

---

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google<sup>TM</sup> books

<https://books.google.com>

PROPERTY OF THEODORE SCHROEDER
REDFIELD, SO. D.

TRUTH AND LIBERTY

THE

DESERET WEEKLY

Pioneer Publication of the Rocky Mountain Region.

ESTABLISHED JUNE, 1850.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

VOL. XLVIII.—December, 1893, to June, 1894.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH:
PUBLISHED BY THE DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING CO.
1894.

BX
 8901
 D47
 V. 48

INDEX.

PAGE.		PAGE.		PAGE.
About a Title.....	5	Bismark's Birthday.....	485	Commonweal Army, The.....	658
Appreciative.....	11	Battalion Boy, A.....	489	City Cemetery.....	685
At Home and Abroad, 28, 55, 87, 119, 151, 188, 214, 247, 278, 307, 338, 371, 403, 435, 466, 498, 531, 562, 594, 626, 658, 691, 728, 758,	790	Busy Sanpete.....	501	Cripple Creek Horror, The.....	747
Aun Arbor, Letter from.....	37	B. F. Grouark's Death.....	517	Card to the Elders.....	747
Among the Chickasaws.....	45	Bee Convention.....	528	Closing Exercises B. Y. A.....	765
Among Imps and Fairies.....	52	Biographical.....	534	Conditional Possibilities of the Gospel.....	775
Another "Potato Patriot".....	59	Bigler's Biography.....	576	Colonia Pacheco.....	780
An Able Champion.....	106	Better Off in Utah.....	583	Chinese Riots.....	785
After the Holidays.....	122	Box Elder Stake Conference.....	685	City Politics, Corruption in.....	810
Abolish It.....	137	Big Chinese Guns.....	654	Commencement Exercises.....	830
Among the Cherokees.....	141	Be Careful When Spraying.....	675	Colorado Sheep Now.....	832
Auguste Vaillant.....	159	Back Them Up.....	676
An Ancient Religion.....	167	Beaver Items.....	687	Denmark, ...80, 63, 94, 126, 159, 191, 222, 255, 287, 315, 346, 379, 410, 448, 474, 506, 539, 570, 602, 634, 666, 698, 766, 799.
Another Testimony.....	179	Bear Lake Stake Conference.....	697	Drawing in Schools.....	80
Anas and Its People.....	182	B. Y. Academy, The.....	756	Dead, The.....32, 64, 96, 128, 160, 192, 224, 256, 284, 316, 348, 380, 412, 444, 476, 508, 540, 572, 604, 638, 668, 700, 732, 768, 800, 832.
Among the Choctaws.....	185	Bit of Testimony, A.....	773	Depew's Mission to Rome.....	42
Alabama Mobocrats, The.....	204	Brigham Young.....	797	Don't be Rash.....	72
Australian Mission.....	205	Brown, Francis A., Dead.....	804	Dedication of Meeting House.....	83
Around the Camp-fire.....	218	Box Elder Sunday Schools.....	825	Divine Inspiration.....	97
"Abolish the Engrossing Office"	232			Diphtheria in Schools.....	105
As to Statehood.....	266	Carlin Side of It, The.....	7	Don't Warm a Viper.....	107
Another Honest Man Victimized	281	Catholic Triumph, A.....	7	Doctors Disagree.....	132
An Excellent Job.....	294	Colonia Juarez, News from.....	27	Death of William R. Smith.....	148
Arrested for Embellishment.....	306	"Compromise Point".....	29	Death of Sister Smoot.....	165
African Slave Trade, The.....	325	Celestia F. Bacon.....	29	Distant Maoridom.....	172
Among the Indians.....	360	Christmas Thoughts.....	88	Destroying Flamer.....	178
Assassination, The.....	384	Csar a Church Builder, The.....	89	Decidedly Not.....	200
Apache Kid, The.....	387	Christianity in Uganda.....	48	Died in the Harness.....	298
Assailing the Constitution.....	388	Church Theology Class... 48, 88, 117, 142, 177, 206, 238, 270, 298, 340, 394, 426, 465,	490	Don't Kill Too Much.....	327
As to Mexican Mail.....	417	Conundrums.....	57	Day of the "Moss Back," The.....	359
Another Polar Expedition.....	419	Catholics Persecuted.....	75	Delegate Rawlins at Home.....362, 729
Among the Fruits.....	439	Catakills to Wasatch.....	77	Davis Stake Conference.....	370
Akiba and Rebecca.....	447	Cotton and Candles.....	80	Drowned in an Ice Pond.....	380
Aurora, Sevier County.....	449	Catholics Massacred.....	86	Deserted City in Mexico, A.....	390
Anti-Patriotic Association.....	454	Cabinet Ministers.....	98	Deserted City of Dakota.....	402
Age of Electricity, The.....	455	China and France.....	108	Death of Dr. J. J. Murphy.....	444
April Weather.....	458	Choctaw Indians.....	121	Danger Ahead, The.....	453
Annual Conference.....	509	County Boundary Change, The.....	137	Dairy Interests.....	475
Annual Conference, The.....	519	Changes in Palestine.....	138	Death of Jesse W. Fox.....	490
Australian Notes.....	557	Capitol Grounds Report.....	150	Danger Ahead.....	548
Across the Pacific.....	558	Church Cases, The.....	154	Dr. Bredemeyer.....	561
Army of Discontent, The.....	565	Choctaw Conference.....	186	Dispensary Law, The.....	579
America and Samoa.....	582	Capitol Kitchens.....	194	Discourse.....	605
As to Sewage.....	610	Czar's Train, The.....	203	Doing Well.....	675
As to Spraying.....	648, 668	Callowness Extraordinary.....	232	D. A. & M. Society.....	686
At Abingdon.....	657	Out Down the Fees.....	234	Died in Provo.....	700
"Army" Elsewhere, The, 662, 699, 721, 756, 788,	818	Call for Conservatism, A.....	235	Destructive Storms.....	708
"Army's" Champion, The.....	677	Colorado's Magnanimity.....	282	Do Not Advocate Anarchy.....	711
Among the Millers.....	727	Canalgre.....	294	Duty of Parents to Children.....	737
After Fruit Tree Pests.....	778	Conferences of the Church.....	309	Decoration Day.....	745
America, Not Rome.....	776	California Redwood, The.....	315
An American Republic.....	778	Case of Revenue Raising, A.....	324	European Mission, The...29, 114, 246, 287, 320, 362, 385, 417, 449, 540, 571, 598, 631, 668, 673, 752, 795.
"As Men Sow, So Shall They Reap"	825	Christian Amendment, The.....	325	English Language.....	66
		Children and Matches.....	353	End Not Yet, The.....	75
		Conference Notice.....391, 418, 450	450	Each for Itself.....	102
Bright Idea, A.....	10	Chickasaws, The.....	401	Exercising Forbearance.....	104
Bethlehem Today.....	53	Colorado Infamy, The.....	421	Essay on Utah, An.....	109
Beaver's "Cause Celebre".....	58	Choir Self Supporting, The.....	432	Elizabeth Daniels.....	133
Bad Railroad Year, A.....	74	Change is Imminent.....	448	European Situation, The.....	135
Bold Apache Thieves.....	77	Coming Greatness.....	475	Electricity on Street Railways.....	167
Burned to Death.....	127	Churches in New York.....	487	Earthquake in Western Utah.....	197
Bondage of Debt, The.....	139	Coming Change, The.....	501	Education and the Church.....	202
Bostonian's Idea, A.....	199	Corporations.....	508	Estray Bill, The.....	234
Buffalo Bill's Conversion.....	235	Condition and its Cure, The.....	550	Emery Stake Conference.....282, 730
Be Exemplary.....	262	Cruelty in the Cameroons.....	551	Elder's Report From Oklahoma.....	298
Better than Bounties.....	265	California Mission Conference.....	552	Ethics of Trade, The.....	311
Best Sugar Industry, The.....	266	Carbon County Politics.....	561	English in Africa, The.....	328
Boreas in a Rage.....	267	Canada's Comforts.....	571	87 and 56.....	333
Bismarck's Fall.....	285	Canalgre in Dixie.....	571	Emery Notes.....	343
Barton's Death, Elder.....	380	Cent Per Cent.....	582
Blessings Not Appreciated.....	349	Cheap Living in Japan.....	590
Before the Camera.....	382	Cry for State Help, The.....	612
Be in Earnest.....	405	Co-operation in Housekeeping.....	614
Bad Fracture, A.....	436	Cattle and Sheep.....	618
Brave Conquerors, These.....	446	City's Finances, The.....	647
		Canvass the Returns.....	650

	PAGE.		PAGE.		PAGE.
Explanatory Notes.....	358	Good Word for the Indian.....	487	In Arizona and Mexico.....	728
English Game of Politics, The.....	355	Gold Mining in Australia.....	599	In West Virginia.....	781
End of a World, The.....	356	Great is the Mississippi.....	613	Information Wanted.....	797
Exit Gladstone, Enter Roseberry.....	357	Great Northern Strike, The.....	644	Irrigation Schemes.....	810
European vs American Forestry.....	361	Give Them More Light.....	645	Indiana Conference, The.....	814
Earliest Native Utonians.....	370	Growth of Faith and Works.....	669	Joseph the Prophet.....	40
Estray Law, The.....	429	Great Coxey Fizzle, The.....	675	Japanese Advancement.....	327
Events at Ephraim.....	471	God in All.....	706	Jarman and Jarman.....	476
Experiences of a Missionary.....	498	Guilty of Contempt.....	708	Jewish Settlements.....	581
Elders Expelled From Prussia.....	578	Getting Their Eyes Open.....	710	Juab Stake Conference.....	653
Education for a Living.....	583	God in the Constitution.....	811	Jefferson and Credit.....	710
Elder Goddard's Journey.....	609	God Bless Them Both.....	814	Jews in Jerusalem, The.....	779
Earthquake in Greece, The.....	614	Grand Canal, The.....	817
Educational System of Europe.....	624	General Telegraph.....	822	Kanab Stake Conference.....	27, 431, 805
Equal Suffrage, Pro and Con.....	644			King Solomon's Mines.....	102
England Scared About India.....	708	Hint on Health, A.....	40	Kind Words.....	891
Equal Suffrage.....	727	Happy New Year, A.....	70	Kosuth Memento, A.....	453
Earth Reeling, The.....	778	Hints on Butter Making.....	100	Keep the Ball Rolling.....	582
Elders Arrested in South Carolina.....	809	Happily Ended.....	184	Kentuckian, As Seen by a.....	807
Excitement in Sevier.....	881	He Seeks No Change.....	140
		Handling of Milk, The.....	149	Leo and the Bible.....	6
Fragments.....	11	"Handcart" Incident.....	189	Law is a Costly Game.....	6
Finland.....	30	Harrison and Garfield.....	260	Lost Tribes, The.....	8
Fatal Negligence.....	74	Hard on the Stock.....	282
Fortunes in Tea.....	102	"Hedrickite" Defection, A.....	354	Local and Other Matters, 15, 47, 79,
Figures Won't Lie.....	106	His Father's Birthplace.....	375	111, 143, 175, 207, 239, 271, 299,
Father William Probert.....	117	Home Industry.....	379	331, 363, 395, 427, 459, 491, 523,
Farmers and Stockmen.....	137, 140	Holy Ghost Promised.....	385	559, 587, 619, 651, 683, 715, 751,
From a Missionary.....	181	Helping the Poor.....	388	783, 815.
Fatal Snowslides.....	219	His Old Office.....	390	Ladies' Conference at Ogden.....	22
Farms into Swamps.....	219	Home Knit.....	411	Liberty Park's Founder.....	83
Fish Industry, The.....	229	Henry W. Bigler.....	421, 424	Legislature, The, 105, 112, 145, 178,
Fire and Police Bill, The.....	233	Harrisville News.....	438	211, 242, 274, 303, 335, 368, 390,
Farmers' Side of It, The.....	281	Honor to a Veteran.....	439	397.
For Organized Forestry.....	289	Historical Corrections.....	450	Live Volcano, A.....	184
First Utah Boy, The.....	290, 316	Here's the First—Who Will Fol-		Learn in Youth.....	136
Faithfulness in the Priesthood.....	317	low?.....	453	Lone Voyager, A.....	139
From New Mexico.....	328	Helping Themselves.....	476	Lean Attorney's Lien, The.....	171
From Riverdale.....	343	Historical Facts.....	495	Land of Mystery, A.....	187
Finding of Vinland.....	351	Home Industry Fair.....	502	Lost Found, The.....	196
From Harrisville.....	360	Hindoo People, The.....	503	Looking Backward.....	197
First on Record.....	394	Historic Building, A.....	547	Lady Explorer, A.....	235
Fresh Treatment for Anarchists.....	422	His Opportunity.....	611	Look at This!.....	238
From Far-Off Samoa.....	424	Hawaiian Islands, The.....	615	Let's Plant a Tree.....	255
Future Farms, The.....	463, 575, 656	How They Are South.....	688	Letter from Denmark.....	287
From the Friendly Islands.....	469	How Far Can It Be Done?.....	698	Little History, A.....	293
From the Golden Gate.....	470	Hawaiian Mission Conference.....	713	Left and Columbu.....	354
Farmers' Worst Foe, The.....	486	Home Made by Z. C. M. I.....	780	Letters from Mexico.....	394
Fair Clara.....	489	Heart of China, The.....	748	Letter to Rest.....	405
Forestry Association.....	497	Homes in San Juan.....	761	Last of a Generation, The.....	419
From New Mexico.....	552	It Went Smoothly.....	12	Light on Ancient History.....	420
Fearful Accident, A.....	554	Industries, Commerce and Mines.....	529	Louis Kosuth.....	423
From Denmark.....	602	17, 81, 113, 147, 177, 209, 241, 433,		Loat on the Desert.....	484
Fight is On, The.....	612	Ills of Over-eating, The.....	88	Laborers in Tennessee.....	469
From an Octogenarian.....	629	Information Wanted.....	48, 284, 653	Law of Adoption, The.....	541
Freeland Colony, The.....	643	Importance of the Holy Spirit, The		Local Forestry Association.....	593
Fish Lake Once More.....	648	In Oklahoma.....	65	Late Election.....	644
Fifty Years Ago.....	649	Is It Plagiarism.....	76	Liquor Laws in Switzerland.....	645
Fearful Ride, A.....	650	Into Space from Mount Blanc.....	102	Ladies' Meeting.....	667
Fearful Landslide, A.....	663	Idaho Items.....	183	Let Us Reason Together.....	678
Future Happiness.....	670	Items from Wasatch.....	180	Linking of Generations by the Law
Farmers, Save Your Crops!.....	706	Important to Farmers.....	208	of Adoption, The.....	701
Fish and Forestry.....	780	In Memory of a Martyr.....	246	Lynching Figures.....	742
Fearful Wreck.....	795	Immense Profits.....	261	Laborers' Mistake, The.....	806
Father Waugh's Interment.....	797	Its Own Sharp Moral.....	263	L. D. S. College, The.....	829
Faith Brings Blessings.....	801	In the Samoan Mission.....	282
Fertile Valley, A.....	801	Important to the People.....	296	Modern Moses, A.....	4
Fruit, More of.....	811	Interesting Biography, A.....	323	Medical Congresses.....	10
		Inspector of Meats.....	329	Music in Sunday School.....	14
Gratitude in Adversity.....	11	Iowa Conference.....	470	Moroni.....	41
Grand and San Juan Counties.....	72	Industrial Army, The.....	522	Maori Superstition.....	95
Greetings from Ann Arbor.....	101	In New Zealand.....	528, 568	Mormons in Mexico.....	123
Garden of Eden, The.....	104	In the Missionary Field.....	535	Missionary Experience, A.....	137
Golden Ray Sublime, The.....	107	Interview With a Mormon.....	570	Misleading Figures.....	183
Governor's Message, The.....	118	It is Not True?.....	593	Missionary Experiences.....	148
Great Pawnshop, A.....	135	Instinct of Animals, The.....	597	Massacre of Wilson's Party.....	159
Gospel Unchangeable, The.....	161	It Was Fully Justified.....	614	Mechanic's Lien.....	169
Great Coal Field, A.....	186	In Wasatch County.....	615	Most Sacred Ordinance, A.....	169
Gladstone's Resignation.....	238	In the Line of Peace.....	641	Millionaires' Taxes.....	179
Gambler's Trade, The.....	263	Industrials Not Peaceful.....	674	Millions in Paper.....	227
Gavoyere or Palmer.....	281	In the Antipodes.....	677	Meeting of Seventies, The.....	229
Great Canalgre, A.....	288	In Fair Kentucky.....	680	"Muddle," The.....	282
George Washington.....	293	Important to the Saints!.....	682	Manuscript of a Testament.....	238
Governor West's Special Message.....	374	In Oklahoma.....	688	Missionary Field, The.....	269
Great American Brain, The.....	415	Industrialists in Utah.....	712	Mortality in Great Cities, The.....	292
Gathering, The.....	451	718, 788, 753,		Mexico's Agile Enemy.....	323
Grand Secret, The.....	482	786, 816.		Medicine and Faith Cure.....	324

INDEX.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Missouri Expulsion, The.....	326	Our Stockholm Letter, 223, 245, 506, 847	347	Rights of the Priesthood, The.....	381
March Weather.....	340	Our Poultry Department .....	286	Remarkable Crusade, A.....	387
Making Sugar.....	355	On the Society Islands.....	250	Rosebery's Three Ambitions.....	388
Medical Bill, The.....	358	Our Views Too.....	266	Rebellion Ended, The.....	391
Mexican Mission Conference.....	411, 422	One Faith, One Lord, One Baptism.....	257	Remarkable Prediction, A.....	419
Much Ado About Nothing.....	422	Our Poultry Department.....	269, 341	Religious Revival.....	420
Modern Aarons.....	425	Outpost of Zion, An.....	316	Robbing Benjamin.....	421
Medical Law, The.....	429	Ogden Festival, An.....	330	Resurrection of Christ, The.....	450
More About Canaigre.....	455	Oklahoma Conference.....	360	Rinsing the Stomach.....	484
Maricopa Stake Conference.....	476	Our Sunday Schools.....	517	Ripe Four Score, A.....	486
Mexican Land Grants.....	485	On a Locomotive.....	525	Rev. Sidney Allen, Stand Up!.....	516
Missing Parcel, A.....	508	One of the Signs.....	580	Remember the Southern Pacific.....	519
Mercur Gold Field.....	521	Object of This Probation, The.....	687	Revival of Napoleonism.....	551
Mr. Meel's Death.....	572	Our Fruit Tree Pests.....	678	Remember the Sabbath.....	642
Maori Conference, A.....	574	One Solution of the Problem.....	707	Rome's Challenge.....	674
Mexican Colonization.....	578	Our Debt Paying Policy.....	710	Republic of Irrigation, The.....	679
Meat Inspection Law, The.....	579	On Desert and Mountain.....	771	Religious Fanatics.....	744
May Day at Home and Abroad.....	613	One of Our Errors.....	776	Rich County Indeed, A.....	764
Modern Joshua, A.....	616	Oklahoma, In.....	804	Religious Debates.....	774
Modern Shanghai.....	622	Opening in Michigan, An.....	804	Rapidity of French Change.....	776
May Weather.....	625
Meets a Campbellite.....	629	Proceed Legally.....	9	So Far, So Good.....	6
Model Farm, A.....	639	Proper Thing, A.....	10	Sweating Coll.....	10
More Organization.....	640	Prehistoric Towns.....	41	Senate Ishmaelites.....	19
Mob War in Missouri.....	649	Parowan Stake Conference.....	46, 481	St. John's Stake Conference.....	22
Matter of Training, A.....	676	Prospector's Life, The.....	49	St. George Stake Conference.....	22
Mo'mons at Abingdon.....	659	Paying Tithes.....	71	Sweden, 30, 62, 94, 126, 158, 190, 222, 254, 286, 314, 346, 378, 410, 442, 474, 506, 538, 570, 602, 634, 666, 698, 766, 798.
Moral on Journalism, A.....	745	Priesthood Meeting.....	114	Sunday School Conference.....	31, 520
Millard Stake Conference.....	750	Pollak Sugar-makers.....	185	Spiritual Gifts.....	33
Mexico, In.....	812	Preachers' Peculiarities.....	189	San Luis Stake, Colorado.....	35
		Power of Faith, The.....	198	Supreme Virtues.....	39
Norway, 30, 62, 94, 126, 158, 190, 222, 254, 286, 314, 346, 378, 410, 442, 474, 506, 538, 570, 602, 634, 666, 698, 766, 798.		Pioneer Plowman, The.....	218	Shut Out the Reds.....	41
Notes.....	32	Prophets, Seers and Revelators.....	225	Speak Up, Brethren!.....	42
Norwegian Question, The.....	41	Prosperous Providence.....	229	Stockholm Letter, Our.....	63, 109, 443
New Zealand, Is Far Off.....	44	Preacher vs. Scripture.....	230	St. Joseph Stake Conference.....	64
No Apology Needed.....	71	Plea for Statesmanship, A.....	264	Stake Conference.....	69, 393, 546, 712
New Year in Asia.....	89	Poon Weddings in Guatemala.....	273	Specific and Ad Valorem.....	70
Note.....	110	Plea for Utah, A.....	277	Ship Canal, The.....	73
New York Doomed by Stars.....	170	Preferred Creditors.....	291	Spare the Trees, Plant New Ones.....	74
Napoleon III Poisoned.....	200	Paul and Suffrage.....	295	Seasonable Reflections.....	90
"News" Old Home, The.....	203	Philosophical Progression.....	321	Story of a Letter.....	91
News from Mexico.....	205	Public Purses, The.....	400	Studies in Sociology.....	103
New Elders Quorum, A.....	270	Pioneer's Views, A.....	456	Spare the Trees.....	108
Necessary Amusement.....	292	Private Corporations.....	478	Salvation for All.....	134
New Library, The.....	301	Pleasant Gathering, A.....	476	Siberian Railroad, The.....	139
New Bond Issue, The.....	325	Political Prophet, A.....	483	Sunday School Union.....	143, 553
News from Providence.....	353	Passing of Mr. Cook, The.....	519	Shot Through the Heart.....	155
News from Fillmore.....	380	Plymouth News.....	553	Strike Business, The.....	168
Notes from Stevenson.....	410	Pleasant Grove Items.....	572, 697	Senate's "Courtesy," The.....	170
Nabby Young Clawson.....	420	Pioneer Brush Maker, A.....	618	Siellian Revolt, The.....	171
News Items.....	434	Priesthood Meeting.....	641, 773	Social Amenities.....	187
Northern States Mission.....	456	Paying the Debt.....	642	Situation at Almy, The.....	191, 204
New Territorial Laws.....	457, 496	Presentation to the Temple.....	705	State's Disgrace, A.....	200
New Sect, A.....	492	Prompt Action Needed.....	711	Speaking for Themselves.....	203
Not the "Mormon" Way.....	485	Pullman Strike, The.....	744	Some Other Things.....	217
Next Senate, The.....	548	President Brigham Young.....	774	Spraying Orchards.....	217
New School Law, The.....	549	Problem Solved, The.....	777	Succession in the Presidency.....	282
New Lien Law, The.....	559	Prosperous Pleasant Grove.....	781	Supreme Court Vacancy, The.....	284
New Sheep Law, The.....	591	"Petitions With Boots On".....	806	Sleep Near Hawarden.....	284
New Gold Process.....	612	Principal's Report.....	826	Salt Lake to Santa Fe.....	288
North and East, The.....	634	Plague in China, The.....	806	Silk Culture in Desert.....	281
Notable Woman, A.....	643	Question of Economics, A.....	184	Successful Farmer, A.....	282
Notes in Wasatch County.....	673	Question of Taxation, The.....	297	Speculations as to the Future.....	290
Notes on the "Hui Tan".....	681	Question of the Hour, The.....	298	Star Valley Stake Conference.....	297
National Ordinal, A.....	742	Quarrelling About Satan.....	356	Sugar Beet Contracts.....	311
Northern States Mission.....	749	Quorum—Counting Not Patented.....	581	Study Language.....	323
Newest Health Suggestion, The.....	778			Southern Utah.....	329
No More Than Two.....	779	Rawlin's Speech, Delegate.....	9	San Juan Stake Conference.....	353
		Real Revelation, A.....	39	Silver Question, The.....	359
Obituary Notes, 32, 64, 96, 127, 160, 191, 224, 256, 284, 316, 347, 380, 412, 444, 508, 540, 603, 636, 668, 700, 731, 768, 800, 832.		Railroads in Palestine.....	70	Salt Lake Stake Conference.....	365
Opening the Fair.....	43	Russian Visitor, A.....	107	Saints and Secret Societies.....	389
Our Native Forests.....	84	Relief in Temperance.....	127	Snowflake Stake.....	392
Oaks of Brittany.....	94	Read the Cold Figures.....	153	Snowflake Stake Conference.....	411
Our Friends, the Railroads.....	105	"Ripe" Cream and Sweet.....	196	Shocking Accident, A.....	425
Oratory.....	115	Religious Restriction.....	198	Special School Tax.....	431
On Competition.....	164	Returned Elders.....	219, 523, 618, 657, 688, 780, 805	Senator's Scrap Book, A.....	445
Objectionable Bills.....	166	Reclaiming the Walls.....	291	St. George Stake Conference.....	471
On Scripture Interpretation.....	198	Rushing Matters.....	306	Secret Combinations.....	477
Oh, Be Wise.....	200	Richard Malcome Johnston.....	319	Seigniorage Veto, The.....	482
Onida Stake Conference.....	210	Respect for Sacred Places.....	322	Schools at Ogden.....	502
		Renovate the Orchards.....	323	Sharp, the Mobocrat, Dead.....	518
		Rosebery's Visit to Brigham.....	358	St. John's Stake.....	533
		Young.....	358	Samoan Mission News.....	553
		Relief Society Reports.....	362	Sure Word of Prophecy, The.....	578

	PAGE.		PAGE.		PAGE.
Salt Lake Copper Works.....	592	Threatened War, The .....	488	Women Voting.....	43
Senator Puffer's Plan.....	611	Tannery is Going, The.....	500	What the Moon Saw.....	50
Shocking Murder at Murray.....	621	To Protect Labels.....	507	What Money Would Not Buy.....	51
Saved from Death.....	681	Then and Now.....	514	Wayne County's Attractions.....	57
Sanpete Items.....	681	Through Old Mexico.....	573	Warm South Seas, In the.....	68
San Juan Stake Conference.....	638	To the Women of Utah.....	577	Wakefield's Wanderings.....	20, 84
Spraying Fruit Trees.....	636, 672	Two Interesting Meetings.....	680	Wayne County, Again.....	91
Silly Charge, A.....	648	Travels in Old Mexico.....	688	Wrapped in Flames.....	96
Should Be Defeated.....	646	Tooele Stake Conference.....	641	William McKinley.....	130
Solution of the Sewage Problem.....	646	Telegraph's Birthday, The.....	645	Weber Stake Conference.....	149, 598
Southern Summit County.....	649	To Help the Industrials.....	662	"With All Thy Getting".....	153
Sugar Industry, The.....	676	Trapped by Yaquis.....	663	Why Everything Free.....	155
Sunday School Work.....	677	Territorial Items.....	667	Working a Coal Mine.....	165
Sanpete Stake Conference.....	705	The Issues Settled.....	674	War in the Air.....	167
Stone Crop, The.....	707	Three Score and Ten.....	729	Wilhelm and Bismarck.....	199
Statehood Bill, The.....	707	Territorial Fair Supervisors.....	781	Where Money May be Saved.....	201
Stretched the Law.....	707	Time to Act.....	743	We Live and Learn.....	202
Statehood Bill as Amended.....	709	Typical Pharisee, A.....	743	Where the Church Stands.....	230
Stop Aiding Them.....	709	Temperance Movement, The.....	744	With Honeymakers.....	236
Swedish Colony for Utah, A.....	709	Tea Drinking.....	746	Who Will Show Us Any Good.....	249
Sad Fatality, A.....	712	To Utah's Workers.....	764	War Against Anarchy, The.....	291
Sunday School, The.....	714	To Cassia Stake.....	764	Whither Drift We.....	296
Silver in China.....	717	Training of Young People.....	769	Whirled by the Elements.....	384
Some Words on Trade Topics.....	725	Tremendous Floods.....	788	Welsh at Willard.....	361
Sheep Over the Border.....	729	Travels in Mexico.....	799	What Is There in It?.....	378
Servian Coup D'etat, The.....	743	Tremendous Floods.....	788, 819	Women at War.....	422
Smith Heresy Case, The.....	745	Throwing Stones.....	808	Work for the Poor.....	481
Suggestion, A.....	747	Trip in Old Mexico.....	812	Will it Pay.....	487
Some Things and More!.....	761	Unwise Strikes.....	7	Witness for Christ, A.....	498
Sister of the Prophet, A.....	768	Unemployed Resources.....	40	Who Wasted Our Valley?.....	451
Sunday School Conference.....	771	Utah's Statehood.....	170	Wisely Planning.....	471
South Minus Her Slaves, The.....	777	Up in Idaho.....	246	Worthy Example, A.....	481
Stake Conference.....	781	Utah a Beacon Light.....	265	What is a Christian?.....	483
Sevier Stake Conference.....	794	Utah Delegate Speaks, A.....	306	Weather and Crops.....	537, 671, 794, 827
Stevenson's Journeyings.....	794	Utah Sheep in Wyoming.....	330	Warning and a Lesson, A.....	546
Silk Industry, The.....	807	Utah Stake Conference.....	348	What Whew've Done.....	548
Silver the Standard.....	810	Unemployed, The.....	354, 455	Where is it At?.....	549
Soon Die in Prison.....	814	University of Utah, The.....	418, 539	Where the Money is.....	549
Street Scene in Bombay, A.....	816	Up in Rich County.....	424	Who Wants a Home?.....	571
Strikes and Riots.....	820	Utah at the Fair.....	488	Winter Month, A.....	577
Stevens, Elder R. M., Dead.....	826	Uncle Sam's Clerks.....	479	Wholesome and Excellent Plan, A.....	581
Sanpete Stake Sunday School Conference.....	831	Unpublished Poem, An.....	517	What is the Matter?.....	608
		University Changes.....	518	When Revelation is Extinct.....	610
		Uniting Christendom.....	547	Whips Get Paid, The.....	612
		Utah Stake Conference.....	572	Weather and Crops.....	631
		Utah Militia Uniforms.....	577	What a Jolly Time it Was.....	634
		Utah's Industrial Army...597, 625, 667, 689, 698.		Water Cycle, A.....	650
		Utah and Irrigation.....	678	Wasatch Stake Conference.....	672
		Utah Statehood Bill.....	714	Wasatch County Items.....	697
				What is She?.....	750
		Van of the Exodus, The.....	9	What is Spreading, The.....	770
		Void Election, A.....	42	Watchman, What of the Night?...	798
		Very Bad Joke, A.....	105	War, or no War?.....	808
		Vernon Ward Conference.....	146	Wellington Caves, The.....	814
		Verily, Speech is Silver.....	233
		Various Ideas of Hell.....	386	Young Plant but Sturdy, A.....	75
		Veteran's Anniversary, A.....	432	Y. M. A. Circular Letter.....	123
		Ventilation.....	584	Young Ladies' Training Class.....	219
		Veteran's Recollections.....	616	Yaqui Indians, The.....	263
		Various Kinds of Conspiracies.....	746	You Take Your Choice.....	611
		Wm. B. Smith.....	9	Y. L. M. I. A. Conference, The...	657
		Woman Suffrage Petition, A.....	10	Y. M. C. A. Jubilee.....	676
		Water, Water Everywhere.....	26	Yangtze Kiang, The.....	685
		Western News Items, 28, 60, 92, 124, 156, 188, 220, 252, 283, 312, 344, 376, 408, 440, 472, 504, 536, 568, 600, 632, 664, 696, 728, 767, 796, 828		Y. M. M. I. A. Conference.....	697
				Young Ladies' Conference, The...	782
				Zuni Indians, The.....	494
				Zion's Sunday Schools.....	772

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

Truth and Liberty.

No. 1.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, DECEMBER 23, 1893.

Vol. XLVIII.

TRUE ECONOMY.

Discourse Delivered at the Sixty-fourth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday Morning, October 8, 1893, by PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

It is with a feeling of great dependence and weakness that I arise before the congregation this morning to speak. I took a severe cold a couple of weeks ago and have not recovered from it yet; therefore, unless I am blessed of the Lord I shall possibly not be able to make myself heard, or to occupy much time.

I have felt blessed in listening to the instructions which have been given by the brethren who have spoken during this Conference, and I can bear my testimony to the counsels which they have given and the instructions which have proceeded from them by the inspiration of the Almighty. I hope that the same good Spirit which has attended our meetings so far will continue throughout today, that all who hear may rejoice in the manifestations of the mercy, kindness and love of our Heavenly Father toward His children. We have been greatly blessed of our Father in our spiritual labors as well as in our temporal affairs. We have heard a little during Conference about the hard times that are being felt throughout the land; but if all the truth were told, I believe it would be found that the people of Utah have felt the effects of the hard times about as little as, if not less than any other portion of our country, or of the world.

Not long ago one of the brethren, who lived out in the country, came to the President's office and said to President Woodruff, in substance: "I have made up my mind to go back to the old country and visit my relatives. It is a long time since I was there, and I have come to the conclusion that I will go back once more and look at them, and see what I can do before I get too old." The President remarked, "Well, if you can afford to do this in these hard times, I don't see that there can be any objection to it." "Why," he said, "President Woodruff, I live out in the country and I don't know anything about hard times." He then went on to say that the people out in the country did not feel the hard times like those in the city. They lived from the products of their farms; they had their little flocks and herds; they reaped what they had sown, and gathered what they had strewn, and they were about as comfortable now as they had ever been. It did not appear to him, he said, so long as the Lord blessed the soil and the flocks and the herds, that hard times would come very near to them. These were about the sentiments expressed by this good brother. He said he had plenty of means to go and visit his relatives. Then, said President Woodruff, go and be blessed. He has been, and I think he has returned. This expresses, I believe, pretty nearly the condition of a great many of the Latter-day Saints throughout Utah and elsewhere. We heard yesterday some statistics, given by Brother Abraham H. Cannon, concerning the people in the country who had been prudent and taken care of that which the Lord had given to them. He said that eighty-six per cent of the people living in the country were possessing their homes and their farms unencumbered, while only a portion of the remaining fourteen per cent had their places so much encumbered that they were in danger. This speaks very well for the condition of the Latter-day Saints outside of the more populous centers. I would that we could say the same, in every particular, with regard to the Latter-day Saints who live nearer the business centers of the Territory. Yet I do not think that the statistics show the precise condition of the Latter-day Saints in this regard. In Salt Lake City and county, or in Weber and other counties, where it is shown that a larger percentage of the people are living in mortgaged homes and in rented houses, we must bear in mind that within the last few years a large number of strangers have come amongst us to live, and I think likely a large percentage of this class of people are living in rented houses, and a large percentage also of those who have speculated in lands have been under the necessity of mortgaging them in order to pay their obligations. I think if the real facts were known it would be found that there is no class of people, in the business centers, that are so well provided for, or so free from debt, as are the Latter-day Saints. If this is not so, it is very plain to me that they have not very carefully observed the good and wise counsels which have been given to them from time to time by their Presidents and Bishops; for the counsel to our people from the beginning has been to live within their means, to be economical, and as far as possible self-sustaining. If we have not followed this counsel and are suffering from the consequences of disobedience to it, I trust that we will now profit by the lesson, and in the future seek more faithfully to carry out this wise counsel than we have done in the past.

We heard from Brother Merrill his opinion with regard to going into debt. He believes it to be an unwise thing for individuals to run in debt, having to pay large sums of interest, which must come out of their labor, or the product of their soil, or from their flocks or herds, or from their business; for the money which they receive is not that which in itself produces the interest which they have to pay, but it is from the proceeds of their business or toil that they must get the means with which to pay interest on the borrowed money; unless, perchance, they can borrow money at a low rate of interest and then loan it to a less fortunate brother for a higher percentage. Then he has to earn it somewhere. It has to be produced from some source. Money itself will not produce its increase; it will always remain the same. It does not sprout and grow; it does not produce seed or fruit; but remains the same. If they cannot convert it into some other property that will be productive, it is a dangerous thing for them to borrow and obligate themselves to pay interest. In my younger days I followed the example of President Woodruff. I have heard him say that in former years he had never borrowed a dollar—he had studiously avoided signing notes, and had never run in debt; but of late years he has had to sign a great many pieces of paper. He commenced a few years ago, when the Government of the United States seized our property, and it became necessary for us to pay over money in lieu of real estate and other property which had been disposed of, the proceeds of which had been used in the regular business of the Church. Either we had to borrow money to pay for that or the courts would commence proceedings to disturb the titles of property that had been sold and passed into the hands of so-called "innocent parties." We had to raise several hundred thousand dollars at that time, and then it was that President Woodruff began to sign notes. And from that day to this we have had to keep borrowing more or less, in order that we might meet our obligations, pay interest, help to complete the Temple, and do what other things were needful. The Presidency of the Church have had to do this. Of course, the Church has been behind them, because it is the Church that gives to them the influence they have. We do not ignore this; we cannot ignore it. The influence they may have among the people is due to your faith in them and to the position they occupy in the Church. Therefore, they receive what of credit, influence and honor they may have from God and from this people.

We started the sugar works here a few years ago. Why? Because when we came to reflect about it we saw that we had reached a point in our history where there was not a single enterprise of a public character that was calculated to give employment to our people. The railroads had gone into the hands of outsiders, as we term them, and instead of their pursuing a wise policy, they abandoned the course that had been pursued by their predecessors, and discharged the Mormon people from their service, brought strangers from the east and west, and gave them employment. I will relate here a remark that I heard Superintendent John Sharp make about one year after the change in the policy of the railroads. He said to me and to others that within a year there had been more railroad wrecks and more destruction of railroad property on the Utah Central than there had been before from the time the last rail was laid in this city on that line from Ogden. Why? Because of the recklessness on the part of those who had been employed; while those who had been faithful to the interests of the road had been discharged. If you will take the pains to look up the question in the newspapers of that period, you will see that this statement of Superintendent Sharp will be verified by the accounts of wrecks and destruction of property in them. The government of the city has also been turned over. Every man that was suspected of having the least color of Mormonism about him was discharged from the service of the city, and strangers were imported and given work. There was not a thing being done of a public character calculated to give employment to the Latter-day Saints in any direction; and we began to feel that there was a responsibility resting upon us which required something to be done, in a small way at least, in the direction of giving employment to our people. So we started the sugar works, although few people had confidence in the success of the undertaking. Some of our best men lacked confidence in it. Men of means were very chary about it, and did not feel to take any very active part in attempting to start it. There appeared to be a feeling of mistrust on the part of the people generally. It seemed as though all the people lacked confidence in the enterprise, fearing it would be a failure, and if they put their money in it, it would be lost. On the back of all this, "hard times" came on; scarcity of money began, and it became a very difficult matter indeed to continue the enterprise to success. Therefore, some of the leading brethren felt obligated to raise means in some way to carry it on and save that which had already been expended upon it. The result was, we had to borrow very large sums of money, for which, until the present, we have had to pay interest. What for? For any benefit to us? No. Who for? For the Territory and for the inhabitants of these valleys; for every dollar that is saved here helps to build up the country and benefit the people. Now there is a prospect of this enterprise becoming a success. They are manufacturing over fifty thousand pounds of sugar daily out of beets that are produced in these valleys by the Latter-day Saints, giving not only employment to farmers, but to the children or widows and to many of the poor among the people. The farmer today who successfully raises the sugar beet is getting from $60 to $90 an acre from his farm that heretofore only yielded from $10 to $25 an acre. This is a benefit to the people and to the country. Yet we have had to bear this burden, and we will have to do it, I presume, unless the people will rally to our help for a year or two, until these works are able to carry themselves, pay the principal and interest, and by and by begin to pay dividends on the means invested. And it is bound to do it, because it is a home industry that the people will learn by and by to appreciate as a blessing, as well as a necessity. When this proves to be a success and a blessing to the Latter-day Saints, the people of Cache Valley probably may begin to consider the propriety of doing something of the kind, and perhaps also those of Weber and this county, until we can supply all the sugar that the people of the Territory can consume, and perchance have a little surplus to ship abroad.

We were told yesterday by one of the speakers that just so long as we consume more than we produce, as individuals or as a people, just so long we would continue to grow poorer, until by and by we would come to the bottom. This is true. We must produce as well as consume. It follows upon natural principle, and it is as plain as anything can be, if you do not earn as much as you consume, there will be a time—and it will depend upon just how much more you consume than you produce as to how long that time will be put off—when you will possess nothing in the world, will be in debt to your neighbors, and dependent upon charity. But the moment you begin to produce a little more than you consume, that moment you are able to lay up something and begin to get rich. This country has been named Deseret—the honey bee; and we all well understand the character of this little insect. It usually gathers more than it consumes, and lays aside a little. So should it be with the bees of the hive of Deseret. If we only earn fifty cents a day, we should try our utmost to live upon forty-five, and lay five cents away for "the rainy day." That is true economy, and was the counsel of President Brigham Young from my early recollection till the day he passed away. It has also been the counsel of his successors, and of all the leading members of this Church. Save something; and when you have a surplus, use that portion of it that is needful for the building up of the Kingdom of God, for the spread of the truth, for the gathering of the poor, for the building of temples, and for the accomplishment of the purposes of the Almighty. In this way the promises that the Almighty has made to us will be fulfilled; for it is His promise to make us the "richest of all people," provided we will seek first those riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto us, and only in this way is it possible for this promise to be fulfilled. While we spend more than we gain we never can become the "richest of all people," neither in spiritual nor in temporal things, but we will be the "tail, and not the head;" we will be the poor of the earth, not the rich; we will be the borrower and not the lender, and they who control wealth will be our masters and we their servants. Now, let every man, woman and child among the people try to be producers in some way.

I am going to tell something about my own family. You will pardon me perhaps for bringing family affairs before this vast congregation, but it may illustrate the condition of some of the rest of you, and it may be a lesson to some of us—a lesson perhaps that does not need to be taught to many; but I am fearful that there are far too many of us that need to be taught it. I said to some of my folks some time ago, when money seemed to be plentiful in the country and goods were cheap, and it was so easy to run to Z. C. M. I. to buy everything that was needed, that there was scarcely anything that we ate or wore that we did not have to buy. How is this? I asked. "I can remember," I said, "when you used to knit my stockings and stockings for the children and yourselves; but now every stocking has to be bought and the money paid for it. And these stockings are not made in Utah. Our people are not employed in the manufacture of them. We are building up somebody else away over in the east, and we are wearing their shoddy, giving them employment, and letting our own people go without. I do not like this. I will get some yarn from some of our factories here, if you will go to knitting again." Well they have gone to knitting stockings, and I hope the little ones will be taught to knit their own. When I was a little boy, in Nauvoo, my mother used to have some difficulty in keeping track of me. I used to like to go off and play with the boys. So my mother conceived the idea that it would be a very nice thing to set me to knitting; and she set me a pattern of a suspender and showed me how to do it, and I knitted myself a pair of suspenders. I then learned how to knit, and being a little handy at it perhaps, although I always drew the thread pretty tight (the suspenders did not stretch much after I knit them), she started me on stockings. So I learned how to knit stockings. The Bishop the other day was complaining about our boys playing from morning till night. They climb trees, play marbles, tear their clothes and wear out the knees of their pants, destroying everything and saving nothing. They ought to be taught how to work, to be economical, and to save something, that when they get old they will not depart from the right way. It is bad policy to let children run around all the time with nothing to do but play, from morning till night. Let the boys be taught habits of industry, and teach the girls how to make their own dresses and keep house, and thus learn to do what is needful for themselves, without having to hire somebody to do it for them. I believe in this policy. It is true economy. It is necessary to do this in order that our children may not grow up in idleness and in unbelief of the Gospel, for an idle brain, it is said, is the devil's workshop; and if there is any better workshop for his satanic majesty than the idle brain of a little boy, I would like to know what it is. Neither boys nor girls ought to be left idle, but should be taught to do something useful as well as ornamental. What if their parents are wealthy and can well afford to feed and clothe them without labor? If you have millions of wealth, so much that you do not know what to do with it, you could not do a more foolish thing than to rear your sons and daughters in idleness; for as sure as you do this, they will grow up to squander the wealth you leave them, and curse you, perhaps, because you did not leave them more. Teach them how to work, and to be industrious, though you may be rolling in wealth, and they will grow up to respect you, and your name will go down from generation to generation, through your posterity, in honorable remembrance. The secret by which Joseph the Prophet governed the Saints, as he once said, was that he taught them correct principles and they governed themselves. It is only the sick that need a physician; it is only the criminal that needs the penalties of the law. Honest and honorable men need no officers of the law, no policemen, no justices of the peace, no courts, no lawyers. They live above crime, beyond the reach of the law. The law is not made for them, except to protect them from the criminally disposed. If every man was taught to do right, and did right, there would be no use for courts and for laws such as we have today. It is only because people will not do right that these things are needful, and that we have expensive forms of government and expensive officers to administer and execute the law. Latter-day Saints ought not to be so. They ought to know how to do right, and then do it; and they ought not to have to be prompted or urged to do it, either by the chastisement of God or by the counsels of His servants. Well, says one, if we all do right, then what? Will we all prosper? Yes, we will all prosper. In temporal things? Yes, in temporal things, and in spiritual things. But we may not be without our trials even then. For it is said in the scriptures "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." There are several examples of this in the scriptures. One of them was the eleventh son of Jacob—Joseph. He was a rather remarkable little boy, and his father loved him, and was a little partial towards him, perhaps because he was the firstborn of his beloved Rachel, and Rachel was dead. Jacob erred perhaps a little in the partiality that he showed to Joseph on this account. He may have made a mistake there like some other parents do when they make a favorite of one of their sons. This is a mistake, no matter who the mother of the boy is. Whenever a father begins to discriminate in favor of one son as against another, it begets jealousy in the hearts of the brothers, and possibly hatred toward their fathers. It is a dangerous thing to do. Because Jacob erred somewhat in this matter, the Lord gave to Israel a law on the subject. (Deuter. 21: 15-17.) The Lord endeavored to correct the evil that grew out of what Jacob did in his favoritism, by giving a law on this subject to govern the people thereafter. But Joseph was not only favored of Jacob; he seemed to be favored of the Lord also. He might have been a little better than the rest. We cannot help being a bit favorable towards those that are better than others. Of course, merit should be rewarded everywhere, but we should be just. The Lord favored him, for He had a work for him to do. Like some others that have been reserved to come forth in other dispensations to do a special work, Joseph, no doubt, was reserved to come in his generation to accomplish the mission that he had to perform. But though he was chosen for this work and especially favored of the Lord, he might have felt for a long time as though the Lord had turned His back upon him and did not love him. For the Lord suffered his brethren to persecute him. They became jealous of him and sought to destroy him; but one of his brothers repented of the cruel thought of killing him and persuaded the others to sell him to strangers, that they might not be guilty of his blood. So they sold him, and he was carried to Egypt, and there the Lord fulfilled His purposes concerning him. At first Joseph had great hardships to go through. He was wrongfully and wickedly accused by Potiphar's wife, because of which he was thrust into prison. If he had been like some of us, he would have said, "If the Lord is going to treat me this way, there is not much reward for virtue." That is the way some of us feel when we are pinched a little with poverty, or sickness, or other misfortune. We begin to murmur against the Lord, and feel that He has forsaken us and is not as good to us as we merit. And we withdraw our affection from the Lord. Joseph might have done this, because he had many occasions of trial. He might have felt in his heart that the Lord was not just, not merciful, and not mindful of His servants; for he seemed to have had some reason for feeling that way. But the Lord saw the end from the beginning. Joseph did not; but he had faith in God, and put his trust in Him; and by and by the Lord brought out what He intended, and made Joseph the savior of his father's house as well as of all Egypt.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps on the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never-falling skill,
He treasures up His bright designs,
And works His sovereign will."

This is the way in which the Lord often deals with the children of men, and it is not for us to judge Him. We should not complain or murmur when we have afflictions and trials to pass through, or when He chastises us. We should think all the more that we are the loved of God, and that He is feeling after us for our good; to humble us perchance, and to keep us in the right way.

Job was another example. Job was a righteous man, perfect in all his ways. There were none like him in all the earth. Satan observed this, and he appeared before the Lord, and the Lord said, "Whence comest thou?" Satan replied, "From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it." And the Lord said unto Satan, "Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil." Ah! says Satan, but "hast not thou made an hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? Thou hast blessed the work of his hands, and his substance is increased in the land. But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face." The Lord said, "Behold, all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thine hand." So a short time after this a messenger came unto Job, and said:

"The oxen were plowing, and the asses feeding beside them:

And the Sabeans fell upon them, and took them away; yea, they have slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The fire of God is fallen from heaven, and hath burned up the sheep, and the servants, and consumed them; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The Chaldeans made out three bands, and fell upon the camels, and have carried them away, yea, and slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, Thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house:

And behold, there came a great wind from the wilderness, and smote the four corners of the house, and it fell upon the young men, and they are dead; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

Then Job arose, and rent his mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worshipped,

And said, Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither; the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

With all this, Job was not shaken in his integrity. He "sinned not, nor charged God foolishly." And Satan appeared again before the Lord and said unto him again:

"Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil? and still he holdeth fast his integrity, although thou movedst me against him, to destroy him without cause.

And Satan answered the Lord and said, Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life.

But put forth thine hand now and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face.

And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold, he is in thine hand; but save his life.

So went Satan forth from the presence of the Lord, and smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his feet unto his crown.

And he took him a potsherd to scrape himself withal; and he sat down among the ashes."

Then his friends came to comfort him, and they began to upbraid him because of something he had done, which had brought upon him the destruction that had befallen him. But Job knew that his heart was right, that he had not sinned, and that he had not denied God in his heart. Therefore, he bore the upbraiding of his friends with all patience; and when his wife came to him and upbraided him for his patience and for his humiliation, and called upon him to curse God and die, he said unto her,

"Thou speaketh as one of the foolish women speaketh. What? shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?"

This shows the integrity of Job. Here is an example for you and for me. He did not curse the Sabeans for carrying off his cattle, nor the fires of heaven for consuming his flocks, nor the winds of heaven for destroying his habitation and children. He did not swear and blaspheme and deny the Lord because of this. But he said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." "Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither." And further he said, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

As I understand, here is exemplified the principle that should underlie all the faith, the hope, the charity, the love, the labor, the desire of all mankind—that they will serve God, no matter what may befall them. Though they suffer imprisonment, though they suffer persecution, though they suffer poverty, though God should try them to the very core, and put them to the utmost test to prove their integrity, they should say like Job, "Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither; the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Thus magnify God, love Him with all thy heart, might, mind and strength; then love our neighbor as ourselves; that when trials come we may endure them and not complain, but wait until God shall develop His purposes. Then we will see that there is no love like that of God for His suffering children; there is no mercy so broad, no purpose so grand, and great and noble as the purpose of God concerning His children. If we will do this, we will learn this eventually and we will bless God with all our hearts; which may God grant, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

Written for this Paper.

A MODERN MOSES

[CONTINUED.]

SALT LAKE CITY, Dec. 1st, 1893.

The Pioneers camped the first night in the valley on a small grass plat by the side of City Creek, near or on the ground where the Templeton hotel stands. From there they moved to what is now known as the Old Fort block or Pioneer Square. Here they built their houses, joining each other with the backs out, so as to form the fort. As completed, this fort was made some of logs, others of adobes. The roof was covered with earth. The floors were earth as well. Into these the people moved with all they had. It was said that the bed bug moved in also.

How would you young people like to live in one of those houses? Well, you do not need to. It was enough for your parents to have to. As these Pioneers lived and built, so did most of the people live and build in making most of their settlements. As the people arrived in Utah they were distributed into the different settlements. Those that had kindred already here the incoming ones would go to; others that had none would go where the forts were weakest. All the settlements seemed to be built almost simultaneously, not one at the expense of the other.

To give President Young's travels among his people would fill a large book. We can only give a few. He would set a day, invite those that he wanted with him, and start on that day, rain or shine. A trusty few would go with him as guards. The settlements would be advised by mail that he would be there at a certain time—and he was there. The people would turn out en masse to greet him; if there was music, the band at the head of a cavalry column would meet him. The people would greet him with songs when he entered the town or fort. There would be people ready to take him and his company to their houses where man and horse were provided with the best in the land.

After the meal, the meeting house was sought to hear him, Heber C. Kimball, George A. Smith, Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon, Joseph F. Smith, with many others, discourse on what should be done in this life to be saved in the other. These talks to the people were mostly practical—how to build, how to sow, and how to reap. The people always felt well paid—and such a hand-shaking, when those old Pioneers met, was a great sight, with remarks, "I am so glad to see you, Brother Brigham! Haven't seen you since I met you at Winter Quarters," etc. Joy would be in every face.

After meeting, hitch up, go to the next place—to witness the same scene, and to hear the blessings that acquaintances showered on each other was refreshing to behold. Indeed it was a pleasure trip to be with him. He would travel forty to fifty miles and preach from two to three sermons a day.

These trips he made up to his death. In the evening, if there was no meeting, there was nothing that pleased him so well as to have some old tried friends come to see him and remind him of some hard times they had had together, or refer to some funny occurrence in their travels. On one of his trips he invited an old friend, a doctor. When asked what he brought him along for, the President laughed and said the doctor was a good hand to make soup. When they arrived at Chicken Creek it was a little high to ford. Ephraim Hanks stripped some of his clothing off and proceeded to carry the people across. When he got in the middle of the stream with the doctor, both went down under the water. The doctor waded out, looking like a drowned rat. All laughed, but none so hearty as President Young. When the doctor ran up to him, saying, "Brother Brigham, he did that on purpose;" the latter said, "Why of course he did; don't you know Eph Hanks said that he had stepped on a rock?" There never was a rock in the creek at that place.

President Young was foremost in everything. To him is to be given credit for the many shade trees that we now enjoy in Salt Lake City. He brought the locust seed from the states, and planted that forest in the park. From there they were transplanted to the sidewalks. Everywhere you look you see his works. Roads had to be built throughout the valley, also to the timber in the canyons. Lumber had to be sawed, by hand first, then by the saw mills that had to be hauled from the states. It cost money and labor to do all this. He built the grist mill which now stands in the park, a monument to his industry.

While speaking of him as a leader, we do not forget that there were a host of wheel-horses that pulled with him. What a grand, brave people all these old timers were! There was nothing impossible with them. While these settlements had to be made, and forts built, there were others out preaching, still others going back each succeeding year to bring those up that wanted to come. The Temple was started, the rock had to be hauled on wagons twenty miles; the labor of this was immense. One, two or three rocks was a load for an ox team, of from two to four yoke of cattle, each taking from three to five days to make the trip—the men camping out all the time, rain or shine. These rocks had to be cut on all sides. The labor of cutting can be glanced at only. It took a good cutter to dress one square foot a day. When you look at that structure it seems nothing short of a miracle that it was ever built, under all the adverse circumstances that the people had to encounter. Yet it stands there a monument to Brigham Young and his people. There are three other temples, namely, the Logan, the St. George and the Manti, that were built the same way.

While all this labor was going on there would come from California reports of rich gold strikes in the mines, accounts of the wonderful climate—how easy it was to get rich there; but, nothing daunted, the masses of the people went on toiling and building as though there was no gold wanted. Some of course went and formed some of California's best citizens and some got wealthy. This is not to be wondered at with the training of industry and economy of Brigham Young that they had. Many of those that remained here grew rich as well, besides helping to do all that was done.

I have traveled some among the human family, have read history, sacred and profane, but nowhere have I seen, or read of, so good a people as these. When you take all their labors, with their good works into account, there has never existed the like on earth!

President Young's Indian policy was the same as William Penn's—always kind and positive with them. There were some Indian wars, but they were of short duration. We were with President Young when he and Col. Irish, the superintendent of Indian affairs, went to make a treaty with the Indians at Spanish Fork. It was just after Black Hawk had been on the warpath in Sanpete. The Indians were all gathered together. Col. Irish made them a speech, told them that he wanted them to move on the Uintah reservation and told them what he would do for them.

Kanosh got up and made a great speech. He said, in part: "If we do go to this reservation how long will we be there before we are wanted to move on? And how do we know whether all these promises will be fulfilled? There sits a man (pointing to Brigham Young) that we will believe. He has never lied to us. Let him say whether all these fine promises will be fulfilled, then I and my people will be ready to go."

President Young vouched for Col. Irish. Black Hawk was so mad that he took to bleeding at the nose—so much so that it was feared by some that he would die. By others it was hoped that he would; but he lived and went to Uintah reservation. That was the last war that he engaged in. Utah has had less Indian troubles than any other territory, just on account of the kind treatment of the reds by the people.

The great exodus of 1857 showed the power and determination of Brigham Young. This was the time that Johnston's army was sent to Utah on the strength of a lot of misrepresentations made by some of the government officials then here that the Mormons were in rebellion. He called his leading men together. They soon decided to move on south, where, no one asked or seemed to care, so that they got away from another mob that was coming against them. Orders were sent to the settlements to prepare to move. Almost simultaneously everybody prepared to do so. This time they had more wagons to move with and they had more to move. We came from Lower California with the mail. It seemed to me there was one string of teams, droves of cattle, horses, and sheep between Parowan in the south to Salt Lake City. After all the wagon covers had been exhausted, cattle hides and thin boards were used to cover the wagons. All the lumber that could be got hold of was made into boxes to cache the wheat in. After the houses were emptied, kindling was placed therein so that they could be fired quick and easy.

When Salt Lake was thus prepared, President Young sent for John Kimball, who was not a Mormon, but owned a house and store and asked him what the property was worth. Kimball asked him what he wanted it for. Brigham told him that when the city would be burned his house would also be burned and he did not want him to lose. Kimball said, "if that is all, let them burn; if you can afford to lose yours, all right; mine can go the same." Brigham said, "we found this a bleak, barren place and by the help of the Lord, if we have to leave, we will leave it as we found it."

A commission was sent here who found the reports false. All returned to their homes. The army was quartered at Camp Floyd for a few years until the Southern war came on, when they were sent there.

That Brigham Young was a thorough American there never was a doubt. On his arrival in the valley he caused the American flag to be floated on Ensign Peak. This country then belonged to Mexico. The people soon after organized and asked for admission into the Union. When Abraham Lincoln was assassinated the news came by night, and as Brigham's rule was not to be disturbed after he retired, he did not get the news until 9 o'clock next morning. I repaired to his office just before that time so as to be there when he came in. George Reynolds, his secretary, had all the correspondence ready with the paper containing the unwelcome news. The President came in and asked the news. Mr. Reynolds said it was bad news, at the same time picking up the paper and reading the dispatches. A feeling—a deep feeling, overspread President Young's countenance. He clasped his hands behind him and when the reading had ended, he exclaimed: "My God, what is our country coming to!" He walked the floor for some time and when he did stop he gave orders for his flag to be half-masted; the theater performance for that night was ordered postponed, the Tabernacle was draped and those that were then here will remember a meeting in the Tabernacle was held, to which all classes were invited, to condole with Lincoln's family and the nation.

With all my acquaintance with him, public or private, I never heard from his lips anything but praise of the Constitution and institutions of America; but he had a thorough contempt for politicians.

You that have lately eaten a good Thanksgiving dinner, and will have another of Christmas, should be really thankful. Just contrast your chicken or turkey dinner with that of the Pioneers made out of the first wheat grown in Utah. Bishop Leonard Hardy told me it was a great feast prepared by the ladies of the Fort. The wheat was ground in coffee mills. Mrs. Hardy had some white cotton cloth which they washed the starch out of and then bolted the ground wheat through that. The Bishop said it was a feast of rejoicing—a feast of love.

Build a monument to the great man, with the names of the first company cut in a marble slab, so those that run may read! Provide slabs for each of the great good men that so ably assisted him, so the world may know—the generations yet unborn may know, whom to thank for the settlement of these peaceful vales! Set the monument on the hill at the head of Main Street so all can see! This is the duty of his children. This is the duty of the people of Utah!

H. J. FAUST.

ABOUT A TITLE.

The case of Patrick Phelan et al vs Jane W. Romney et al having been submitted to Chief Justice Zane on Wednesday afternoon, his Honor took the matter under advisement, and this morning rendered his decision, which is an interesting one as affecting the question of surveys and boundaries.

The plaintiffs alleged that on June 4, 1892, they were the owners of a portion of lot 8, block 58, plat A, Salt Lake City survey, and that the defendants entered upon the same and ousted them, and have since wrongfully withheld the same to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $5000. Hence plaintiffs prayed for the restitution of the property, with the damages.

The Judge said that this was an action to recover the title to a piece of ground described in the complaint as being 1 27-100 feet, fronting on Second South street and extending back 46 and a fraction feet. The plaintiffs owned the corner on which the White House hotel stands and their lot extended west on East Temple street 115 and a fraction feet. The defendants' lot was immediately west, and both parties claimed this piece of ground in dispute. The difficulty was to ascertain the boundary of the White House lot on the east. If the line indicated by the front of the White House building was taken as the true line of the lot, then the plaintiffs substantially got their 115 and a fraction feet without the piece of ground in controversy. On the contrary, if the line were ascertained as claimed by the city engineer some two or three years ago, in a survey and from the monuments established by him at that time, and those were true monuments and true lines from which to ascertain the eastern boundary of this lot 8—then the plaintiffs' lot extended back sufficiently to include the piece in dispute.

The engineer made a survey, it seemed, some three or four years ago, and the court was not advised as to precisely the basis of that survey. It appeared that its initial point was the United States corner, established at the corner of the Temple square, and with reference to that and other objects the city engineer placed a monument in the street, and others at the street corners. It did not appear that, in that survey, he ascertained or found the original corners. Several years before the government established a base line with respect to the monument at the Temple square referred to. The city, or this portion of it, had been surveyed and platted and stakes placed at the corner of the squares and blocks. These corners and lines must, of course, govern unless the lines had been changed by parties occupying the ground, or rights had been acquired under the statute of limitations. It seemed that the square immediately north of the one in which the lot in dispute was located was surveyed about the same time—that this lot in block 58 was surveyed, and there, it would appear, the engineer ascertained what was supposed to be the original survey. This survey placed the southeast corner of that square north of the disputed line and the northwest corner about on the line with the front of the White house. The line was indicated by the White house and other buildings south as substantially on the same line as the buildings, and as the true line of the block, as recognized by the city engineer. It seemed the White house was erected some fifteen or more years ago, and his honor thought it sufficiently established by the evidence of the Messrs. Romney that the intention was to locate on the line of the business street. As a general rule, it was the intention to build on the line of the street; and some ten years or more before that there was another building that had been erected, which occupied the same line as to this east side as the White House; and the other buildings south were on the same line. If the boundary so fixed by the city engineer should govern, then there would be a "jog" or a niche. This block 58 would be west of the east line of the block next north of it. Jesse W. Fox, Sr., had testified that he made a survey of the block next north and the corners were placed according to the original survey of the city. Jesse W. Fox Jr. had also made some surveys on this block, and his survey located the White House corner about where the White House building now placed it.

His honor was disposed to believe, from all the testimony, that these buildings on Main street were built substantially on the true line, and that the original survey of these blocks did not conform to the surveys made by the present city engineer three or four years ago. The city engineer had no power, of course, to change boundaries of lots; he could ascertain them as nearly as possible from data and surveys, and it was his duty to ascertain as near as might be the original corners—the original survey. He thought, the testimony was pretty clear in this case that the city engineer did not succeed in doing that on this particular square. It must give way to the original survey; and therefore his Honor found for the defendants.

A SAND BOX is as necessary a part of a man's make-up these slippery times, as it is to a locomotive on an up-grade or a street car on a muddy crossing.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

SO FAR, SO GOOD!

All honor to the men, in and out of Congress, whose attitude, influence and vote have made possible the passage in the House of Representatives, by an almost unanimous vote, of the bill to confer statehood upon Utah!

All honor, too, to the patient, progressive, patriotic people of this fair commonwealth who have waited long years for the boon of self-government, so dear to every heart having the instincts of true Americanism, and who year after year have gone on piling up evidences of their sturdiness, their sobriety and their fitness for full sovereignty!

All honor, too, to those of our fellow-citizens who only lately have believed the rest of us competent and worthy to undertake the burdens and responsibilities of statehood; in so far as they were unselfish and sincere in asking delay, we honor them, and when in unanimity and considerable strength they resisted the striking off of our territorial shackles, we recognized their right, tried to appreciate their motives, and were willing to wait until their last lingering doubts should be removed. That the bill should have passed the House with hardly an opposing vote does but confirm the gratifying reflection that only through the desire for statehood of all the people of Utah, were the representatives of all the people of the nation brought to grant it.

All honor, then, to this influential class—now brethren, friends and fellow-citizens; to the original and the later settlers, who laid a broad, deep foundation for future stability and greatness, and have builded well and bravely upon it; to the honorable congressmen and their prominent constituents, whose voices have been made effective in our deliverance; and above everything else, all thanks and honor to Him who rules on high, who neglecteth not the least of His children, and who moves upon and tempers the hearts of men to the fulfillment, in His own time and manner, of His great purpose!

