was to contain 20 shillings and be the same as the pound sterling. In 1717 gold was made the unit of value and the pound was declared to contain £3 17s 10½d, and gold and silver were declared to be legal tender for debts to any amount. This continued to 1816, when gold was declared to be the only legal tender and the sovereign was coined to represent 20 shillings to the pound, or 240 pence.

It is accordingly evident that while it was divided into 240 coins called pence and denarii, the pound weight of silver was the original measure of value in England and all western Europe. Twelve of these pence were called a shilling or solidus, and 20 shillings weighed a pound of silver bullion. Hence the letter S stood for shilling and the character £ meant the same as lb. Thus the silver pound in England, as the silver dollar in America, was the unit of value; and the pound of silver even today marks the English coinage and virtually gives the measure to gold in English monetary language.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

One of the prominent features of the proposed Hawaiian constitution is the formal acknowledgment of God as the Supreme Ruler of the nation. The fact may be worth while noting, because an effort to incorporate a similar clause in the Constitution of the United States was, only a few months ago, gently killed by the Congressional committee to which the proposition had been referred.

The idea of regarding the Almighty as the highest ruler of the nations is undoubtedly theoretically correct and it expresses a fact which ultimately will be consummated, no matter what human rulers may do or neglect to do. Still, to assume that the human family has already arrived at a point where the various branches of government rest in His hands and the nations obey His inspirations is to assume too much. The view is contradicted by facts. Man was by the Creator given a free agency. To some extent He relinquished the government of the earth to His children, to be used in conformity to His will as expressed from time to time. It cannot successfully be denied that the privilege thus granted has, during the ages past, been woefully abused, and as long as this condition remains, the mere "recognition" of the Creator in a legal document is out of place. It is worse than that. It is hypocrisy. As long as the Spirit of the Almighty is not allowed to animate the laws and their execution as well as all the manipulations that are thought necessary to regulate the affairs of a nation, the mere framing of a sentence concerning God in the constitution is a falsehood.

The evil influences of this idea are plainly visible on the pages of history. It led to the assumption by the popes—who claimed to be the viceregents of God—of all power, both ecclesiastical and political, until crowns were given away as rewards for personal favors, kings were humiliated and nations trembled for the word of one man. It led to bloodshed in the most cruel and bitter wars the world ever saw. When the revolt came and man rose against the tyranny, the fatal falsehood, however, was still retained and the ecclesiastical power conferred upon kings and emperors, who assumed to rule in the name of God, though not in any way obedient to His laws. Nations were still hurled against nations in bloody combat, each one praying to God for victory, while the monarchical heads of established churches led their armies on the battlefields. Is God responsible for all such things, and shall He be held accountable for the misrule under which many nations have been made the breeding grounds of anarchy, of crimes and revolutions? Holy writ has it that the rule of God on earth will be characterized by peace, prosperity, righteousness.

When the Constitution of the United States was framed, the fact was recognized that purely religious matters were not the subject of legislation. It was clearly seen that the evil of ecclesiastical establishments such as existed in Europe had to be avoided and therefore they wisely left out references to God as the nation's ruler. The idea is a correct one, for it means that each individual is left free to make his religious arrangements, and that citizenship in the state is not affected by religious views. It means that when God rules the hearts of His children the state will necessarily grow in accordance with His purposes, and also that the mere formal "recognition" is not worth the ink with which it is printed. The young republic in the western sea might, we think, profitably have copied the example of the United States and omitted from its constitution a phrase which means nothing if not mischief.

MORE OF FRUIT.

Senator Shoup's speech on the fruit interests of Idaho, made in the Senate, contains a suggestion that should cause reflection among the horticulturists of Utah. His talk was on the tariff bill, aside from the direct issues of which he cited the great strides made in recent years by Idaho in the fruit industry, particularly in the raising of prunes. He pointed out that Idahoans had gone into the business in earnest, and by careful attention were making of fruit cultivation a marked success. The purpose of Mr. Shoup's speech was to make a point for the commercial success of the industry in his state. The item that is of interest to Utah, however, is the fact that the Idaho fruit growers are raising, by intelligent and earnest effort, a desirable product both as to quality and quantity, and are not only in the condition of supplying their local demand, but of placing their fruits in the various markets of the country in competition with that produced elsewhere.

Fruit cultivation in the valleys to the north of us has been of very recent date, so far as any extensive efforts are concerned, but already it covers a broad field. In the two counties of Ada and Canyon, for instance, returns published by the Producers' association show the increase in acreage of orchards made during the past seven years. Of apples there have been set out in that time 694.5 acres in new orchards; peaches (for which Idaho generally is too cold) 86 acres; cherries 82.1 acres; pears 120.2 acres; and prunes 2,888.8 acres—a total orchard acreage of 3,821.1 acres. Of this 481.6 acres was planted in 1887 and 1,411 acres in 1893, in two counties. These figures are proof of Senator Shoup's assertion regarding the earnestness of those engaged in the business.

In Utah the advantages for fruit raising are vastly greater than in Idaho, yet in proportion to our opportunities the figures given show that we are being outstripped by our less favored neighbor, and with the way things have been it would be no surprise to see at an early date Idaho fruits supplying part of the local demand, when in fact Utah should not only have an all-sufficient amount for home consumption but should receive hundreds of thousands of dollars annually for exportations. It is commendable work that is being done by Idaho, and surely there are none who do not wish her enterprising horticulturists unbounded success; the example should spur Utah to greater activity and a more thorough appreciation of her natural advantages.

The fruit interests in this nation are steadily increasing; and statistics show that as an article of food fruit is gaining ground at the expense of meat. The tendency is a healthy one, not only so far as the physical structure of the people is concerned, but for the financial outlook in the West, which is destined to be the great fruit producing section of the country. Enormous strides have been made in horticulture the past twenty years, largely owing to western development. In 1873, for instance, almost the whole orange supply of the country was from foreign nations. Florida enterprise cut seriously into the Mediterranean trade in this article; lately California came to the front, and last year sold two and a half million boxes of oranges in the eastern markets. Now less than one-twentieth of this kind of fruit consumed in the United States is brought from foreign shores. The same general progress has been made in other fruits. Utah should do her share of production and secure a fair proportion of the trade. Already the present season shows an improvement in the local fruit market over previous years, probably through the business depression leading people to pay closer attention to sources of revenue. Yet there is good opportunity in the industry named for the investment of individual capital, or for a well conducted system of co-operative fruit farms. Earnest work here would surely be quite as prolific of satisfactory reward as is the earnest work in Idaho, referred to by Senator Shoup.

PREMIER ROSEBERRY'S filly won the Derby handsomely at Epsom Downs yesterday, and thereby vindicated the confident hopes of his owner and his backers. —Boston Herald.

The Athens of America may be all right in the classics, advanced mathematics, and art, music, culture and baseball; and yet how hideously deficient in horse-gender! Ladas, Lord Rosebery's Derby winner, is not a filly at all; but if he was, he would not be a he.

RECENT STATISTICS from the colleges furnish the gratifying information that of the 200 members of the graduating class at Yale no less than fifty have worked their way through the entire course and paid all their expenses. It is safe to say that at least 50 Yalensians know what an education is worth and will know how to appreciate it.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.
IN MEXICO.

CAVE VALLEY, on the Rio Peadres Verdes, Chihuahua, Mexico, April 9, '94.

I arrived at this romantic spot in the mountains day before yesterday, accompanied by Elder Joseph C. Bentley and wife. The Cave Valley branch of the Pacheco Ward consists of ten families, or eighty-two souls, all members of the Church, and all residing in a little village which stands near the left bank of the the Rio Peadres Verdes, at a point where a small, living stream (rising in a number of springs about a mile westward) puts into the river named. This little stream waters the townsite, but most of the farms are watered from the river, along which in narrow strips nearly all the farming lands are situated. The land is good and productive. Most of the inhabitants live together in a local united order, all sharing alike of everything produced according to the number of souls in each family. This place is supposed to be on a tract of land owned by Apostle Moses Thatcher. The facilities here are too limited for a large settlement; but there are room for more than those who are now here; and here as well as in all the other Mormon settlements in Mexico, a hearty invitation is extended to other Latter-day Saints to come and settle. Cave Valley is 7 miles north of the Pacheco townsite, and 35 miles by round-about road southwest of Colonia Juarez; but a new road over the mountains is now being made which will shorten the distance to Juarez about six miles.

Cave Valley has for centuries been a great Apache Indian stronghold; and from here they used to make periodical raids upon the Mexican settlements situated in the lower valley lying eastward. Numerous attempts were made by the Mexican soldiers to drive them out; but they were always unsuccessful; the mountain crags, caves and canyons afforded the Apaches such natural shelter that they never could be dislodged; but from their positions behind the rocks they were always able to deal out death and destruction to their enemies. Even to this day the Mexicans are said to be afraid to penetrate these rugged mountains, and they were very much astonished that our people dared go in here a few years ago; as there are still a few renegade Apaches roaming throughout the country, among whom one known as the "Kid" is very much feared by the Mexicans, as he has committed a great many depredations during the past few years.

Adjacent to the Cave Valley settlement are the celebrated caves which were used by the ancient inhabitants as places of refuge; there are quite a number of these caves in the canyons through which the Rio Peadres Verdes passes and also in the side canyons. In most of these are found remnants of the old cliff dwellers' habitations. In most instances the mouths of the caves show signs of having been walled up and fortified very strongly; in fact a number of these walls or palisades are still standing; behind them and extending into the interior of the caves were the habitations of the cliff dwellers, consisting of rooms of different sizes, but seldom of greater dimensions than 14 feet square; on the walls of the caves proper as well as upon the partition walls made by hand are numerous Indian hieroglyphics; in one instance I noticed some that resembled to a certain extent the characters and cuts represented in the Book of Abraham.

Perhaps the most attractive of all the peculiar rock formations in the neighborhood is the so-called Olla Cave, situated about half way up (between base and top) of a magnificent cliff, or about 100 feet above the creek bed below. The mouth of this cave, which is reached by climbing over the face of an extended sloping ledge, is about 50 feet wide and 18 feet high; it is about 200 feet deep and contains a number of ancient dwellings, some of them two stories high; there is also an altar, with three steps to it, standing in front of what may have been a room or house erected for public worship. In the mouth of this is the so-called grand olla which somewhat resembles a huge jug terminating in a small top. This olla is 12 feet high and measures 35 feet in circumference in its widest parts; the walls are made of matted straw or weeds covered with clay. It is an undecided question what this and the other smaller ollas in neighboring caves were used for; but the supposition is that they were grain magazines; perhaps others were made to hold a supply of water in case of a siege.

Adjacent to the Olla Cave, at the head a rocky gulch, is the so-called Dark Cave, the mouth of which is about 40 feet wide and 20 feet high; in the interior of this cave, which is about 100 feet deep, there is a regular system of ancient habitations, a number of broken ollas and fragments of Indian pottery. Near by is another cave with a small mouth which is entirely walled up, with the exception of an opening large enough to admit a human body. A short distance back from the mouth this cave opens into a very large room over 100 feet long and perhaps 25 feet wide in the main, with several side chambers. The height of the large room varies from 4 to 12 feet. Human skeletons and many varieties of Indian pottery, tools, etc., have been found and carried off by former visitors to these strange chambers on the rocks, leaving only less interesting relics for my friends and myself to carry away.

Across the creek or river from the Olla cave and in the mouth of a canyon is a fine grove containing 15 or more different varieties of timber and bushes. Among them we notice the cedar, uniper, black oak, white oak, cottonwood, ash, cherry, pine, grape vine, willow, balsom, sycamore, maple and ivy. No one is allowed to cut down any timber in this grove, which would make a most beautiful and attractive pleasure resort, were it situated near a more thickly populated district of country. Should a railroad be built through this country at some future day, tens of thousands of tourists would certainly visit this romantic valley to see the caves and others of nature's great wonders which abound here.

The Cave valley settlement has a little saw mill, to which is attached a miniature grist mill. If it don't produce the very finest brand of flour, it chops the grain sufficiently small to enable the people to have bread, which is healthy and strengthening, and is relished by the residents fully as well as by their more delicate visitors.

The people of Cave Valley are satisfied with their location and can point out quite a number of natural advantages which they think their neighbors do not possess, and they have the satisfaction also of knowing that they are the only community of Latter-day Saints at the present time who are living in the "United Order."

Cave Valley was first settled by our people in 1887, since which an ecclesiastical organization have been kept up; at present they have a Sunday School in good running order, a Relief Society, a Y. M. M. I. A., a Y. L. M. I. A., and a Primary Association. Elder Christopher B. Heaton, first counselor in the Pacheco Ward Bishopric, and who is a resident of Cave Valley, presides over the general meetings. I am now bound for Sonora.

ANDREW JENSON.

TRIP IN OLD MEXICO.

OAXACA, Sonora, Mexico,

April 12, 1894.

In company with Elder Robert E. Vance (who was called on a special mission by Bishop Smith, of the Pacheco ward, to pilot me over the Sierra Madre mountains into Sonora) and young Martin Mortensen, I left Cave Valley on horseback early on the morning of the 9th ult., bound for Sonora. After traveling two miles we arrived at Williams's ranch, situated in a snug little valley through which a small tributary finds its way to the Rio Peadres Verdes. Another two miles' ride brought us to the Cliff ranch, where Elders Heleman Pratt, Miles P. Romney and others settled several years ago, and made some improvements, which are still standing. One or more families resided here till September 19, 1892, when the Indians made a raid upon the only family (Thomsen) who then resided there, and killed Sister Karen Thomsen and a little boy and severely wounded another boy, both sons of the Thomsens. A little girl who hid in the chicken coop escaped unhurt. Sister Thomsen was first shot and afterwards beaten to death with rocks, the boy was killed about a hundred yards from the house while engaged in feeding the pigs.

From the Cliff ranch we continued our ride eight miles via Dry Valley to the Rio San Pedro, a tributary of the Casas Grandes. This is not the same San Pedro river which is famous for the Mormon Battalion bull fight that took place on its banks in 1846. On the headwaters of this stream lives a genuine British lord—Lord Berensford—who owns a large ranch, keeps a black mistress, several large dogs, and employs a number of men to take care of his stock. He is said to be well liked by his neighbor ranchmen, and dresses, talks and acts the same as other frontiersmen. Frequently he is visited by friends from across the waters. A story is told of one of these visitors, who, on his return to England, tried to portray to his countrymen his hairbreadth escapes and extraordinary adventures in the wilds of Mexico. "Why," says he, "on one occasion I traveled on a hot summer day twenty-five miles up the San Peadras river, crossing that stream some thirty odd times, and came so near famishing for a drink of water, that my life was nearly despaired off."

"But," said one of the company who had also traveled in America, "why didn't you drink out of the river which you say you crossed so often?"

"How in the world could I do that without a tin?" was the prompt reply.

Up to Lord Beresford's ranch we had followed a rough wagon road, but at the crossing of the Rio San Pedro we left this and struck out for the top of the mountain on a trail. Winding our way up through narrow canyons, crossing a number of very steep hills, and groping our way through the heavy timbers we at length reached the top of the Sierra Madres, which is the boundary line between the states of Chihuahua and Sonora, and which at this point is perhaps 10,000 feet above the level of the sea. If the ascent on the east side of the grand old mountains was steep the descent on the west side was still more so. For the first mile or so we could not think of riding our animals, and it was even with considerable difficulty that we succeeded in leading our horses down the awful steep mountain side. At length we reached a small spring in which one of the tributaries of the Bavispe river rises, and after watering our animals we continued our descent, crossing several mountain ridges and going down canyons so narrow that we had to ride along the steep mountain slope to keep out of the water. We soon reached the celebrated Dos Cabezas (Two heads) mines, from which the precious ore is shipped over the mountains on the backs of burros, a mode of freighting which costs the owners $30 per ton. And this is only for a distance of about twenty-five miles from the mines to Carretas, a ranch situated near the foot of the mountains on the Chihuahua side. From there to Deming, the nearest railway station, a distance of 150 miles, another $20 per ton is paid to have the ore taken in wagons. And then is added the expenses of freighting by rail to Denver, Colo., or other points where the ore receives the proper treatment. Of course the mine is a very rich one, or it would never pay to ship the ore at such an enormous expense. The possession of such a valuable mine has cost the loss of several lives. As we crossed the last hill before arriving at the mine we noticed a grave on the mountain slope which was apparently only a few days old, and going a short distance we saw still another new grave. This was enough to arouse our interest, and particularly that of Elder Vance our guide, who had been through here on former occasions, when no such graves were seen. On making inquiries after reaching the mine, we soon learned that a few days before our arrival a Mr. Harper, one of two brothers who own the Dos Cabezas mine, and Jackson Redding, the owner of an adjoining claim, quarreled, and that after indulging in the use of foul and abusive language both men drew their pistols and fired almost simultaneously with fatal effect. Both fell to the ground, and in this helpless condition continued to lie upon each other with deathly effect until they were dead. One Mexican laborer was also severely wounded in the affair. Some of the Mexicans, in telling the story of the shooting, asserted emphatically that the men continued to shoot after they were dead, so desperate and maddened were they. Some years ago a partner of the Harper brothers was killed while having considerable money about his person. The crime was laid to the Mexicans; but suspicion rested upon the two Harpers, who by that death became the sole owners of the mine. There is now only one of the original partners or owners of this extraordinarily rich Dos Cabezas mine left, and he is at present absent on a visit to Europe.

We encamped for the night in the canyon about three miles below the mines, having traveled during the day about forty miles. In crossing the Sierra Madres I had occasion to admire some of the finest and tallest forest trees that I ever saw. Pines one hundred feet high, and as pretty and straight as anything in the shape of a tree could possibly be, were seen on every hand; and down in the canyon, on the Sonora side of the mountain, beautiful cedars varying in height from 75 to 100 feet abounded; they were nearly as straight and perfect as the pines.

Continuing our journey on the 18th we soon reached a lower latitude, where the vegetation and natural features of the country were altogether different to that which we had witnessed at the higher altitude. All the plants and grasses characteristic of a semi-tropical zone flourished here. The cactus, Joshua, mesquite, the prickly pear and nearly all other species of thorny plants in all their different hues and varieties covered the grand mountain slopes. At length we descended an unusually steep hill and found ourselves on a river of which Brother Vance had forgotten the name; but it is one of the main tributaries of the Bavispe river. Following this stream through a canyon which cuts through a chain of mountains we beheld the upper valley of the Bavispe, where there are three quite important Mexican towns. The principal one of these (Bavispe) was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake a few years ago. When the shocks commenced, nearly the entire population sought refuge in the Catholic church, thinking they would be safe inside the edifice, which they considered sacred. But while hundreds of people were massed in the building and others were striving hard to gain an admittance (an officer on the outside pleading with the people not to enter), the church fell and crushed under its colossal adobe walls the inmates, killing nearly all of them. This catastrophe happened early in May, 1887, soon after our people had settled in Mexico. Bavispe is one of those isolated Mexican towns whose inhabitants get solace in the civilization of the 16th century. Until quite recently no vehicle of any description had been seen in the old town; and I was told that when our brethren first brought wagons through their country, men, women and children would turn out in large numbers to see the "curious sight before them." They would gaze upon the revolution of an ordinary wagon wheel with as much interest as some of us perhaps would witness a circus parade, or anything of that kind. Until quite recently all the freighting has been done on the backs of burros and the farming; carried on in the old middle-age style. Plowing with a forked stick is still very common among the Mexicans, though some of them, even in this secluded valley, have adopted the use of the American plow and other modern farming implements.

Twenty-five miles below the Mexican town of Bavispe is the infant Mormon colony known as Oaxaca, which was founded two years ago by George C. Williams, familiarly known as "Parson Williams," and others. We reached our friends in this colony late in the evening, having followed the canyon of the Bavispe the last fifteen miles, and crossed the river twenty-six times. Since leaving Cave Valley we had traveled about eighty miles; the distance by wagon road is about thirty miles further.

Oaxaca is named after Oaxca, a Mexican town in the Mexican state of that name; it is the birthplace of Porfirio Diaz, the president of the Mexican republic. The place was formerly known as the Horcones Purchase, being a concession to C. Emelio Katerlitsky, a colonel in the Mexican army, who sold the claim to George C. Williams and others in 1892. The grant contains about 200 square miles of land, extending north and south about twenty miles, and is about ten miles wide. The Bavispe, which is one of the main tributaries of the Yaquis river, passes through it from southeast to northwest. Most of the grant consists of a mountain country, possessing only grazing facilities; and only narrow strips of land or a succession of river bottoms in triangle shapes along the stream are adapted for farming purposes. This valley, in which our people are locating, is about nine miles long, with an average width of half a mile; but the river, in its meandering course through the valley or canyon, cuts up the 1,800 acres of farming land into thirteen fragments, none of which contains more than 300 acres in one body. A townsite has been surveyed on a flat on the northeast side of the river, immediately above the point where the so-called "Pulpit wash" puts into the river from the northeast. The altitude of the river lands is about 3,500 feet above the sea level, and the neighboring mountains rise perhaps to an altitude of 7,000 feet or more, though in the immediate vicinity of the river they are much lower. Many strange and curious formations are found, and there is some pretty natural scenery along the river, along which the soil is very rich and productive. Mesquite, chino, cottonwood, sycamore, ash, walnut, etc., abound in the low lands, and the heavy timber has to be removed in order to make farms.

The Bavispe river rises in the Sierra Madres, about 150 miles southeast of Oaxaca, and takes a northeasterly course, thence west, and thence south and southwest until it falls into the Yaquis river. In its meanderings and general course through different mountain chains it resembles the Bear river in Utah very much. The course of the stream as marked on most of the maps of Mexico, as published in the United States, is absolutely wrong and misleading.

The easiest way to reach Oaxaca from the United States is by way of Bisbe, a mining town situated in a mountain about seven miles north of the boundary line between Uncle Sam's domain and Mexico. Bisbe is the terminus of a local railway, of which the other end is at Fairbanks, about 25 miles distant. Another railway connect Fairbanks with Benson, on the Southern Pacific railroad. From Bisby, by way of La Morita (the Mexican custom house town which is 15 miles from Bisby) to Oaxaca there is a good wagon road about eighty miles long. Hermosillo, the capital of Sonora, is about 800 miles from Oaxaca.

The future of our new Sonora settlement will depend upon the success the people may have in controlling the waters of the Bavispe river, which in dry season is simply an ordinary brook, but which in times of flood carries water over twenty feet deep toward the ocean. At such times the people who have settled at the different points of the river are nearly cut off from all communication with each other, as it would even be dangerous to attempt to cross the river in a boat.

In a former communication I noted that Elders Brigham Young, John Henry Smith and George Teasdale visited Oaxaca in March last, and that on the 11th of that month they organized the Saints on the Bavispe river into a ward, with Franklin Scott as Bishop and Geo. C. Williams and James H. Lang as his counselors. Since that time the Saints have taken fresh courage and they are now busily at work extending and improving their water ditches and canals, clearing lands and otherwise preparing to put in crops. They are very hopeful as to the future, but need more strength. Most of them are quite satisfied with their location and think that their little colony is the commencement of something greater to come. It will be remembered that Sonora was the land first thought of, when it was decided a few years ago to plant a colony of Saints in Mexico. There are at present 21 families of Saints, or 141 souls, on the Bavispe river. Geo. C. Williams is building the first house on the new townsite. ANDREW JENEON.

THE INDIANA CONFERENCE.

WOODVILLE, Mich.,
June 8th, 1894.

In a recent issue of the NEWS I noticed an article recommending to the Saints having relatives and friends in localities where the Elders are laboring—and who would like the Elders to visit them—to send names and address, giving town and county. That none may miss an opportunity of having the Elders make these visits, I herewith give you the names of all the Elders laboring in the Indiana conference and their postoffice address, and hope the Saints will not neglect any privileges they may have in this direction. Our first duty, after we have placed ourselves right in the sight of God, is to save as many of our relatives and friends as we can, and then reach out to all and offer them all we have, which is the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Names and addresses as follows:

Truman H. Barlow and David R.

Roberts; Bloomfield, Greene Co., Indiana.

William A. Garrett and Ira E. Bradshaw, Taswell, Crawford Co., Indiana.
William O. Bentley and Ira R. Allen, Pullies Mills, Williamson Co., Illinois.

Benjamin F. Peel and Nephi N. Rogers, Columbus Grove, Putnam Co., Ohio.

Brigham H. Telford and Hyrum Brimhall, Woodville, Newaygo Co., Michigan.

The Elders would be pleased to make all visits that they can conveniently, and by this means many more might be brought to see and know as we know.

Yours respectfully,

HYRUM BRIMHALL,
Clerk of Conference.

GOD BLESS THEM BOTH.

FAIRVIEW, Utah,
June 12, 1894.

Mrs. Annie D. Stevens, who with her husband, Brother R. M. Stevens, labored as missionaries on Samoa for the past two years, arrived in safety at her home last evening at about 8 p. m. and was met at the depot by numerous friends anxious to greet her and express their sympathy for her in the bereavement of her equally beloved and esteemed husband. The greetings were necessarily brief, for Sister Stevens was feeling ill, and had to retire to bed early; and at 11 p. m. she gave birth to a nice boy. Both mother and child seem to be comfortable up to this hour of writing (1 o'clock p. m.) and by the grace and blessing of God it is hoped that both may live and prove a blessing and comfort to each other.

The body of the late Brother R. M. Stevens must necessarily remain in its present place of deposit, but will in due time be removed to the cemetery here and be placed among those of his kinsfolk who have passed beyond this life.

Respectfully,
FREDERICK CHRISTENSON.

THE WELLINGTON CAVES.

These, almost the oldest discovered of Australian caves, are situated near Wellington, about 248 miles to the west of Sydney, and possess considerable scientific interest. They were discovered by Sir Thomas Mitchell in 1832. "They have always, we are told, "had a large amount of interest attached to them, not only on account of their natural beauty and peculiarity, but because of the strange remains of a bygone time that every exploration of their depth brings to light. Remains of men have been found there, and strange tools and weapons; grotesque drawings, indicating a poetic conception and stirring times, tell of a people who have passed away as entirely as has the time in which they lived. Save the deeply-graven lines on the face of the rock, the strange and petrified forms of tools and utensils for household use, the footprints of ages ago firmly fixed in a clay that has long since turned into rock, no record remains of the people or the period when the Wellington caves were places of common resort either for purposes of security or comfort." The interior of the caves has a most striking appearance, the numerous stalagmite and stalactite columns of massive proportions glittering under an artificial light like innumerable diamonds. Among the fossils discovered were the toe-bones of a large specimen of eohidna, the tooth of a diprotodon, and the pelvis. At the beginning of 1887, remains of the long extinct Australian lion were found, consisting of several complete jawbones, with the teeth in an excellent state of preservation. Professor Owen, of the British Museum, London, expressed his opinion that the animal was a marsupial lion, fully equal in size to that now found in Africa. Some of the fossils show in the clearest manner that a very close affinity exists between the fauna of the past and that which has now a place in Australia.

SOON DIE IN PRISON.

It is a remarkable fact though one easily accounted for that imprisonment at Yuma for any term not less than five years of an Apache or any mountain Indian is equivalent to imprisonment for life and the cause of death is invariably consumption.

This is a disease almost unknown among the Apaches under normal conditions of climate and habit. The change, however, from the high altitudes of the mountains and the bracing mountain air to the lower level of Yuma with its more than semi-tropical heat, wears away what mountain storms and exposure cannot even indent.

On March 29th of this year Say-es, a Tonto Apache, died at Yuma. He was a member of the Kid's band, and was one of the murderers of Sheriff Reynolds and his deputy, who were guarding them on a journey to Yuma. The murderer, along with the Kid, escaped. Say-es alone was afterward recaptured, and all the rest of the band except the Kid have since been killed. Say-es was sentenced for life from Pinal county.

Two months before the death of Say-es Dr. Cotter pronounced his case hopeless and recommended his pardon on account of the danger of infection.

The governor decided to grant the pardon, but vigorous protests came up from Pinal, Graham and Gila counties. The pardon was not granted, and Say-es died two months later.—Phoenix Republican.

Where is Frank Melbourne, the famous rainmaker? asks the Cheyenne (Wyo.) Leader. Nobody has ever heard anything of him since he left. It was supposed that he had gone east to secure some necessary materials to carry on his rainmaking scheme. He had partially completed a contract and it was believed could have consummated it upon terms which would have been quite advantageous to himself. As time passed the rumor got out that he had returned to Australia. Letters were expected from him but none ever came. Instead there came a letter from his wife who lives in Australia and who evidently still believes he was in Cheyenne. There is some speculation over Melbourne's disappearance and hints that he may have been summarily dealt with to get away from him a secret which nobody had been able to secure, but this is likewise simply a theory and the case remains a profound mystery.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

On Monday afternoon Wm. Steele, a respected resident of Smithfield, 88 years of age, died of general debility.

Peter Hokansen, a Hyrum carpenter, fell from the roof of a house he was working on at that place and was badly bruised and shaken.

A little son of Orson and Mary Neeley, of Franklin, was drowned one day last week by falling into a large ditch or canal that flowed near the family residence.

Logan Temple will close for renovation and repair on Friday, July 18, and open again on Tuesday, the 21st of August, 1894.

M. W. MERRILL, President.

On Saturday night Deputy Smith arrested John Johnson, of Rexburg, at the residence of his alleged plural wife, Catharina Mortensen. They appeared before Commissioner Fletcher on Monday and gave bonds for their appearance before the grand jury.

MR. PLEASANT, June 5th.—Henry Olsten, aged nineteen, was drowned in the reservoir here last evening at 6 o'clock. Olsten was under the water 15 minutes. Drs. Davidson and Winters worked for two hours to resuscitate him without avail.

The returns made by the assessor to the county court places the assessed valuation of property in Cache county, exclusive of railroad, telegraph, telephone and palace car companies, at $4,909,536. The county tax for this year will be five mills. The salary of the assessor is fixed at $1,300, and that of the collector at $2,000.

During the thunderstorm between four and five o'clock Thursday afternoon a Rapid Transit car on its journey to Murray was struck by lightning when on the south side of Fourteenth South street. Some of the copper wires were melted, and the traffic was interrupted for nearly an hour. The disabled car was eventually drawn back into the city and another car took its place.

A petition addressed to the postmaster general at Washington, asking for the establishment of a postoffice at Brighton, Silver Lake, was being circulated for signatures among the prominent business and professional men of the city June 12. The request is also made that the new postoffice be named Granite Cliff, and that an appropriation be made to the amount of $1,000 to construct a mail route to the mountain resort. The petition will be forwarded to Delegate Rawlins for presentation.

Sister R. M. Stevens, wife of the late president of the Samoan mission, whose death was recorded in Saturday's News, reached Ogden from San Francisco Sunday, and was met at the depot by President Joseph F. Smith and Elder F. D. Richards. She remained at the residence of Elder George E. Browning until next morning, when she came on to this city, and had an interview with the First Presidency. Elder Stevens's body was interred in Samoa. Sister Stevens continued her journey south Monday afternoon to her home in Fairview, Sanpete county.

Saturday morning the body of John Destlissey, an Italian miner, was brought to this city and taken to Skewes's undertaking establishment, where Coroner Taylor held an inquest in the afternoon.

Destlissey perished in the snow in the Cottonwoods last November. His body lay buried during the entire winter, and was only found a few days ago when the warm summer sun melted the great bank of snow that enveloped it.

BEAVER, Utah, June 9.—A smashup on the Union Pacific railway between Black Rock and Milford, Thursday afternoon, was sufficient to keep the Salt Lake papers and mail there for the night. The stage came in here at noon today with two days mail from Salt Lake and the East, but it is understood the mails from Beaver city and Southern Utah will be delayed in getting to Salt Lake accordingly. Whether cattle or sheep on the track caused the smashup, or the lack of the section hands to keep the road in repair cannot be ascertained, nor the extent of the damage.

Word came from Tooele June 9 to the effect that the condition of Judge Lysander Gee is gradually growing worse. That morning he appeared very near the end of his long and patiently borne affliction which, as NEWS readers will remember, is in the shape of a cancerous growth of the throat similar to that which caused the death of President Grant.

When the trouble first developed it was not thought to be very serious. But later stages of the disease proved that the contrary was true. All that surgical and medical skill could do has been done the past year, but without avail. It is now a question of a short time only until the veteran patient must obey the summons that will call his spirit into the unseen world.

Now that the war in Colorado seems to be begun in earnest, and the state troops are likely to be called into action, it may be interesting to know who will command them. While the nominal head will be General Tarsney, the commander in case of actual field service will be General Ed Brooke, who has seen much service. An old army officer here says Brooks was adjutant of the Seventh U. S. infantry when it came to Utah with Johnston's army in 1857. At the breaking out of the civil war he espoused the cause of the Confederacy, and did some hard fighting. At the time of the Baxter-Brooke embroglio in Arkansas, after the Rebellion, the Brooks troops were commanded by Gen. Ed. Brooke, though he was not the man who claimed the gubernatorial office. Later the general became clerk in the surveyor general's office in Denver.

A fire broke out in some unaccountable manner at 2.30 Monday morning in the row of tenement and business apartments owned by Midgely & Sons company at 507 and 518 east Third South street. An alarm was sent in from box 25 and the main fire brigade responded to the call.

On arriving at the scene of conflagration they found the building almost enveloped but set to work quickly and effectually and soon had the flames extinguished. The greater part of the building was unoccupied and a fire broke out in a portion of it about a month ago. The latest blaze is supposed to have been the work of a fire bug who probably slept in the premises.

The loss is variously estimated at from $1,000 to $3,000. The building was insured for $1,000, Fuller & Young having issued the policy.

Adjutant General Ottinger left for Moroni on Saturday evening's train to muster in a company of militia at that place on Monday. He has just returned from Tooele where he went a few days ago on a similar mission. The new company there, he says, will be a first class one. It is officered as follows: Captain, William Stephens; first lieutenant, R. Shields; second lieutenant, Charles Fritzsche. The non-commissioned officers are yet to be named.

General Ottinger also went over to Grantsville while in Tooele county, and says the martial spirit has taken hold of the young men of that town, and they are talking of forming a company of infantry.

On Saturday next the general will organize a company at Morgan and he contemplates paying a visit to Cannonville, Garfield county, where a good company has already been formed and is now waiting to be mustered in.

Under the military code of the Territory, thirty-six companies of infantry, (three regiments) may be organized. Only eight have thus far been formed. They are divided as follows: Salt Lake, three; Ogden, one; Brigham City, one; Mount Pleasant, one; Tooele, one; Cannonville, (not mustered in) one. The full quota of cavalry troops and artillery companies have been organized.

TOOELE, June 6.—It is so seldom we see anything in your paper from our thriving little town, while other cities of the same population are constantly being heard from, that I thought perhaps a few lines would not be amiss.

Decoration Day was duly observed here. At 1 p. m. the citizens assembled in the meeting house and marched in a body to the cemetery headed by the Tooele brass band. Arriving there, half an hour was devoted to the decoration of graves, after which speeches were made, hymns and songs sang until 5 p. m., when most of the people dispersed to their homes. In the evening a ball was given in the social hall. It was well attended and all seemed to enjoy themselves.

Jerome Smith was before Judge Marshall on Saturday, May 2, charged with burglarizing the saloon of Moses Bruneau. He plead not guilty but could not convince Judge Marshall that he was innocent and was bound over to await the action of the grand jury.

It is with sorrow I report the deaths of two of our oldest citizens. Brother S. F. Lee passed peacefully away on Thursday morning, May 31st, after a long painful illness.

On Tuesday Sister Smith, another of Tooele's pioneers, was laid away; both were respected citizens and their departure is deeply regretted.

On Tuesday the Republicans held a rousing rally, the chief speaker being ex-Governor A. L. Thomas. The hall was packed to its utmost and there were many who could not find standing room.

Gen. Ottinger is in Tooele today for the purpose of mustering in a company of militia. W. H. V.

Mrs. Emmeline B. Wells has returned from Sanpete county for which place she left on Thursday last to attend a series of women's meetings.

On Friday the Relief Society conference took place, two sessions being held in the Manti meeting house. Sister Mary Ann Hyde, president of the Stake organization presided. There were present as visitors, H. M. McCune and wife of Nephi, Elders Peterson and Malben of the Sanpete Stake presidency, Elder J. D. T. McAllister, president of the Manti Temple, Bishops and others. The exercises were of a most instructive and interesting character, and were greatly enjoyed by the large number who attended. The good singing of the choir was an especial feature.

In the evening a strawberry festival and musicale was given by the young ladies, at which a delightful time was had, and everybody was satisfied and pleased.

On Saturday the Young Ladies' associations had their conference, presided over by Sister Willardson, of Ephraim. There were two sessions in the Manti meeting house, both of which were well attended. The program was of a high order, all of the exercises indicating that the fair daughters of Sanpete are in the front ranks of the Young Ladies' associations. Timely and valuable instructions were given, for which a spirit of appreciation was manifest.

In the evening a Woman's Suffrage meeting in the Council House at Manti, and presided over by Mrs. Cox, was largely attended. Great interest was shown in the subject of woman's work in connection with the association, remarks thereon being made by men and women. All were entertaining, and the audience dispersed feeling that they had spent a happy time.

On Thursday night the Sanpete valley was visited by a sharp frost which did some damage to tender vegetables.

There is a probability in some parts of considerable loss in the potato crop, though the full extent cannot be definitely determined as yet.

The trustees of the Latter-day Saints' College association are out with their announcement for the school year of 1894-5. In it the dates of school terms are thus stated:

The first semester will open on Monday, September 3rd, 1894, and will close on Friday, January 25th, 1895. The second semester will begin on Monday, January 28th, 1895, and will end on Friday, June 7th, 1895. Commencement.—Wednesday, June 5th. Field Day.—Thursday, June 6th. Recesses will be as follows: Thanksgiving Day, November 29th and 30th; Winter Holidays, from December 21st to January 7th; Washington's Birthday, February 22nd; Decoration Day, May 30th; the sessions of the college will be suspended during General Conferences of the Church and of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion.

The faculty comprises the following efficient educators:

Regular instructors: Willard Done, D. B., principal; theology, history, English, Latin, phonography. Joseph Nelson, assistant treasurer; mathematics and business courses. W. H. Chamberlin, secretary; general science. John T. Woodbury, librarian; physiology, U. S. history, political science. Philip S. Maycock, registrar; mental science. Donnette Smith, lady superintendent; physical culture.