The News does not apprehend the proverbial slip 'twixt the cup and the lip in this matter of statehood. Of course only one step has been taken by the passage of the bill in the House. There remain the Senate, the President, and last of all the people of the proposed state who are to vote on the constitution that shall be prepared. We imagine there will be no likelihood of disappointment on this latter account. Neither do we think the President will withhold his approval of the measure when it reaches him. It would perhaps be too much to expect that the same celerity and unanimity will characterize the Senate's action on the bill as have been displayed by the House. Still, Utah's friends in that body are many and active. They will probably give ample time for its consideration, but they may be depended upon to oppose unnecessary delay and to fight defeat with all their might.

But should the unexpected happen, and pretracted postponement or actual defeat ensue, the people of Utah can give still another example of patience, and as cheerfully as may be they will endure a little longer. They have not waited more than forty years without having acquired some lessons in that crowning virtue. They are used to disappointments of this kind, and can stand them with much equanimity. In the highly improbable contingency that such may be their portion again, we have taken occasion to express for them the prevailing feeling of gratitude for such measure of favor as has already been shown. There remains but the pleasant duty of congratulating Delegate Rawlins for the gallant part he has taken and the success that has attended him. Following the bright example of (we believe) each one of his predecessors, he has asked for his constituents that which was their right as American citizens. The others asked in vain; to him has a favorable answer been given. In promoting and securing this he has worked consistently and industriously, and spoken eloquently and well. Able support has been given him by members of both, indeed all, the political parties, both here and in Washington; so that a patriotic Utah Democrat can include among the objects of his gratitude the Republicans; a patriotic Utah Republican cannot omit thanks to the Democrats; and both can unite in friendly recognition of favor from the Populists. With brimming charity and hearty forgiveness we pity, merely for historical purposes, that the few opponents of the bill in the House hid their diminished heads on both sides of the chamber.

LEO AND THE BIBLE.

The pope declares that the Bible is inspired in whole and in detail; also that where it seems to be contrary to science, there is either bad interpretation or a mistake of science.

To the latter proposition but little exception can be taken. Theologians have made many mistakes in their exegesis. And quite naturally, too. To understand the Bible correctly in all its details a vast amount of knowledge is necessary, embracing astronomy, languages, geography, history, geology, archaeology and many other branches of learning. All are related to the revelations of the Almighty, and they all aid in shedding light on the books that contain a history of these revelations. But all true science is progressive. New truths are discovered almost daily, excluding theories formerly adopted. A consequence of this is that much of that which was at one time given out as Bible doctrine has been abandoned in the rays of the new light furnished by the advancing sciences. Theology, too, is progressive, in full harmony, as the pope holds, with the other sciences.

But when his holiness maintains that the Bible is inspired in whole and in detail, further information would have been welcome. What Bible is thus endowed? The Hebrew text, the Septuagint or the Vulgate? All can not be inspired in detail, since they do not entirely agree with each other. The Hebrew text, it must be remembered, in its present shape, is quite different from the manuscripts left by the inspired men or their amanuenses. Every vowel has been inserted by uninspired men, and learned scholars maintain that in some instances wrong vowels have been used, making the present text certainly not inspired in detail. The Septuagint, which is but a translation of the Hebrew, was not to our knowledge written by men who claimed inspiration. It is one of the most valuable versions of the Scriptures, but it is certainly not inspired in every detail. The Vulgate, by the Tridentine council declared to be the authorized version of the Roman church, is also a valuable version, but the original, the work of Jerome, is known to have been so corrupted during the lapse of time that revisions of it became necessary. That Jerome's translation and the numerous alterations afterwards made are inspired in every detail is a claim that no modern theologian can make in earnest.

The question therefore remains, which version of the Bible is inspired in every detail? If Leo XIII commits the church to the theory of verbal inspiration, he only proves himself less progressive in theological questions than in the solution of social and political problems.

LAW IS A COSTLY GAME.

Everybody who has given the subject a moment's thought must view with some consternation the threat, if it is made in earnest, that the favorable outcome of a recent suit in Provo against Salt Lake City over the Jordan dam controversy, is but the precursor of numerous other suits of a similar character. The well-balanced community, like the well-balanced individual, dreads the resort to litigation if any other reasonable and satisfactory mode of settlement can be had. It is not only the expense of the thing, but the ill-feeling engendered and the suspicion remaining in the mind of the unsuccessful litigant that not right but shrewdness has prevailed—these are the incentives with most people to keep out of law as long as possible.

In the matter in question these deterrent influences ought to be the stronger for the reason that so many people and such enormous interests are involved. We presume that among all who have made themselves familiar with this old-time dispute, nearly every citizen of Utah county thinks Salt Lake City and county have acted imperiously and unjustly in forcing back, by the dam at the Narrows, the waters of Utah Lake upon the lowlands along its shores; and on the other side, that nearly every citizen of this county regards the Utah county objectors as unreasonable and extravagant in their contention. The whole question was not long ago the subject of a noted and most thorough arbitration hearing, and it was settled and confirmed, as everyone hoped, to the satisfaction of all.

We do not understand that the recent case referred to is an attempt to go behind that arbitration, but rather to enforce a compliance with its terms. It is too intricate to be of interest to the average reader, and yet it is so important that no property owner in either county can ignore it. In the interest of all, the NEWS hopes that before either side plunges into a wholesale system of lawsuits, there will be an attempt to get together and counsel and advise and compromise—the aggressors being first required to recede from any unwarranted position, and the aggrieved being then willing to listen to reason as between man and man and make concessions calculated to promote the public good.

THE CARLIN SIDE OF IT.

General W. P. Carlin is getting considerable unfavorable notoriety over the unfortunate circumstances connected with his son's recent experiences amid the heavy snows of the Bitterroot mountains in Montana, and is doing his best to get his side of the story before the public. The dispatches gave the account of events connected with the journey of the hunting party as it was said to have been obtained from members who were rescued. These told how that George Colgate, cook for the party, was abandoned in the deep snow when he was taken sick, without even an effort to save his life by giving him aid. Colgate left a wife and nine children, and when they were given $25 in the way of compensation, this, with the alleged facts of the desertion of Colgate to die, caused the people of his town to get together in a mass meeting and pass resolutions severely condemning young Carlin and Himelwright, who were said to be responsible for the abandonment.

The general is now anxious to let the public know that this was all wrong; that his son did not deserve such severe censure. The veteran officer says he has visited the distracted family of the unfortunate cook and explained the circumstances to them, and that they are now content that all that could be was done for their husband and father. He says that shortly after the party started Colgate was taken sick and advised to return, but did not do so, as he believed he could stand the trip.

Of the closing scenes the general says: "When the party were all lost, Colgate grew so much worse that he was unable to cook. At last things got to such a pass that the men could not endure being near him. He swelled up, and the water could be heard rattling in his lungs. The men built a rude chair, in which he sat. Finally, when making another attempt to get out, they put him on a horse, but the snow got so deep that the horse could not travel. Then, when they constructed rafts, they put the sufferer on one and conveyed him as far on the Clearwater as a deep canyon, eight miles long, full of cataracts. They had to stop then and had no alternative but to leave him. The only hope for any one to live at all was to climb along the tops of the perpendicular sides of the canyon and endeavor to get through. The cook could not do this, and my son and the others could not wait. If they did they would all surely die. All the six had to eat was one little loaf of bread cut in six pieces—not enough for one man." This may be the true version of the sad affair. At any rate young Carlin has the right to give his story. If poor Colgate saw things differently his account is beyond the reach of mortal ears. But we think they are many others who, even with this showing, will also look at the thing differently. It is hardly conceivable that there could be circumstances to justify the deliberate abandonment of a fellow-traveler—leaving him sitting there alone, living, helpless and without food, with the snow whirling around, and the long night of frost and death advancing relentlessly upon him. Still less excusable is the evasion that has since marked all the survivors' stories, and the indifference as to the poor fellow's fate. Men with but a single drop of heroic blood in their veins would never have rested until his fate had been definitely determined and his remains recovered. True men risk their lives to recover even the corpse of a comrade.

A CATHOLIC TRIUMPH.

The repeal of the law of 1872, which expelled the Jesuits from Germany, is sufficient evidence of the desire of the present government of that country to follow a policy of conciliation toward the Catholic church, thus steering an opposite course to that of previous rulers. Bismarck's opinion was that the clergy should be subordinate to the state. He evidently saw dangers to the commonwealth in the influence of the priests, whose aim it was to control the education of the young, and he did not hesitate to resort to drastic measures in order to avert the supposed or real dangers. But the head of the Catholic church was the "iron chancellor's" equal both in energy and diplomatic resources, and thus it was that the remarkable conflict arose which is known as the Kulturkampf or the "struggle of civilization." It was a contest between Bismarck and the Catholic clergy. It was an attempt on the part of the most far-seeing statesman Germany has ever had, to free forever the newly founded empire from the interference of an organization that in every country confessedly has its own interests nearest at heart.

A brief review of the events that led to the conflict may not be inopportune at this time. It was taken for granted by the German Protestant population that the head of the Catholic church viewed with disapproval the rise and growth of a German empire, at the cost of Catholic neighboring countries. The proclamation of the doctrine that the pope is infallible was understood to mean that the Roman pontiff was about to revive the claim of sovereignty over the whole earth, as the vicergerent of the Almighty. The Catholics in general and particularly the Jesuits were from this moment objects of suspicion in Germany. They were thought to plot in secret for the restoration of papacy. No sooner had Germany recovered itself from the sanguinary conflict with France than the energy of Bismarck was directed toward Rome. In 1872 the law was enacted for the expulsion of the Jesuits as political conspirators against the state. Other enactments followed this. The right to supervise the training and appointment of clergymen, as well as the surveillance of all schools, seminaries and monastic colleges were delegated to the state. The Catholics were placed under constant guard, as it were. Their every move was watched by a civic officer. The pope protested and declared these laws void, virtually releasing the members of the church from obedience to them. A sharp conflict was the result, until the vigor of the execution of the laws gradually relaxed and a more conciliatory policy was inaugurated by the present head of the Catholic church.

The anti-Catholic laws still remain on the statute books in Germany, although for years they have been a dead letter. Probably the recall of the Jesuits, of which the dispatches have told us, is but the first step toward the repeal of the other laws. Germany certainly needs the friendship of some of her Catholic neighbors. To be at peace with the church may therefore be the best policy. Even Bismarck himself is credited with having admitted that his war on the church was in part a mistake. Be this as it may, the retreat of the present government cannot but be looked upon as a complete victory of the Catholic church in Germany.

UNWISE STRIKES.

It may be that on some occasions workmen are justified in going out on strikes. When they are imposed upon and can better their condition by leaving an employer's service and escaping the imposition, there may be wisdom in pursuing that course. But there certainly are some strikes in which great lack of judgment is displayed on the part of the workmen.

The strike of the stonecutters who were engaged on the city and county building appears to be of this unwise class. It is unfortunate that the course of the city officials in dealing with the men has been so vacillating as to exasperate them; but in quitting work they really place the whole deprivation on themselves. The municipality has not the money to meet its bills at present, but the pay for stonecutters was sure, as the men admit, though it was delayed beyond the time they thought it should be. The stonecutters were not, however, required to work entirely without immediate payment. The county's portion was forthcoming regularly, and was sufficient to enable the workmen to get along until such time as the city could meet its bills. If the stonecutters had remained at work they would have been drawing sufficient to live on, and in a comparatively short time would have received the balance of a snug little sum in back wages from the city. As it is, they shut off entirely their source of supply. The fact that the city did not come to time seems hardly a sufficient justification in this instance for workmen "biting off their own noses to spite their neighbor's face."

The threatened strike at the Provo

mills appears to have been even more ill-advised than the other. The employees at the mills were fully aware of the situation. They knew that the factory was enabled to run only through the employees taking cloth and produce for their pay. That was understood when the mills came near closing last summer. The factory management kept its agreement. The demand of the strikers that cash be paid for wages was one that the factory management say, could not be complied with, and it insisted on work must have stopped. A portion of the employees did a wise and commendable thing when they refrained from joining in the demands. Fortunately for the strikers themselves they receded from their position upon sober second thought.

The present is no time for strikes except on the most grievous provocation. Employees should exhibit a kindly feeling toward employers in a business depression like this, by having a fair degree of patience with business managers who are doing their best to keep things even. A little forbearance may enable a business man, by hard work, to make both ends meet, when if he were sharply pressed, he would have to go to the wall.

THE LOST TRIBES.

Where are the lost tribes of Israel? is a question that has often been asked since the attention of Bible readers was called to the promises made by the ancient prophets that Israel shall again be gathered and the identity of the nation restored. Lately a New York paper commented favorably on the theory advocated by Lieutenant Totten, Professor Piazza Smyth and others, that the lost tribes are to be found in the Anglo-Saxon race. The paper referred to justly remarks, that it is a subject "replete with international interest and should be accorded a dignified discussion and candid consideration."

History accounts satisfactorily for a large part of the ten tribes, as will appear on consideration of the following facts:

When Israel formed an alliance with Syria against Judah, King Ahaz applied to the Assyrian ruler for assistance. He came and made the whole kingdom of Israel tributary and carried away to Media a great number of the two and a half tribes, whose inheritances had been given them east of Jordan. Ten years later Israel revolted from Assyria, relying upon Egypt for support. This brought down upon the kingdom the Assyrian king, Shalmaneser, with a large host. Samaria, the capital, fell. The country was annexed to Assyria. The rich and influential families were carried away captives and Israel was no more an independent country. This happened about the year 720 B. C.

The country thus almost depopulated was soon retitled by immigrants from various parts of the Assyrian empire. These intermarried with the remaining Israelites and adopted much of their habits and customs, and even their religion. This mixed population became known as Samaritans, a few of whom still remain as an organized religious body in the Holy Land, watching carefully their old traditions and their very ancient version of the Pentateuch. Here then is some of the blood of Israel to be found.

About the time the kingdom of the ten tribes was threatened with destruction, through the policy of apostasy followed by the rulers, many devout Israelites fled to Jerusalem and other cities of Judah. They became citizens of this kingdom and shared its fate. The name of one of these, Lehi, a descendant of the tribe of Manasseh, has been preserved in the Book of Mormon. Shortly before the great national calamity known as the Babylonian captivity occurred, inspired men left Jerusalem. Jeremiah, the Prophet, was one of them, but he was captured and imprisoned, accused of treachery to his own people. Lehi also left Jerusalem, with his family, having received a command to that effect from the Lord. After one of the most wonderful journeys on record, Lehi with his family reached this continent, where they were blessed by the Almighty and multiplied. Their descendants peopled not only this continent but also some of the islands of the Pacific. In the aborigines of these countries, then, we find another part of the ten tribes, chiefly of Ephraim and Manasseh.

The captives were taken to the interior of the Assyrian empire. Hoshea, the king, lived in the capital, Nineveh, and the rest became located mostly in Media. That they mixed with the population freely and partly lost their identity as a separate people was but a natural consequence of their previous neglect of their religion.

Assyria and Babylonia were but two great divisions of the same empire, both struggling for the supremacy. Finally the Babylonians and Medes revolted and burned Nineveh and the seat of the vast empire was transferred to Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar, the greatest of the Babylonian kings, carried a large part of Judah into captivity. Israel and Judah, who had separated in their own country, now met as captives in a strange land. But the deliverer came in the person of Cyrus, the Persian conqueror, who attacked Babylon and ended Nebuchadnezzar's empire.

This monarch issued a proclamation, addressed to "all the people of God" in his dominions, whether of Israel or Judah, that whosoever felt a desire to go to Jerusalem should do so, and those who remained should assist those who would go with the necessary means for traveling expenses and for the building of the temple. As a result of this proclamation the chiefs of Judah and Benjamin formed companies to go back to Palestine. Among the returning captives were some of the ten tribes, for we read in Ezra that among the first company were over six hundred souls who claimed to belong to Israel, but as they had lost their genealogical records, they were barred from receiving the Priesthood, until a prophet should arise, who through the aid of the Urim and Thummim should confirm their claim to membership among the chosen people. These, and perhaps other Israelites, returned with the Jews to Canaan, and their return and assimilation with their brethren account for another part of the ten tribes.

After the dispersion of the people by the Romans, some still remained in Palestine. They mingled with the Samaritans and others and are certainly still found among the Christianized so-called Arabs, many of whom, if features are any indication of origin, have more of the blood of Israel than of Ishmael in their veins.

So far the fate of parts of the lost tribes is discernible on a clear, historical background. But the most considerable number of those who remained in the strange country is still not accounted for. Indeed, the eastern nations, themselves, are almost lost sight of in history for a long period. The country was overrun and conquered by stronger nations. The cities were ruined and a whole civilization buried in oblivion. Migrations took place under these circumstances, especially northward. And those families who descended from Israel and took part in the migrations scattered the seed of the chosen race abroad. Much of it is found among the Anglo-Saxon and the Teutonic nations. This we know by revelation. For in these latter days the Lord has been pleased to raise up a Prophet, a descendant of Israel, Joseph Smith. He had the Urim and Thummim, and through his seer gift this great truth was discovered. But to point out the events by which these nations became sprinkled by the blood of Israel has not yet been given to any man. Let it, however, be remembered that history knows the names of several great nations, Goths, Vandals, and others, the origin of which remains a mystery. Perhaps in the migrations of these the key is to be found to the scattering of Israel in the north countries.

In the second book of Esdras, an apocryphal book of high antiquity, we are told that a number of the ten tribes in the captivity resolved to emigrate to an uninhabited place in order to serve the Lord. They crossed the Euphrates and journeyed for one year and a half to a region which the author calls Arsareth, to dwell there until the latter time. This account, apocryphal though it be, is more than probable. But where this part of Israel now is, is not known with absolute certainty, except that they are in the "north countries." Doc. and Cov. 133: 26. It has not been revealed. Conjectures and hypotheses are numerous, but proofs in support of these are missing.

However, all Israel shall be gathered. This is the promise of the Lord through both ancient and modern prophets. And the work of gathering has commenced, in the formation by the command of the Lord of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The complete restoration is thus described in the Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 133: 26-33:

And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear His voice and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence.

And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep.

Their enemies shall become a prey unto them,

And in the barren deserts there shall come forth pools of living water; and the parched ground shall no longer be a thirsty land.

And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants.

And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence.

And there shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim;

And they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy.

The time for these glorious events is approaching.

PROCEED LEGALLY.

There is no dispute as to the fact that Utah would be greatly benefited by placing a thoroughly representative exhibit at the Midwinter Fair in California. The gentlemen who have the arrangements in charge here fully realize that whatever is done, the display must not be of a niggardly character, and they are putting forth their best efforts to secure a creditable representation. They are generally contributing much thought, time and labor to the cause, and are deserving of praise for their unselfish and public spirited course.

One fact is patent to all: The Territory cannot make a display of its products without going to considerable expense. With the advantages offered in the way of kindnesses from railways, the Fair managers, and others, this expense may be small in comparison with what is accomplished, but even then it will reach a large sum. To raise this amount committees are soliciting aid from private subscriptions, the work not having proceeded far enough yet to say what reception it will meet with on the part of the public.

Applications have been made to the various county courts for appropriations to the Fair fund, and petitions are being circulated among leading business men, urging the probate judges and selectmen to grant the application. At this point there is a suggestion which the News feels impelled to offer, and in doing so it especially wishes to avoid anything that would bear the semblance of antagonizing the Fair movement. This suggestion is that the county courts look carefully into the question of their lawful power to make such appropriations as that asked. Private parties may do as they please with their private funds; but public officers must handle the money of the public in the manner defined by statute or come under a penalty. The law is not elastic for all purposes and, on the face of the thing, it looks to us doubtful whether it can be stretched to make legal any diversion of public funds to aid in the exhibition as proposed.

The county courts may use funds for county purposes; they are specially authorized to contribute of the county cash to various works of charity and improvement. But beyond the statutory provisions they cannot morally or legally go, no matter what may be the sentiment. The News has no desire to be arbitrary in this matter, or to crowd its advice upon anyone, but under the circumstances it is someone's duty—a duty, too which cannot honorably be avoided—to warn the various county courts to ascertain whether or not they are empowered to make the contribution requested. Being assured as to how far they may proceed legally, we shall make no objection to such generosity on their part as judgment, sentiment and enterprise may dictate.

THE VAN OF THE EXODUS.

The News is sure that no class of information is received with more pleasure by the majority of its readers than previously unpublished reminiscences or perhaps half-forgotten incidents of Pioneer history and the weary steps attendant upon and prior to the great exodus to these valleys. The veteran participants in these exciting scenes one by one are passing away; and it is not only a public duty but a sincere pleasure to obtain from their own lips and preserve for the perusal of coming generations all the little happenings and events that, trivial though they may be in themselves and may have seemed at the time, are still necessary to a complete history and understanding of the great theme. This may therefore be deemed an invitation to all our aged and tried friends to call from the chambers of their memory such incidents as have been alluded to. If they have no children or grandchildren or great-grandchildren handy to write their recitals from dictation, there are doubtless plenty of willing friends who will do so; and on its part the News will be overjoyed to preserve them in widely read and imperishable print.

With this much of introduction, we present the following:

SHUMWAY, Apache Co., Arizona,
 December 12, 1893.

Editor Deseret News:

Seeing a number of "First Things of Pioneers" noted in your paper, I thought I would mention that when we were preparing to leave Nauvoo, President Young called the captains together and said: "Brethren, we must be off! Who will be ready to start in three days?" On the third day after, at 11 o'clock a. m., I reported myself and company, with eleven wagons, ready. We crossed the river that day, the first to leave Nauvoo for the West. Our instructions were to stay at Sugar creek until we were more fully organized. There we remained several weeks, exposed to rain and snow. I returned to Nauvoo once during the time, accompanying President Young.

CHARLES SHUMWAY.

DELEGATE RAWLINS'S SPEECH.

In social, political and commercial interest to the people of Utah at the present time no subject is so prominent as the statehood question. All classes, parties, vocations and sects watch eagerly for the news from Washington and wait anxiously the report of the various proceedings upon the bill for Utah's admission into the Union, now pending in the Senate after having passed the House of Representatives almost unanimously. The daily dispatches have given a necessarily brief but not altogether unsatisfactory synopsis of the debates, and to have these now in full as they have come by mail would not only be stale but probably tedious reading. One effort, however, deserves a place in local history as journalistically made from day to day, and that is the great speech of Hon. Joseph L. Rawlins, Utah's Delegate in Congress. We present it today, and ask for it a careful perusal from every reader.

Words of commendation need not be multiplied at this time—they have already been bestowed in these columns heartily and deservedly. As one of the incidents, however, we will be pardoned for mentioning—perhaps unnecessarily, too—that no reader can fail to notice the warmth of the reception accorded to Utah, the encouragement given her champion, the glee with which the discomfiture of her antagonists was received, and the cheers that greeted every sally in her favor. Time was—and not so long since, either—when congressional feeling was the exact antipodes of this; when friendly words fell upon cold and unsympathetic ears, and when an outburst and interruptions like those of Mr. Morse and others would have made the very ceiling ring with approval and applause. We note the change with supreme gratitude, and congratulate all the participants—the speakers, the objects of their remarks, Utah, the Nation and the spectators' galleries—upon the improvement. Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis.

WILLIAM B. SMITH.

In the December 9th issue of the Saints' Herald, published at Lamoni, Iowa, appears the following editorial note, in which the Latter-day Saints in Utah will also be interested: "We learn by letter from his wife, Sister Rosanna B. Smith, that Uncle William B. Smith, long the surviving brother of the Martyrs, had passed over to the great beyond, his departure occurring November 18th from his home at Oosterdock, Iowa. He had attained to ripe years and went to his rest as veterans do, ready for the roll call on the other side. His life was a varied one, his experiences many, and of him it may be said: 'He sleeps well after life's fitful fever.'"

Uncle William B. Smith was the fifth son of Joseph Smith Sr., and Lucy Smith. He was born in Royalton, Windsor county, Vermont, March 18, 1811. He joined the Church at an early date and was appointed a member of the first Quorum of the Twelve at the organization of that quorum. He was married to Caroline Grant, daughter of Joshua and Thalia Grant, February 14, 1833, by whom he had two daughters, Mary Jane and Caroline. In the spring of 1838 he removed to Far West, and after the mob commenced to drive the Saints away he went to Illinois and settled in Plymouth, Hancock county. In 1842 he was a member of the house of representatives of the legislature of Illinois and did good service. In 1844 he came to Nauvoo in company with several Saints from New Jersey. Here he had his last interview with his brother Joseph before he left for the East.

In later years he has held the office of Patriarch in the Josephite church, residing in the state of Iowa. He was the last surviving brother of the martyred Prophets, Joseph and Hyrum.

A PROPER THING.

The City Council of Ogden performed a graceful act at last evening's session in rescinding the ordinance laying claim to the Tabernacle square in that city. Of course the claim was unjust and illegal, as was thoroughly understood by the public when the ordinance passed, and the attempt to deprive the Church organization in Weber Stake of its grounds in Ogden for Church buildings did no credit to either the heads or the hearts of the municipal administration which attempted the seizure.

The act of the Junction city alone last evening was one of simple justice, both to the municipality and to the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Weber Stake. It concedes to the latter their lawful property rights to the square in question, and replaces the city of Ogden in an attitude of fairness toward the religious organizations in the county. The affair is now closed up by the repeal of the ordinance. It will occupy its place among the by-gones and be succeeded by the better feeling which accompanies an equitable status between the parties.

A WOMAN SUFFRAGE PETITION.

The Northampton Mercury for August 11, 1882, contains an account of the proceedings in the house of commons on the 3rd of that month, which shows that the demand for the rights of women dates somewhat further back than is generally supposed, and also that it is not entirely an outgrowth of the peculiarities of American civilization. The paper mentioned says:

Mr. Hunt presented a petition from a lady of fortune and family, who is also a single lady, praying that she might be admitted to a share of the representation. Her name was Mary Smith, of Stanmore in York. She said that females were only kept in thralldom among barbarians and heathen nations, but in this country, which had risen to so high a pitch of civilization, such restrictions should be abolished. She complained that females were amenable to the laws and liable to be punished for their crimes, while they were tried by judges and juries of the opposite sex; they should, therefore, be allowed to sit upon juries. In short, she prayed that unmarried females of mature age should be put on a footing of equality with the male sex.

Mr. Hunt read the petition amid shouts of laughter from all sides of the House.

SWEATING COIN.

Among the numerous crimes under which modern society suffers is one known as "the sweating of coin," which is said to be very profitable and perhaps practiced by more than one on whom no suspicion has ever fallen.

A San Francisco paper tells of the arrest of one Goodrich in that city. Recently he rented a cellar, telling the owner of the house that he was a jeweler and needed a quiet place in which to conduct some experiments. After some time the neighbors were treated to the rather strong perfumes of certain acids used by the pretended jeweler, and their curiosity was aroused. By some means they got an opportunity to peep into the cellar and were astonished to see Goodrich at work with an abundance of gold coin on his table. The circumstance was reported to the police and the arrest followed.

A bottle was found with a mixture of acids, the only solution known that will dissolve gold. When the sweater is at work he pours a quantity of these acids into a glass and keeps the coin in it until a small portion has dropped away. From $1 to $1.50 is thus obtained from every $20 piece. The "sweated" coins are polished and then sent out in the market. Even experts may easily be deceived by such a piece of money as only the weight of it reveals its having passed through the hands of criminals.

A BRIGHT IDEA.

True philanthropy is always awake to the exigencies of the times, and charity seizes upon new methods of contribution and application. One, of the most unique and thoughtful character, is presented in our columns of today; one which commends itself as being eminently reasonable, praiseworthy, practical and beneficial.

Our allusion is to the agreement entered into by several firms of this city to dispense for this season with a custom which has been for years pretty general, if not universal. "It has been usual for those in the grocery business to tender to their patrons at Christmas time, by way of compliment, a package of candy, or nuts, or both. This has not been looked upon as of great importance or value, but as an expression of good will and friendly feeling at the close of a year of business association and patronage." The monetary consideration was lost sight of from this point of view, and while to the recipient the spirit of it was understood, to the store itself it amounted to considerable.

It was a kind heart which suggested that in consideration of the circumstances, most of those recipients would willingly forego this almost "vested right" in favor of the poor of this city, who, at the present time, are unusually numerous and unusually needy. The reasons for this are not far to seek. It may only be said that neither the laborer nor his family is in any way to blame for this condition; work could not be had, money seemed exceedingly scarce; everyone has been stretched to the utmost to meet taxes and other obligations honorably; building and manufactures have been partially suspended; and while flour is not high and modified weather has lightened the demand for coal in a home, there is yet considerable deprivation and possibly some suffering as well.

It is not presumed that in a community like this any one can perish of want. Even in the direst time of famine for bread there was no loss of life by starvation. Those who had, divided and subdivided, until a beneficent Providence said it was enough. And if we now divide, if we forego duties to confer substantial for a little season, we shall in no wise lose our reward.

Some of the dealers may feel as if their customers would receive offense if their portion of candy is not received; that as a consequence they would lose their trade, or that it would be a great disappointment to the children if the "sweets" were not forthcoming. Surely none would frame an excuse so paltry as the former, and there is more soul among our children than to murmur if there be explained to them the reason for a sacrifice which is momentary at best.

The suggestion and promise is this, that the amount usually bestowed in candy-gifts by the stores indicated, (as we understand it, about $500 from Z. C. M. I., and others in proportion) shall, on behalf of their customers, be placed in the hands of the officers of the several charitable organizations for this special purpose, and necessarily this will be in staple and useful goods, such as is needed in winter, and in places where that help is most important for the present emergency.

Much is being done now by different organizations. Call upon the people are almost continuous, and if a long winter comes these will in all probability increase for a time. Yet if we "bear each others' burthens, we fulfil the law of Christ," and it is said "he that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord, who will repay him again." The reverend but eccentric Dean Swift once took this text as the foundation for a "charity sermon," and in urging it he said: "Brethren, we have the poor, you have heard the conditions; if you like the security, down with the dust!"

MEDICAL CONGRESSES.

A dental congress for the West is to be convened in June next, and the arrangements therefor are being perfected. It is expected that the congress will extend over four days and that not less than six hundred tooth experts will be in attendance. The program outlined includes addresses by some of the leading lights of the profession throughout the country; and as the range of subjects takes a wide scope, the high standing and character of those who are to furnish papers warrant the anticipation that the information to be gained will be in line with the best knowledge of the profession. Incidental to the proceedings at the congress, which is to be held at San Francisco, there is to be at the Midwinter Fair a large exhibit of the dental appliances which were at the World's Fair.

A feature that will add interest to the dentists' meeting is the fact that it will be in session about the same time and in the same city as the congress of the American Medical association. The sessions of this latter organization are to embrace an extended program of oral discussion. Its meetings have never been held in the West before.

This bringing into New America congresses of the kind referred to is an innovation portentous of great changes and development. At present they are attracted hither largely out of curiosity to behold the wonderful progress that has marked the Great West since the Mormon Pioneers made their way across the trackless prairies as the harbingers of a mightier and brighter civilization than the world has ever seen. The work is but just commencing to make itself felt and observed. The fact that in less than half a century there has been a progress that excites the curiosity and absorbs the attention of men high in the professions and sciences augurs that close upon the heels of these congresses will come the establishment of technical and scientific institutions of the highest order, when the youth of the Occident will no longer have to pay tribute to eastern educational institutions for the information to qualify them in the higher branches of learning.

Already there are established in the West colleges and universities whose work is far in the lead of the people and whose facilities are not yet understood and appreciated. But the constituency is steadily and surely being brought up to a comprehension of the situation, and the aims and efforts to this end will be stimulated and aided by the holding of congresses of eminent professional men in any line of scientific training.

GRATITUDE IN ADVERSITY.

Among our readers are doubtless many who think they know far better how to run a newspaper than those now at the helm of this or any other journal—at least the criticisms and suggestions which we, in common with brother-editors, receive from time to time leads to this suspicion. Of these there are perhaps some who have aspirations in journalistic lines, and are waiting and working for the day when they shall be expert and masterful controllers of the press that molds public thought. There are others who have tried this press business to their heart's and pocket's content—lost the bright hope of the former and the contents of the latter. To all these classes, and to all others, indeed, in whom the experiences of mankind awaken interest, and in whom the milk of human kindness is not entirely dried up, we submit, with solemn yet responsive soul, the following touching requiem from the late editor of the Bitter Root (Montana) Times:

For fourteen months past we have been making an effort at endeavoring to attempt to try a bluff on running a newspaper. A special collapse some six months ago prevented an exposure of mental disability later on.

We have been taught three great and important truths, the very quintessence of wisdom, viz: First—It takes something other than indigestion and an overweening ambition to successfully operate a Washington hand-press. Second—It is convenient to have a head on each end of your hobby-horse—if you must ride one. Third—That the author of that trite aphorism, "Man proposes, God disposes," had his eye-teeth out.

We desist with no ill-will towards the paper or its patrons, neither a great amount of collectable notes. We could have eked out an existence with some pleasure had health permitted, but that is neither here nor there. Now, since we 'uns and you'uns must part, 'tis sad that you'uns have stole we'uns' heart, but it will be sadder if you'uns don't bring in your bill before we'uns depart.

And to our debtors; Expect the vengeance of a just Bohemian's wrath to overtake you for every penny escaped.

We trusted in God and we have not been forsaken—for we found as great a bump as ourselves to continue this desperate struggle. With tears and prayers we bid him Goodspeed.

APPRECIATIVE.

An Indiana gentleman, educated and refined, who paid a visit to Salt Lake City about a year ago, has written a letter to the editor of the NEWS, not for publication but full of such kindly expressions that we are tempted to make extracts from it, with a view to showing the change in sentiment that has so wonderfully swept through the land within the past few years, and the readiness with which intelligent people can be made to see the desirable features in Utah and among even the Mormons if they will only look at the situation through unprejudiced eyes. Our correspondent says:

I was much interested in what I saw and learned while in your city and came away with very different impressions in regard to the Mormon people than I had before visiting them. I discovered that they neither had hoofs nor horns, but large and generous hearts, intelligent minds, industrious hands and devout spirits. My visit to Salt Lake City was one of the most delightful experiences of my eventful trip across the continent; and I have said many times since, both in public and private, that I regard Salt Lake City the most beautiful city between Chicago and San Francisco and withal the most desirable both as a residence and as a place of business. Ever since my visit there I have had a most urgent longing to return and spend more time in studying the country, the people and the various social and religious institutions of the place.

The Temple was not yet completed when I was there. I was struck with the massiveness, solidity and symmetry of that wonderful structure. There is nothing like it in the east, nothing that is comparable with it. It is sui generis. How I would like to stand in its shadow now and look upon its stately towers! What a grand monumental pile it is! What a pity that he whose genius conceived and projected it could not have lived to see it dedicated to the service for which it was built! "He buildeth better than he knew," and this will be his monument for all coming time. As long as its massive walls shall stand and its towers point heavenward, so long will the name of Brigham Young be perpetuated and held in grateful remembrance.

I was not more pleased than surprised at the simplicity of your faith and worship, and I may add, so far as the fundamental principles of the Gospel are concerned, at its evident scriptural soundness. I heard nothing but what accorded perfectly with my conceptions of what the scriptures teach touching faith, repentance, baptism and weekly communion. When I come again, as I hope to do ere long, I shall make a more extended investigation into the question of your Church government and other doctrinal questions, as well as into your limitless and splendid resources; and I expect to write up the city, the Saints, and the country generally for eastern papers.

THE ONLY reputable exchange thus far to band that seems to approve of the tirade of Congressman Morse of Massachusetts against the Mormons, is the Boston Traveler. At least it does not editorially condemn his folly, while it gives a lengthy special of his remarks without a word of the speeches of those who so completely demolished him. Mr. Morse has seemed a little lonesome in his attitude, but he is evidently not altogether friendless.

THE NEW YORK World has been taking a poll of the House of Representatives to ascertain how the members stood with reference to the proposed income tax. A majority has registered itself as in favor, and some who may be favorably inclined to it refuse at present to be committed. The answer of Delegate Rawlins, of Utah, to the World's question was: "I prefer not to discuss the question."

THE SEARCH for jurors to try Prendergast, the murderer of Mayor Harrison of Chicago, resulted in the discovery of one who declared that he didn't know whether Mayor Harrison was really dead or not, as he didn't take much stock in newspaper stories. This would seem to have made him an ideal jurymen, yet he was rejected.

ONE OF the most legitimate and most profitable expenditures made by the American people is the two hundred millions of dollars in advertising during each year. The man who doesn't contribute some portion of that sum oughtn't to be in business.

THE ASSURANCE that the international prize fight will be permitted to come off in Florida on the 25th of January suggests the query as to whether it is Mr. Corbett or Mr. Mitchell that is going south for his health.

PRENDERGAST, THE slayer of Mayor Harrison of Chicago, insists that the court officials and attorneys shall call him "Mr." Prendergast. Why not? "Mr." is as good an abbreviation for Murderer as it is for Mister.

GOVERNMENT RECEIPTS show an immense falling off, as compared with last year. It is some consolation to poor and humble people to know that they are not the only ones to be affected by hard times.

A STATISTICIAN has figured out that fifteen million bushels of onions annually are employed in scenting the American breath. A much smaller quantity would do the business quite as effectually.

THE MOST popular statesman and diplomatist this week is Santa Claus. He is everybody's candidate, and will be elected triumphantly, though perhaps by a reduced majority.

THE ATROCIOUS charge against Governor Botes of Iowa, that he eats pie with a knife, is chiefly significant by reason of the main fact that he has pie to eat at all.

IT IS hardly probable that Utah will find statehood in her stocking this Christmas.

LOOK CAREFULLY at your change-god people! Hundred-dollar counter,feit bills are in circulation.

THE CONSOLATION that "the good die young" has especial application to spring chickens.

SMALL STOCKINGS will be fashionable this Christmas.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.

IT WENT SMOOTHLY.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 13, 1893.

The Utah admission bill, an enabling act providing for the incorporation of Utah into the Union as a sovereign state, having passed the House this afternoon, it is important that the people of Utah should have correct notions; first, as to the attitude of parties and persons in relation to the passage of the bill thus far in Congress; second, in relation to the provisions of the bill and the things necessary to be accomplished in order to consummate statehood.

It is only the first proposition that we shall consider at present—the attitude of persons and parties in relation to the passage of the bill through the House; as the second proposition will require several articles, and the bill may be further amended in the Senate and by joint committee from both houses before its final passage. The probabilities are that it will not be materially changed.

As it stands, it is a liberal and generous bill, and highly creditable to the people of Utah, and it does much to obliterate the friction of past years. It is expressive of the nation's confidence in Utah. It bids out the past and extends the hand of fellowship for an everlasting brotherhood and co-operation.

As to the attitude of parties and persons, the only feature to be discussed in this article, it might be summed up by saying that Utah was treated generously and considerably all round. The final vote was responded to on both sides of the House with equal volume and emphasis. There was only one distinct voice that uttered "No" when the negative was called. That was on the right, the Democratic, side. I did not know who it was, and it was immaterial, for there was a full house on both sides. I judge that there were 200 on both sides that responded "Aye." Some one told me that there was one "No" on the Republican side, but I did not hear it, although I reported two negatives in the dispatches. A correspondent that sat on the Republican side at the time tells me that there was no voice on that side when the negative was called. It is utterly immaterial at all events. The Populists to a man, so far as I have learned or could judge, were in favor of Utah statehood. Jerry Simpson and Baker of Kansas spoke for them. There were only two decided opponents to the bill in the speaking that was done. These were Harter of Ohio, a Democrat, and Morse of Massachusetts, a Republican. The former opposed it on the general grounds that there were too many small western states now, and that no more should be admitted for some years to come. This objection will be the most potent one in the Senate when the bill comes before that body. It is really the expressed fear of the gold bugs and money monopolists that they will finally be outvoted in the Senate on money questions.

The objections raised by Morse were of a personal character applicable to the trustworthiness of the Mormon people. He was extremely bitter and virulent in his criticisms and denunciations, brought up the Mountain Meadow massacre, and imputed the darkest and most sinister motives to the Mormon people in their application for statehood. But he was soon called down by half a dozen Republicans who sat near him. They gayer him and annoyed him until he slumped completely, although he had his speech type-written, and I think had not nearly completed it. The House was in no mood to hear anything about Mormon atrocities; neither would they hear any argument from any member aiming to show that polygamy was not or would not be abandoned. They were willing to incorporate some legislation looking to the framing and execution of law in that direction; but no member had any encouragement to get up and say that the Mormons were not sincere, that they were not trustworthy, that they would not be good citizens. No member was allowed to launch into a tirade against the Mormon people, or to expatiate in some disrespectful way upon their past history.

In all this it must be perceived that the tone of the House was extremely friendly and considerate. When the matter was first brought up last Friday during the morning hour, the Republicans commenced to filibuster, as they had not been consulted so as to take action as a party. On the following Monday they had determined on a course of action, and consented that the Utah bill should come up in regular order and have two days set apart to it, so as to have full consideration and discussion. It was evident on Tuesday that the party had come to an agreement to put Utah through, for Tom Reed took charge of the Republican procedure and contributed to the passage of the bill at every stage; and when Dolliver of Iowa got up and stated that he felt authorized to voice the will of the Republican party that Utah should be admitted to statehood, it settled the question of the action of the Republicans in the House, and doubts in the Senate.

Too much praise can not be given to Mr. Rawlins for his able, manly and discreet management of the bill from the start. He did not make any mistakes or blunders. He was modest yet firm and persistent. His speech was excellent, and his overhauling of Morse of Massachusetts for his bitter tirade was admirable, and it brought down the House in long-continued and oft-repeated applause, and the galleries resounded with cheers and acclamations. The fact is, everybody about the House was in favor of Utah. The members all gathered about Rawlins. At least fifty Republicans went over and clustered around the speaker. They wanted him to do well, and gave their encouragement at every step, and took pains to applaud every point he would make. Tom Reed took his seat a good part of the time among the Democrats, and from that position arose several times and asked for an extension of their time to conclude their speeches; so that everything moved in one current to the accomplishment of the general purpose of the passage of the bill. The correspondents all knew from the time that proceedings opened on Tuesday, when the party leaders showed signs of working together, that the bill would pass without other incidents than possibly a few amendments, and all the amendments that were made were by common consent all round. These amendments and the bill itself will be the subjects of some further consideration. C. R.

CHURCH THEOLOGY CLASS.

One thousand and fifty students had assembled at the usual time and place, when Dr. J. E. Talmage called the class to order. Prayer was offered by Elder A. W. Davis.

After answering some written questions, which had been submitted, Instructor Talmage took a review on the subject-matter considered at the last session. Leaflet No. 8, copies of which had been distributed at the door, was then taken up for study. Continuing with the Fourth Article of Faith the manner of administering baptism received first attention. The derivation of the word "baptize" gives a proper understanding of its meaning. To fully establish this fact, however, it should be known how the word was used at or about the time of Christ.

Quotations from Roman authors and historians of that time showed conclusively that by baptism was meant immersion, in whatever way the word was used. And this is as Christ used it and surely he could only have meant that. As birth is the beginning of another life, so baptism is compared to the commencement of a new life. Had Christ used this comparison with sprinkling or pouring it would certainly have been an incomplete metaphor. Such would be at variance to all the other so perfect parables and metaphors, which have established his acknowledged ability as a teacher of teachers. Christ himself was baptized by immersion, for at the ceremony he came "out of the water." The language seems so plain that even a wayfaring man may understand. John baptized in the river Jordan; the Apostles at a place "where there was much water." Alma, among the Nephites, preached the same doctrine, and the most explicit instructions were given by the Savior to the people of this continent. In eastern Christian churches immersion was the only mode known for many centuries after Christ, other methods not becoming general till near the close of the Thirteenth century. Quoting Mosheim and other historians many of the foolish practices connected with the departure of the true method and spirit of this ceremony were referred to. The manner in which baptism must be administered in this our day has been revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith to be as follows: "The person who is called of God, and has authority from Jesus Christ to baptize, shall go down into the water with the person who has presented him or herself for baptism, and shall say, calling him or her by name—Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. Then shall he immerse him or her in the water, and come forth again out of the water."

The repetition of the baptismal ordinance was next spoken of (1), as a means of re-admission to the Church, (2) when administered for the health of the candidate. The instructor dwelt with much earnestness upon the order and restrictions governing such cases, stating that no such ordinance as re-baptism as a distinct and separate ordinance was authorized in the Church of Christ.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder T. C. Griggs.

TO BRIDGE THE CRISIS,

THE DESERET NEWS BUREAU,
49 B Street, S. E.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 18, 1893.—

There are two classes of political philosophers, each of which is propounding a theory of the causes of the current unrest and destitution among the masses of the people, a widespread social condition that has now become alarming, an economic paralysis that has no heavenly rainbow of promise for better times in the future. One class may be designated the Republican, the other Democratic; and while each has some truth in his theory it is evident upon a fuller view that both solutions are inadequate to cover the ground.

The regulation Republican who guides his theories and his actions by the behests of the congressional caucus will tell us that the sole cause of hard times is the threatened subversion of the protective system, that all over the country the captains of industry are hedging against the coming invasion of cheap goods from abroad, that stocks are run low and that no large supplies of material are laid up for future consumption, that as a consequence many men are thrown out of employment, that many houses are rendered destitute of both luxuries and necessities, that this general shrinkage affects the merchant and the banker, the professional man and the artisan, the farmer and the laborer, the capitalist and the investor, that all are involved and that as a consequence the great social organism is turning out tramps on the one hand and abandoned women on the other. The regulation gold bug Republican has but one string to his harp, but one panacea for all the ills of society, and that is protection—a control of the American market in the interest of the American producer. It is undeniable that the banks and moneyed classes created the recent panic in the interest of gold monometallism. They wanted the purchase clause of the Sherman act repealed in the interest of the single standard, and they were willing to foment any kind of financial embarrassment in order to achieve their purpose. In a similar way the ultra protectionist is willing to exaggerate all the inconveniences and losses resulting from the reduction or abrogation of protection. The ultra protection manufacturer is frequently willing to furnish an "object lesson" in behalf of protection by shutting down his works, putting his men on half time, discharging a portion of them, or by eliminating those of them who vote against protective legislation. All such cases are forced and adventitious illustrations of the evils of free trade.

There is doubtless a great truth in the Republican contention. A change in the fundamental conditions of industry could not be effected without friction and hardship; and if labor in this country is to be put upon an absolute equality with the labor of the world anywhere and everywhere, it must come to an equilibrium with respect to remuneration, so long as laboring men work at stipulated wages. But the laborer feels that the rewards of industry are unequally divided. One class is able always to utilize and enjoy the multiform advantages of wealth. Recreation and travel, arts and amusements, books and culture, elegant food and rich attire, these are the innings of the capitalists and controllers of industry; while the actual producer that applies his brain and muscle must be content with bare necessities, and but seldom the luxuries of life. Many a laborer knows that he will not benefit himself immediately by striking down protection; but he is sick and sore of the great disparities of wealth; and with a feeling of desperation he is willing, even though he does not benefit himself, to reduce all to a common level.

There is no doubt that human selfishness and greed get in their work in connection with the protective system, just as man's inhumanity throughout all ages has perverted and misdirected the material blessings of the all-miserifol Giver. But in free-trade England it is worse rather than better. It is still worse in all those countries where popular liberty is less highly developed. In the benighted lands of semi-civilization and their barbarism, the selfish traits of human nature are brought out into boldest relief; the masses are serfs and slaves, and the lords of industry are their taskmasters. Hence it may be said truly that the American industrial system exhibits a more equitable division of the profits of labor than that of any other community on earth. It might be much better, and it should be improved; but there is no other system that is so little subject to just animadversion. But the ultra Republican, say like Congressman Tom or Senator John Sherman, is wide of the mark when he resolves all our economic troubles into the one great chasm of anti-protection. It accounts for a few facts, but it does not solve the multiform phases of the problem. For instance, why is cotton selling at six cents a pound instead of fifteen? Why does wheat sell at fifty cents instead of a dollar? Why has farm land fallen one half all over the country? Why are farms more and more covered with mortgages? Why does untold wealth seek investment in government bonds at two per cent rather than in business and industrial channels at eight per cent? Why are cities growing so much faster than the rural districts? Why do rents and interest increase so rapidly upon the net profits of the industry of the world? Why does the wealth of the country fall each year into the hands of a proportionately smaller number of hands? These queries point to actual conditions; and the question of protection has little to do in the way of solving most of them. They are troubles that protection has no way of solving, neither could it be more than partially responsible for creating them, even though the ultra-Democratic contention is true, that protection is an evil without qualification.

But the Democrats as a whole do not believe that protection is an unmixed and absolute evil. That free trade plank in their platform was a spur of genius which required a good long time for its verification. It will be true when the time comes that we don't need any protection. Every intelligent protectionist knows, or ought to know, that the principle is one of temporary application and expediency. The time ought to come as the world grows brighter and truer when all protective barriers should be thrown down, when all nations that God made of one blood shall be brethren in all things temporal and spiritual. Christ said to give unto him that asks; that the man that had two coats should impart to him that had none; that being struck on one cheek we should turn the other; that we should sell all that we have and give to the poor; that we should love our neighbors as ourselves. He here utters truths that the world must finally verify. If we don't perform the truth today, so much the worse for us rather than for the truth. So it is with the free trade idea. It is an ideal conception, and we will reach it in the course of human progress. But there must be a degree of enlightenment and amelioration the world over. The nations of the world must grow in the exercise of liberty and free government. Education must be disseminated; men must become self-governing; selfishness must yield to principle; philanthropy must triumph over inhumanity. The time will come when we will give to him that asks, but it will be when no man will ask unjustly. The time will come when we shall turn the other cheek, but it will be when nobody will be cruel and mean enough to strike us. The time will come when we shall sell what we have and give to the poor, but that time will be when we have no poor as we have them now, and when the baubles of wealth have ceased to claim the soul and seduce it into an idolatrous and illicit love. The time will come when we shall love our neighbor as ourselves, but it will be when our neighbor is truly lovable, and when sincere loving will be our supreme joy.

It is putting a very small part for a very great whole when the Democrats tell us tariff taxes cause the great irregularities of wealth; that the exactions of the government impoverish the masses. Neither do the majority of the Democrats believe this proposition, for they will pass the Wilson bill which retains an average protection quite in harmony with the schedules provided in the Republican tariff bill of 1883 which preceded the more decided protective measure of McKinley. The Wilson bill is not far from being in accord with the ideas of Jackson, Jefferson and Madison. It is unfortunate that the industries of the west are left to the tender mercies of unrestricted competition, but the more complex forms of manufacture are fairly well provided for. Republicans like Reed, Burrows, Dingley and Sherman will raise a terrible outcry but it must be remembered that these men live by the industry of politics, and it becomes their duty to make the welkin ring with the clamor of Republican discontent.

But as a philosophy of the present economic condition of society, does either protection or free trade come anywhere near solving the great problem? No more than the old theory of bloodletting was a cure for all diseases. It might be beneficial in some cases, but in a majority of cases it would be a mistaken remedy based on a mistaken diagnosis.

If one were to generalize broadly enough to reach a comprehensive cause or set of causes they might seem unreal and shadowy. When we assign gravitation as the primal cause for an infinite variety of effects we are dealing with purely material and formal phenomena. But when we are dealing with the general conditions of society the forces are largely intellectual, emotional and spiritual. It is the inhumanity of man to man, it is the existence of immature and inadequate institutions and laws, it is the selfishness of mankind, it is all of these united in one that puts man where he is today and raises these barriers and inequalities in society. Take the condition of society in the time of the Pharaohs in Egypt; or take the social condition revealed in early English history; how easy it is to perceive that the masses of men were but pliant tools in the hands of their rulers! Selfish domination was under no restriction. There were no adequate laws. All men were blindly ignorant. The only reason that the masses are in a better condition today is that there is more knowledge, better laws, and selfishness is compelled to take a more attenuated form. One of the principal forms in which selfishness manifests itself nowadays is in the shrinking, controlling and manipulating the money of the world. Money is now the most potent agent in society for bane or blessing. Our plutocrats have all the selfishness of the Pharaohs or the early English nobility, and they mold the laws to facilitate their selfish purposes. With respect to these higher, more ethereal and attenuated forms of selfishness, the people generally are densely ignorant; but they are getting a little insight; they begin to see men as trees walking. In the course of years they will be able to understand and handle these more intricate financial questions so as to dictate right laws; and when they reach this point, the power of the plutocrats will be broken, and the people will reap a vast benefit and make another advance toward final emancipation. But human selfishness will find new and more refined devices for self-aggrandizement until, it is to be hoped, the fulness of knowledge will find that in the fulness of love and humanity there is the highest prosperity and happiness for one and all, and that true economy and true politics and true religion are all one and the same, and that the Kingdom of God is the truth of all, everywhere and throughout the ages.

It is true that good times, so called, may be bad times, and bad times may be good with respect to the purposes of the great Architect; but whether good or bad, all times are necessary to weave the mighty pattern that is growing in the roaring loom of time. There are laws of life and reproduction; and these seem to pulsate most vividly with divine purpose; and these we are constantly and miserably and everywhere violating throughout the world. There are political laws and institutions, and these are wrested into hideous forms of selfish aggrandizement. There are religious laws and instincts, but men are dull and hard of hearing, and the very brightness of the sun makes clouds out of the dampness and grossness of their lives. And progress is saltatory, it moves zigzag by leaps and bounds, forward and backward, but still making headway. Life, Government, Religion, these three. No great advance will be made in one to the neglect of the other. The laws of life must soon come into prominence if an aim to make any substantial progress in the century now about to dawn upon us.

As to the question of the hour, protection or free trade as the cause of the hard times, both Democrats and Republicans that are intelligently know that the great money power is doing more to pinch the people and make them groan under their burdens than all other agencies in sight. C. R.

MUSIC IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

I write this in the hope that it may serve of some little use in keeping alive the interest and progress of music among the little folk of our Sabbath schools. For some time past I have tried in what seemed to me the best way to advance them in this branch, and now my chief desire is that the individual schools will make the best of what little I and my co-laborers have accomplished, by keeping them at the work. I beg of you to remember that today myself and my assistant, Horace Ensign Jr., who has for the past year done much of the labor of training them (and quite successfully, for the amount of experience he has had)—I ask you to remember that we have all the way from twenty-five to one hundred and twenty-five precious little singers from each school in this city doing creditable work in the classroom. Are they used in your schools? Or are they set in the shade while a few older ones are doing your singing as if these smaller ones were of no use? What sort of a choir leader have you? Does he try to improve the singing of the school? Or does he merely hash over old things learnt at some time ago, when some one did take interest in actually teaching the schools some songs? If the latter is the case, can not the cause be found and removed, whether it be in the lack of encouragement or lack of ability?

Now these contests are instituted especially to stir each individual school up to action, if there is any stir possible. One-third of them roused up to the first one. Two-thirds permitted their talented little folks to merely look on as if they had no ability to compete. That one-third is bravely starting out for the next. To my certain knowledge, numbers of the little folks in the other schools are pleading to have like privileges. The labor is not great, for we help them all to master the pieces at the classes. And the thorough organization of a choir of these little people in each school is I'll venture to say, of just as much importance as any other one or more branch of your school; then why, when we labor so hard to render you assistance, do you not take advantage of it? Your choirs are all ready waiting to have the harness put on them. Why not let them work? There is no personal interest in all this, more than helping others also helps us. The eight or ten schools now taking the full benefit of these contests are quite sufficient to make them interesting and successful from that standpoint. The children attend whether you use them or not, because they love it. But we want to see our labors result in twenty-three Sunday school choirs, alive and progressing in this city, with twenty-three wide-awake conductors improving themselves with the practice, experience, interest and love for conducting that the actual labor of training and conducting a choir alone can accomplish.

It did my heart good to see the conductors at our last contest; each of them, especially the young and inexperienced ones, gained more than a prize in the labor performed. To them I felt like crying, "Go ahead, boys! Let nothing daunt you. The future reputation of our community depends on you." It lies now (I mean practically) with so few, one can count them on his fingers, and some of those (myself among the number) sorely need a breathing spell, and some must soon take it. Then it must fall on the shoulders of the young and strong, and they must have their hearts and souls drawn to it by actual toil, experience and study. The Lord will not choose the indifferent and listless to his labor.

Superintendents, this responsibility rests on you! By taking no interest, you will smother the ambition of both children and leader so far as doing work in your school goes. By spending a little time in encouraging conversation with your leader on the matter, and by publicly encouraging the idea of your school having a creditable representation in this honorable struggle for progress, if not for supremacy, you will gather around you a bright little body of singers that will be the light and life of your Sabbath school.

If you have not already taken pains to find the particulars relative to the next contest I beg of you to do so. They are to be found in last Saturday's DESERET EVENING NEWS. Then next Sunday put the matter to your leader and the children, asking the little folks who have good voices and who would like to take part to attend, the juvenile choir at once before we are through studying the contest piece; that your school may have the benefit of the training, thus making lighter and more effective the labors of your own choir leader. The meetings of the juvenile choir are held every Saturday at the Assembly Hall, at one o'clock, and we are now making special efforts to prepare the contest pieces for all alike. Then it remains for each school to train in separate bodies. Of course, where there are special classes conducted for the benefit of words, we have no desire to interfere.

Your brother,
EVAN STEPHENS.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

PAYSON, Utah, Dec. 16. Special to the NEWS.—Robert Winmer died last night, aged 88, worn out with old age. He was one of Utah's old settlers and resided here about thirty years.

J. H. STARK.

The latest word from the bedside of Prest. W. R. Smith of Davis stake, received late this afternoon is to the effect that his condition is much worse, and there seems scarcely any human chance for his recovery.

Miss Sophia Hartvigsen, of Hyrum, who was so badly injured by being thrown and dragged by a horse on Monday last, died on Tuesday afternoon and was buried on Thursday. The majority of the population of Hyrum was in attendance.

The land office in this city is about to be moved to more convenient and commodious buildings. The change will be made about January 1st. The location selected is the B. Y. Trust Company's building, on First South street west. The rooms to be occupied are on the third floor.

On Monday a fire broke out in the law office of Attorney Hunsaker, at Brigham City, and before the firemen got the blaze under control that gentleman's extensive library was destroyed. The loss, altogether, is estimated at about $2,500; insurance $1,500. It is not known how the fire originated.

BEAVER, Utah, Dec. 14.—The jury in the case of Emerson for embezzlement, came into court shortly after 11 p.m. last night, and returned a verdict of "not guilty." It meets with approval in a majority of instances, but is strongly denounced in others. Kenyon, the prosecuting witness and loser of $1000 and expenses, left for Salt Lake today.

Word has reached here that a young man named Harmon Smith was caught out in a heavy rain and snow storm between Woolley's ranch at the head of Blackfoot river and Auburn in Star valley, and had to camp out two nights, without bedding, food or fire, during the continuance of the storm, and for several days after it ceased. His hands and feet will probably have to be amputated.

John Gilman, of Worcester, Mass., is in town. He is running a big exhibition of domestic animals and farm produce all over the United States, circus like, and wants to gain possession of the Utah Midwinter Fair exhibit. He promises to carry it not less than 25,000 miles and show it in all the cities and towns en route, if at the end of six months the display be turned over to him permanently.

Rexburg Silver Hammer: Frank, the little son of Bishop T. J. Winters, had the misfortune of getting his finger in the wringer of his mother's washing machine last week. The result was that Dr. Rivers was called in to fix up the badly broken finger. He is doing well, and says in the future the family can attend to their own washing. He won't be "in it" any more.

Brigham City Bugler: William Riggs got shot at Collinston Saturday. He was handling a 44-caliber revolver, when one of the cartridges was accidentally exploded. The bullet passed clean through the upper large muscles of the arm, fracturing the bone and terribly lacerating the flesh. The patient is now under treatment in Brigham City. It is thought the arm will be saved.

Harry Hammond was brought down from the penitentiary December 15, to sign his depositions, which were taken last week, to be used on the trial of George Gaylor at the February term of the Third district court. On Sunday morning next Harry will start on his journey for the Columbia Reform school, whence he will be accompanied by Mr. Bailey, U. S. Marshal Brigham's corresponding clerk and secretary.

The West Side fire department was called out at 10:20 Wednesday, Dec. 14 to extinguish a blaze in the residence of John Barker, an employe of Walker Bros., at the corner of Ninth West and Sixth South streets. Their services, however, were not needed, as the neighbors had put the fire out with a few buckets of water. The blaze originated from burning soot falling on the floor from a defective flue. The loss is very small. The department made a good run.

Information has been received in this city from Alta by H. C. Wallace to the effect that John Destiffain, a miner, has likely met death in that vicinity, probably in some old abandoned shaft into which it is believed he accidentally fell during a violent snow storm a couple of weeks ago while on the way to the Prince of Wales mine to work. A searching party was organized and worked diligently in the hope of finding the missing man, but were obliged to desist.

A young woman residing with Mrs. Slawson, the spiritualistic medium, on Washington avenue, Ogden, attempted suicide Wednesday night, December 14th, by swallowing seven grains of morphine. The cause is said to be that her husband some weeks ago deserted her, taking all their money, several thousand dollars, with him. He is understood to be a former resident of Logan who met and married the young woman in Chicago. Through the prompt treatment of physicians the woman will recover.

Will Dyer, a young man employed as clerk by the Godbe-Pitts Drug company was the victim of a serious accident Dec. 15, and one that will result in him being disabled for a considerable time. While closing a heavy iron door over one of the openings leading from the sidewalk to the basement under the store, he had the misfortune to drop it on his right foot mashing and badly bruising three toes.

Dr. McAchran and Cantwell attended to the young man's injuries, after which he was removed home.

The S. S. Walker estate has commenced suit in the Third district court against the city of Bountiful et al demanding to be decreed the owner of a primary right to the waters of Mill Creek in Davis county, to the extent of one-fourth of the the stream for fifty-one hours from April 1st to October 1st in each year. The plaintiff also asks that the defendants be enjoined from interfering with its use of the water or from in any way obstructing the flow. The plaintiff owns 105 acres of land near Bountiful and has used the waters in dispute for the past fifteen years.

A meeting of the Ogden school board was held Friday night, December 15. From the superintendent's report it appears that during the past month there were 1506 boys and 1418 girls enrolled, a total of 2924, which is the largest monthly enrollment ever recorded in this city. In 1891 the enrollment for November was 2,763; in 1892, 2,511; in 1893, 2,924. The percentage of attendance is lower this year, which appears from comparison: In 1891, 98 per cent; in 1892, 98 per cent; in 1893, 91.2. The reduction is due to sickness at present prevailing.

On Saturday evening Union Pacific coal mine No. 7, seven miles from Evanston, Wyoming, was discovered to be on fire, and there is danger that the mine will have to be closed for a considerable time and perhaps permanently. Efforts to put out the fire with water failed, so all vent holes are to be closed up in the hope of extinguishing the flames. A large force of men will be thrown out of work by the disaster. There are fears that the fire cannot be put out, and that No. 7 will become like No. 4, which has been on fire for ten years. The flames broke out on the fifth level, 900 feet below the level of the ground.

A large number of the younger employes of the Provo Woolen Mills walked into the office Dec. 14 and demanded a part of their pay in cash, they having recently received their pay in cloth and produce. In the event of a refusal to comply with their demands, they threatened to strike. Mr. Reed Smoot addressed the employes, representing that the institution was running at a loss, and could not pay cash. If the employes could better their circumstances by leaving their looms and spindles, they were invited to do so. After considering the matter, they concluded the better plan would be to continue at work.

The good people of Hinckley will celebrate the anniversary of the Prophet Joseph Smith at the meeting house on Saturday, December 23rd, says the Millard county Blade. The exercises of the reunion will commence at 10:30 in the morning with music by the Hinckley brass band. Robert W. Reese will be master of ceremonies. Elaborate programs have been arranged for both morning and afternoon exercises, and there will be an intermission of half an hour, interspersed with music by the band, and a picnic. The citizens of Deseret, Oasis and vicinity are cordially invited to attend and participate.

The question of removing the county seat of Sanpete from Manti is again being agitated. The proposition to change it to Mt. Pleasant was defeated by a vote of the people some time since, but the agitators for removal have not given up. The proposition of the county court to erect a new courthouse at Mantle has brought the question up for discussion again. The advocates of a change to Mt. Pleasant oppose the construction of a new building until after the matter of removal is again submitted to the people. The residents of Ephraim are also putting forth their claims to have the county seat located in that city.

It is the intention of the officers of the Latter-day Saints' college to establish immediately after the Christmas holidays, an art department in connection with that institution. It will be under the supervision and instruction of Mr. Herman H. Haag, whose reputation as an artist of ability is being firmly established. A commodious room in the Church University building on the college grounds will be fitted up for the use of the department, where instruction will be given in all branches of drawing and painting. Terms of tuition and time of instruction can be learned by communicating with Mr. Haag or Professor Done, principal of the college.

On Monday afternoon a fearful accident occurred at Hyrum, Miss Sophia Hartvigsen being the victim. The young lady was riding an unsafe horse. The animal became frightened, it is supposed, and the young lady was unable to control it. After riding for some distance at a rapid rate she was thrown, but her foot was caught in the stirrup, and she was dragged head downward for several hundred yards over the rough ground before her foot became disengaged. The attendant physician found that her spine was fractured, there had been concussion of the brain, and she was internally injured. Her chance of recovery is very small indeed.