Special instructors and lecturers: Richard T. Haag, German, drawing; Thomas McIntyre, vocal music; Dr. Romania B. Pratt, advisory physician; J. M. Sjolahl, Arabic; David McKensie, Bible Evidences; John Nicholson, Reason in Theology; George Reynolds, Book of Mormon; B. H. Roberts, Ecclesiastical History; C. F. Wilcox, M. D., Sanitary Science; John M. Cannon, Esq., Commercial Law.

The courses of instruction are, preparatory, literary, business and normal. There are three departments—the intermediate, the academic and the normal. The studies include theology, English, language, history, political science, physical science, natural science, mathematics, mental science, philosophy, etc. In addition to the regular college organization there are special societies, as the ladies' class, theological classes, field club and students' society.

"INDUSTRIALISTS" IN UTAH.

FROM WEDNESDAY'S DAILY JUNE 6

Now that "General" (Dr.) Smith and the commonwealers under his command have departed from the city and have gone beyond recall, Selectman Bamberger, who was appointed last Monday by the County Court to relieve the immediate wants of that hungry crowd, is desirous that the public should know exactly how much money he has expended out of the county treasury in that direction.

As announced in yesterday's News, arrangements had been made for turning the allowance of provisions, etc., over to the leaders of the army upon arrival at Murray. This morning Selectman Bamberger received the following letter, showing that this had been done:

June 5, 1894.

Mr. Herman Bamberger, Selectman.

Sir—The California contingent of the Industrial army reached here at 7:30 p.m. Almost 200 men in line. Your officer was satisfied from actual count that the requisite number are here, and goods were delivered to the camp at Germania and accepted by quartermaster.

Yours Respectfully,

HARRY HAYNES.

And here is the "guarantee" which "General" Smith gave that he and his men will not return to us:

SALT LAKE CITY, June 5, 1894.

To whom it may concern:

In consideration of the provisions furnished me for the use of the men under my command by Selectman Bamberger in behalf of Salt Lake county, I as commander of said men do hereby agree and promise that neither myself nor any of the men under my control will solicit aid or assistance either in money or provisions from any of the residents of the Territory of Utah during our journey through said Territory.

DR. F. DENNING SMITH.

Lieutenant General Commanding Third

Reg. Industrial Army, California division.

Witness:

JOHN WITBECK,
FRANK MEYER.

Following is a complete list of what Selectman Bamberger purchased for the California band, all the articles having been obtained from various stores in this city:

100 pounds of crackers, $8; 200 pounds of bacon, $17; 500 pounds of flour, $10.50; baking powder, $2.50; 250 pounds of White Navy beans, $12; 25 pounds of coffee, $8.50; 25 pounds of tea, $8.75; 1 sack of sugar, $5.50; 100 pounds of oatmeal, $3; 100 pounds of cornmeal, $2.50; pepper, $1; salt, $1; 10 bushels of potatoes, $5; vaseline, $3; hauling, $6; 100 loaves, $4; 120 pounds of meat, $7.20; 10 pounds of coffee (additional), $2.50. Total, $105.95.

Mr. Bamberger says he bought all these articles at bed rock prices and is of the opinion that Smith & Co. have been got rid of at the least possible cost. At any rate, the selectman devoted a good deal of time and trouble to the matter and thoroughly investigated the real condition of things himself before making the expenditure.

PROVO, June 12.

A contingent of twenty-five industrialists boarded a Rio Grande Western freight train at Springville yesterday afternoon, and when ordered off, expressed an unwillingness to leave. The train was accordingly pulled back to Provo, where it was met by Sheriff Brown. When commanded by the sheriff to leave the train, the men did so, grumbling a little, but offering no resistance. The men belonged to Smith's army, but deserted, they claim, on account of the slowness with which "that bull headed Englishman" moved. They state they have no leader; each man is for himself. They are not particular about getting to Washington, but want to find work.

There is another gang of sixty industrialists just north of the city.

A STREET SCENE IN BOMBAY.

A man clad only in a yellow scarf and turban opens a mouth stained with the vivid vermilion of betel juice to show that the mango seed just swallowed has already become a small tree with green leaves pushing toward the light.

A woman next appears upon the scene bringing a crying baby in a closed hamper of bamboo. A dozen swords are instantly thrust through the interstices amid the ear-piercing wails of the supposed victim, but as soon as the formidable blades are withdrawn the nine-lived infant tumbles out of the basket, and salams to the assembled audience, holding out her tiny brown hand for the well-deserved "back-sheesh."

As the fun waxes fast and furious sundry quarrels and recriminations between the rival magicians attract the intervention of the native police, who, "dressed in a little brief authority," symbolized by red turban and blue tunic, soon disperse the performers, bag and baggage, hastening the enforced departure with unlimited kicks and thumps submissively received.—All the Year Round.

THE GRAND CANAL.

(Copyrighted by Frank G. Carpenter, 1894.)

CHINKIANG, China, May 9, 1894.

WRITE this letter at Chinkiang, a walled city on the banks of the Yangtse river. It is just about 150 miles from the seacoast and is at the point where the Grand canal crosses the Yangtse.

This canal is one of the great wonders of the world. It is now in bad repair and a large part of it is going to ruin. But it has been one of the greatest waterways of the world, and it extends from Peking south to Hang Chow, some 200 odd miles below this point, running through the great plain from north to middle China, a distance about as great as that between New York and Chicago. It cuts its way through a territory containing 170,000,000 people, or nearly three times as many as the whole of the United States, and it taps some of the biggest cities in the world. Peking, where it finishes its course, not far from the American legation palace, is a city of more than a million people. Tientsin, below this about eighty miles, is still larger, and as it runs further south the canal is dotted with walled cities and great towns all along its course to the Yangtse river. Chinkiang is about as big as Minneapolis. Yangchow, the next big city on the canal south of here, contains, I am told, a half a million people, and Suchau and Hangchow each have something like three-quarters of a million souls. At every thirty miles along its course it is safe to say there is a walled city, containing many times ten thousand people, and the country back of it is a garden spotted with clumps of trees, each clump shading a Chinese village. The canal at Chinkiang cuts right around the city, forming the island upon which the main part of it is located. It runs from here northward for 380 miles without a lock, but above this, I am told, there are numerous sluices and locks, and in some places the water is carried through the country on great stone embankments, twenty and more feet high, and the stream at some of these places is fully 200 feet wide. It has stone flood gates managed by soldiers, and it is here and there fed by creeks and rivers. At one point a river was conducted into it in times past, and the Chinese say that 300,000 men were employed for seven months in turning the waters of this single stream. It cuts the Yellow river, and it is below this that the stone embankments above spoken of are located. The parts which I have seen are those which run near here, through the Yangtse valley, and those about Tientsin and Peking. Here the canal is more like a great ditch than anything else, and there is now a little army of men employed in keeping it in repair. It was in existence more than a thousand years ago, and Kublai Kahn laid out the line upon which it now runs.

The chief use for the canal in times past has been that of a trade artery from the north to south. It taps by its connecting canals and rivers every part of the great plain, and it is used for the transportation of the tribute rice to Peking.

The government taxes of China are to a large extent collected in kind, and every year the farmers send about 133,000,000 pounds of rice from here to Peking for the emperor and his officials. At Nanking I saw acres of great barns which were filled with this rice awaiting shipment, and every town along the canal has its government barns. Just now the rice is being taken to the north. Of late much of it goes by sea, but a vast deal is still sent by the Grand canal, and at every town there are hundreds of craft of every kind, and these government junks sometimes block the canal for days. Hundreds of men are employed in towing and pulling the boats, and at places they are dragged along by means of capstans. The canal winds about like a river in places, and navigation through it is so slow that some of these rice boats have started in April during the past few years and have arrived in Peking until September. Parts of the canal are closed to traffic except during the carrying of the tribute rice, and the condition of it today is such that it will hardly be used again as the great waterway which it has been in the past. Li Hung Chang has asked the emperor to allow him to build a railroad along it from Tientsin to Chinkiang, and this will eventually be done.

The boats along the canal are much like those I have described as lying at the mouths of the creeks of the Yangtse. In passing up it you are followed everywhere by crowds, who look with wonder on the foreign devils, and every here and there you meet boats containing begging Buddhist priests, who stick out long poles at you. These poles have bags fastened to their ends, and into these the Chinese drop cash or rice. This part of China is full of priests. There is in the Yangtse river, just opposite where I am now writing, an island which is just covered with Buddhist temples, and which has no inhabitants but priests. Massive granite terraces, decorated with stone lions, lead up from the water, and the temples shine out of green trees and flowery gardens. In Nanking I visited a temple which contained 10,000 images and golden statues of Buddha, and I have photographed a dozen or so of the priests. In the Nanking temple I got a priest to kneel and put his hands in the attitude of prayer while I took a time exposure of his devotions, and I am inclined to think there is much hypocrisy about the profession. The priests are fat fellows, in long gowns of gray or yellow linen, and they often have on three-cornered, box-shaped hats of black. They shave their heads and faces and are but little respected by the people. They are, I am told by the best of authorities here, ignorant, low and immoral. The most of them are opium smokers, and they are the contempt and ridicule of the better classes of the Chinese. Buddhism in China is, in fact, a religion gone to seed. It had its run in times past, and about a thousand odd years ago the greater portion of the Chinese were Buddhists. It was then the center of culture and learning, and now there are few so poor to do it reverence. The Chinese are full of superstitions, but their religion is more a system of morals than one of theology, and they have as many pure infidels and agnostics as any people in the world.

Speaking of Chinese morality, I believe there is as little crime here to the population as there is anywhere. I find the people, as a rule, well behaved, and I am surprised every day at the common decency with which they treat each other. These Chinese cities have many streets not over four feet wide. In those of Canton you can stand in the center and touch both walls with your two hands. There are no more thronged places in the world than these streets, and the crowd which moves through them is of all grades and of all occupations. There are mandarins in chairs, who are preceded by their servants, who carry boards in front of them bearing the titles of their masters. There are coolies wheeling great barrows, which almost fill the street from side to side. There are donkeys by the dozen, and men loaded with all sorts of heavy burdens, some of which they carry upon their backs and others which they have hung to the ends of poles. There must be necessarily much pushing and crowding, and such a scene in America would include a fight on every block. Here there is nothing of the kind. The scholar and the gentleman give way, as a rule, to the heavily loaded laborer, and the workingman's rights are generally respected. If they are not the trades unions are such that they bring the officials and people to time. A striking instance of this recently happened at Nanking. The Chinese, you know, have no such things as sewers, and all of the slops of each household are collected every day by men and carried out into the country to be stored in vats and afterward used as liquid manure. Not a drop nor a atom of anything of a fertilizing nature is allowed to go to waste, and slops have their fixed price in the market and are bought and sold. The collectors of these slops are the most offensive characters of a Chinese city. They go about with two four-gallon buckets fastened to the ends of a long bamboo pole, which rests upon their shoulders. Carrying with them a smell worse than that of a bonedust factory, they belong to the lowest classes of the people. The other day one of these men was rapidly walking through Nanking when he happened on turning a corner to run into a high mandarin and spattered him with the contents of his buckets. The mandarin ordered him to be arrested, and he was taken to prison. The head of the slop union objected and demanded that the man be freed. It was not done, and the slop carriers struck in a body. The five hundred thousand people of Nanking had no way to get rid of their slops, and the danger of an epidemic disease was imminent. Suppose you should, for instance, for a week stop up the sewers of your city you could then appreciate something of the state of Nanking at this time. Nanking, however, was far worse off, for it has no sewers at all. The result was that the mandarin was so besieged that he let his prisoner go free and remitted his fine. I find that the Chinese have a fair idea of justice. They will fight against wrong, and there is as much of a democracy here in this respect as there is in America. There is no place where debts are so punctually paid and where credit is so easily gotten by all classes of people. Honesty and integrity are above par in China, and foreigners tell me they would rather deal with the Chinese merchant than with any other business man in the world. He never goes back on his spoken or written word, and Mr. Ewen Cameron, one of the leading directors of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, an establishment which does the biggest banking business on the western Pacific and whose capital amounts to millions, on leaving China not long ago said that in the dealings of the bank with Chinese merchants for a period of more than twenty-years and in sums aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars he had never met with a defaulting Chinaman.

Since this statement was made the bank has been defrauded by a Chinese cashier. In general, however, the statement is correct.

The penalties of the law are often very severe and the Chinese frequently take the punishment into their own hands. All along the Grand canal and the Yangtse you may see at the villages here and there boats cut in half and placed upon ends. I asked what these were, and was told that they were the boats of thieves or pirates who had been caught stealing. The criminals had had their heads cut off, and their boats were thus set up as a warning to others. In Shanghai I saw a dozen men with great boards four feet square and weighing as much as forty pounds each fastened about their necks so that they could not move their hands to their faces, nor brush off the flies. They were thieves. In Wuhu there is a beggar who goes about on the stump of his legs, which have been cut off just below the knees. He was caught several times stealing, and this was the penalty of his crime. In some parts of the empire a man is punished with death at his third conviction of theft, and pirates are always beheaded. Law and order are, however, well preserved, and, I believe that human life and property are as safe here as they are in America.

A large part of the farming of this region is done by irrigation, and the water rights of the Chinese are as full of complications as are those of Colorado. Still there are few troubles among the farmers, and with no fences to mark the lines of their property they work away in peace and quiet generation after generation. It is wonderful how well they work and how much they get off the land. Three crops a year is by no means uncommon, and if any sign of a failure of crop is seen, the seed for another crop is straightway sown. It is wonderful how small the farms are. There are thousands of holdings in China which are less than an acre. It is estimated that an acre of land will in the better parts of the empire support a family of six, and a volume could be written on Chinese agriculture. The use of fertilizers is universal, and, though there are practically no horses and few cattle, there is no land which is so well fed. Everything is saved. Thousands of men do nothing else but gather up bits of fertilizing matter and sell them. The refuse of a rich family will bring more than that of a poor one, and the slops of the foreign part of Shanghai are farmed out annually for a sum which gives the city the most of its educational fund. Potato peelings, the parings of finger nails, the shavings of the head and ruined houses form parts of the fertilizing material, and this is usually put together in such liquid form that not a bit of it is wasted. The manure is kept in great vats, and the farm is watered like a garden. Each plat gets its daily food and drink. A dipper full from the vat is put into each bucket of water, and the mixture is poured in at the roots of the plants. All throughout this part of China such fertilization goes on, and from twenty to thirty dollars a year is sometimes spent upon an acre of ground.

The tools used are crude in the extreme. I seen men working in the fields near here with long-handled hoes. These have four teeth of the same length as those of a pitchfork and each tooth or tine is about an inch in width. They also use grubbing hoes or mattocks and they have a sort of a spade with a cross piece of wood two inches above where the iron plate of the spade begins.

They push the spade down into the ground by pressing the bare foot against this cross bar instead of on the iron itself, as we do. Their plows scratch the earth and are not much better than those used in Egypt. These are pulled by water buffalos, the ugliest cattle known to man. The buffalos grind the rice, tramp the mud and straw for making the sun-dried bricks of which their houses are made, and do all sorts of farm work. When grazing and when not at work they are minded by the little children, who sit upon their backs and who have a wonderful control over them. They crawl upon the back of the buffalo, getting first upon the horns of the animal, who bends down its head for them. As soon as they are astride of the neck the buffalo will gently raise its head and the boy will slide down its neck till he has a firm seat just behind its shoulders. Here he will stay all day and I have seen little fellows of five and six years sound asleep upon the backs of these animals, who are often dangerous and ugly in their actions toward strangers. A good buffalo is worth about $20, and farmers often enter a sort of farmers' loan association for the use of a common fund of money from year to year by which they stock their farms.

I have seen some cows, but their milk is not used as food. The Chinaman does not think milk fit to drink, and he only uses it as medicine. When he does that he prefers the human variety and gets a wet nurse. This is by no means an uncommon thing, and the empress Dowager when she was sick not long ago put herself upon a diet of this kind. I venture the old lady did the milking herself. The mutton of this part of China is very fine and its flavor is said to be much improved by feeding the sheep on mulberry leaves. The hogs are of the lubbery black Chinese variety, the dirtiest and filthiest animals of their kind. They are always minded by a girl or boy while in the fields, and I saw today a little girl of ten whose feet were bandaged so that she seemed to be walking on red hot irons as she tottered about whipping the hogs. The pigs often live in the houses, and you find them grunting around in the busiest of the Chinese cities. There are lots of chickens, ducks and geese everywhere, and the scientific raising of poultry by the Chinese would make a letter in itself. They are sold by the pound by peddlers, who carry them in great baskets of bamboo open work, and are shipped by the boat load from the country to the cities. Eggs are used by all classes, and the favorite egg is from twenty to thirty years old. It is cooked before it is put away, and when brought forth it is as black as your hat, and tastes like chalk. Ducks are pressed and dried, and the cooked ones I see in the market are oiled so that their picked skins shine as if covered with varnish. They are not at all bad to eat, however, and those which I have had in the native restaurants are fully as good as any you get in America.

THE "ARMY" ELSEWHERE.

BOISE, Idaho, June 5.—Judge Beatty today sentenced 180 Coxeyites, who stole a U. P. train, thirty to sixty days. General Scheffler was given six months and the other leaders from thirty days to four months in various county jails. The rank and file will be imprisoned in the stockade near Huntington.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., June 5.—Fry's army was refused aid by citizens last night and was obliged to sleep in the open air during a drenching rain. This morning the army split into three sections. Part, under command of Colonel Boundell, started over the pike for Washington; another division marched in the same direction over the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks, while the third division, fifty-two in number, remained in Parkersburg. This afternoon the fifty-two who remained behind went to the Baltimore & Ohio yards and took possession of a freight train that was being made up. They defied the sheriff, who telegraphed for troops, and with an increased force of deputies succeeded in arresting the army.

It is reported tonight that the party which started up the railroad tracks tried to capture a train, but failed. Two of the commonwealers are said to have been hurt, one fatally.

BRIGHTON, Colo., June 7.—Seven boats of the Coxey fleet which left Denver were upset today and several lives were lost. One body has been recovered.

Twenty-five of the Coxeyites who set sail from Denver are missing, as a result of their boats upsetting. It is thought that about twenty are drowned. Dead bodies can be seen on sand bars and lodged in the trees, but can't be recovered. One of the men known to be dead came from Utah.

CAIRO, Ill., June 7.—Kelly this morning broke up his boats. The man on whose farm he is camped has ordered him to vacate at 6 o'clock tomorrow morning. He compromised by giving him the lumber from his boats for permission to stay a day longer. His time will be out tomorrow evening, and speculation is rife as to what his next move will be. His army is in need of rations, and many are reported sick. He has no tents and no transportation, and each hour makes the situation more critical.

LOS ANGELES, June 7.—Barker's army of Industrials, numbering about 400, captured a passenger train at Mojave today and started south. When they arrived at Barstow, the yard master of the Santa Fe uncoupled the locomotive and ran it out of reach. The men went into camp. Officers have left Los Angeles to arrest the men.

CHICAGO, June 7.—Three hundred commonwealers, composing Poles, Bohemians, and Austrians, started from here today for Washington. The aggregation is commanded by Joseph Rybakowski, who claims to be a Polish nobleman.