The further hearing of the damage suit brought by Mrs. Jose Friske against the Rio Grande Western Railroad Co. was resumed before Chief Justice Zane and a jury December 15. The action was brought to recover $15,000 for the death of the plaintiff's husband, John Friske, who was killed on the defendant's line of railway near Castilla Springs. The facts were given in these columns upon the opening of the case. The arguments concluded at noon and after the judge's charge the matter went to the jury.

Friday, Dec. 15 they came into court with a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $10,000.

Judge Powers, in the course of general conversation with a News reporter Thursday said that during his recent journeyings in the East he was surprised to find such a changed feeling for the better in regard to Utah. The Mormon people were fast growing in favor, and the achievements of the Tabernacle choir in the singing contest at the World's Fair had done much towards helping forward the popularity of this Territory. As far back as New York he had heard the choir and its conductor highly praised, while not a few went so far as to say it fairly deserved the first prize. The judge added that the general prediction back east is that Utah has a bright future before her.

Owing to a broken wheel, the freight train due in Ogden on Sunday morning last was wrecked in Echo canyon while descending Castle hill just above Echo. Seventeen freight cars, laden with Midwinter Fair exhibits, oil, whiskey and general merchandise, were ditched, and the intermingled mass afterward caught fire and burned until the greater part was completely destroyed. A temporary track was constructed around the wreck by a force of men sent out for the purpose, and the passenger and freight traffic from this city east was on Monday transferred over the Oregon Short Line. Fortunately no person was injured in the wreck. This morning the trains pass over the Union Pacific as usual.

Central Trust Company of New York vs the Utah Central Railway company. In this case J. J. Duckworth and a number of other judgment creditors of the defendant company have obtained an order of the Third district court directing the receivers to permit a representation of the judgment creditors to inspect the minute and stock books of the Utah Central Railway company, and make copies of them. The other judgment creditors, whose attorneys' claims aggregate about $5000, and other creditors to the amount of about $1000, whose claims have not yet been reduced to judgment, are making an investigation which has for its object the discovery of a defense either to the whole or to a part of the debt secured by the mortgage given to the Utah Central Trust company.

The Liberal party in convention assembled at the Salt Lake Theater Monday, took up the question of "postponement of all political functions" and discussed the same for hours, after a subscription of $2,005 had been taken to be used in liquidating the party's indebtedness.

The speakers were Judge Powers leader of the party and chairman of the meeting, Judge C. C. Goodwin, C. E. Stanton, Morris Sommer, J. H. Harris, C. E. Allen, J. M. Denney, Frank Hoffman, Colonel M. M. Kaighn, Sheriff McQueen, E. B. Jones, City Attorney Hoge, J. L. Franks and Joseph Lippman. All of these gentlemen except Frank Hoffman were not only in favor of the party "postponing all political functions" outspoke for its "permanent dissolution."

Joseph Lippman offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Liberal party absolve the members of the Legislative assembly elected by them from any special allegiance.

The motion for permanent dissolution then carried. There were but two dissenting votes and one of them came from Frank Hoffman.

Resolutions were also adopted favoring immediate statehood for Utah and asking Congress to take speedy and favorable action on the bill providing for the opening for settlement of the Utah and Uncompaghe reservations.

Secretary Richards late Thursday, December 15, notified by letter Anders P. Eliason and William Watterson, of Logan, both Democratic candidates for councilmen to appear at his office on Tuesday next at 10 o'clock a. m., to cast lots for the office of city councillor for the next two years, they having received the votes at the last election.

N. S. Whitney and John Eyre of Parowan, who also received the votes for the office of city councillor of that place have been notified to appear in person or by proxy at Mr. Richards's office on Wednesday, the 27th, to ascertain in a similar manner which of them shall be entitled to the office.

On the same date the candidates for superintendent of schools for Iron county, M. H. Dalley and Henry Leigh, are expected to present themselves for the same test.

The right to the city collectorship for Morgan must be determined in the same way on the same date. The contestants are William W. Wilson and J. C. Brown.

The most difficult matter connected with the deluge of the votes at the last election comes from Mendon, Cache county, where a quadruple contest is on. Robert Sweeter, Mormon Bird, Geo. Goodwin and John A. Walker, all receiving the same number of votes for councilman. Secretary Richards finds nothing in the statutes that warrants him to allow the different candidates to draw lots. He says as neither of them have received a majority of the votes the people have elected no one. In that event it will be a case of hold over for the present officials.

BEAVER, U. T., Dec. 19.—In the Second district court here this morning several old cases were dismissed. A number of bills were approved by the court, and at 11:30 a. m. the grand jury with its foreman and clerk came into court and presented four or six more indictments, judging from the size of the bundle. On the court asking if that body had got through with all their business, the foreman answered "Yes," and presented their final report, showing that they had had before them thirteen witnesses, twenty-two local cases and seven United States; found fourteen indictments under the laws of the Territory, and ignored nine cases under the laws of the Territory. They had found five indictments under the laws of the United States and ignored two. They had examined the records of the court, which are now in first class condition, through the commendable labors of the present clerk, Mr. Cook, and the able assistance of R. Maeser, as the predecessor, Norris, had left them in frightful shape. They had examined the county jail and made suggestions of improvement in keeping the prisoners, etc., finishing their report by condemning the action of the United States Marshal in not paying witnesses and jurors per diem and mileage in United States cases, subjecting persons to the inconvenience of being compelled to sell United States scrip here at a big sacrifice in order to get home.

Judge Barch greatly commended the grand jury for their earnest and careful services. He left here at 1 p. m. today, as also Thurman and McGarry, with six prisoners and three aids. One of the most eventful terms for many years adjourned till the March or May term.

INDUSTRIES, COMMERCE AND MINES.

A carload of Utah hogs came in from Cache county today. They were sent by the Wellsville Co-operative store, and were for the Utah Slaughtering company, whose business is carried on at the corner of First South and Third West streets.

The slaughtering company is doing extensive and commendable work just now in the hog business, and is giving material aid to a Utah industry that should grow to mammoth proportions. The company has been making a test in the matter of feeding and fattening the porkers, and the result is such that it should awake every farmer in Utah to a good deal of thinking on the subject. A few weeks ago the company bought up all the live hogs in good condition that it could secure, and placed about a thousand of the porkers at the stock yards to be fed up and fattened.

J. L. Heywood, manager of the company, being asked today as to the results shown said: "We have put two pounds a day on every hog fed. The trial has been most profitable to us, and so it would be to the farmers if they would go at it. Some folks imagine that because this is not a 'corn country' we can't raise hogs profitably. But we can feed them barley and make money on it, as we have proven. They could be fed on peas and get good returns. The fact is, this is the country in which to raise hogs profitably. We have none of the damp and foggy atmosphere of sections whose altitude is less than ours, and Utah hogs are free from disease. Our product is better than that which can be produced anywhere else, for the reason that we have superior natural conditions."

The value of hog products used in Utah alone is $2,500,000 annually, and much the greater portion is paid for the imported article. Every dollar of this could and should be kept at home, and Utah should have pork, hams and lard for export. The amount of money that goes out for this product would, if kept at home, make a vast difference to the hard times.

The slaughtering company's premises are a picture just now. The large cold storage room, which has a capacity of 75 dressed hogs, 100 beeves and 100 sheep, was full this morning, and is emptied during the day in supplying the various butcher shops. Everything is neat, clean and convenient. In the factory building new machinery has been just added to increase the capacity for turning out Utah hams and lard. Of course it is well known that the Utah lard is far superior to the imported, and people who are acquainted with such matters take the home made article every time. It is clean and fresh. The company now put it up in neat tin buckets with the home label prominently marked. The Utah ham is of equally high quality and gets the preference in the market as far as it can be supplied. The trouble is that there are not sufficient hogs raised here to meet the demand, but the providing of a central market by the company may have the effect, as it certainly should, of stimulating an industry which has "millions in it" annually in cash saved to the Territory.

There is no longer any complaint of scarcity of money for loans, and at reasonable rates of interest. The fact is that there is a tendency the other way. In the East it is the plethora condition of the money market that is now cause of uneasiness. The recent action of Chicago banks in reducing the rate of interest on deposits indicates this strongly. In New York there is an agitation among bankers to reduce interest on deposits from 2 to 1½ per cent, because of the losses they are sustaining on general interest accounts. The supply of money pressing upon the New York loan market is reported as the largest ever known, while the demand for accommodation, backed by good security, is comparatively small. The occasion for this is the small amount of business being transacted and the gloomy outlook in industrial circles.

The "plethora condition" of the money market has not reached the West yet, though cash is as available as it was in the opening of the summer, before the financial crash came. Said a prominent Salt Lake banker today, "There is more money to loan today than is wanted by men having good collateral. Loans can be made to responsible parties for 10 and 12 per cent without difficulty, and enough borrowers cannot be found at that rate. The trouble is that there seems to be nothing in which a man dare embark at the present time. The mercantile business is at a low ebb; in fact, there is nothing made in it now. There are few manufacturing institutions doing anything, and the people are not producing that which will command the cash. The fact is there is now no opportunity for the money to get out to the masses. For the winter we shall have to be economical and hope for better conditions next season. It isn't scarcity of money that is troubling us now, but scarcity of business."

S. T. Godbe, son of W. S. Godbe, formerly of Salt Lake, is now in the East. Mr. Godbe carries in his pocket a $450,000 gold proposition that will astonish New York capitalists, says the Denver News of the 17th. He has succeeded in effecting a temporary lull in hostilities between two big mining companies at Keystone, both of which have located on a forty-foot vein of mineralized quartzite. The companies have agreed to part with the bonanza if $450,000 is offered. Mr. Godbe confidently expects to place the property.

"The vein has been developed," said he Saturday night, "to a depth of 200 feet, and at a moderate estimate $1,000,000 of clear profit is now in sight. More than $50,000 has been received for ore shipped from the two properties, although this shipment required a wagon haul of 150 miles to the nearest railroad."

In coming to Denver, the visitor made a trip of thirty miles over the completed portion of the Nevada Southern road. He says the region for 200 miles is awaiting the advent of the railroad to spring into prominence as one of the most remarkable mining regions the world has ever known. Every week new discoveries are reported, and as the ore is free milling and labor is plentiful, the prospects of rapid development are exceedingly bright. At Pioche, in the northern part of the district, the Mormons opened lead mines thirty-five and forty years ago, which are still good producers.

J. P. Jacobson, recent editor and publisher of the Millard County Blade, was in Salt Lake Dec. 14. To a News representative he stated that there was a grand revival in business in that part of southern Utah from which he hailed.

The citizens of Fillmore, he said, would next week organize a chamber of commerce, its purpose being to develop the resources of Millard county. The chamber would be incorporated as a large business concern with a capital stock sufficient to carry out the projects of those who were promoting it. The first stroke will be to build a branch railroad from Fillmore to Neel's station, on the Union Pacific, a distance of between thirty and thirty-five miles. The estimated cost, apart from the work of construction, is about $30,000. All labor is to be performed by citizens and turned in as stock, making it a great co-operative enterprise.

To further assist in this great work of contemplated development, a new weekly paper is to be started at Fillmore immediately. It will be called the Southern Utah Times, and will be non-partisan in politics.

Mr. Jacobson's business in the capital is to purchase a complete printing plant which he will take back with him at once. He will be the editor of the new newspaper venture and he says, as the whole county is back of it, success is sure to follow.

Owners of sheep are feeling anxious regarding the outlook for the winter. Some of the weatherwise say the season is going to be a severe one, and that it will not be long before heavy snows set in, to be followed by severe cold. Others insist that the winter will be a fairly open one. In the latter case the sheep owners will be all right; but should extremely severe weather come, there is danger of great loss. In Utah the winter ranges are fairly good, and an ordinarily hard season could be withstood if it did not continue too long. But in western Wyoming, where a considerable number of Utah men keep their flocks, the winter ranges are poor this season. The sheep have come from the fall range in good condition and if the winter is open they will be all right. If there are very heavy snows and cold spells the loss must be severe.

The condition of the wool market East is that of extreme dullness. Aside from any considerations of the effect which the proposed free trade measure will have, there is a feeling that in no event will manufacturers operate beyond most urgent wants while so much uncertainty clouds the outlook for manufactured goods.

Work has started at Park City in the Crescent mine, and quite a large number of miners will be put to work getting out first class ore. Teams will haul the ore from the mine to the railroad, and will haul coal up to the mine. It looks now as if all the large properties in the camp will have a full force of men on all winter.

The Crescent concentrator is working day and night, and a large amount of concentrates is being shipped to the smelters at Leadville.

The Anchor had two lots of 350 tons each to ship to Pueblo during the week, and the Silver King one lot to Mingo at Sandy.

Ontario and Daly with their usual shipments of ore and bullion keep up their end in fineshape.

The Utah Central has been taxed to its utmost during the week in supplying the various mines with Castle Gate coal. The coal miners' strike at Coalville was the main cause of the Castle Gate coal being shipped in here.

There has been speculation as to the probability of the Ontario leacher being completed, but nothing definite could be found out in regard to it. Material for this plant is constantly arriving, and no doubt in a short time active work will be commenced there.

Millard County Blade: A fine body of carbonate ore has been struck by Messrs. Frail and Lawson in their claim in Detroit. On Friday Joshua Bennett unloaded four and a half tons of high grade Grizzly ore from the Taylor range near the head of Silver canyon. The ore runs away up into the thousands, sulphurets and chlorides. S. F. Mount was seen on our streets yesterday and went out to Detroit. Mr. Mount says that it is the intention of himself and co-owners to recommence work on the Ilex mine in the near future. The Emma mine has resumed operations again, a full force of men being employed at present. We understand that Mr. Kalkuski is working the property under lease. Fine ore has been struck at the 320-foot level. John Barrett and Harry Thompson recently returned from the Deep Creek range with some fine specimens of gold-bearing quartz—a new discovery. Assays run from $15 to $20 in gold and $18 in silver, with a small percentage of copper.

The Central Utah Wool company, with headquarters at Manti, has forwarded to Washington a strong protest against the removal of the tariff on wool. The protest is signed by the officers of the company, Ezra Shumaker, president; James Metcalf, vice president; Albert Tuttle, treasurer; Lewis Anderson, secretary; L. R. Anderson, assistant secretary; and Luther Tuttle, W. G. Crawford and Niels Thompson, directors. The company claims to represent over three hundred wool growers.

The Colorado wool growers are reported by the newspapers of that state to be signing petitions to Congress against putting wool on the free list. The growers' associations already have forwarded strong protests to members of Congress against a change in the tariff provision regarding wool.

Manti Messenger: L. F. Becker shipped a carload of oats to Moab a few days ago. He intends making a trip to the city by the Grand in a short time, and when he returns will no doubt tell about the land of luscious fruits, big pumpkins and enormous melons. Joel Shumaker shipped a sack of alfalfa seed to Alabama this week. The cotton planters down south are beginning to find out that alfalfa is a valuable crop, and they want to make a trial. If the experiment proves a success the same parties will want a car load of seed next fall. The county court at its last session passed a resolution making the court a committee of the whole for taking steps for erecting a court house. The matter should be pushed to an early completion. The county owns the land for a building site and is able to erect a better house.

Red Lodge, Wyoming, Picket: About twenty families of Mormons have settled on the Indian reservation on Red Lodge creek, about ten miles from this city. This land was reserved to the Crows at the time the treaty was made, so that they could select their allotments there. If the Mormons can purchase the allotments from the Indians they might hold the land, otherwise they will be compelled to move off, as the laws are very strict in this matter. The Mormons are good settlers, and we trust they will buy the land.

An alum mine has been discovered in Palmyra and Indian Springs district, Lyon county, Nevada. The Times says samples which have been analysed contain 72 per cent of alum of the following composition: Alumina, 22.19; soda, 17.80; sulphur acid, 18.83; water, 80. The claim has not been prospected to any great extent, but the indications are that there is a big deposit of the material. It lies within six miles of the U. & C. railroad and can be put on the market at reasonable rates. It has been decided to obtain a quantity of the alum for an exhibit at the Midwinter Fair in San Francisco.

The Denver branch mint for the first ten days of the present month shows the largest gain in the history of the institution, at a time when placer mining is largely suspended by reason of the weather, says the Denver News. For the first ten days of December, 1892, the gold receipts reached $32,471.13. The figure for the first ten days of the present month is $81,321.09, showing a gain over last year equal to $48,849.96, or 148 per cent. This is exclusive of the product of many of the large mills and of all the smelters, as mint receipts are limited to gold bars, which exceed 500 in fineness.

Charles W. Osborne and J. C. Petty, California miners, the former the discoverer of the rich Gladstone gold mine, are to leave tomorrow for the famous gold mines of Johannesburg, South Africa. The success of numerous California miners in Africa has induced the gentlemen named to go to that country. They are of the opinion that South Africa at the present time offers great inducements to experienced men. They will go west, instead of east, to get to their new field, first sailing to Australia. From there they proceed to Cape Town.

Beaver Utonian: There is some talk among those who know whereof they speak, of starting the woolen mills next spring. This news will be hailed with delight by many. The interests of this institution will soon be talked over with the people and then the stockholders will act. Jesse Tye, with others, has discovered a fine ledge of excellent lithographing stone in Iron county. Slabs of this stone of almost any dimensions can be obtained. This is a valuable find and one meaning thousands of dollars if worked right.

A mining contest was filed in the local land office today by Mary McGrath, against the Silver King Mining company. On the 12th of October last the Silver King applied for a patent to the Fractions, Custer and King Extension consolidated mining claims in Uintah mining district, Summit county. Mrs. McGrath claims that this application is an infringement, upon her claim, known as the Dream lode. Rawlins & Critchelow are attorneys for the contestant.

Saratoga (Wyoming) Sun: J. A. Walden, who has been sickening a well at Col. Bob Pilson's store residence, on the east side, struck hot water yesterday morning at a depth of eighty-six feet, and the colonel feels very jubilant over the result. This strike is a flowing well and as it now flows from the surface is still quite warm after passing through two veins of cold water. The hot water vein will be cased and the cold water shut out.

Oscar Vandercook reports work as steadily progressing on his mining properties at Marysvale. The tunnel is now in 250 feet, and will be pushed till the body of ore is reduced. When the railway gets to the vicinity of Marysvale it is expected there will be a mining boom in that region, but not before.

BUFFALO, Wyo., Dec. 16.—A deal of considerable magnitude has been made in Bald mountain mining property. The Thunderer Mining company, backed by English capital, have paid $500,000 to the Bald Mountain Consolidated Mining company for 300 acres of mining ground, water and mill buildings.

LANDER, Wyo., Dec. 12.—J. D. Woodruff, one of the principal stockholders in the Burr mine has received $2000 in retorted gold, the result of a clean-up of thirty-five tons of ore. Active development work will continue all winter.

At the recent meeting of hotel men held at Colorado Springs it is said efforts were made successfully to get all the railroads entering Colorado to reduce their rates beginning next spring. Besides this $150,000 was raised to advertise the state among tourists.

George Prouse, a prominent mining man well known in Colorado and Utah, and one of the lessees of the Pony Express mine near Ouray, Col., had his leg broken and received other injuries by a falling rock in that mine Wednesday.

W. T. Ballard, a wealthy miner of Deer Lodge, Mont., died in San Francisco on Monday. He was a bachelor, and his wealth, about $500,000, goes to his sister, Mrs. W. H. Kirley, of Omaha.

Fifty thousand carcasses of frozen mutton were brought from Australia on the steamer Arawa, and landed in Victoria, B. C., on Wednesday.

Rollins & Sons, of Denver, have purchased the canal and irrigation pumping plant of the Colorado River Irrigation company of Arizona.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Written for this Paper.

SENATE ISHMAELITES.

U. S. SENATE PRESS GALLERY.

WASHINGTON, December 15, 1893.

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall,
 Humpty Dumpty had a great fall,
 And all the king's horses
 And all the king's men
 Can't set Humpty Dumpty up again.

Humpty Dumpty is senatorial courtesy. It has set on the wall of congressional legislation for years and bossed the Capitol. It has made new Senators tremble in their boots, and has not allowed them to speak until they have sat at least two years in the chamber. It has made them get down and lick the feet of the graybeards of our house of lords, and it has turned the United States Senate into a gentlemen's club. It was the silver debate that knocked Humpty Dumpty down, and the United States Senate of today is a new Senate, modeled upon new lines and filled with new, wide-awake men. That debate has set the blood to jumping in the sluggish veins of the old stagers and has made the babies of the Senate a set of iconoclastic Ishmaelites. The new Senate will call a spade a spade. The varnish and veneering which Edmunds, Conkling, Don Cameron, Arthur P. Gorman, Thomas A. Bayard and others put on to the etiquette of legislation has been torn off, and we are coming back to a healthy state of nature. The fights of this session are to be with naked fists. There will be more eye-gouging than kissing, and the young men from the west have already sharpened their teeth and oiled their tongues with vinegar for the fray.

I sit in the press gallery and look down upon them. There sits Carey of Wyoming, whom Senator Wolcott charged with wearing dirty linen, and concerning whom he quoted the Spanish proverb—
 "It's a waste of lather to shave an ass."

Wolcott may find that Carey has the kicking powers of an ass before he gets through, for he is a fighter from the wilds of the Rockies. He stands over six feet in his stockings. His fist is like a piece of beef, and his broad shoulders are topped off with a half-bald head, which looks for all the world like that of James A. Garfield. His eyes are a sharp blue. His manner is positive, and his muscles and feelings have been toughened by his having been the chief cow-boy of the state of Wyoming for a decade and more. He is a man of brains and common sense. Wolcott overdrew it when he said that he did not wear clean linen, for he is in fact as well dressed as any business man in the Senate. He is an eastern man and his native state is Delaware. He is well educated and well read, and he was in Congress six years before he came to the Senate. He has a good memory, and he will never forget Wolcott, and I doubt whether Wolcott ever forgets him.

I would like to see the two Senators fight it out in the ring. Wolcott is shorter than Carey, but he has the frame of a prize fighter, and he could knock down an ox with his fist. He weighs two hundred pounds, and as he walks about the Senate he seems to be carrying an invisible chip on his shoulder. He is an iconoclast as to the Senate, and he feels himself the equal of any man in the chamber. He is a good-looking man. His big round head is set well down upon a pair of broad shoulders. His strong jaw is well shaven. His mustache bristles with courage, and his blue eyes look fiercely out from under white brows. He has more nerve than any other man in the chamber, and he delights in high stakes, whether his game be politics or poker. You have heard how he lost $18,000 at Phil Daley's club house at Long Branch about five years ago. He staked this amount on one turn at faro, and when he had lost it his face did not change, and he left the room as though he had been playing for coppers. Wolcott is known in the west as a plunger. He has never cared for money, and his genius is such that he has been able to make and spend fortunes. He is not a man of coarse instincts. The blue blood which flows in his veins has come down from the most famous families of our colonial history, and he is one of the best bred men in the United States Senate. One of his ancestors signed the Declaration of Independence and another succeeded Alexander Hamilton as Secretary of the Treasury. Wolcott went to school at Yale. He has always been a great reader, and he has more rare books in his library than George Frisbie Hoar of Massachusetts. He is one of the best types of well-educated New Englanders who have gone out to the Rockies and fought their way up to fame and fortune.

The same may be said of Dubois, the Ishmaelite Senator from Idaho. He sits near Wolcott. He is a straight, tall, broad-shouldered giant, with hair as black as Wolcott's well-polished boots, and with eyes which fairly jump in their brightness and life. He has a straight, belligerent nose, and he keeps his mouth shut as he sits in his seat in the Senate. He is a graduate of Yale and his nerve is known from the fact that he was once United States marshal of Idaho, and had to keep all the roughs of the territory in check. He has no respect for traditions and he will probably be heard from before this session is over.

The queerest gamecock in the senatorial pit, however, is David B. Hill. He has hopped to the front during the first few weeks of his term, and he jumps up and crows fiercely at his own brother Democrats and at the fighting cocks on the other side of the chamber. He wears gaffs of steel and he cuts to kill. He bloodied the combs of those old roosters, Morgan and Gray, during the last silver fight and they now poke their heads under their wings when he opens his bill. Senator Hill is a typical fighter. His eyes are so deep set that his forehead cuts them in half as they peep out from under his brows. He is as ambitious as Lucifer, and, while he is not speaking hesitates in his seat and plots, now and then gripping his chair with his hand as a bright thought strikes him, and now figuring away on long slips of paper. He reads the newspapers and spends a great deal of time doing nothing.

Senator Hill has some ways which make me think of that other Ishmaelite who sits beside him as I write. I mean Senator Chandler of New Hampshire, whom Senator Proctor says he likes; but it is an acquired taste.

Chandler reminds you of a snappy Scotch terrier, while Hill has the aspect of a bull-dog. Chandler annoys you, but Hill bites to kill and hangs on to the death. Senator Chandler is the most nervous man in the Senate. He is as straight as a walking stick, and not much bigger. His head does not weigh more than Grover Cleveland's fist, and it is covered with peppery-gray hair, which covers the crown in the back and comes out into a full beard on the face. He has a dark complexion, nervous, snapping eyes, and vitriolic tongue. He does not weigh over 125 pounds, and had Senator Blackburn tried to break his neck instead of pulling his ear when he had that fuss with him not long ago, he could, I venture, have snapped it in two with a jerk. Senator Chandler has had a wide acquaintance with public men and measures, but he is no respecter of traditions nor of persons. He is not bad looking and he makes me think of one of those ripe red peppers. They are pretty enough, but when you bite into them you wish you hadn't.

Speaking of Chandler, just in front of him sits Eugene Hale, whose father-in-law was Zach Chandler. I don't think these two Chandlers were related, and Zach Chandler had more of the bulldog about his nature than the terrier. He was more of an Ishmaelite than Eugene Hale, who is a stickler for senatorial reverence, and who has evidently forgotten the days when he came to Congress and was nicknamed by his enemies "Jim Blaine's Little Bub." He has made a name for himself since then and his wife has brought him a fortune. She inherited one-half of her father's estate, and Hale is probably a rich man today, because Zach Chandler thought a thousand dollars was a bigger thing than a college education. His father had sent him to the common schools, and one day told him that he would give him $1,000 cash to start him in business, or, if he preferred, he could have instead of this a collegiate education. Young Zach chose the money, and he invested it in dry goods, and this formed the foundation of the millions he left. His daughter has now one of the finest houses in Washington, which was built with a part of the money, and Senator Hale lives there with her and her mother.

As to the rich men in Congress, the indications are that there will be less money spent during the coming social season than at any similar time for years. The gold bugs of the Senate are having their hard times and the investments of many of them are turning out badly. Congressional wealth is always overestimated, and some of the men on that floor below me who are supposed to be worth millions have, in fact, but little more than their salaries. Who would have thought that Charley Foster, when he was Secretary of the Treasury and was living within a stone's throw of the White House, was, in fact, on the verge of bankruptcy. He supposed he was worth a fortune and he had overdrawn his own bank account many times.

thousands. He had a way of giving bank checks to members of his family and they filled these out to suit themselves. This, of course, made no difference in his aggregate losses, but it showed a loose way of doing business which no one but a millionaire could stand. Secretary Rusk, who died the other day, was supposed here to be worth several hundred thousand dollars, but his estate footed up about fifty thousand dollars, and you can't tell anything what a man is worth here in Washington. In the rear of the Senate chamber, as I write, I see the son of Alexander T. Mitchell, the Milwaukee railroad king, who died worth, it was said, something like, $50,000,000. When his son first came to Washington he was unknown to the real estate men and when he wanted to rent a house costing several thousand dollars a year, one of them called upon Rusk and asked him if "this man Mitchell was good." Uncle Jerry replied, "If John L. Mitchell makes a deal with you to the extent of one million dollars and you bring the check here I will endorse it, but my indorsement won't make the check any better, for Mitchell is worth many times that amount." Since then Mitchell has had suits concerning his property in Milwaukee, and though he is probably still rich, one would have to go to Bradstreet to find out just how much or how little he is worth. Take the case of Cal Brice. He lives in one of the finest houses of Washington and he gives single dinners which cost $12,000 apiece. He may be worth a million. He may be a very rich man, and he probably is. But in talking with one of his old friends, General Gibson of Ohio, a short time ago he said to me: "No one on earth can tell what Cal Brice is worth. He has the nerve of a great speculator, but he is always as cool as the center seed of a cucumber. He can lose a million and not bat his eye. His face is like an iron mask. It never changes. His life has been filled with ups and downs. Today he may be worth millions and tomorrow he may be feeling around in all his pockets for coppers, but from his actions you would not know the difference. He is one of the biggest plungers in the country and has enough shrewd business ability to generally come out on top."

Rich men, in fact, are dropping out of the Senate. You can now count the millionaires on your fingers and the great majority of the body will not run over $100,000 mark. Most of the Southerners have nothing to speak of, though Vance has a big estate through his wife. Senator Morgan owns a plantation. Pugh has a big farm, which he work with negroes in Alabama, and as Senator Walthall was making $10,000 a year at the time he was elected he was probably saving something. George Vest is not a rich man. Roger Q. Mills cannot afford to keep a carriage; and Senator Joe Blackburn lives at a hotel. I don't know what Isham G. Harris is worth and I never looked upon him as having the money making instinct, but I learned the other day that he lost $150,000 by the war and that he had made all the money himself. His father was a poor farmer of Tennessee. He had a piece of clay land and ten negroes to work it and young Isham had to fight his own way. He began as a clerk and soon had a store of his own. When he was quite a young man he had amassed $7,000, when the bank failed and he lost it all. He took a rich partner and in two years had regained all that he had lost, and he went on from this point until he had made the fortune which he had at the time of the war. He is probably well to do today, but he lives very simply in an unfashionable quarter of the city near the Capitol.

The Senate grows smaller the closer you get to it. It has shown its humanity to the people and its divinity is fast going to the dogs. Look at the careers of these men below me and exclaim:

"Now in the name of all the Gods at once,
Upon what meat have these our Cæsars fed
That they have grown so great?"

They are fat and famous now, but they had to hustle in the days gone by and they may yet have to hustle in the days to come. Senator Perkins of California had to shin up the masts of sailing vessels in all kinds of weather, and he scrubbed the decks with the fear of a rope's end in his eye. Senator Peffer grubbed stumps out of the soil before he got a chance to stand upon the stumps and farm with his mouth. He had to hustle for the victuals which made the lean meat which covers his bones, and he was making $25 a week as editor of a farmers' paper when he got from the legislature of Kansas this Senate job, which pays him $5,000 a year. Hansborough lives at the Cochran hotel now, but he was half starved when he cleaned type and turnek the press as a printer's devil, and his colleague, Senator Roach, was a quarter-master's clerk. John Sherman carried a surveyor's chain for daily wages. Cal Brice had to count the coppers while he was teaching school, and the first year of his law practice hardly paid for his salt. Pettigrew worked as a common laborer when he first went to Dakota, and when Kyle was preaching, up to the time of his election, a silver dollar was ten times as big as it is now. Don Cameron, though his father was rich, began his life as a bank clerk and he soon became a bank president. John Mitchell of Oregon asked a carpenter to trust him for a pine table which he wanted to use for his office when he first hung out his shingle in Portland and was refused on account of his poverty. Palmer of Illinois worked his way through college, and Wilson of Iowa made his first money by working at harness making and studying between the stitches. Men who graduate from such schools are usually humble, but the Senate would corrupt an angel.

These old Senators like to put on airs now, but they had to get down and root for their living in the days of their youth. Nearly every one of them has had to trot about and ask for votes at some time in their life, and not a few have risen stage by stage from being justices of the peace and prosecuting attorneys up to the Senate. They have been just as tricky in their ways as other men, and their boyhood has been as full of queer pranks. I was in Mount Vernon, Ohio, last month and they pointed out to me there an old building in which John Sherman lived with his uncle when he was a boy. It was at Mount Vernon that Sherman got a part of his education, and one of the stagers of the town told me a story concerning him. He said: "John was a tall, bony, black-haired youth, who was full of fun and was always ready to play a trick upon his teacher. He had a set of schoolmates who were as bad as himself, and some of their doings created decided sensations. One I remember was out of the ordinary. The teacher was named Lord, and one day the boys went out in the country and picked up a sheep that had been killed by the dogs and brought it in town with them. They did this after dark. Taking the sheep to the school room they put it through the window and crawled in after it. They then tied it in the teacher's chair so that its front feet just rested on the desk and its face looked soberly out over the school room. Upon its nose they fastened the teacher's spectacles which he had forgotten and upon a blackboard over its head John wrote in Latin a phrase which translated read:

"A sacrifice to the Lord."

"The schoolmaster, Professor Lord, was very angry when he found it, but they boys were good students and he forgave them."

FRANK G. CARPENTER.

Written for this Paper.

WAKEMAN'S WANDERINGS.

LONDON, Nov. 30, 1893.—There is much about Norwegian scenery, scenes and incidents worth relating discursively which is likely to prove helpful to succeeding travelers in their experiences, or entertaining to readers who can only travel in this stern and mighty land of the North by the not unpleasant journeyings of fancy with kindly tempered writers for their willing guides.

There are no roadside shrines, save of nature's exclusive handiwork, in all Norway. Indeed one traveling along the grand stone roadways almost feels a longing for those mute connecting links of human and spiritual interest. Groups of peasants kneeling before cross or effigy, or beside consecrated fountain, are here never seen. The only objects by the wayside to possibly pique curiosity or interest are upright stone posts on which are cut or painted enigmatic figures. Not even an antiquarian sentiment can be conjured by these. Their significance is very great however to the landed proprietors, for they relate with nice exactitude the number of metres each is compelled to keep in perfect repair in summer and wholly clear of drift snow and other obstructions in winter. All law is enforced with absolute impartiality in Norway, and that is why the country has the finest roads in the world and has also been transformed, in scarcely more than a generation of time, from a nation of drinkers and almost sodden drunkards, with all accompanying evils, to a land of sobriety, cleanliness, amplitude and content.

Jordbært or strawberries almost constitute a national dish in Norway. Indeed I have often thought that these matchless berries, "A" the sweeter they are wee," are a providential compensation and provision to the folk of the high latitudes. I have found them in my wanderings growing wild in greatest luxuriance in high latitudes, in Norway, the Highlands of Scotland and the Shetland and Orkney islands, even in dreary Labrador, and in Manitoba where, in the early days, I saw miles of the then trackless prairies crimson in hue from the ripening fruit. They are so universal and plentiful in their wild state that there is no necessity for their cultivation. The markets of Bergen, Stavanger and Thronthjem are fairly odorous with this delicious fruit. At every station, at every home and in every hotel in Norway they are securable morning, noon and night, and at all places rich cream is served with them. Wherever travelers may go, upon busy or unfrequented highways, or even along lone mountain paths, they are everywhere for the picking; and if one is too lazy to help himself to nature's largess, blue eyed, flaxen-haired children are everywhere at hand with tempting baskets which are yours for the most trifling return in coin you are willing to bestow. Indeed so universal is this custom of strawberry giving and selling that a perfect typification of Norwegian childhood in summer would be formed, in painting or sculpture, by the figure of a ragged, smiling-faced, yellow-headed urchin standing at the roadside with upheld basket of jorbært in tiny, horny hands and hopeful, expectant look in kindly eyes of blue.

The tiny Norwegian grave-yards beside the mountain churches will have a peculiar interest to every traveler in out of the way districts. They have a certain primness, desolation and yet wild and uncouth seeming of nature's kindly prodigality of every living thing in green about them that give them a strange and impressive character. The churches themselves are curious little boxes, and possess a peculiar air of austerity and solemnity, as if built with the sole purpose of contrasting the infantile effort of man with the majestic evidences of the Creator's power everywhere surrounding them. The churchyard, which is also the graveyard, usually surrounds the entire church, and is often filled or richly bordered with mournful firs and evergreens. The numberless high, rounded and prettily-sodded mounds can scarcely be seen for the wild maze of evergreens, plants and flowers. Beside nearly all the graves, or family burial-plots—a peculiarity I have not noticed in any other country—are benches or rustic wooden settles, to which the mourners come and muse among the memories of the loved ones at rest beneath. There are few headstones. Instead there are crosses of blackened wood, intensifying the solemn suggestiveness of the place. The Norse are not given to effusive inscriptions, and the transverse beam of each black cross usually has but two lines. The first begins with fodt (born), and the second with dode (died). There is only occasionally added a verse of Scripture, upon the pediment, expressing the universal Christian faith in immortality.

In leisurely traveling through Norway, where one from vagarous impulse or necessity is likely to often come to house of bonder, cabin of peasant or hut of mountain sæter, there are certain formalities of etiquette well to be borne in mind. The civil stranger is almost joyously welcomed in any home. After the wonderful hand-shaking of the first greeting is over, the housewife immediately prepares refreshment of coffee and smørbrød, or buttered bread. You are supposed to wholly ignore these agreeable proceedings. When they are about ready for your entertainment, you must rise and profess to be in readiness to depart. Then the housewife is voluble in entreaties for you to remain. Reluctance and entreaty must now have full play until you are overpowered by hospitable entreaty and consent, after renewing handshakings to remain. At the peasants' cabins and the sæters a similar formality must be observed. The peasant women or the sæter girl will run forward to meet you, always bearing a vessel of fresh milk in her hand. You must at first refuse with some expression or gesture conveying the idea that you are unworthy of the attention. The women volubly insist that you must accept her kindly offering. Then you take the vessel, but only the slightest sip of milk, and return it with further manifestations of unworthiness. This enables her to further urge and insist, whereupon you accept the civility heartily and take a long draught. You will be a fortunate traveler, then, if you are not forced, by the woman's fears that you are not quite sure of your welcome, to drink not a pint but a gallon!

Scenically considered Norway presents such limitless varieties and countless numbers of tremendous spectacles that it is difficult to select even a few which may be regarded as pre eminent for grandeur and sublimity. Perhaps the great gorge of Romsdal furnishes the most amazing number of water falls to be seen from any one point in all the world. The spectacle of from a score to half a hundred, each from 500 to 3000 feet in height; a mighty torrent, the river Rauma, thundering along beside you, itself in places a series of tremendous cascades, solid walls of stone rising precipitously at either side from 3000 to 4000 feet; wherever a break in the gorge occurs, either some weird horn of stone piercing the sky line above, or endless mountain chains showing caps of glittering white; and this not for a little distance, but for nearly fifty miles—is all so different from any other scene in any other land, so bewildering in its very superabundance of grandeur, and almost so appalling either in sight or memory, that the successive scenes are impossible of fitting description by writer or painter, and almost incomprehensible to one who looks in awe upon them.

Another scene possessing similar features and yet with some added elements of majestic grandeur is found in the Nærodal, where that shorter but still more intensely gloomy gorge opens out, above Gudvangen, upon the sombre, mountain-walled Naerofjord. The Nærodal is but eight miles in length; but its walls are so close; its two famous waterfalls, the Stalheim fos and the Sivil fos are such mighty and lo'ty exhibitions of force and power, as though the upper ice fields were all pouring over the cliffs their combined pulverized masses; the river—a mad river always roars through the wondrous Norwegian dals—is so foaming and thunderous; while the mighty mountains rise to such awful heights there above your head, the kingly Jordalsnot with its oval crown towering precipitously above all; that the whole scene is one of surpassing solemnity and unparalleled savage grandeur. It is said that there is but one other scene in all the Old World equaling this Naerodal, and that is the Pass of the Taurus in Asia Minor.

Norway is, above all else, a land of mighty waterfalls. None is so wide or discharges such a vast volume of water as Niagara, but there are perhaps five hundred or one thousand that the most hurried traveler cannot fail of seeing, which are several times higher; scores are ten times as high; and the waters of several have a perpendicular descent of twenty times the fall of those of our American "thunder of water!" I have no doubt that there are still in unexplored districts of this wondrous Northland far more majestic waterfalls from glacier-melting heights than have yet met the tourist's wondering or impassive gaze; for the whole face of Norway is simply an ice mountain rent and torn into almost measureless fissures and gorges between which creep arms of these a, and into which everlastingly descend torrents, and waterfalls from the melting ice-plateaus and mountains above.

The Lougen and Glommen rivers, the largest two in Norway, discharge their united waters in the Sarpen-fos, a more noble waterfall than that of Schaffhausen on the Rhine. In the upper Telemarken district is the Riukad-fos, literally the reeking or steaming waterfall, which drops straight from its source over 800 feet into a gulf or wall-surrounded cauldron, so clogged with fleece-like folds of vapor that its bottom cannot be seen. In sailing along the fiords you can count hundreds of falls from 1,500 to 2,000 feet high; so high that the water is often pounded by the resistance of the air into spray, from spray into mist, and this into such ghostly wreaths of vapor that they disappear into nothingness before the fiord or valley level is gained. I have myself clambered along the edges of the Romsdal cliffs with my post boy guide, Peter Larsen, and discovered scores of falls, entirely unknown to the guide-books, or travelers of the valley road below, which fall into churn-like cavities from 1,500 to 2,000 feet in depth, reappearing at the Rauma river-edge in out-shooting cascades, or perhaps pounding through cavernous tunnels of their own making to show to the beholder upon the high-way like a mass of white coral set hundreds of feet up against the side of the black and onyx-like precipitous valley walls.

The most impressive waterfalls of Norway so far known are the Voering-fos and the Skjeggedal-fos. Both of these are in the Hardanger district, noted also for its sublime fiord and mountain scenery, the latter comprising the vast Folge-fjord or glacier field, and its handsome, hospitable, picturesque and thoroughly characteristic peasantry. The Voering-fos is reached, from Vik, on the Eid fiord, a branch of the noble Hardanger. The going and coming, leisurely done, require a day. You ride in the saddle to the little Oisford; are rowed upon this to the Maabo Farm, and here other ponies are secured for a long and dangerous scramble up and down a wild and broken mountain into the exquisite valley of Maabo. It is like a giant bowl carved out of ebony with an emerald bottom. The sides rise thousands of feet to fields never free of snow and ice. The Bjoreia river brawls and foams through the valley. At one side is a wild ravine 3,000 feet deep. Into this pours the Voering-fos from the altitude of 2,225 feet. The upper masses are split and broken for 1,200 feet, where they accumulate in a gigantic rock basin, and, then with added tremendous force, make their final awful plunge for between 700 and 800 feet. Aside from the appallingly savage surroundings and horrible roaring of the almost rock surrounded cauldron, the Voering-fos possesses a weird fascination from the mighty volume of water rebounding from the rocky, narrow-pent bottom of the gorge in a dense column of dazzling foam and vapor, nearly as high as the waterfall itself.

Something like the journey to the Voering-fos, that to the Skjaeggedal-fos is made by land and water, but ponies cannot be utilized. One must walk. The scenery all the way from the hamlet of Odde is surpassingly grand, comprising many other important waterfalls, lordly mountain peaks, somber gorges, and rearward, the vast spectral expanse of the Folgefond ice-fields. The last part of the journey is by row boat across a magnificent mountain lake, 1,500 feet above the sea, the Rigidalsvnd, into which the Skjaeggedal-fos really pours its waters. The total height of this lion of Norwegian waterfalls does not exceed that of the Voering fos, but its surroundings are more weirdly savage and grand. The water descends at first in a score of veil-like streamers, dazzling white against ebony black. From the vast and terribly thunderous abyss where these leap and rebound with frantic fury one mighty fall descends. From the second great whirlpool the entire volume is discharged, something like the Niagara rapids, though in steeper cascades, into the Ringedalsvand still a thousand feet below the bottom of the great fall. From the foot of the latter the entire spectacle is like tremendous streamers of white dropped from glittering glaciers, which crown the mountains behind and above, at last gathered into one mountain-high fleecy fold, which in turn is whipped and torn into vagrant billowy masses to the steely blue lake far below.

Not having traversed the glacier fields of Norway, I can have no knowledge of the vast and overpowering scenes that may be gained from frozen heights. But all things considered, and admitting the human element into scenic effects with its always warmth of influence, I believe the two finest views to be had in Norway are at Molde, and the "King's View" from above Sundvalden. From an easily accessible great elevation behind Molde one can gaze not only upon human habitations beneath the sea sweeping in through the tremendous walls of the fiord, curious and quaint craft which ply along the coast, hundreds of picturesque islands, but a vast amphitheatre of mountains rising tier upon tier, until lost in glittering heights which blend with the sky and clouds. Among these weird, far heights are the fantastic Romsdalshorn, the Matterhorn of Norway; Snaehatten with its white and dazzling hamlet; the weird and mighty horn of Perpuatind; the serrated glittering pikes of the Langfjeld, and those mighty still unknown and untracked heights at the head of that watery way of black shadows, the lone and sombre Sor Fiord. A no more bewildering array of Alpine peaks can be found in Switzerland; while all Swiss scenery lacks the wondrous magic of the sea.

From the inn at Sundvolden one may ascend on foot the huge mountain which gives access to King's View. The latter portion of the ascent is exceedingly difficult. When near the top, but not expecting the sudden surprise in story, on turning a sharp angle of the rock, the whole mighty picture is instantly spread before you. First is a tremendous fertile plain, studded with lakes, the lakes with islands, the land between with hamlets, farms, churches and all the splendid evidences of human thrift and home provision; and this vast plain is encircled by lines of forest, then tiers of eternal stone ribboned with waterfalls, then mountains of rock, mountains of snow, mountains of ice—the whole melting into pictures as filmy, fantastic and ethereal as the substance of half-dreamed dreams. I know of no other such extensive view in all the world; no other at once so exquisitely beautiful, so incomprehensively vast, and so surpassingly sublime. From Aetna alone is there scene for even comparison. That one the sea cramps and confines and compresses into a narrow strip of land in which live brigands and serfs. Here are a free, happy and prosperous people, on whom it almost seems that the God is actually smiling through the ineffable glow of dazzling mountain tops.

EDGAR L. WAKEMAN.

ST. JOHNS STAKE CONFERENCE.

Conference was held in St. Johns on the 3rd and 4th of December, 1893, presided over by Elder David K. Udall, president of the Stake. Meetings were held in the assembly room at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., and a Stake Priesthood meeting at 7 p.m. on Sunday.

On Monday meetings were held at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. There were a few brethren present from the Snowflake Stake, of whom Elders John Hunt, John R. Hulet and L. M. Savage addressed the congregation. All the Bishops of the Stake were present and reported the condition of their wards.

The people generally are feeling well and trying to live their religion. The crops in some of the settlements were quite poor this season, while in others they were fair.

The names of the general authorities were presented to the conference, and also the Stake authorities, all of whom were unanimously sustained. The statistical report of the Stake for the quarter ending November 30th was also read.

The instructions given by Elder David K. Udall, E. N. Freeman, and all the brethren who addressed the conference was very timely and encouraging to the Saints.

CHAS. JARVIS,
Stake Recorder.

ST. GEORGE STAKE CONFERENCE.

A very satisfactory quarterly conference of this Stake, under the presidency of Daniel D. McArthur and counselors, closed shortly after 4 p.m. on the 11th.

Preliminary meetings of the High Priests and Stake Priesthood, with the Stake meeting of the Relief Society, convened in St. George on Saturday, the 9th inst.

We were blessed with the presence and free ministry of Elders Heber J. Grant and Rufus S. Wells at the High Priests' and Stake Priesthood gathering.

On Sunday and Monday sessions of the conference were held each morning and afternoon; also on Sunday evening the Stake conference of the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Improvement associations and Sabbath schools was held.

At every one of these Sunday and Monday meetings, either Brother Grant or Brother Wells, and at some both of them, spoke to the people. In addition to their ministry of the Word we had the testimony and the synopses of the experience of two recently returned missionaries—Elder James B. Bracken, Jr., from the Irish mission, and Elder Orrin H. Snow, from the Southern States mission.

Those of our own home brethren who addressed the Saints were in no way behind the usual spirit and power of their holy callings in ministering the good word.

No changes were made in any of our Stake or ward officers. The general authorities of the Church and the Stake authorities were sustained by the unanimous vote of the assemblage.

JAMES G. BLEAK,
Clerk of Conference.

LADIES' CONFERENCE AT OGDEN.

Friday morning at 10 o'clock the conjoint quarterly conference of the Relief Societies and the Y. L. M. I. A. of the Weber Stake was held in the Tabernacle, this city. There were representatives from nearly all the country settlements. President Jane S. Richards called the large assembly to order and spoke for a short time.

At 11 a.m. Presidents Wilford Woodruff and Joseph F. Smith, with Elder F. D. Richards, of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, arrived from Salt Lake. Emily S. Richards was also present. The stand was also occupied by the Presidency of the Stake, leading Bishops and members of the High Council, also by society presidents and visitors.

President Shurtliff welcomed the visitors in a short speech.

Sisters Higbee, Bingham and Richards made some remarks, whereupon President Woodruff addressed the congregation, dwelling principally upon the past history of the Church and the fulfillment of the predictions of the Prophets. He was followed by President Joseph F. Smith, who spoke of the mixture of truth with error in the religions of the world. One truth is not enough to bring salvation. Belief alone in Christ is not enough, neither is a faith not manifested by good works sufficient unto salvation. These points were strikingly illustrated. The candidate for salvation must keep all the commandments of God.

Recess was taken at 12 o'clock. Before 1 o'clock p.m. the house was packed with people. Many remained in the building during the recess, and lunch was served by the ladies to all who desired.

The first speaker in the afternoon meeting was President Woodruff, who delivered a very interesting discourse on a variety of practical points. He was followed by Sister Emily Richards, who gave a report of her labors at the World's Fair. Other speakers were Bishop McQuarrie, F. A. Brown, Ruthinda E. Monch, and F. D. Richards. President Woodruff pronounced the benediction.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 12.—[Special].—Utah's statehood bill was taken up in committee of the whole at half past one. The reading of the bill occupied twenty minutes.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—[Special].—The House resumed the consideration of the Utah bill at 1:30 o'clock.

At 2:30 Rawlins obtained unanimous consent for the reading of the bill by sections.

At quarter before four o'clock the committee arose and reported the bill for passage with amendments.

Wheeler, of Alabama, moved the passage of the bill and demanded the previous question.

The House voted viva voce. There was a full vote of both sides and only two votes in the negative, one from each side.

The Utah statehood bill was declared passed. C. K.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 11.—A Bremen, Tex., special to the Republican: Seven miles south of here yesterday Mose Miller beat his wife because she refused to live with him. She reported the matter to Anthony Harvey and Tom Harvey, her father and brother. They called on him to remonstrate, and Miller shot both with buckshot, killing the father instantly and fatally wounding the brother.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—The Penrhyn district, North Wales, is in a state of anarchy which has attracted little attention in London, and so far has passed practically unnoticed in parliament. The trouble is due to renewed attempts to force the payment of the state church parsons' tithes, which the non-conformist farmers steadily refuse to pay. Similar efforts two or three years ago caused serious riots and bloodshed, and it looks as though these events would be repeated.

BERLIN, Dec. 12.—About 500 anarchists, including many women, met here yesterday evening. The police took great precautions to prevent disorder. It was noticed that the anarchists who attended were despondent, as they fear the Paris outrage will lead to international measures against them.

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—The World will say tomorrow: It is asserted there is a project in New York to equip a war vessel for Venezuela and capture the important seaports and towns and gain possession of the custom houses. The revolution movement in Venezuela against Crespo is in the hands of groups of exiles in New York, Paris and the West Indies, which are abundantly supplied with money. In the event of success of the revolution it is believed General Peraza, now living in Brooklyn, will be made President of the Republic.

BOSTON, Dec. 12.—Nathan Mathews (Dem.) was re-elected mayor of Boston by a plurality of about 7000. The city voted for liquor license.

The elections throughout the state today for municipal officers and on the license question resulted generally in Republican victories and the adoption of license.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12.—Cashier A. J. Robinson of the wholesale stamp department of the Chicago postoffice was the victim of a daring and skillful robbery at 7:30 o'clock tonight. The exact sum of money stolen is not made known, but it is believed to be several thousand dollars.

Robinson was alone in the office when a signal rap on the door, such as is only given by employees, was heard. Opening the door, Robinson was confronted by a stranger, who said: "Does your cash balance?"

"No," said Robinson, "it doesn't." The stranger then said: "I sent my boy over today for stamps, and he was given too many. I've brought them back. This will probably balance your cash."

Robinson extended his hand for the stamps and received a blow on the head with a club, which knocked him senseless. He was unconscious when found three hours later. The thief left no clue.

As the robber escaped through a window he dropped money packages containing $680.

HONOLULU, Dec. 4, via Victoria B. C., Dec. 12.—[Copyright by the Associated Press.] Since the arrival of the steamer Warrimoo, on the 24th ult., political events have followed each other with startling rapidity. When the Warrimoo arrived, with Cleveland's ultimatum, the royalists were jubilant and the annexationists at once began to carry out their previous plans of forcible resistance in case the China, which arrived three days later, brought instructions to Minister Willis for restoration of the monarchy with the aid of United States troops.

Within twenty-four hours 600 annexationists assembled at the drill shed behind the executive building. The meeting was short but enthusiastic.

After the undecided character of the news received by the China, the opinion prevailed, until the arrival of the Australia, that instructions would be received by a later vessel for immediate restoration.

Pending the Australia's coming, several important cabinet council meetings were held and it was determined to meet the proposed restoration of monarchy by the combined forces of the government. Orders were at once given to those governments having, or to have hereafter, warships in the Honolulu harbor, that no nation would be allowed to land troops without the written consent of the provisional government. This notice was served upon the foreign diplomatic corps in writing on the 28th of November. It is intended to be final from this date. Two hundred and fifty men were put to work fortifying the executive building. The verandas were fortified with three tiers of sand bags. The roof will be similarly treated. Companies of sharpshooters, all trained men, will occupy the four corner towers from the basement to the roof. The preparation thus far made will allow the government to handle with great resistance a force of from 750 to 800 troops in the executive building, and ammunition and stores have been provided to withstand a continuous attack for one month or more, should hostilities break out. The water supply cannot be cut off, as the executive building is supplied by the artesian well on the grounds.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 12.—The steamer, Leander, with sixty patients from the Stockton insane asylum on board, collided in the San Joaquin river near Pittsburg with the steamer J. D. Peters. The Leander sank, but all on board saved themselves by climbing on board the Peters.

ROME, Dec. 12.—The pope's encyclical on Bible studies holds that the Bible is inspired in whole and in detail and that if it seems in certain points to be out of accord with science, this is either due to bad interpretation, or the science is mistaken.

LONDON, Dec. 12.—A hurricane is reported in the south of England. The Channel mail boat was unable to enter Folkestone harbor and was obliged to proceed to Dover. A boat in Plymouth harbor capsized and four men-of-war were drowned. The gale is very severely felt in London.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 13.—A Missoula, Mont., special says Ben Keeley, the trapper who assisted the Carlin party to escape from the Clearwater county, claims that the abandonment of Colgate was a cowardly desertion, young Carlin having even refused to let Colgate have any food although he was at the time able to walk slowly. Keeley's whole story is very derogatory to young Carlin, Himmelwright and Pierce. He is suing General Carlin for the reward.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Dec. 13.—State Veterinarian Holcomb says that in round numbers there were 233,000 cattle received in Wyoming in 1892, while the number this year is but 128,000. This is a decrease of nearly 100 per cent.

CHICAGO, Dec. 13.—As a result of the publication of the fact that Chicago is preparing to take care of the unemployed for the winter, tramps are flocking to the city by every train from all directions. The police authorities are taking measures to meet them as they come and face them about.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—The House committee on public lands has reported favorably a bill allowing Montana to select the lands she was granted under the enabling act before they are surveyed, the title not to pass until the survey is made.

EL PASO, Tex., Dec. 13.—A Deming special to the Times: A courier brings a report of a battle between the troops and revolutionists near Colonia Jauavece, last Friday. The soldiers encountered a hundred rebels under Stanta Ana Perez. The latter had the advantage of position and fought from ambush. The rebels lost twenty-five and the soldiers one hundred. Both sides had many wounded.

DENVER, Dec. 13.—A dispatch was received from New York today announcing that D. H. Moffatt and Eben Smith had sold the Victor mine, one of the best at Cripple creek, to an English syndicate. The price was not stated, but it is supposed to be $1,000,000. Moffatt and Smith paid $80,000 for the mine and it has yielded a profit of about $50,000.

The Mary Davin mine at Cripple creek was sold today to George Mechen of Chicago for $50,000.

CAPE TOWN, Dec. 18.—Advices from Buluwayo say Major Forbes, with a small detachment, arrived at Shanghai river without incident. Captain Wilson was deputed to pursue Lobengula with an advance party. He left camp late in the evening and overtook the king's wagons at midnight. The natives were ambushed in expectation of the British advance, and opened a hot fire from the ambush on both sides of Captain Wilson's party, which, in the face of superior numbers, was forced to retire, fighting steadily. Captain Wilson dispatched a messenger to the camp of Captain Forbes for reinforcements, but meantime the Shanghai river had suddenly risen and cut off the advance party from the main body of Major Forbes's command. It is feared the force of Wilson is in a perilous position, and Forbes is trying to make a crossing higher up the river and go to his relief.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—A dispatch to the Times from Lisbon says: "The steamship Nile, which left Rio de Janeiro on December 5th, has arrived at Pernambuco, bringing news of the arrest of the crew of the French steamer Parahyba.

The advices say the crew were ordered shot without trial, although there was no proof that they intended to join the insurgents under Admiral Mello. Incensed at the injustice of the sentence, the condemned soldiers at the moment of execution cried in one voice, "Long live Mello." This produced such an impression that the government troops in the firing party tried not to hit the prisoners, and only five were killed. The soldiers were ordered to fire again, but refused. The remainder of the crew were, therefore, imprisoned.

OMAHA, Dec. 18.—General Cowen, general counsel for the government in the Union Pacific receivership, says the application for $18,000 salary each for the receivers will never come up again. The court will see how much actual labor falls to each of the five receivers and will in time fix their respective pay.

BERLIN, Dec. 14.—It is announced that out of 190 salted American hams examined in central market in this city, one was found on December 9 full of trichinæ in a chrysalis state. It is thought probable that some trichinæ might be alive, and experiments tending to demonstrate whether or not such trichinæ might spread an infection will be made by Herr Hertwig, director of meat inspection. The ham has been handed to the police.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 14.—Billings, Mont., Pioneer Press special: The Crows are out again. Nearly all the young men of the tribe, belonging to the Brior mountain branch, the one who made trouble last spring on the newly ceded strip, are massed at the head of Stillwater creek, of the reservation, and killing cattle wantonly. Agent Wyman has refused to make an effort to drive them in and refers the sheriff to the governor for aid.

The stockmen have a detachment in the field, and have declared their intention to take the law into their own hands and protect the stock, even if they are obliged to kill off half the Crow tribe.

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 14.—A diamond as large as a pea was found by a farmer near Oregon. The genuineness is verified by geologists at the state university.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 15.—The large span of the Jeffersonville and Louisville bridge across the Ohio river fell at half-past 10 o'clock this morning. The bridge would have been completed in a few days. Fifty men were thrown into the river and a number were drowned. It is estimated that all the way from twenty-five to seventy-five bridge timbers, the false work of iron, and the mangle of humanity is lying in a heap in the river. Several thousand people line the shore on either side and the boats near the spot are crowded. Heroic efforts are being made at rescue. The number killed will not exceed twenty. The bridge has been under construction a number of years, several times interrupted by lack of funds. Three years ago, during the construction of the pier, an accident happened in the caisson by which twelve lives were lost. Accidents have been frequent, and it is said that fifty persons in all have lost their lives by them. The bodies of Ed. Simmons and ten unidentified have been recovered.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15.—The bill for the admission of Utah will probably be opposed in the Senate by its old antagonist, the Ladies' Home Missionary Society, which is seeking an opportunity to be heard by the Senate committee on territories. The members of this society take exception to the statements which have been made very freely by the advocates of the bill that polygamy is dead in Utah, and say they have positive information that the contrary is the case. They have obtained this information from the missionaries scattered through that Territory. The information is to the effect that the practice is not carried on as openly as formerly, but in places remote from the towns and centers of habitation there is little or no abatement in the custom. They also say that in the towns and cities there is a covert observation of the old doctrine, and that ever, where among the Mormon people there is a feeling in favor of polygamy, just as strong as in the palmiest days of Mormonism, and that where this feeling is suppressed at all it is only done because of fear of the federal authorities. The ladies argue that if the Territory should be admitted as a state and its authority removed, the Mormons would control the state organization and it would be a short time only before polygamy would again be openly taught and practiced as one of the tenets of the Mormon people.

The society embraces large membership in the Presbyterian, Congregational and Methodist churches.

CHICAGO, Dec. 15.—A small negro was arrested here today with $8,000 worth of watches and diamonds in his possession. He said a crook in San Francisco compelled him at the point of a revolver to enter a millionaire's house on Sutter street, in that city, and steal the property. He succeeded in eluding the crook, and came directly here. He refused to give his name and is being held to await advices from San Francisco.

CHEYENNE, Dec. 16.—Trouble is expected on the Shoshone reservation from the efforts made by Captain Ray, military agent, to suppress immorality and polygamy among the Indians. A few weeks ago he had a number of Indian maidens, who insisted on visiting the post on pay day arrested and sent back to their lodges with their heads shaved. This is considered a great indignity among the Shoshones and Arapahoes, and they were in a bad humor when last week the captain called a number of chiefs before him and ordered them to dispense with all their wives but one.

Plenty Bear, one of the Arapahoes, who has two squaws, with whom he has lived for many years, said he was too old to change his habits, and would die before he would obey such an order. Raising his Winchester, he said: "We will both die together."

Ray ordered him arrested, but the Indian police refused to obey, and Plenty Bear left the meeting very angry.

Washakie, chief of the Shoshones, is also a polygamist, and his arrest has also been ordered. He is guarded by a number of Shoshones, who say they will not allow his arrest. It attempted an outbreak of the Indians is certain.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—After a warm struggle Samuel Gompers was tonight re-elected president of the American Federation of Labor, receiving 1,334 votes, against 1,222 for John McBride.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 17.—At the annual banquet Monday last of soldiers decorated with the cross of St. Andrew and St. George, forty guests are said to have partaken of meat pie in a putrid state. The result is that fifteen have since died of cholera, and others were very sick several days.

SIOUX CITY, Dec. 16.—The bodies of George R. Myers and Joe Brown, confidence men, were found this morning in the rear of a saloon. Both were shot through the abdomen. One theory is that they were shot by a man whom they were attempting to hold up; another is that they were killed by their pals.

Myers and Brown were running a flim flam tailor shop.

TOPEKA, Kan., Dec. 16.—In harmony with Governor Llewelling's recent tramp circular, the Topeka metropolitan police board orders the chief of police to give the unemployed entire freedom in going and coming. The board also abolishes the rock pile and bull pens.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Standard commenting on the admittance of Utah to statehood says it is inclined to the belief that polygamy is again practiced with impunity. It adds that it is even believed that Mormons will capture Nevada and exercise considerable influence over American politics.

DENVER, Dec. 13.—Thomas B. Owen, alias Bert C. Frane, and W. H. Gibson, arrested today at San Francisco, are wanted here to answer to a charge of obtaining $30,000 from Mrs. J. E. Soell, formerly Mrs. Helen C. Woods, by blackmail. Mrs. Woods gave Owen money to frustrate an alleged plot to kidnap her daughter, and he told her that he had killed the two plotters and made her believe she was an accomplice in the murder. Owen was arrested last summer at Centerville, Ohio, but got free on habeas corpus and escaped before extradition papers arrived.

Written for this Paper.

TAR AND FEATHERS.

Many of your readers will be interested to peruse an exact copy of a paper in a suit planted in the circuit court at Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, in the February term, 1834, by Bishop Edward Partridge, plaintiff, against fifty-five mobbers who without color of law seized and dragged him to the public square in Independence, and after abusing him tarred and feathered him, after which they turned him loose. The reason for this outrage was because of Bishop Partridge's religious belief in Apostles, Prophets and the organization, gifts, blessings and ordinances of the Church of Christ.

I personally knew the plaintiff, our esteemed and worthy Bishop Edward Partridge, as a true friend of the poor, of liberty and of freedom of thought. In regard to his character at the time of inflicting the cruelties mentioned upon him, as stated in his complaint, I will give General Wilson's testimony. Bishop Partridge, besides being tarred and feathered, was expelled from his home and state. The fifty-five mobbers, in their answer now on file in the Independence court, each acknowledged that they assisted in the dastardly act. Each one of the fifty-five put in the same answer, that they did it "in self-defense."

General Wilson was one of the chief mobbers who helped to drive out of the county, and finally out of the state, one who was asking the courts for redress, so that he was barred from bringing to justice his persecutors. General Wilson said to P. P. Pratt and others: "We Jackson county boys know how it is, and therefore have not the extreme hatred and prejudice which characterize the rest of the troops. We know perfectly well from the beginning that the Mormons have not been the aggressors at all. As it began in 1833 in Jackson county, Missouri, so it has been ever since. * * * We mob you without law; the authorities refuse to protect you according to law. You, then, are compelled to protect yourselves, and we act upon the prejudice of the public, we join forces and the whole is legalized for your destruction. When we drive you from Jackson county we burned 203 of your houses, plundered your goods, destroyed your press, type and paper, books, office and all; tarred and feathered old Bishop Partridge, as exemplary an old man as you can find anywhere. * * * Let a set of men serve me as your community have been served and I'll be damned if I would not fight till I died."