CAIRO, Ill., June 8.—The camp of the commonwealers yesterday was the scene of a wedding under singular and romantic circumstances. It was the marriage of Thos. T. Sutcliffe, of San Francisco, aged 38, to Miss Annie Hooten, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, aged 27. Squire Joseph Steagala secured the license, charging no fee for tying the nuptial knot. Squire Steagala drove to Camp Kelly. Arriving there he was escorted to a log heap ten feet in height, shaded by trees. The bridal party was assisted to mount the pile, and General Kelly sounded his bugle, when about 1,150 men surrounded them with bare heads. After the couple had been pronounced man and wife, the bride, overcome by emotion, fainted, but was restored to consciousness in a few minutes.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 8.—United States Marshal Covarrubias, with four deputies, arrived today on a special train with the Industrials who seized the train at Mojave, and who rode yesterday to Barstow. The crowd numbers about 170. They are in jail.

CAIRO, Ill., June 8.—The shotgun quarantine which has been maintained by this city for the past ten days against Kelly's Industrial army has resulted favorably to the city. Reduced to destitution and his men deserting him in large numbers, Kelly accepted a proposition from a committee of citizens to march out at 8 p. m. He received two days' provisions and transportation for his luggage to the county line. It is supposed the crowd will try to reach a point on the Ohio river near Paducah, Ky.

DENVER, June 9.—The number or names of Coxeyites drowned trying to navigate the Platte river will never be known. Five bodies are found. Two are identified as Charles Duplessis, of Denver, and John P. McQuown, of Utah. Coroner Martin, from the stories he has heard, thinks that possibly sixteen are drowned.

DENVER, June 9.—About 800 Coxeyites got away today in small equads on trains. The remaining 500 will go in boats. General Carter, of Utah, got a pass and will go to Omaha ahead of his forces.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Coxey, Browne and Jones were this morning released from jail. The four proceeded to the Nation Hotel. After spending a quarter of an hour in the hotel, they started for the Coxey camp in Blendenburg.

PADUCAH, Ky., June 11.—Kelly's commonwealers, who were yesterday brought from Cairo by boat, expect to go up the Tennessee river to Johnsonville by boat, thence overland to Washington.

TREMENDOUS FLOODS.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 5.—Slowly and surely the water of the Willametta river at this point continues to rise, and the indications are that it will continue for several days to come. This afternoon the river stood 22.2 feet above the low water mark. At Umatilla the Columbia river stood 34.5 feet above, and at Pasco 34 feet above.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 6.—News from the upper Columbia region indicates that the worst of the flood is over. Snake river is falling and the Columbia is stationary. In this city the water reached the 38-foot mark at noon. On Front street the water is deep enough for navigation by large sized river craft. Thirty blocks are under water, and a rise of a few feet will inundate the entire town under the bluff.

Memaloose Island, the burial place of the Indians, is under water and hundreds of skeletons are being washed away.

TACOMA, Wash., June 7.—Railroad men and others are beginning to estimate the damage done by the floods throughout the northwest. A number of conservative men have placed the amount in the neighborhood of $5,000,000. It is estimated that the floods and washouts of tracks and loss of business will cause a loss of at least $500,000 to each of the Great Northern and Pacific roads and nearly as much to the Northern Pacific. Railroad men here think it will take the Great Northern and Canadian Pacific a month to fully repair their tracks and the Northern Pacific nearly as long.

NORTHPORT, Wash., June 7.—A messenger arrived here today from Nelson with the report that Kaslo, B. C., was swept almost entirely out of existence Sunday by a flood and wind. It is said the wharf and stores were carried into the lake and that several persons are missing. No particulars are obtainable.

VANCOUVER, B. C., June 7.—The Fraser river is still rising at Westminster. The worst has undoubtedly been experienced, however, for reports from upper river points state that the flood is steadily receding. News has been received here of an appalling landslide which occurred in the vicinity of Ashcroft on Saturday last. A track of 100 acres of land was carried into the river. A cloudburst is said to have been the immediate cause of the disaster. It is now claimed by many that the destruction of farms in the Fraser valley has not been as complete as first reported and that nearly all of the suffering ranchers will be able to raise crops this season.

All the Canadian Pacific passengers who left for the east Sunday returned to this city last night, having found it impossible to get through the mountains. There are half a dozen blockades of a serious character along the road and it cannot be opened for a week. The more serious interruption than any previously reported is due to the cloud-burst in the vicinity of Lytton.

The burst swept the railroad for nine miles from the saw mills to Lytton, where the approaches to the government suspension bridge on the old Cariboo road were carried away. The water also swept away the iron bridge at Ashcroft and the Canadian Pacific railroad's big bridge near Spences station. The water tore down the mountain gorges with incredible velocity and sent the river leaping over its banks in a boiling, seething current.

This great volume of water is yet to be felt in the lower Fraser valley, which it will not reach for another day. As further details of the cloudburst are received, the earlier reports of receding waters at Lytton and other points of the river are discredited. However, it is not believed the lower river will rise much higher.

Men who returned last night from upper river points bring sad stories of death, devastation and desolation. Settlers may be seen at every station in the journey, floating on huge rafts made out of wrecks of the farm buildings on which they have their families and their cattle. The government steamers are rescuing these as rapidly as possible. One of these rafts were relieved of its burden by the steamer Gladys today. On the raft were man and wife and two children, one of them an infant, two years old, two horses and three cows. The horses and cows constantly threatened to upset the raft, for they were moving from side to side constantly in search for food.

The child may die of exposure.

Some idea of the horrors of the disaster may be judged when it is stated that there are thousands of families similarly situated.

A newspaper correspondent, who returned this morning from a trip above Port Haney, on a rescue steamer, reports a terrible state of affairs in the upper river. Herds of half starved cattle tied on rafts with no one to guide the journey of the insecure craft, were seen. Just above Haney some desperate rancher had been playing cards with fate and had bet his all to win or lose on the last card by sending his little stock adrift at the mercy of the tide. Two houses tied to the awaying rafts glided by. Families were at the doors with excited faces but apparently safe.

A red handkerchief was furiously waved a short distance off and the steamer hands were soon lifting out of the boat an exhausted, starving farmer and his wife. The woman had fainted for want of food. A moment later the steamer was again hailed. A man from shore called out that he had seen a raft with two bodies on it. But little news has reached the city yet and the details of many tragedies will never reach here.

At Hatzio two horses and a store floated out toward the steamer but the people of the town never spoke, never moved; they were too wretched, too desperately indifferent to ask for assistance.

At Mission City the steamer bumped into a barn covered with chickens in all stages of starvation.

At Sumas the greatest suffering was reported. Many requests for help were made. As the steamer swung out of Sumas a band of Indians was seen holding a barbecue. An ox had been dragged dead from the river and the half starved red men were devouring it.

At present no stop can be put to such revolting spectacles which are said to be common all along the river. The Indian ranches have been swept away for hundreds of miles and with nothing to cover them but blankets, and they are bivouacking on the mountain sides.

At Dhilliwack city nothing can be seen but the tops of houses. The entire population met the steamer at the foot of the principal street.

DENVER, June 7.—Owing to a cloud burst in the Platte canyon, the Platte river is six inches higher at that point than during the flood of last week. Fears for property are expressed. People on the low lands about Denver are moving. The flood is due here this afternoon.

PORTLAND, June 8.—The Willamette river has fallen two inches since yesterday. To rebuild the Oregon Railway & Navigation companies road it will cost nearly $2,000,000. The loss to docks, shops, warehouses, etc., amounts to another million. Woodland town, with 500 people, is submerged and deserted.

VANCOUVER, B. C., June 9.—Reports received here from the interior state that the Fraser river is still slowly rising. The rises reported range from one inch on the lower river to twelve inches at Lytton. The steamship Queen, bound for Alaska, called here yesterday to take on board the Raymond excursion party from Boston, who were erroneously reported to have been wrecked. The excursionists are still flood-bound, and as there was no chance for their getting through from Banff for a week at least, the Queen sailed for Alaska without them.

Burglars and thieves have begun to ravage the flooded districts. Yesterday a safe was stolen from the offices of the Moodyville Mill company. The burglars evidently intended to carry the safe to the woods and blow it open. Their boat capsized, however, and the safe and boat were found on the flooded flats.

The Dominion government is having a careful estimate made of the losses and losers. In the afflicted municipalities, corresponding to American counties, it is found that fully 15,000 people are homeless.

STRIKES AND RIOTS.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 5.—State Organizer McIntosh, of the Western Federation of Miners, says the miners accept the settlement made by Governor Waite and Hagerman and Moffat at Denver last night in good faith and are ready for peace. The articles of agreement provide that the miners shall work eight hours each day, with twenty minutes for lunch, that they be paid at the rate of $3 per day, and that the mine owners employing men shall not discriminate against either union or non-union miners.

SCOTSDALE, Pa., June 5.—One thousand strikers camped near Painter's works last night. At daybreak the deputies fired upon them for the purpose of frightening them off. The fire was returned and one man was slightly wounded. The strikers succeeded in keeping the new men away and no coke will be drawn today. The strikers are elated over their success and claim that by the end of the week they will have all the works shut down.

CHICAGO, June 5.—The Pullman strikers are in sore straits for food. The supplies have not been coming in rapidly of late and many have been turned away from relief headquarters because there was nothing to give them.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 5.—Sheriff Williams wired the governor today: "Miners fired on a regular train at Carterville. I make a demand for state militia for protection." Three companies of militia have been ordered ready to move any moment.

DENVER, Colo., June 5.—Unless the trouble with the Colorado coal miners is speedily settled, this city will experience a serious coal famine. The tramway and city cable companies have but seven day's supply of fuel on hand and no way of securing more. The Consolidated Electric Light company is said to be in an even worse condition, with the gas company not much better situated.

DIVIDE, Colo., June 6.—Twelve hundred deputies left here at 2 a. m. for Cripple Creek under command of a young military man, whose name is not known. The newspaper correspondents were locked up to prevent news from getting out. Gen. Charles Adams is in command of 200 cavalry men. It is the intention to camp at Beaver Park and send a committee to Bull Hill to demand the surrender of certain strikers. If refused an attack will be made on the strikers' stronghold. It is expected the strikers will capitulate or a battle will be fought before the troops can reach Cripple Creek, owing to the washouts on all railroads. Soon after the departure of the deputies a heavy firing was heard. It is supposed a fight took place with skirmishers.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 6.—The strikers agreed to surrender to the militia tomorrow but will fight if attacked by the deputies. If the sheriff accepts their terms a fight will be avoided. One hundred mounted men on both sides are facing each other in battle array near Gillette.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 6.—The miners' strike in Alabama is believed to be practically broken. The output of coal yesterday was 10,000 tons, about one-third of the normal output at this season. Negro and convict labor has prevented a coal famine and thus the strike has been ineffective. The strikers' committee has issued an appeal for aid for their suffering wives and children. President Furnier of the Alabama miners has been called to Columbus, Ohio, by a telegram from McBride and many believe the strike will soon be ordered off.

MCKEESPORT, Pa., June 5.—Never has this city witnessed such scenes of defiance of law and the inability of the authorities to cope with the law breakers as have been enacted here today and were in progress during the night.

The trouble grows out of the strike at the Tube Works, and the strikers after nightfall outwitted the police, broke into the mill yard and made systematic tours of the works and their surroundings.

The plant resumed in two departments today and about twenty-five men went to work. The news quickly spread and by noon a mob of nearly 10,000 had assembled about the gates awaiting the appearance of the workmen. Most of the men remained inside, but a few attempted to go to their homes and were caught by the mob and terribly beaten.

The mob then dispersed in part, but toward evening reassembled and by 6 o'clock probably 5,000 men were massed in front of the entrance to the works, on Fourth avenue, and it was seen fully three-fourths of the men were foreigners. They captured a Slav workman and beat him terribly.

About 11 o'clock some one was, among the strikers and announced that men were working at the slack piles across the river. A mad rush was made by 700 or 800 men. The tippie of John D. Wit came down before the onslaught. From there the crowd made a break for a new tippie being erected by John McIntyre a mile above, which met the same fate. These slack piles had not been made use of for years.

The city was half deserted this afternoon by the departure of 2,000 strikers to Camden, three miles south, to destroy the coal tipples, the object being to enlist the striking miners for their cause. Captain McIntyre narrowly escaped lynching at the hands of the mob which destroyed the Port View tippie. General Manager Converse stated that no deputy sheriffs had been asked for and no men will be imported to start the works.

At 2:30 o'clock 6000 strikers carrying pit lamps left for Duquesne to burn the tipples. They threaten to cut all barges loose on the river as they march down. Mayor Andre issued another proclamation at 3 o'clock commanding all unemployed to stop congregating on the streets under penalty of arrest, and ordering all saloons and wholesale liquor houses to close until further orders. The situation is most critical. The strikers' cannon commands the bridges and the railroads and will fire upon any deputies brought in.

PUNXAUTAWNEY, Pa., June 6.—One hundred and forty members of the coal and iron police have taken possession of mines No. 1 and 6, near Horatio. Rumors are rife that a large force of operatives will be imported today. Trouble is feared.

PEKIN, Ill., June 6.—There was a bloody battle at Little's coal mine, five miles down the Illinois river, today. Word was received here that 500 miners from the west of the river were about to attack the mine. Sheriff Frederick swore in a posse and set out for the scene. The strikers had assembled at Bentonville and crossed the Illinois on the ferry. There were about 400 men and some women.

The sheriff remonstrated with the men in vain. The leader of the strikers, with a revolver in each hand, cried out, "Follow me!" and the crowd cheered.

The Littles and their sons and a colored man retreated to the lower shaft and opened fire on the attacking party.

The fire was returned, and several shots were fired into the shaft. Little hoisted a white flag, but the firing did not cease. The shaft was set on fire and it was feared that the powder house would be fired, so the crowd retreated.

The fire spread to the powder house, a short distance from the other buildings, and it exploded with a frightful roar. After this the mob retired to its boats, crossed the river and scattered among the ravines and hills.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 8.—A thumb of one miner was the extent of the injuries inflicted in the skirmish between deputies and miners yesterday. The conflict was caused by the advance of 200 deputies toward Bull Hill to recover horses that had strayed.

C. W. Wright, and W. A. McClelland, of Colorado Springs, were accidentally shot today by a deputy who handled a gun carelessly. Wright was wounded in the groin and is not expected to recover. McClelland was wounded in the knee.

Gen. Brooks at the head of the state troops intercepted the deputies and ordered Sheriff Bowers to send them back to camp. After some parleying Bowers complied. The militia now hold the key to the situation. General Brooks rode in front of the deputies' lines and shook hands with the men. Three cheers were given for the militia. The militia will take possession of the mines as soon as order is received from Governor Waite and a greater part of the deputies will be sent home probably tomorrow. General Adams was training the guns on Bull Hill, only three quarters of a mile away when the troops headed off the deputies. The miners' leaders are fleeing in all directions.

MACON, Mo., June 8.—General Manager Cronald and Superintendent W. E. Murlin, of the Kansas & Texas Coal company, with Deputy Sheriff Rock, report that another attack was made last night on a mine where negro miners were at work. About 500 shots were fired into the tenement houses, the coal shaft house, sheds, etc., which are full of holes today, but no one was wounded. The pump house was burned.

MARTIN'S FERRY, O., June 9.—Early this morning a bridge on the Cleveland, Lorraine & Wheeling road was destroyed with dynamite by the strikers near the camp of the militia. Running coal trains today will cause more trouble.

COLUMBUS, June 9.—A report has been received here that the miners at Salineville on the Cleveland & Pittsburgh division of the Pennsylvania road had captured a coal train and wrecked a fast freight today.

PITTSBURG, June 9.—There has been no disorder at any point for forty-eight hours. The report that the strikers were firing on the deputies at Manown at 2 o'clock is entirely without foundation. At McKeesport order prevails. The deputies have possession of the plants. In the coke region there has been no serious outbreak for several days.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 9.—Peace prevails today. The militia are encamped on Bull Hill. The deputies broke camp and came to Cripple Creek. Sheriff Bowers says he will keep them here until the insurrection is broken.

He has warrants for 200 miners on charges of murder, assault to murder, grand larceny, inciting riot. The military leaders of the miners are missing but the officers of the union are still here. The mines will reopen next week.

SOMERSET, Pa., June 9.—Last night the Tipples, Brubaker and Coleman mines, near Berlin, Pa., were destroyed by dynamite. Last night was the first time in several weeks the force has not been working. It is supposed the outrage was committed by strikers.

ST. LOUIS, June 9.—A conference of miners and operators of southern Illinois began at East St. Louis with a fair representation of both sides. The Consolidated Coal company, controlling a large number of mines, ignored the meeting.

After a discussion it was decided that the miners' delegates, representing 13,475 miners, should caucus and prepare a proposition regarding wages, etc. At the same time the operators would discuss their course.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 9.—A committee of coal operators is conferring here with representatives of the miners, regarding the settlement of the strike.

MERCER, Pa., June 9.—A conference of coal operators and miners was held here this afternoon. A conciliatory feeling prevails.

CENTRAL CITY, Ky., June 9.—A large crowd of miners is here to meet the operators in joint caucus. It is believed that the strike will be ended today, as far as Kentucky miners are concerned.

WHEELING, W. Va., June 9.—Five companies of West Virginia militia arrived today and moved on Boggs Run yards. The rioters retreated but placed obstructions at dozens of places along the road and the troops were several hours in moving the trains. The Baltimore and Ohio lines are now completely under guard from Moundville to Cambridge, nearly fifty miles. At Ohio county line the militia were met by several hundred men, women and boys, and a volley of stones and bricks hurled at them. One militia man was badly hurt. At Elm Grove, on the Wheeling and Pittsburg division, the strikers seized a coal train and blockaded the tracks.

LATROBE, Pa., June 9.—Up to noon the conference between miners and operators of this district failed to materialize. Only one operator came. Several works are running full, and it is thought that the strike is practically ended.

FROSTBURG, June 9.—Everything is peaceful in the Frostburg region today, the strikers evidently waiting until the militia leave, which will be a week from today. The output of Echert yesterday was 407 tons, against 1,400, the usual output.

ALTOONA, Pa., June 9.—The conference between the operators and miners of the central Pennsylvania region today struck a deadlock at the outset. The operators expressed a willingness to confer with the miners as individuals but not as an organization. District President Bradley told the operators that the result of the conference would have to be referred to the National President McBride. The operators said this was not the understanding and exhibited telegrams from McBride and Bradley assuring the operators that the miners of the district were authorized to act for themselves. The miners went to the hall which had been engaged for the conference and at noon were waiting for the operators to put in an appearance.

Six leaders of the striking miners, three of them officers of the Miners' union, today surrendered to the military authorities and were held in $5,000 bail each. They were arrested on warrants charging assault and murder. Three mines resumed today and many more will resume on Monday.

CLEVELAND, June 11.—The striking miners set fire to a Cleveland, Lorraine and Wheeling railroad bridge at Midvale, last night. The structure was saturated with coal oil. The flames were finally subdued. Massillon miners decided last night that coal trains will be held up and everything possible done to prevent fuel from being sent to Cleveland. A spy discovered at the meeting received rough handling. The railroad people anticipate trouble in the vicinity of Ulrichsville and Midvale today. Troops are being concentrated at these points.