General Wilson was engaged with, as he has already stated, a legalized mob, at Far West, on November 1st, 1838, and just before making the above statement, he held a conversation with the Prophet Joseph Smith at the time when he was condemned by the mob to be shot on the public square at Far West, Caldwell county, Mo. Joseph asked General Wilson what he had done that he should be treated with such indignity, stating that he had always been a supporter of the Constitution and of good government. Wilson's reply was, "I know it, and that is the reason I want to kill you, or have you killed."

I was in Far West and saw General Wilson and Captain Bogart, a Methodist preacher, and his son-in-law, Mr. Cook. It was a time of general excitement. A great many of the rabble were led on by false rumors and fanaticism. This feeling died out with that generation and a new generation now appears. Only a very few remain who took part in driving the Mormons from their lands and homes fifty-five years ago. During my recent trip, I only found two, and they are old men, however then boys. One of them, a Mr. Mason, at Independence, Missouri, said, "I helped to drive the Mormons away, but I was only in my teens. I have nothing against the Mormons. They never harmed me. I now can see if we had let the Mormons alone they would have built up the country as they have done in Utah." Mr. Mason is now about 70 years of age. I visited him at his home, and he and his family treated me with kindness.

Having had the opportunity of copying the amended complaint, in the matter first referred to in this communication, and also the 55 answers now on file in the circuit court at Independence, Mo., I availed myself of the opportunity of presenting those copies for the perusal of our young folks, that they may read of some of the difficulties encountered by the fathers in establishing so good a cause as we are now enjoying.

The foregoing documents afford food for serious reflections as to the conditions of that time:

AMENDED DECLARATION.

In the Circuit court, February term, eighteen hundred and thirty-four (1834):

Jackson county court.

Edward Partridge complains of Samuel D. Lucas, Russell Hicks, Lewis Franklin, Richard Simpson, George M. Simpson, Lendas Aldcham, Thomas M. Wilson, James M. Hunter, Henry Chiles, Nathaniel K. Almstead, Zachariah Miller, Samuel Weston, William L. Irwin, Samuel D. Owens, Dan Overton, John Harris, Harmon Gregg, James H. Flourna, Morris G. Wilson, Robert Johnson, James Campbell, Joel T. Child, Richard Fustin, Abram T. Staples, William Cannon, John Smith, John Davis, Joseph C. Davis, Thomas Pitcher, Guss Johnson, James Reynolds, James Cockrel, Jonathan Sheppard, John W. Dame, Revd. Tarton Eldredge, David A. Staton, John Carnot, John Cook, Daniel King, Edwin F. Hicks, William Martin, Richard W. Clemius, James P. Hickman, William Brown, Samuel Johnson, William Pugh, John Lewis, James H. McGee, Ruland Flournoy, John M. Walker and Benjamin Major, of a plea of trespass. For that the said defendants heretofore named, on the twenty-fifth day of July, eighteen hundred and thirty-three (1833), with force and arms at the county of Jackson aforesaid, assaulted the said Edward Partridge and then and there took and carried the said Edward into a public place (the old court house square) in the town of Independence, in the county of Jackson aforesaid, and then and there in the presence of a large concourse of people indignantly and abusively treated the said Edward, and the said defendants then and there, with great force and violence struck and pulled about the said Edward, and cast and threw him down to and upon the ground, and then and there violently kicked the said Edward, and gave and struck him a great many other blows and shakes; and then and there with great force and violence put on the body of the said Edward a large quantity of pitch and tar, and completely covered his body therewith, and then and there rolled him in feathers so as completely to cover his body with feathers, and then and there in that situation turn him the said Edward loose among the said large concourse of people; and then and there, with great force and violence, rent, tear and damage the clothes and wearing apparel, to-wit: One coat, one hat, one waistcoat, one pair of breeches, one cravat, one shirt and one pair of stockings of the said Edward, of great value, to wit, of the value of ($50) fifty dollars, which he the said Edward was then and there greatly hurt, bruised and wounded, and then and there, from the indignity and public insult offered him, was greatly insulted and suffered in his reputation and standing in society to wit at the county of Jackson aforesaid, and other wrongs to the said Edward, then and there, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, did assault the peace and dignity of the state, and to the damage of the said Edward, of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000), and therefore he brings this suit.

Wood, Atchison, Wells, Donaphan and Reese,

Attorneys for Plaintiff.

This Declaration was endorsed on the back with Samuel D. Lucas, with orders to file in the court.

Filed away Feb. 15th, 1834.

SAMUEL C. OWEN, Clerk.

THE ANSWER.

Robert Johnson, impleaded with others, ads. Edward Partridge. Trespass. And the said Rob. Johnson comes and defends the force and injury, when &c., and says: as to the assaulting and taking and carrying the said Edward Partridge into a public place, in the town of Independence, and before a large concourse of people, indignantly and abusively treating him the said plaintiff, and as to the shaking, pulling about and throwing him upon the ground, and as to the kicking and striking the said plaintiff a great many violent blows, & as to the putting on the body of the said plaintiff a large quantity of pitch & tar, rolling in & covering his body with feathers, then turning him loose among a large concourse of people, and as to the rending, tearing, and damaging the clothes of the said plaintiff, as is stated and set forth in the declaration, the said plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his aforesaid action thereof against him, because he says: that the said plaintiff just before the said time, when &c. in the said declaration mentioned, at the county of Jackson aforesaid, with force and arms &c. made an assault upon him the said defendant, and would then and there have beat, bruised, and ill treated him the said defendant, if he had not immediately defended himself against the said plaintiff, wherefore, he the said defendant did then and there defend himself against the said plaintiff, as he lawfully might, for the cause aforesaid, and in so doing did necessarily and unavoidably, a little, pull and haul about before a large concourse of people, and thereby, then and there in self defense, did indignantly treat the said plaintiff, by shaking, kicking, striking, throwing him upon the ground and did then and there for the cause aforesaid, a little, rend, tear and damage the clothes of the said plaintiff, and there being then and there upon the ground, where the said defendant was so compelled, in self defense as aforesaid, to throw down the body of the defendant as aforesaid, a large quantity of tar, pitch and feathers, by means whereof, the said plaintiff became a little covered and besmeared with tar, pitch and feathers, as stated in the said declaration mentioned, doing no unnecessary damage to the said plaintiff on the occasion as aforesaid, and so the said defendant says, that if any hurt or damage then and there happened to the said plaintiff, or his wearing apparel, the same was occasioned by the assault so made by the said plaintiff upon the said defendant, in the necessary defence of him the said defendant, against the said plaintiff, which are the said supposed trespasses in the introductory part of this plea mentioned, and whereof, the said plaintiff hath complained against him the said defendant, and this he is ready to verify; therefore, he prays judgment, if the said plaintiff ought to have or maintain his aforesaid action thereof against him, &c.

Reynolds, Birch, Burden, Young, Hicks, Chiles and Wilson,
Attorneys for defendant.

Robt Johnson, impleaded with others, vs. Edward Partridge. Trespass. And the said Robert Johnson comes and defends the force and injury, when &c., and says he is not guilty of said supposed trespasses above laid to his charge, or any part thereof, in manner and form, as the said plaintiff has complained against him, and of this he puts himself upon the country &c.

Reynolds, Birch, Burden, Young, Hicks, Chiles and Wilson,
Attorneys for defendant.

And the said plaintiff does the like.

Wells & Wood,
Attorneys for plaintiff.

EDWARD STEVENSON.

SALT LAKE CITY, Dec. 12, 1893.

Written for this Paper.

"WATER, WATER, EVERY WHERE"

With the increase of population in these limited valleys, the land and water questions assume an ever-varying aspect. For lack of understanding many of the early settlers took up land which was of less value than some they rejected, and there are thousands of acres now owned, fenced, and farmed in this valley, that no man would have had as a gift in years gone by. Men and families migrated because all the good land was taken up; and so from mistaken ideas a movement took place which created county after county, town after town, and then farms and homes almost beyond number inside, and finally outside, the Territory. This movement has been less ostentatious of late years, for quite a proportion of it in early days went out in a missionary spirit, and after a call. There is little of this now, but the movement continues to new locations, and there is scarcely a settlement where land is not being broken by men who were born in these valleys. The public prints record daily the fact of flings for title on land hitherto scorned as valueless; even the alkaline flats on the other side of Jordan have not escaped. They are owned, and some day "wisdom may be justified of her children."

Water as an essential becomes more and more important. The first users of City Creek, the Cottonwoods and other streams have been materially encroached upon. Provo river, once considered as private property almost, has been diverted above that city, nearly to its source; and almost without suspicion, as it were, until from scarcity a few years ago the factory owners had to look to its power, and found that much had been quietly appropriated, far above where the first claimants upon its rushing waters made their home. Bear river and its tributaries have been depleted in their upper regions by increasing settlement, and Weber river has forgotten its aggressive moods of flood and fury, since it has been robbed almost up to the home of its headwaters among the towering pines.

Yet there is water. Utah Lake is still the treasure house for this growing city; and the Great Salt Lake, though receding quietly, is still the grandest sanitarium—save the ocean—on the earth. Although scores of miles of broad canals and thousands of miles of ditches now run the precious fluid upon the soil in all directions; while this is filched from the tributaries of this wonderful Lake, it is doubtful whether its present diminished area is not greater than when, unobstructed, all the waters of this region sped themselves unmolested to its sparkling yet almost silent bosom.

Fabulous labor has been spent in Utah upon these essential appliances for irrigation, until the original price of the land seems insignificant by comparison. Farms we know of, which cost sixty dollars per acre ere water supply was considered reliable, and since that annually the call on ownership labor for cleaning and repairs, including bridges, flumes, etc., has been a tax approaching this government price of land. So onerous is this becoming for those desiring land now, that agitation suggests the propriety of governmental aid in the construction of vast reservoirs and dams, so as to confine those waters which in the spring and early summer are abundant and usually go to waste. Private enterprise has done something in this direction in Utah. A few reservoirs have been created, where the natural facilities were favorable and moderate as to cost, and great satisfaction and benefit have been received by new colonies or old ones, where increasing strength made this practicable. But it only seems fair after all that those who have done this, and so created taxable property, should be given a remission of taxes for a series of years, or some local appropriation should aid in reimbursing that enterprise which never hesitated or hardly counted the cost.

In all this labor in regard to irrigation there has been very little speculation. No individual or company has built these reservoirs, canals or ditches save as all interested wanted the water for use. It was not company effort expending means and claiming mortgage or cash taxation. But the demand on each land owner was of a pro rata character, and he could mainly pay in labor on that which he partly owned.

The construction and methods of the great Bear River Canal company were the antipodes of this. They bought the land, then to give it value had to get the water, which was a gigantic undertaking. But after so much expenditure and nominal failure, then reorganization, even the new company, no more than the old, wants to go farming on a princely style. They will have to dispose of the land and water for it on such a basis that both profit and convenience may be assured to an intending buyer, or he will prefer a locality where in connection with his neighbors or friends he can get both for simple work, without much cash expenditure, or risk and possible loss of his toil and possessions. It is said that the company intend to sell in twenty-five acre farms, with five acres of orchard already put out, ten acres of lucern already sown, the whole (several thousand acres) being fenced and planted with shade trees in systematic order. This may be feasible, may have the advantages named, and for all farm products may be close to market. But being a new thing, it will have to endure criticism, and after all to give the project soundness and finish, some assistance may have to be extended for home or house building ere the great conception would materialize as "a city of magnificent distances."

It is quite likely that an exodus of unemployed ability is desirable for this and other cities; quite likely that it will take place, for there is an undercurrent in this direction. But where it will locate, or how far it may be diffused throughout the Territory cannot now be told. Valleys in the north, localities southeast, and further south-by-west, are extolling their advantages. Arizona, Mexico, Canada have each their advocates and friends. Wherever Mormon emigration moves, it means organization, order and ultimate prosperity. Hard knocks and unity have given this people all the advantages they now enjoy. This valley was a desert. All the adjoining valleys were desert. All these locations bidding for population are more or less desert. But the desert never blossoms as the rose with the Mormon people, only as the genius of faith-directed industry and the blessing of the heavens give to all effort their own "exceeding great reward."

It was at one time anticipated that Corinne would be the capital of Box Elder county, and some thought of the entire Territory. Heaven and earth were being moved apparently to this end. It was to be the point. All that it needed was the background of population, and the land within "big" distances was to be the Mecca of ancient Utah's opponents. The railroads were in for it, and the city grew almost like Jonah's gourd. Funds in good amount were promised for the bringing out of "The Grand Canal" from the gates of Bear River. The writer, in the midst of this fervor of expected change, asked a prominent citizen of Corinne "where they expected to get the labor for building the canal?" He hardly knew. "Well, you will have to get Mormon labor. Then when the canal is completed, lands put into market and sold, who will be your farmers? Do you think that men who have farms or have been farmers in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, northern Missouri—countries where it rains, and close by a market—will come here to Utah, irrigate even for needed grass, far from a market, to meet your schemes? No, sir; the Mormons will build your canals, will colonize your lands, and make these farms and homes, and you will be further from rule than you are today!" The gentleman saw it. The canal was not built; Corinne fell from its proud condition, until it is today almost unknown, and Brigham City is still the county town.

Once upon a time Balaam was brought out to curse Israel, but all his effort was nugatory. The spirit of blessing fell upon him; Israel triumphed; and so the great Ruler has ever made the wrath of man to praise Him, and every tongue has been silenced which was called to condemn. Today, as the Saints are being multiplied, facilities for living will be increased, as water has already been increased. When from further increase, resources for storage are needed, these will be assuredly built, just as coal came when wood was scarce, and coal oil and gas when our tallow was insufficient. So will Israel live and fill these mountains, for they are heirs to the promise that "their bread shall be given them and their water shall be sure."

Yes, as the Hon. Schuyler Colfax said, "It is water that makes this country." But he knew nothing of the infinitude of labor, of effort made abortive by uncontrollable element, of wasted experiment, of weary limbs, of broken constitutions and premature deaths that were needed for the reclamation of the arid desert and that created this "Garden of the Gods," this glorious Utah Territory, now looked upon as so beautiful and desirable by envious eyes—by many who execrate the self-sacrificing Pioneers and have even essayed to rob their posterity of their little all, by lying tongues, imprisonment and confiscation!

NEW FROM COLONIA JUAREZ.

COLONIA JUAREZ, Mexico, Dec. 8, 1898.—Since my last writing our colony has been very prosperous. The rain fall during the months of July, August and September were of a very profitable nature in this locality. Our dairy men have smiling faces on them after their year's labor. Their products are rich and tasty. It is estimated that here in this locality $8000 worth of cheese has been produced for export.

Farmers have put up large stacks of hay for their work horses and milch cows. Barns are full and stacks are plentiful on the outside. The singularity of our haying is that it comes after our wheat crop has been gathered in. Various articles are now being produced here in the colonies for export, and in order to be successful a board of trade has been organized with the view of procuring better prices and open up new localities for our Mormon products. The first step for this organization was taken August 28th, 1898, and officers nominated for three months. Brother J. C. Bentley was chosen business manager and George W. Levey president of the board, with Heleman Pratt as vice president. Each colony had its representative in the board. The organization has been made permanent and much good is expected through its efforts.

In your issue of November 22nd inst. I notice a statement concerning some revolutionists who have been around our locality for a few days, passing from the border of the United States and coming into the interior. They were twenty-eight in number and created some little excitement in Las Palumas, taking that place by surprise on November 8th. They were there at daybreak and took possession of the custom house, placing all males under guard. They secured booty and robbed the government of $200 in cash. They carried off everything in the shape of arms and ammunition. No one was hurt though threats were made against some, principally against Jose Manuel, chief of the guards, for refusing to give up his gun. Leaving Palumas they started for the interior. It is claimed that they numbered fifty men at the raid made in Las Palumas. Coming south they visited Diaz and stole two horses from David Johnson on November 15th. Word was received here of their raid in Las Palumas and immediately steps were taken for our safety. Particulars of the event which followed and of a battle in which seven of our men were engaged and were unhurt have been given in the NEWS.

The two horses that were stolen at Colonia Diaz were recovered. When word came here that the revolutionists were in the vicinity a company of Mexican infantry was camping in the colony, but on receiving the news of the revolutionists' presence the soldiers left immediately for a more peaceable locality.

Peace and quiet are perfectly restored and the Saints attend to their various avocations as if nothing had happened, and trusting in their Heavenly Father for protection.

The Mexican settlement (Galiana) some forty miles southeast of here, has sent a written request to our Bishop to send them ten Mormon families to teach them our ways. Steps have been taken by some of our brethren to fulfil this request and also to aid this colony by securing a place to raise wheat and corn. The municipality of Galiana has sold our brethren 8000 acres of tillable land on three years' payment, the consideration being one-fourth cash and three-fourths buildings for school purposes, such as can be easily paid for in labor. The land is of a good quality for farming and fruit raising, and is only a short distance from here, so we expect it to be of a material benefit to this place as well as a means of learning the natives how to live and take advantage of the elements within reach. Many springs of water are above the land. It is estimated by some of our brethren that enough water is in sight to irrigate 2000 acres. The land is equal to land in Sugar House and Farmers wards in Salt Lake county.

Those of our brethren in the North who wish to come to this republic can secure a home here on reasonable terms. On the low land wheat, corn, cane, sweet potatoes, peanuts and two reaps of early-rose potatoes can be grown, but the Irish potatoes require a higher altitude. In fruit, grapes of various kinds, peaches, apricots, apples, pears, piums, strawberries, blackberries, dewberries, etc., can be produced, but all must be planted before fruit can be gathered.

We have a beautiful climate. It is never warmer than in Salt Lake Valley and a long season. Green leaves can now be seen on our trees at this writing, with a temperature like May in Utah. Our brethren who have stepped to the front in the land enterprise and used their means for their accomplishment of this move are Bishop George W. Sevy, D. E. Harris, B. L. Croft, J. C. Peterson and Joseph Cordon. They have also secured a concession of exemption from all state and municipal taxes for fifteen years, free importation of household goods and farming implements, also horses and other stock, provisions when necessary, and raw materials for manufacturing purposes. So we hope to see our colonies grow and increase and be united in their efforts in the accomplishment of God's purposes in this land.

The colonies here are making good progress and the elements are tempered in their behalf. This is a repetition of pioneering in Utah. We need men of faith and integrity, and who are willing to labor. Then the Almighty will help those who are willing to help themselves. Information concerning this place will be cheerfully given to inquirers by either George W. Sevy, B. L. Croft, J. C. Peterson or Joseph Cordon.

SIERRA MADRES.

KANAB STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Kanab Stake of Zion was held in the Orderville ward, on the 2nd and 3rd of December, 1898. There were present on this occasion, the Kanab Stake presidency, a majority of the members of the High Council and the Bishops of the various wards.

The speakers during conference were President E. D. Woolley, Counselors Thomas Chamberlain and Daniel Seegmiller, Elders John Rider, Henry E. Bowman, H. F. Stout, of Rockville, James L. Bunting, Fredrick G. Carroll, Warren Harris, M. D. Harris, J. Jorgensen, Bishops R. J. Cutler, H. W. Esplin, Haskel S. Jolley, G. D. Macdonald, and Counselor Alfred D. Young, of Kanab.

The subjects mostly treated upon were tithing, liquor drinking, faith in the principles of the Gospel and obedience unto the same. President Woolley made mention of a resolution passed by the High Council that they would not sustain or hold in fellowship any member of the High Council, Bishop, Counselor or Teacher of any ward in this Stake of Zion, one who will dispose of or become intoxicated with liquors.

The reports of the Bishops showed that of existing evils, liquor-drinking had been of late on the increase. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon the speakers to that extent that many expressed themselves that it was the best conference we had ever had.

We had a very enjoyable time on Saturday evening in the social party and entertainment gotten up in behalf of Elder Jorgensen, who is called on a mission to Scandinavia.

F. L. PORTER,
Stake Clerk.

The project to build leaching works near Lehi, which was fully described in the NEWS some weeks ago, is still being agitated. The Lehi Banner says two meetings of the citizens have been held and a committee named, consisting of Mayor A. J. Evans, and Hons. Ira D. Wines and Israel Evans Sr. There, with Judge T. J. Anderson, have been examining the proposed site on the Jordan river, below Lehi. Mr. Wm. Sutherland, who is the prime mover in the affair, is to draw up plans of a mill.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Saratoga, Wyo., is agitating a movement for waterworks.

Phoenix, Ariz., is having an orange boom this winter.

Ralston valley, Nye county, Nevada, has 40,000 sheep grazing within its boundary.

Raton, N. M., disposed of the lots donated to aid the sanitarium at that place by drawing lots last week.

Cripple Creek, Colo., expects to have its new telephone line from Colorado Springs completed by Christmas.

In the Pecos valley, N. M., St. Louis parties have purchased large tracts of land for grape and prune growing.

Cattle stealing in the San Luis valley is being suppressed by the arrest and conviction of the thieves in the vicinity of Saguache.

Telegrams have been sent out from Lake City, Colo., inquiring after J. J. Pride, a butcher from that place, who passed through Ouray Monday with a herd of cattle.

Phoenix, Ariz., has a Missouri club 180 strong. The motto of the club is, "No politics, no religion, no debts." The members eat "possum" and sweet potatoes for dinner next Christmas.

The Santa Fe traffic has increased its freight business to such an extent in the Arkansas valley that nine additional locomotives have recently been put on the La Junta, Colo., division.

Natrona county, Wyoming, is on the eve of a big oil boom. Oil has been found on Casper creek. Hundreds of claims have been filed and a pipe line from Salt creek oil wells to Casper seems a certainty of 1894.

Buena Vista, Colo., people complain of a scarcity of ranch products and the Democrat urges the ranchmen to diversify their crops. Potatoes have to be imported for the local market in Upper Arkansas valley.

At Durango last week, parties from Phoenix, Ariz., were hiring men for the Harrin ton canal and paying for rock men $3 and for shovelers $2.50 a day. Labor has been scarce and high in Arizona all fall and winter.

Grand Junction, Colo., papers speak of farmers in that locality who are "land poor." A man with forty acres under irrigation is better off than one who attempts to cultivate eighty or one hundred and sixty acres.

During a heavy rain Mrs. Wilson and her two children were driven from their shanty home at Portland, Or., and were compelled to seek shelter at the police station. She was behind with her rent and the landlord's agent ejected her.

Marshal Anderson is after the Chinamen this week to work poll tax, says the Eastern Utah Telegraph. The Mongolians have refused to work and the town authorities will now compel them to work or show cause why they should not.

Nevada has a natural soap mine. It is on the Central Pacific railroad and resembles castile soap in everything except smell. An exchange says there is enough of it if dug out and melted into cakes to supply soap for the United States.

Maricopa county, Arizona, has become enthusiastic over fruit culture. At a meeting of the Tempe Horticultural association a few days ago, a leading citizen reported the production of 2,000,000 pounds of apricots from an orchard of sixteen acres.

Five hoodlums attacked a Chinese cook in San Francisco Monday evening. The gang pounced upon the inoffensive Mongolian, and while several almost choked him his pockets were rifled. They succeeded in securing $10 and then fled.

I. J. Stewart, Esq., is now employed in procuring a divorce for Fred Neilson, of Richfield, says the Advocate, from his wife, Lizzie, who has been to the penitentiary a short time in Salt Lake for adultery with one Logan, lately of Richfield.

La Veta, Colo., although it has no natural lakes, supplies the surrounding towns with ice. A man named J. B. Petrie creates ice by flooding shallow streams layer on layer during cold weather, creating ice of any thickness desired.—Enterprise.

Otero county, Colorado, has decided to organize a live, progressive horticultural society. The meeting to perfect the organization will be held in Rocky Ford next Saturday, December 16. The Arkansas valley is vitally interested in this movement.

La Veta, Colo., millers complain that they are unable to keep their mills going and supply the demand for flour because of the difficulty of obtaining wheat. The land around La Veta has been converted into alfalfa meadows.

Mr. Orrock, the Richfield merchant, says he lost money in his last poultry shipment to Salt Lake, having realized only 8½ cents a pound for what he paid 6 cents for here, besides the expense of shipping, etc. Salt Lake is over stocked, he says.—Richfield Advocate.

The Sanpete Valley railway depot grounds present a very lively business appearance, says the Manti Messenger. Workmen are engaged on the depot, water tank, switches and other improvements. Everything is moving as fast as men and materials can work together.

Dr. Tupper, preaching at Denver on Sunday night, on the subject of "Divorce," declared that marriage was the most holy and indissoluble tie on earth. He denounced the divorce lawyer "who worked for a fee," and "the unjust judge making decision without conscience or truth."

A man at French, on the headwaters of the North Platte, near the Wyoming and Colorado line, raised 15,000 pounds of potatoes as an experiment this year, but has no market for them. A railroad branch from Rawlins or Carbon would open an immense potato country, says an exchange.

The Vernon brothers, James and Joseph while hunting in Weber canyon came in contact with a cougar. The wild animal showed its teeth but the boys were brave and conquered. When they returned home they brought the animal with them.—Summit county Chronicle.

Miss Lillie Porter, of Central, died suddenly on Monday, says the Richfield Advocate. The family were having a little entertainment on Sunday evening and seemed comparatively well, though she had been suffering for some time. The young lady was about eighteen years old.

The Park City Ice company is making vigorous preparations for a large harvest of ice during the present winter, says the Record. Its pond has been placed in thorough repair and the company is now erecting a new storage building 24x140 feet, which will make a handsome addition to the company's already famous storage capacity.

Maude Downey, one of the most notorious of the colored denizens of Denver, and an important witness in the Richards murder case, died very suddenly and mysteriously on Monday from the effects of a powerful dose of morphine and belladonna. Its effect was instant and deadly, and the opinion is prevalent in police circles that it is a case of foul play.

The scoundrel who entered the rooms back of the Cottingham & Griffith hall last Thursday night and carried away the provisions which the ladies had prepared for distribution among the poor people of the town, deserves a coat of tar and feathers, and will receive it if apprehended. This is the opinion of the Nampa, Idaho, Leader.

There is little doubt in the minds of the state officials says an Idaho exchange, that a powerful Michigan syndicate is laying plans to secure, by questionable methods, possession of a large portion of the valuable timber land in Shoshone county recently surveyed. The survey which includes over 70,000 acres, was made by the government at the request of the state land department.

The Challis (Idaho) Messenger says: William Dugdale, well known in this county, has been sent from Hailey to the insane asylum at Blackfoot. His is a sad life, when we review his early days in Custer county. When he first came he was a bright and active young man, but he at last became a morphine and cocaine fiend, and finally was landed in the asylum.

Winnemucca, Idaho, was treated to a mild sensation last Saturday afternoon by the finding of the body of a Chinaman hanging to a rafter of a barn in the rear of Chinatown. It was a clear case of suicide, says an exchange, and a good job at that. At the dead Chinaman's feet was a box on which it is probable that he stood, tied a slip noose in a baling rope and placed it around his neck, tied the other end to a rafter and kicked the box from under him.

Marshal Miles and Clifford Johnson, colored hostlers employed at the race track at San Francisco has been arrested on charges of assault to commit murder and robbery. Last Saturday night, as alleged, the two negroes attacked Wm. Ryan, a special police officer, knocked him down and stole his club, star and revolver. Ryan was beaten into insensibility. Two other negroes are said to have participated in the attack on Ryan.

The flood along the North Palouse river, Washington, has rapidly subsided and the waters which submerged the northern part of Colfax have nearly all receded. The district which suffered is all covered with the wreckage of broken bridges and demolished fences. Log jams crushed the sidewalks and swept the fences away for blocks. The stone foundation of the Colfax creamery building was badly dilapidated. No fatalities attended the flood, though many narrow escapes are reported. Since the flood went down estimates of the loss are reduced.

The North Palouse river broke the big dam at Palouse City, Wash., on Monday night, and the stream, swollen by the melting mountain snow and the recent rains, tore down to Colfax, carrying away the bridges on its course and finally bursting its bounds emptied itself on that part of Colfax near the forks of the North and South Palouse. Sixty houses and as many more sheds and barns were submerged and many acres of land were overflowed. The flood struck the city at 3 o'clock that morning and the tradesmen in the northern part of town awoke to find themselves hemmed in by the roaring waters. Skiffs and rafts were used to bear the people from the houses. Two highway bridges across the river to town were swept away.

Mrs. Truman L. Hill, the wife of a letter carrier of San Francisco, attempted to commit suicide Monday afternoon by suffocating herself with gas. She was found lying in a bedroom unconscious by a neighbor who had been called to the home. The patrol wagon was summoned and the woman was taken post haste to the receiving hospital. Mrs. Hill had made all preparations to die. She closed the windows in the room and carefully plugged all the keyholes to prevent any escape of the deadly gas. The attempt, however, was a failure. Soon after being placed under treatment Mrs. Hill revived. She was asked as to the cause of her suicidal attempt, but refused to say anything more than that she had been ill treated and wanted to die. She has two or three young children.

Details of the horrible burning of an aged Mexican near Warner's ranch, Cal., have been received. A Mexican named Santa Ana, who has a government claim near Warner's ranch, had been keeping an aged man known only as "Pancho," reputed to be 113 years old, and who was totally blind. Santa Ana and his wife left the place to obtain work and an Indian boy of 17 agreed to look after old Pancho. He did not do so, however, and left the place. Afterward an Indian named Jesus Maria went to the place and it is supposed furnished the old man with cigarettes and matches. The house caught fire and the blind man was roasted to death. The inside of the house being partly of adobe, was not entirely consumed and the bones of old Pancho were found inside. No suspicion is attached to the Indian visitor, as it is believed that old Pancho, through his blindness, set fire to the place while smoking.

"COMPROMISE POINT."

Provo, December 14th, the jury in the suit of George T. Peay against the canal companies in Salt Lake county which take water out of the Jordan river rendered a verdict awarding Mr. Peay $8,750 for damages alleged to have been done to his property on the shore of Utah Lake through the waters going above what is known as "compromise point."

For a number of years prior to 1883 considerable difference existed between some of the people of Utah county and the Salt Lake county canals. The landowners along Utah Lake claimed that they were being damaged through the canal companies putting in a dam in the Jordan river to get water out for irrigation. The canal companies denied that they were the cause of damage, and asserted that the people took up land close to the lake which was flooded by natural high water; they also claimed that they had the right to dam the river and hold the water up to a certain level.

The dispute led, in 1883, to the filing of a suit by a great number of Utah county people. In order to check costly litigation the late President John Taylor arranged for a board of arbitration, on which were placed a number of the most capable and experienced men in Utah on the questions involved. This board of arbitration sat in 1884, and after a patient hearing of all phases of the controversy rendered a decision. This gave to the Utah county people $8000 in cash, besides other compensation. In consideration of this payment, the canal companies were granted permission to raise the waters of the river to a level of three feet three and a half inches above low water mark—the latter point being mutually agreed upon. Within that scope the canal companies were to be held free from any liability for damage.

This decision of the board of arbitration was consummated as an agreement by the canal companies and the landowners along the lake shore affixing their signatures thereto. One of the provisions of the agreement was that there should be a commission appointed to regulate the operation of the dam in the Jordan.

Among those who signed the agreement was Mr. Peay, who received by the decision about $1600 damages. In his present suit he claims that the waters of the lake have been raised three and a half inches above compromise point by the canal companies putting a board in the dam, and that therefore he is entitled to damages.

The canal companies deny that the water reached compromise point. They had City Surveyor Doremus make a survey, which shows that of Mr. Peay's 1600 or 1700 acres of land, if the lake was up to compromise point, all but about 150 acres would have been submerged, and as this was not done, therefore the water could not have passed beyond the limit. They further assert that their dam was not responsible for the water being as high as it was, as they say the boards in their dam were never put in up to the level where they were authorized to go.

In the trial, the jury found for Mr. Peay for $8,700, out of the $30,000 he asked. The canal companies will move for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. If this should be overruled an appeal will be taken, in which event the case will be settled by the higher courts.

In the meantime there are quite a number of other land owners who propose to bring suit in case Mr. Peay wins.

CELESTIA F. BACON.

The following has been sent the News for publication:

On Sunday last, at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. Chas. Hoff, Georgetown, Idaho, Sister Celestia F. Bacon died at the ripe age of 70 years. The funeral was held at the residence of Mr. Charles Hoff on Tuesday and was largely attended. Consoling remarks were made by Bishop H. A. Lewis and Counselor Alma Hayes, Bishop Skinner, of Nounan offering the benediction. At the graveyard, the dedicatory prayer was offered by Elder Alma Hayes.

Deceased was born at Vasilanti, Michigan, February 9, 1828. She was married at La Harpe, Hancock county, Ill., in 1848. She joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints a short time before her marriage. In 1852 she emigrated to Utah, arriving in Salt Lake City, July 23 of that year. In 1881 she came to Georgetown, Idaho, where she has resided to the day of her death. She was the mother of fifteen children, of which eleven are living; she has fifty-three grandchildren living and twenty great grandchildren.

THE EUROPEAN MISSION.

[Millennial Star, Dec. 4.]

Elder J. H. Richards has been honorably released from his labors as president of the Scottish conference, to return home December 6, 1893.

Elder Joseph M. Kerr has been honorably released from his labors as traveling Elder in the Leeds conference, to return home December 6, 1893.

Elder H. A. White has been honorably released from his labors as traveling Elder in the Norwich conference, to return home December 6, 1893.

Elder H. H. Pitchforth has been released from his labors as traveling Elder in the Sheffield conference, and has been appointed to labor in the Nottingham conference.

Elder Wm. G. McAllister has been appointed to preside over the Scottish conference.

THE NEWS is asked what the provisions of the law are, prohibiting a President of the United States from holding office for a third term. There is no law at all on the subject; but since George Washington declined the third nomination when he could have had it, and since U. S. Grant couldn't get it when his friends tried to secure it for him, public sentiment has rather crystallized the notion that two terms are enough for even a good President, and certainly as much as any good President ought to ask for.

THE SCANDINAVIAN FATHERLAND.

Prepared from Special Cablegrams.

SWEDEN.

Typhoid fever is raging epidemically in Upsala.

The last "weeks of denial" of the Salvation army yielded 60,000 kroner.

F. W. Ringvall, the well-known musical director of the Helsing regiment, died at the age of 68 years.

Ex-Senator S. Anderson, of Svenneby, died at the age of 67. He leaves a wife and three children.

Canned Norrland herring is a gastro-nomic novelty, which is at present being introduced into the Swedish market.

Prince Gustavus Adolphus, the oldest son of the Swedish Crown Prince, was eleven years old the other day.

The Theosophical Society of Stockholm is in a very flourishing condition, and the number of members increases every week.

The Gustavus Adolphus societies in Sweden and Germany are preparing for a grand celebration next year, when 300 years will have passed since the birth of the great Swedish king.

Mme. Melba, the famous singer, who is at present charming the people of New York City and soon expected to Chicago, has received the medal Literis et Artibus by King Oscar. She appreciates the gift very highly, and wears it at her public appearances, except in opera, of course.

The career of Count Asel von Fersen, the Swedish nobleman and friend of the ill-fated Marie Antoinette is soon to appear in detail in "A Friend of the Queen." The work will be published in English, French and Swedish. D. Appleton & Co., are the American publishers of the book the details of which are said to have been obtained from family archives. Few life histories are so varied as this or so likely to make a story of warm interest.

The so-called "Swedish mitrailleuse" was invented in 1872 by the Swedish engineer Palmcrantz, and has generally, where it has been subjected to experiments been considered as the best of its kind. It has all the barrels (commonly 10 in number) lying parallel with each other in the same horizontal plane. This weapon is best known abroad under the name of the "Nordenfelt Guns," after the name of Mr. Thos. Nordenfelt, who introduced many improvements. These guns are manufactured both in London and in Sweden.

The Royal Academy of Science, established in 1739 by Linnæus and other scientific men, has for its object the promotion of physical sciences and mathematics. The members number one hundred Swedes and seventy-five foreigners. Under their supervision is the State Museum of Natural History with six superintendents; there are moreover natural philosophers and other officials for the Observatory of the academy (the Stockholm Observatory.) The academy has the exclusive right of publishing almanachs in Sweden, and also the official State Calendar. Dating from 1872 the Meteorological Central Office is also under the Academy of Sciences.

NORWAY.

Scarlet fever is raging epidemically in Christiania.

A new so-called centre society has been organized in Hamar.

A moderate conservative society has been organized in Hammerfest.

Olaf Jakobsen, a well-known engineer of Gilhus, was arrested the other day accused of arson.

Five fishermen were drowned off Thronthiem, while on their way home to Sandvikberget.

Four hundred telephone apparatus were sent to Russia the other day from Christiania.

A building was burned down near Rakkestad station, and Johannes Arnesen, an old insane man perished in the flames.

The first Norwegian lady physician is Miss Maria Mathilda Spangberg who recently graduated from the university of Christiania.

Dr. Jens Devold of Christiania died the other day. He had a diphtheria patient under treatment and was inflicted by the contagious disease.

Their golden wedding was celebrated by Jorden Gulbrandsen, of Christiania, and his wife. Gulbrandsen has been connected with the Christiania firm Jensen & Dahl for over forty years.

In Norway chiefly spruce; but also fir and aspen, is used in the manufacture of wood pulp. Scandinavian wood pulp has a decided advantage over, for example the German, since in Germany pine is used, which is richer in resinous matters resulting in a more rapid darkening of the papers.

DENMARK.

Chr. Hyltoft has celebrated his 35th anniversary as an actor.

The Copenhagen Tivoli Company has declared a dividend of 8½ per cent for 1893.

The marble church of Copenhagen will probably not be opened to the public before next spring.

Conversation per telephone is now carried on between Copenhagen and the city of Sundsvall in northern Sweden.

During the month of October only 685 persons emigrated to America by way of Copenhagen.

The combine of the wholesale paper dealers has been dissolved after an existence of four years.

The king instructed the secretary of his cabinet to forward his congratulations to Mr. Nicolaisen and wife, of Frouup, upon their crown diamond wedding.

Major F. R. J. Schack, of Næstved, died at the age of 81 years. Major Schack, who had been postmaster of Næstved was a Knight of the Dannebrog order.

The Copenhagen workingmen's building association has just erected its one thousandth house. The event was celebrated by an entertainment, and most of the 1000 little yellow houses raised their flags.

Consul A. P. Hansen, of Copenhagen, died at Berlin. Hansen was one of the largest wholesale merchants of Copenhagen and very wealthy. In his younger years he visited America. He was then known as a very able engineer and built several railroads in Canada.

FINLAND.

The Viborg-Sordavala railroad has been dedicated.

Tiden (The Times) will be the name of a new paper which is to be published in Helsingfors.

General Lindfors has donated a new hot-house, the cost of which has been 12,000 mark, to the Finnish Horticultural Society.

DRAWING IN SCHOOLS.

The following address was delivered before the county teachers, meeting on Saturday, December 9th, by Miss A. E. Brotherhood, instructor of drawing in the University of Utah:

The best that may be said of the utility of drawing in the common school can have no significance unless there is first a perception of the place of drawing in a right system of education.

What can be called a right system of education? It is that system which studies the nature of the child, which sees that his physical, his mental, and his moral growth up to the time when he enters school have been in harmony with laws that are innate in the child and in the universe about him. It is a system which seeks his highest development by the continual recognition of those laws in the choice of subjects to be taught, and in the methods of teaching them.

If this be granted, two great questions of every true teacher: What should I present to the child for study?—a question involving principles of education, and, How should I present it?—a question involving methods of applying the principles, must find their answer in the living child. What he has done under natural impulses, from within, or from without, or both, must govern our treatment of him in his farther education. What has he done? He has become acquainted in a general way with every department of nature. The child is, unconsciously to himself, an inquirer into Nature's secrets. This spirit of investigation, together with his natural disposition to do things for himself, occupies his restless energies.

When there is access to outdoor life, the child makes himself a house of clay, or rocks, or wood, fashions the tools and implements for the mechanical work he delights in doing. He thus learns something of the nature of soil and minerals—a beginning in mineralogy. He comes to know the colors and forms and nature of plants and flowers and fruit, which is botany. He observes the phases of the sun and moon, of the seasons, forms of water, clouds, snow, etc., and thus laying a foundation for astronomy and meteorology. He has noticed the habits of many animals, birds, insects, etc., and all are interesting and beautiful to him until told of certain species that they are ugly and dangerous. No study can be made more delightful to the child than zoology. On his mother's knee, he is a keen and accurate observer of those about him, and so the nature and actions of men under anthropology and history must be presented for his complete mental development. In short he has made general observations in every department of natural science and in geography and history. So he has a considerable fund of knowledge, not systematized, it is true, but of the utmost value, for it is acquired in the right way, and therefore is working surely for his best growth. What has been the process? The child has not consciously set to work to investigate the world about him, but natural objects have acted upon him through the senses, which, not yet drilled by school-room drill, were in a condition of attention to receive impressions, and interest has been aroused for further attention.

The word attention in this application may need definition. It is that attitude of mind and body which allows external objects to act through the senses so as to stimulate educative thought. Whenever the child, in this attitude of attention, has had glimpses of the uses of what he has observed, the parts of animals and of plants, the action of water in clouds and rain and frost, or has seen a relation of cause and effect, his interest, or in other words his mental action has been intensified. We are to continue this beautiful freedom, this unconscious acquiring of knowledge by presenting objects that are adapted to his powers, by guiding his observation upon them in such a manner as to stimulate educative thought and lead to a knowledge of function, which is a knowledge of law, which is a knowledge of life. If attention has been secured, and observation rightly directed, the result will be to produce in the mind a concept of the object corresponding to the attributes that have been observed. This is educative thought, and this thought is immediately followed by a desire for expression. The child is not naturally lazy, neither is he naturally selfish, and so he will take trouble to express to others what he knows of objects. He not only talks of what he has observed, but he attempts to reproduce, by any material at hand. The boy builds a house, models a boat or sled, while the girl imitates her mother in household arts, or perhaps joins her brother in his more rugged occupations. This motive in the child to give to others what he has received must be nourished and stimulated by the teacher, and to accomplish this all the means of expression should be employed. This leads us to consider what are all the modes of expression. They are gesture-making, modeling, painting, drawing, speech and writing.

We have said that attention is the attitude of mind and body best adapted to receive impressions which induce educative mental action. Expression is the manifestation of that mental action, or concept through the body. The result of expression is to intensify the mental action, hence it follows that if many or all the modes of expression be employed to express a concept, the concept is so many times intensified. Take this as the first point on the utility of drawing that it intensifies the educative thought or mental action. This intensity of mental action, by withdrawing attention from the form of expression, tends to prevent self-consciousness, which is one of the greatest hindrances to progress. The education of the past—and it is not all in the past yet—has been so directed to form rather than to thought that most of us are too conscious of the form to do our best thinking.

The question may arise here, if it has not arisen before, can we teach all form, that is, all the means of expression in connection with these central subjects so that no appreciable time may be required for them. For the objector will say, "We have no time to teach drawing, painting, etc." By this theory of concentration all forms of expression are to be taught in connection with the central subjects, and so the time is saved which is now devoted to writing, reading, arithmetic and grammar.

It may be objected that not enough teaching of form will be secured in this way. Are there forms enough in nature for modeling, painting and drawing? Are there not enough perfect forms as spheres—in various kinds of fruit, in rain and dew drops? Do we need wooden models? They may be used and the teacher will have in mind a regular succession of forms to which she will direct special attention by requiring them modeled or drawn, but other forms may be presented at the same time in the science or other lessons. There are opportunities enough to teach writing, words enough to teach spelling, and in the constant use of oral language which this theory demands, ample means for teaching language. Why spell a word till the child needs it? Why learn a grammar rule, till he has violated one? And why draw a form he has never seen, at least has no present need of? The child wants to express his thought, and is delighted to employ drawing for that purpose. And he does it beautifully, if the teacher looks for the thought and not the perfect form and treats the child according as he has done his best. It should be our greatest aim as teachers to preserve the beautiful unity of mind and body, of thought and of expression of that thought which is natural to the child. By demanding much and varied expression, from music to writing, we secure the best physical training—that which unites thought to bodily expression; and if this could be perfectly carried out, we should have no need of the so-called physical culture. What has been said of the value of expression is true of all modes of expression, but drawing has special advantages. Drawing on the blackboard develops shoulder movement, which is the best for children, as scientific observation shows that the shoulder action comes to the child before that of the hand and fingers. This is, by the way, an argument for arm-movement in writing. A training of certain organs of the body in one form of expression fits these organs for better work in other forms—so drawing helps writing.

Drawing, almost equally with manual training, cultivates correct observation of form and so will help other studies, as spelling and reading. It strengthens and gives directions to the esthetic sense. The eye cannot be trained to see beauty of form unless there has been training to express form. Children love the beautiful. There is a moral use in beauty, and to cultivate a moral influence through beauty is one of the greatest advantages of drawing. It also helps a judgment of proportion—cultivating a love of accuracy in all work. In its widest use including geography, drawing, it affords constant opportunity for number work. When taught in connection with the subjects named, drawing has a meaning to the child; an importance that a lesson from the ordinary drawing text-book cannot have, and that sense of importance is of high moral value in education. It is demoralizing for the child to do work in which he sees no significance. Skill to draw, especially in rapid blackboard illustration, is of very great value to the teacher. She may by this means enable the pupil to see in the lesson what she could not show in any other way. It has great value in maintaining interest and through that good order.

If there is restlessness, let the teacher make a drawing on the lesson, or propose that she draw some sketches on previous lessons and let the children tell the story she has pictured. In turn, let them draw illustrations of a myth or fairy story, or science lesson for her to guess. They are delighted to recite their lessons by means of drawing and will put much originality into their work, crude as it may seem to those who see only the form, and not the beautiful motive behind it. It is thus not only one of the best means of testing the pupil's knowledge of the lesson, but also gives an opportunity to know the individual mental action. Drawing comes next to modeling in value. It comes before writing, because it presents some attributes corresponding to the attributes of the object. In practice it has an advantage over modeling and painting, in that the materials may be always at hand, easily brought out for a short exercise and soon put away, while clay or sand and paint require more time and care. Each teacher can learn to draw. It is true that art has its laws. Through a long history of development, certain principles have been recognized as inseparable from art, of which drawing is a department. But by observation and by study of good text-books on drawing, the principles may soon be acquired. Practice is the great essential, and with courage to begin, and skill to find opportunities in the lessons, drawing will soon become not only an added strength to her work, but a constant and increasing pleasure.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

The Sunday schools of Kanab Stake convened in conference Dec. 3, 1893, Stake Superintendent Joseph E. Robinson presiding.

After the opening exercises the quarterly report of the schools was read, showing them to be in good running order. The Orderville ward Sunday school then rendered an excellent, entertaining and instructive program consisting of lectures, recitations and songs.

The general and local officers of the Sunday School Union were unanimously sustained, after which Brother Robinson spoke very encouragingly to Sunday school workers. The house was densely crowded and all enjoyed a very pleasant and agreeable evening.

RUHAMA V. ADAIR,
Stake Secretary.

NOTES.

Manti Sentinel: Mrs. W. K. Reid had a painful accident last Saturday, while leaving the co-op store, whereby her ankle was seriously sprained. Although confined to her room she will soon be able to walk.

Ephraim Enterprise, 13th: Peter Greaves Jr. will sink three flowing wells on his hay land west of town, for irrigating purpose. The Dick Thorum saw mill will be sold at auction today to satisfy a claim held by George A. Lowe.

Keaysville Eagle: Levi Taylor sprained one of his legs at the knee quite badly last Monday afternoon. His team was standing at the creamery and he was inside. The former started to run away and Levi came out in hot pursuit, jumping off from the creamery steps to get at them in time. In the latter act he caused the above result. He is now getting along nicely.

This morning, says the Deseret Blade of Dec. 14, S. W. Western of this place was arrested by Deputy United States Marshal Mount on the charge of unlawful cohabitation. Chas. Kinder of Oasis was kicked in the stomach by a horse and was so seriously injured that his life was in danger, but later reports say he is slowly recovering.

Phillip O. Koonce, the 18 year-old boy who pleaded guilty to the charge of robbing the mails on the Hailey-Corral route, was sentenced at Boise, Idaho, on Thursday, to one year's imprisonment in the Ada county jail. Vic. Bierbower, formerly an Ogden attorney, speaking in behalf of the boy, criticized the government for allowing torn mail pouches to be used on the route, thus subjecting the youthful mail carrier to temptation. Koonce's father has repaid the losses caused by the pilfering.

OBITUARY NOTES.

CATHERINE PARRY.

OGDEN CITY, Utah, December 12, 1893. —I forward you a few items relative to the death of Sister Catherine Parry, the widow of my late cousin, Elder Caleb Parry, who died September 19, 1871, while on a mission to England. He was buried in the same grave which contained the remains of Elder James A. Flanagan, in the town of Birmingham.

Sister Catherine Parry was born December 14, 1826, at Trows-u-Coid Hall, parish of Gullidfield, Montgomeryshire, North Wales. In 1847 she first heard the Gospel preached. She received it at once and shortly afterwards was baptized. On February 25, 1849, she was married to Caleb Parry, by whom she had seven children, five of whom were boys. Five of the children still survive her. She also had a large number of grandchildren. In the spring of 1849, with her husband, she sailed from Liverpool, en route for Utah. She crossed the plains in Captain George A. Smith's company. They reached Salt Lake City in October of the same year, where they remained till the year 1854, when they came north and settled in Marriotts, permanently. She was appointed secretary to the first Relief Society that was organized in that village, which position she filled honorably during the remainder of her natural life. She was also a Sabbath school teacher, and by her kindness and solicitude for the welfare of her pupils she endeared herself to them—indeed she was much beloved by the people of the whole ward, in whose memory she will be embalmed while times shall endure. She was always firm in the faith—she lived to God—she died in the Lord, with the full assurance that she will come forth in the morning of the first resurrection to inherit eternal life. She was well and widely known both here and in her native land, and beloved by all who knew her.

Your brother in the Gospel,
JOSEPH PARRY.

JANE MELLEN.

Sister Jane Mellen, who died at her residence in the Sixteenth ward on Wednesday, December 13, 1893, at the age of 77 years, was the daughter of John and Catherine Harrox Ramaden. She was born September 26, 1816, at Bolton, Lancashire, England; was baptized into the Church in 1840, and emigrated to America in 1842. Resided at Nauvoo and endured many hardships until the fall of 1846, when she moved to Keokuk and remained there until the spring of 1847, then moved to Winter Quarters and stopped there until the spring of 1848, when she came on to this city, arriving here in September, 1848. She was the mother of eleven children—three boys and eight girls, nine of whom survive her, as do 78 grandchildren and great-grandchildren. She remained a true and faithful Latter-day Saint to the last.

FANNY MARIA ALLEN HUNTINGTON.

Once more we are called upon to chronicle the departure of a faithful soul, one of the early adherents of the Church, and one to be numbered forever among those who through untold trial and suffering paved the way for the holy peace of the present day.

Sister Fauny Maria Allen Huntington, now dead, was the surviving wife of the late Dimmick B. Huntington of this city, who preceded her sixteen years ago next February to the other side. Deceased was born in Adams, Jefferson county, New York, of noble lineage, for Ethan Allen of patriotic fame was a kinsman but a little way removed; and so devotion to what was believed to be the right came to her as a matter of course; and so, however unpopular Mormonism or its Prophet might have been in those early days in the Empire state, for her to hear it and believe, was to acknowledge it bravely before all the world.

Along with her husband and our now Sister Zina D. Young, she was baptized by Patriarch Hyrum Smith, August 1st, 1835, at Watertown, N. Y., and next season, with a little company of ten, including their three children, they went up to Kirtland, Ohio, and from thence to Far West, Missouri, sharing there in the fearful mobbing, violence, and final driving from beyond the boundaries of that state into Illinois, where the persecuted and fleeing Saints were then seeking a home. The little company arrived three days later than the Prophe on the site of Nauvoo, and Sister Fanny entered into the duties demanded in a new country, and afterwards participated in that memorable exodus which upon the pages of history is written in lurid gold.

Once fairly delivered from the bitter enemies of the people, she went as a devoted wife with her loved Dimick into the famed Battalion; en route to Mexico untold hardship was endured, until when the Battalion was disbanded and its members endeavored to reach Salt Lake, they did so in a famished condition, having been four days without rations, but reaching this valley four days after the Pioneers, and during the first memorable season being four months without tasting bread.

In all the subsequent years of married life Sister Huntington was a true wife and faithful worker with her husband in building up this Territory; that poverty, hardship and suffering were hers, is known to all the old residents living and dead.

As the mother of eight children, all but two are gone, a son in Arizona and a daughter at Pleasant Green, in this valley, where for the last four years the invalid lady has lived; her last visit to this city was to attend the dedication of the Temple in April, an opportunity she greatly enjoyed, for the Gospel, its institutions and privileges were all in all to her. She passed peacefully away at 10 minutes to 6 on the 14th inst.

Her remains will be brought to this city for interment and the funeral services (to which friends are invited) will be held in the Sixteenth ward meeting house on Monday, the 18th inst., at 11 a. m.

The tried, faithful wife, mother and Saint has gone to rejoin her husband, children, the martyred ones and friends. To Brother Huntington, Sister Zina, and her family we extend our warm sympathies. May the spirit of comfort be with them for ever!

THE DEAD.

Peaceful be their Rest.

GWYNE.—Sarah Gwyne, born in Merthyr Tydvil, Glamorganshire, South Wales, aged 66, died Dec. 16, 1893.

STARLEY.—In the Seventeenth ward, this city, Saturday, December 16th, 1893, at 11:45 p. m., of bronchitis, Stephen Starley.

BECK.—On the East Bench, First Ward, Salt Lake City, December 16, 1893, Gottfried Adam Beck; born June 8, 1816, in Germany.

MELLEN.—In the sixteenth ward of this city, December 13, 1893, of old age, Jane Mellen, aged 78 years. She was born in England, where she joined the Church.

WALSH.—In this city, the Twenty-first ward, Heber C. Walsh, aged 27 years, as a consequence of an accident while in the swimming pool of the Sanitarium.

WYLIE.—At Scofield, Utah, on the 8th inst., Ellen Riddell, wife of James Wylie, and only daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Riddell; aged 22 years and 8 months.

ARMSTRONG.—In London, England, November 11, 1893, Frederick George Armistead, infant son of Sarah A. Smallpeice and Albert Frederick Armistead; aged 7 months and 25 days.—Millennial Star.

RIDDLE.—At Scofield, Emery county, Utah, Dec. 8, 1893, Ellen Riddell, only daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Riddell, aged 22 years and 7 months—deeply and much regretted. Scotch papers please copy.

DAVISON.—In the Sixteenth ward, Salt Lake City, December 15, 1893, of old age, Ellen Davison. She was born August 9, 1816, at Kelso on Tweed, Roxborough, Scotland; embraced the Gospel 40 years ago, and came to Utah in 1881.

DURHAM.—At Parowan, December 4th, 1893, Rosabelle, daughter of Alexander and Jane Orton, and wife of Thomas T. Durham, of inflammation of the bowels, leaving a babe only six days old. Deceased had been married at the Manti temple but in the preceding February. She was a faithful Latter-day Saint, and is deeply mourned by husband and friends. Her age was 19 years, 10 months and 17 days.

HOPKINS.—In Soda Springs, Idaho, October 13th, 1893, of pneumonia, Christanna Summerhill Hopkins, born Sept. 15th, 1825, near Pontypool, South Wales. She was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the fall of 1849, and emigrated to Soda Springs in November, 1877. She was the mother of eight children, five of them, four sons and one daughter, living to mourn her departure. She was ever ready to bear testimony of the truths of the Gospel, and passed away quietly; as if going to sleep. She exhorted her husband and children to faithfulness to the cause of truth, and she bore a faithful testimony to the last.

Millennial Star, please copy.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

Truth and Liberty.

No. 2.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, DECEMBER 30, 1893.

VOL. XLVIII.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

*Discourse Delivered in the Tabernacle,
Salt Lake City, Sunday, November 26, 1893, by*

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I will read a portion of the 12th chapter of Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians:

Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.

Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led.

Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord.

And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another, the word of knowledge by the same Spirit.

To another, faith by the same Spirit; to another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit;

To another, the working of miracles; to another, prophecy; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, divers kinds of tongues; to another, the interpretation of tongues;

But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ.

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

In standing up to address you this afternoon, I earnestly solicit an interest in your faith and prayers, that I may be led to say the very things that should be said for your edification. However familiar I may be with public speaking, I never arise without feeling my insufficiency and my inability to instruct the people. I know that no man can do this properly without the aid of our Eternal Father through His Holy Spirit.

Since I came in here my mind has rested upon this 12th chapter of Corinthians and upon similar instructions in other books that we hold sacred. These were the instructions that Paul gave to the Corinthian Church in the day in which he lived concerning spiritual gifts. His writings are full of exhortations to the people whom he was the instrument in the hands of God of bringing to the knowledge of the Gospel, concerning the importance of exercising faith in God in order to receive the blessings that were peculiar to those who obeyed the Gospel of Jesus. The Savior himself, as well as all His Apostles of whose labors we have an account, endeavored to impress the people with the importance of their relationship to the Almighty through their obedience to the Gospel of the Son of God. Miraculous powers were promised, and gifts of the most precious character. These were to be enjoyed by those who bowed in submission to the requirements of the Gospel. The followers of the Lord were distinguished among the people with whom they labored for the possession of these powers. They were peculiarly blest; and while they did not work signs and perform miracles in order to convince people that they were the servants of God, nevertheless they possessed the power, and they exercised it on many occasions. They exhorted, as Paul does in that which I have read to you, those who became members of the Church of Christ to seek earnestly for these different gifts, impressing upon them to the extent of their ability that these were within the reach of every faithful man and woman who embraced the Gospel. The Savior promised His disciples that "these signs shall follow them that believe." He did not confine the promise to His immediate followers; it was extended to all who should believe, all who should espouse the plan of salvation which He taught. Hence we find that wherever the Apostles labored they taught the people that these gifts and blessings and peculiar heavenly favors were to be obtained by them through the exercise of faith. The whole tenor of their writings was to this effect, not only to the Corinthians, but to all those who had espoused the Gospel under their teachings.

In our day, for nearly sixty-four years the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have testified that God has restored the everlasting Gospel to the earth; that with it He has restored the authority that had been taken from the earth, by means of which men can administer the ordinances of life and salvation; and that through this restoration, the gifts, the blessings and the powers that had been bestowed upon believers in ancient days were again enjoyed by the children of men. The burden of the teachings of the Elders of this Church has been to awaken mankind to these solemn and important truths and to arouse in their breasts the old faith, that had died out from among men, causing these gifts and blessings to be withdrawn and no longer enjoyed by those who professed to be the followers of the Son of God. There have been no stronger testimonies borne, no stronger appeals made upon any subject by those who have gone forth preaching the Gospel as restored to the earth, than upon this important point. The constant effort of the Elders who have gone out to preach the Gospel has been to convince the people that these gifts were within their reach by obeying the Gospel which the Lord had revealed.

The contention has been persistent on the part of those who have opposed them that these gifts were abolished; that the powers through which they were obtained in ancient days had been withdrawn, and that it was the work of imposture to attempt to revive the idea that they were to be enjoyed any more. It has been declared time and time again by those who held this opinion that the only reason for the bestowal of these miraculous powers was that they were necessary to convince the world, at the time when the Apostles were laboring to found the Church, that it was the Church of Christ. Having accomplished that end, and the Church having been established, it has been contended that there was no longer any necessity for them, and therefore they were withdrawn from among men.

It is not necessary for me at this time, neither is it my purpose, to enter into any argument upon this point. Suffice it to say that if these gifts were necessary in order to convince the world that Jesus was the Christ and that His Gospel was the plan of salvation in the days of the Apostles, certainly the necessity has not ceased to exist but is still in as great force as it ever was; for we have as many heathen, as many unbelievers, and almost as many determined to deny that Jesus is the Christ, today probably as there was in those days if we consider how narrow were the bounds of the known earth at that time. If it were necessary that these gifts should be bestowed to convince men, then as long as unbelief reigned, as long as there were large bodies of men to be convinced, they would be required.

But there are other reasons for the withdrawal of these gifts. To illustrate the views of the Latter-day Saints upon this subject, I will take the liberty of reading from another sacred record, one that we hold as equally sacred and binding as the Bible. I will read from the 10th chapter of Moroni, contained in the Book of Mormon:

And ye may know that he is, by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore I would exhort you, that ye deny not the power of God; for he worketh by power, according to the faith of the children of men, the same today and tomorrow, and for ever.

And again I exhort you, my brethren, that ye deny not the gifts of God, for they are many; and they come from the same God. And there are different ways that these gifts are administered; but it is the same God who worketh all in all; and they are given by the manifestations of the Spirit of God unto men, to profit them.

For behold, to one is given by the Spirit of God, that he may teach the word of wisdom;

And to another, that he may teach the work of knowledge by the same Spirit;

And to another, exceeding great faith; and to another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit.

And again, to another, that he may work mighty miracles;

And again, to another that he may prophesy concerning all things;

And again, to another, the beholding of angels and ministering spirits;

And again, to another, all kinds of tongues;

And again, to another, the interpretation of languages and of divers kinds of tongues;

And all these gifts come by the Spirit of Christ; and they come unto every man severally, according as he will.

And I would exhort you, my beloved brethren, that ye remember that every good gift cometh of Christ.

And I would exhort you, my beloved brethren, that ye remember that he is the same yesterday, today and for ever, and that all these gifts of which I have spoken, which are spiritual, never will be done away, even as long as the world shall stand, only according to the unbelief of the children of men.

Here we have another prophet that gives the same testimony to the nation unto whom he wrote that Paul does, in almost the identical language, because both of them spoke and wrote by the Spirit of God. But the Prophet Moroni explains more fully even than Paul does concerning these gifts. He said "that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief." Not because God is not willing to bestow gifts upon His children, for as this prophet says, "God is not a partial God, neither a changeable Being; but he is unchangeable from all eternity to all eternity." His dealings with the children of men are alike. If they come to him with faith and obey His Gospel, He is bound by the promises that He has made to bestow upon them the same blessings, and not to discriminate between His children; for if He did so, He would not be a just Being. But justice is his attribute, and He deals justly with His children. He gives unto them His gifts and blessings according to their faith. To one He gives one gift, to another He gives another gift. These gifts are given by Him for the perfection of His people; that in this vale of tears, shut out as we are from His presence, a veil of darkness having been drawn, as it were, between us and Him, those who will exercise faith in His promises and will keep His commandments may receive the aid that is necessary to enable them to walk before Him and to enjoy His power. We are in a state of probation, and to a certain extent in a state of darkness. Many men in their unbelief say, "If God be God, why does He not reveal Himself to men? Why does He not show His face? Why does He not give tangible evidence of His existence? Why does He leave us to walk in the dark, groping hither and thither to find the light? If He be the Being that the Scriptures say He is, why does He not reveal Himself with greater plainness unto mankind and dissipate those doubts, remove this darkness, and end these controversies and this contention?"

Skeptics ask these questions. But those who have faith in God understand that this is a state of probation; that we are sent purposely to have our faith tested and developed. By the exercise of faith, a knowledge of God can be obtained as well as the blessings and gifts of God, so that man need not walk in darkness and in doubt. He can receive the evidences from the Lord, by the exercise of faith, that will convince him of the existence of his Father in heaven, and also of His willingness to hear and answer the prayers and supplications which are addressed to Him in sincerity. It is for this purpose that these gifts are bestowed; that those who do obey the commandments of God shall have privileges, blessings and powers that those who do not take this course cannot have. The bestowal of these is to create a distinction between the people of God and those who are not His people; to give them that superiority which the enjoyment of these gifts bring.

We have been endeavoring for sixty-three years, as I have said, to lead mankind to believe that these things are possible. But it has been an uphill business. There have been great obstacles in the way. Men have doubted it. Why? They have asked this question. "The generations that have preceded us lived without these blessings; have they therefore come short?" They cannot understand it. Because these blessings and gifts have not been enjoyed, they look upon it as an evidence that it was not intended that they should be enjoyed; not taking into account the statement that I have read in your hearing, that through unbelief these gifts have been withdrawn. Men have not enjoyed them because they have not believed they could be enjoyed. How could it be expected that men would receive these gifts if they did not believe it was the will of God to bestow them? That has been the condition of the world. We find it so in our missionary efforts. We find the whole world, it may be said, in this condition. Men who have read the Bible all their days, and who have based their hopes of salvation upon its words, are to be found in every land in this condition of unbelief concerning these gifts and blessings.

Our Father in heaven determined to restore in our day the truth to the earth. He has restored it. He has restored His church. He has restored the authority of the everlasting Priesthood, by means of which mankind can receive the ordinances and the blessings which always follow obedience to these ordinances.

To show you, brethren and sisters and friends, that it is God's design that these gifts should be enjoyed in our day, I will read from a revelation that God has given to this Church through His prophet. It is a revelation given shortly after the Church was organized. The Lord says:

Wherefore, beware lest ye are deceived; and that ye may not be deceived, seek ye earnestly the best gifts, always remembering for what they are given:

For verily I say unto you, they are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep all my commandments, and him that seeketh so to do, that all may be benefitted that seeketh or that asketh of me, that asketh and not for a sign that he may consume it upon his lust.