WHEELING CREEK, Ohio, June 11.—Efforts today were made to burn bridges on the Cleveland, Lorraine & Wheeling railroad at Midvale and the canal at Dover. At the latter place the flames were extinguished by a watchman. The miners tried to drive him away by shooting. The sheriff put deputies on guard. The Second, Fourteenth and Sixteenth regiments are here. Coal trains are running.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 11.—The big iron bridge on the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham at Carbon Hill was blown up with dynamite this morning. The bridges at Patton, Mabel mines and other points have been burned. The strikers are determined to prevent the transportation of coal.

COLUMBUS, June 11.—The joint committee on a scale of wages, composed of operators and miners, is in executive session today. Each side expressed the feeling that circumstances elsewhere placed an agreement here in jeopardy. John McBride said the miners were not contending for the recognition of the miners' union, but for a uniform scale.

The statement wired from here that the strike had been settled except in Illinois, is not correct, but the conference will not adjourn until it is settled. The probable basis of settlement is the proposition of Colonel Rend to pay a scale of 69 cents in Pennsylvania, 68 cents in Ohio, and other territory in fair proportion until September 4th, when the rate will be increased to 70 in western Pennsylvania, and in other districts in proportion.

PANA, Ill., June 11.—The mob is growing larger here. The Springfield miners declare they will stay six months if necessary, to close Pana mines. More troops arrived today. An attempt was made to enter shaft No. 2 by a miner who ran away when detected. It is believed he was struck by shots fired by the guards. At 2 a. m. there was rapid firing near Center city. The militia marched to the scene but found nothing.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., June 11.—The four American workmen taken prisoners by a mob of foreigners at New Haven on Saturday, were overtaken at Fairhance and rescued at noon today by the deputies. They were still bearing the placards and were chalk-marked from head to foot. They were handed from one crowd to another yesterday until landed in the strikers' camp at Kyle. The deputies are collecting all evidence available and many arrests will be made. It is estimated that not less than 500 strikers handled the workmen from the time of their capture at New Haven until they were rescued today. The workmen were able to identify their captors and will not fear to appear against them.

Last night the strikers visited the banks on George Creek, where part of the coal shipped out over the state line road is mined, broke up the tools and wheelbarrows, tore out the support at the entrance to the banks and caved in about twenty feet of the banks.

A jury has been impaneled to hold an inquest over the body of John Montafi, a Slav, killed in yesterday's battle. Resposneck and Cornak will die. The others were not seriously injured.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 11.—The deputies left here today for Colorado Springs in accordance with the agreement between General Brooks and Sheriff Bowers. The militia will remain in the vicinity of the mines to preserve the peace.

DENVER, June 11.—The agreement made at Cripple Creek between General Brooks and Sheriff Bowers is not approved in all respects by Governor Waite. He wired Adjutant General Taraney today that the troops cannot be used as guards. The miners' arms must be restored to them and not over twenty-five miners arrested.

CLEVELAND, June 11.—Early today a short trestle bridge on the Wheeling and Lake Erie road, located at East Greenville, five miles northwest of Massillon, was blown up with giant powder and the ruins burned. The road cannot be opened for many days.

MIDVALE, Ohio, June 11.—Shortly before noon today 400 striking miners held up a northbound coal train on the Cleveland, Lorraine and Wheeling road. The conductor, engineer and brakeman were given five minutes to side track the coal and leave. They complied.

DENVER, Colo., June 10.—Governor Waite early this morning, in response to a telegram from General Brooks, commanding the militia at Cripple Creek, informing him that the deputies were advancing on Bull Hill, ordered the following telegram sent:

"General Brooks:

"If, as you say, Sheriff Bowers admits that the deputies refuse to obey his orders and are acting in defiance thereof, they are not a lawful body; are only armed marauders, and you must treat them as such.

"Order them to lay down their arms and disperse. If they refuse to obey and you have not force enough to suppress this new insurrection, notify me and I will call out enough unorganized militia to enforce the order."

Commissioner Boynton, in command of the deputies, was shown the order from the governor and immediately wired his attorney, Hon. C. S. Thomas of this city, for advice. Mr. Thomas sent the following reply:

Mr. Boynton—The sheriff of the county, engaged in enforcing order, subduing or attempting to subdue armed resistance to the law, or the authorities, or in overcoming those who defy the service of process, is discharging the obligations of his office and maintaining civil government. In doing this he may call to his aid and deputize as many citizens as may be necessary, and no power, not even the federal government, has lawful authority to interfere with or disarm him.

Boynton denies that Sheriff Bowers has lost control of his men or that they are a disorderly body.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., June 10.—The truce is ended and again the armed deputies in the coke regions have made a killing. One striker killed in his boots, two others dying and another shot through the body is the result of the battle this morning at Lemont. There were six deputies on one side and a mob of strikers on the other.

The circumstances that led up to this were developing since yesterday noon. Four American workmen have been working at the Frick Coke company's valley works for some time. They came to New Haven yesterday afternoon, to take Leisenring electric line road for home. As soon as they alighted from the train at New Haven, they were surrounded by a mob of several hundred strikers. The strikers first beat the few workmen and then put tags on them bearing the inscription "Blacklegs," also covering them with chalk marks. They then marched their prisoners to all of the works on the line from New Havensouth, holding them up as decorated samples of "scabs."

The Frick company was informed of the perilous position its workmen were in. Field Deputy Allen and seven men were sent to New Haven on the evening train. They were misled by false information.

It was daybreak when the squad of tired deputies reached Lemont. Not long after daylight the men began to assemble on the commons by the hundreds. They engaged in the wildest demonstration.

At this juncture Deputy Allen and three other deputies came up. Allen was mounted. Riding up to the advancing crowd of miners he told them to go back. They began to yell, and one striker covered him with his pistol and fired. The shot was a close shave for the top of Allen's head. Allen turned in his saddle and called to his five men to fire. Each of the men afoot had a Winchester. Allen had two revolvers. They opened fire together and the strikers stood to it and fought gamely. The deputies gave ground, but kept up their fire. They were driven to the extreme end of the company's ground, where they made a stand. By that time three of the strikers were down, and when the deputies stopped and prepared to fight it out there the mob fell back.

The instant the strikers stopped firing the officers stopped also, glad enough to get away.

At 7 o'clock tonight six strikers were arrested at Lemont and sent here to jail. Two hundred more arrests will be made.

CINCINNATI, June 9.—A special to the Commercial Gazette from Massillon, O., says: Today the miners' relief committee of Massillon returned to Governor McKinley the $10 he contributed to their subscription for the relief of unemployed miners. The letter from the relief committee says:

William McKinley, Governor of Ohio:—Sir,—Enclosed you will find $10, your donation to miners of Massillon. They unanimously refuse to accept a mite from the hand that assisted in smiting them. Your donation was solicited because the miners believed you were at least as much in sympathy with them as the ordinary every-day citizens, but since you have divested yourself of your true character, standing out in glowing colors, they abhor the contamination of your charity. Your ambition in a political way, so far as the miners are concerned, is sure to be gratified henceforth. Yours, etc.

JOHN WILHELM, President.

E. MILLER, Treasurer.

E. BROWN, Secretary.

GENERAL TELEGRAPH.

HILLSBORO, Ill., June 5.—John Wiekoff, who was found dead on the Big Four railroad tracks near Butler, this county, about twenty-three years ago, was supposed to have been killed accidentally by the cars. Within the last few days some facts have come to light which indicate that he was murdered, and that George Cooper, a wagon maker of Butler, was the guilty party. The chief witness against Cooper is his own daughter. She says that she was then 14 years old, that her father murdered Wiekoff, robbed him of $100 and threw his body on the railroad track, and that she washed her father's bloody clothing.

LONDON, June 5.—The secretary of the society for the relief of persecuted Jews sends to the Times a letter describing the work of the society's missionary in Jerusalem. Mr. Montef, the missionary, found Jews in cellars and caves suffering from hopeless diseases, some being blind, others fever-stricken and consumptive, and all glad of half a penny charity per week. Most of the 40,000 Jews there are intensely poor.

COLLOWAY, Neb., June 5.—About 7 o'clock last evening a gale swept with terrible fury over this town. The Grand Army hall is a total wreck. The Episcopal and Methodist churches were blown off their foundations, and a two-story brick school house is a total wreck. The damage amounts to many thousand dollars.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 6.—The claim for $15,000,000 filed against the Stanford estate by Attorney General Olney as a preliminary step to force the government claim against the original holders of the Central Pacific grant has caused the greatest interest here. It is now learned that the government's claim was filed May 6, but that an attempt was made to keep the proceeding secret in order that the financial operations of the estate need not be embarrassed. The late Senator Stanford's estate was recently appraised at $17,000,000. Since the appraisalment heavy obligations have been met and it is stated now that the enforcement of the government claim would practically wipe out the estate, not only leaving the widow penniless, but cutting off all the beneficiaries under the late senator's will, including the endowment of $2,500,000 to the Stanford university. It is even said that the estate on the liquidation of its acknowledged debts may not equal the amount claimed by the government. In this event Senator Stanford's deed of trust under which Stanford University was founded would not stand in case the decision of the courts would be in favor of the government and the Stanford University would necessarily be sacrificed to save the judgment. Mrs. Stanford in an interview has stated that the government claim will be resisted to the fullest extent of her ability. She regards the proceedings in the nature of a test case and was not surprised at the filing of the claim. Further than these statements she would not talk.

TARRYTOWN, N. J., June 5.—Five boys whose ages ranged from five to twelve years, inmates of the Catholic Sisters of Mercy Home, have died from poisoning as a result of eating herbs picked on the play ground yesterday. Seven more are critically ill. The dead are James Forrestal, John Callahan, Thomas Casmore, Augustus Powers, John Donnelly. Seven others are dying. The boys were playing when one discovered a pungent root which he declared to be flag root. Within an hour all who had eaten the vegetable were sick.

HELENA, Mont., June 6.—Richards has issued a proclamation forbidding the sun dance of the Creek Indians at Great Falls.

ST. PAUL, June 6.—The verdict in the Maney case was learned positively by a dispatch today. Lieutenant Maney was cleared on the first specification but found guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer. Sentence was suspension for one year with forfeiture of half of the pay. A recommendation to executive clemency accompanied the sentence.

LONDON, June 6.—Ladas won the Derby; Matchbox, second; Reminder, third.

After the race Ladas was surrounded by a multitude half mad with enthusiasm, when Lord Rosebery appeared on the course to lead Ladas back to the paddock, a strong force of police was sent to protect the premier from the crush of the crowds. There was a tremendous outburst of enthusiasm as Lord Rosebery and Ladas entered the paddock together. For today at least the most popular man in England is the proud owner of Ladas, the owner of the Derby.

LOGANSPOUT, Ind., June 6.—Royal Center has a censure in an attempt to white-cap Dr. John K. Burton, editor of the Royal Center Record. Burton narrowly escaped the mob and has filed an affidavit charging George Conn, the town marshal, with being the ring-leader in the affair. Conn has been arrested. The feeling is intense and further trouble is feared.

SYCAMORE, Ill., June 6.—Mrs. Chas. Decker, of South Grove township, a few miles west of this city, has given birth to a child having a double body, joined together as were the Siamese twins. The child had four legs, three arms and one head. It died very soon after its birth.

CHICAGO, June 7.—What few good apples there are in Chicago, are held at $50 a barrel, a price high beyond all precedent. As there are 400 apples in a barrel this makes the price 12½ cents each.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 7.—The United States revenue cutter Bear is almost a total wreck, and possibly by this time battered to pieces.

That information was received in San Francisco last night in a despatch from one of the officers of the well-known vessel, which says she is fast on the rocks at the entrance to the harbor at Sitka.

VIENNA, June 7.—The worst hail-storm that ever visited this city commenced at 7 o'clock this morning. Dense copper-colored clouds rose with alarming rapidity. The wind drove the dust in columns to the height of four-story houses. Then the hail began to fall, and covered the city in a short time to the depth of from six to eight inches.

In less than fifteen minutes the city looked as if it had been bombarded. It is estimated that 100,000 windows were broken. Five hundred panes of glass were broken in the ministry of commerce building alone, and 600 in the palace. In the upper floors of the emperor's wing of the palace hardly a pane remains unbroken.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 7.—The ministers of the interior and of husbandry have advanced a scheme to organize a Jewish colony in South Africa.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 7.—The steamer China, which arrived yesterday from the orient, brings a peculiar story of those employed by the Japanese to smuggle girls into this country for immoral purposes.

While the vessel was at the wharf at Yokohama receiving her cargo, a Japanese passenger came on board and asked leave to have four large boxes taken to his stateroom, but was refused as the boxes were too large.

The boxes were left on the wharf to be placed in the hold with the other cargo. Just as they were being hoisted up a peculiar noise issuing from one of the cases attracted the attention of the stevedores who rolled the boxes aside and called the police, and upon examination the boxes were found to contain the almost lifeless bodies of four Japanese girls who were overcome with suffocation. The boxes were only two feet, three inches in length, and one and one-half broad and deep.

There was a small air-hole at one end but the boxes were laid on the wharf end up and the holes closed.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—In the debate in the House on the Indian appropriation bill today, Linton (Mich.) alleged that the Roman Catholic schools received three-fifths of all the appropriations for Indian schools. He deprecated government aid for sectarian education.

PHOENIX, Arizona, June 8.—Telegrams from Minneapolis announce that a contract has been let to R. B. Langdon to construct 110 miles of canal work at Storage dam, 150 feet high, at Horse Shoe bend on the Verde river, also a diversion dam on the same stream, twelve miles from Mount McDowell.

The amount to be paid for the work is $2,000,000. Work is to be completed within eighteen months from present date. This will reclaim four hundred thousand acres of the choicest fruit and grain land in Arizona. For three years the enterprise has been under way and nearly $100,000 has already been spent in surveys and preliminary work. The promoters are principally residents of Phoenix and Minneapolis.

DETROIT, Mich., June 8.—Mayor Pingree has advanced a scheme to supply the thousands of idle men of Detroit with vegetables for the winter. He has called on every lot and acreage owner in the city who has a foot of idle land to turn it in for the use of the poor until the crop season closes. He estimates that there is not less than 15,000 acres of such land near the city, and already hundreds of acres have been offered for his scheme.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., June 8.—Pat Cox, the noted outlaw, of southwest Virginia, was killed last night near Wise court house, while resisting arrest. A few weeks ago he killed one of his own cousins and fatally wounded another. Yesterday Deputy Sheriff Crear, with a posse, surrounded him. The outlaw at once opened fire on his pursuers and seriously wounded two of them before being shot.

CAPE CHARLES, Va., June 8.—Isaac Kemp, the negro who murdered Deputy Sheriff Ned Carver, at Westover, Md., was today taken from jail by 400 men and shot to death.

MUNCIE, Ind., June 8.—It has been announced that the Fleming family of the United States will hold their reunion in Muncie, commencing August 12th. At the last reunion held at Flemingsburg, W. Va., in 1892, 10,000 Flemings were present, and that number are expected in Muncie this year. Ex-Governor Fleming of West Virginia, who is president of the Fleming family association, will be present, and so will be ex-Governor Fleming of Florida.

ARDMORE, I. T., June 8.—By the death of Will Dalton at the hands of Deputy United States Marshal Hart today, it is believed that the long-hunted and searched-for train robber has been laid low.

The identification is complete. His widow is here under arrest, and for her attorney your correspondent has sent two telegrams. The first went to C. H. Blivens, 1407 Van Ness avenue, San Francisco, and reads:

"My husband, Bill Dalton, is dead. Come at once. I want his remains sent home."

The other one was addressed to Mrs. A. L. Dalton, Kingfisher, and reads:

"Bill Dalton is here dead; come at once if you wish to see him."

(Signed) JENNIE DALTON."

PHOENIX, Arizona, June 9.—Mrs. Alice Ramsay died today of acute pneumonia. She was the niece of Andrew Jackson, being the eldest daughter of Moses Jackson. She was born in Algiers, Louisiana, 58 years ago.

OMAHA, June 9.—The drouth in Nebraska has been broken. Last night great quantities of rain fell. Today it continues to rain. The down-pour will save about 60 per cent of the wheat and 40 per cent of the oats, and assures a good crop of corn.

OAKLAND, Cal., June 9.—Louis

Matheny, accused of the murder of Policeman Cashin, was acquitted by the jury today after a protracted trial. The case was a remarkable one. Matheny and a companion named Tonhill were surprised in the act of burglarizing a store in Oakland over a year ago by Cashin and a fellow policeman. A pitched battle ensued, in which Cashin and Tonhill were killed. It seemed to be settled that Cashin had been killed by Matheny, but a short time since the dead policeman's body was exhumed, the bullet extracted, and it was clearly shown the ball could not have come from the burglar's revolver. He was accordingly acquitted of murder, but is held for burglary.

PHOENIX, Ariz., June 9.—It is reported here that the business portion of Globe, Ariz., is in ashes from a fire which started in the Old Dominion store. The total loss will not be less than $20,000.

DUBUQUE, Ia., June 9.—The most destructive fire that ever visited Dubuque was started about 5 o'clock by an engine spark in the Lesur lumber yards. The fire burned from Sixth street to Eleventh street, a width of three square miles. Immense piles of lumber went down and mills, factories, warehouses and barns were reduced to ashes, leaving fully twelve acres of ruins.

CHICAGO, June 9.—The bronze statue, "Signal of Peace," the gift of Judge Lambert Tree to Lincoln Park, was unveiled this afternoon with simple ceremonies. The statue is the work of Cyrus Erwin Dallin, and represents an Indian seated on a pony, holding aloft upon a spear the emblem of peace.

WAGONER, I. T., June 9.—This afternoon there was a robbery and sensational tragedy enacted on the road between Fort Gibson and Tahlequah, where the big Cherokee payment is in progress. A steplod of passengers was some miles out from Tahlequah en route to Fort Gibson, the railway station, when Levi Sanders, a desperate Cherokee character who was on the front seat with the driver, shot him in the side with his pistol, and ordered him to hold up. He then made the passengers get out and relieved them of $70 and some jewelry.

One man, who declined to give his name, was shot through the breast by the Indian.

The robber then left, walking through the woods in the direction of Tahlequah. He found a man and an Indian boy herding some cattle and began shooting at the boy and killed him. He then mounted the horse the boy was riding and again emerged into the road, where he came upon two wagons containing some men and women. He shot into one of them and killed Mrs. Duncan, a lady connected with one of the best families of the Cherokee nation. Her son, Levi Duncan, was with her. He began shooting at Sanders, as did the man in the other wagon, but he was getting away on his horse when young Duncan got a Winchester and shot the horse.

Sanders was then afoot and could not escape. He was literally shot to pieces.

VICTORIA, B. C., June 11.—The steamer Arawa, from Australian ports, brought a number of notable passengers in the persons of the delegates from the south sea colonies to the inter-colonial trade conference to be held in Ottawa the latter part of this month. They are all anxious for closer relationship with Canada, and the conference will be one of the most notable in Colonial history. The British cable from Canada to Australia and the annexation of Samoa or the future of that country at least, besides the commercial feature of inter-colonial trade development and legislation necessary in that direction will form the conference program. The Samoan trouble is still very much unsettled and a source of grave anxiety to the nations interested in the south seas.