And again, verily I say unto you, I would that ye should always remember, and always retain in your minds what those gifts are that are given unto the church.

I think it is very important that as Latter-day Saints we should always retain in our minds what these gifts are that are given unto the Church. Not unto the church of the Corinthians, not unto the church of the Ephesians, not unto any of the primitive churches is this word of God addressed; but unto us who now live and who constitute the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

For all have not every gift given unto them; for there are many gifts, and to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God:

To some it is given one, and to some is given another, that all may be profited thereby;

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world;

To others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life if they continue faithful.

And again, to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the differences of administration, as it will be pleasing unto the same Lord, according as the Lord will, suiting his mercies according to the conditions of the children of men.

And again, it is given by the Holy Ghost to some to know the diversities of operations, whether is be of God, that the manifestations of the Spirit may be given to every man to profit withal.

And again, verily I say unto you, to some it is given, by the Spirit of God, the word of wisdom;

To another it is given the word of knowledge, that all may be taught to be wise and to have knowledge.

And again, to some it is given to have faith to be healed,

And to others it is given to have faith to heal.

And again, to some it is given the working of miracles,

And to others it is given to prophecy,

And to others the discerning of spirits,

And again, it is given to some to speak with tongues,

And to another it is given the interpretation of tongues:

And all these gifts cometh from God, for the benefit of the children of God.

And unto the bishop of the church, and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church, and to be elders unto the church, are to have it given unto them to discern all those gifts, lest there shall be any among you professing and yet be not of God.

And it shall come to pass that he that asketh in Spirit shall receive in Spirit;

That unto some it may be given to have all those gifts, that there may be a head, in order that every member may be profited thereby:

He that asketh in the Spirit asketh according to the will of God, wherefore it is done even as he asketh.

And again, I say unto you, all things must be done in the name of Christ, whatsoever you do in the Spirit;

And ye must give thanks unto God in the Spirit for whatsoever blessing ye are blessed with;

And ye must practice virtue and holiness before me continually. Even so. Amen.

This is the word of God to this Church in our day, showing that these gifts and blessings are ours if we will live for them. I have read to you the testimony of an ancient Apostle to the people unto whom he was sent. His testimony is that these gifts were to be enjoyed by the Church. I have read to you the writings of another Prophet who dwelt on this land. He bears testimony, in almost the same language as Paul, being inspired by the same Spirit, that these gifts would always be enjoyed as long as the world should stand, and that they never would be done away with only through the unbelief of the children of men. And I have read to you the words of God through His Prophet in our day, bearing testimony that these gifts are for the Church now, to be enjoyed by the people of God in this day; that every man and woman in the Church of Christ can have the gifts of the Spirit of God divided to them according to their faith and as God wills.

There has been a tremendous amount of unbelief in the world. Men's hearts have been hard. It has come down by tradition from one generation to another, until it has come to our century, that these ancient gifts and blessings, which the saints were earnestly exhorted to contend for were no longer necessary and had been done away with. But unbelief has come down to us that is almost like a stone wall in front of this generation. It is almost impossible to break down that feeling or to arouse within their hearts any spirit of faith or any disposition to believe that such things are possible. Satan is busy, as he has been during this long reign of darkness, instilling doubts and fears into the hearts of men, to prevent them from seeking after God. He did not want any communication between God the Eternal Father and His children. He would cut it off if he had the power, so that it would never be restored again, and that there should from this time forward be no more communication from heaven to man. To effect this he killed the Son of God; and he killed every Apostle that Jesus chose, excepting John the Revelator, and would have killed him if he had had the power. This we know in part from this Bible, but it has come down to us in well authenticated tradition that all the Apostles, excepting John the Revelator, suffered a violent death. This is Satan's work, and he would spread his pall of darkness over the minds of the children of men and make them believe that they cannot find God, that they cannot have the gifts that God has promised, and that it is not God's will that these gifts should be bestowed and enjoyed by men at the present time. He has been very successful in this in the earth. But the time has come, the long expected time, towards which Prophets and Apostles looked, and concerning which they have uttered the most glorious predictions—the time has come when God should stretch forth His hand to perform His great and mighty work, a "marvelous work and a wonder," among the children of men, to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord Jesus, to warn the inhabitants of the earth of the destructions and calamities that are about to come upon them unless they repent.

This is the dispensation of the fullness of times, and to usher it in angels have been sent from the throne of our Almighty Father to the earth, bearing the message of glad tidings that the Gospel is restored again, that the Priesthood or the authority to administer the ordinances of the Gospel has once more been conferred upon man. Could any more glorious tidings have come from the eternal worlds than a message of this description—a message fraught with such momentous consequences to all the inhabitants of the earth? I cannot conceive of anything more glorious. No angel, since the tidings of the birth of the Savior was communicated to man, it seems to me, could bear a more glorious message than this—that the night of darkness was ended, and that communication was once more opened between God and man, between the Father and His earthly children. No doubt the angels flew with eager haste to convey the pure Gospel to the earth; and men on the earth, if they were inspired by the feeling which they should have, would welcome the message as the most glorious and heavenly conceivable.

This has come in our day. Yet we find, even among those who have embraced the Gospel, hearts of unbelief. How many of you, my brethren and sisters, are seeking for these gifts that God has promised to bestow? How many of you, when you bow before your Heavenly Father in your family circle or in your secret places, contend for these gifts to be bestowed upon you? How many of you ask the Father, in the name of Jesus, to manifest Himself to you through these powers and these gifts? Or do you go along day by day like a door turning on its hinges, without having any feeling upon the subject, without exercising any faith whatever; content to be baptized and be members of the Church, and to rest there, thinking that your salvation is secure because you have done this? I say to you, in the name of the Lord, as one of His servants, that you have need to repent of this. You have need to repent of your hardness of heart, of your indifference, and of your carelessness. There is not that diligence, there is not that faith, there is not that seeking for the power of God that there should be among a people who have received the precious promises we have. Instead of the sick being healed, why, it is as much as you can do to get faith to believe that the administration of an Elder will be attended with effect. There is not that seeking for the gift of healing and for the gift to be healed that there ought to be among the Saints. And so with other gifts and graces that God has placed in His Church for His people. I say to you that it is our duty to avail ourselves of the privileges which God has placed within our reach. If we have done wrong, repent of our wrong, and feel after God, and not be satisfied till we have found Him, and He hears and answers us, and He speaks by His divine power in our hearts, bearing testimony to us in such a manner as cannot be doubted that He hears us, that He is near to us, and that He is watching over us and ready to bestow upon us all the blessings that are necessary for our happiness here and hereafter.

I feel to bear testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, just as these prophets have done, that God is the same today as He was yesterday; that God is willing to bestow these gifts upon His children. I know that God is willing to heal the sick, that He is willing to bestow the gift of discerning of spirits, the gift of wisdom, of knowledge and of prophecy, and other gifts that may be needed. If any of us are imperfect, it is our duty to pray for the gift that will make us perfect. Have I imperfections? I am full of them. What is my duty? To pray to God to give me the gifts that will correct these imperfections. If I am an angry man, it is my duty to pray for charity, which suffereth long and is kind. Am I an envious man? It is my duty to seek for charity, which envieth not. So with all the gifts of the Gospel. They are intended for this purpose. No man ought to say, "Oh, I cannot help this; it is my nature." He is not justified in it, for the reason that God has promised to give strength to correct these things, and to give gifts that will eradicate them. If a man lack wisdom, it is his duty to ask God for wisdom. The same with everything else. That is the design of God concerning His Church. He wants His Saints to be perfected in the truth. For this purpose He gives these gifts, and bestows them upon those who seek after them, in order that they may be perfect people upon the face of the earth, notwithstanding their many weaknesses, because God has promised to give the gifts that are necessary for their perfection.

Let us seek for these gifts. Let us be exhorted this day in this Tabernacle, and bear in mind that these gifts are for us; and let us seek for them with all our might, mind and strength. I pray God that this may be the feeling in every heart. If there be those that have not obeyed the Gospel of Jesus Christ, to them I would say, go to God in secret and ask him in the name of Jesus concerning these things; and I tell you, as a servant of God, He will give you a testimony, and you will know that this is the truth. You will be ready then to obey the ordinances of life and salvation and to enter into the Church which He has established on earth. I pray God to bless us all this day and throughout our future lives, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Written for this Paper.

SAN LUIS STAKE, COLORADO.

ZOPATO, near Mount Blanco, Costilla county, Colorado, Dec. 18, 1893.—After finishing my labors in the San Juan stake of Zion, I took train at Durango, La Plata county, Col., and traveled 171 miles through a mountainous country and in an easterly direction to Antonito, Conejos county, Col., where I put up for the night with one of our brethren from the Southern States. About two o'clock in the night we were awakened from our peaceful slumbers by some one calling at the top of his voice from the street: "Mr. Dempsey, the town is on fire!" Of course all hands got up, including the historian, for who could tell without further inquiry that it was not the very house in which we slept that was ablaze? Our fears in this regard, however, was soon dispelled, as it was ascertained that the fire was confined to the so-called "Elevator," in which a large quantity of oats, ready for market, was stored away. This building was about a quarter of a mile away from our lodging. When we got there the whole building, a wooden structure, was burning most beautifully, illuminating the exceeding flat country for miles around. Nor did the large crowd which had gathered around dispute in the least degree with the devouring element as to its right of way. Not a hand was lifted nor a bucket of water thrown to impede the fire in its progress; in fact I never saw a more helpless crowd of men around a fire in all my life than the one I saw that night in Antonito. The fact was that there wasn't a drop of water in town except such as had been hauled thither in barrels from the Conejos river, several miles distant.

This country being a cold one, all water ditches which are used in the summer for irrigation purposes freeze up in the winter, and there being no wells in town, it leaves the inhabitants with the only recourse left—to haul the water needed for domestic use from the river.

But the fire! The night was cold and chilly. The crowd which gathered and watched the consuming flames as the timbers of the elevator gradually disappeared, got close to the fire to warm themselves, myself included. And when at length common sense suggested to some of us that we might just as well return to our lodging, as the fire might proceed just as fast without us, our bodies had already been thoroughly tested by intense heat on one side while the cold night air penetrated the other. The next morning I, for one, found myself a wiser if not a better man. I had indeed caught a genuine Colorado cold, which soon terminated in a regular Colorado gripe, accompanied by a well-known Colorado cough, which baffles the skill of all Coloradans, wise and otherwise, until it has run its course.

With this terrific cold preying upon my system I have visited all the settlements of the Saints in the San Luis valley, preached in its different wards and branches and obtained the historical information that I was after. But the ordeal was a hard one. Traveling in the cold sometimes from twenty to forty miles a day, when I ought to have been in bed; and speaking to the people from one to two hours at night when I should perhaps not have opened my mouth at all, gave me an experience which I do not covet a second time. But by the prayers, faith and good nursing of my friends, and particularly through that strength which the Almighty gave me, I filled all my appointments and am now about to return home, satisfied with my labors.

The San Luis Stake of Zion consists of four Bishop's wards, namely, the Manassa ward, to which belong the branches of Los Cerritos, Mountain View and Fox Creek; Sanford ward with Eastdale branch attached; Richfield ward, including the branch of Morgan and Blanco, and the Beulah ward, recently organized in New Mexico. The numerical strength of the Stake, according to the last statistical report, is 501 families or 2,294 souls, of whom two are Patriarchs, fifty-eight Seventies, forty-nine High Priests, ninety-seven Elders, eighteen Priests, fifty-one Teachers, 102 Deacons, 1,168 members and 749 children under eight years of age. Alfred R. Smith, a son of the former Stake president, Silas S. Smith, presides over the Stake, and his counselors are Levi P. Helm and Thomas A. Crowther. With the exception of one, all the branches and wards composing the San Luis Stake of Zion are situated in the San Luis valley and principally in Conejos county. The San Luis valley is undoubtedly the largest valley in Colorado, as it extends north and south for about one hundred and fifty miles, the south end reaching far into New Mexico; its average width is nearly fifty miles. The north mountain range Sangre de Cristo form the eastern boundary of the valley, and the Conejos mountains on the west divide the waters which fall into the Gulf of Mexico from those which reach the Gulf of California through the Colorado river. The Rio Grande del Norte enters the valley from the mountains on the west, and then changes its course to a southerly direction receiving a number of tributaries on its way, among which are the Conejos and San Antonio rivers from the west, and a number of smaller streams both from the east and west.

The San Luis valley puts one in mind of the plains beyond the Rocky Mountains east; for miles and miles the surface of the valley is level as a floor; a few hills and low mountain ranges, however, rise at different points in the valley, lending diversity to the landscape. This is particularly the case with two dome-shaped mountains which stand in the south end of the valley, one on either side of the Rio Grande del Norte. Looking south the one to the right is called the San Antonio and the one on the left the Ute mountain. These two mountains, which stand detached from all the surrounding mountain systems and ranges, are covered with immense growths of cedar and timber, which is utilized by the settlers for fuel and building material. Of course the more extensive mountain slopes east and west of the valley are likewise covered. The altitude of the San Luis valley varies from 7,500 to 7,800 feet above the level of the sea; in the spring of the year it is subject to hard and continuous winds, which at times to new settlers are a little annoying. In Conejos county, where most of the Saints are located, there are besides the Mormon settlements and the railway towns, quite a number of Mexican piazzas, such as Los Cerritos, Fuertecolor, San Rafael, Macetos, Los Pinos and others. The principal Mormon towns are Manassa, Sanford and Richfield; the more important railway towns are Alamosa, Antonito and La Jara. The Mexicans compose nearly half of the entire population of the county, and live in their rather odd-looking flat-roofed dwellings, the same as they did two hundred years ago; they are nearly all Catholics, and are still very superstitious. On penitence day many of them will subject themselves to almost barbarous torture, generally self-inflicted, and in a few instances they even select individuals to be crucified in imitation of the Savior—not a sham crucifixion either, but the actual sacrifice of life by that most agonizing ordeal.

The Manassa ward is the headquarters of the San Luis Stake of Zion. The town of Manassa is beautifully situated on a level tract of land; but immediately north of some low hills which stand between the townsite and the Conejos river; it is three miles due east from the railway where there is a switch but no station, ten miles northeast of Antonito, eight miles south southeast of La Jara, twenty-two miles south of Alamosa, the largest town in the valley, and 608 miles by nearest railway from Salt Lake City. Manassa was founded by Latter-day Saints in 1879, and is now a prosperous town. The new Stake house, not yet fully completed, a fine two-story brick schoolhouse, several stores and a large number of fine private residences draw the attention of the stranger as he enters the town, and on becoming acquainted with the people, he finds himself enjoying that free and full-hearted hospitality which is so characteristic of the people in the Southern States; a majority of the Saints residing here hail from that part of our great country. There are 279 families of Latter-day Saints in the Manassa ward, or 1039 souls. John C. Dalton is the Bishop; he acts with Marin Christensen as his first and Joseph F. Thomas as his second counselor.

The Los Cerritos branch (rather disorganized at present) consists of a few families of Saints residing in the immediate vicinity of the Mexican town called Los Cerritos (the meaning of which is The Hills), situated on the Conejos river, three miles southeast of Manassa. It was at this place where the first Latter-day Saint emigrants first found temporary shelter in 1878, and until Manassa was founded the next year. For many years Brother L. M. Peterson, the probate judge of Conejos county, was the presiding Elder of the Los Cerritos branch.

The Mountain View branch consists of the Saints living in a scattered condition west of Manassa, across the railway track, and also those of our people living in and around the towns of Antonito and Conejos. The latter town is the county seat and is situated one mile northwest of Antonito. Meetings and Sunday schools are held in a small log house about five miles west of Manassa. Bro. Elihu K. Ball is the president of the branch.

The Fox Creek branch, which like Los Cerritos and Mountain View belong to the Manassa ward, consists of seventeen families of Saints, who reside on Fox creek and the Conejos river, up in the mountains west of the San Luis valley. The center of the branch, or the place where the people have erected a nice, respectable log meeting house, not far from the point where Fox creek puts into the Conejos river, is about twelve miles due west of Antonito. David Vance is the president of the branch; meetings and Sunday schools are held regularly.

The town of Sanford, thus named in honor of Silas Sanford Smith, the former president of the San Luis stake, has a most delightful location on a bench elevated several feet above the surrounding country. Like Manassa, this town obtains its supply of water for irrigation purposes from the Conejos river; but its fine artesian wells, of which nearly every family in town has one or more, add additional convenience to the place. Sanford was first founded in 1885 with the intention that it should absorb the previously located towns of Ephraim and Richfield, the sites of which were considered too low and in other respects less desirable. All the people from Ephraim moved into Sanford; hence that town is now defunct; but only a portion of the inhabitants of Richfield vacated their former homes in favor of the new location, thus that settlement still exists. Sanford has a number of fine residences, and a two-story brick school house; and the foundation for a new meeting house is laid. Soren C. Bertelson presides as Bishop of the Sanford ward; his counselors are Geo. W. Irwin and Wm. O. Crowther. The ward has a total membership (Eastdale not included) of 124 families or 687 souls.

The Eastdale branch, belonging to the Sanford ward, consists of a few families of Saints who are founding a settlement on Costilla creek, in Costilla county, Col., about 25 miles southeast of Sanford and across the Rio Grande del Norte. The townsite of Eastdale is about one and a half miles north of the boundary line between Colorado and New Mexico and about four miles northeast of the foot of Ute mountain. The prosperity of the little settlement depends mainly upon the success of a reservoir which the brethren have been busily engaged in constructing during the last few years. There is only one well in the whole village, the property of Elder Christen Jensen, and on this all the people and domestic animals rely for their supply of water. Hence at every hour of the day the villagers are seen with buckets in hand wending their way to and from this "good and faithful well" which so far has not failed in furnishing the requisite quantity of water for man and beast. The latter, however, are not always liberally supplied. Hence all day long horses and cattle are loitering around the well anxiously watching their chances for a drink, which only can be obtained when some kind-hearted neighbor draws more water than his own animals may need. When I state that the well is 60 feet deep, it will readily be seen that the hoisting of water to the surface for so many living beings is no slight task. Thirteen families, or seventy souls, constitute the present population of the Eastdale branch, and Simeon A. Dunn is the presiding Elder.

The Richfield ward, consisting of 63 families, or 385 souls, is presided over by Bishop Ephraim Coombs; his counselors are Wilhelm F. O. Behrman and Peter N. Guyman. The village of Richfield is situated three-quarters of a mile east of La Jara, a railway station. From 1883 to 1888 it existed as a ward; from 1888 to 1891, owing to the removal of a large proportion of its inhabitants to Sanford, it was reduced to a branch of the Sanford ward; but since 1891, it has again had a full ward organization of its own. The place possesses nearly the same natural advantages as Sanford and Manassa, and its numerous artesian wells afford the people excellent water for culinary purposes.

The Morgan branch consists of seventeen families of Saints, who live in a scattered condition on their respective quarter sections of land in a flat and very extensive country lying northwest of Richfield. The big meeting house recently erected by the Saints of the branch, is situated near the Alamosa creek, eight miles from Richfield, and about fifteen miles southwest of the town of Alamosa. The branch was organized in 1887, and named for Elder John Morgan, who has taken a very active part in this valley in locating and encouraging the Saints who have immigrated hither from the Southern States. John D. Westbrook is the presiding Elder of Morgan.

The Blanca branch consists of a few Saints residing in and around the place known as Zopato, situated immediately northwest of the grand old mountain called Mount Blanca which raises its snow-capped peaks heavenward at an altitude of 14,488 feet above the level of the sea. It is the second highest peak in the state of Colorado, and is loftier than Pike's peak by 836 feet. The Saints residing on the numerous small creeks which gush forth from the west base of the mountain are all new beginners, and are as yet not so comfortable as they might desire to be; but the future prospects are pretty good; and a ward organization is contemplated here at some distant day, when questions as to the ownership of land, water and other rights shall have been properly adjusted. At present the little branch is struggling along as best it can; meetings and Sunday schools are held occasionally, and Willey F. King presides over the branch.

The Beulah ward consists of twenty-two families of Saints, or 112 souls, residing on the Chama river, in Rio Arriba county, New Mexico, about 100 miles southwest of Manassa, and about 18 miles west of Chamita, the nearest railway station on the D. & R. G. railway. The altitude is only about 6000 feet above the level of the sea, which, coupled with the fact that it is located on the southern slope, makes it a fine fruit country. But the river, which is somewhat similar to the Rio Virgen of Southern Utah, is hard to control, the bed of the stream consisting of quicksands, and floods being of frequent occurrence. Hence the brethren have been struggling hard since 1889 to make a success of the place. The town is built on lands purchased from Mexicans, and a short distance above the new settlement stands an old Catholic church which was built about three hundred years ago. Asahel L. Fuller is the Bishop of the Beulah ward, being ordained to that position in March, 1891; but the ward was not fully organized till Dec. 11, 1892.

San Luis is the only Stake of Zion in Colorado, but there is room for many more settlements in the same valley, not to speak of other portions of the state. More Saints are wanted here to strengthen the different wards and branches of the Church; but all who come must consider that they are to live between 7000 and 8000 feet up in the air as compared to the sea level. Otherwise the facilities are good. Here are "mountains high," a "clear blue sky," and "pure breezes" do indeed blow, as I am sure anyone would acknowledge who spent a week ago last Saturday here; and the "clear streamlets," such as the Conejos, San Antonio, Rio Grande del Norte and their numerous tributaries flow continually, affording excellent opportunities for extensive irrigation. Yes, let Latter-day Saints who are in search of homes not forget the San Luis Valley; but before deciding to locate their families here let them come and see for themselves. Then they can blame no one for exaggerating the natural advantages of this extensive, lofty and windy valley.

ANDREW JENSON.

LETTER FROM ANN ARBOR.

ANN ARBOR, Michigan, Dec. 19.—With a tempest raging without and the fire cheerfully burning within, these notes are being written.

On taking up last Wednesday evening's town paper we noticed that the Utah statehood bill had almost unanimously passed the House. How gratifying this was to us! We fully expected that it would pass the Senate and President without much difficulty, but we now see that the Women's Society of Washington are going to do their best to have it blocked in the Senate—their ground being that polygamy is not dead in Utah. We will watch with interest the doings of the upper house, and see if 200,000 people are to be kept down by a band of women—claiming that of which they know nothing.

The News of December 10th made a flying trip to Ann Arbor. It arrived here the evening of Dec. 8rd—making the trip from Salt Lake in 48 hours. It is the Utah paper that is sought after here.

La grippe seems an epidemic here. Nearly all of Utah's children have battled with it, but, happy to say, all are better of it now.

That we are all keeping temperance and not breaking the Word of Wisdom will be seen when I say that none of us smoke or chew tobacco, drink liquor or any kind, tea or coffee. We have good, healthful cocoa at our meals and water between times.

To those who fear for the spiritual welfare of friends and relatives here we would say: Here we are put solely on our own resources; we meet obstacles in our studies that seem unsurmountable, and we learn that there is but One who can aid us. We therefore become more prayerful and humble, and I am safe in saying that we are more strict in the duties of our faith than we ever were before.

Herman von Holst, the great historian, and of Chicago university, delivered a lecture on "Toussaint L'Ouverture," before the students in university hall, last Saturday evening, the 16th. It was a master effort—a gem of thought—though the delivery was not the best, being of the German-English brogue. Mr. Holst was the guest of President and Mrs. Angell while here.

Christmas vacation is nigh and with it will come but little rest for us. Reviewing our past lessons it will take most of our time. The law department closes for vacation on the 21st inst.; literary, medical and musical on the 23rd.

Miss Louise Keller, of Mantli, now at Cook county normal school at Chicago, is expected here to spend Christmas vacation with us. Jodie Horne of Richfield goes to Grand Rapids in company with Ernest Partridge of Provo, to spend a few days with college comrades this week.

H. S. Harris and wife, Mrs. James Brown, B. Wooley et al, have had the grip, but all are well now.

Q. U. E. E. N.

Cyrus Hills, of Campo, Cal., has been pestered for some time by a big mountain lion, which killed his hogs, coats and calves. The loss of a particularly fine colt determined Hills to get the lion at any cost. He fixed up a big steel trap and baited it, taking the utmost care to fool the suspicious beast, and that night he bagged his game. The lion was transferred to a stout cage and is kept chained. He is a fierce specimen.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

CHRISTMAS THOUGHTS.

Many great men have engraved their names in indelible characters across the pages of history. Their exploits have been the theme of poets; historians have recorded them and the world has listened or read, filled with wonder and admiration. But among them all, who can be compared to Jesus of Nazareth, the anniversary of whose birth is about to be celebrated once more by the millions that are called after His name?

True, He fought no battles; He did not at the head of armies break kingdoms to pieces, building a new one of fragments spattered with blood. He was no Cyrus, no Alexander, no Napoleon. Nor did He, like Croesus, acquire fame on account of His riches. Indeed, He did not possess any other advantage, so regarded by His fellow-men, by which to gain immortal fame. His entrance in the world was obscure and under the most humble circumstances. His life was apparently of so little moment at the time, that hardly any cotemporary secular writer gives it even a passing notice. And he entertained and enunciated views so contrary to the orthodoxy of the time, that at last he was executed as a most dangerous agitator and demagogue. And yet, today his name is revered throughout the world. Kings and nobles humbly bow before Him, while the mightiest nations of the earth profess to follow His precepts. His very death became His victory. For by the perfect life He led and the sacrifice He gave as the termination thereof on earth, He earned a name far above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue confess that He is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

The work of Jesus in giving to the world His Gospel cannot be fully appreciated, unless we remember what the world was at the time of His advent. In the first place, outside of Palestine, the idea of God was blurred and effaced by the grossest idolatry. Was there one god or many gods? Did the Stoics give the correct answer by maintaining that God is everything and everything is God. Or were the Platonists nearer the truth in holding that only all that is spirit is God? If there was a God, was He, as Epicurus taught, too exalted to care for human beings and doings? Such questions puzzled the Gentile world, and show the dense ignorance of the wisest of men.

Secondly, concerning human nature there was equally imperfect knowledge. All who were capable of reflecting on the subject admitted that men were sinners; but the nature and extent of this condition was unknown, until a perfect law had been revealed and the history of the fall had been explained. Some held that evil was inherent in matter itself, thereby removing all responsibility from the person to matter, the material of which the body is composed. The tendency of religion was under such circumstances to degenerate and become synonymous with patriotism, admiration of nature and of the arts and sciences. Clearly there was no salvation in that kind of "religion."

Further, apart from the Gospel no knowledge of a life after this was obtainable. The possibility of a resurrected body was denied and the immortality of the soul was but partly admitted. Socrates, the greatest of heathen philosophers, speaks for all, when he admits that whether life or death be the more preferable condition, was known only to the gods.

The moral condition of the world was on a level with this ignorance of the truth. Paul describes it in his letter to the Romans, and those who have investigated the subject freely admit that the awful picture has not one dark shade too much. They were literally given up to vile affections and all manner of crimes, being fools although they claimed to be wise.

Compare such an awful condition with the change that has been wrought by the Gospel of Jesus, wherever received in sincerity! He came to save, and in that work is involved the elements of all power both in heaven and on earth. "Lifted up," He draws all unto Him, for he brings to men the means of repentance, holiness and eternal life. Angels jubilantly heralded His coming; kings from the orient worshiped Him; holy men and women rejoiced in beholding the hope of Israel. The Church of God joins them in rendering to Him honor and thanksgiving and praise for ever and ever.

THE ILLS OF OVER-EATING.

It doesn't require the particular quality of information commonly supposed to attend the possession of a sheepskin diploma to tell us that the great majority of the minor evils and ailments to which the human system is subject come from excessive and unwise eating—the overloading, overworking, and general abuse of the stomach. It is very singular, too, that whereas thousands upon thousands of the best and most philanthropic of their race fill pulpit, press and platform with invectives and exhortations against the demon of drink, there are but very few to essay the task of combatting the giant of gluttony. We have seen the statement somewhere in reputable print that improper food, and too much of it, has killed more people than excessive drink, ten to one. We may disbelieve this, if we choose, because statistics to prove it are not forthcoming. But in doing so let us bear in mind two salient features: (1) that every victim of drink is charged up promptly and regularly to his destroyer—evidence so necessary and valuable to the anti-drink campaign must not be left unused; and (2) that the evil results of over-eating seem to most observers to be perfectly natural, hence are not traced carefully to their source nor recorded, and that the human plague of indigestion, which is the basis of nearly all our ills, is commonly regarded as something hereditary or at least an ailment not entitled to specific and accurate study.

The difficulty with most well-meaning and zealous reformers in the line of temperance is that they only see one side of the double-sided shield. If they tilt against drink, they are too much inclined to ignore the equally intemperate indulgence in the pleasures of the table, frequently giving in their own persons evidence of rank inconsistency, in the form of voracious eating. If they charge down upon unrestrained gorging, they are apt to lean far too much toward the other evil, in readily countenancing and even advising the use of liquor—in all of this perhaps allowing their precepts to be accompanied by an example that cannot fail to be disastrous to many who attempt to follow it.

The News would advise true temperance in all things. The divine Word inveighs against injurious solids and their excessive use, as well as against hot and fiery liquids. And if any of our readers who while yet middle-aged and under, suffer indigestion, daily headaches, dullness and "woodiness" in mental or physical labor, we suggest that the trouble with them—assuming of course that they are non-users of liquor—is that they eat too much, or of the wrong kind, or at the wrong time. Nearly all the most successful brain-workers content themselves with a light repast—a mere snack—upon arising from bed. After that they do their best and hardest work. One hearty meal per day—a meal when one may fully indulge the calls of appetite and palate, and only then if there are sufficient opportunities for bodily exercise—is as much as the ordinary stomach can attend to profitably, and as much as any stomach ought to be asked to grapple with. A "bite" in the evening, if there is hunger,—a glass of milk or something very light—is enough to go to bed on.

Try it a month, ye sufferers! If you do not wake up in the morning fresher, find yourselves during the day more vigorous, accomplish more and abler work, see much more in man and nature to admire and be grateful for, feel brighter, livelier, happier and better every way—why, then, at the end of the month we'll try you with other advice on the same subject.

TRAMPS AND TRAINS.

The officials of the Southern Pacific railway system have been very much puzzled of late with the tramp nuisance, but it is now claimed that they have decided upon a policy that will settle the matter either against the tramps or the railway. Of course the railway magnates say the affair will not be adverse to them, and they promise that if the vagrants are unwilling peaceably to accede to the new regulations, there will be something dropped that will arouse the whole western country to a full sense of the serious nature of the tramp business. Just what the railway men intend to do is not yet made public.

The necessity of some steps being taken has been forced upon the Southern Pacific, which finds it rather expensive business to have to run trains specially for gangs of vagrants without hope of monetary reward. The tramps travel in organized companies from El Paso, Texas, to Portland, Oregon, and back again. Each company has a captain, and the number in a gang is so large that a sort of military discipline as against the railroad is successfully enforced. Trainmen are powerless to put the tramps off except in a few instances, and in these loss of property has been inflicted on the railway by spite work.

The tramps that crowded east in such great numbers a few weeks ago are now heading for California, where the mild winter season and the prospective Midwinter Fair form a big attraction for the loafers. This shifting back and forth gives a big passenger business to the railway, but as there is no cash in it for tickets the Southern Pacific intend to stop it. One thing is sure, and that is if the railway men themselves are not powerful enough to check the imposition, a call made by them for official protection cannot go unheeded. The people cannot afford to have railway trains or any department of public carrying service at the mercy of robber vagrants, nor can the law officers be justified in permitting the property rights of corporations any more than individuals to be illegally assailed.

SUPREME VIRTUES.

At a time when all Christendom is preparing for the celebration of the advent to the earth of the Greatest among men, the devout mind naturally feels the propriety of meditating upon the truths He announced, and to which a most wonderful civilization owes its progress and achievements, if not existence. These truths relate to the duties we owe both to our Creator and to ourselves, but more especially to our fellowmen.

To refer only to this last point, how perfect are the principles He expounded to His followers! These are expected to be just in all their dealings with others. But justice demands that nothing be done the result of which is oppression or the curtailing of their liberty, unless forfeited by criminal acts. Justice respects the property of others, and, in the true, Christian conception of it, guards even against the secret desire to possess what belongs to others. Under this principle theft and fraud are impossible. It, further, respects the character of others, admires their virtues just as much as it censures their vices, and generates gratitude for benevolence received. Injustice is one characteristic of some who reject Christ.

Absolute truthfulness is another virtue inculcated by Him, who is emphatically the truth. Veracity is necessary to confidence, and without confidence no friendly intercourse between men and men is possible. In the teachings of the great Nazarene one virtue is more emphasized than others, it is this. His whole life is an admonition to His followers to be true—not only to speak the truth, but to live it. And this is supposed to be carried out in its utmost consequences in every position, in every transaction. Commencing with being true to God, a genuine disciple of Christ will be true to his country, to his family, to his friends, to those with whom he associates, be it in political organizations or churches; in the store of the merchant or on the field of the farmer. Truth everywhere is the standard of the Christianity Christ taught.

So far probably even natural morality would go. All admire, at least professedly, justice and truth. Heathen philosophers have come pretty near the Christian idea of these virtues and have taught them to their followers. But our great Teacher went further. He urged the cultivation of peace and good-will towards all, irrespective of desert. Every precept of the Law and every teaching by the Prophets is summed up in the principle of universal love, a disposition of the heart that enables man to avoid envy and pride and to be concerned about the happiness of others, as a means of obtaining happiness, as well as to "bear all things, believe all things, endure all things."

It is the disregard of this last virtue that is responsible for all the misery and all the mischief under which Christendom still suffers. Men have been striving to build themselves up on the foundation of one part only of the principles laid down by Christ. The greatest and noblest of them all has been neglected, except by a few individuals, who have either been ostracized as maniacs or even suffered martyrdom. Let the world understand and follow the principle of universal love as announced by Christ, and the kingdom of heaven will dwell on earth.

This is the condition to be called into existence by the second advent of the Son of God. Looking at what has been accomplished in the world under the influence of Christianity only partly understood and imperfectly carried out, we may judge somewhat of what will take place, when all are taught by the Lord and the power to follow the teachings corresponds to the knowledge obtained. That is the period of the earth's history that is coming and which Christ's followers expect.

THE CZAR A CHURCH BUILDER.

The Russian emperor seems to be fond of building churches. One of the most magnificent edifices of the kind, a veritable fairy palace, has been erected on Mount Olivet, near Jerusalem, by the present emperor and his brother, in memory of their mother. And now it appears that the czar has erected another costly edifice at Borke, Russia, upon which millions of roubles have been expended. It is erected as an expression of gratitude to the Almighty for the emperor's miraculous escape from death in a railway disaster near the village in 1888. It would seem that the sovereign head of the Russian empire, both state and church, has religious sentiment enough to honor and respect a higher Ruler and pay his homage to Him.

The Idaho Daily Statesman, in commenting upon this church building, raises the question whether man can please the Almighty by the erection of costly "temples," and comes to a negative conclusion. The Builder of the universe cannot find pleasure, that paper thinks, in the poor efforts of mortals. It would be better, it is urged, to distribute the millions among the poor.

Without intending any disrespect to our Idaho cotemporary, we may be allowed to allude to the similarity between this argument and that of one of the ancient Twelve, when a certain woman anointed the Master, as the custom of the time and country in certain cases required. "Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence and given to the poor?" As a penny was a fair day's wages, the question seemed pertinent; but the Master at once defended the act of seeming waste, because the motive was pure. And this gives the true answer to questions of that kind. The church built by the czar may be insignificant in every particular in His eyes at whose command worlds came into existence; yet, inasmuch as he felt gratitude to God and wished to express this feeling, his work is to that extent acceptable and will not be unrewarded.

If the Almighty could take no pleasure in the work of His children on the earth, why did He command Moses to build the Tabernacle and David and Solomon a Temple, and why did His glory appear in their buildings? The Son of God called the Temple His Father's house, and delighted to be within its sacred precincts. That Temple had then been under construction nearly forty years and must have cost immense sums. But He never intimated that the money ought to have been distributed among the poor, although in His every act and word He proved Himself to be the friend of the poor. The fact of the matter is that those who are liberal in regard to such things are also generally open-hearted towards those who are in need. Where God is not honored, the poor are also neglected.

The Statesman mixes the two ideas of Temples and churches as if they were identical. But they are not. A church is simply a place of worship. A Temple of God is a building erected for the purpose of bringing the work of salvation within the reach of the departed generations of the human race. To build Temples is one of the duties of the Church of Christ in these latter days. And that the Almighty is well pleased with the work so far done is evidenced in many ways. The Saints do not regret the labor or the money they have expended on their Temples. On the contrary, when God commands, they are willing to give again, and to erect even more magnificent buildings to His holy name.

A REAL REVELATION.

In the course of an article favoring the admission of the territories to statehood, the Cleveland Plaindealer of December 18, after indulging in a little rather creditable wit—for Ohio—concerning Arizona and New Mexico, gets along to argument serious and logical with reference to Utah. We quote this part of the article:

As to the arid land, this country received a real revelation from Brigham Young upon this point. No matter what may have been the fallacy of Brigham's claims as a prophet, generally speaking, he gave the country a revelation in this instance.

In his flight from persecution he selected a spot by the Great Salt Lake which he had reason to believe no other creature would think of selecting. A great many people—and possibly Mr. Hepburn of Iowa—had they been suddenly dropped in that barren country, would have been in a hurry to starve to death as a matter of relief. But what result have we? One of the grandest sections of the Union, marching in with all the pride and dignity that attaches to older states—though possibly a little shocked at disturbed family relations.

JOSEPH THE PROPHET.

Today is the anniversary of the birth of a man, whom future historians will reverently mention as the most prominent figure of the nineteenth century, a man whose appearance in history will mark an epoch. We refer to Joseph Smith, the Prophet and first leader of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who was born December 23, 1805, in Sharon, Windsor county, in the state of Vermont.

It is not at this time necessary to attempt a sketch of his eventful though brief career. The leading features of it are familiar to those who love and revere his memory, and even the world at large is beginning to obtain a better understanding thereof. But a few thoughts may today be offered upon the mission he so faithfully accomplished.

Bible students know that among the most prominent forecasts by ancient seers are those which relate to the establishment on earth of a condition of peace, virtue, righteousness and universal brotherhood. This happy dispensation is not to come merely as a result of evolution out of the existing conditions. The Scriptures represent the appearance of the golden millennium as the result of the second advent of Messiah. It will follow His coming in glory just as the Gospel dispensation followed His life and death in the beginning of our era. It is further stated in holy writ that certain events were to precede the reign of peace. Among these are the gathering of Israel and the proclamation of the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the world, first to the Gentiles and then to the Jews.

As John the Baptist was sent to prepare the way for Messiah at His first advent, so our beloved Prophet, Joseph Smith, was commissioned by the Almighty to proclaim the second coming of Christ. To him was given the charge to gather scattered Israel and to send the Gospel to every part of the earth. Nay, more than that: as the dispensation of which he was the forerunner is to be one in which heaven and earth are to be united and all the children of God acknowledge their Elder Brother, he was given means whereby the Gospel institutions are made accessible to generations past, whose bodies slumber in the grave, but whose spirits live in the great beyond. His words, though but those of feeble man, were to reverberate to worlds beyond this; the power with which he was endowed, the power of God, was to break the chains of darkness and liberate the prisoners.

For this great work he was wonderfully well equipped. With the valor of a hero he faced a hostile world. A genius, he comprehended at a glance the nature of things surrounding him. A seer, he viewed the past and future almost as clearly as the present. At his coming, the world might well rejoice, for his work furnishes the proof that the Almighty has never forgotten His promises to His people.

Brief was his career. Misunderstood by the world, he was soon called upon to lay down his life as a testimony to the truth of his mission. But his work on earth was done. As a monument of his faithfulness the Church of Christ exists in these latter days, engaged in carrying out the mission first given to him. The Gospel is being proclaimed to the world. Israel is gathering and soon, perhaps, the Jews will hear the glad tidings. Redemption is being offered to the dead. In brief, at this time there is joy among departed spirits as well as among men, on account of the preparations that are being made for the reign of the Son of God. We worship the Almighty, and we honor and respect the memory of His servant Joseph Smith, because he was faithful and true; endeavoring to imitate his virtues and to share the reward promised the Saints of the Most High.

A HINT ON HEALTH.

The prevalence of la grippe in Europe has developed a peculiar feature in its influence on certain religious customs. High dignitaries in the churches have absolved the members of their flocks from keeping certain sectarian fasts, such as require abstention from meat, etc., until the epidemic loses a considerable portion of its force. One official of the Anglican church, the bishop of Ely, instructs the people in his diocese to do a sort of penance for the indulgence granted them by reciting a psalm once each day that they should have fasted had it not been for their release from the obligation.

No doubt this procedure will prove more beneficial than will a reduction in the amount of nutritious food at a time when disease is lurking about. But if people wish to secure greater immunity from sickness they will accomplish it only by close and persistent observance of the laws of health. Occasional attempts in this line will not produce permanent benefits; constant conformity with proper rules is necessary. Wholesome food and drink, regular and cleanly habits, abstention from hot and intoxicating drinks, the avoidance of all excesses—in fact, temperance in all things and at all times—are essential to the enjoyment of health and long life.

This is the veneration in which the Lord has declared that special afflic-

tions and judgments shall come upon earth; when "plagues shall go forth," and a "desolating sickness shall cover the land;" when His scourges "shall pass over by night and by day, and the report thereof shall vex all the people." These calamities are predicted in Holy Writ. In this age the Lord has given to His Church a revelation known as the Word of Wisdom, which in these matters is for "the temporal salvation of the Saints in the last days." Members of the Church who have confidence in the word of the Lord, and desire to receive the benefits of His promise, will manifest their faith by their works.

There are many untoward circumstances which people are compelled to pass through, and which expose them to influences that have a deleterious effect upon their health, so that it is not only those who wilfully disregard proper hygienic rules who have to suffer. But for those who cannot help themselves there is good excuse. There are enough of these without the number of afflicted ones being added to through carelessness or wanton disobedience of healthful regulations. At the present time there is special necessity, particularly on the part of the people of Utah, for a better understanding and closer observance of the counsel of the Lord in regard to health than has been exhibited in all cases. It is a wise people that will enjoy to the full extent the blessings that are within their reach through controlling abnormal appetites and improper desires in matters of substances that are taken into the body as food, drink, etc.

UNEMPLOYED RESOURCES.

The secret of the wealth, stability and independence of any people does not lie in the ability to buy abundantly and regularly from others, or even to spend treasure in collecting from the ends of the earth products and luxuries which add to man's comfort and convenience. The secret of prosperity and perpetuity is found in the capacity of a people to develop and make use of those advantages and resources which lie beneath, above or immediately around them. In other words, it is nobler and safer for any community to be builders rather than buyers, and producers rather than patrons.

This is a hackneyed subject with the people of Utah, and yet its importance keeps it free from the stigma of dreary staleness. We must create; we must develop; we must produce; we must manufacture:—all this we know by hearsay, and believe from heart's conviction if we but give to the subject a moment's thought. But our progress in these directions is slow. Our capitalists fancy other lines of investment; our practical men hesitate at the risks to be incurred; our consumers—with sorrow it must be said—are not particular enough in giving real and every-day encouragement to home products by insisting upon having them and using no other.

In this latter line, however, there has been marked improvement during the past six months; and judging from that advancement, the future is full of promise. Home manufacture offers perhaps surer inducements today than ever before. The community has begun to learn one priceless lesson in economics since the stringency came—the duty of keeping the money at home that must be expended for necessities. If no other good has been accomplished by the pressure than the teaching of this precept, the crisis has still brought its own sufficient reward. But other things have also received an impetus—projects that are usually deemed unsuitable save in flush-money times, schemes that require cash as well as confidence. As an instance: The Ogden department of this paper made mention some weeks ago of the organization of the Pioneer Electric Power company, the design of which is to construct a dam across Ogden canyon, and to store in the immense reservoir thus created the waters of the Ogden river during the season when they are not used for irrigation. The water thus preserved is to be used first for the generation of electricity, which in turn will be transmitted to whatever point it is needed and converted into light, heat or power, as wanted. In case a system of dams should be constructed, the entire water of the season, besides being employed for the generation of power the year round, might be used for the purpose of irrigation. But the immense benefit which Ogden will derive from the enterprise is not the most significant feature. That which gives to it an incalculable importance is the inspiration that will be transmitted through its success to other localities, which like Ogden, are possessed of vast resources of mechanical power and irrigation storage of which they have never tried to avail themselves. Foremost among them is Salt Lake City—whence for some months past has been looking to the "Stairs" in Big Cottonwood, whence we are promised power for electrical light and other purposes. Who can calculate the wealth of industry tied up in that and other canyons and gorges leading into this valley? Wherever there is an opportunity for water storage there is a source of mechanical power; and such opportunities seem all but infinite as one surveys the prospect.

PREHISTORIC TOWNS.

The remains of five prehistoric towns have been discovered from twenty to forty miles below Eddy, New Mexico. The discovery was made on Wednesday, the 20th inst., by Messrs. M. McMillan, of St. Louis, and E. B. Bronson, of El Paso. These gentlemen are regarded as authorities on prehistoric Indian ruins. They state that the towns must formerly have contained from 15,000 to 20,000 population. They also assert that the pottery, arrowheads and stone axes found prove the identity of the inhabitants with the race that left the peculiarly-built towns in northern Mexico and Arizona. They built towns in the hills, so they could be better protected, and farmed the lands along the river bottoms.

It is the intention to excavate in these towns and expose the walls of dwellings, which have been buried by sand from the hills near by. It is said to be evident, from the old canals that can yet be traced, that water for one of the towns was secured from a canyon near by, now almost filled with sand. The discoveries already made show that irrigation was carried on to a considerable extent for the purposes of agriculture. It is thought that possibly something may develop in the exploration of the largest and best preserved buildings that will give some clue to the history and customs of the town's builders.

MORONI.

Far above the busy throng
That fills the streets below—
Far above the human tide
With its ceaseless ebb and flow,
I calmly stand and gaze away
O'er mountains, vales and hills;
And the glorious beauty of them all
My soul with wonder fills.

I am the first to greet the sun
As he climbs the Wasatch peaks,
And his last bright rays shine on my head
Ere his ocean bed he seeks.
Then one by one the stars shine out,
Night spreads her mantle down;
I still my silent vigil keep
O'er all the sleeping town.

The gently dropping summer rain
And winter's chilling snow
Fall all unheeded on my head
As the seasons come and go.
I have no fear for the storm-clouds dark
Nor the lightning's vivid flash;
To me some wild, weird music, seems
The thunder's deaf'ning crash.

Beneath my feet God's Temple stands
In massive strength sublime,
Built by the pany hands of man
But to endure till end of time;
Long after those who raised its spires
Shall sleep their last long sleep—
As long as granite walls shall last
I still my watch shall keep.

The foregoing little poem, which our readers will agree has both sweetness and sentiment, music and eloquence, was written by a well known gentleman of this city, who up to this time has not given the NEWS permission to publish his name. We shall respect his modesty, but may not be debarred from saying that he is not a Moron, but he has always been generous of other people's beliefs, and at a time when the primary rule of good neighborhood was not so closely followed, he was still content to mind his own business.

SHUT OUT THE REDS.

Anarchism will not down in France, notwithstanding the legislative measures enacted especially for its suppression and the arrests already made. Like the Lorrain monster, for each head cut off, two new ones seem to grow, making it indeed a Herculean task on the part of society to conquer the modern hydra.

The latest advices from beyond the sea are to the effect that the anarchists on Tuesday spread terror in the city of Orleans, by marching through the streets, breaking gas lamps and destroying other property, and shouting their sympathies for the reds. No further acts of violence were committed, but the demonstration itself shows a defiant spirit which, unless restrained in time, is sure to work mischief on a larger scale.

The mode of warfare carried on by the anarchists places them outside the range of civilization or sympathy. On the part of society the anarchist problem is one of self-preservation. When the recent outrages in Paris and other cities are remembered, one may well ask whether the bloodthirsty wretches are men or mere man-eating tigers, to be put out of existence at sight. The governments of Europe are evidently gradually taking the latter view, and before long the strictures may have become so great that no known anarchist will be able to remain on the continent. Many of these enemies of mankind will then, naturally, find their way to the United States and swell the ranks of those already here. This brings again into prominence the duty of our government to prevent by every known means the landing of such outlaws. They are far less desirable than the Chinese even. Their only aim, as evinced in recent exhibitions, is to break down all existing forms of governments and to tear up the very foundations on which society rests. To exclude them from the countries whose peace they assail is no encroachment on the liberty of the citizen; on the contrary, it is a solemn duty the state owes to him. It is only in effect the shutting of the doors of the house against thieves and robbers, and bolting and barring a peaceful dwelling against a fugitive murderer running redhanded.

THE NORWEGIAN QUESTION.

A special dispatch from Berlin to the London Times treats on the relations between Sweden and Norway. The correspondent states that it is believed the king is prepared to maintain the union by force, if necessary. The Swedes, it is thought, have at last been aroused to such an extent that but little more is required to goad them into action.

The situation in Norway is somewhat peculiar. A majority of the people at present undoubtedly demand a separate consular and diplomatic service, not because there is any particular objection to the union with Sweden, but because the radical leaders have represented this as a necessity for the dignity of the country. When the agitation arose that led to the impeachment and removal of Selmer's cabinet, it was loudly denied that a separation was aimed at. The conservatives maintained their position chiefly on the ground that the proposed measures of the radicals would ultimately lead to a dissolution of the union. Now it is no longer a secret that that is exactly what a few are laboring for. They want a republic established on the soil of Harald Haarfager. They are not satisfied with having a republican form of government in fact, as now is the case very nearly, they want one also in name.

A change of this kind might involve other countries. The correspondence from Berlin points out that the sympathies in Denmark are so strong for Norway that the establishment of a republican form of government in the latter country might lead to the overthrow of the Danish dynasty too. A scheme is therefore on foot to compel Norway, in case the union with Sweden is dissolved, to place a Danish prince on the Norwegian throne, not as president of the prospective republic, but as king of Norway. Prince Waldemar is named for this honor.

This, if true, places the Norwegian problem in a different light. As long as the question was to gain full independence and a free government, the Norwegian radicals had the sympathy of a large party even in Sweden. But if it comes to this, that the union is to be dissolved and Norway simply change monarchs, a change which might lead the country back to the position of a province of Denmark, it is probable that the whole Swedish people will unite in resistance.

The dispatch wired from Berlin is significant. King Oscar and Emperor Wilhelm have recently had an interview, ostensibly for the purpose of hunting elk, but perhaps really on account of more important affairs. The statement that the Swedish king is prepared to use force against one of his kingdoms may intimate that the two crowned heads have come to some agreement concerning the fate of the nations, only the time is past when the will of the ruler is law. The will of the people must be obeyed, even in constitutional monarchies.

"SPEAK UP, BRETHREN!"

A week or so ago the NEWS published, from a correspondent signing himself "Legion," a suggestion headed "Speak up, Brethren!" the substance of which was that too many speakers at funerals, perhaps affecting a gentle, solemn, sympathetic tone, were not to be heard by many of the audience, who, owing to the mournful and chastening circumstances, were in a condition peculiarly receptive to the consolatory and instructive truths of the Gospel pertaining to life, death and the resurrection. Since that time we have received a poetical criticism of the same tenor and accompanied by the same suggestions from a lady, who thinks the advice should also be, "Speak up, Sister!"—our correspondent alluding to Relief Society and Young Ladies' Improvement association conferences, where not more than half the congregation could hear the words of the speaker. And now in the latest mail from Box Elder county comes a letter from "M," dated Portage, Dec. 23, in which the NEWS is mildly complained of for not having gone far enough in its earlier publication on the subject. "M" accordingly reinforces the previous suggestion, "Speak Up!" by another one, "Speak to the Front, Brethren! Speak to the Front!" He quotes approvingly a text taken by Elder Brigham Young at the last October Conference in the Tabernacle, to the effect that he felt moved to speak to one of the pillars of the gallery in the east end of the vast building. "M" continues: "If some of the rest of the speakers in the Tabernacle would follow his example it would make our large assemblies in that hall much more interesting, for it is very annoying, to say the least, after people have come from 100 to 800 miles to attend Conference, and strained every nerve of their hearing organs to catch what the speaker is saying, to have the latter then turn his back to them and talk to the brethren on the stand or those sitting to his right or left, and let the large portion of his audience guess at what he has said; or, as I have often done myself, get the evening or morning paper to read what I would have preferred to hear from the speaker's own lips." Our correspondent concludes: "I do not wish to complain or find fault, and I offer these remarks with the very best of feelings and in behalf of vast multitudes of brethren and sisters who want to feast on the good things provided for the Saints at these Conference meetings;" all of which the NEWS readily believes, and thinks the brethren who are unfortunately liable to the faults referred to will take no offense at the mention of them. Nothing can be more tedious and disappointing to an audience anxious to hear than to have to sit an hour or more with only a word or a fragment of a sentence now and then to bring to the ears a realization of the fact that some one is speaking; and where there is no vocal or physical weakness on the latter's part there would seem to be no excuse for thus imposing on them. It is sometimes a very effective oratorical artifice so to pitch the voice that the breathless attention of the hearer is necessary. Before large audiences, however, this can rarely be employed with profit, and never to such an extent as to require a constant and uncomfortable straining of the ears, with the risk that even then much will be lost. Whatever is worth saying in public at all is worth saying loud enough to be heard; and those who speak in meetings, as well as those who preside, will earn much gratitude if they bear the fact constantly in mind and govern themselves and their meetings by it.

A VOID ELECTION.

The supreme court of California has handed down a decision that touches upon a point of interest to voters in selecting a candidate for office. By the ruling of the court it is declared that the office of the chief of police of Sacramento is vacant, and that the last election for filling that office was void. The reason for annulling the election is that the candidate who received the highest number of votes has been declared to be disqualified for election.

The balloting in the Golden State's capital was done on March 8, 1892, when John B. Rogers was elected chief of police. The opposing candidate, who received a minority of the votes, was Moses M. Drew. He contested the election on the ground that Rogers was not a citizen, and therefore not eligible to hold the office. The case was closely contested in the courts, all of which held the same way. Rogers was born in Australia, of British parents, and came with them to this country when a child. His real surname was Baxter, Rogers being his stepfather's name. He claimed that he was a citizen, first, because his father, Thomas H. Baxter, was naturalized before he was 21 years old, and second, because, while he was still a minor, his mother married W. A. Rogers, a native born citizen. As to the first claim, it was shown that Baxter was not naturalized until the son was over 21; and on the other ground it was established that Mrs. Baxter married W. A. Rogers without the formality of a divorce from her husband, from whom she had been separated for a number of years. These conclusions of course settled the matter against the defendant Rogers.

But while the candidate who received the highest number of votes was held to be ineligible to enter upon the duties of the office and was therefore excluded, the court would not permit the eligible person who received the next highest number of votes to receive a certificate of election. He had not received the highest number of votes cast for any one person, and the failure in this respect was held to be as complete a disqualification to assuming the duties of the office as had been the non-citizenship in the other case. The courts therefore declared that the election itself, so far as the chief of police was concerned, was "null and void," and that the usual procedure, as regulated by statute in cases of vacancies, must be followed in this instance to give Sacramento a head to its police department.

DEPEW'S MISSION TO ROME.

Chauncey M. Depew, who has been absent some time in Europe, has returned to New York. Interviewed by a reporter, he talked about his visit to Rome and his audience with the pope. His holiness, he said, was strong in health and showed much interest in questions relating to the rights of property and of labor.

"When I arose to go," concluded Mr. Depew, "he took my hand and said he had the profoundest respect and admiration and love for the United States, and wished I would tell the American people that he was much impressed with the World's Fair, and had done all he could to help it; that he was much pleased and gratified to learn that I was always kind and considerate for the employees of my company, and that I had never made any distinction between those of the Catholic faith and others. He also expressed gratification when I told him of Archbishop Corrigan. Thus ended for me one of the most pleasant meetings with one of the most remarkable men of the age. The pope sent a message to me, but I received it when I could not return to the Vatican, that he looked to Americans with more interest and attention, in view of the rapidly increasing spread of socialism, and regards her as the great field of the future."

It is not generally known, but it is claimed by some who profess to know, that Dr. Depew went to Rome on a special mission. For years it has been the aim of certain financiers to establish a purely ecclesiastical banking institution in this country. Political complications in Italy have at intervals been of a nature to cause those nearest the papal throne to seriously contemplate a removal of the holy see to some other country, and the United States has been talked of as the best asylum. A removal of headquarters from Rome would involve the transfer of large sums of money to the new place of residence. It is said that the eloquent New York financier went to Rome with a view of inducing his holiness to consent to the establishment of a church bank in this country and to transfer a part at least of his treasure to it, in anticipation, as it were, of a possible removal from Rome at a future date. It is also confidently claimed that all Mr. Depew's eloquence was wasted on the aged head of the Catholic world, who, it is said, has already entrusted his money to the Rothschilds.

It is not likely that any pope will voluntarily leave Rome, the venerated see of Peter. Should circumstances, however, force the pontiff into a second "Babylonian captivity," it is not impossible that his eyes would be directed towards this country. To judge from the efforts of Leo to impress Americans with his sympathies for republican institutions and his great love for America, one would be justified in supposing that he is preparing the way for some such event. But it is not likely that the statesmen of Italy, notwithstanding all opposition to papacy ruling the people politically, would suffer the conflict to go so far as to drive the pope away, with all the revenue the country derives from his presence in Rome.

WOMEN VOTING.

The reports from the recent election in New Zealand, where for the first time in that land women were permitted to exercise the elective franchise, are of a character most gratifying to the advocates of female suffrage. Those who opposed giving to the women the privilege of voting had declared frequently that the ladies must act indelicately in going to the polling booths where on account of rowdiness they would be subjected to insult by roughs. But in New Zealand, as everywhere else that the sex have exercised the franchise, there was nothing in the proceedings of the day to justify such forebodings. The women were treated by all classes with becoming respect, and their visits to the polling booths were attended by no more indelicacy than their entrance into a house of worship.

The candidates at the New Zealand election had committees of women as well as men, and it was interesting to note the proceedings. The former were as keen as the men in bringing voters of their own sex to the polls. They made provision by which any woman having a baby had a member of the committee relieve her of the charge while she was recording her vote. There was no provision for separate polling places for women, but they went to the same booths as the men, and not in a single instance was there the slightest annoyance to any female voter.

One feature was clearly shown as the result of women voting at the election. This was that their ballots go to banish from politics men of notoriously loose lives. Where there were candidates of this character they fell much farther behind in the contest than when men only voted. As to prohibition candidates the indications are not so marked. Some of the prohibitionists were badly beaten through the women's vote, though whether there might have been some special cause for their antagonism has not been determined, as in other instances the prohibitionists came well to the front. One thing is clearly proved, however, in New Zealand as well as elsewhere, that while the women will vote generally on defined party lines, when the occasion requires they will cast these considerations aside and throw the weight of their vote against unscrupulous and immoral seekers for official position.

CHRISTIANITY IN UGANDA.

The news from Uganda, as contained in the dispatches, is not encouraging to those engaged in or interested in missionary work in that part of the world. When Stanley first discovered that country in the interior of the "dark continent," he found a ruler who had embraced Mohammedanism, because he had heard nothing better. Through conversations with the distinguished traveler he became interested in Christianity and invited missionaries to settle among the natives. No sooner had Mr. Stanley brought this news to Europe than the leading missionary societies sent their emissaries to the promising field. Catholics and Protestants hurried to Uganda and the conversion of the natives commenced. This Gospel, or shall we say, these various kinds of gospels, seem by this time to have brought serious misunderstandings among the converts. Catholics and Protestants have repeated conflicts with each other and with the Mohammedans. It has been suggested, as a solution of the difficulty, that the contestants unite in expelling the followers of Mohammed and then, after the example of Abraham and Lot perhaps, separate with the tributaries of the Nile between them, the Catholics preaching on one side and the Protestants on the other side of the water.

This kind of news prompts the suspicion that something is fundamentally wrong either in the message brought to those intelligent savages, or in the manner in which it has been understood. The Gospel inculcates love, peace and goodwill, and makes of the true converts a brotherhood. Here, we hear of war between the converts as one of the results of the conversion. The fact must be anything but pleasant to the directors of the missionary societies and to the thousands who contribute their means for the conversion of the heathen.

OPENING THE FAIR.

Next week the great California Midwinter Fair will open at the Golden Gate park, just outside the city of San Francisco. Of course all the exhibits are not in position yet, and probably will not be for six weeks more, but many of the displays are ready and it would not do to defer the opening until all were completed.

The exercises for the occasion are to be of a most elaborate character. There is to be a grand procession from the city out to the Exposition grounds, in which officials, traders, professions and citizens will be represented. The official ceremonies of the dedication and opening will be held in the grand central plaza. Governor Markham is to deliver an address and M. H. DeYoung is to formally open the Exposition. There will be an appropriate program of general exercises.

A special Midwinter Fair band has been organized for the Exposition, and includes the best musicians in the state. Besides this there will be present the celebrated Iowa State band, which passed through Salt Lake a few days ago on its westward trip, and whose director, Frederick Phinney, expressed an intention to arrange for a series of concerts by the band in this city on its return east. This was the great band of the World's Fair, playing there for a full six months' term. Among its fifty members are a number of instrumentalists who formerly were with Gilmore.

The opening of the Exposition appears to be under the most auspicious circumstances, considering the general conditions of the country in regard to finances. The manipulation of the scheme has been marked by energy and ability, and California deserves the success which now seems certain to attend her great efforts for making in midwinter an exhibition of the works and wonders of art and nature which could not be equalled in the most favorable season by some of the civilized nations whose population is many times greater than that of the Golden State, but whose wealth, enterprise and natural resources are more limited. Those exhibitors whose displays are not yet made up or completed will be along in time, Utah among the number. The local committees are pushing the work to a reasonably speedy conclusion, and considering the time the work was begun and the circumstances that have to be dealt with, they are making splendid progress.

GOOD MR. MORSE of Massachusetts is getting quite as much free advertising out of his humiliation at the hands of Delegate Rawlins and the friends of Utah's statehood, as even a New England manufacturer could desire. The New York Sun broils him tender as follows: "Why did Elijah Adams Morse, M. C., of Canton, get into so wild a rage because Delegate Rawlins of Utah twitted Massachusetts with being a sort of patron or founder of polygamy? President Elliot of Harvard chivalrously defended the Mormons some years ago, and everybody knows that consecutive polygamy prevails in the Bay state. Is Morse pouting because Massachusetts is called the mother of Mormonism? Does he want to restrict her glory to being the mother of Morse?"

FOREIGN EXHIBITORS at the World's Fair secured 63 per cent of the awards, leaving only 37 per cent for the American exhibitors. This may not be very gratifying from the patriotic standpoint, but it is instructive as showing that in making exhibits for competition there is some sense in thorough inspection and the picking of only the best before entering the display at all.

OUT OF the eleven millions of dollars over which the real and doubtful and fictitious heirs of the late Mr. Davis of Montana have been fighting, the lawyers have only gotten one million for fees. This is not half so discouraging to litigants as some other famous will cases have been.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.

IN FAR-OFF NEW ZEALAND.

HIKURANGI WHANGAREI, N. Z., November 17th, 1898.—It is nearly six months since I penned a few lines to your readers and probably some of them would like to know what has become of us. For introduction I would say that Elder Morgan and I did not reach the Great Barrier after all, on account of headwinds and a heavy sea, so after remaining until the April 22nd company of emigrating Saints and Elders had left for Zion aboard the S. S. Monowai we returned to our quarters and held Sabbath meeting with the Auckland Saints, being joined by Elder Hamblin from the Thames district, who came to Auckland to be treated for his eyes. The Spirit of the Lord was present and we all rejoiced together in the Gospel and testimony of Jesus.

The following day we journeyed to Riverheads aboard the S. S. Planet to the home of Mr. Alexander Stuart and wife, where we were most cordially welcomed and shared their hospitality, remaining over night. It rained buckets full, as the saying is, and we were thankful for shelter from the angry elements. We resumed our journey afoot to Elder Hardy's home at Horsehoe Bush, where Mrs. Hardy was very kind to us. My horse Ebony, so-called from his color, unfortunately got "tied up with supple-jacks" in the bush here and was in a most pitiable plight when discovered, and totally unfit for service, which put us in an awkward position. Elder Hardy came to the rescue though, proffering the use of an animal for our northern trip.

So next morning I left on horseback for Muriwai, in company with his two sons, Charles and George, and securing the horse lent to us, started to return. The rain came down in torrents, and I was soon gloriously wet, and darkness came on before I reached the Bush. I concluded to ask the hospitality of some settler close by, so, calling out in the peculiar manner of the colonials, I succeeded in bringing out a Mr. Donal Rowlands. Finding out my condition, he was very kind; soon I had my two horses grazing comfortably, and was sitting down to supper with the family, enjoying a chat with them upon the Mormon question.