The Arawa left Honolulu on the second of June, when the new constitution of Hawaii was the all-absorbing topic of conversation and debate. It had just been promulgated and published. It contains many features peculiar to itself. Its first section, dealing with the rights of persons and property, recognizes God as the Supreme ruler and declares for universal equity and liberty of the press and Hawaiian subjects. Any newspaper, however, which advocates restoration of the monarchical government, or any speaker taking the platform in the queen's cause, or suggesting force to accomplish a change of government, shall be considered a traitor and treated accordingly.

CHICAGO, June 11.—Prof. R. L. Garner, who recently returned from Africa in pursuit of his investigation of the habits of the Gorillas and Chimpanzees is in Chicago. Speaking of his investigations, he said:

From childhood I have believed that the lower animals were able to converse together to the extent of making known to each other their needs and conditions. In pursuit of knowledge in confirmation of this belief, I went to Africa, after a number of years' study of the monkeys in captivity. I firmly believe as I have written since my return, that the monkey tribe is able to communicate one with the other to a remarkable degree of intelligence. I am now at work on the development and finishing of an alphabet which I have invented, as a result of my years of study and elaborate by my African experiences. I propose to return to Africa next spring and resume my investigation in the Gamboon country.

TANGIER, June 11.—News from the interior confirms the report of the death of Sultan Muley Hassan, while traveling between the capital and Rabat. It is rumored that the Sultan's son, Mula Abdah Asiz, has been proclaimed sultan.

LONDON, June 11.—A prominent banker has received a dispatch from Tangier this afternoon, saying the belief prevails that the late sultan was foully murdered.

CHICAGO, June 11.—An additional complication may arise in the case of Assaeln Prendergast. Judge Chetlain is not sitting in the criminal court and the case came up today before Judge Payne. When the continuance agreed on was submitted to him, he refused to enter the order, saying he knew no reason why the continuance should be granted. The matter went over temporarily.

Prendergast insisted on making a speech. "I am the defendant here," he said, "and I want no continuance. The question to be determined is my guilt or innocence, not insanity. Murder is the malicious taking of human life. That crime I have not committed." The prisoner was thrust into a chair by the bailiffs.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—A question has arisen as to the effect of the Pacific roads bill on the individual liability of Stanford and other stockholders for the government debt. Some lawyers in Congress, including Maguire, Rep., of San Francisco, say the new funding act will be in the nature of a settlement of the account between the government and the roads, and this settlement will be absolute and final and discharge all the stockholders from individual liability. The present move of the attorney general against the Stanford estate is based on the fact that the Pacific railroad debt is about to mature.

IRON MOUNTAIN, Mich., June 11.—Forest fires are raging in the vicinity. Across the river in Wisconsin the flames are doing great damage. At Sagola, Mich., McCormack's hotel, saloon, boarding house, several dwellings and the warehouses of the Samola Lumber company are burned.

MADRID, June 11.—Don Frederico Madrago, the distinguished Spanish painter, is dead.

ST. LOUIS, June 11.—The conference of national officers of the labor organizations assembled here today with a view of bringing about unity of work among the labor organizations. The conference organized with Garnd Master Workman Sovereign, of the Knights of Labor, as chairman; P. J. McGuire, head of the Brotherhood of Carpenters, secretary.

BUFFALO, N. Y., June 11.—Assured of the success of the big tunnel on the American side, the same interests which control it have made arrangements for the construction of a similar plant on the opposite side of the river. A meeting held at the falls where all the necessary papers were signed by which the Cataract Construction company, under the name of the Canadian Niagara Falls Powder company, secures the right to construct hydraulic canals for a great powder grading plant. The papers were signed by the trustees of Queen Victoria Park and the officials of the powder company and the plans were described by the company and accepted by the commissioners.

In many details the plans are similar to those put in operation on the American side. The powder house and the pits will be of the same dimensions. Three mammoth tribunes will be put in and the arrangements will be so the pit can be extended 1,200 feet when necessary.

PORT TOWNSEND, Wash., June 11.—The City of Topeka has arrived from Alaska. The rumor from San Francisco that the revenue cutter Bear was wrecked near Sitka is false.

Settlers along the Alaska coast north of Prince William's sound, have reported to the government authorities that there is imminent danger of an Indian uprising. Near Shakan harbor last month the Indians killed an unknown white man while coming down the coast and mutilated the corpse horribly. Another murder is reported in that vicinity, the particulars of which are unknown.

Written for this Paper.

"AS MEN SOW, SO SHALL THEY REAP"

That amid the apparent confusion and uncertainty of things in life, there is an undercurrent of law and order, of cause and effect, the thinker will everywhere admit. Even when the connection is not visible, backward reasoning might discover unexpectedly the hidden secret of a present.

We have heard reasons given for the surroundings and conditions of this life. Some hold that they are as the inevitable of a past probation, and that the future will be as a projection of the present, or the results thereof, so far as mind can reach. When the former is admitted it is comparatively easy to reach the latter. If the one is true and based on sound philosophy, surely both can be alike assumed! If this is a Divine order it is an eternal one, and always operative. Although it is said that "the mills of the gods grind slowly," they are unceasingly at work and there is no evasion of penalty or blessing so far as is revealed at present. It might be concluded that there is something which appears to be arbitrary and of a fatalistic character in this. Certainly it assumes to belong to the inevitable. But some conclusions in regard to the pre-existent condition modify this view, for agency must have been as active and potent there as here at least, and an understanding of law and its penalties, of obedience and its rewards, was probably clearer and more comprehensive than than now. The lesson is learned on earth, painfully and gradually; contact with material things, with life's temptations, with the taint of heredity, with the accumulated virus of ages, are, when heavy, so many obstacles in the path of progress, or when light, as an incentive to effort, and assurance that all things may be overcome! One thing is assured to the understanding that divinity—unlike man—does not "expect to gather where it hath not strewed." The highest economy says that "where much is given much will be required," while "where little is given, little only is required!"

There is a disposition to admit in the moral world at large this overruling, far-reaching force of law. Men believe that it can be applied to eras of history—to nations, to great communities, but that individual life is too insignificant on the one hand, or too numerous on the other, to guarantee the potency or efficacy of this law in detail; and this is no new feature or phenomenon of humanity, for "the preacher" in Ecclesiastes said from observation, "Because judgment is not speedily executed against an evil work, therefore the hearts of men are set upon to do that which is evil;" but from the beginning even until now all the exponents of the Divine will have been emphatic as to the intimacy between violation of law and its penalty, or, on the contrary, obedience and consequent blessing!

"Say ye to the righteous that it shall be well with him, for he shall eat of the fruit of his doings," is no more permanent in the nature of things than is its opposite, "Woe unto the wicked, it shall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands shall be given him." And the argument of the great Teacher, "Ye cannot gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles," was incontrovertible by His bitterest foes. The individual application or the bringing home of an admittedly ever-present truth in other directions, was the difficulty then as it is today. Hosea had charged his people that "if they sowed to the wind they would reap the whirlwind;" and Paul, echoing the same great truth in his matchless way, declared to the early Christians that to "sow to the flesh would be to reap corruption," whereas if they "sowed to the spirit, they should of the Spirit reap everlasting life!"

It might be concluded, from all the above quotations being scripture, that this belongs mainly to the domain of religion, and to the relation between man and Deity. This is an error, for God's philosophy is eternal, and everywhere present; and while morality may not be religion, religion certainly includes morality, and all the intricacies of human relationship must be based upon right-doing, or righteousness, as it is called in the vernacular of religion.

There was a wonderful cogency and compactness in the Savior's epitome of human duty, when He urged, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and thy neighbor as thyself;" thus condensing as He claimed into a brief sentence the essential spirit of "all the law and all the Prophets!"

Has it ever occurred to any large number of persons what a change the acceptance of this fundamental idea would effect; how pregnant for good; how subversive and revolutionary in action; how human weakness and human selfishness would be circumscribed in effort; how much that is now ostentatiously deplored would vanish away; how the need of government would be lessened; how prisons would need converting into industrial centers; how crime, drunkenness and insanity would be restrained; how poverty would flee away and suicides be unknown; how the millennium would really then have dawned, and "men around the wide world then, would brothers be and a' that"? What a reign of industry would be inaugurated! What a difference in distribution; what a world of plenty; what a sense of enjoyment; what a power of life! All wrought by the realization of the fact that "all things produce after their kind;" that the law is universal and that "as men sow so shall they reap," and that divine order must and shall prevail!

Apply this rule to business, and every man would be honest; would pay for all he had with promptitude. Shuffling, evasion, fraud, failure, compromise, bankruptcy, would be known no more; confidence would be supreme; a man's word would be his bond and calamity as we now see it would find no place in trade!

Apply it to industry, and strikes would be no more; there would be right and justice between the employer and his aids; eye service would be abolished; oppression would cease; inordinate wealth and subservient poverty would have neither jealousy nor contention; the cry of the hiring bereft of his wages—"withheld by fraud"—would not "ascend as now into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth." Industrial armies, strikers, destructionists and anarchists would find no excuse for rebellion or existence. The essential spirit of intercourse and practice would be one of brotherhood and peace.

Apply this to politics, and place-hunters and speculation would be set aside for working patriotism and the conservation of society with its interests, as one man for his friend. This would insure a greater change in national, state and municipal affairs and finance than can ever come from Democrats, Republicans, Populists or partisans "of any race, color or previous condition of servitude."

Every department of human thought and action would feel this impetus of obedience to authoritative commandment, and has life swelled to this emotion recognized of the heavens, all the prophecies would culminate into fulfillment as effluent as certain, though many defer this in their thoughts, or deem that consummation as impossible at best.

It is surely evident that some change is needed, that the present drift is downward, that continuance in the prevailing course will set "every man's hand against his neighbor," and "after that the deluge." An insignificant minority believe in, are looking for, special interference of the Divine Hand. These claim that the present condition has been foreseen, that provision was once made to meet it, that the preliminary steps have been taken, and that a reassertion of Divine rule has been made and partially accepted and enforced; that the rebellious will be silenced or destroyed; that the supremacy of law will be vindicated by the results, and that all the world will know—good or bad, interested or indifferent, religious or skeptical—that there is yet "One who doeth His will amid the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth."

It is said that "the signs of the times" indicate "the coming of the King." To "those who look for His appearance, He will come (the second time) without sin unto salvation." To those who deny and reject His message, rule or claim he will come "with vengeance," as hath been predicted. There will then be unanimity in one thing at least, for "every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess, that He is Christ, to the glory of God the Father."

"When ye see these things coming to pass, then lift up your heads and rejoice, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh!"

BOX ELDER SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

On Friday, June 1st, Elder Geo. Reynolds and myself left Salt Lake City for the purpose of holding a two days' Sunday school conference at Brigham City, Box Elder county, this being the tenth annual conference held since they were first inaugurated, on the 3rd of November, 1893. It was very gratifying to our feelings to find such a widespread interest towards the Sunday school cause, as was manifested here, both by the presidency of the Stake, the Bishops, parents, teachers and children. In all our previous conferences the same universal devotion to the cause exists; hence wherever we go, the very title of the conference brings together large and spirited congregations.

Besides a preliminary meeting of the presidency and Stake superintendency, we held four meetings in Brigham City, after which one for Sunday school workers and other authorities. A number of class exercises were given by the primary and intermediate classes; also a brief lecture on the divinity of our Savior's mission, by a member of one of the theological classes. The Articles of our Faith were beautifully rendered by five young ladies from the Three Mile Creek Sunday school; and a motion song was very prettily sung by a portion of one of the primary classes. These exercises were interspersed with short reports from Stake and local superintendents during the various meetings, not only from Brigham City but Willard, Three Mile Creek, Mantua, etc. Some excellent remarks were also made by Rudgar Clawson, ex-Stake Superintendent Wixom, etc.

It was deemed wisdom, after the two crowded meetings held in Brigham City on Sunday, that an evening meeting should be held in Willard, seven miles south of Brigham, as a finale to the two days' conference. Notice of this meeting was given out by the Bishop in the afternoon, and a good sized congregation greeted us at 8 o'clock p.m. This visit brought us in pleasant contact with two old timers of between thirty and forty years—Brothers Hubbard and Dalton, whose early reminiscences afforded a rich treat.

On Saturday between four and eight o'clock our devoted Stake superintendent, Elder O. W. Snow, favored us with a drive to the elevated bench upon which their waterworks are erected, and from which Brigham city is abundantly supplied with spring water for domestic and lawn purposes. From this mountain summit the commanding view of the adjacent country is very extensive—the city of Corinne is plainly visible.

Our next drive was through the canyon, which presents a variety of mountain scenery and always affords a pleasing change to those of city life. Emerging from the canyon an open plateau presents itself, with cultivated farms, fields and orchards, and a good-sized settlement known as Mantua. We noticed a comfortable meeting house and quite a variety of commodious dwelling houses and shade trees of many years' growth.

It reminded me of thirty-one years ago, when I noticed the first house that was built there, while traveling to and from Cache valley, and thought what a lonely and exposed location for a family to risk a residence upon. Now there is a thriving settlement of between 400 and 500 inhabitants, and the once rugged and barren land yields fruitful and productive food for man and beast. What a change can be produced on the face of nature after the skill and industry of man have been manifested upon it!

Our visit to Brigham and Willard cities has been an enjoyable and, I sincerely hope, a profitable one, for that is the motive that prompts us in our labors of love towards the moral and religious training of the youth of Zion.

GEORGE GODDARD.

ELDER R. M. STEVENS DEAD.

FAGALII UPOLU, Samoa, May 23, 1894.—Since you last heard from the far-off land, the hand of death has again been among us; this time it has taken from our midst, our honored and beloved president, Elder Ransom M. Stevens. He had been complaining of not feeling well for some time, and had been confined to his bed for ten days, when on the morning of Saturday, April 28th, 1894, his noble spirit was called hence, and we were left to mourn his loss, and try to comfort and console his grief-stricken wife.

Brother Stevens had been president of the the Samoan mission for some time previous to his demise, and as president and co-laborer he won the love and esteem of the brethren and sisters who were associated with him, and his death has cast a gloom over our mission home which time and the Spirit of God only can efface.

His many, many virtues, and his deeds of love and kindness made him a great favorite among the servants of the Lord in this land, and we feel that in his death we have indeed lost a brother and wise counselor. His love and charity towards this erring people was such as only a true servant of God can bestow. He was ever ready and anxious to speak a word in defense of truth, and show fallen man the path whereby he might regain his Maker's presence.

Although we sadly feel our loss, and long, with aching hearts, to comfort his bereaved wife, yet we realize that "He doeth all things well," and we feel to say, "Thy will be done." We invoke the blessings of God upon his parents and dear ones in their hour of great trial, and we crave His special blessings upon the devoted wife, who will leave for Zion on this steamer, with a sad, heavy heart. We have learned to love Sister Stevens as a sister during her two years' stay in this land; and her noble deeds and womanly actions shall long be remembered by us. She has every reason to feel comforted in regard to her departed husband, for his life was full of good deeds, and worthy of emulation, and we trust we may be enabled to pattern after his worthy example.

Ever praying for the welfare of Utah and her people, and for the advancement of truth,

I am your brother in the Gospel,

THOS. H. HILTON,

Clerk of Samoan Mission.

Mrs. Annie T. Stevens, wife of the deceased, telegraphed from San Francisco yesterday to Elder George E. Browning, of Ogden, the former president of the Samoan Mission, as follows:

"My husband is dead. Leave here tomorrow morning. Please inform authorities and ask them to telegraph F. Christenson, Fairview, at once."

Elder Browning did as requested, and the President's office, in this city, sent the message to Fairview, where the deceased Elder resided, and where his parents are still living. Brother Christenson is the father of the widow.

According to the foregoing dispatch Sister Stevens left San Francisco this morning and is expected to arrive in Ogden tomorrow (Sunday) evening. There she will remain the guest of Elder Browning until Monday morning. A few hours will probably be spent in Salt Lake City, and she will take the train Monday afternoon for her home.

Inquiries from Fairview today were received by the President's office as to whether or not Elder Stevens's body was being brought home. There is nothing in either the foregoing letter from Elder Hilton or in the dispatches that have been received to indicate the such is the case.

Of the students attending the College 3 have completed the preparatory course, 4 the normal, 7 the second year of the normal, 9 the first year of the normal, 10 the business course, and 2 the second year of the literary course.

In addition to the courses here named, one in science and one in mathematics were provided for, for neither of which there have been applicants. The establishment of these courses has been merely a temporary arrangement, and a slight change has been made for the next year, which will not, however, interfere with the progress of those who have been pursuing the courses of this year.

In response to the earnest solicitation of the Stake Presidency of the Y. L. M. I. A. a five weeks' course of instruction in the work of the Guide was instituted. The class was organized as an association, and regular work was conducted under the direction of the undersigned. To this was added a series of lectures on topics of interest to the ladies. A great deal of interest was created by this course, and the benefits derived therefrom will be shared equally by the Young Ladies' association and the college.

A number of valuable works have been added to the library through the courtesy of Hon. Joseph L. Rawlins, delegate to Congress. The following periodicals have been furnished the reading room:

DESERET EVENING NEWS, Salt Lake Herald, Ogden Standard, Provo Dispatch, Wasatch Wave, Richfield Advocate, Woman's Exponent, Contributor, Juvenile Instructor, Young Woman's Journal, Inter-Mountain Educator, and B. Y. A. Business Journal, donated by publishers; Poet donated by Margette Bros.; Judge by Utah Book and Stationery Co.; Public Opinion, Literary Digest, and North American Review, purchased.

In addition to the regular and special instructors of the institution the following have favored us during the year with lectures: Elder George Reynolds, Book of Mormon; Elder David McKenzie, Bible Evidences; Lieut. R. W. Young, Commercial Law; Elder James H. Anderson, Manxland. Most of these lectures were delivered before the regular classes, but some were given in the sessions of the Students' Society, which were held weekly until the close of the first semester, when they were temporarily suspended, on account of the course of light science lectures in the Church University.

While serious discouragements have attended our work in some directions, we feel to acknowledge our gratitude to the people of the Territory, and especially of the Salt Lake Stake for their rallying to the assistance of the college in the matter of attendance. Our record of 282 regular students, in addition to the forty-two who took the young ladies' course, exceeds our annual attendance for several years past. Notwithstanding the raising of the standard of courses, we are able to announce with much pleasure the graduation of four students in our full normal course, the first in the history of the institution; while excellent progress has been made by some students along the other courses. Despite the darkness of the times, a ray of light has been shed upon the institution, illuminating its course to the successful issue of the year. To God we are indebted for the light, and to Him we trust for its continuance and increase.

WILLARD DONE.

WEATHER AND CROPS.

George N. Salisbury, U. S. Weather Bureau director, issued the following bulletin last night:

One farmer called the past week "An ideal week of growing weather," and the general tenor of reports was to the same effect. It was, throughout, quite warm for the season; and the warmth, combined with scattering showers on May 29th, 30th and June 1st, gave to vegetation a decided impulse. At this time of year Utah farmers depend upon an artificial supply of water almost wholly, but it is a great saving of water and help to crops if occasional showers occur.

In the earlier localities winter wheat and rye are headed out. Barley will be headed in another week. Alfalfa is nearly everywhere quite tall and heavy. It is blossoming now, and on the drier lands the cutting of it has begun.