In the meantime Elder Morgan had become worried about my non-appearance that night, but he was all smiles when I rode up to Brother Hardy's about 10 a. m. next day. Being anxious to return to our fields of labor, we left immediately for our Ngapuhi home, sleeping under a "totara" tree in the rain. That evening, being refused a shelter by a settler in the Punoi. Next day rode fifteen miles and got some breakfast, making a hard ride for Whangateau, where we had two kind Maori friends, Wesleyans, named Hoani and Meri Kewene. Here we stayed four days, prisoners on account of a big storm that brought torrents of water and mud down every hill and gully. Pools became lakes, creeks rivers, roads high impassable, and tidal rivers entirely so; and we were pleased to be in such pleasant quarters until the storm abated.

From that on till we reached our headquarters at Opuawhanga nothing important occurred worth relating, except an encounter with a Rev. Horsfall at Hakaru. The usual well known subject came up, but the gentleman didn't reap any glory out of it. He asked why we came out here to preach to the people, instead of staying at home in Utah. The answer given was enough to definitely settle his mind that we were not out after the shekels, but to save souls. Two old ladies, the Misses Newton, started to his assistance, only to find themselves out of their element immediately. All this occurred at the house of a native named Pirimona, in the gum fields west of Hakaru, who had been a "lost member" of the Church for three years. I never got a more hearty welcome in my life than from that family. I had left Elder Morgan at the "whare" of Henare Piribi while I hunted them up. My temporal wants being attended to by Sister Milita, after the minister left, I held "Karakia" with them and talked about the Gospel and sung hymns with the family till nearly midnight: retired to rest feeling well repaid for my long and muddy tramp to their humble dwelling, and next day rejoined my companion. On our arrival at Opuawhanga we met Elder Edward Atkin, of Tooele (now at home in Zion), who was to preside in the district till released in July; also Charles B. Bartlett, of Ashley, Uintah county, the new president for the Bay of Islands. We were full of joy to meet, such as only missionaries in the field are permitted to experience, and of course we had to relate to each other everything worth telling, and Brother Finlayson's family were attentive listeners.

After a few days' rest, enjoying ourselves in each others' society, we left for our separate fields. Elders Bartlett and Morgan went off to Te Hora while myself and companion took another trail leading to Hora Hora, where shortly afterwards Hoani Mei Kaeo, the branch president, died, and was buried by his daughter's side in the "wahi tapu" by the sea at Teaharuru. We have lost quite a few members this winter, all natives, from various causes, some from getting too much "treatment" from the native doctor, or "tohunga Maori." It seems almost impossible to stamp out these old superstitious, though we occupy the ground with the principles of the Gospel as fast as possible.

On July 12 I bid Elder Atkin good-bye as he stepped on the boat that took him aboard the S. S. Wellington which left immediately for Auckland to connect with the S. S. Monowai. On the 15th, bidding New Zealand and its people adieu, he left for Zion and is now at home with his family. I felt keenly our separation, though we had been but ten weeks together, and when I had to journey alone I realized what I had lost. But meantime Elder J. H. Willard Goff, West Jordan, had reached our headquarters, where he stayed a month with Brother and Sister Finlayson who were kind to himself to him. Though the weather was, as is usual, wet, it took but little time to rejoin him, and when I did, I found President Stewart there also, awaiting the district conference to be at Te Kahiwai July 29 and 30. Bad weather prevented its being a success in point of attendance, yet in all else it was good. Being called to preside in this district then, I felt my lack of knowledge of the language, still I have managed to get on very well considering, and realize that the Lord has blessed me. I was very nervous when called up to speak in Maori, but that has mostly all left me now. The health of the natives is good, which is very pleasing to us, for no "Kainga" has been left without some addition to the death roll this winter. Farm work, planting, etc., is behindhand on account of unseasonable weather. One man at Hikurangi has grass rotting on the field, there being no sun to cure it. Only three weeks in October and November have we had of good weather. Settlers are complaining about matters being so, and I am of the opinion we have "more climate to the square foot" than any other country I ever heard of. I read some and have heard much about the climate here, but the colonials don't boom it up like they used to in by-gone days, for it has seemingly undergone a most radical change. In the Waikato we had floods; further south the season is six weeks later, while the north is out and injured all round. The price of "Kauri gum" is down out of sight, thus depriving many of a livelihood; crops are failing, taxes and the necessities of life are going up, save the dairyman's butter and eggs. Butter is 12 cents per pound, new laid eggs 12 cents a dozen, while old potatoes are $1.45 per bushel and well nigh all rotten at that. If the people in this district had, strictly speaking, to raise their own breadstuff it would go hard with them, as it is only two steps to a bread famine if their supplies from the south were cut off.

Yet there is no dearth of preachers; they are as thick as hops, in clerical robes and out, all trying to climb the slippery ladder to fame as orators. But their fine flowing language is not often associated with those pure and simple truths which Jesus taught and commanded His disciples to preach. The Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ today come in for a good share of attention and abuse at the hands of so-called Christian ministers. Instead of meeting the issue like men, they go around where they fear the Lord's servants have sowed the seeds of life, and when we are away, drop in tares, hoping thereby to choke out the good we are striving to do. Prejudice, not truth, is their stronghold; still, for all that, victory is not perched on their banners. A Mormon Elder causes as great a care among these preachers as a bombshell in the camp of a vanquished enemy. None of them seek an introduction to us, taking care not to ask us to meet them publicly. Many people in this land are opening their eyes to the hypocrisy and cant of many of these gentlemen in broadcloth, and meantime our opportunities increase to do good and preach the glad tidings of great joy, of a risen Redeemer and the Gospel restored through Joseph Smith, the Lord's prophet. Elder Goff and I have followed the tracks of those who seek to bring to naught the teachings of Christ, but when we get any way close they "burrow" and we lose track of them. Still their folly shall yet be made manifest to all men, for the Lord is a great God, and He has said He will not be mocked in these last days. It is so usual for the people to part with their small change upon Sundays that I quite surprised one man last Sunday at Manganui by telling him we didn't take up collections. He had his hand in his pocket after the services, and I surmised his intent. To have seen the expression on his face would have given inspiration to a comic artist, so taken aback was he.

We have just returned from Auckland where we spent a week with the Saints after six months absence, and met the mission president who is now busy preparing the Ready Reference in Maori for the press. Soon it will be in our hands, an almost invaluable work, for we have much the same to contend with among them as Europeans. Great credit is due to those who have labored so diligently in this direction. Next month we will have our "Huitan" or general conference at Tupekarunga in the Waikato, commencing December 22nd. We hope our labors will be sufficiently satisfactory to us to permit our absence to attend and unite with our beloved friends and brethren who will be present. We are at Ruatangata now, 150 miles north from Auckland, in a rainstorm. We are comfortable enough, and have spent a nice evening singing Maori hymns to Joseph Going and wife, our hosts. His brother Percy and wife were lately baptized and it has caused a whole lot of excitement in the settlement. The usual underhanded methods are being pursued by those who are without authority; even "the army" is ranked along with the rest. They forget the old prophecy concerning Zion, "that no weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." "Cast thy bread upon the waters and it shall be seen after many days," and so we anticipate in the future to see the fruits of our labors in this part, for we know there are good, honest-hearted people here who will receive the Gospel and testimony of Jesus when the scales of prejudice shall fall from their eyes; and may God speed the day when truth shall triumph and error be truly and everlastingly discomfited.

We feel very weak in endeavoring to fill our appointments, but the Lord never deserts us. He is our shield and strength, and on His potent arm we rely with supreme, unwavering faith in the result. All that we may and can do is but little, but if we do it well it will be acceptable to our Heavenly Father. Sometimes I wish I had the tongue of angels that I might declare His omnipotent word with thunders that admit of no controversy. Again we feel to say with the poet.

We are weak but Thou art able,
Hold us in Thy powerful hand.

Our testimony is being heard at every available opportunity, in public and private, and we hope that every settlement in this district will yet hear the message of salvation which we bear. The Presbyterians are busily engaged against us, and in Matahina and Kaurihohori they refuse us the school houses, though the chairman of each place is desirous to afford us the privilege. But they are only one in five, and consequently are outvoted on the issue, and we must hire halls or give up any public work in these two sectarian strongholds.

I desire to express thanks to Charles Neal, of Plain City, and some thoughtful gentleman in your city for newspapers sent in response to our appeal, but they're not half enough to supply the demand for news of Utah and its people. Our health is good, though the last four months has reduced my avoirdupois 20 pounds. All things considered we cannot complain; the Lord is blessing us every day with food and friends and with His Holy Spirit, which cheers up and renews our souls when we are inclined to despair of seeing the results of our earnest labors. We have God and the right on our side, and come what may, these pure and holy principles of undefiled religion must ultimately triumph.

There seems to be an improvement in well doing among our Maories, and I have received very encouraging news from the Bay of Islands, where Elders Bartlett and Morgan are wrestling also with unlimited supplies of mud, and shortness of Maori tongue, like ourselves. Peaches and figs will soon be ripe, but indications are for a light crop of most all kinds of fruit, on account of the blight and unfavorable seasons. New Zealand is decked with ferns and flowers now, and the effect is beautiful; but the advent of settled warm weather is anxiously awaited by all.

I must close now, or it will soon be Sunday morning. With prayers for the Saints and for Zion, I remain

Your brother in the Gospel,
B. H. HOLLINGWORTH.

Written for this Paper.

AMONG THE CHICKASAWS.

SULPHUR SPRINGS, Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory, Dec. 15, 1893.—Just as the sun was hiding behind the western prairie the Santa Fe train, via Oklahoma to Texas, pulled up at Davis, a small railroad town ten miles from Sulphur Springs, Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory. Among the crowd on the platform were Elders J. H. Holmes and Frank Collett. Their genial countenances bespoke a kind welcome for their Salt Lake visitor to the southern headquarters of the Indian Territory mission. A ten miles ride in the darkness followed, losing our way two or three times. Elder Holmes realizing our position and being so well acquainted with this peculiar rolling, unsurveyed, wild country, walked ahead of the team, which seemed to want to go any way except the right road, and piloted us to our Indian home.

In the horseshoe bend on Rock Creek, about the center of a five-acre patch or clearance, in the forest on a little rise of ground is a log house about 16 x 16 feet with a lumber shed on the west for cooking purposes, while on the south is a lodging room or about the same kind and size. Several loads of rock piled up on the north end or gable of the main structure acts as a chimney to convey the smoke from the huge fireplace, where a pile of oak logs are burning, its genial warmth cheering the inmates within. In the Elders' room, the shanty on the south, can be heard the beautiful strains of music of two guitars, as the melodies accompany the singing of hymns and sacred songs by Elders Collett and Davis. Elder Holmes is busy making preparations for an evening meeting; Elder Jos. Lowe is studying, while Brother K. is collecting items of interest for the loved friends at home.

Near the fireplace sits good old "Uncle Joe," as we call him—Brother J. J. Fry, formerly a Baptist preacher, born in Missouri, lived in Arkansas and California, spent some of his time in our mountain home and finally settled down at Sulphur Springs, Indian Territory, where in April of this year Elder F. B. Woodbury baptized him and "Auntie," his wife. Uncle Joe is a solidly built little man of 57 years; he wears a cane, having partly lost the use of one of his legs; he is one of those outspoken, good, honest souls, who take so much delight in confounding the learned clergy of the day with literal quotations from the Bible, and in administering to the comfort of our Mormon boys. Auntie, of course busily assisting her assistant, Sister Hill, preparing the good things of the earth for the inner man, is one of those happy, good-natured home persons, like many of our good motherly friends to our Elders in the world, who so kindly do for some other mothers' boys, and claim them as her own. The childish life of our home is little Elroy, an adopted child of our friends.

A hundred yards from the front door, and huddling up on the bank and in the bed of the creek, and in this vicinity, are the cool sulphur waters flowing from the renowned white sulphur springs, so famous all the way from Kansas to Texas for their health-giving properties. The trees in the dense forest immediately surrounding this health resort are composed of all kinds, oak, ash, elm, and the beautiful sycamore, interspersed with a great variety of timbers native of the sunny South, while here and there, climbing a hundred feet high to the tops of the massive oaks, are the bramble, the honeysuckle, wild ivy and grape vines, hanging like the rigging of a ship, having followed the trunk of the tree up, and a limb out, became separated from the main tree and hang out like a ladder from the earth to the sky. The rough, broken, rolling, undulating prairie and timbered country, like that which surrounds the Hill Cumorah, or that which our choir witnessed when they visited Independence, Mo., makes this one of the prettiest camping places on earth. During the entire summer and extending well into the fall of the year, people come from all parts of the surrounding country and camp by the hundreds. In later years religious revivals have been held among these trees until last summer when our Elders held the fort. While these people of leisure were whiling away their time partaking of the health-giving fluid of the springs, and resting from the cares of business and laborious life, loitering among the shady trees, in tents and wagons, they are only too pleased to be entertained by the guitar, the mouth-organ and the hymns of Zion, and during their leisure moments carefully investigate the truths of the everlasting Gospel as they take them from the lips of the servants of God, our Mormon Elders. In this way hundreds of people, who otherwise would or could never have availed themselves of the opportunities of the Gospel, take to their homes in the various parts of the country the inspired truths uttered by the Prophet Joseph Smith from the pens of Zion's many writers.

Besides the hot and sultry days of summer spent at the springs, the remainder of the year, except short intervals at headquarters for a change of clothes, a bath, a little rest and recreation, our Elders are out among the people of this nation. They are diligent in spreading the truth. The Gospel has now been given to two-thirds of the inhabitants of this nation of the civilized tribes. There are a little over four thousand Chickasaw Indians, forty-five thousand white people and a great many negroes. They have a large and beautiful country covering over four and a half million acres. The land is held in common by the Indians and negroes and rented by the white people. The Elders are generally treated kindly by the Indians and the better class of whites, among whom we have a great many friends and some members. At headquarters the Elders have profitable and interesting times, after their return from these long and sometimes trying trips among strangers. At their congregating place the Elders indulge in innocent pleasures, practice music and singing, study the principles of the Gospel, for as a general rule our Mormon boys leave all their studies in this direction until they get in their missionary fields, a lamentable fact indeed, that they do not improve on the past now that they have so many opportunities at home, and instead of making excuses, go to the world well informed. They hold meetings, relate the various incidents of missionary life, strengthen each other's testimony and, in fact, have a general good time. Among the happiest periods of a missionary's life are those at our headquarters.

Respectfully,
ANDREW KIMBALL.

CHICKASAW CONFERENCE.

For some time the Elders laboring in this part of the Indian Territory mission have looked forward to a visit from our president. We have been diligent in notifying the people of the surrounding country and making arrangements for our conference to be held at Sulphur Springs, Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory, on the 16th and 17th inst. The week previous to conference was one of profit to the Elders and Saints, for we kept Elder Kimball constantly occupied visiting the people, preaching the Gospel, and instructing us regarding our labors.

Conference was held at 11 a. m. on Saturday, Dec. 16, at the house of Bro. J. J. Fry, Sulphur Springs. There were present Pres. Andrew Kimball of the Indian Territory mission, J. H. Holmes presiding Elder of this field, and Elders Joseph H. Lowe, Frank Collett and Alma H. Davis. Priest J. J. Fry, Saints and friends and some inquiring visitors. Elder Lowe was the first speaker. He outlined the plan of salvation and spoke on the first principles of the Gospel. Elder Kimball occupied the remainder of the time proving conclusively the apostasy and restoration.

At the 6 p. m. meeting the speakers were Elders Collett and Davis; they dwelt on the first principles of the Gospel. Priest J. J. Fry bore a strong testimony to the truth of the Gospel of Christ, after which Pres. Kimball discoursed on the restoration of the same, and the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon; that the Apostle Paul's sayings were literally fulfilled when he declared, "The time shall come when they will not endure sound doctrine." A good old Methodist brother stood it as long as he could and before the dismissalal hymn was announced he got his hat and made his exit as fast as possible.

Sunday morning, at 11 o'clock, our conference was continued by singing and music from the guitars. We are blessed with some good musicians and singers, which of course aids greatly in interesting our hearers. It was also in harmony with the beautiful weather we have; the temperature was warm, the sun shone brightly and it was dry and clear. Elder J. H. Holmes plainly depicted the condition of the world, having separated themselves from God as they have by denouncing revelation, Apostles, Prophets, the blessings and privileges of the Gospel. He showed plainly that God had restored these blessings to earth again in these latter days. Elder Joseph H. Lowe showed the evil results of man's disobedience to the laws of God, and spoke on the restitution of all things.

Our afternoon meeting was devoted to the Sacrament and testimonies. Each of the Elders and members took part. General instructions were given by Brother Kimball. Priest J. J. Fry was ordained an Elder and accepted of an appointment to labor with the traveling Elders in this field until he shall emigrate to Utah in the fall.

Conference closed a feast of fat things for us all and ends our visit with President Kimball, who will spend the holidays in the Cherokee nation among his old Indian friends.

J. H. HOLMES.

PAROWAN STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of this Stake convened in the Parowan meeting house on Sunday and Monday, December 17 and 18, 1893. There were present on the stand Elders Heber J. Grant, of the Council of the Apostles, and Rufus S. Wells, of the first Council of the Seventies, Elder James G. Bleak, of St. George, Elders Uriah T. Jones, Morgan Richards Jr., and Francis Webster, of the Stake Presidency, members of the High Council and Bishops of wards in this Stake.

After the usual opening exercises President Uriah T. Jones made some remarks and reported the condition of the Stake.

Elder Wells was the next speaker, dwelling upon the apostasy after the Savior and the accompanying darkness; also the restoration of the Gospel of truth to man in these last days with all its gifts and graces, etc.

Elder Grant occupied the remaining time in showing that the amount of benefit we receive from the instructions we have depends upon the condition of our minds to a great extent; when we are prejudiced our judgment will be unjust, hence it behooves us to divest ourselves of all hard feelings or ill will that we may have towards each other in order that we may receive the full benefit of the instructions given from time to time. It is not merely hearing but keeping the commandments that will save us.

Sunday, 2 p. m.—The sacrament was administered, after which Elder Wells addressed the Saints upon the subject of unity. The strength of the Latter-day Saints depends upon this truth. The Gospel is a Gospel of grace, and though our salvation depends upon our own efforts, yet it is through the kindness of our Heavenly Father that this is made possible. Elder J. G. Bleak discoursed at some length upon the subject of building temples and ordinance work therein; the education of the youth in theology—that sons and daughters born under the covenant have a very great advantage over their parents. He made reference to the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, as works containing the words of the Lord and works that should be studied by all Latter-day Saints. Elder Grant said there is somewhat of an heirship in the Gospel. Men are sometimes chosen to degrees in the Priesthood through the faithfulness of their parents; fault should not be found because of this. It is the duty of all having a testimony of the truth to uphold and sustain the servants of God and then they will be blessed.

Sunday 7 p. m.—The usual Priesthood meeting was held and very plain and pointed instructions were given to the Priesthood by our visiting brethren, Wells and Grant.

Monday, 10 a. m.—The time allotted for this meeting was occupied by Elders Morgan Richards Jr., Francis Webster and R. S. Wells, and the necessity of establishing and then patronizing home manufactures was brought very forcibly before the Saints, as also the subjects of reverence for the aged, observance of the word of wisdom and compilation of genealogical records.

The general and local authorities were presented and sustained by vote, as also the list of home missionaries.

Monday, 2 p. m.—Elder Uriah T. Jones was the first speaker, dwelling upon the law of tithing and the force of example. The remaining time was occupied by Bro. Grant in delivering a powerful discourse upon the every day duties of the Latter-day Saints, in which he referred to tithing, Word of Wisdom, home manufacture, educating and training children in the science of theology, the personality of God, and other subjects of much interest to the Saints.

The meetings were well attended, and the speakers were very much blessed in their efforts before the Saints. Conference adjourned for three months to meet in Cedar City.

WILLIAM H. HOLYOAK,
Stake clerk.

Douglas county, Colorado, has more old pioneer settlers to the square mile than any county in the state. The Plum Creek valley is organizing a pioneer club.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

News was received in this city that the Utah educational exhibit at the World's Fair had been awarded nine prizes.

A son of R. Murdock, Logan, while playing with some companions after dark a few evenings since, ran against a wire fence and cut his throat rather badly, just missing the jugular vein.

The Bullion-Beck mine at Eureka now has a force of about 125 men, and it is the intention of the owners to continue operations all winter at the present rate unless silver should drop to an inconveniently low figure.

Mrs. Rhoda Owen, mother of W. D. Owen, while returning home after distributing aid to the poor of the Twentieth ward, fell and broke her arm. Her age makes the wound very painful, and her many friends hope for her speedy recovery.

Mrs. William Lowe of Providence died on Monday morning. The lady had been a resident of Providence for many years, and was widely known and respected. She left a husband and eight children to mourn her loss. They have the sympathy of many friends.

OGDEN, Dec. 28. — Police Justice Thomas Cahoon, who has lately suffered with cold and la grippe, took an overdose of morphine this morning. Physicians were called and have labored over him, with a stomach pump. While he is in a dangerous condition, hopes are entertained of his recovery.

There is a large force of men at work on the new S. P. shops and round house in this city. The shops are ready for the machinery, and Monday a huge power engine was being put in place. Several car loads of material came in from Terrace and two car loads will shortly arrive from Sacramento.

Wolstenholm & Morris, coal dealers, have donated one hundred tons of coal to the poor, seventy-five tons to the general relief committee, and twenty-five tons to the Young Ladies Aid Society for such distribution as they may direct. The gift is a generous one and is much appreciated by all persons charitably inclined.

The last issue of the Richfield Advocate records the death at Richfield, on the 12th inst., of Mrs. Lucy Pearson, who was in her hundredth year. She was born in Sweden in September, 1794 and was consequently 99 years of age last September. She has lived in Utah for thirty-nine years, having been for a long time a resident of Santaquin, Utah county.

The local Democracy held a large and enthusiastic convention in the old Federal Court room Dec. 21, and Democrats of all classes, ex-Liberals and straight, mingled as harmoniously together as though they had never known political differences. W. C. Hall was unanimously nominated to fill the Legislative vacancy in the representation from this city.

Mr. P. W. Madsen, wife of P. W. Madsen, the well known business man, had the misfortune to break her right arm midway between the elbow and wrist, by falling from a step ladder at her own residence. The accident caused her a good deal of intense pain and will prevent her from attending to her household duties for some time to come. Dr. Bowers reduced the fracture.

While Samuel Jepperson, Peter Groneman and Bud Hedenberg were on the shore of Utah lake on Monday evening, duck hunting, a shot was fired by the latter and Jepperson and Groneman each received a duck shot in the hip. The injury inflicted was not serious in either case, but was quite painful. All the parties were in the rushes, and Hedenberg did not know of the presence of the other two when he fired.

The chamber of commerce, so instrumental in having the city cancel its claim to Tabernacle Square, have petitioned the city to lease them a piece of public ground for 99 years upon which the chamber, with the assistance of the secret societies, propose erecting a $75,000 building. The floor would be used for stores and the upper floors for halls, with one capable of holding one thousand people, for the use of the chamber.

Deputy Marshal McGarry arrived here from Beaver bringing with him five prisoners convicted at this term of court, viz., Jake Reese, five years, and John P. Joley, four and one-half years for grand larceny in connection with the window sash brand. Joseph W. Barton, one year for arson. Louis Tellifron, two years for burglary, and Charles A. Allen, four months for unlawful cohabitation. The prisoners were at once taken up to the penitentiary.

The Utah Orphans' Home association filed articles of incorporation with the county clerk December 20. The incorporators are Geo. M. Downey, T. S. Webber, Geo. M. Scott, C. C. Goodwin, Dr. E. N. Silver, J. P. Bloomfield, Geo. Y. Wallace, M. H. Walker, F. H. Auerbach, Le Grande Young, John E. Dooly, E. W. Taylor, Chas. Baldwin, Hoyt Sherman and P. J. Daly. The object in view is to acquire the necessary lands, build structures and maintain a home "for the care, sustenance, protection, occupation and education of destitute children."

Elder Edward Stevenson furnishes us an account, which lack of space compels us to condense, of an interesting event that took place on Saturday, December 28. It has been a custom for the past nineteen years for some of those who were intimate with the Prophet Joseph during his lifetime to meet and engage for a short time in singing, prayer and recalling experiences with the Prophet and recalling his words of counsel and admonition. On this occasion the assemblage convened at the house of Sister Elizabeth Roundly, where a most interesting and enjoyable time was passed.

A special to the Salt Lake Tribune says that Andrew Madsen was instantly killed yesterday in the incline of the Copperopolis mine at Mammoth, Juab county. He was employed as skipman, and had got in the skip, intending to go to the fourth level, but gave the signal to hoist by mistake. His head was caught between the top of the skip and the platform of the station above, and the top of it cut off. The men had been repeatedly cautioned by Foreman Davidson not to ride in the skip, as the nature of the incline made it extremely dangerous. Judge Pike of Eureka held an inquest and the jury returned a verdict of accidental death, exonerating the company from blame. Deceased was a Finlander, about 35 years old, and was last employed at Bingham.

Col. Jesse C. Little is dead. The announcement will bring into the minds of thousands in Utah, particularly of the earlier settlers, memories of stirring events, whose importance has become more thoroughly understood through the lapse of time, in which Col. Little was a prominent participant. At 7:15 o'clock this morning, Dec. 28, Jesse Carter Little breathed his last, at the residence of his son in this city. The funeral service over his remains will take place on Friday next, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Annie Dye, 153 east, First South street. He was born September 28th, 1815, at Belmont, Maine, and was the son of Thomas and Relief Little. The family was of Scotch-Irish extraction. The deceased suffered from a complication of ailments, and his last illness was somewhat protracted.

Charles Rogers, a miner, was accidentally killed at Bingham Dec. 19 afternoon. He was at work in the Emma tunnel, on a lease from the Old Telegraph and South Galena companies, when a slight cave prostrated him. His partner, who was at work in a stope above, hurried to his relief, but before he could rescue Rogers, two or three tons of earth, stone and ore fell on him, crushing him to death instantly. Justice B. B. Quinn summoned a coroner's jury and held an inquest, the verdict being that Rogers met his death by being accidentally caved on as described. For five or six years, and until about a month ago, Mr. Rogers was foreman for the Old Telegraph, which employ he quit to work for himself on lease. He bore a good reputation. He was 45 years of age, and leaves a wife and four children.

The Provo jail delivery on Tuesday, Dec. 21 showed wonderful ingenuity on the part of the three prisoners who escaped. The sheriff and jailer have in the past been laboring under the delusion that the jail was perfectly safe so far as prisoners escaping by cutting the bars. This delusion has been dispelled. Two bars were cut off the bottom of the cell and eleven inches above at the cross bar, in a very neat manner. This left but a very small hole, nine by eleven, but large enough for the prisoners, who are not large men, to get through. After getting out of the cell, an effort was made to dig through the jail wall, but a rock was encountered. A window bar, an inch in diameter, was then cut over, and by means of a lever, made from a rope and iron bar, the window bar was twisted aside. The tools and material used in cutting the steel bars of the cell were saws made from an old knife blade and a shoe shank, a tin cup, charcoal made from a closet seat, and a hammock rope. The officers have not yet ascertained the direction taken by the prisoners, but are sending descriptions of them in every direction.

Welcome Chapman, one of Manti's earliest settlers, finished a useful life on Friday last, at the ripe age of 88 years, says the Manti Sentinel. Deceased was a native of New York, and in the early history of the Church was a faithful member. He worked as a stone cutter on the Nauvoo Temple, and when the Saints were driven from that city he remained in the East only long enough to fit himself out before following his brethren into the wilderness. Brother Chapman arrived in Utah in 1850 and the next year came to Manti. He was ordained president of Sanpete Stake in 1853, being the first president of this Stake, which at that time included Emery and Sevier counties. He held the position eight years, when he resigned and moved to Salt Lake City to work on the Temple. He was employed cutting rock on the building nearly thirty years. For the last three years he had been a resident of Fountain Green, and up to a few weeks ago was hale and hearty. The funeral services were held at the residence of his son in Manti last Tuesday.

D. E. Burley, general passenger agent of the Union Pacific in this city, has just got back from the Camp Floyd mining district, Tooele county, whither he has been on business connected with his road. Mr. Burley says there is a marvelous transformation taking place in that section of the country, which but a short time ago was little more than a wilderness, is quickly being converted into a populous locality.

Mr. Burley states that lumber cannot be got in fast enough to the new town of Mercur, which is being built seven miles from Fairfield station, on the Salt Lake and Western branch of the Union Pacific. There were ten cars of lumber on the switch at Fairfield yesterday, and several carloads of coal. A large number of teams was busily engaged hauling the lumber and coal to Mercur, where 250 carpenters are employed rushing up buildings. A whole town is springing into existence at once. During the present month the Union Pacific has sold over a thousand tickets from this city to Fairfield, which is its station for Mercur. The railway company intends to at once construct a new depot building at Fairfield.

An inquest was held at ten o'clock this morning at the undertaking establishment of Skewes & Sons at the instance of Coroner Taylor over the remains of Mattie D. Graham, the abandoned and profligate woman who committed suicide by shooting herself in the head with a revolver in a West Temple street bagnio shortly after one o'clock yesterday (Monday) morning.

The evidence showed that she had a mother and sister living in Montana and it is claimed that they were both ignorant of the kind of a life the deceased had been leading since she came to this city.

V. Lonski, an Italian Mercur miner, admitted that he had passed the night over the saloon in company with the suicide. She had acted strangely for several hours, he said, and laughed and cried alternately for a couple of hours or more. She also frequently sobbed, "My poor child." Then she murmured, "Only sixty-five," and went to her trunk over which she bowed and shot herself. He was under the impression that after the shot was fired the pistol fell into the trunk which was open.

Two days were consumed in taking testimony in the case, after which on Wednesday, the 27th, the coroner's jury found a verdict of suicide, setting free the above-named witness, who had been suspected of making away with some of the money and valuables of the deceased.

A Park City correspondent, under date of the 22d instant, writes:

With the opening up of the Coalville mines, after the recent strike, coal has been rolling into the Park at the rate of about twenty-five cars per day. There is no chance for a coal famine this winter, as all the mines and mills have stored up a large amount of coal.

The mines and mills are still kept busy, and sending out daily the usual amount of ore and bullion. The Park City sampling mill has handled during the week a larger amount of ore than at any time since last June. This fact indicates the stability of the camp.

The Crescent Co. concentrated is still working night and day reducing and shipping the large amount of ore on hand. The mine is now working with a full force of men, and in a short time teams will be bringing down the ore. The tramway is tied up for the winter and will not be opened again until next spring.

Work on the Daly-West mine is still being pushed and most likely, when it has been fully determined as to the class of ore and the most economical treatment of same, a mill will be put up some time during the coming spring, providing that the bottom does not entirely drop out of silver and lead.

Elder Joseph M. Kerr, of Payson, made a call at the News office. He returned Dec. 20 from a mission to Great Britain, on which he left on December 4, 1891. He was one of the passengers on the ill-fated Abyssinia which was burned at sea on December 18, 1891, and when Elder Kerr was among those rescued by the German steamer Spree. In Great Britain Elder Kerr labored as a missionary in the Lee's conference, where he met with kind treatment and good success. He enjoyed good health during his absence in the "old country." The homeward voyage was made on the Teutonic, and was an unusually stormy one. So severe was the weather that the great steamer was delayed more than two days on the voyage, and instead of reaching New York in less than seven days from Liverpool was more than nine days. On one occasion a huge wave broke in the officers' cabin and swept away a portion of the ship's railing. In consequence of the rough weather the passengers had an unusual share of sea sickness.

Among the callers at the News Dec. 21 was Elder Enoch Brown, of Hoytsville, Summit county. Elder Brown left home on a mission October 10, 1891, going to the Southern States. He was assigned to labor in the West Virginia conference and remained there for more than two years. He was generally well treated by the people, for whom he has only good words. The Gospel message is being favorably received in the district where Elder Brown was located, and quite a number of people have given obedience to the truth. The health of Elder Brown has been fair.

CHURCH THEOLOGY CLASS.

About one thousand students had assembled on Sunday last at the appointed time, outlines of the lecture being distributed at the door.

The class was opened with prayer by Elder S. B. Young.

Several incidental questions bearing upon subjects previously discussed were carefully and thoroughly considered. Dr. Talmage, instructor of the class, then proceeded with the review upon the subjects of the last lesson. After some additional remarks upon the repetition of the baptismal ordinance, the lecturer proceeded to the next subdivision: "Baptism for the dead." Since, as conclusively proven, baptism is essential to the salvation of every soul, the Gospel includes a plan by which even those who have never heard the law while upon earth may be made partakers of the same salvation. The vicarious work performed in their behalf is known as that characteristic feature of the faith among the Latter-day Saints the ordinance of "baptism for the dead." That there is no distinction between the essential work required from the living and the dead is very evident from the Scriptures. In justice and in mercy to the millions who have died without receiving the Gospel, the plan of salvation is preached to them in the spirit world. The beginning of this great work was made by Jesus Christ Himself, who also announced to the Jews this part of His mission, while living among them. According to modern revelation, the outward ordinances for the departed must be performed by living representatives on the earth. This doctrine was well known among the former-day Saints, for Paul in writing to the Corinthians used this subject as an argument for the resurrection. History gives the information that baptism for the dead was practiced in the fourth century.

An adjournment was taken for one week after closing prayer by Elder H. P. Freeze.

INFORMATION WANTED.

By John Jas. Smeath, Kawa Kawa, Bay of Islands, N. Z., concerning his brothers-in-law, James and Charles Barker, who left London, England, some twenty years ago for Utah, and now supposed to be in Cache county. Please communicate to the above address as Mr. Smeath is anxious for news.

Wm. J. McDonald, engine driver, from the Graving Docks, Auckland, who emigrated to Utah with his wife some eleven years ago, will hear something to his advantage if he will write to his sister, Mrs. A. Hanson, Kaiti, Gisborne, N. Z. His father has just died, and was very anxious to hear from his son before he passed away.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Written for this Paper.

THE PROSPECTOR'S LIFE.

A Happy New Year to you, old faithful prospectors! May you live to enjoy the fruits of your labor—and reap the harvest that you have anticipated and so richly deserve! May the year of Our Lord, 1894, bring to you the realization of those many dreams of wealth that you have dreamt so often while alone in your bed—that after you get that wealth you will not alone sing the song, "The Girl I left behind me," but that you will go to where you left her, give her all yourself, with your wealth; that real pancakes will take the place of your greasy flap-jacks; that chicken pie will be on your table instead of old (!), rusty bacon; that honey shall take the place of molasses, a trout the place of the old mustard sardine that the merchant had on his shelves so long; instead of fried potatoes and onions in bacon grease, may you have potatoes a la française; coffee as only a miner can make it with real cream, instead of condensed milk with mostly chalk, as you now have it! You shall then have pudding and pie instead of the pie you so often have made on Sunday out of service-berries bought from the Indians, that you shortened with bacon grease, and rolled it out with a bottle after you wiped it on your overalls so as to make it clean! You shall then wear a suit of clothes instead of a pair of blue overalls and a woolen over-shirt! You may wear a plug hat if it won't kill you! You may go to meeting with your wife if you think you can stand it. May the good God deliver you from the mining sharp, and the expert, and the man that wants to incorporate your mine! After you have sold, may you be delivered from the real estate man, and may you quit drink forever! May your walks be among the roses instead of the rattle snakes and the prickly pears! May you do good as you promised yourself, if you ever got the means to do it with, and when you prospecting on this earth shall have been finished, and you go to the great Beyond, may you not find all the ground taken up and staked. Christ said, In my Father's house there are many mansions. May He prepare one for you, and may therein be a cabinet of minerals even as fine as that of Richard McIntosh!

The prospector is the advance guard of mining. He is the discoverer of the hidden treasure. To him is due the credit of much wealth that, except for him, we would not have. He is an eccentric being, one that will accommodate himself to almost any circumstance. He is a cook, tends horses, mends his shoes, likewise his clothing; and on Sunday he cooks Sunday dinner, which consists of beans and bacon; he will wash his shirt and socks, and if he is a very orderly man will sweep up the floor, set the three-legged stools in their places, wash up the dishes and prepare rough on rats for the mountain rat—all for the coming week. It will not be amiss to give something of the prospector's life.

His life is a study and a wonder—he himself wonders what will become of him. In many instances he gets in with some man of means, who will put up a few hundred dollars for the prospector to live on while he himself lives on the fat of the land. The prospector will take a team, some rickety old wagon, sometimes a tent, oftener none; flour, bacon, coffee, tea, with a few cans of corn, tomatoes and sardines. The prospector will give half he finds to his rich partner. This sometimes amounts to nothing; oftener a good number of good prospects are found. The prospector is poor; the able man knows it, and makes a kick about the money that he is out, with a view to freezing the prospector out. There is nothing said about how the prospector lived; how many snow and rain storms he has been out in, how many months he has been climbing the hills and mountains, sleeping on the ground, wet or dry. The hot summer's sun is not considered, the bad water that gets to tea-water heat from being packed around on his shoulder in a canteen exposed to the sun, when the thermometer marks 110 to 130. The prospector has of necessity to be an early riser to see if his horses are there or gone. He sometimes has to go back ten or twelve miles. The horse will not stay where there is no feed. Any morning he will tramp miles over the hills for his animals, when he returns and feeds grain, if he has any. Then he gets breakfast. After the bacon and coffee are disposed of, he loads what few traps there are in to the wagon with his bed and moves on. Stops at the foot of a mountain; turns the team out to grass if there is any, and take as much of what was left from breakfast. With water and a pick he proceeds to hunt for something that he never lost, but what he expects to find. He walks slowly, with his eyes on the ground, looking for float rock that contains mineral—turning over rock, breaking rock, stopping at times to look for the crop-pings of quartz ledges or to see the formation of the country around him. Many times he sees a good looking place way high up in the mountain, to which he climbs only to find nothing, or that some other prospector has already located and recorded it. Nothing daunted, on he goes, turning over rock until night comes on, leaving him many miles from home. Some men take pack animals, mule or pony, to pack their little all with. Others, and many, pack their stuff on their backs. These are those that go high up into the mountains and camp at a lonely spring away from any one for days and weeks. The most of the miners have a dog for company.

When the prospector is able to outfit himself or themselves, two or more go together. Then it is pleasanter. In that event one cooks, the other looks after the horses. Most of them prefer to be alone, for these reasons: if they find a mine, it will be their own; another is, that there are no two men that prospect alike. If many are together they will put in too much time in talking. There are other prospectors that will get to some lonely cabin and prospect the mountains for many miles around. There are men that have been disappointed in life—perhaps have in past days sold a mine and then went to the states, some to Europe, and spent it all. Now they prefer to be alone. Others have been disappointed in making a stake. Others still have been away from their best girl so long that she tired of waiting and married some other fellow. All of these men are cranky, as well as the rest of the human family, on some subject or another. Among the prospectors you will find many that are educated, understand law; many that you talk to know much of history. All are well posted on politics. Many only get their mails once a week or month, but when they do get a newspaper every word is read, even to the long-winded editorials, and what "our unesteemed morning contemporary" had said. It will be some consolation for the editors to know that there are some people that have to read their effusions.

It will be well to give the readers some of these characters, commencing with J. Newton Dunyon. He is a live Yankee from Yankeetown. He started out prospecting when a mere boy, thirty odd years ago. He would work for a few months and get money enough for a grub stake, and start out again. He prospected some in California. Nevada has his foot-prints all over it, from one end to the other. He has seen every mining camp in Utah. He has heard the war whoop of the Indian in Montana when a boy. The hills and dales of Wyoming have heard his melodious voice calling, "Boys, dinner is now ready!" He was a good cook from boyhood up, and ever ready to do his part in camp. He had some narrow escapes from the Indians, and has come near losing the few hairs his cranium possessed. Most of his time has been put in in the Deep Creek country, which he knows by heart. He can sit down and tell the history of the camp and every man's claim therein.

To show his indomitable energy, it is well to relate one of his trips. An Indian came in to Shell creek while he was cooking there, with a piece of lead ore which he said came from near where the C. P. railroad runs now; Newton purchased a yoke of oxen, procured the hind wheels of an old wagon, put a tongue therein, fixed a water barrel on the hounds, lashed his blankets and provisions on the axle-tree, and with a red-headed Irishman and the Indian started. It must have been a picture, the Indian leading the way, the Irishman on the off side to keep the oxen from going too much gee, Newton on the near side to keep them after the Indian. Thus they traveled without a road for many days, camping in the sage-brush when night overtook them only to find when they got to the mountain that there was no ledge to be found. Nothing daunted, back he went to work until he got another stake. Then he would launch out again and again, until he discovered some of the best mines in the west. To him more than any other man is due the gold that is being taken out at present from Gold Hill in the Deep Creek country. The privation and exposure of over a century have at last brought him a rich reward in his old days. He has many prospects in the Deep Creek country, and he will yet be called Mr. Dunyon, and his name will then be in the society column.

There is a prospector living in Nevada who is an exception to the general rule. He has lived in the same cabin for seventeen years. He is neat and clean. His cabin is swept every day. Everything is in its place and he has a place for everything. Dishes have to be washed every meal. He may let you wipe them, but he must wash them himself. I have hung the wiping cloth on the dish-cloth nail, and he never failed to move it. He has two of everything—even two cats. He will not mate himself. Of him there is but one, and none other like him that any one has ever seen. All efforts to draw him out on some of his youthful love stories have so far proven futile. That he has loved some fair damsel way down in Tennessee in youth there is no doubt. His cabin is the perfection of neatness. He has eleven boxes nailed up to put things in, and four shelves to set things on. He is the only prospector that has ever been seen with a tooth brush. He has an oil table-cloth on the table, which he keeps scrupulously clean. Most of the prospectors just set the pans and kettles on the table and every fellow helps himself. They all live as well as they can, most of them think they are good cooks, if they are not.

I had a partner who hailed from Ohio—that means "I know it all"—whose father kept a hotel there. What he did not know about cooking or thought he knew, was not worth knowing. He said to me one Saturday evening, "Let's have a plum pudding for to-morrow."

"Can you cook it?" I asked.

"Why, yes," said he.

So we told a German working for us to cook mush for supper while we went to the trading post to get the trimmings for the pudding. When we were a little way from the house the Dutchman called out: "Jake, Jake! I can't make mush, there are no opions in the house!" He would have put onions in the mush if there had been any.

For the pudding we purchased one pint of brandy and everything else that Jake could think of, until the bill amounted up to $4.50. He made the pudding out of self rising flour. I took one of my white shirts and tore the tail off it. We sewed the pudding up in it tight, filled in some water in the camp kettle, and put it on to boil. It boiled and swelled so all the water ran out—the lid raised up, and the bag busted. Between boiling and baking for several hours there was enough done for us to eat off the outside. We cooked it each day for a week and still had pudding left. Forever afterwards Jake was silent on cooking, and we had only to say something about pudding for him to take up his hat and move on.

The new prospector fits up a good spring wagon with all the modern improvements, folding chairs, table and a complete camp outfit, with all the delicacies, preserves, and eggs, that the market affords; a new pair of miner's expert boots, shipped to wear in camp; with an elaborate bed, a new tent, portable stove—in fact everything that might be wanted. One lot of young men that we met might describe nearly all of them. They had on the expert boots all right, and having been dudes in the city they concluded that it would be a good place to wear out their old clothing. One of them cut the bottoms off a fashionable pair of pants so he could stick them in to the boot tops. He looked all right in front, but when he turned around it was different. An Indian standing by my side, when the young man turned around, pointed at him, smiling and said: "Him too muchee all the time heap sit down." When he would come into camp and change the boots for the slippers, he would indeed look like a picture in an almanac. He was an only son with four sisters; hence his mother was tender of him. She gave him the feather-bed out of the trundlebed, and when he got in the bed and drew himself up to fit it he resembled a Chinaman smoking the opium-pipe. Each had his own theory about where to hunt and what to hunt for. One broke out in great earnestness: "Say, boys, why not hunt for a brass ledge to-day?" They would breakfast about 9 o'clock in the summer time; take lunch, water and picks, go out until they tired—which would be soon after they left—when they would return and quarrel whom should cook supper. The rest would fall to reading novels. One morning they took inventory, and found that there were but four eggs left. The head man says, "Boys, I am going home; the eggs are gone, and home I go."

Prospecting is a very exciting occupation. A lazy man will work at that. Hundreds of men will do nothing else but hunt hill and dale, year after year. We know one man that worked alone on his mine for years. As he dug down he would add a section of ladders to the end at the bottom, which he would climb down, dig and fill the bucket, then go up the ladder and windlass it up. He run up and down that ladder until he dug and blasted sixty feet. All this work he did, thinking every day to strike a large body of ore. He never struck it.

The claim allowed by the government is 1500 feet long by 600 feet wide. You own all that is inside of the lines. Sometimes the ledge is traceable the whole length, but oftener it only crops out in places here and there. The owner will want to know what he has got, hence he will go to work. He digs down and blasts out the rock as deep as he can throw the waste out to see how wide the ledge is and what it will assay. Then he will go to another place and try that the same way, until he is satisfied that he has struck the place to commence putting works to hoist with. This is a windlass first, worked by men. When they get down a hundred or hundred and fifty feet, a horse power will be put up. That on, you work about 300 feet, then you will have to get steam. There is expense from the time the first pick is struck into the ground until the mine is worked out. Not one in one hundred ever pays for the labor expended, to say nothing of clear gain. When you get a mine you will have to have a fortune to work it. The Centennial Eureka expended before they got a dollar back one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, but now she is paying in great shape.

Mining is good for mining men, but the farmer and the mechanic had best stay out of it. To all I would say, let each man stick to his own trade. If he is a miner let him mine; many strike it, he might be next. While the year of 1893 was a corker on you, let us hope that '94 will even things up for all of us. There is no reason why it should not; With state hood for Utah, with a railroad to Deep Creek, and silver on a par with gold, all hail to the year of 1894. Utah will be happy! H. J. FAUST.

Written for this Paper.

WHAT THE MOON SAW.

The church bells rang out their Christmas-greeting joyously in the cold night; the sound echoed from heart to heart, and it whispered within and without, "Christmas has come." It sounded in the merry clatter of the crowds in the streets, it was seen on the beaming faces, it was felt in the warm, hearty hand-shake; and the air itself was fragrant with Christmas odors. Nature had decked herself in beautiful, sparkling white, and the wind tore the glittering locks of the fir trees and sang a melancholy Christmas carol down the chimneys.

Over the distant forest the moon rose in full splendor and glided softly along, casting its pale rays impartially on the palace and the hut.

They entered the lofty parlors of the magnate's mansion, where star-spangled men and low-necked women did homage to the golden calf and enjoyed the gifts their host provided.

They peeped through the window of the coal-merchant's office, where the rich man looked over his credit and debit, and heard him mutter that wages must go down. And the moon hid her face in shame, for they were low enough as it was.

But it looked benignly on a group in a poor coal-haulers only room, where the children had stuck a pine twig in a flower pot, with one solitary candle at the top and a few little nick-nacks dangling about it, while the little ones had joined hands around their Christmas-tree and sang with shining eyes and rosy cheeks: "A child was born at Bethlehem."

And up in a garret, where the window was broken and the wind whizzed monotonously through, sat a young man by a three-legged table and a bottle for a candle stick, busy with some sketch books. He was an artist and had painted a picture which he had hoped would be hung in the coming salon; but it had been rejected. Now it stood in a pawnshop, where a miserly Jew had loaned him enough on it to live through the holidays; and his hopes of the gold medal and a traveling scholarship were blasted forever.

"I've missed my vocation," he said, "I shall study for the ministry or the stage and see if society has not a place where-in I might fit; only I shall starve to death before I get there." He pulled out the table drawer and brought forth his Christmas jar; bread, cheese and cold water.

"I'm ashamed to let the moon see how genius is served here on earth." And he hung up his bed spread for a blind and the moon saw no more.

But next to the artist's was another garret window, through which the moon could look unhindered in, and she saw a young girl before a cracked mirror and a table where the meager remains of the girl's supper, also a shoebrush, a novel, some faded neck garniture and divers other things lay in brotherly unity. The occupant of the room stood before the glass arranging her hair, humming a popular waltz tune. When the hair coiled to suit her she began searching a bureau drawer for some ornaments, and in turning the drawer bottom side up something fell out and rolled on the floor. The moon threw one of its brightest rays across it, and there it lay glittering till it caught the girl's eye.

"My mother's ring," she cried with something like awe. "I will wear it to night." She slipped it on her finger and held aloft, the large bony hand with its unkept nails, then hurriedly drew it off again. "No! It must not be polluted by these hands, nor see where I go to night. What would mother say could she see where I spend my Christmas eve? But what is the use of repining at this time. The rock has started to roll and must keep on till it reaches the bottom. But I should have been better if—if the good had helped me along a little."

Some of the faded neckwear was put on, and the ring, the dead mother's talisman, which had failed to rouse a better feeling, was put back among the rubbish and the moon went behind a cloud to muse on the sad state of affairs.

The Society For The Raising of Fallen Women gave a grand Christmas party; everything in style, you know, for the benefit of their cause. The committee reported that expenses would be cleared; and the good and the virtuous ate and drank and were merry, while the moon looked on in silence and wondered if it would not have helped their cause better had the poor fallen women been invited to a good substantial Christmas dinner.

Down by the sea-side stood a humble cottage where the moon delightedly looked in, for everything wore such a holiday aspect. On the old-fashioned stove stood the tea kettle boiling lustily, and the table was laid for two with many good things to tempt the appetite. The spinning-wheel stood in its proper place under the window; the fishing nets were hung up on the wall and could serve as decoration. At the end of the table in a big arm-chair sat a lovely old lady alternately knitting and reading the Bible. Off and on she would rise and go to the window, looking out to sea. The wind blew a heavy gale and the sea was rough. Her son was out with a fishing crew, and he was the last she had left of five. All her hopes were centered in her Christian, her sturdy, noble boy.

He would be here very soon now. She looked at the clock; ought to have been here by this time. For the tenth time she went her round of the little house to see if everything was in order for Christian's arrival. His clean, dry clothes were airing by the stove, his room, the only one besides the kitchen, was warm, with his comfortable bed all ready for its tired owner.

The fire was replenished, the bright tea pot once more polished with the old lady's apron and she went patiently back to her knitting and the Bible, only to come back to the window in a few moments again. She smiled up at the moon and it nodded back at her, she thought for they were old friends, the two.

"If I could send you in search of my son, you dear old companion of my loneliness these many years, I would ask you to light up his watery path, that he might reach home in safety," she whispered. The moon nodded again and looked seaward for the expected boy.

Neptune was angry; foaming and furious, he dashed the mountain like billows against each other until the foam like a mist encircled a small craft, a fishing smack which bravely battled with the raging sea, lying first on one side then on the other, tossed about like a nutshell, while the waves wildly lashed its sides. The main mast was gone and most of the rigging; one side had sprung a leak and all hands were at the pumps. The struggle was vain, the ship filled rapidly and the boat was lowered. There was small chance of escaping a wet grave in that; yet they all crowded forward ready to save self first, no one thinking of the other. Only the shipper and one more were left when the shout came up that two more would sink the boat. A young man, almost a boy, grasped the rope ready to go down, when a heavy hand was laid on his shoulder and a rough husky voice said: "Christian, I have a wife and seven children," and the boy fell back to let the shipper go down.

The boat was in danger of being crushed by the larger vessel but contrived to get clear of it, and Christian saw it lifted up and carried on by the waves, thrown hither and thither until it disappeared in the darkness of the water.

The boy had clutched at the railing and cast a long, beseeching look heavenward and gives a despairing cry for help; but only the seagulls answer him and circle around the fast sinking ship with their ill-boding screams.

An hour later when the storm has abated, and the moon emerges from a black cloud, it looks mournfully down on the white upturned face of the boy, whose lifeless body the agitated sea is rocking on its heaving bosom. And the foam forms a winding sheet over the noble boy, and the moon lingers tenderly over it and throws a silver halo round the cold form before another cloud veils her face.

Home by the sea shore the mother sits waiting still. The lamp has burnt down, the fire gone out, and the knitting has fallen on the floor, while the tired old head rests on the back of the chair and she smiles in her sleeps, till busy with the expected son. Perhaps they have met. The moon-beams kiss the silver locks and glide slowly away for the coming dawn.

SOPHY VALENTINE.

Written for this Paper

WHAT MONEY WOULD NOT BUY

The photographer pitched his weather stained tent in a vacant corner nearly opposite the three-story rickety lumber boarding house of a "booming" mining camp.

The outside of his canvas-house was decorated with various mottoes and persuasive sentences:

"This is the place to get your money back?"

"Send your phiz home to the old folks."

"Speaking likeness done in twenty minutes."

"The girl you left behind you would like it."

"No trouble to keep the babies quiet."

Frames full of really artistic work that it was perfectly safe to say the presiding genius of the place had had no hand in making, were placed on each side of the loose flap that served as a door.

Indeed, by peering closely at them, names and parts of names could be discerned on the lower edges of the cards, that did not correspond with our artist's cognomen.

Mining camp people are not as a rule over-critical, however, and rough, bearded men stopped their teams in the dusty street and, after staring at the "show" a few minutes, came in and told the artist to take a "shot" at them, and be quick about it; and did not deign to ask the price.

It was a change; they viewed it rather in the light of diversion than anything practical. The restlessness, the vagaries, the very crimes of men herded together as men are in such places, debarred from the society of good women and innocent children, the affectionate side of their nature starved and deformed, are due to these causes. The victim does not often, I am persuaded, realize the source of the deep unrest, and the mad impulses that determine his destiny.

Business was brisk and the photographer smiled, for his purse waxed heavy. He was well satisfied with the profits of his profession, but wished he had had the ability of a Mark Twain to depict the various queer characters that came to him.

A few of the "boys" went home and put on their best "togs," some even going so far as to buy a new suit of clothes for the occasion, because they really wanted to send it to the dear old folks waiting at home for the boy that never made his fortune and came back. Most of them preferred highly dramatic attitudes and costumes. Red flannel shirts would be unbuttoned, exposing muscular throats and bronzed chests, and a brace of pistols in the belt, with several knives, was a very common garniture. One bold and reckless miner insisted on shooting his pistol off just at the critical moment, although the artist told him it might blur the picture. The picture not proving to be satisfactory he threatened the unfortunate artists' life, until persuaded by some whose pictures had not yet been struck off that he "must not expect impossibilities of no man." Finally he consented to a picture with a pistol in each hand, the handles of two more showing above a cartridge belt, and a stack of rifles in the back ground.

In gratitude for having escaped with his life, the picture, which happened to be a daguerrotype, was simply loaded by the artist with gold. A double cord nearly an inch thick was made to encircle the broad brimmed hat, a chain that had it been a reality would have served to pull logs out of the mountains with, was plastered across the front of his waistcoat hung to an imaginary watch; the handles of his pistols and knives, and the tops of his boots were gilded with the same glittering metal. This feat established the photographer's reputation, and business poured in upon him in a stream that nearly paralyzed him.

He was often at his wits' end to understand the vernacular of his strange customers, and it taxed his resources to the utmost limit to comply with the demands that were made upon him.

Hovering about the pictures on the outside from the first day of his arrival the artist had noticed a curious old fellow with long fluttering thin gray hair, thin straggling beard, gaunt figure that seemed to have no flesh upon it, and pinched, leathery, pallid face out of which shone a pair of restless, brilliant, deep-set eyes.

He talked to no one, but seemed much interested in the pictures of women and children that filled one frame. He would stand for hours looking at them, smiling, shaking his head, and seeming perfectly entranced by a group of little girls with yellow hair floating over their shoulders, bare dimpled arms, and hands full of flowers.

So long as there were only crowds of men coming and going within the tent he did not show the least sign of interest; but during the second week, when a proud and happy miner escorted his wife and two children to the palace of pictures, this shadow of other days slipped inside.

He seemed much interested in the slightest detail. He got in the artists way, and made suggestions that nearly drove him frantic. At last he managed to stand so that the picture showed a flutter of his gray hair under a piece of hat-rim, one ear and a fragment of shoulder.

But the miner only laughed when he saw it, and said: "Father Brown cud have had a bigger piece of him on the card than that 'thout his kicking," much to the relief of the artist.

After two weeks the novelty of the picture gallery began to pall on the community, who had found new diversion in a big strike in a new locality, and a one horse theater. A whole day had passed and not a single soul had lifted the flap of canvass but "Father" Brown, nor asked for a "shot," and the artist concluded that the harvest was over, and began to pack up his trap for a move.

"Father" Brown seemed much distressed when he observed these signs of departure.

"Be ye goin'," he demanded, standing in the door with a peculiarly disappointed look upon his face.

"Yes," answered the artist, touched by the tremor in the thin voice, "is there anything I can do for you before I go?"

The old man stepped outside and took a long look in all directions to make sure that no person was within ear-shot. "I jest did want ye to do a little job for me when ye had finished up for everybody else. I've watched ye, and how easy ye get the little, curly heads and laffin lips on to yer little pieces of tin. These be awful purty," he said, touching the group of little girls that had stood outside, "my little girl looks like these here. She's got hair like this one, only there is a shade more brown in it, and eyes that laugh like this one, and the hand that must be full of flowers must be like this little hand here, with the dimples all showin'."

"Well," said the artist kindly, "I'll set up the camera again and take the picture for you."

"You do it, and I'll give you this," and he took a bag of gold from somewhere and poured its glittering contents upon the artist's table.

"Make it like she looked the day she gave me that handful of flowers, and called me back to kiss me, and I'll give you twice as much," said the old man, his cheeks flushing a hectic red, and his eyes glowing.

"And where is your little girl," asked the artist, a terrible misgiving as to the sanity of his customer filling his mind.

"She's been dead these twenty years," said "Father" Brown sadly, "I never saw her no more after that day. When I came back at night she was dead! dead!" And he sank into a chair and mourned, and rocked himself to and fro.

"My dear man, I would take the likeness if I could for you, and it should not cost you a cent," said the artist, strangely moved; "but there are some things I can't do. I can only copy objects that sit before the instrument. I cannot photograph a memory."

The old man seemed dazed. He straightened up and looked at the artist with unseeing eyes.

"She was the daintiest bit of muslin the Lord ever put breath into. Just like the mother that died when she began to live. And like her mother, she loved an ugly, coarse man like me, the little spot of sunshine! While they lived I never could get ahead. Everything seemed to go dead agin me; but when they were both gone, then fate tried to pay me for their loss with pizen metal. I'd give it all for jest a picter to-day of that little girl as she looked when she gave me the bunch of flowers and called me back to kiss her."

The artist tried to explain to the old man how impossible it was for him to make such a picture, but the tears sprang to his eyes at the sight of the distress and hopeless misery in the face of the lonely old miner.

"Well, jest the hand then; the hand and the bunch of flowers. It's askin' to much of mortal man, to ask him to make a copy of the puttest thing God ever made, but jest the hand. I'll give you twice as much money if you will only make a true picter of that little dimpled hand and the bunch of flowers as she offered them to me that day, when she called me back and kissed me," he pleaded, as men plead for the lives of their dearest.

The artist was naturally a very practical man, but his heart was so touched with the misery and pathos of the prayer that it is hard to say how much he would have given for the power to reproduce the little hand holding the bunch of wild flowers, both of which had been dust for twenty years. But money could not buy it and the glittering heap of gold was powerless to call back even a shadow of the loved face and form from the mists of the past.

"And ye can't?" said the old man while tears streamed down his face, "then what good is yer picters? If I had my little girl here in my arms, I'd not hev time to look at yer picters. It's when they're dead the picters'd be a comfort."

The artist gave him the frame with the group of little girls in it, put the gold back into his buck-skin sack, and gently closed him out of the tent, while he continued his packing, whistling softly to himself.

"There are some things that money won't buy," he repeated over and over, as if a new idea had been added to his book of personal knowledge.

ELLEN JAKEMAN.

Written for this Paper.

AMONG IMPS AND FAIRIES.

Among the people of the Scandinavian countries still lingers a more or less strong belief in the existence of invisible, intelligent beings, neither departed men, nor angels, nor demons, but a distinct and separate class. In the imagination of the people, those beings are of various kinds. Some are beautiful and well disposed to the human race; others are ugly and delight in doing what harm they can to cattle, horses, and other property, as well as to children. Some live along the shores of the beautiful rivers that wind their ways among trees and flowers to the sea. Their music may be heard in the long summer-nights, when the sun, delighted with the beauties of the North stays on the firmament as if to enjoy the scenes and to give new beauty to the picturesque landscapes; others live in the woods; others in the ground, in mountains and where not? Numerous are the stories about these creatures of the imagination, with which grandmothers in years gone by used to entertain their grandchildren, during the long winter evenings, around the fireside. Of course, the belief in those elves and fairies and imps is dying out. The obscure corners of nature have been brilliantly illuminated by the lights of sciences, and as the shadows fade, it is found that the mysteries of creation are of another kind than those conjured up by human minds without the aid of well directed inquiry.

The following story has often been told to Swedish children, probably in various versions. It gives an idea of the modes of thinking prevailing in ages less enlightened than ours.

In the southern part of Sweden is a large estate called Ljungby. Among its curiosities were formerly a horn and a whistle, both curiously worked and silver trimmed. Where these relics of antiquity came from, nobody in later times seems to have known; but popular love for the supernatural did not fail to account for their presence at Ljungby.

Some distance from the mansion, on a beautiful meadow, a large rock had found a resting place when in ages past the glaciers still covered northern Europe. Every Christmas eve—so the story was told years ago—this rock was lifted up and, supported by golden pillars, formed the ceiling to a considerably big hall. This was most beautifully decorated and illuminated by hundreds of lights, which were reflected in ornaments of gold and silver, forming a picture such as belongs only to fairy-land. Hundreds or thousands of little elves or imps gathered in this festival hall and evidently enjoyed themselves with drinking, dancing and singing, until the solemn midnight hour was announced by the large clock in the mansion. This being the hour of the birth of the Conqueror of all evil powers, the imps suddenly vanished; the lights went out and the rock resumed its place once more on the meadow. All this had yearly been observed from the mansion, for the feast of the fairies recurred every Christmas eve. Every means had been employed to free the estate from these uncanny occupants, but in vain. Nobody dared to approach the place when the imps held their celebration, until finally one brave young man resolved to see what was taking place under the celebrated rock. Christmas eve came. The imps were in full possession as usual. The hero of the story went to the stable and mounted the most fleet-footed steed on the estate and started for the place of festivity. On arrival there his eyes were dazzled with the splendor he beheld. In the middle of the improvised hall was a golden throne on which was seated a most beautiful woman, one probably stolen by the imps from some human family and bound by enchantment, seemingly for the purpose of serving as queen. Her crown sparkled of diamonds and all manner of precious stones and her dress was correspondingly gorgeous. Only a few minutes were left to our hero to contemplate this scene. The fairy queen perceived him and gave a few orders to her attendants. Two of them approached him immediately, one carrying a horn filled with some kind of beverage, and the other a whistle. Both were handed to him with a cordial invitation to drink of the horn and blow the whistle a certain number of times and then join the company in the general jollification. The young man took the horn and the whistle, gave his horse the spurs and started as fast as possible toward the mansion, followed by the whole company of imps.

He would soon have been overtaken and of course killed, had not, at this critical moment, a friendly voice sounded to him from the crowd, coming undoubtedly from the queen: "Ride over the field and not over the road." The advice was at once complied with and the consequence was that the rider came home a few minutes before the imps arrived. For the field had been ploughed, and as steel is a mighty talisman against all kinds of imps, they had no power to pursue the rider over the field, but had to follow the road.

As soon as our hero arrived in the stable he placed himself under the horse and waited for developments. The fiends were soon there. They first asked very humbly for their horn and whistle, for these were the only means by which they could continue their celebrations of Yule. But their supplications did not avail. A fierce battle followed. But our hero was well defended by the noble animal, and the ugly little enemies received such blows from the iron-clad hoofs, that a number of them tumbled to the ground and vanished. It is uncertain, however, how the unique conflict between the horse and hundreds of imps would have ended, had not the midnight hour arrived; for the noble animal soon became exhausted in the uneven fight. But it struck twelve o'clock. The raging imps fled in all directions. Our hero was safe, and the estate was never again troubled with the supernatural Christmas visitors.

The horn and the whistle were kept in the mansion as the greatest curiosities, and may be there still, unless they should have been conveyed to some national museum for better safe-keeping.

Written for this Paper.

BETHLEHEM TO-DAY.

WASHINGTON, December 21st, 1893.—On this day, the day before Christmas, I want you to take a trip with me to the birthplace of Christ. I visited it a few years ago, and the notes of my pencil and my camera lie before me. The sweet face of a Bethlehem Madonna looks up at me from my table as I write, and photographs of Bethlehem shepherds in their sheepskin coats, registered by my camera only a year or so ago, make me think of those famous shepherds who first saw the star the night before Christ came. They watch their flocks on the same plains today, and in coming to Bethlehem from Jerusalem I drove right over the fields upon which they lay and saw the star.

THE JUDEA OF TODAY.

Palestine is much the same now as it was nineteen hundred years ago. The greatness of its history has magnified its size, and it is hard to appreciate how small it is. You could lose it in one of the counties of Texas. You could ride across it in a few hours on a railroad train, and today a second class ticket from Joppa to Jerusalem costs you only a dollar. Between the seacoast and the mountains lie the rich lands of the Philistines. They are the famed plains of Sharon, and they are twenty miles wide and sixty miles long. The mountains of Judea would be lost in the Alleghanies or the Rockies, and the Mount of Olives is so small that you can go out of Jerusalem, walk past the Garden of Gethsemane and be at its top in an hour. Standing here you can look clear across Palestine. On a bright day you can see the thin, silvery Jordan tied as a string to the great tin pan of the Dead sea on your left, and the vast, sparkling Mediterranean away over the plains of Sharon on the right. King David made a great fuss about his all-day's trip from Jerusalem to the Jordan, but the distance is only fourteen miles, and the Sabbath day's journey from the Holy City to Bethlehem is not more than six miles. The Jews dealt in big figures. They looked upon everything concerning themselves or their people through the right end of the opera glass, and their imagery is truly oriental. The probability is that Judea never had a very large population, and it is very doubtful whether Jerusalem was a large city in comparison with the great capitals of today. It now contains just about 40,000 souls, and the walls around it inclose less than a half section of land. You could crowd the whole city on a good-sized farm, and Bethlehem covers hardly more than a garden patch.

A LOOK AT JERUSALEM.

Both towns lie in the hills of Judea, and they will show you in Jerusalem just where Herod lived when he got excited about the coming of Christ and massacred the innocents. I walked over the same floor upon which Pontius Pilate stood when he gave up the Lord to be crucified. The walls of Jerusalem are thirty-eight feet high. They would reach to the top of a four story house, and they run around Jerusalem cutting it out in the shape of a diamond. Outside of these walls the steep hills run down on every side and across the valleys formed by these you see other hills, and the whole country is rolling. The big diamond inside the wall is filled with a mass of box-shaped limestone houses, built one on top of the other and crowded into streets which cut each other at all sorts of angles. The roofs of the houses are flat. There are no chimneys and no windows. Many of their rooms look like vaulted caves, floored, walled and ceiled with stone, and those which open on the street are of this character. The streets have no sidewalks, and the shops are merely holes in the wall. The streets are vaulted and winding, and in going through them you think of the catacombs and appear to be going through long vaulted caves. The town is so densely populated that one room often constitutes a house for a family and these narrow streets are packed with people of all descriptions. They are so narrow that no carriage can enter Jerusalem, and in going to Bethlehem I had to walk from my hotel through the city and out of David's gate before I could get a conveyance.

"A SABBATH DAY'S JOURNEY."

The ride from Jerusalem to Bethlehem can be made in less than an hour. It is one of the most interesting journeys of the world, and it is through a most interesting country. Outside the walls of Jerusalem you find many new houses. They have grown up since the building of the railroad and the Holy City has had a suburban real estate boom. These houses are of limestone. They have no gardens about them and the white walls and the white dusty roads as they glare in the winter sun are painful to the eye. About the gate you find camels with dark faced Bedouins upon them. They have guns with them and they scowl at you as you pass by. Here are ragged farmers on donkeys with their black and white blankets hanging from their necks down over their bodies and half covering the animals they ride. Now you go by Russian pilgrims, who are on their way into Jerusalem to worship at the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, and here pass turbaned Mohammedans, who scowl at you. There are plenty of beggars. A bare footed Turk with a crate on his back yells out Bachsheesh and behind him stand the Turkish soldiers with guns in their hands and with swords at their sides. It is a motley crowd and you are glad when you have gotten your way through it and out in the country.

AMONG THE SHEPHERDS.

My trip to Bethlehem was made in the spring. The hills were then dotted with olive groves, whose leaves shone like frosted silver under the bright sun of Palestine, and the plains through which the road passed were covered with grass as green as that of old Ireland. These were the plains on which the shepherds lay when they saw the star, and there the shepherds graze their sheep today. I saw perhaps a dozen bearded men in sheepskin coats who were watching their flocks on these Judean hills, and their eyes were kind, and their faces full of character.

In one place I saw a family of four, a husband and wife and two children which might have represented the Holy Family, with the addition of John the Baptist. One child sat in the mother's arms, another squatted cross legged on the ground, while the father lay on his elbow and looked curiously at me as I drove by. The faces of all were fine, and you will see nowhere more striking features than those of these natives of Palestine.

It is out in the country districts of Palestine that you realize that you are in the lands of the Scriptures. I saw a dozen old men during the journey whose patriarchal faces and long white beards remind me of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and an old turbaned Syrian wearing a long beard who rode behind me on a donkey made me wonder if he was not a second Balaam, and why his long-eared beast did not open its mouth and speak. Away off at the back I was shown the site of the town of Mizpah, where the Prophet anointed Saul as king when he was out hunting his father's asses, and the inn into which Christ turned to break bread when he conversed incognito with two of his apostles was shown to me. The site is now occupied by a Greek wine shop, with a billiard table as an accompaniment, and it is within a few miles of the spot where "David with his little stone the great Goliath slew. I passed this place in going to Bethlehem, and I find that there are plenty of stones there still, and a lusty, bear-headed Syrian youth was playing among them, though I did not note that he had the sling of his mighty ancestor. It was not far from this point that I rode through the identical land which was owned by Boaz, the richest farmer of this day, when he fell in love with Ruth, and disgusted his neighbors by marrying out of his sphere.

THE GIRLS OF BETHLEHEM.

I don't wonder that Boaz fell in love with Ruth. The Bethlehem girls are among the beauties of the east and you will find more pretty girls in the hills of Judea than in the same amount of territory anywhere else the world over. A shipload of these Bethlehem maidens, if they could be transported to the great northwest, would capture the bonanza farmers of the Dakotas just as Ruth captured this great landowner, Boas, and when they came back to Washington as Senator's wives they would be the belles of the capital. These Bethlehem maidens are fair skinned and bright eyed. They have straight, well-rounded forms, which they clothe in long dresses of white linen so beautifully embroidered in silk that a single gown requires many months' of work. This dress is much like an American woman's night gown without the frills and laces. It falls from the neck to the feet and is open at the front in a narrow slit as far down as a modest decollete dress. Over this gown they wear sleeveless cloaks of dark red stripes and the head they cover with a long shawl of linen embroidered with silk. Each girl wears her dower on her person in the shape of a necklace of coins and the forehead of each maiden is decorated with a crown of coins, some of which are silver and others gold. They do not hide their faces like the Mohammedan women and their features are clean cut and refined. I have seen fair samples of the pretty girls of most of the countries of the world and the Bethlehem girls are the equals of any. They are as intelligent as they are pretty, and I found that those whom I traded with usually got the best of the bargain. There is little poverty in Bethlehem, and the girls whom I met were well dressed, for the orient, and the seemed well-to-do.

As you near Bethlehem you find the hills grow more ragged. Their sides are covered with stones, and you see that they were terraced into gardens in the days of the past. About a mile from Bethlehem I stopped for a while before the tomb of Rachel. It is a little square building, about the size of a smoke house, covered with a white dome, and it is situated in the midst of a Mohammedan cemetery. It is worshipped by Musselmen, Jews and Christians, and its walls are covered with the names of travelers. A little further on you find David's well, and then go round a corner and come in sight of Bethlehem.

HOW BETHLEHEM BOOMS.

The Bethlehem of 1894 is one of the most prosperous towns in Palestine. It is bigger today than it has ever been, and it now contains about 6,000 people. It does a big business in making beads for the Catholic pilgrims and the Russians out of mother-of-pearl, and the most of the pearl paper cutters which come from Palestine are made at Bethlehem. The people make a great many backs for prayer books, and they are thrifty in the extreme. The town runs along the sides of the hills in the shape of a horseshoe, and it stands out against the sky, with big hills rising all around it. Its architecture is much like that of Jerusalem, save that the houses are newer and cleaner. They are built of stone, and they are more like stone boxes than comfortable homes. Most of them are one story, and they stand close to the cobblestone sidewalks, without yards or gardens. There are no sanitary arrangements to speak of, and these houses and a lot of big churches make up the town. The people composing it are chifty natives. They are Greek Christians, and there are only three hundred Mohammedans and sixty Protestants in the place.

WHERE CHRIST WAS BORN.

I asked for the stable in which Christ lay in the manger. I felt use of finding it, for in Palestine every spot is marked, and, though it is now nearly 2,000 years since the events of Christ's life took place, the guides of Judea can show you every spot which His fingers touched and mark out every foot of land upon which His feet stood. I was told that it was at the western side of the town, and I found a great church built over it. Just opposite this church there was a saloon, and my turbaned driver spent his time in this while I visited the church. It is a great stone structure, ragged and old, with centuries of hard usage. It was built, it is said, 1500 years ago by Emperor Constantine. Its roof was once covered with lead, but the Turks stripped this off and made it into bullets when they captured it, and killed Christians with the product. The church has again passed into the hands of Christians, and the services were going on as I entered. I stopped for a moment and watched the Greek priests, who, in long black gowns, were chanting their service, while boys in bright-colored dresses swung incense lamps to and fro. There were, perhaps, 200 men and women standing at worship within the great hall, and the ceremonies were very impressive. Leaving this hall, I was taken down into the crypt of the church and thence to the stable where it is said Christ was born. I went down a winding staircase carrying a candle and at last found myself in a great cave about twelve feet wide and forty feet long, the ceiling of which was about ten feet high. This cave like room was floored with marble. Thirty two lamps burn day and night within it, and it has an altar at one end, under which is a silver star set into the marble pavement, where you find an inscription in Latin stating that on this spot the Virgin Mary gave birth to Christ. I was not surprised to find the stable a cave. I saw many such in Palestine, and a great part of the animals of the country today are stabled in caves. This stable, however, has been changed by the decorations of the church, and it is impossible to realize the real scene of Christ's birth while in it. I looked at the manger. It is made of marble, and it is said to be the identical manger in which He rested. This, of course, is a fraud, as is also the well at the other side of the crypt, where the holy water is said to have burst forth at this time for the use of the holy family. I looked down into this well. It is said that the star that guided the Magi fell into it and that it still shines down there in the water, but that it is only visible to the eye of the purest virgin. I looked into it, but, being of the other sex, could, of course, not see it.

There are a number of other chapels about the stable, each of which has its traditions, but the incense, the marble and the gaudy church decorations about them take you far away from the reality and make you think rather of the marble stables in which the Roman Emperor Caligula kept his golden-shod horses rather than the donkey and camel stable in which Christ was born.

HOW CHRIST'S BIRTHPLACE REALLY LOOKED.

From the real stables of the Bethlehem of today one can better learn just how the stable of Christ appeared. I visited one after leaving the bedizzened and over-decorated sanctuary under the church. The stable is a cave, the floor of which is a rough stone. It has a number of chambers, which open into a sort of a court, and in these chambers are donkeys, camels and horses. They eat out of stone boxes, and in front of them on the floor men and women lie sleeping on the stones. There is no bed clothing, except their blankets, and they squat upon the stones when they eat their meals. A ragged, dirty Bedouin has charge of the whole, and his rates are about five cents a day per animal. The manger of Christ was probably one of these hallowed out stone boxes, and the Virgin Mary, in all probability, slept on the stones, or the straw. Within one of these stables I saw a Bedouin woman with a sleeping baby on her knee. She had just been feeding her child and one breast peeped out between the folds of her coarse rough gown. Her head was bound with a gaily colored shawl. There were rings on her fingers, bracelets upon her fair round arm, and a gold ring in her nose. Her face was, however, as sweet as that of any Madonna I have ever seen upon canvas, and her baby, just out of its swaddling clothes, looked as pure and innocent as the most famous representation of Christ. It was a scene for a painter.

CHRISTMAS IN BETHLEHEM.

Christmas is always a great day in Bethlehem, and the coming Christmas will be celebrated in its usual splendor. Thousands of people go from Jerusalem, and while you are reading this letter, the priests are preparing for the service of Christmas night. There will be sermons in the churches, beginning at 10 o'clock, and then in a procession the priests and the monks will march down the winding stairs into the crypt and visit the grotto of the nativity. They will carry with them a waxen image of a little child, which they will place in the manger, and as they do so they will chant the story of the nativity. This child will be dressed in the finest of lace and it will rest in the manger on rose-colored cushions of silk embroidered with gold. During the service the patriarch of Jerusalem will go through the ceremony of taking up and laying down the child to correspond with the words of the chant, and the service will last for several hours. On Christmas night all Bethlehem watches, and the day is one of joy and feasting. Bethlehem has more Christians than any other town in the orient, and its people are proud of the fact that Christ was born within their walls.

FRANK G. CARPENTER.

A shocking murder has been brought to the attention of the people of Pocahontas, Idaho. A mother and her baby were found in a deep crevice in the rocks near that city. It is supposed that they had been murdered and thrown there. An effort is being made toathom the mystery.

William Akers, the Horse Creek trapper, yesterday brought in twenty-six coyote and four wolf skins to the county clerk's office, says the Cheyenne, Wyoming, Leader. The bounty on the lot amounted to $58. One gray wolf skin was the largest ever brought into the office, being over eight feet in length.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—A juror in the Henry Meyer case, was seized with an epileptic fit and court adjourned. Low was once an inmate of the Bloomingdale Asylum. The development of this fact may result in a mistrial.

BRECKENRIDGE, Colo., Dec. 18.—Some unknown person attempted at an early hour this morning to throw a bomb loaded with dynamite into a room over the Exchange State bank, occupied by George Engle, president of the bank. The bomb missed the window and fell to the sidewalk, where it exploded, shattering the windows of the bank and adjacent buildings. The purpose of the bomb-thrower was apparently to assassinate Engle, who was sleeping.

VIENNA, Dec. 18.—The relations between the Vatican and Russia are said to be far less cordial than some time ago. The pope, in a recent letter to the czar, complained of various acts against the liberty of the Polish Catholics. The terms of the czar's reply have not yet transpired, but should the czar decline to accede to the pope's request, it is expected the latter may make the matter the subject of a public pronouncement.

SIOUX CITY, Dec. 19.—A Journal special from Vermillion, S. D.: Kate Stefani had been keeping company with "Shorty" Babcock at Burbank, a village twelve miles from here, but at the request of her mother broke off the relationship. Today Babcock drove up to the millinery store where she was employed and said her mother was sick and had sent him to take her home. She refused to go unless her friend, Dolly Hemphill, also went.

Miss Hemphill consented, and the three got into a sleigh and drove out of the village toward the Stefani farm. On the road Babcock shot Miss Hemphill dead, and turned the pistol upon Miss Stefani, who escaped instant death by crawling under the sleigh seat, though receiving two dangerous wounds in her breast. Babcock then shot himself, dying instantly.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Wayne McVeagh of Pennsylvania, ambassador to Italy.

John P. Irish of California, naval officer, San Francisco.

James H. Forney, Idaho, United States attorney for the district of Idaho.

When the appointment list was handed Senator Hill, he exclaimed: "What, have not all the Mugwumps been provided for yet?"

CHICAGO, Dec. 19.—In the special election for mayor to fill the unexpired term of Carter H. Harrison, John P. Hopkins, Democratic candidate was elected, over George B. Swift, Republican, by a majority of 1,387. Total vote: Hopkins (Democrat) 112,700; Swift (Republican), 111,313; Britzins (Socialist-labor), 1,517; Wakeley (People's Silver), 317.

BARCELONA, Dec. 19.—Of the six anarchists who swore to avenge Pallas, five have already been arrested, and will be court martialed. A feeling of alarm is rapidly extending throughout the city. Most of the theaters are closed, and trade is completely paralyzed.

ROCK SPRINGS, Wyo., Dec. 20.—Mrs. James McNarr, of Van Dyke, drove to town yesterday in a buggy. She brought her eight-weeks-old baby girl with her. When she reached town the baby was dead. In her anxiety to keep it warm she had smothered it.

TOPEKA, Kas., Dec. 20.—United States Marshal Walker and New York capitalists are to build a railroad from Salt Lake to Los Angeles at once.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Senator Faulkner today received the following telegram:

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Dec. 20.

Our Liberal friends formally dissolved their party last night, and adopted resolutions urging you to pass our statehood bill immediately. There is no opposition to our admission into the Union. Hasten the bill through the Senate and make us all happy.

Heed no representations that the old conditions still exist. The practice of polygamy has been absolutely abandoned. It is forbidden by the authorities of the Mormon Church, and any member contracting the relation would be subject to excommunication from that body. In our opinion no revival of it will ever be attempted, and if attempted would never succeed.

CALEB W. WEST,

Governor.

CHARLES C. RICHARDS,

Secretary of Utah.

JOHN W. JUD,

United States Attorney.

NAT M. BRIGHAM,

United States Marshal.

HENRY C. LETT,

Member Utah Commission.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 20.—A special to the Republic from Burlington, Ia., says: A rich vein of gold, assaying nine and a half ounces and 40 per cent copper to the ton, was discovered at Starr's Cave, this city, and a company will incorporate to develop the field. Liberal traces of tin and zinc were also found.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 20.—A. B. Hettleton, J. H. Rice and J. Andrews, representing the proposed ship railway through Mexico, appeared before the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce this morning to urge that the scope of the Doolittle resolution, authorizing a congressional commission to visit Nicaragua, be enlarged, so as to include an examination and report as to the practicability and merits of the proposed Eads isthmian ship railway through Mexico. The committee took no action. The intention of the company is to press the matter in the Senate.

ROME, Dec. 20.—The Italian chamber of deputies was crowded and much interest was manifested in the government's declaration of its policy. After the policy of the ministry had been announced, a workman named Angioletti from the gallery cried:

"This is a regular African Kral."

A scene of commotion followed, during which Angioletti was removed from the gallery by the police, wildly shouting:

"Thieves! Robbers! Down with pillagers; death to public thieves!"

The gallery evidently contained some people in sympathy with the workman, for cries of "Let him alone" were heard.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Proctor introduced a bill to annex Utah to Nevada. Referred to the committee on territories.

At 3:45 p.m. the Senate adjourned until January 3rd.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—A fire started this morning in Hovey & Sons', drapers, establishment and spread to five other establishments. It is still burning. The loss already amounts to a million dollars.

The fire was extinguished this afternoon.

ALBANY, Dec. 21.—Edward Peyson, the veteran pedestrian, walked leisurely up State street hill this morning, and at 9:40 stood in front of the steps of the capitol, just 11 hours and 20 minutes ahead of schedule time. His time from New York was seventy-two hours.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 22.—Of the 200 veteran soldiers poisoned by eating putrid meat recently at the annual banquet 180 are still in a serious condition, and thirty-six have died.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—In an interview with the solicitor or Baroness Roques the lawyer said fresh sensational evidence has been discovered in favor of Mrs. Maybrick, Baroness Roques's daughter, in prison for poisoning her husband, and that urgent means will be taken to induce the secretary of state for home affairs to open an independent inquiry into the case under the new developments. The newly discovered evidence comes from the captain of a Halifax, N. S. ship, who has been away at sea. This captain declares that he often saw Maybrick putting arsenic in his food. Maybrick declared that he must have something to keep him up and that he took enough to kill one unused to it.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Pale and evidently in great fear, Mr. Andrew Foy appeared on the witness-stand at the opening of the Coughlin trial this morning, with a policeman near to guard her against harm, which has been darkly threatened. The defense objected to her testimony on the ground that evidence by a wife calculated to implicate her husband in a crime is incompetent. The understanding was that she would tell of a series of meetings at her house, at which Coughlin was recognized by all as the leader, and that her husband afterwards confessed that at these meetings the plot was formed which led to Dr. Cronin's murder, and that her husband took part in the plot and was present shortly after the murder was committed. Judge Tutbill finally decided to admit Mrs. Foy's testimony, her evidence to be confined to what she saw and to what she said to any one of the conspirators.

The examination then proceeded amid the most profound attention on the part of the audience which filled the room, and with constant objections from the defense.

CAPTOWN, Dec. 22.—Natives who arrived at Butuwayo report that Captain Wilson and his thirty-five men, who were thought to have been massacred after falling into the Matabele ambush, defeated King Lobengula's force on the brink of Shangani river, Dec. 4. Lobengula fled. Premier Rhodes announced that the natives are daily yielding guns and assegais in large numbers, and the Matabeles are submissively settling in small kraals.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 21.—Secretary Herbert this morning gave out his decision in the case of Commodore Stanton, detached from the command of the South Atlantic squadron for saluting Mello in the harbor of Rio. The secretary restored Stanton to duty and assigns him to command the North Atlantic squadron. This is regarded as perhaps the choicest station to command.

TOPEKA, Dec. 21.—A special to the Capital from Abeline, Kan.: Letters written by one R. F. Rock, and dated Topeka, was found here and outlined a scheme for kidnapping Ruth Cleveland next month. Five people are named as implicated in the deal. At first it was thought to be a joke, but developments show that it was probably the scheme of a crank, who has been hanging around the city recently, but has gone East.

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 21.—Six hundred delegates, representing nearly every municipality in the state, attended the business men's convention today. Governor Waite was present.

"I am in favor," he said, "of fighting for the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1, not all summer, but till hell freezes over."

Resolutions were adopted, denying that there was sufficient reason for calling an extra session of the legislature, and declaring that such a course would do the state more harm than good.

EDINBURGH, Dec. 22.—The jury in the Monson trial this afternoon returned a verdict of "Not proved."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The first attempt to get a judicial determination of the legal right of the commissioner of pensions to suspend a pensioner from the rolls came up today in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. It was brought in the form of an application by Charles D. Long, a justice of the supreme court of Michigan, for a mandamus to compel Commissioner Lochran to restore him to his full rating, $75 per month. Justice Bradley issued an order on the commissioner to show cause why the mandamus should not issue, and the writ being returnable today, the matter was argued by counsel.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 22.—Near Winchester, O., the dead bodies of L. P. Ryan and wife, aged 81 and 78, were found at their home. Wounds on their bodies showed that they had been clubbed to death. Rescue Parker, colored, was arrested on suspicion, and confessed, implicating his half-brother, Sam Johnson. Parker was hurried to jail to avoid the vengeance of the mob. Johnson was left at large on account of lack of faith in the truth of that part of Parker's story implicating him.

OMAHA, Dec. 22.—General Solicitor Thurston of the Union Pacific, in speaking of the scheme of reorganization, said: "There are many plans for reorganization of the Union Pacific property in the air. The general scheme, however, that seems to meet with most favor is that the Union Pacific proper, together with those lines which are properly a part of the system, although classed as feeders, shall be reorganized under Congressional legislation, and subjected to sale under the direction of the court. A sale is absolutely necessary, that a new company may be formed that will permit a fresh start being made. With reductions made in the fixed interest charges, the property would be able to pay interest on its obligations and the principal of the government debt, so that the government security would grow better every year, while the liability would grow constantly less. Should the administration disapprove of some of the features the theory of reorganization would have to be completely discussed over again. The rights of the government must be sacredly guarded, as well as the rights of individuals, and this requires no inconsiderable time."

MADRID, Dec. 23.—The city is threatened with famine owing to the strike of the bakers. The governor has applied to the military to establish bakeries. The governors of the neighboring provinces have been requested to send supplies of bread here.

PARIS, Dec. 2.—The Associated Press has obtained a copy of a violent manifesto which the French anarchists in London have secretly prepared for distribution in Paris. The manifesto is headed: "Dynamiters, to the Panama Crew." The manifesto says: "This first dynamite explosion will not be the last for you wretches. Since 1871, when you converted Paris into a charnel house and massacred 85,000 proletariats, the republic has been turned into a den of thieves, directed successively by the scoundrel Thiers, the brute MacMahon, the thief Grevy, and the maukin Carnot, while the poor hounds below were condemned to white slavery or die of starvation in the streets.

"Do you think such a state of things can endure? No, revolution will devour you. We whom you outlawed, will come to the rescue of the starving and duped poor, who cannot wait patiently like the labor deputies, so-called because they had no work. These traitor and renegade deputies declared recently that you would have them shot like rabbits, but they decline to be blown up with you. Don't hold the miserable socialists responsible for the dynamite; they only want to enrich themselves like you."

After a further denouncement of the socialists the manifesto proceeds to describe the bourgeois class, saying they are "worse than dung, and we warn those who are demanding the death penalty for Vaillant, who followed the knife of Lauthier with a bomb thrown in the midst of your robbers' cave, to look out for your skins. That was merely a foretaste, Monsieur; you, who inwardly prefer to surrender to being blown into shreds and into the air."

"Vive la revolution sociale!" "Vive l'Anarchisme!"

MADRID, Dec. 22.—A bomb exploded yesterday in the village of Soda. A drug store was wrecked, but nobody killed. An anarchist named Cermeno and his son have been arrested at Barcelona. It is believed they were implicated in the bomb outrage in the Liceo theater, and attempt upon the life of General Campos. Important documents were seized at their lodgings.

BARCELONA, Dec. 23.—Jose Cedina, the anarchist, who already has confessed that he threw the bomb in Lyceo theater, has made another confession. He says he was selected by the anarchists last September to assassinate Gen. Martinez Campos. He went with Pallas and a number of anarchists to the review, took a position from which he could easily have accomplished his design, General Campos being the reviewing officer, but at the last moment his courage failed, as he realized that if he threw the bomb hundreds of persons in the crowd which surrounded the general would be killed or wounded. Pallas urged him to throw the bomb and when he refused, Pallas, with an expression of contempt snatched the bomb from him; but his nerve also was overcome for a time, and the delay saved the general's life. Up to the time of his execution, Pallas maintained that he was alone in the attempted assassination. Cedina says he threw the bomb in Lyceo theater to avenge Pallas's execution.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Dec. 23.—At 1 o'clock this morning fourteen Hungarians were engaged in excavation of the foundations for the new building for the Carnegie Steel company when the walls caved in. Wild rumors to the effect that all were killed at once spread, but the accident proved less serious. John Knoddie was killed and John Noroski, John Harko and Charles Marriatt injured. Noroski may die.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Dec. 23.—J. W. Griddle, who has been hunting fossils in the Wyoming bad lands for six months past has secured enough material to restore the skeleton of at least four different animals of mammoth proportions, which will be fitted up and placed on exhibition in the American museum at Central Park, New York.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The President has granted pardons to Joseph P. Burton, Wm. E. Jones, Chet Palmonier and Stephen S. Barton, Utah.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The secretary of state has received the following dispatch from Rio, dated yesterday: "The American dockmasters, each hold a Brazilian Pacific dock permit. The docks specified are contiguous points. Protection from shore fire is promised by the government. Instruct Picking to anchor off that point for convenience till the question is equitably settled. The insurgents make fires of fire anywhere to suit their purpose, thereby indefinitely blocking the neutral commerce without previous notice."

The dispatch is signed by Towns, United States consul general to Brazil. The dispatch is supposed to mean that the Brazilian government has granted a permit for shipping to unload at certain wharves and that Towns wants the naval forces to respect these permits and not fire along these lines. It is not likely that such instructions will be granted.

The Millennial Star of December 11 announces that Elder M. A. Lewis has been released from his labors as traveling Elder in the Welsh conference and has been appointed to labor in the Irish conference.

Written for this Paper.

CONUNDRUMS.

The mammoth fair at Chicago was a huge practical advertisement. The manufacturers of this country exhibited their wares, not only to our own people but to the world at large. All nations had the opportunity of seeing our conceits, our inventions, our progress. We also had the opportunity of seeing theirs. Both sides could contrast one with the other, could note peculiarities, excellences, diversities and advantages. In many senses each had its specific productions. Climate, custom, experience, secure excellence and defy competition, as if the finger of Omnipotence had given an individuality to nations as to persons, which means interchange without rivalry, and union without unequaled similarity.

Nor was it possible for this overwhelming display to be studied as a whole. It could only be glanced at, its outer and inner salient points could be securely photographed on the mental tablets of the observer. But wherever there was a true student, he had his choice—there were lines which commanded his sympathy, aroused his faculties, and ministered especially to his taste, occupation, profession or life. The art student would exhibit little love for ponderous machinery, the machinist little for sculpture, and the man of modern sciences little for forms of manufacture save as these might be affected by his own inventions or discoveries. Unless this isolation or sectionalized method was adopted, little influence of an educational character could result. With it we may look for progress as significant as that made in England after the pioneer exhibition of 1850-1. She there realized the defects which prevented her from becoming the workshop for the world, and since that, by design, solidity, price, supply, she has made the earth tributary to her wealth, fame, influence and the sustenance of her industrial millions. By questionable methods perhaps, at times, but in the order of Providence doubtless, she has carried commerce in one hand and civilization in the other. She created markets for her products wherever barter or force could do it. Her manufacturers, merchants and ships have navigated the seas and traversed the continents and islands of the earth, and new worlds have been opened by diplomacy or conquest as best secured the prize. The prosperity consequent in this enlarged field of action, and the protection afforded by fleets and representatives, have been potent factors in colonizing her surplus population and in turn by judicious measures and trade policy making them and their posterity her customers for years at least.

The restless enterprise of kindred blood in this nation, saw the home market largely supplied from the mother country; and partly from antagonism, partly from speculation, the resources here were gradually utilized, particularly when emigration set in so like a flood, and artisans of every kind were seeking labor. And yet no sooner was the way open than manufacturing enterprises—so called—became the shuttlecock of both manufacturers and politicians.

In the early sixties, probably a couple of potteries of the crudest kind were in this country. England had the market, if the writer remembers correctly, on a nominal tariff. Application was made to Congress for protection, ten per cent being all that was asked. Compromise settled upon nine but this idea once introduced, has kept growing and reaching out with the increase of potteries, until from low grades upward, the tariff is now from twenty to sixty per cent. However, the purpose was not to run into topics of controversy but to show that this very manufacturing activity is not satisfied with the market growing out of the sixty-five millions of a home population, but it now wants to find an outlet for its surplus products, and diplomacy enters the arena of trade, suggesting reciprocity in deal wherever this can be done successfully, the mother country meanwhile being one of our heaviest buyers, and almost without restriction as without this reciprocity.

The lesson of these modern and national methods is not without a home application. We have our manufacturing concerns, none of which are run to their capacity, and consequently they are run at a loss. Goods accumulate, and the voluntary market is a limited one. There is not pressure enough—education enough—among the masses to meet the present circumstances. The many know but little of our home made goods. We have had factories for years, annual fairs in this city and an occasional one in other places which make up our public effort at the exhibition of these goods. Advertising in our local press has been used but little and read less. Drummers have visited every outside store, more intent upon selling than introducing; and unenlightened upon the political economy of home industry, sleepy keepers of stores with few exceptions have rarely taken more than the pains of inexperienced men in other directions. As a result from this kind of advocacy and push, but little as result. The people are charged with apathy, indifference and even dislike to home-made goods, when the fault, in part at least, was assuredly elsewhere.

Now, had we been so placed that a tax, tariff, or whatever you may call it, could have been levied on importations, even to the extent of prohibition, no doubt home-made flannels, blankets, boots, shoes, hats, soaps and many other articles would have been in the ascendant. Politicians, however, have not settled this yet. Subsidy, bounty, protection, are as fiercely denounced by one as upheld by another, and legislation prohibits between states any trade discrimination. But if it is a good thing for diplomacy, for nations to seek—nay, to almost compete—a market for their surplus products; if international exhibitions at fabulous cost are instituted for this end; if states have fairs, and countries or cities deem exhibitions advantageous; if we claim this as an unanswerable argument in favor of our resources when we send an exhibition car to the manufacturing East, why not try to educate our own people—the people of Utah Territory? Why not expand the exhibition principle and send out representation, individually or jointly, into every settlement? A perambulating exhibition, taking a room or more, staying a day or two, inviting the people to see and handle what is being produced in so important a direction? They would come by the hundreds and by the thousands, if an intelligent agent had charge thereof, and home manufacture would become the topic of the fireside; and when the pride of the people was stimulated in this way, the present factories, at all events, would not have to go a thousand miles from home for patronage which is at their very doors. Failing here, a house to house canvass with a few samples—shoes, soaps, woolen goods and every other portable thing—could be shown by a certain type of patient, persevering, continuous men, until all Utah would be aflame, and the sympathies of the masses would be so enlisted that storekeepers would be obliged to handle these harbingers of industrial salvation, or the people would combine and distribute for themselves.

Agents for eastern mills and Massachusetts shoemakers traverse everlastingly the length and breadth of our Territory, but some of our local manufacturers are as hopeful as our nurserymen used to be (as before remarked). They lived—no, existed—on hope, until eastern men came in here and captured, then held, that trade to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars ever since. These were all glib of tongue. They carried samples, or colored and exaggerated pictures. They went to the people, entered their homes, talked trade, enlisted many of the dealers—shall we say by sophistry?—yes, and can prove it, too; and home men are still “hoping against hope,” unable to compete, apparently, with the bustling representatives of imported goods.

Let the New Year inaugurate a more aggressive policy. We need it. Our youth need it. Progress, supremacy, labor, finance and investment demand greater energy and a more active policy. When this comes, then we may boast more of our enterprise, and count with greater certainty upon the goodwill of our posterity.

Written for this Paper

WAYNE COUNTY'S ATTRACTIONS.

FREMONT, Wayne county, Utah, Dec. 13, 1893.—Presuming that some of your readers would like to know more of Wayne Stake, which embraces the county of that name, I write you to say that it lies outside the Great Basin, on the eastern slope, and its waters find their way in the Fremont river into the Colorado, and it has the most varied climate, perhaps, of any county in the Territory.

Fremont, or Rabbit valley, in the west and upper end of the county, has four settlements, viz., Fremont, Loa, East Loa and Thurber, with about 10,000 acres of tillable land, about one-half of which is under cultivation, and perhaps 1000 acres subject to homestead and desert entries.

Fish Lake is one of the sources of our water supply. It is about three-fourths of a mile wide and seven miles long, and is used as a reservoir; but the supply is only sufficient to raise it about three feet. However, that amount of water is a nice thing to have on hand on a hot, dry time in June every year.

A right of way and grounds have been purchased for a reservoir two miles below the lake, where, it is estimated, one mile-square can be covered twenty feet deep of water, with a dam 400 feet long, 80 feet wide and 80 feet high. The dam is already begun, and is being built of log cribs filled with rock on both sides and dirt in between them, with a wooden pipe or flume underneath to draw the water through.

Should these two reservoirs be insufficient to store up all the water that will be needed when all the land is brought under cultivation there are two more good sites with ample supply for winter storage.

Although this valley is over 7,000 feet above sea level, yet we raise oats, wheat, barley, lucern hay (two crops a year), the finest potatoes entirely, small fruit, and on the young orchards, apples, cherries and plums have been ripened.

East of and adjacent to the valley are Teasdale, Grant and Grover, three small farming districts, with perhaps 6,000 acres of tillable land, with about 2,000 acres under cultivation and 2,000 acres subject to homestead and desert entries. But the water supply is insufficient, but with two or three reservoir sites. Here the climate is milder and the growing seasons two to four weeks earlier than up in the valley.

As we go east we get into a very rough country (if it is lawful to call it a country) dropping off rapidly; the river passes through an unexplored box canyon two or three miles when it opens out a little, and at "The Junction" is a very fine peach orchard and several acres of fine grapes.

Here is found the most varied climate, perhaps, in the world. On the south side of the canyon are ice and snow during the entire winter, while on the other side and within eighty rods one may plow any day all winter. In summer the one side is cool, while the other is hot. Gardens and vineyards by the side of walls of solid rock 400 feet high! For ten miles down that box canyon are little pieces of land, rich as Eden, but sad and silent, save the murmur of the passing stream and sighing breezes, awaiting the hand of industry to turn them into fruitful gardens, orchards and vineyards.

In the eastern and lower part of the county are:

Pleasant Creek with 2,000 acres of land, ranging from the high table lands covered with lofty pines and cedars, down the creek through gorges of red and white sandstone for fifteen miles; water insufficient but having two good reservoir sites; about 500 acres cultivated.

Cainesville, on the river, with about 1700 acres, mostly claimed; plenty of water and coal.

Blue Valley, with about 2500 acres, and Hanksville, about the same—each of which have under cultivation about 500 acres, and all of the four last named places want more people, and will be pleased to divide their lands with Saints desiring homes. Twenty acres is a good farm here, if properly cultivated, if not too much. At many of these farm homes, coal for fuel is very inconvenient, being too far away to carry in a scuttle, and too near to pay to take a team for it. Here too, is very rich, sandy loam, and stiff heavy clay; and apples, pears, peaches, grapes, sugar cane, corn, melons, tomatoes, wheat, oats, barley, etc., thrive well, and lucern hay may be cut four or five times a year. There is one reservoir site at Hanksville.

These settlements find a market for their produce in the stock men of Boulder Valley and the Henry Mountains, and the gold miners thereabout; there being one ten stamp mill in operation, with gold discovered in many places, both in quartz and in placer diggings.

Cultivated land with title and water right in the county ranges from $8 to $20 according to quality and location.

Prices current.—Roller mill flour per 100 pounds, $1.75; oats per 100 pounds 75c; wheat per bushel, 50c; Beans, 5 to 6 cents per pound; potatoes, 80 to 40 cents per bushel; beer, dressed, 5 and 6 cents per pound; pork, dressed, 9 to 12½ cents per pound; molasses, 50 cents per gallon; lumber, at saw mill, $10 to 18; shingles per bundle, $2; excellent fire wood delivered at your door per cord, $1.25; fence poles, 10 cents each; cedar posts, 10 to 12½ cents each; average cows, $15.

These are trade prices, as there is very little money in circulation.

Wanted—Good farmers and gardeners, carpenters and blacksmiths, masons and plasterers, capital and experience to start up and operate two creameries, and good people generally to consume the flour of one roller and two burr mills, and the lumber of one steam and two water saw mills; to burn and use lime and brick, and work our sulphur deposit, and some of our vast quantities of gypsum and aluminum, and assist in building reservoirs, canals, etc. Yours respectfully,
F. A. YOUNG.

Written for this Paper.

BEAVER'S "CAUSE CELEBRE."

BEAVER, Dec. 18, 1893.

In May last, Sam J. Kenyon, of your city, well known as a banker, real estate dealer and Republican politician, made a trip down this way with mines and the "main chance" generally in his mind's eye. Discovering that there was money in buying jurors' and witnesses' certificates and holding them till the Legislature made an appropriation for taking them up, he at once laid plans for getting them in on a large scale. To that end he secured the services of Henry Emerson, a well known and prominent citizen, having previously been county clerk and still later mayor of the city, having been recommended and endorsed by Deputy Marshal James McGarry. Kenyon at once consigned to Emerson $1500, which was placed in McGarry's safe and drawn by Emerson as required. In September Kenyon sent $1000 more, which Emerson received and placed in the cellar of his saloon, throwing a quilt over it. This was Saturday afternoon and the money remained there undisturbed till the following midnight or perhaps later, when it mysteriously disappeared. Emerson at once claimed to the one who was with him in the cellar when the loss was discovered (Deputy Sheriff Hutchins) that he had been robbed, and together, they proceeded to McGarry's office where information of the loss was given. The marshal and his aids were on duty, although it was then about 2 a.m., guarding some prisoners who were to be taken to Salt Lake that day. They all scouted the story, McGarry telling Emerson it was "like looking through a ladder;" subsequently, feeling as he said that he was morally responsible for the money, the marshal became greatly excited and presenting a loaded gun at Emerson demanded that he return the money or "he would blow his brains out." Then and at all subsequent times Emerson denied taking or having any knowledge whatever of the levanted treasure. He was promptly arrested and on examination before Justice Farnsworth was held in $2000 bonds to await the action of the grand jury. This body indicted Emerson early in the present term and his trial was immediately set for Tuesday last.

At that time the court room was thronged and remained so during the whole of the proceedings. The array of attorneys was something unusual, there being four for the prosecution and three for the defense; all of these, however, but Thurman in the former place and Kenner in the latter, acting only in an advisory capacity. It was one of the hardest fought legal battles that ever occurred in this district, the advantage being with both sides in turn but with neither long. Mr. Thurman showed himself to be by great odds the strongest prosecutor we have ever had here; he never lost a point and kept the defense on the alert from start to finish.

The theory of the defense was that Emerson was in the habit of keeping his own money in the cellar and had never lost a y there before; that he was careless and indifferent in money matters and not so solicitous or watchful regarding its safety as other people usually are; that there are apertures in the foundation for letting in air to the cellar and that when there is a light whatever is transpiring there can easily be seen from outside; that some one of the numerous hangers-on about the place had seen Emerson looking at the money and had raised a window of the building (having previously removed the nails which held it down without being observed) crawled in at it and then going into the cellar had taken the money and fled through the door, the bolt of which was drawn; that it was absurd to claim that Emerson would select such a time to take the money when it was where he could take it at any time without being seen and that defendant's general reputation in the community was good. The kill and persistence with which the prosecution opposed this array of defensive matter elicited the warmest ecoucuments at times, and both sides occasionally received a slight demonstration from the audience which Judge Barter promptly suppressed in its incipency.

Thus matters went on, the court meantime convening half an hour earlier than usual, taking but an hour for recess and remaining into the night, till 9:30 Wednesday evening, when the final argument on behalf of the People was concluded. The judge's charge was quite lengthy and as usual decidedly fair to both sides. The jury retired and shortly after it returned into court. Not one other person than those who were present could have got in, even the bar and clerk's office being crowded. The clerk received the verdict and before he started to read it a pin dropping could have been heard in any part of the room. The words "not guilty" were scarcely out of his mouth when the audience broke loose in defiance of restraint; Emerson was surrounded and all but smothered with congratulations, while his staunch friend, Joe Huntington, who stood by him throughout, threw his arms around the extricated man's neck and kissed him. A more dramatic spectacle is rarely witnessed in a court room.

Thus ended the sensation of the term and the season. One of the humorous features occurred on the second morning while the reading of the previous day's minutes was going on. Judge Judd leaned over to the defendant's leading attorney and said in a whisper—"If you'll drop this defense and enter a plea of guilty I will only give you half the punishment;" to which proposition the reply was given—"I won't be outdone in generosity, I'll throw off the other half." This is not strictly new but it never fit any better than on this occasion.

The docket is an unusually heavy one and will not be cleared off this term. Most of the cases will go over till May.

The spice of life has been the prevailing characteristic of the criminal docket. These cases tried are classified as follows: Murder, (habeas corpus) arson, embezzlement, grand larceny (5), petit larceny, burglary (2), unlawful cohabitation (2), unlawful branding and adultery. LEX.

Written for this Paper.

ANOTHER "POTATO PATRIOT."

HEBER CITY, Wasatch county, Dec. 18, 1893.—As a potato patriot, I, in common with my friend A. Bird, of Kanosh, am very much surprised and disappointed with the Agricultural Bureau's report of Utah's "spuds." I can't think the crop is as bad as reported, or else in some parts of the Territory there is nearly a failure. Heber City is 5440 feet in altitude, and as liable to suffer by frost as any part of the Territory. But notwithstanding the very short season, we had an immense crop of the mealies in Wasatch county. Hundreds, yes, I may say thousands, of bushels have been hauled to Park City on wagons, some parties pulling their loads up those steep grades to the mines—or how much? Why! 25c. per bushel.

Yes, and glad of the chance to sell at that price; cash, you know, to pay taxes! Silver dollars are few and far between this fall. But "murphies" are plentiful; hence this exchange.

Having had the occasion to collect the acreage and product of potatoes for Wasatch county, and to be on the safe side of the fence, I reported a full average crop and somewhat better than last season. I give below figures of the crop of the whole county: Acreage, 200; product, 27,025 bushels—an average of 135 bushels to the acre, about four bushels to every man, woman and child. Charleston precinct, with a population of about 850 souls, raised some 7,000 bushels, twenty bushels per head.

Our friend, A. Bird, of Kanosh, mentions size of the "spuds." I think we can report favorably also. My neighbor Fred Gilles brought to my house at digging time six specimens and they turned the scale at eighteen pounds and we had bushels of 'em—well, nearly as big in proportion. This variety is called the People's or Poor Man's potato—seed from Wm. Henry Maul, Philadelphia. They are a beautiful white potato, oblong in shape. Mealies is the right name for them, sure. The Freeman are all the talk in the states now. I have got a few bushels for a start next season; a white potato also.

A few words on our grain crop, which is good this year also, only in Midway precinct the wheat is shrunk by frost. Their fields lie close to the foothills of the Wasatch range, where snow falls very deep, and this spring it was very cold and stormy and they were late getting their crop in, and the frost came before cutting time. The total yield of the whole county was as follows:

1893—Oats, 75,336; wheat, 50,816; barley, 1,000 bushels.

1892—Oats, 72,677; wheat 50,558; barley, 796 bushels.

This year's crop is the largest ever grown in the county, notwithstanding the poor yield of Midway precinct, where very little of the wheat will make bread fit to eat; out of 10,000 bushels about 2,000 will do to grind up into flour.

We have a population of some 7,000 souls in the county, which will take about 85,000 bushels for the bread alone. Therefore it will take the strictest economy to make it last out until another harvest, though we have plenty of the mealie "spuds" to fall back on to help out the deficiency in the wheat crop. A great many of the "spuds" have been hauled to Park City I am aware, but I am satisfied there are plenty left.

As regards our taxes we have as few as any other county in the Territory delinquent; only some twenty persons I think had to be advertised as delinquents.

A few more lines on general topics and then I'll close. We have had a pleasant and mild fall, considerable wet weather though. I was comparing notes the other day; just one week ago we had a beautiful day, fifty degrees in the shade, and just one year ago at that date the thermometer indicated ten below zero on the morning following. That cold snap continued about two weeks—the coldest snap of all winter. Quite a contrast in dates. On the 13th inst it commenced raining, lasting two days, ending with six inches of snow on the 15th, and it has been bleak and cold since. Sunday morning the thermometer registered two below zero; pleasant weather in day time.

La grippe and influenza have visited every family most; but I think this sharp snap will clear the atmosphere, so that the health of the people will improve from this on.

Death has taken from our midst lately three old and estimable ladies, and today, the 18th, there has been carried to the city of the dead a bright and promising young lady, taken off in the prime of life—the wife of Charles Ohlweiler.

Business is brightening up a little, and people are feeling more cheerful. Park City trade is looming up also. More anon. JOHN CROOK.

LIGHT SHED ON "GREATNESS."

When the light of truth shines forth in this our day, as in olden time, exposing the false gods and idols of the age, together with the craftiness of men the cry is heard from our modern Ephesians on all sides—like unto their ancient fathers—"Great is our Diana," "Oh, how great is our achievements."

"Let not thine own lips, but another's, praise thee," says the wise man in his proverb: Hence not as one of them, but in their behalf, I have a word of "praise" to offer.

Looking over my tax receipts, city taxes only, on my one city lot in the suburbs, containing nothing but the rude dwelling sheltering my family, I find that from 1868 to 1889, inclusive, the figures foot up three hundred and eighty-two dollars and ninety cents ($382.90); and that for the four succeeding years, the sum is four hundred and eleven dollars thirty-six cents $411.36). Now without raising the question as to whether I have been imposed upon or favored by the assessor, but judging others by the figures herein set forth, I find that the taxes of the last four years more than cover the twenty-two years preceding.

Bear in mind that this is the regular annual tax, and that prior to 1890, nearly all improvements were made from it. Add now to that of the last four years, the special tax on all abutting property, covering more or less all visible improvements—except the Diana of the Eighth Ward square—such as extension of watermain, sewers, sidewalks, pavements, etc., and these boasted "achievements" begin to heave in sight.

Next pile on top the bonded indebtedness under which we groan, and still they loom up higher. Now on top of all, as the crowning capstone, put a bankrupt city, and you have this monument of "greatness" in full view!

Another word and I am done for the present: Eight hundred and eighty-eight thousand is, I believe, the amount collected or to be collected from this city and county the present year. Think of this vast sum, collected annually, and then sown to the winds on a floating element, scarce one dollar of it returning, or to be had for labor by those who were the producers of it! Then ask the question: Is it any wonder that there is no money to be had by the people, wherewith to meet the present year's taxation?

Let the coming Legislature make a note of it. Yours in defense of TRUTH.

SALT LAKE CITY, Dec. 18, 1893.

Telluride, Colorado, miners, twenty or thirty in number, who went to the Johannesburg gold mines in South Africa last season, write very glowing reports to their friends in Telluride. White labor is scarce and commands good prices and the gold output is large. The statement does not harmonize at all with the reports of others who have been out there and returned.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Nevada is on the eve of a boom, says the Denver News.

Fremont county, Wyoming, claims to have 75,000 sheep on its ranges.

Butte city, (Mont.) street railway has ceased operations. It did not pay expenses.

Garfield county, Colorado, is to have a large poultry farm established near Glenwood.

In Archuleta county, Colorado, the boring for oil at Navajo is progressing satisfactorily.

At Cheyenne, Wyo., last week hunters were killing antelope within sight of the state capitol building.

In New Mexico farmers can raise Egyptian corn without irrigation. Cattle can be fattened upon it.

Chaves county, New Mexico, produces fine sweet potatoes. One man sold his crop at five cents a pound.

Thirty thousand sheep still remain to be shipped to market from Wyoming over the Elkhorn Valley road.

In Baca county, in the southeastern corner of Colorado, farmers are drilling in grain all through the winter.

Springer, N. M., will hereafter celebrate "Potato day," and Thanksgiving will furnish the date for the celebration.

In the San Luis valley, Colo., the mercury in the thermometers runs up to 100 degrees in the sun almost daily.

Trinidad, Colo., announces the arrival there of 1,100 live rabbits from Texas on the way to the Denver market.

Helena, Mont., taxes this year were $250,000. Of this amount $220,000 has been collected, leaving only $30,000 delinquent.

Mesa county, Colorado, is agitating the building of a wagon road to connect the Plateau valley with Grand Junction.

The Boulder mineral springs will pass into the hands of Denver parties, who propose to build a hotel at the springs.

Navajo Indians are selling their surplus sheep at the Chaco trading post at $1.20 a head for the Durango market.

Nevada county, Nevada, is having an open winter without snow. There is plenty of work and miners are doing well, says an exchange.

Hop-growing at Lovelock, Nev., has been very successful, and hop-planting will be extensively carried on there hereafter.

Fat sheep for the Durango, Colo., market were being sold last week in northwestern New Mexico for $1.25 and $1.50 per head.

At Grand Junction, Colo., the new gas well developments have been suspended until new casing arrives for piping the gas.

The relic hunters who went from Farmington, N. M., to the cave dwellers' ruins at Chaco, failed to obtain what they went after.

San Luis valley, Colo., farmers assert they can afford to raise pork and sell cured hams at 12 cents a pound. Now is the time to start in.

Larimer county, Colorado, sheep men promptly dip all sheep in disinfectants as soon as they arrive within the county from New Mexico or elsewhere.

Governor Crounse of Nebraska has promised to have relief sent to the starving colonists in Box Butte county, on the Wyoming line.

Lake City, Colo., papers advise Hinsdale county miners to stay at home and develop their own mines, instead of running here and there after licks and booms.

Near Roswell, N. M., are many natural reservoir sites, and the people propose to convert them to profitable use by storing the surplus snow water from the mountains.

At Crystal, Gunnison county, Colo., snow is four feet deep and supplies scarce. Great efforts are being made to get in winter stores before the blockade is complete.

At Lamar and La Junta, Colo., the Santa Fe Railroad company will sink artesian wells this winter. The wells will be sunk 2,000 feet if necessary to get a flow of water at the surface.

Flat pea seed has been distributed in New Mexico by Delegate Joseph. It is a new forage plant which withstands the drouth and compares favorably with alfalfa.

In Butte, Mont., the county commissioners have purchased 400 cords of wood and a lot of axes and wood saws. The unemployed are now furnished with work board and lodging.

W. A. Richards, of Cheyenne, Wyo., better known as "Fatty," has departed. He is $800 short with insurance companies for which he was agent, and owes considerable money around town.

Wyoming settlers are protesting vigorously against the nomadic sheep men who destroy the ranges and injure settlers, make no homes and pay no taxes.

Kit Carson county, Colo., invites the starving people of the East to come till its rich and unoccupied soil. Thousands of acres of rich land is still unclaimed in that county.

Nebraska Independents have put a boycott on the Lindell hotel at Lincoln because of its recent co-operation with the Republicans in the McKeighan case.

Richardson county, Neb., farmers will plant large crops of sorghum next year for stock feeding. They can raise two crops from the same ground in one season.

The North Platte, Neb., Tribune, reports an increase of the mortgaged indebtedness of that county during the month of November of $14,153.38. The population of the county is said to be about 10,000.

The "White Wings' Prayer" is having an immense run east, west, north and south, and the Gunnison, Colo., Tribune claims it is entitled to a royalty on the 200,000 extra papers sold containing the prayer.

U. S. Grant Jr. has purchased the Hubbell house at San Diego, Cal., and it will probably be the permanent home of the Grant family. The house cost $92,000 to build in boom times, but Mr. Grant paid much less than that for it.

A Mosca, Colo., farmer in the San Luis valley is hauling his wheat over the Sangre de Cristo mountains into Huerfano county and realizing $1.10 per bushel. He hauls wood on the return trip and so makes his expenses.

The body of the old man found dead on the river bank above Washington, Yolo county, Cal., last Saturday, has been disinterred and identified by the deceased's two sons as that of John Smith, of San Pablo, Contra county.

On the Cache la Poudre, Colo., a curiosity has been caught in the form of an ermine. It is 20 inches long and 4 inches high. It made short work of a prairie dog placed in a box to keep it company.

Because Otero county, Colo., is to have a creamery the farmers of Prowers county want the same source of ready cash. There is room enough for a dozen prosperous creameries in the Arkansas valley.

Orders have been made for special annexation elections in the towns of Barnum and Colfax, Colo. Leave was granted to file supplemental petitions in the annexation of North Denver and Harman.

Near Sterling, Logan County, Colo., an irrigating ditch five miles long is being constructed from the Platte river to the Powell & Dillon ranch, near Iliff. It is to be finished by March 15.

Akron, Colo., fruit growers report the prospect for apples next season as very good. Apples, plums and pears grown on the former buffalo range will be a curiosity of the nineteenth century.

At Alamosa, Colo., the grain elevators are filled to the roofs. The flour mill there has 200,000 bushels on hand and can run night and day all winter. From two to four cars of wheat are shipped from Alamosa daily.

On Wednesday evening a lamp exploded at the Devore residence at Aspen, Colo., and frightfully burned Mrs. Devore and infant, a four-year-old child. Both are reported to be in a dying condition.

At Monte Vista, Colo., W. W. Wiley raised this year from twenty-seven acres sixteen car loads of potatoes. These brought him an average of 75 cents per hundred, a cash revenue of $2,400 or $90 per acre. He ships his crop to Texas.

The Eddy, N. M., Argus says: Arizona has 1000 miles of irrigating canals. The Pecos valley alone has more than that. Arizona has 1,000,000 acres under cultivation. So will the Pecos valley when the system is as old as the Arizona canals.

The Raton, N. M., Range records the fact that Colfax county has $6,000,000 worth of property, only $12,000 outstanding county warrants and $7,000 rounded indebtedness, and yet county warrants only bring 65 cents on the dollar.

Larimer county, Colorado, has over fifty fancy chicken breeders, and it can show the finest lot of blooded poultry in the West, and yet the people have to import eggs and poultry for home consumption. Thus writes an exchange.

The two-year old son of C. H. Keys of Leadville, Colo., was playing under a sleigh in front of his father's house and in some manner knocked down the board that held the shaft in place. The board caught the little fellow's neck and squeezed him to death.

Charles Honwig, a miner in Big Evans gulch at Leadville, Colo., had a narrow escape from death in his cabin on Wednesday night. He was thawing out some giant, when the stuff exploded, throwing him violently to the ground, badly cutting his head. He will recover.

Gray wolves are reported as becoming numerous and bold in the vicinity of Byers, Colo. Within the last week one stockman has lost two head of cattle through their depredations. To show what fierce animals these wolves are, one of these cattle was a large two-year-old steer.

There is a band of about twenty deer on Wood river, just above town, trying to make their way to the valley, says the Ketchum (Idaho) Keynote. The law regarding the killing of deer is respected here by true sportsmen and it would be expensive sport to any one caught slaughtering them.

Mrs. Le Grand, who went to Salt Lake City several days ago to have an operation performed for cancer, arrived home yesterday, says the Halley (Idaho) News Miner. She consulted three physicians, and the verdict was unanimous that her case was hopeless, and no operation was performed.

J. E. Hennessey, one of the leading educators in Northern California and principal of the Oroville High School, was found dead in bed on Wednesday. A bottle containing morphine was found in his pocket. He left a note to the landlord, indicating that his death was premeditated. He was insured for $14,000.

An instance of the danger which besets pedestrians at San Francisco at night is the sandbagging of Robert McArthur, the leader of the Olympic Club of that city, who is still under the doctor's care. About 12:30 o'clock last Saturday morning he was given a terrible blow on the head, and the wonder is he is now a live man.

The Kansas City Star asserts that three years ago a Lawrence reporter was getting nine little dollars every week and going without a shave between Tuesday and Saturday. Now he owns a daily paper at Cripple Creek, Colo., has an interest in a gold mine and draws a salary of $2,500 a year as a county officer. That's why the spirit of mortal should be proud.

The house of A. L. Jackman, of Levan, was broken into and burglarized about 3 o'clock a.m. December 2nd, says the Manti Sentinel. The burglar carried away two barrels of wine and a box of empty flasks. He proved to be George Deming, formerly of Colorado, and the stolen property was found in his possession. He has been held to the grand jury in bonds of $500.

Arthur Chadwick, a San Francisco messenger boy 16 years old, fell from the fifth floor to the bottom of the elevator shaft in the telephone building on Bush street, Monday, and was killed. The elevator was a little above the fifth floor when he jumped through the door, missed his footing and tumbled under the car. He was employed by the telephone company in the building.

On Wednesday night three men, armed with revolvers and knives, entered the cabin of a man named "Frenchy," a machinist in Baxter's foundry, adjoining Boise City, Idaho, held him up and robbed him of $100 in money, a gold watch and chain, a Winchester rifle and a shotgun and marched him up the hill, threatening to kill him. They then went off down the river.

Frank Atherton, the man who was recently held up in his bedroom at Colorado Springs, has positively identified two of his assailants and has suspects of two others. The four safe blowers and hold-ups, who worked Pueblo Saturday night and were arrested at Salido, were seen by him in the county jail Tuesday. He says he is sure of two, and Marshal Dana saw all of them in Colorado City the night before the hold-up.

Dr. Parsons, assisted by Dr. Hamilton, performed an operation on the head of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Beauvois' 17-month-old child, says the Laramie (Wyoming) Boomerang. The operation was for hydrocephalus. The child's head was 21½ inches from ear to ear and 21 inches around the head. Fourteen ounces of water were taken from the head. The little one is now doing as well as could be expected. It has been growing gradually worse for a year past and was in a critical condition when the operation was performed.

A farmer living near Perth, Fulton County, says the Montgomery (Cal.) Reporter, helped steal his own hog the other night. He was awakened from his sleep in the middle of the night and asked by two men to assist them in loading a hog which had tumbled out of the crate in their wagon. He willingly gave a helping hand and then returned to quiet slumbers. The next morning he went to feed his porker, but there was no porker to feed. It then dawned upon him that he had helped load his own hog in the wagon the night before.

Christian P. Neilson met with a painful accident the other day while hauling posts from the Cedar hills. The Mount Pleasant Pyramid says he was dragging the posts behind a wagon, and was walking on the lower side. The ends of the post butting a large boulder, weighing a ton or more, and started it rolling down the hill. It caught Mr. Neilson, and knocking him down, passed over his left arm, breaking it just below the elbow, and bruising and mutilating the flesh badly. Dr. Woodring attended to the injuries and the patient is resting comfortably.

Twelve-year-old Henry Duck is locked up in San Francisco on a charge of murder. Trying to load a pistol which he was going to sell it went off and the ball passed through the heart of his little six-year-old brother, Jesse, killing the child instantly. The sad accident happened at the Duck home. All accounts agree with the story of Henry, which is to the effect that he was fitting cartridges to a Colt's revolver. The shells were too large, and, as Henry endeavored to force one into the magazine, little Jesse stretched across to reach another cartridge. At that moment the trigger slipped and the hammer striking home sent the ball through Jesse's heart.

Jake Winter, a convict at the Colorado state penitentiary, is very sorry he stole a bicycle in October, 1892, and writes the board of pardons to that effect. He has made every reparation in his power, he says, having sold his watch and chain to reimburse the man he sold the wheel to, he has served over half of his two year term and would like to get out. If he should he solemnly promises to go back to his parents' Kansas home and "live an honest and industrious life the remainder of his days." He adds that since arriving at Canon he has been troubled with fits and paralytic strokes and "excoriating pains" in his head, and fears he may die. Secretary Gabriel has written for more particulars.

Considerable interest is being taken in the case of Mrs. Annie L. Cameron, on trial in the superior court at San Francisco, on a charge of attempting to murder M. J. Luyman, a well known real estate dealer in Oakland. The gentleman had a narrow escape when he was attacked, and he owes his life to the fact that the cartridge in the pistol snapped and did not explode. Mrs. Cameron is a well known society woman in East Oakland. She is the widow of Duncan Cameron, who died recently, leaving a very large estate, nearly all of which went to Mrs. Cameron. When she came into the possession of the fortune that was left her she made a number of investments that proved to be disastrous. Then she had some trouble with her children, and all these things tended to change her disposition and make her a different woman. Now she has to answer a charge of felony.

Rev. J. H. W. Harris is a minister who has been struggling against fate, says the San Francisco Chronicle. For years he has been engaged in various kinds of business, but he could never seem to strike it rich. Then he went into the watch club business, but this did not suit his taste, and after a brief career as a drummer he returned to gospel work. At Golden Gate, after a spirited contest with some opposing ministers, he succeeded in building a little church by the roadside. Here he tried to make a success at preaching. At last his congregation commenced to drop off one by one and join the opposing church until it was a hard matter for the minister to get along. His salary days were few and far between and so the church had to close. The minister had to eat—and he had to go out and hustle at another business. A short time ago he turned up in Oakland and conducted a series of meetings at the corner of Seventh and Market streets. He made a plea for the laborer and did a great deal of work among the poor. Then he became manager of a hard times department and distributed articles among the needy. At last he was caught by hard times himself, and has now filed his schedule in insolvency in the Superior court. Harris says his liabilities will amount to about $5,000 and he has no assets.

THE SCANDINAVIAN FATHERLAND.

Prepared from Special Cablegrams.

SWEDEN.

A railroad will be built between Vansbro and Engelsberg.

Prince Eugen is busy with two new and large paintings.

Rev. Carl Gustaf Hammar died at Holmo at the age of 88 years.

A railroad will be built between Fristad and Ulricehamn.

Queen Sophia is reported to be very sick, suffering from bronchitis.

Ex-sheriff A. L. Behm, of Sunne, Jemtland, died at Vals at the age of 83 years.

P. Elison, of Vanstad, died at the advanced age of 98 years.

G. Tholen, one of the most prominent citizens of Gefle, died at the age of 75 years.

M. S. Iversen, a prominent citizen of Gothenburg committed suicide by hanging himself.

The government will ask the next Riksdag for new and heavy appropriations for the naval defense.

G. W. Hallstrom the inspector of the Marieberg steam saw mill, committed suicide by drowning himself.

Many thousands of old coins were discovered by people digging in the cemetery at Ofverkalix.

Mrs. M. S. Sjogren, of Stockholm, celebrated her 95th birthday, still in the best of health.

One thousand men are working on the Uddevalla-Selanger railroad line, which will soon be opened to the public.

"Rev." Erik Boden, of Ostersund, has been discharged from the state church on account of drunkenness.

Up to the first of October, 35,035 people had emigrated to America from Sweden during the present year.

All the telegram messengers in the city of Gothenburg conduct now their business by means of bicycles.

While temporarily insane, Mrs. H. M. Olsson, of Lemne near Linkoping, drowned her two little children in a well.

J. Wedin, a farmer of Sjagom, the parish of Hætra, died the other day. Only a few hours after his death his wife expired also.

P. Jansson, of Samskartorp, Nerike, and his daughter-in-law were drowned near Fellingsbro. J. was 55 years old, and leaves eleven children.

The American box system has been introduced at the post office Sundsvall, and will probably soon be adopted by all the post offices in Sweden.

Diphtheria is raging epidemically in many parishes of northern Halland, and a great number of deaths from the disease has been recorded.

Carl Hellgren, a farmer of Myrænde in Allingbo, discovered, while digging the other day, nearly 2,000 old coins, some of which were between 800 and 900 years old.

The relief-medallion of Jennie Lind, the famous Swedish songstress which is being placed in "the poets' corner" in Westminster Abbey in London will soon be unveiled.

The wholesale merchant Nordling of Sundsvall, has sold his large forests in Medelpad, Jemtland and Herjedalen to the Tunadal Stock company. The price paid was 800,000 crowns.

The Swedish Sloyd system is being introduced in the public schools of Naples, Italy, by Miss Victoria Appeltoft. Miss Appeltoft will stay in Naples for at least one year.

Dr. Gustaf de Laval, whose steam turbine was one of the wonders of the Chicago exposition, has made a new invention, the purpose of which is to reduce ores by means of electricity.

Dining cars will soon be introduced on some of the Swedish railroad lines. At present the passengers take their meals at different stations where the trains stop from 15 to 20 minutes.

Gothenburg will soon be made a free harbor. As known, Copenhagen was recently opened as one, and the Danish competition has already made the good people of "Sweden's Liverpool" a little anxious.