Corn and potatoes have come up well, and are big enough to be plowed. In Utah county farmers have finished thinning out their sugar beets. Strawberries are ripening, and some were shipped last week.

Although water has become scarce in some places, yet, on the whole, it has held out better than was expected.

Box Elder—Maximum temperature, 90; minimum temperature, 58; 1.5 inch rain on 29th. Unirrigated spring wheat and lucern are suffering. Other grain and lucern doing well. Winter wheat heading out. Some grasshoppers hatching.

Cache—Meadows and pastures doing finely. Prospects of good hay crop. Irrigation only begun in gardens, although it will soon be a necessity with grain. In the gardens a kind of fly is eating the plants.

Rich—Severe hail storm on the 26th, but it did no damage. Prospects good for hay and grain. Potatoes just coming up. Maximum temperature, 86; minimum temperature, 38.

Morgan—Shower on the 29th. Very warm. Crops where irrigated are growing fast; where not they are dying out. Lucerne 20 to 24 inches, blooming.

Summit—Max. 92; min. 28. A few light rain showers. Warm days and nights with heavy dew. Heavy shower June 1st. Crops growing fast. Dandelions are becoming so numerous as to be a pest.

Wasatch—Max. 86; min. 36. Rain and hail on 30th, .20 inch. Showers and sunshine since have fairly made the vegetation boom. It has been an ideal week of growing weather.

Uintah—Max. 86; min. 42. Rain of 0.41 at Vernal on 30th. Grain and lucern doing well. Planting is finished. Strawberries are ripening.

Weber—Max. 92; min. 60. Average sunshine 94 per cent. On 29th over half an inch of rain. Crops have not looked better for years. Lucern on high, unirrigated land is being cut. Fall grain on same kind of land is short, but well headed. Strawberries are being picked.

Davis—Spring grain is being irrigated. Alfalfa is beginning to blossom. Strawberries will soon be in the market.

Salt Lake—Max. 89; min. 52, rain 25. Lucern is nearly ready to cut. Spring grain is being watered, and grows very fast. Shower on the 1st.

Tooele—Grain looks well. Strawberries are ripe. First crop of lucern is being cut. Wire worm and grasshoppers are doing considerable damage.

Utah—Thunderstorm on the 29th. Crops look well, and growing fast. Some corn and potatoes are big enough to be plowed. Thinning of beets is now finished. Strawberries are ripe. Some were shipped last week.

Juab—Warm and sunny. Grain doing finely. Corn two inches high, and potatoes peeping up. First grain watered on the 2nd.

Sanpete—Maximum, 34; minimum, 48. All crops look above the average, except apples. Frost killed early blooms. Heavy shower on 30th. Water is getting scarce.

Millard—Maximum, 86; minimum, 56. Rain 0.56. Cereals and vegetables are both looking splendid. The earlier crops look best. Lucern in bloom; rye heading out.

Sevier—Grain does not look as well as it would have looked if there had been more water and less wind. Fall rye is two feet high, and starting to head. Barley will head in another week. Lucern is very heavy.

Grand—Soil wet down six inches by rains of 29th and 30th. All crops are looking well, including fruit. New potatoes are on hand. Strawberries prime.

Garfield—Past week favorable; showers helped all crops. Too dry before.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Considerable hay in Fresno county, Cal., has been damaged by rain.

Large numbers of trout are being distributed in all the Wyoming streams.

The Wyoming state Sunday school convention will be held at Cheyenne, June 19 and 20.

The Nevada State Board of Agriculture has decided that no state fair will be held this year owing to dull times.

Eastern Colorado farmers are greatly rejoicing over last week's rain. The ground is in excellent condition for corn planting.

The California Associated Cycling clubs will hold their annual celebration and parade on September 9, at San Jose.

The city water supply of Laramie, Wyo., is causing no little trouble to the people of that city. It is maintained that the quantity at present is insufficient.

Says the Cheyenne Leader: The firemen's tournament committee have now raised $1,000, and expect to increase the amount to $1,500 before they get through.

Five adventurous Californians left San Francisco on Sunday to seek their fortunes in the rich gold deposits along the banks of the Yukon river in Alaska. They will brave the rigors of the Arctic circle in search of wealth.

Elmore Patzer, a six-year-old child, was accidentally killed on Sunday. The boy was swinging in a hammock, one end of which was fastened to the framework of an old press. The frame fell and crushed the life out of him.

J. B. Henderson, who was burned in the Troy laundry fire at Portland, Oregon, on Tuesday, has died. Mr. Henderson, who was one of the proprietors of the laundry, went there from Oakland, Cal., about ten years ago.

The receipts of milk at the Fort Morgan creamery for the last half of the month of May exceeded 45,000 pounds, or a daily average of more than 8,000 pounds, most of which has been manufactured into cheese.

The Dillon (Mont.) Examiner writes: Flockmasters say that the increase in lambs this year will be greater than in many seasons past. So far reports show the lambs to be much stronger than usual, and the weather is all that can be desired.

The Maricopa and Phoenix railroad company have determined to build a steam motor line from Tempe to Mesa and to run local trains to and from Mesa and Phoenix mornings and afternoons going four times daily each way.

Holdings of homes on the Mora grant in New Mexico will not be disturbed. Persons who have occupied homes on the grant for ten years will be given titles to their homesteads. They will simply be required to designate the land they have actually occupied.

Chico (Cal.) women have formed a society called the Ladies' Anti-Chinese League, and ceased to patronize Chinese for any purpose. Already fully 500 families who formerly purchased vegetables and fruit of Mongolian peddlers are trading with white men.

Says the Los Angeles Times: E. M. Marshal picked from 3,000 plants 510 boxes of strawberries last week. From the same plants he sold last year $206 worth of berries. There is certainly money in other fruits than oranges here.

Jose Maria Sortillon, convicted at Phoenix, Arizona, last week of murder, by burying alive his infant child, has been sentenced to be hanged July 27th. The crime was committed upon the Mohave Indian reservation in November, 1892. The mother of the babe is a Mohave Indian woman.

Judge Morrow of the United States District Court at San Francisco, has sentenced George Wichman, Louis Greenwald and George N. Thomas, the convicted members of the Emerald ring, to six years imprisonment in the penitentiary at San Quentin, and to pay a fine of $8,000 each.

Says the Idaho City World: For the first time in its history this town now hears the music of the stamps of a quartz mill. At night the heavy tread of the stamps of the South Africa mill are plainly heard, when the wind blows down the creek, and sound as if not more than 100 yards away.

It is stated that Sheridan (Wyo.) coal is retailing in Omaha at $5.50 per ton. The Bee says: "Omaha need not fear a coal famine as long as the Burlington is able to bring in the output of the Sheridan mines, which will shortly be running to their full capacity, the first big shipment of fifty cars arriving yesterday."

Cherries are leaving San Jose, Cal. for the East with a rush, eighteen car loads, amounting to 421,700 pounds having gone east last week. The total fruit shipments were 1,220,000 pounds. Canners, it is stated, are not packing cherries this year, and the bulk will go East, where good prices are secured.

C. A. Loud, says the Pomona, Cal., Times, has just finished harvesting and marketing the product from a forty-acre field of alfalfa hay, first cutting. From forty acres he cut forty-nine tons of hay. Half of this he pays for the use of the land, leaving him a balance of twenty-nine and a half tons. He sold the hay on the ground for $8 per ton, or $232.

William Arno, a young seaman on the British ship Fannie Kerr, which arrived in San Francisco from London a few days ago, fell from the jigger-mast to the deck of the vessel—fully seventy-five feet—Tuesday morning and was fatally injured. The unfortunate man was taken to the receiving hospital, where it was found that his skull was badly fractured and his left leg broken.

The report that the fruit crop of Lassen was entirely ruined by frost was somewhat exaggerated, says the Reno (Nevada) Gazette, and it is claimed by the papers, as well as from other sources, that while the crop will not be of wonderful magnitude, still there will be enough to supply the home market and some to spare.

Word comes from Loveland and Berthoud, says the Longmont (Colo.) Times, confirming the report that the home supply dam has been washed out. This will leave the farmers dependent upon this ditch for water for irrigation in very bad shape. If this dam could not be repaired in fifteen days their entire crop would be lost, unless there should be a large amount of rain.

It is reported that the calf crop promises to be good this season throughout most of the state of Montana. Cattle, as a rule, have wintered well and where this is the case a good increase in calves almost invariably follows. This is due to the fact that cows that are in fair flesh are less liable to lose their calves during the winter and the loss is less of calves that come at the proper time.

Montana cattlemen, remarks the Rocky Mountain Husbandman, can reckon on a good beef crop this season and on the early maturity of steers also. There are two reasons for Montana beef maturing early this season. One is that the cattle generally wintered well and the majority of the steers are in good fix to start in with, and the other is that the grass crop promises to be very fine.

It has been discovered that petroleum emulsion sprayed upon grasshoppers will destroy them. A meeting was held at Meridian Tuesday evening, says the Boise (Idaho) Daily Statesman, to start an organized campaign. The ditch company contributed 50 gallons of oil for the work. The grasshoppers are young now. They are easily driven until they come to a ditch where they congregate, the oil then being sprayed upon them.

A special to the Omaha Bee says the people of the Big Horn basin are looking for a period of prosperity this year, as their valleys are all being settled up by a good class of farmers from Utah, Minnesota and Nebraska. Large stockmen are slowly yielding to the small settlers who want a home. The settlers are working now for a county, to be called Big Horn, and as soon as they get that the population will increase rapidly.

George Ellis, the negro, who broke jail at Boise (Idaho) Sunday night was caught at Caldwell on Wednesday by Deputy Marshal Brown. He had been there during the day exhibiting a roll of bills, claiming he wished to purchase a team and wagon. When caught Ellis was riding a black mare which he claimed to have purchased from a ranchman near Boise. No money was found on his person, and it is thought he gave it to some one for safe keeping.

The trial of Dixon, the murderer of Harvey at Miners' Delight, Wyoming, will come up in the district court at Lander, on June 11. The defense has succeeded in getting hold of a diary taken from the body of Harvey which they regard as a confession that the murdered man seduced Dixon's wife. There are a large number of entries which relate to Mrs. Dixon. These are all in the handwriting of Harvey and the production of this diary is said to have staggered the prosecution.

Michael Harrison is in the Pueblo, Colo., county jail for the murder of his brother, Daniel, on their ranch on the Muddy near Graneros, Monday afternoon. Mike came to town and surrendered himself to the sheriff, saying that he had shot his brother. He is not over bright and the officers were inclined to believe that he had become insane and that his story of the shooting was an hallucination. Under Sheriff Moses went to the ranch and found that his statement was true.

Manuel Souza, a Portuguese residing on the Moss ranch in the Jack Hayes canyon, Cal., was murdered by an unknown man while returning home on Wednesday night. The assassin did his work well and left no trace behind him. The murder was evidently a cold-blooded one, and was not perpetrated for the purpose of robbery; at least, that is the theory of the officers. Some $5.50 in money and a gold watch and chain were found on the person of the deceased.

There have been filed with the secretary of state for Wyoming articles of incorporation of the W. F. Cody transportation company and the W. F. Cody hotel company. The transportation company is capitalized at $12,000 and is organized to run a stage line between Sheridan and the national park. The hotel company will build a $12,000 hotel at Sheridan. Associated with Bill in the enterprises are H. S. Boal, George Canfield and Sherman Canfield.—Laramie Boomerang.

Says the Helena (Mont.) Independent: Mr. Louis Stadler, who was at Beaver Creek on Sunday, tells a very sad incident in connection with the high water. The water is higher than ever known before in that section of the country. Living on an island was an old fisherman, with his wife. Last Saturday he died, and his place is so surrounded by water that it is impossible for any one to get to the house, or for those at the house to get the body to the mainland.

International complications are threatened at Tucson, Arizona, over a supposed case of counterfeit. A stranger named Prof. Campelan, a musician, a few days ago offered a suspicious-looking $5 piece. The coin would not ring. He was arrested and appeared before the United States commissioner several times. On Wednesday he was discharged. The coin had been sent to San Francisco and was pronounced genuine. Campelan is a citizen of Mexico and as such will lay his troubles before the consul, with the demand that reparation be made for the wrongs done.

A ship will sail for Capetown from San Francisco soon, says the Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise, carrying miners and all others who will pay $100 for the privilege of going to Africa and starving to death. However, any man who thinks that this country is thoroughly prospected will do as well in Africa as he will here. There has been nothing discovered in Africa nor anywhere else in the world that would make a feeder to the mother lode of Nevada, which, though it has yielded scores of millions, has hardly been touched.

"The Grand Junction (Colorado) Star-Times" made the statement in a recent issue that it would cost thousands of dollars for the Grand Valley orchardists to properly thin their trees of superfluous fruit. The same paper now says that this statement is fully borne out by the facts. As an example, in the Rose Brothers' orchard in the lower valley, which has sixty acres of bearing trees, ten men will be continuously employed for the next thirty days in thinning. The owners expect to put on the market not less than 260 tons of the finest flavored peaches ever grown in any country.

The coal supply of Montana is beginning to be appreciated by the country, remarks the Helena Independent. While the East and South are suffering from fuel famine, owing to the protracted strike of the miners of those states, and the railroads centering in Chicago are greatly inconvenienced, this state is supplying the great transcontinental lines from its inexhaustible mines, which employ the highest priced labor. The Northern Pacific is abundantly supplied from its Montana mines, and the Great Northern now uses our coal as far east as Devil's Lake, N. D.

An explosion of gasoline occurred on Wednesday at the Troy steam laundry, Portland, Ore. Five Chinamen were burned to death and four others were seriously injured, one probably fatal. J. B. Henderson, one of the proprietors of the laundry, was badly burned about the face and body and is seriously injured. The building occupied by the laundry, together with all its contents, was burned, entailing a property loss of about $10,000. Since the high water compelled the gas works to close down the laundry has been using gasoline to run its irons. About twenty-five Chinese were employed in the laundry.

A negro named George Ellis, believed to be a professional burglar, made his escape from the county jail at Boise City, Idaho, some time between 12 o'clock Sunday night and daylight Monday morning by cutting his way with a case knife. Ellis went through the Coxeyites before leaving. From "General" Schaeffer's clothes the enterprising coon took $65 and a pocket knife. He also wore off the wearer's hat. He stripped Colehan of clothing, leaving him nothing but an old pair of pants, which Colehan was using as a pillow. The prisoner is still at large, notwithstanding the officers have made strenuous efforts to apprehend him.

Early Sunday morning two armed men entered the day coach of the train laid up at Thompson's Falls, west of Missoula, Mont., on account of the water, and commanded the passengers to hold up their hands. One of them covered the car with his revolver and the other searched the passengers, taking everything of value. The largest amount taken from any one was $78. In all the robbers secured about $200 and several watches. As soon as the work was completed they jumped from the car and fled, and before the alarm was given were well out of the way. No trace of them has been found. No attempt was made to rob the Pullman car, it being locked, and probably the men feared to create a disturbance, as the train was in the yard near the depot.

T. B. Rickey, who recently came up from San Francisco to Reno, Nevada, informed the Reno Gazette reporter that the beef market was in bad shape. He said there were thousands of poor cattle being slaughtered now which took the place of good beef, and that the "slippery" California cattle now being driven to the shambles bring 3 to 4½ cents per pound, while prime beef is from 1 to 1½ cents higher. It is also stated that the wheat fields that the drought has killed so that they will not make either hay or grain, are being bought up for pasture, and that the indications are that the market will be overstocked with black "slippery" cattle for at least three months. Rickey says unless California stockmen dispose of their beef in that way they will all die when the rainy season sets in next fall.

Postoffice inspectors have been on the trail of a thief for some time, says the Reno (Nev.) Gazette, and he was finally run to earth this week at Mineral Creek, Nev. On March 29th last a letter was mailed at Station K, San Francisco, for a miner at El Dorado canyon, Nevada. It was $800 in currency, but when the letter reached its destination the money had gone, and a piece of newspaper had taken its place. May 1st last another letter with $200 in it was mailed to the same person at Station G; and the contents met with a similar fate. Deputy Inspector Thrall was put on the case and worked steadily on it for nearly a month. He traced the letters until they reached Mineral Creek, where the contents of the bags are sorted and sent by a stage to their destination. Suspicion then rested on the postmaster, James W. Haas, and when enough evidence to convict had been secured Thrall took him in custody.

The good people living in the vicinity of Star were startled and shocked Saturday morning, says the Boise (Idaho) Statesman, by the appearance of a man, who, divested of all clothing, was running about muttering incoherently to himself. After some difficulty the man was captured and bound. It was found he was T. C. Webster and that his family lived at Horse Shoe Bend. Mrs. Webster was at once sent for. When she arrived she said her husband had been insane for some time. Hoping he would soon recover, the family took turns guarding him. Last Wednesday he made his escape and was not heard of until he was stopped at Star. Webster was brought to this city and committed to the asylum for the insane by Probate Judge Ryals. The unfortunate man is possessed of the hallucination that he is Christ. When captured he shouted defiantly: "The Son of Man has come; beware!"

THE L. D. S. COLLEGE.

The annual commencement exercises of the eighth academic year of the Latter-day Saints' college in this city took place in the Deseret Museum building on First North street, at 2 o'clock this afternoon. After the opening exercises, a piano selection was rendered by Miss Gwendolyn Lewis. Brigham A. Perkins delivered the salutatory, which being completed, a vocal solo by John Robinson followed in order. An essay upon the subject, "Greek and Roman Games," by Miss Gladys Woodmansee, was next on the program and the valedictory was given by Miss Rose Jenkins.

The college choir favored the audience with a chorus, when the certificates were presented by Principal Willard Done, who in his address said in substance: To the graduate, commencement-day is a most interesting occasion. It is to him what the ceremony of knighting was to the medieval squire, the first entrusting of a command to the successful military cadet. By the process of step by step graduation, he has come up at least to the door of the great temple of learning where its flight of stairs is endless. Although the mind is infinite in its capacity for development, its limit of growth never having been reached, yet, so far as this life is concerned, conditions render the fullest possible development but meager indeed. The great Newton, discoverer of the law of gravitation, of prismatic refraction of light, and author of the Principia, professed just before his death that his work had been but child's play along the shore of the yet unexplored ocean of knowledge. Truly, then, you have scarcely made a commencement; indeed I hope your true, independent, manly and womanly endeavor will commence from this time. The term "commencement" then is, therefore, beautifully suggestive in theory—may it be equally so in your practice. When you take the certified result of your year's labor, remember that from that moment you stand in a double sense as an exponent of your alma mater. Upon you rests the responsibility of proving the advantage of such a course of training as is given here. Remember the composite love for self, for man, and for God, each tempered by the other must be the touch-stone to try your lives. Those who now leave this institution for the broad field of human endeavor will carry a torch with them to illumine not only their own feet but the feet of all who come in the way with them. The sphere of a school like this would be narrow indeed were its benefits restricted to those who have immediately partaken of them. "I trust," said Prof. Done in conclusion, "that you will consciously and unconsciously, but without unselfishly, bestow the benefits of your unwearied labors upon all who tread the highway of your lives. With this wish, and my sincere congratulations, I present you your certificates."

A piano selection followed the principal's address, after which Elder B. H. Roberts made a brief address to the students. He spoke principally upon the training of those who are now entering upon the duties of active life. Men and women are needed who are prepared to cope with the problems arising today. Every person should be actuated by a motive to reach the highest round of the ladder. God-fearing men and women are such as are needed in every walk in life. He exhorted the students to be true to the principles and truths that they had learned, that they might be the guiding stars of their youthful careers.

Certificates of graduation were granted to Brigham A. Perkins and Sarah A. F. Price, of Salt Lake, and to Frank K. Seegmiller, of Richfield, and Joseph A. Sill, of Layton. The exercises were brought to a close by a chorus by the college choir.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

The commencement exercises in connection with the Weber Stake Academy were brought off with ecstasy Friday. Never in the history of that institution has a season been attended with so much success in every department as the last; and never has such a successful termination been brought to a season's labors.

The lecture room of the Academy was profusely decorated with flowers and bunting for the occasion, and the exercises were largely attended by visitors and the parents of the students. The whole proceedings were carried out under the able direction of the principal, Dr. Geo. F. Phillips.

The exercises were of a very ambitious nature, and were executed in a manner that reflects the highest credit on the principal and faculty. The theological exercises, under the direction of Bishop G. J. Stevens, and the report on this department by the Bishop, showed it to be in a very satisfactory condition. The essays and recitations and musical numbers given by the students were of an unusually high standard; and the solos rendered by Mr. Chas. Kent and Mr. Joseph Ballantyne, and the musical selections given by Mrs. Squire Coop were exceptionally successful.

In the course of the afternoon Elder Franklin D. Richards addressed the assembly. He spoke at considerable length on the need of the brethren taking an increased interest in the Academy, for it was to that institution that they looked for recruiting the Church with Bishops and Elders. He counselled the people on a proper observance of the Sabbath, and urged them to see that the children attended Sunday school and church. Much could be done at home to place and encourage the children in the path of righteousness, and he impressed upon his hearers to inculcate into the children a spirit of respect for their elders and self-respect for themselves. He vigorously denounced the words of those who spoke of closing the academy, and congratulated the board on their obtaining the services of such a gifted scholar as principal of that noble institution. His address throughout was characterized with earnestness and fervency, and the good counsel he gave greatly impressed the assembly.

The following is a copy of the report read by the principal, which shows the flourishing condition of the institution from an educational point of view.

To President Shurtliff and the Board of Education:

Brethren—It affords me much pleasure to submit to you the following report: The academy opened on September 4th with 148 students, which had increased to 182 at the close of the first term. This number was gradually augmented and finally reached the total of 287, being 30 more than the year previous. The school was divided into five departments, primary, preparatory, intermediate, academic and normal. The usual studies were pursued in the primary, preparatory and intermediate, whilst in the academic and normal the following studies were offered and held:

Grammar, arithmetic, rhetoric, elocution, English literature, logic, philology, bookkeeping, phys. geo., physics, algebra, geometry, Latin, French, psychology, theory and practice of teaching, phonography, type writing, general history and physiology.

In the academic department Prof. Wm. H. Jones was the instructor. In his work Mr. Jones was uniformly assiduous and attentive and the able instructions he gave are amply evidenced in the commendable degree of excellence to which his pupils have attained, as manifested in the examinations recently held. Mr. Jones is a gentleman of experience and of a high degree of culture and is an acquisition to any school room.

In the intermediate department you were exceptionally fortunate in securing the services of Mrs. Marian Burton. The department over which this lady presided was the largest in the academy and taxed the capacity and ability of Mrs. Burton to the utmost. The work done has been of a most satisfactory and thorough nature and Mrs. Burton is to be congratulated upon the efficiency and good discipline to which her department has been brought and which are the best evidences to be adduced of her ability as a good instructress.

In the preparatory department, at the outset the services of Miss West were secured and her work whilst she remained was exceptionally good. Unfortunately the condition of her health did not admit of her remaining in the school room and the services of Prof. A. F. O. Neilson were secured. Mr. Neilson brought with him an experience and culture that have been a source of great satisfaction to the faculty. Under his tuition the preparatory department has progressed rapidly and is one of the best features of the Academy. In addition to his work in the preparatory, Mr. Neilson has rendered valuable assistance in the academic department, teaching the subjects of phonography and general history. I desire to make special mention of Mr. Neilson's work in phonography, which has been exceptionally good. All of the students in his advanced class have acquired a speed ranging from 100 to 128 words per minute. Owing to the division of Mr. Neilson's labor it was necessary to secure the services of an assistant, and a happy selection was made in the person of Miss Mercy R. Burton. Miss Burton is a lady of experience and conducted her classes with great ability.

In the primary department Miss Clara Chambers was in charge. I cannot speak in terms too highly commendatory of the work of this lady and I am well satisfied that I am safe in venturing the statement that no teacher in primary work has excelled Miss Chambers, and very few have attained the same degree. Miss Chambers is a natural teacher and her methods are marked by profound study and originality.

I would strongly urge the board if it is their intention to open school next year to lose no time in re-engaging all of the above-mentioned teachers. The report of the excellent theological work done you have already heard from Bishop Stevens, and the exhibition of the students of the bishop must have been very gratifying to you. Before the advent of the bishop, Hon. Jos. Stanford had charge of the theological department as well as in physical geography, general history and orthography. Mr. Stanford also organized a special class in the art of public speaking which was very successful indeed and productive of much good. Mr. Stanford was compelled to leave us in January owing to his duties in the legislature. In the normal department the work has been well done by those students who took the course. I regret that owing to my other duties and the smallness of the faculty I was not able to give that attention to my classes that they ought to have had; nevertheless the work done was exceedingly good, all things considered. Special classes were convened in Latin, French, geometry, philology and logic, all of which were satisfactorily attended.

While we have no musical department organized as such, yet we were fortunate in securing the attendance of our gifted young brother, Mr. Squire Coop. It is not necessary for me to state anything as to the fitness and aptitude of Mr. Coop. That is well known to you all. I would strongly urge that some steps be taken to secure his services for the ensuing year.

A pleasing feature of our school this year and one which has undoubtedly been of great interest to the public was our Athenaeum meetings. To Mr. Stanford and Mr. Jones special thanks are due for their labors in this connection.

Of course you are well aware of the financial disabilities we were under during the past year and of the very discouraging circumstances surrounding the faculty. I desire to record my testimony to the faithfulness and courage of my assistants. They demonstrated themselves to be noble men and noble women and are deserving of much praise. I would like to state in this connection that it was a matter of regret to the teachers that the visits of members of your board were so very infrequent. A kind word of encouragement is a splendid inducement to work and is as good an incentive to teachers as it is to students, especially under the circumstances of last year; indeed the most assiduous student of all is the teacher.

My associations during the term of my principalship have been of the most pleasant nature and it is with regret that I sever my connection with the academy. Ogden is entitled to and will undoubtedly yet possess one of the best schools in the Territory. I trust that circumstances will soon arise that will relieve the board of the great load they are now carrying.

I would strongly recommend the board to lose no time in deciding upon the re-opening of the academy. A school is in a sense a business and ought to be conducted on a business basis. I visited most of the settlements in the interest of the Academy during the past winter and found that but a very small percentage of the people were cognizant of the full significance of the Church school system. I am well satisfied that if a good faculty were engaged now and the summer spent in advertising the school, that the board would soon realize that treated as a business it would pay. This course was pursued at Provo and the result was an attendance the year before last of over 1,200. These suggestions are prompted by a sincere desire to see the Academy prosper and occupy the leading position which the Weber Stake has a right to expect it shall.

I trust that the spirit of peace and prosperity may attend you, and I beg to subscribe myself,

Yours sincerely,
GEORGE F. PHILLIPS, M.A., Principal.

SANPETE STAKE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

The Sunday school conference of the Sanpete Stake was held in Ephraim on Saturday and Sunday, June 2nd and 3rd, and was attended by Elders T. C. Griggs and J. W. Summerhays of the Deseret Sunday School Union board, who left this city on Friday afternoon, arriving at their destination at 7:30 p.m., and were soon made at home by the president of the Stake, Elder Canute Peterson, and "Grandma" Peterson, his untiring helpmeet. Elder Peterson claims that Ephraim cultivates the largest amount of land, for its supply of water, of any settlement in Utah.

The opening meeting of conference on Saturday at 10 a.m. convened in the cleanly kept and neatly furnished Tabernacle, and was most excellently attended. Stake Superintendent Geo. Christensen very gracefully made the introductory remarks, and some twelve superintendents made interesting reports of certain features of their schools.

In the afternoon a class each from Spring City, Manti North and Manti South wards, and Ephraim, under their respective teachers, gave examples of their class instructions and training, and so touching were some of the answers that tears came to many eyes. The exercises of the day were interspersed by brief remarks and questions by various brethren.

An evening session was held and a lecture on the S. S. teachers' work was given by Assistant Stake Superintendent Noyes, with a recitation by Sister Witbeck. Vocal music instruction in the Sunday School was treated upon by Elders Tolstrup and Griggs.

The two sessions on Sunday morning and afternoon were attended by large audiences, representatives from nearly every one of the 25 schools of the Stake being present. Spirited and instructive remarks were made by Assistant Stake Superintendent Nelson, Elders J. B. Maiben, T. C. Griggs, J. M. Tanner, Superintendent Christensen, J. W. Summerhays, President C. Peterson and Elder H. Beale. The administration of the Sacrament, presentation of S. S. authorities, reports and notices of jubilees, a violin duet, congregational singing, etc., varied the remarks of the brethren. The veteran S. S. worker, Elder John B. Maiben, identified with the pioneer work and organization of the Deseret Sunday School Union, gave appreciative countenance to the proceedings of the conference. Elder J. D. T. McAllister, president of the Manti Temple, with members of the High Council, Bishops and leading men of the Priesthood were in attendance, and their supporting presence and influence aided much in the proceedings of the first annual Sunday school of Sanpete Stake. The genial outpouring of the Holy Spirit was generally enjoyed. The musical exercises of the Ephraim choir were of a most acceptable order; and that quite large body of singers contains a number of very superior voices.

This conference emphasized the fact that Stake Superintendent George Christensen and his assistants are not only energetic and intelligent Sunday school workers themselves, but are supported by a large body of officers and teachers who spare themselves no labor in carrying out their suggestions in endeavoring to make their schools places of most profitable and holy instruction to the youth of that Stake.

Elder Canute Peterson with his social, honest, cheerful disposition, born of his Norseman origin, is a man who blesses and is blessed; who loves and is loved; who respects and is respected, and therefore in his position as presiding officer of the Stake is a power in the Sunday school interest.

EXCITEMENT IN SEVIER.

[Richfield Advocate, June 6.]

Many of the people of Monroe are excited over the discovery of rich gold bearing quartz in the canyon about a mile and a half above town. Several prospects have been located in the Main canyon; a specimen from one assayed $7.55 gold and $10 of silver; from another $11.80 gold, $15 of silver, 35 per cent copper, and 2 per cent manganese. It is now quite certain that the red ore discovered is cinnabar, as it carries so much quicksilver. There appears to be an immense amount of it and mining men say that it is far more valuable than a gold mine. Several men are at work sinking on the gold leads and the cinnabar ledge, and new developments are expected daily. The whole country is being staked off and many farmers have suddenly become miners.

Those who are interested in the Butcher mine in the Clear Creek country are awfully excited over the developments. A great amount of money has been spent in running drifts and tunnels, sinking and running cross cuts, and their joy may be imagined when on Saturday they cut the lead and took out several hundred pounds of what they think is extremely rich gold quartz. One piece weighing 103 pounds is on exhibition at H. P. Hanson's store. August Nielson of Richfield, and McVicker, of Salt Lake, are both making tests and the exact result will soon be known.

On returning from Marysvale last week J. S. Weaver called at our office and showed us a specimen of gold quartz taken from the Horse Heaven Blind lead, which carried gold to the enormous amount of $98,000. The property is bonded by Mr. Lyons, of Marysvale.

There is still an abundance of water in the Monroe canyon. Should the water supply from this canyon increase during the next twenty years in the same proportion as it has in the last twenty, Monroe will have water to spare. When the town was first settled there was scarcely water enough for eleven families; now there is sufficient to satisfy nearly 1,200 people and irrigate 1,000 acres of farming land.

Mr. M. H. Mathews, of Cheyenne, Wyoming, a special government agent, was in the county last week investigating the amount of timber that is being taken by the sawmill men from land on which they have no grant. E. P. Bean and W. L. Parks came under the range of his vigilance and were forced to pay the government the value of the timber they had used.

When the Vermillion people placed a tight dam in the river last week a quantity of fish were left imprisoned in the drizzling stream and pools below, where the river runs through the land belonging to Annie C. Larson. Fish Commissioner B. Carter, City Marshal Peter Hanson, and a dozen other leading citizens went down and had a great time bagging the fish. Mrs. Larson claims that their action was a flagrant violation of the criminal law, but the justices of the peace have refused to entertain her complaint. She has employed an attorney to institute an action for trespass and damage, and a kettle full of fun is in store for those who love the laughable side of legal proceedings.

COLORADO SHEEP NOW.

The following dispatch from Grand Junction, Colorado, shows that a new phase of a complicated question has arisen in the sheep war near the border of that state and this Territory:

It is reported here that about forty cattlemen and cowboys are rendezvousing on Pinon Mesa, west of this city, to take care of the 10,000 head of sheep that were driven on to this range last Saturday. They will begin active work at once and are all thoroughly wrought up over this invasion, and what they call a breach of faith on the part of the owners of the sheep who massed their herds in this city Friday last, giving it out that they would ship to Tennessee Pass, and suddenly rushed them from the cattle yards across the two bridges that span the Grand and Gunnison rivers and on to this range that has been held for twelve years by cattle-growers exclusively. Word was received here last night that the cattlemen occupying the Dolores river in Utah are organizing to keep this bunch of sheep out of that territory, and that it is their intention to shove them right back on to this county, where they have been for some years and where their owners live. The Utah men express a determination to keep these flocks out of that territory and the Colorado men say they cannot remain here.

MEXICAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

The Mexican mission conference convened in the Juarez school house on the 28th of May, 1894, at 10 a. m. Elders Geo. Teasdale and Henry Eyring, of the mission presidency, high counselors and most of the Bishops were present.

The speakers were as follows: Elders Geo. Teasdale, Henry Eyring, Bishops

W. D. Johnson Jr., Geo. W. Sevey, Winslow Farr, J. N. Smith Jr. and Elders Miles P. Romney, Helaman Pratt, A. B. Call, Philip Hurst, Henry Lunt and Wm. R. R. Stowell.

The subjects dwelt upon were home industries, raising our bread, paying our debts, proper training of our children, paying of tithing and the necessity of enjoying the spirit of the Lord in all our labors. The spirit of the Lord was poured out abundantly upon the speakers and hearers, who all feel the necessity of living nearer to the Lord, and becoming as far as possible self-sustaining.

The Y. M. M. I. A., the Y. L. M. I. A., the Primary and the Relief society meetings were held as usual, all of which were attended by Elder Teasdale, who always takes a lively interest in these associations as well as in our Sunday schools. He also highly complimented Bro. J. J. Wolser and the members of the choir on their beautiful singing and general improvement during the last three months.

Elder Brigham Young, of the Council of the Apostles, and Counselor A. F. Macdonald were away on a visit to some of the distant valleys in the Sierra Madre mountains, and several other brethren from here were with them.

There have been several cases of severe sickness, most of which have recovered. Father Edison Whipple and Bro. Prouse have recently died.

MILES P. ROMNEY,
Clerk of Mission.

The first discovery of natural of springs in Wyoming dates back at least twenty-five years, observes the Cheyenne Sun. In 1868 oil was collected from a spring near Poison Spider creek and sold along the Mormon trail for axle grease, and a few years later it was collected from springs near Hilliard in southern Uinta county and sold as a lubricant to the newly opened Wyoming coal mines. But it has only been during the past decade that the oil fields have attracted any considerable attention, and during the past five years that any borings have been made for oil. It is only during the past five years that they have deservedly excited the interest of eastern capital and that wells have been drilled in various places.

The Natrona (Wyo.) Tribune says: Shearing time in this section has about come to a close. At the various shearing pens in this county there have been sheared this spring nearly 800,000 sheep, and there has been shipped from this point over 2,500,000 pounds of wool. About 750,000 pounds of this wool has been sold outright by the producers at prices ranging from 6½ cents to 7½ cents per pound, net.

OBITUARY NOTES.

CHRISTIAN PETER SORENSON.

Died May 21, 1894, at Scipio, Millard county, Utah, Christian Peter Sorenson, after a short illness of five days.

Brother Sorenson was born in Denmark on May 4, 1837; baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, June 4, 1861; emigrated to Utah in 1862; ordained a Seventy, February 23, 1884. He was a faithful and consistent member of the Church, and as a ward Teacher and Sabbath school teacher he was always diligent and faithful, literally dying in the harness. He leaves a wife and nine children to mourn his loss. T.

WILLIAM CRITCHLOW.

Died at Ogden, at 4:30 p.m., June 7, 1894, Patriarch William Critchlow, of bronchitis.

He was born July 8, 1809, in Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, and was aged 84 years and 11 months. He joined the Church in the year 1839, shared in the exodus from Nauvoo in 1846, and arrived in Salt Lake valley in 1851. He has continuously resided in Ogden since that time.

SAMUEL F. LEE.

A correspondent of the NEWS sends the following from Tooele, under date of the 6th inst:

"Samuel F. Lee, one of the best and most favorably known men of this county, departed this life at his home in this city after a lingering and painful illness of three years, on the 31st day of May, 1894. The immediate cause of his demise was a complication of ailments arising out of heart disease and dropsy. His sufferings at times were intense, but through his protracted affliction he exhibited a patience, a hope that was entirely characteristic of the man. His life was a busy and useful one, and his friends were many and his enemies—if he had any—very few. The most of his days were spent in Tooele where he was known for his progressive spirit and peaceful citizenship. He was a native of Missouri, and was born in Clay county of that state July 25th, 1834, and was the fifth child of Alfred and Elizabeth Lee. He came to Utah with his parents in 1849. From that time until 1851 he resided in Salt Lake City, when he removed to Tooele and began laying the foundation of his future home. In 1853 he led to the marriage altar, Miss Ann White, who was his help meet and counselor until the end of his life. During the early Indian troubles he proved himself a valuable man to the settlers in the adjudication of difficulties with the red man. He cultivated their friendship, enlisted their sympathies and secured their confidence, which he always retained. As an Indian agent he did a splendid work and made an effort in that direction that will be long remembered. He possessed considerable inventive genius and was a first class mechanic. He assisted in laying out and organizing the city of Tooele, and with the exception of a few years was a constant resident of that place up to the time of his death. In 1860 he removed to the southern part of the Territory with his family, where he filled a faithful five years' mission, struggling through poverty and privation such as was the lot of the early settlers of that region. His mission over he returned to Tooele and spent the remainder of his days. In 1883 he was elected to the office of alderman of Tooele City and a year later was chosen county selectman. In 1891 he was made mayor of Tooele and filled that office as well as all other positions of honor and trust with benefit to the community and credit to himself. He leaves a wife and eight children to mourn his death. He was the father of eleven children in all but three of them preceded him to the spirit world. He also had twenty-nine grandchildren, twenty-one of whom are living. He was a good citizen, a kind husband and indulgent parent, and his demise has caused sincere sorrow.