Swedish files are generally more carefully made than the foreign article and are consequently paid for by a somewhat higher price. They are usually cut by hand. In Sweden there are at present ten file factories.

The two oldest inhabitants in the parish of Bjursås, Dalecarlia, were buried in the same grave the other day. They were Mrs. Wahlborg Jansdotter, who was born in 1795, and Mrs. Anna Jansdotter, who was born in 1796.

About 200 emigrants returned two weeks ago, on account of the hard times in America. The last few days nearly two hundred more have returned. The people seem all to have their homes in the northern provinces of Sweden.

The smallest printing press in the world is probably one in Lund, which was recently constructed and manufactured by a compositor named J. Gustafson. The press is not longer than it will find room in a person's vest pocket.

It is said here that King Oscar has decided to appoint John R. Lindgren, the Swedish banker of Chicago, Swedish-Norwegian consul in that city. The public announcement of the appointment will probably be made some of the first days of next year.

Jakob Andersson, a peasant of the parish of Munsala in Oesterbotten was murdered by his wife and son. Both have been arrested. The motive for the crime was a horrid one, the mother having for a long time been intimate with her son.

Court officials, who use to be very well informed in regard to the doings of royalty, have given out that King Oscar is not at all pleased with the Crown Prince's hostile attitude as to a friendly solution of the Norwegian consular question. The Crown Prince is said to have expressed some opinions of his own, which prove that he is far from the diplomat his father is.

There are several establishments in Sweden, where women receive instructions in dairy work. The government has given a grant to two Dairy Schools with a course of instruction of one year, and to 18 so-called Dairy Stations where the course lasts two years. Besides these there are dairy schools, both private and established by the Agricultural Societies.

A patent is granted in Sweden for a period of fifteen years. On giving in the application for a patent, a sum of 50 crowns ($13.40) is paid, which sum, however, dating from 1894, will be reduced to 20 crowns ($5.36). The number of patents granted during 1891 was 706, and during 1892, 699. All authority concerning patents in Sweden is held by the Royal Patent Office, consisting of a head chief engineer, besides other officials and assistant engineers. It devolves on the patent office to register trade marks.

The manufacture of toys in Sweden has of late years risen to a considerable importance. In 1890 there were four large toy factories. In 1892 the number of factories had increased to seven. Swedish toys, which are usually made of wood and are marked by durability and appropriate forms, have won prizes at many exhibitions and are today exported, especially to Norway and Denmark. The imports have in the same period very considerably diminished and decreased from $134,000 in 1883 to $43,000 in 1892. The principal toy factory in Sweden is Gemla, founded in 1866 and situated near the town of Vexio in the province of Smoland.

NORWAY.

A railroad will be built between Ekerund and Flekkefjord.

Sloyd is now being taught in all the Norwegian public schools.

A board of trade will soon be organized in the city of Christianssand.

Franz Rummel is the name of a Norwegian pianist who is rapidly coming to the front.

Bjornson's "Maria Stuart" is being played at the Christiania theater to crowded houses.

The fishing of herring is very rich, and the supply is larger than the demand calls for.

Carsten Smith, one of the most prominent citizens and merchants of Moss, died at the age of 81 years.

The Norwegian schooner Felix was wrecked off the French city Barleur. The crew was saved.

The Holmen paper mill, which was recently burned down, will soon be rebuilt on a larger scale.

A building and loan association has been organized in Christiania by the members of the Effata Labor Society.

Norwegian marble from the Anker grinding factory is said to very favorably compete with foreign marble.

The defense societies of Norway have now collected 600,000 crowns which will be used for the building of a torpedo cruiser.

Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People" was performed at a Paris theater the other night, and scored a succes pyramidal.

Johan Lauritz Eitzen, ex-postmaster of Tonsberg, died at the age of 80 years.

It is now reported that Bishore Heuch probably will be elected bishop of the Christiania diocese.

Forretningsposten will be the name of a new commercial paper, which will be published in Christiania.

M. Martinsen Strand, one of the most prominent citizens of Hof. Soloer, is dead.

S. C. Hammer the new editor-in-chief of the Slavangeren, will probably make it an organ of the left.

The Roedfos match factory, which was burned down last summer, has now been rebuilt on a larger scale.

A special hospital for patients suffering from consumption has been built in Christiania.

Kathinka Nilsen of Christianssand who was recently proved guilty of arson, has been sent to an insane asylum.

Clara Mathiesen, of Christiania, is only 14 years of age, but has already met with great success as a singer in that city.

Ex-Minister Aimar Sorensen, one of the former members of the Sverdrup cabinet, has separated from Steen and the Radicals.

Jacob Dybwad, the publisher, has donated several hundred books to the Norwegian Seaman's Homes in New castle, Cardiff and Antwerp.

The bark Evvivæ, Captain Bruhn, of Grimstad, was wrecked off Fishguard. The crew was saved with the exception of one man, who was washed overboard.

The proposed commercial treaty between Norway and Switzerland will probably not go through, the Norwegian government having refused to give protection to Swiss drummers.

DENMARK.

Three fishermen were drowned off Helsingor.

Several houses were burned to the ground in Skive, and the loss is heavy.

H. O. Lieungh a well-known druggist of Lawrvik, died at the age of 65 years.

A new novel by Herman Bang, the eccentric author, will soon be published.

Mrs. M. C. Mortensen, of Silkeborg, died at the age of 96 years.

Small-pox is reported to rage epidemically in northern Jylland.

The Duchess of Chartres and her daughter are visiting in Copenhagen.

The Royal Library of Copenhagen has celebrated its 100th anniversary.

A Cremona violin was sold at a public auction in Copenhagen for $304.

Ex-sheriff Christoffer Kriegbaum, of Resenfelde, died at the age of 94 years.

Nicolai Petersen, a well-known building master of Nakskov, died at the age 70 years.

Ferdinand Schmidt, the director of the Norrebro theater, died in Copenhagen.

At an exhibition of chrysanthemums at Copenhagen 125 varieties were represented.

Station master M. Nansen, of the Lunderskou railroad station, died at the age of 68 years.

Prof. Eugen Warming, a Danish botanist, has been appointed corresponding member of the academy of Munich.

From January 1st 1894, a tariff of 16 cents per pound will be levied on imported bicycles and parts of the same.

The Crown Prince and Crown Princess are paying a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland, in Gmunden.

A bill permitting laymen to preach in the churches at the discretion of the pastor has been discussed by the riksdag.

Christmas Roses, a holiday publication, was printed in 53,000 copies this year, and every copy was sold weeks ago.

Jonas Lie, the famous Norwegian author, left Copenhagen for Paris the other day. He was accompanied by his family.

Their golden wedding was celebrated by Niels Nielsen and his wife, of Nygaard. The old couple is in the best of health.

A direct steamship line between Copenhagen—Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Santos and Pernambuco will be opened next March.

The steamer "Riberhus" left Esbjerg the other day, having aboard 1692 sheep, that had been bought by three Frenchmen. The steamer was bound for Dunkirk.

The telephone connections between Denmark and Sweden—Norway will be opened with a conversation by the kings, Christian and Oscar.

The Society "The Blind of Denmark" has secured about 7,000 signatures to a petition to the government for appropriations for a school for the blind.

The liberal voters' union at Copenhagen celebrated the 10th anniversary of its establishment by an entertainment, which was largely attended.

Every year 45 soldiers are sent to the Danish possessions in the West Indies. This year it took some time to induce that number to pledge themselves to remain six years in the colonies.

The government has issued a warning to the public not to use smokeless powder for common guns, its explosive power being so much greater than that of common powder as to burst many ordinary guns.

The households store's movement will perhaps be continued on a somewhat different plan. A number of substantial farmers have commenced to discuss the practicability or organizing a co-operative union for the sale of farm products in Copenhagen.

The opening of the new free harbor at Copenhagen took place the other day, and was accompanied by imposing ceremonies. The minister of the interior delivered an address, and Prince Waldeмар opened the lock, thus permitting the sea to rush into the vast basin.

A number of Frenchmen, who have made a contract with the French government to furnish certain quantities of provisions for a period of ten years, recently bought 1500 sheep in Denmark, and if the bargain proves satisfactory the same parties may import a cargo of sheep from Denmark every month.

Some eight months ago a rash young man at Copenhagen made a bet, that he could drink a certain quantity of sulphuric acid without any serious result. He swallowed the dose in the presence of some of his friends, and his gullet and stomach were so fearfully burned that the doctors expected him to die in a few hours. But he survived, and is still eking out a life of excruciating pain.

OUR STOCKHOLM LETTER.

STOCKHOLM, Dec. 2.—[Special.—"S. M. le Roi Oscar II." is the heading of an article which appeared in Le Figaro, the famous French paper, a few days ago. The article was written by Hugues Le Roux, the well-known journalist, who several times has visited Scandinavia.

As the reader probably may remember a rumor was started through Europe some time ago to the effect that Sweden had joined the triple alliance. Some French papers commenced soon to write editorially on this subject, making the grave mistake to style the rumor as a fait accompli. At the same time King Oscar was greatly taken to task by the unscrupulous French journalists.

In order to offset these stories and show them to be false the article in Le Figaro was written.

The author begins his essay with referring to the speech of King Oscar made at the banquet in Christiania on the last 4th of November, and quotes especially the words the king used while speaking of his aim to uphold the peace and neutrality and have full liberty to act. "I hope," says the writer, "that the French press may analyze this declaration with all the attention it is deserved of."

At the same time he criticises a letter published in Le Journal des Debats and signed Un Norvegien, in which it is said among other things: "It is in Norway's autonomy a part of the nation sees the counterbalance of the warlike tendencies, which still sometimes take hold on the Swedes and the champion of which the Bernadottes seem to be by cause of their atavism." Mr. Hugues Le Roux ridicules those who, like the writer of the letter, believe or seem to believe, that high-important matters were discussed during the famous elk hunt at Hunneberg. "I do not know," says the French journalist, whether the author of the letter is quite sincere or not, but I am perfectly sure that he is no hunter. Otherwise he could not have believed that the same man can shoot five elks and discuss a treaty of alliance at the same time."

The article in Le Figaro mentions further how those who have talked so much about the German emperor's hunt, have forgotten to tell of the visit the Czar paid to the Swedish crown prince, and holds forth also that the representatives of the English squadron were nowhere received—not even by the Russian emperor at St. Petersburg—more friendly and enthusiastically than by King Oscar at the Drottningholm castle.

Mr. Hugues Le Roux thereupon described his audience with King Oscar, and calls attention to the kindness with which the king treats the most modest of his French guests, and to Oscar's literary and artistic gifts. Continuing, he says: "The Norwegians have, notwithstanding their republican inclinations and depth of ideas, which always captivate us as to art and morals, in regard to politics rather German than French sympathies. I think especially on Bergen and the west coast. The commerce there is completely in the hands of the Germans. The pictures of Kaiser William and the imperial German family are seen in the store windows just as often as the pictures of the Swedish sovereigns.

"I know that some people will tell me that all this is of no importance; that the Norwegians only like the German emperor because he visits their country every year and in his little speeches says: 'The dear Norway.'"

"From my part however, I fully believe that Norway knows that her coasts, with harbors free from ice the year around, must tempt powerful neighbors—all who have interest in coming out from the Baltic. Afraid of becoming completely isolated, Norway accustoms herself to regard Germany as a natural protector. Sweden, monarchical, aristocratic and traditional, has, on the contrary, a predilection for our race and civilization, which feeling she does not conceal."

Mr. Hugues Le Roux concludes his article with the following words:

"Such are the sympathies which any Frenchman can collect in those northern countries. Shall we be foolish enough to offend—by lack or tact—a sovereign who has always treated us nobly?"

A few of the causes which have occasioned emigration may be mentioned: far distant from the trade centres of the world of vast extent and in want of capital, Sweden, notwithstanding her many rich products of nature, has been unable to proceed to that division of labor and mass production which nowadays is called for as speedily as other countries, which have a more favorable situation, are more densely populated, and possess a greater number of capitalists. During the lengthy transition that has ensued Sweden could not but suffer from a competition with those nations, a competition which, at all events for the time being, has proved itself overpowering. Another factor of great importance is the difficulty experienced by the Swedish farm laborer, to which class the bulk of emigrants belong, in attaining the position of land owner, a position which he hopes to acquire in the New World. These are probably the essential reasons why several hundred thousand Swedes during recent decades, have been obliged to seek a sphere of activity abroad, which they could not attain at home, or, which at all events, did not offer them those economical advantages which nowadays a man demands of his work.

Increased developments of industry and social conditions will, perhaps, by degrees render emigration unnecessary, and thus realize the thought usually expressed in Sweden by the words "bring America to Sweden."

ST JOSEPH STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the St. Joseph Stake convened Sunday and Monday, December 10th and 11th, at Pima. The conference was presided over by Counselor William L. Johnson, President Christopher Layton being sick and unable to attend. There was a good representation of the laborers in the Stake.

Sunday, 10 a. m.—The Bishops of the various wards gave satisfactory reports as to the spiritual and temporal condition of the people. All are doing well, and have sufficient grain to last until the coming harvest.

At 1 p. m., after the administering of the Sacrament, Elder John Sims, superintendent of the Sunday schools, reported them to be in a flourishing condition, but felt there was a slackness on the part of the teachers and parents. The remainder of the afternoon was taken up by Elders P. C. Merrill and Benjamin Cluff. They bore a faithful testimony to the truthfulness of the work in which we are engaged, that they were acquainted with the Prophet Joseph, and the travels of the Latter-day Saints up to the present time; also referred to and they exhorted the Saints to prepare their hearts for the coming events that are about to take place; that we must be united before returning to build up the new Jerusalem.

Monday at 10 a. m., after the opening exercises, Elders Henry Boyle, Wm. D. Johnson and Morgan H. Merrill spoke upon the duties of the Latter-day Saints in the Stake, and tried to impress upon the minds of the Saints the necessity of being true to their covenants and prompt in doing that which is required of them, whether in paying tithes, building temples, academies or giving to help the poor, in all of which we should be liberal.

At 1 p. m. the clerk read the statistical report of the Stake and then presented the general and local authorities who were unanimously sustained. The remainder of the time was occupied by Elder George Cluff, who spoke at length upon education as affairs, and tried to instill into the minds of the young the necessity of educating themselves—that there was no excuse for any of them not having an education if they would attend the various institutions that are offered them at the present time, so much different to that of our fathers, etc.

The weather was fair and we all felt that we had had a good time during conference.

F. W. MOODY,
Stake Clerk.

James Davis, a former merchant of San Pedro, Santa Fe county, N. M., but for some time clerk in a store at Cerroillos, shot and killed himself Wednesday morning. He was formerly from St. Joe, Mo., where he has relatives. No cause can be assigned for the deed except that he was in debt and could not see his way clear.

OBITUARY NOTES

HANNAH G. PERKINS.

A private telegram from St. George states that Mrs. Hannah G. Perkins, widow of the late Patriarch Wm. G. Perkins, died there at 11:50 last night. Mrs. Perkins was one of the "old timers" of Salt Lake City, and was well and favorably known here. She moved with her husband to St. George in 1861 when that place was first settled, being among those first called to go there.

Mrs. Perkins was a woman of refinement and education who gave up friends and luxury in England many years ago for the Gospel's sake. She came to Utah in early times and passed through many trials peculiar to those days, but her faith in and integrity to the Gospel principles were unwavering to the day of her death. She was engaged for many years as a worker in the St. George Temple, and only desisted when failing health prevented a continuance of such labors. The deceased was in her eighty-sixth year.

MRS. BARNEY RILEY.

Undertaker Charles Skewes went up to Park City today to bring back with him for interment tomorrow, the body of Mrs. Barney Riley, who died from consumption yesterday. The deceased was thirty-two years of age, and leaves a husband and three children to mourn her death. She was the daughter of Sexton Wright of the Mount Olivet cemetery of this city.

HANNAH T. GROVER.

At Loa, Wayne county, Utah, Dec. 15, 1893, occurred the death of Hannah Tupper Grover. She was born in Parishville, St. Lawrence county, New York, March 23, 1823, and was married to Thomas Grover Dec. 17, 1844, by President Brigham Young. She was the mother of fifteen children, twelve of whom have preceded her to the spirit world.

Sister Grover embraced the Gospel in her youth, and shared in the hardships and privations of the Saints at Nauvoo; and at the time of their expulsion she crossed the river on the ice with a six weeks' old babe at her breast. She came to Utah with her husband in 1847, and settled soon after at Farmington, Davis county, where she resided until 1871, moving from there to Nephi, Juab county, where she made her home for about twenty years, and then came to Loa to join her children. She was always an ardent worker in the Relief Society and Mutual Improvement causes, and for many years presided over the Young Ladies in the Juab Stake of Zion. She has also labored as a worker in the Logan Temple for about eighteen months, from whence she was called by President Woodruff to labor in the Manti Temple as long as she lived. For the last three years failing health has prevented her attending her duties in that respect, about one-third of which time she has been confined to her room. Her faith in the Gospel was unwavering and she died in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

She was buried on the forty-ninth anniversary of her wedding day, leaving behind her two sons and a daughter and numerous grand-children to mourn her loss, besides a host of friends who, while regretting her death, console themselves with the fact that her life has been spent in usefulness, and that their loss is her gain.

THE DEAD.

Peaceful be their Rest.

Downs.—At Nephi, December 16th, 1893 Ruben John Downs, of bronchitis; born December 6th, 1835, at Fisherton, England. He leaves a wife, three sons and five daughters. He lived and died an honorable man, much esteemed by all who knew him, and a Latter-day Saint.

WICKEL.—Richard Wickel, of Echo, Utah, December 18th, 1893. He was born July 9th, 1825, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and emigrated to Utah in 1862, with Wareham's company, was a member of the Church since infancy and was with the exodus from Nauvoo; was an associate of the Prophet Joseph Smith to the time of his assassination, also guarded the remains of the Prophet after his death. He leaves a widow and seven children.

PETERSON.—Died at Fairview, Sanpete, on Dec. 4, 1893, Sarah, the beloved wife of Bishop James C. Peterson, and daughter of Jonathan Brown and Sarah Cousins, born Sept. 1, 1845, England. Came to Utah with her parents in the year 1853. She was the mother of nine children, five of them, three sons and two daughters, living to mourn her departure. She passed away peacefully realizing that her time had come, and giving directions herself how she wished her funeral conducted. She was loved and respected by all who knew her.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

Truth and Liberty.

No. 3.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, JANUARY 6, 1894.

VOL. XLVIII.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Discourse Delivered at the Sixty-fourth Semi-Annual Conference, of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Saturday Morning, October 7th, 1893, by

ELDER FRANCIS M. LYMAN.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I am very pleased, my brethren and sisters, for the privilege of attending this Conference, and, like all the brethren, I feel that I need the assistance of the Spirit of the Lord or my speaking will not be profitable. We are not given to preparing discourses, but rely upon the Lord to give us those things to say that will be suited to the requirements of the Saints. It is a very delicate position for a man to be placed in to stand between the Lord and the people; but having taken upon us the name of Jesus and entered into covenant with Him to perform the duties required of us as bearers of the Priesthood, we are willing to labor and to give the glory to the Lord. The Gospel is the Gospel of Jesus; it is the Gospel of truth and righteousness, and it is not possible for us to properly preach it without the assistance of the Lord. Nor is it possible for us to live it without the presence of the Holy Ghost. No man can be a successful Latter-day Saint without the Spirit of the Lord. No man can hope to enjoy the Spirit of the Lord unless he keep the commandments of the Lord and preserve himself in all purity and righteousness; for the Spirit of the Lord will not dwell in unholy tabernacles. Hence we are first required to have faith in God. If we have faith in Him, we will then repent of our sins. If we repent of our sins, we will be baptized for the remission of them; and then our sins are forgiven us and remembered no more against us, so long as we continue faithful; for all the promises made to us in the Gospel are on condition of our faithfulness. Therefore, every Latter-day Saint is competent to sit in judgment upon himself, and to know whether he is in the favor of the Lord or under condemnation. The Lord has ordered that every man should judge for himself, in his own heart, in regard to all the duties of life. As a man thinketh, so he is. As a man decides in his own heart, so he does. If we judge correctly and under the light and inspiration of the Lord, we will always do right. So far as we today are doing wrong, it is because we have judged wrongfully, whether it is in regard to what would be considered important matters or concerning the minor matters of life; for we never do anything without thinking and deciding, and exercising our will and judgment. The Savior did nothing but what was in accordance with the will of God. Hence He was righteous and without sin. The reason that we are sinners still is because we do not always do the will of the Lord.

It is not sufficient for the Latter-day Saints to have good professions and to have really entered into the Church of Christ; but it is necessary that they should continue faithful every day, in all matters doing the will of God. The Lord has revealed to us His will, so that no one need be at a loss to know what to do and how to do it, for if there is not enough already revealed, or should we not be where we can refer to the revealed will at all times, we are entitled to the presence and inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord to inform us what to do. If we have not that Spirit, we are not in the line of our duty as Latter-day Saints; we are not serving the Lord and keeping His commandments as perfectly as we can do. We can do these things if we will, and the Lord is an ever present help. Our teachers, our bishops, our presidents of quorums and of Stakes, and the Presidency of the Church, may not always be where we can appeal to them; but our Heavenly Father is always near, we can always appeal to Him, and be sure of getting an answer; because by repenting of our sins and being baptized we have entered into a nearness to Him and have made ourselves entitled to the Spirit of the Lord. If we listen to the promptings of the Spirit of the Lord, we will never give a wrong judgment. Bishops will not give wrong judgments, High Councilors will not, Presidents of Stakes will not, if they are prompted and directed by the Spirit of the Lord. All the mistakes that we make are when we act independently and upon our natural judgment, unenlightened by the Spirit of the Lord. These can be avoided by living so that the inspiration of the Lord may be with us every day. If the Spirit of the Lord dwells richly in our hearts as it should do, we never forget our prayers, and we never forget to worship the Lord on the Sabbath day. We always remember that day to keep it holy. If the Latter-day Saints do not remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, it is because the inspiration of the Lord is not in their hearts as it should be. All Latter-day Saints who neglect to meet to worship the Lord and to partake of the sacrament are not imbued with the spirit of faith. All Latter-day Saints who are not obedient to the requirements of the Gospel are not enjoying the Spirit of the Lord to that degree that they ought to enjoy it. Where there is a lack of harmony, where there is contention and quarreling, it is because the Spirit of the Lord has not had proper sway in the hearts of the parties concerned.

This is the Church of Christ, and our Father has established it. There are perhaps two hundred thousand Latter-day Saints in the world who know this just as well as they know light from darkness. There is no question about it in the hearts of Latter-day Saints. They have done the will of the Lord and have obtained knowledge that this is the Lord's work. This being the case, it will be profitable to us as Latter-day Saints to devote our whole time and talents to the accomplishment of the purposes of the Lord and to the establishment of His Church upon the earth. It will be profitable to all Latter-day Saints to make this Church first in their hearts and affections. Why? Because the Lord has told us to seek first the kingdom of God. We have sought the kingdom and have found it, and now that should have our attention before farming, before merchandising, and before literary pursuits and the like. The welfare of the Church of Christ in the earth and the spreading abroad of the Gospel should be our primary object. But is this the case with us? If it is not, then we have need for reformation. If the Church of Christ and the principles of righteousness are not foremost in our hearts, then I say all Israel, so far as they lack have need of reformation. If we have set our hearts upon property, whether it be little or much (for I presume a man could worship a little property as well as a great deal), then we are idolaters. And God has forbidden us to be idolaters. He has commanded us not to bow down to worship anything on earth. Every man should feel that the welfare of the Church of Christ and the advancement of the principles of truth among men for their salvation are ahead of his home, of his merchandising, and of his flocks and herds. Let all these be swept away, but let our hearts be set upon the principles of eternal truth.

Should I allow my property to cause alienation to come in between me and my brethren? Suppose a man should even rob me, and he might be a professed Latter-day Saint. Would he be a brother if he was a robber? I would not care how often he had been baptized, nor what blessings had been placed upon him, if he was a liar, a deceiver and a swindler, he would not be a Latter-day Saint; for I say that a robber and a dishonest man has forfeited his blessings and his right to the Priesthood of God; for the Priesthood of God and its authority can only be controlled upon the principles of righteousness. But suppose a man professing to be a brother should really rob me and leave me without a thing in the world, what should I do? Why, I ought still to serve the Lord and to enjoy the Spirit of the Lord. I ought to have the spirit of charity burning in my bosom. I ought to be able to say that I had not lost the object of my worship in being robbed of my property; for I did not get wisdom, judgment, light and intelligence from my property. It was comfortable to live upon and to make me measurably independent; but my heart was not set upon it. A man never ought to have so much, or so little, nor have it in such a shape or kind, that his heart should or could be set upon it. The hearts of the Latter-day Saints should be upon the principles of salvation. They are far ahead of gold and silver, or of the riches of this world. They bring peace and contentment, happiness and salvation, in time and eternity. But the fallen condition that we are in today has its effect upon us. We are so attached to the wealth of the world that we do not so easily discern the riches of eternal life; and when men who are infidels actually deny God and say there is no such person, and ask us if we have seen or talked with Him, we become measurably bewildered. Our fallen condition asserts itself because we have set our hearts upon the things of this world, and it is difficult for us, as has been stated by President Smith, to love our enemies. Oh, that we could love our friends! The Lord has said that the very first commandment is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." How can we learn to love our enemies if we have not first learned to love the Lord our God? I accept the doctrine that that is the very first and greatest commandment. When we have kept that, we will love our enemies, and we will keep the second greatest commandment: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

These are the labors that we have to perform, and they are difficult unless we enjoy the Spirit of the Lord. It cannot be done with the measure of the Spirit that we obtained in the very beginning. For this reason: it takes years of experience, of trial and of effort before a man can submit himself entirely to the Spirit of God. When he has done that, he can love the Lord with all his heart and his neighbor as himself. Would there be any contentions or quarrels, would there be any Bishops' trials, or High Council trials, or would teachers have to labor among us, if we loved our brethren as we love ourselves? No. What man ever had to submit himself to the judgment of his Bishop to make him do right to himself, to love himself, and to feed and clothe himself? You never heard of such a case. Does a man ever have any contention with himself? No. We are always looking out for and defending ourselves. So ought we to defend and speak well of our brother. Just as we love to have our own virtues magnified, so ought we to magnify the virtues of a brother. And so ought we to magnify the virtues of an enemy. Our enemies have virtues. The virtues are not entirely monopolized by the righteous. Our enemies are not altogether wicked. They have some merit and some virtues in them. We ought to discover their virtues, and magnify them, instead of magnifying their sins. We like our own virtues magnified. Every man wants to be thought very good. That is natural. But let that same love of approval and of praise be extended to our brother. But do not set your heart upon property. Do not allow yourselves to be alienated from each other and embittered against each other because of property transactions. I would not have an ill feeling against a brother for all that I own on this earth—and I am not very wealthy. Possibly I have not enough to justify me in feeling bad and having a bitter spirit toward a brother. I say that it would be more serious for me to entertain bitterness in my heart toward a brother than to lose every dollar that I have in the world and to be left naked. A man cannot hope to love the Lord and have hatred in his heart toward his brother. We cannot despise or hate a brother and yet hope to enjoy the Spirit of the Lord. It is too sensitive and too easily offended. It is grieved at everything that is wrong. I say, therefore, it takes years for us to learn to subdue ourselves entirely to the Spirit of the Lord. The key to our success, our advancement and our perpetuity in the kingdom of God is the enjoyment of the Holy Spirit. We want to live for that, and to labor for it. And our labors are just as important in temporal matters as in spiritual matters. It is not enough for a man to pray; he must be good and honest to his neighbor. It is just as important to the Lord that I should deal honorably with my neighbor as it is that I should bow the knee before Him and pray. It is just as necessary that I should do right to my brother as it is that I should come here and partake of the sacrament. It is just as necessary that I should deal justly and righteously with my brother and with my neighbor as it is that I should go into the Temple of the Lord to receive blessings there for my salvation. The blessings that we may have given to us in the Temple, or that may be given to us at our baptism and confirmation, are only ours upon the condition that we love the Lord our God with all our hearts and our neighbor as ourselves; yea, that we love our enemies; for we must come to it. President Smith felt that he was improving in some of these things. I presume we all feel that we are improving. The longer we live and the more years of experience we have in these things, the more advancement we make. If we did not, we would be poor scholars indeed.

Then I exhort you, my brethren and sisters, to be faithful, to be humble. Do not neglect any duty that devolves upon you. Whenever you neglect your prayers, you are on dangerous ground. Whenever you neglect to worship the Lord and break the Sabbath day, you are on dangerous ground. Whenever you neglect to deal righteously and honestly by any person in the world, you are on dangerous ground and in danger of falling into the grasp of Satan. You cannot afford to do it. Satan has great power in the world, and he is more anxious about this little body of people gathered in these mountains than any nation on this earth. Why? Because these people have the Priesthood of God; they have the ordinances of the Gospel; they have the power of God for salvation to the world. Hence he is agitated, and he agitates others and stirs them up with prejudice and evil thoughts against the Latter day Saints. We have the Church of Christ here, and it will remain. You and I may get shaky; we may fall away; but this Church will endure; for it is established and planted here by our Father who is in heaven. It does not depend upon any one man, or any number of men. The Lord has chosen spirits that have come at this time; and they have been sent here for the very work that has to be accomplished. Let us, my brethren and sisters, develop the fact in our lives that we are among those that the Lord has selected to come here and perform His work.

I pray that God may bless you, and that we may be abundantly blessed during this Conference. I pray that the Spirit of the Lord may rest upon President Woodruff abundantly; that the prayers offered for him may be answered, that he may stand up and speak by the power of God to us in this Conference when he feels so to do, and that he may have strength and power to do it. God bless all Israel and help us to be true and faithful to our covenants, that we may obtain salvation, exaltation and eternal life in the presence of God, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE

The progress that is being made by the pupils in the city schools is a matter of great interest to the general public. In order to place information regarding school work within the reach of its readers the News has devoted, and will continue to do so, such space to the subject as its importance seems to require. Today we present essays from the eight grades outside of the high school. They indicate the work that is being done in the study of the English language lessons in the various school departments. The essays are the work of children from eight years of age up, and are an average of the compositions sent in. They are given with whatever of imperfections in construction and idea they possessed, so that the public may know the actual state of the work in this particular division of school labor:

First Grade.

Essay by Frank Wilson, class A, Poplar Grove School:

BROOMS.

We were once little seeds but we are a broom now, and when we were seeds farmer John planted us in the ground. When we were ripe farmer John broke us off at the top. He put us in the wagon and took us away. Then we were soaked in a tub of water and drained off and were put in a machine, bunch after bunch, until we were large enough for a broom. Then we were put into rollers and rolled into shape. Then we had the seed gotten out of us.

Second Grade.

Essay by Hannah Balmforth, class A, Seventeenth School:

CHRISTMAS PICTURES.

Here are two pictures. In one Santa Claus is making Christmas presents. He is making a doll now.

There is a glue-pot, a pair of scissors, and some needles and pins on the floor for him to work with. A rocking-horse is in the room.

His reindeers are hitched outside of the window.

The moon is shining in at the window.

In the other picture a little girl has received the doll for a Christmas present.

We will call her Nellie. She looks very happy.

Third Grade.

Essay by Nathaniel Webb, class A, Seventh School:

SILK.

The length of the silk-worm is about two inches.

The color of it is light yellow. It feeds on mulberry leaves. Many silk-worms are put on a large shelf in a warm room and are fed as much as they can eat.

There is a fluid in his body. As soon as the fluid gets out into the air it becomes little threads. He weaves these threads together. He weaves two at a time and sticks them with some gum that is in his mouth. He keeps on till he is wrapped in a cocoon. The cocoon is as large as a pigeon's egg.

In a few weeks the worm turns into a moth.

The moth tries to bite the threads but it is not strong enough.

The men who cultivate the silk do not like it to do it so they take some of the cocoons and put them into a hot oven to kill the moths and then they take shell off and put them into a pot of boiling water.

This melts the gum and loosens the threads and the men winds it on reels.

Fourth Grade.

Essay by Irma Eberhardt, age nine years, class A, Twelfth School:

OUR FLAG.

The flag of our country is made up of stars and stripes. One stripe is red and the next is white. In one corner there is a blue square where the stars are placed.

There are forty-four stars in the United States flag, and each star represents a state.

There are thirteen stripes and they represent the thirteen original colonies.

The first United States flag was made in Philadelphia by some of the women. These were very glad to have the honor of making their own country's flag, so they worked very hard.

At the opening of the war a variety of flags had been used.

The first war-vessel carried the flag of Massachusetts, called the Pine-tree flag. It had a white ground with a pine-tree in the middle, and the motto is, "Appeal to Heaven." At this time the Americans still carried the British flag, for they considered themselves still a part of the British government. The first person to hoist the United States flag was Captain Paul Jones. I think the United States flag is the prettiest of all the flags.

Fifth Grade.

Essay by Jennie Williamson, class A, Washington School:

THE NEW ENGLAND STATES.

I came across from Liverpool to Portland in Maine, on the 20th day of October, 1893. Portland has a large foreign trade, and inland commerce. During the winter it is a terminus of the Canadian Trans-atlantic Steamship line. After staying in Portland for two days, I went to Boston in a steamer and on the way I was very sea-sick. I got to Boston on the 24th of October.

Boston is famous for its education facilities; it has also a large foreign trade and is one of the chief places for manufacturing boots and shoes. After seeing some of the sights of Boston I got aboard the cars; landing at Manchester about five hours later.

A great quantity of cotton from the south is made into cloth at Manchester.

We went down the Merrimack river as far as Lowell and had another interesting day viewing the extensive cotton mills. A long ride on the railroad and coach brought me to the White Mountains where we enjoyed the invigorating air. We ascended the highest peak of Mt. Washington, which is more than 5000 feet above the level of the sea. There is a very beautiful hotel in the valley of Mt. Washington in which one thousand people stay every summer. We went to Vermont to see the maple sugar camps. They tap the tree and put in a spout and let it run into a trough, then they empty the troughs into big cans and put them over the fire to boil. After boiling for a little time, it gets crystallized. The gum exuding from the tree is collected and made into chewing gum. After being in Vermont for three days, I started down the Connecticut river, calling at Hartford, the capital, on the way. I then went on to New Haven. This city is the largest in the state, and has one of the largest and oldest universities in the United States, and is called Yale university. The city also has an excellent harbor. I there took passage on a steamer to Newport, Rhode Island. It is one of the capitals, and is a famous summer resort. I then took the steamer to New York to see the sights there.

Sixth Grade.

Essay by Mattie Turner, class B, Poplar Grove School.

BARBARA FREITCHIE'S LIFE.

Barbara Hauer was born in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, Dec. 3, 1766. She lived there a while, then she moved to Frederick, Maryland, and lived there the rest of her life. In 1806 she married a man by the name of Mr. Freitchie. Barbara lived among noted persons, therefore she loved her country. One time Washington stopped at Mrs. Kimball's tavern in 1791. Barbara got out her best china dishes she had, for Washington to eat on. Barbara would not use the dishes any more, because she thought they were too sacred to be used. She dressed in a black satin gown, with a white muslin tie around her neck and in front of her dress; on her head she wore a cap, tied under her chin. When Stonewall Jackson went through Frederick with his army and saw her, he cried "Halt! Fire!" They fired. When Barbara heard this she went in and pulled down her flag, then she put her head out of the window and said, "Shoot if you must this old gray head, but spare your country's flag." Jackson said the one who would touch a hair of her head, would die like a dog, then he told the army to march on. She put her flag in her Bible. Barbara died in 1862 at the age of 96 years and 15 days. Her folks kept for relics her clock, which is 200 years old, and her cane, two boxes, and the china dishes that Washington ate from.

Seventh Grade.

Essay by Laura Baysinger, Summer School:

AN INCIDENT.

One morn'g in the month of June, two young men with whom I was intimately acquainted were to go across the river to invite a number of young ladies and gentlemen to attend a social which was to take place the following night at the home of the boys' parents.

The boys left home at 8 o'clock in the morning, and were to be back at 2 in the afternoon of the same day.

As they failed to return at the appointed hour (the parents knowing the ford so well), it became evident that they had been drowned in attempting to cross the river.

Search was immediately made by the family.

Neighbors from every direction soon joined in the search.

Tracks were found where they rode into the ford, then a slicker and a quirt were found on the bank, where they had evidently been thrown by one, as he prepared to go to the assistance of his brother.

It was thought that the eldest rode into the stream to try its depth, when the horse's feet were swept from under him, and the rider was soon washed into a thicket of brush where he was lodged.

By this time men in boats, with drag hooks and rakes, dragged the deeper places from the ford to the mouth.

And near the bank, where the current had carried them to one side into a still water, were found the bodies of the boys.

There was no possible way of getting out, the bank on one side being a perpendicular clay washed by the stream, and the other side lined with willows, too small to offer support, and yet large enough to hinder a man or horse from swimming.

Weighed down with clothing and realizing the difficult situation they were in, their courage at once fled, and locked in each other's arms they sank to rise no more.

Owing to the mad current it would have taken more than human strength to avert the sad end.

In death they were not separated, and in the grave they were joined together.

Eighth Grade.

Essay by Ralph Richards, Lowell School.

THE GREAT STONE FACE.

A mother with her little boy sat at their cottage door talking about the Great Stone Face which could be seen in the distance with its great countenance brightened by the setting sun.

The Great Stone Face is formed by gigantic rocks. It has a forehead one hundred feet high with a nose almost as big. Its mighty lips if they could have spoken could have been heard all over the valley where it was. When viewed at a proper distance it looks very much like the human face.

As the mother and her little boy (whose name was Ernest) were talking she referred to an old prophecy that a child was to be born, who in his manhood would look just like the Great Stone Face.

This prophecy was always in Ernest's mind. When the day's toil was over he would go apart and gaze at the Great Stone Face hours. Meanwhile he was growing into a mild, quiet boy.

One day news came to the valley that the man of prophecy had come. A long time ago a man went from the valley to settle at a distant seaport. His name was Mr. Gathergold. After some years.

of hard work he became a rich man. He thought he would go back to his native place. He ordered a large mansion to be ready for him when got there. Ernest and a number of his neighbors went to meet the great man. When they saw him coming they set up a shout, but when Ernest saw Mr. Gathergold he was much grieved, and turned away to gaze at the Great Stone Face. It seemed to say to him, "Fear not Ernest the man will come."

The years were flying swiftly by. Another man who, like Mr. Gathergold, was born in the valley had enlisted as a soldier. After years of hard fighting he became a general. The people in the valley prepared a banquet to receive the renowned soldier. When the people gathered at the banquet a carriage came around a bend in the road; in it sat the great man. When Ernest saw him he saw no resemblance between him and the majestic face on the mountain side. But when Ernest left the people he gazed at the Great Stone Face, it seemed to say, The man will come, Ernest.

Ernest was getting an old man when news came to the valley that the prophecy had come true. It was in the shape of an illustrious statesman. A company of horsemen went to meet him on the boundary line of the state. When Ernest saw them returning he was eager to get a look at the great man, but was sadly grieved to see no resemblance between him and the Great Stone Face.

There was a poet who had been born in the valley who had long since gone away. Though he was far away he had heard of Ernest. He resolved to go and see him. When he arrived Ernest was sitting on a bench in front of the cottage. The poet went and sat down beside Ernest. They at once began to talk together in a pleasant way. After a while Ernest asked him who he was. He placed his hand on a book Ernest had in his hand and said you have read the poems and you know me, for I wrote them. That night they went to an open air concert where Ernest was to speak. When he began to speak the poet looked at Ernest and then at the Great Stone Face; he threw his arms aloft and cried, "Hurrah! hurrah! Ernest is himself the image of the Great Stone Face."

Written for this Paper.

IN THE WARM SOUTH SEAS

BAGAT, Lifuka, Haapai, Toga, Nov. 14, 1893.—Your welcome weekly reaches us every time the Union steamship Upolu calls at the port of Nukunono on her way to New Zealand from Samoa, which should be every twenty-eight days, but unfortunately for us she is seldom on time.

There are in this branch of the Samoan mission six Elders laboring, viz: O. D. Merrill, who was called to take charge of the work in Toga six months after his departure from Utah; A. J. Butler, who came with Elder B. Smoot to open the mission the 15th day of July, 1891; James Kinghorn and W. P. Hunter, who came six months after and who are now laboring in the Haapai group; and Thomas Adams and A. M. Durham, who arrived April 15, 1893, in company with their wives.

We have not achieved the success in baptizing converts that we often read about in other fields. The main reason, perhaps, is that we are all young and inexperienced, and do not possess the faith necessary for genuine, perpetual progress such as the brethren are making on the Society Islands. But we have obstacles in our way. I have been told upon good authority the language of this people is more difficult to speak than that of the surrounding islanders, and we do not have books such as dictionary, grammar, at our command, as our brethren on the north and east of us do; consequently we are not so well posted on native language as they are. Our knowledge has been gleaned from reading the Toga Bible, talking to the natives, and fasting and praying for Divine aid; and I am very pleased to say we have, through the goodness of our Heavenly Father, got so we can express ourselves tolerably well in the native tongue.

We have a very haughty, proud and self-esteeming people to labor among, a people who consider themselves far superior to the white man, and they are bound in fetters as strong as iron bands to their boy-king, whom they think to be almost equal to the Savior of the world, and I have heard some of them express themselves to the effect that they would rather incur the displeasure of the latter than the former upon them. Still, they all claim to be Christians, believe the Bible, and in search of eternal life. But when it is pointed out to them that the Bible condemns their practices, proves the overthrow of the primitive church on the earth, from whence they claim their authority, explain how the Gospel was to be restored and testify to the truth of the principles taught and practiced by the Latter-day Saints, they say they cannot honor their king and live loyal to the government in they belong to any but the Toga Free church.

Now, I do not say the king or the high men among them teach this folly; but there are those who can see that salaries will be diminished if the people act in accordance with that which they are convinced to be correct and follow the commandments of Christ instead of the doctrines of men. So they take advantage of the long-established custom of the people and tell them if they wish to be good citizens they will cleave to the king's church as they are pleased to call it. Ministers here are about the same as they are in other parts of the world, i. e., they go about with the Holy Bible under their arms and say they believe what is written therein, but when they read about an angel that should fly "in the midst of heaven" having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth," they say it does not mean what it says, but that it means the world is to be enlightened, Christianity is to be spread by educated men so that angels and messages from heaven are not necessary. How well does the rebuke the Savior gave to the Pharisees and Scribes fit the people we are laboring among. "The people honor me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aside the commandments of God, ye hold to the tradition of men." Mark 7: 6-8. Oh, would that we had a voice as of thunder, the eloquence of Apollos and the reasoning of Paul, that we might show them the position in which they stand so they may not always be "blind leaders of the blind" that "both fall into the ditch."

There has been built on Togatabu, in the town of Mua, a good one-story five-roomed house which furnishes a comfortable home for the sisters and Elders laboring in that vicinity. The largest room also serves as a meeting house and school room where we hold two native meetings every Sunday and six sessions of school of an hour each during the week. Our meetings of late have been very well attended and many people both high and low have heard us bear testimony to the principles that will save all who will yield obedience to the same. The school has been very hard to establish, for it seemed that all sects, parties and powers of earth combined against us and it is reasonable to believe the Evil one joined them also, for well does he know that if we can get those of tender mind under our care, even for one hour in the day, we will in time instill principles of truth that cannot be rooted out; for the seed will be sown on "good ground" and will "bring forth fruit, some an hundred fold, some sixty-fold, some thirty fold." At one time it looked very dark and the school nearly failed; but we worked with energy, visited the people at their houses about the matter, and diligently sought the Lord's assistance; and now the prospect looks much brighter and Brother Butler has a bright class of little boys who are taking a great interest in what he is teaching them.

In Togatabu we can make our trips around the islands whenever the weather will permit and some of us are out among the people almost every week. We do not as a rule hold many meetings, but we enter their houses to rest awhile, where a crowd gathers about us and we then have the privilege of explaining the principles of the Gospel to them. When out on one of these preaching trips there is nothing sure about getting our meals regularly, sometimes we have four or five meals in one day and sometimes we go until three or four o'clock in the afternoon before we get our breakfast, but we do not feel to complain on this account. Our object is to preach to the people, and when we are successful in this we feel better than we do when we get our regular meals and the people are not interested in what we have to tell them. We find the only way to get to talk to them is to go from place to place on foot and stop wherever the people will receive us and talk to them as long as they are anxious to hear; but if we tire them with our talk we need not expect to get to converse with them again.

Elders Merrill and Butler tried making a trip on horseback once. They were gone two days, visited about twenty villages and did not get a chance to hold one meeting. The first place at which they stopped they asked for a drink and were immediately told they could have it if they would pay for it, but otherwise there was nothing in that town for them. This shows that the people think that one who rides a horse is expected to have money to pay for everything he wants, while in the same towns we are treated with all due respect when we are on foot.

I might perhaps give a long description of a trip over the island of Togatabu, how we are received by the natives, their food, drink, manner of cooking, making of the "kava," etc., but it would only be largely a repetition of the story told by Samoan missionaries, so I will not trouble your readers with it at present, but I will give an account of a trip on the sea from Nukualofa to Haapai and to the principal islands of that group, which lie about one hundred miles north of Togatabu.

Elder Merrill had met the premier of Toga and had a pleasant talk with him and was offered a passage free of charge, on the government schooner Jiale Tafa. According to arrangements he went aboard Sunday evening, October 22nd, and as soon as the masts of the watch passed twelve the anchor was drawn in, the sails spread, and soon the little white vessel was rapidly gliding over the waves in the moonlight, being driven by the trade wind which was rather strong on the evening in question. A merry party, consisting of the premier and attendants, the Latter-day Saint Elder above referred to, and the ship's crew expected to have a pleasant trip. But alas! a sudden change came. The bowsprit stay gave way crippling the boat so she could not make the trip, and they turned her head to the wind and tried to repair the broken place. In the meantime she rolled and pitched in the waves until many became very seasick, so much so that the only thing thought of was a place to lie down; and all went to the cabin and retired, not caring much whether she sunk or floated. This being the first taste of real sea-sickness this missionary has had, it was an experience he will long remember. When daylight came the schooner was anchored in the Nukualofa harbor about 100 yards from the steamer which was then lying aside the wharf; so he decided to leave the native schooner and take passage on the steamer and transferred his box, satchel, etc. At 6 o'clock in the evening he made another trial, which proved to be both pleasant and successful, as the ship was neat and clean and everything for the convenience of passengers is kept in first class style. The evening was spent in conversing with the passengers and explaining the object of our stay among the Toga natives. The steamer had not got a half a mile from the wharf until every one knew there was a Mormon on board and the natives were ready to point him out to those that wanted to see what kind of a creature he was. Bed time came and as good a rest was enjoyed as it had been taken in one of the best bedrooms in Utah. Next morning Haapai was in sight and we intended to give Elders Kinghorn and Hunter a surprise, but that was taken off his hands by the supercargo who went ashore while breakfast was being served on board and told the brethren "Merrill will be over in a few minutes." The joy that those three Elders had in meeting after the separation of five months can be better imagined than described.

The next day (Wednesday) Elders Kinghorn and Merrill took passage on a ten-ton scow for the island of Nomuka, which is about fifty miles southwest of where the brethren make their home. They boarded about eight o'clock and were soon sailing over the "rolling deep" before a gentle wind. At 12:30 the captain dropped anchor in front of the island of Hafeva and at once set his crew at work landing merchandise for a trader by the name of Swanson, who is a kind friend to "our boys," while the brethren went out to visit the people; and, knowing the arrangement was to open the night here, they visited the chiefs of the island and made appointment for a meeting in the evening. In the afternoon they went over part of the island, looking through the village which has about four hundred inhabitants. When the time came there were over a hundred gathered and the first Latter-day Saints sermon was preached to the natives of that island by Elder Merrill. They seemed very much surprised to learn that the Bible substantiates "Mormon Doctrine." Elder Kinghorn also spoke to them and gave a chance for any one present to ask questions about what they had heard. The next day they sailed to Nomuka where they arrived about 8 o'clock. This is one of the best islands in the group, almost round in shape and a mile and a half across; it contains one small mountain and a lake. The soil is very prolific, producing the yam, sweet potato, banana and coconut in great quantities; also a great abundance of oranges, which have the reputation of being the best in the Friendly archipelago. I am told it is the place where Captain Cook made his headquarters while exploring in this vicinity. The boys were delighted with the island and the hearty welcome they received from Mr. Sande, the old white trader on the island; but were not so well pleased with the natives for they are the worse set yet visited. No meeting could be held, neither could they talk privately to any of them on the Gospel. They tell us "the Lord first made the Tungan, then the pigs, then the white man." Two days were spent here with no success whatever. They set sail Saturday morning, having the boat loaded with ten tons of coconuts and the whole day was spent on the sea beating against a head wind. Hafeva was reached at dusk, where they spent Sunday, taking advantage of every opportunity to "preach the Gospel to every creature." Monday morning they made another start toward Lifuka, but the wind being contrary all day and a calm coming on just at sundown, they were not successful in reaching home, but cast anchor near a reef and spent the night on the boat, using the sail for a bed. The next morning there was a wind which wafted them into the Bagal harbor by eleven o'clock, where Brother Hunter was anxiously waiting their arrival to learn of their success. One day was spent at home and Thursday evening found Elders Merrill and Hunter on the island of Uifa, the home of the great warrior king Futou, who used to be the terror of the South sea. Upon this island is a beautiful cemetery, where sleep twenty-four of the royal family and where there is an empty tomb which was prepared by the king for himself. A description of this place might be of interest, but I forbear lest my communication be too long. Three days were spent here with great satisfaction, the brethren being busy most of the time explaining the principles of life and salvation.

Many are convinced and we all look with great anxiety for the time to come when we will baptize the believers. The islands of Foa and Haano have been visited within the last week and a great deal of talking has been done and many numbers of the little work entitled Bule'aga o Hevan' have been left among the natives wherever we have been. This is a tract from the pen of Elder Brigham Smoot of Provo, so well written that we have to testify that we saw him write it before some of those who profess to be Toga scholars will believe it is original. They say men who have spent years of study on the language cannot handle as it is handled in that work. It is a great help to the mission and a credit to its author.

Trusting that the truth of the everlasting Gospel may spread rapidly, I subscribe myself as one who is laboring to that end, knowing a crown awaits all who are faithful in Christ Jesus,

KO AU BUKUBUKU.

STAKE CONFERENCES.

MARICOPA.

The quarterly conference of the Maricopa Stake was held in Mesa, Sunday and Monday, Dec. 17 and 18, 1898. No visitors were present; but there was an excellent attendance of Saints. President Chas. I. Robinson made a few opening remarks, expressive of his pleasure in seeing so many present and exhorted all to exercise faith that the true Spirit may dictate the speakers.

Aside from the usual business of such gatherings the principles of union, Word of Wisdom, order of the Kingdom of God, the gathering, and miracles were treated upon, and the duties we owe to each other fully shown. The Ward and Stake reports were very satisfactory, showing an increasing desire on the part of many to do their duty. The necessity of paying tithing and of maintaining purity in all of our amusements and social gatherings were dwelt upon.

Our weather is delightful. No ice-freezing cold so far. General health prevails, and peace and prosperity reign.

GEO. PASSEY, Clerk.

MALAD.

The quarterly conference of the Malad Stake of Zion convened in Portage on the 10th and 11th inst. There were present on the stand Pres. O. C. Hoskins and counselors, members of the High Council and Bishops of the various wards.

At 2 p. m. Elders S. B. Young and George F. Gibbs, of Salt Lake City, were on the stand.

The teaching from the various speakers was calculated to build the Saints up in the faith of the Gospel. The beautiful singing under the leadership of Prof. D. P. Jones added much to the pleasure of the Saints.

C. S. HALL, Acting Clerk.

Bonner's Ferry, Idaho, has been discovered to be within the Indian reservation. The postoffice, several stores and residences will have to be removed outside the Indian reserve boundaries.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Only a few more hours and 1893 will be counted among the years that are past. It has been a remarkable year in many respects, fraught with important events, some of which will never fade from the annals of mankind.

Looking backward we see numerous disasters on land and sea and a remarkably long death roll, several of the notables of the earth having passed away. Millions' worth of property has been destroyed by fire. Thousands of lives were lost in earthquakes and cyclones, and hundreds more in railroad accidents. Revolution has kindled its flames in several places, while over the nations of Europe anarchy hovers as a shadow of some structure of shades. Financial troubles at home and abroad have caused much anxiety and untold distress in many places.

But the year has also been marked by important events of a more cheerful character than these here alluded to. The World's Fair, with the numerous congresses held in connection with it, is one of them. As one result the peace congress has already sent petitions to our government in the interest of the inauguration of peace among the nations of the world. The religious parliament, too, notwithstanding its shortcomings, will be productive of good. If nothing else, it will tend to prove the equality of the great religions of the world and the insufficiency of them all to save, temporally and eternally, the human race, thereby preparing the way for the religion of Christ. Among the prominent events of the year, the dedication of the great Temple in this city deserves mention. The acceptance of that house by the Lord is a pledge that His promises are ever faithful, ever true.

With this assurance the NEWS takes great pleasure in extending to all its readers a Happy-New-Year greeting. Our Territory has suffered comparatively little from the calamities that have swept other parts of the world. The new year breaks in with prospects of peace in the midst of the people; Utah's friends are constantly finding their ranks increased, at home and abroad. The heavens pour down their blessings over hill and dale, inspiring the hope of another abundant harvest in due time, and the day seems to be very near when this fair Territory shall be blessed with the full privileges accorded to our citizens by a divinely inspired Constitution.

Hard times, like storms, come and go. The sun is ever spreading his glorious light above the clouds. So Providence overrules all things and turns even the trials to good for His children. To those who can hold to this sure anchor of hope the new year will bring nothing but feelings of happiness and joy.

Again, a Happy and Prosperous New Year to all!

SPECIFIC AND AD VALOREM.

A "Constant Reader" writes to the editor:

Will you kindly inform many interested readers of your excellent paper the difference between specific and ad valorem duties as applied in the McKinley law and the Wilson bill now before Congress?

The difference between the terms specific and ad valorem as applied to customs duties may be explained we think quite as clearly and certainly much more briefly without particular reference to either of the measures named. Our correspondent hardly means that we should take the space, even if it were possible at this incomplete stage of one of the measures named, to compare the two in detail—that is, enumerate the articles on the dutiable list in both, which in the one may be required to pay a specific, and in the other an ad valorem tax. The meaning of the respective terms is not affected by the application of the terms themselves to this or that enactment; "specific duties" means the same thing whether used by McKinley or Wilson; and "ad valorem duties" likewise. This much, however, may not inappropriately be added: the McKinley law uses both an ad valorem and specific duties, with a strong preference for the latter; the Wilson bill declares emphatically for ad valorem duties wherever possible, the framer having substituted these for the specific duties "whenever it seemed practical, because the ad valorem system has worked well in practice and because it is a tax upon actual values."

The latter clause gives a fairly complete definition of the term "ad valorem"—according to value. A tariff based on that system, therefore, varies with the price and value of the import—the duty is levied upon the real value of the article taxed; and this value is determined by the invoices sworn to by importers or agents and subject to correction by the appraiser's valuation. The term "specific," as applied to a customs duty, implies a fixed tax upon articles imported—as for example, 10 cents a yard on carpets, whether the carpets are worth $1 or $8 per yard. This is a naked definition of the two systems. There is still another, the compound duty system, formed of a union of both the others, by which each grade of the commodity in question is made to carry its share, and—this is a virtual concession to the ad valorem plan—the adoption of a sliding scale which varies the duty according to the texture or cost of the article.

As to which of the two is the better for general use, there always has been, there still is, and there always will be, divergent views. So strong and masterful a protectionist as Henry Clay placed himself on record as against the specific and in favor of the ad valorem system, making the argument that:

I believe if we adopt a fixed rate ad valorem the revenue will be subjected to fewer frauds than the injustice and frauds incident to specific duties. One of the most prolific sources of the violation of our revenue laws has been, as everybody knows, the effort to get goods of a finer quality and higher value admitted under the lower rate of duty required for those of a lower value.

On the other hand James Buchanan and other prominent Democrats of a previous generation, and Daniel Manning, the strong man of President Cleveland's former cabinet, were unequivocally opposed to ad valorem duties as against specific, holding that the former system puts a premium on perjury, permits the grossest frauds on the revenue by undervaluations, and increases expense by multiplying the number of persons required to execute it.

It must be said that the tariffs of other countries cast some doubt on the opinion of the expediency and justice of ad valorem duties. One authority points out that England imposes duties on 88 articles, France on 619, Austria on 357, Russia on 440, Sweden on more than 800, and Denmark on 68, all of which duties are specific. Germany's tariff makes 434 articles dutiable and imposes specific duties on all but two; Italy's tariff covers 887 products, and on all but nine the duties are specific; Norway collects customs on more than 500 articles, and the duties are specific except in six instances; Spain, with 869 articles on its tariff, imposes an ad valorem duty on but one. And yet, on the other side of the question, it can hardly be wondered at that under the system of specific duties there would be a tremendous effort going on among importers to get goods properly belonging in one class subject to a higher specific duty, brought in as of a lower grade bearing a lower duty. This is the fraudulent feature of the matter, and in addition to it there is the unjust and unequal phase, that the consumers of different qualities of a commodity are forced to submit to an equal tax as to its quantity, and that such tax inevitably falls heaviest on the cheaper grades, whose consumers are most numerous and least able to pay.

It is not likely that either system exclusively can be used with success and satisfaction. Both have excellent features—assuming of course that there is to be a tariff at all—and neither is without objections and imperfections. The question as to accepting Mr. Wilson's idea of gauging the duty by the quality of the import, or Mr. McKinley's idea of exacting it according to the quantity, with incidental compound or "sliding duties," is one of much interest with politicians and publishers. But after all it is quite secondary to and wholly overshadowed by the great query, whether it is better for the United States to have a tariff at all save for revenue, or a tariff levied particularly for the protection of American industries.

RAILROADS IN PALESTINE.

The readers of the NEWS are aware that efforts are being made to connect the principal cities of Palestine and Syria by railroads, and that the line between Jaffa and Jerusalem has already been opened. This distance is about forty-five miles which is made by the railroad in a little less than four hours, except when the trains are all the way from two to four hours late, which, we are told, is the general rule. The old mode of traveling, on horseback or by stage, consumed twelve hours, including the customary stops. It was an easy excursion and could not fail to stir the emotions, especially when enjoyed for the first time—when it was a pleasant experience never to be forgotten. What the transit in a close car will be, crowded, perhaps, with pilgrims from various countries, dusky fellows, grasping money changers, haughty Turks, etc., must be left to the imagination.

The road winds up a mountain gorge to the plain of Rephaim, south of Jerusalem, and terminates close by the Jaffa gate. Engines and cars were brought from America, while the rails are of Belgian manufacture. The company's purpose is to extend this line to India, if concession can be obtained to pass through Persian territory. The Turkish sultan has consented to the building of branch lines from Jaffa to Nablous, the ancient Sichem, in the north, and to Gaza, via Ascalon, in the south. This line will then undoubtedly be extended and connected with the Egyptian railroad system.

The line that is being built from Haifa to Damascus runs along the Carmel range. Leaving Acre it goes by Ramleh and Gideon's spring to the valley of Jezreel, which it traverses in its entire length. It touches Nazareth and crosses the Jordan at the south end of Lake Tiberias on a sixty-six foot long bridge. Thence it is to run by the Hauran plains to Damascus. This line is being constructed, it seems, by a Chicago firm.

Another project contemplates the building of a railroad line between Beyrouth, Damascus and Aleppo, to be extended to Bagdad.

When all these roads are completed, Palestine will again be in a fair way to resume the position it once held as a central and connecting link between the orient and occident. Much of the immense trade that is now carried on from Persia and India, either by means of caravans to the north, entering Russia through her Caspian ports, or by steamships to western and southern Europe, will naturally find its way to Jaffa, where already Russian, French, Austrian and English steamboat companies regularly send their well-loaded vessels and carry on a lively traffic; a convenient harbor will be built for the better safety of the ships; and the whole country will be lifted up to a position of great importance among the nations of the old world. Nor does all this belong to a distant future. With the swiftness with which modern civilization accomplishes its plans and designs, the redemption of Palestine may be comparatively near. The attention of the world is directed toward the country as if in expectation of its liberation from the curse of obscurity, superstition and misrule.

NO APOLOGY NEEDED.

A writer in The New World, C. H. Toy, has an article on the parliament of religions held in Chicago in connection with the World's Fair. He makes it his object to impress upon his readers the universal character of this gathering, both geographically and otherwise. In America, he says, the United States and Canada were represented; in Europe—England, France, Belgium, Sweden, Germany, Russia and Greece; in Asia—Armenia, India, China, Japan and Siam. And the speakers represented nearly all forms of civilized religions. The author emphasizes that the parliament offered a fair exhibition of the religions of the world and was conducted without sectarian narrowness.

One fact seems to obscure this fond idea like a black shadow. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the only church which may be termed distinctly American, a church whose brief history has already found its way to the uttermost ends of the earth, commanding attention among law makers, clergymen, philosophers, high and low, learned and unlearned—this Church, whose Temples are the admiration of all who have seen them, had no recognized representative in the parliament. Mr. Toy needlessly feels the necessity of making an apology for this to the world. He says:

No member of the Mormon Church was present, but the exclusion of this body was based not on religious, but on moral grounds. Mormons might, indeed, urge that Mohammedanism, an equally offensive system, was welcomed; but to this it might fairly be replied, that those who spoke for Mohammedanism abjured polygamy, and such an abjuration no Mormon would be prepared to make.

The Mormon Church, then, was excluded on "moral" grounds? Was Mr. Toy present in the committee meeting when it was decided to close the parliament against the Saints? If not, his statement is but a conjecture worth nothing. In order to substantiate his guess he has to resort to a plain misstatement of a fact. He says the Mohammedans who spoke abjured polygamy, and this the Mormons would not do.

In the first place, no Mohammedan would ever "abjure" polygamy. As on a former occasion pointed out by the News, the Koran does not teach that doctrine as a duty, but it allows it under certain circumstances. What the Koran allows, no follower of Mohammed would ever "abjure." At the religious congress itself, it will be remembered, Mr. Webb offered a defense for the practice, although, he said, he would not preach it in this country. Mr. Toy must be sadly misinformed concerning the Mohammedans.

In the second place, the Mormons have solemnly declared against the practice of polygamy, a fact which ought to be known by this time. Mr. Toy is evidently ignorant about the Mormons as about the Mohammedans.

As long as the fact remains that not only the followers of the Arabian Prophet, but other religious bodies whose members practice polygamy, were admitted to the Congress, the plea that the Mormons were excluded on moral grounds is absurd. A more probable supposition would be that fear was entertained by the leading men that a clear, forcible statement of the truth would not be without influence on the vast audience. Sectarian narrowness and medieval bigotry may have ruled in the decision.

No apology is needed, however. The exclusion of our Church from that congress was no doubt the right thing. It was necessary to make an effort to be heard, lest afterwards the feeling might have prevailed that a glorious opportunity had been neglected. The refusal to listen to us lifts the responsibility from the Church. Our religion is not for exhibition purposes. It is not on a level with the systems of Confucius, Buddha or Mohammed; nor is it to be compared to the various fragments of Christian systems that prevail. It is the eternal truth revealed by God. It has to be preached to the world as a testimony, and in the right time of the Almighty it will encompass the earth, bringing peace, joy and happiness to all the children of men.

PAYING TITHES.

One of the doctrines of the Gospel, observed as such by the Latter-day Saints, is that of an offering of tithes to the Lord. This duty is enjoined by the Almighty upon His people, and it is proper that the Saints should understand the reasons and operations of the law and the purposes for which tithes are required.

It is written: "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." He has given to man the earth to dwell upon, and has furnished it with animals, vegetables and all things necessary for his existence, comfort and happiness. These are ordained for the use and benefit of man; they belong to the Lord. He has a claim, therefore, not only on a tenth of the contents and products of the earth, but the whole. The payment of a tithe is but an acknowledgement of His right as proprietor, and those who have any comprehension of the magnitude of His blessings to men, and who are possessed of a sense of gratitude, feel that tithing is but a small interest for that which they enjoy.

The law of tithing was strictly enforced in the Mosaic dispensation. Among the commandments given upon Mount Sinai was one that the children of Israel should be tithed of all their produce. At a later date in the history of the Hebrews, the Lord, through the Prophet Malachi, says that the payment of tithes is one of His ordinances, and deounces as robbery the neglect of the people to pay them into His storehouse. By withholding the required tenth they defrauded and robbed the Lord, and for this they were cursed. He called upon them to return to Him, and promised that if they did so and observed this ordinance He would open the windows of heaven and pour out blessings upon them; the devotee should be rebuked for their sakes, that he should not destroy the fruits of the ground; the vine should not cast its fruit before the time; all nations should call them blessed, and theirs should be a delightful land.

These are some of the blessings that follow the obedience to this law. Its promises and obligations are not confined to the Mosaic dispensation, nor to the period of control of the Aaronic Priesthood; for under the Priesthood which our Lord held and which He bestowed upon His disciples, the law was confirmed to. Previous to the Mosaic dispensation, and under the same Priesthood as the Christian dispensation, Abraham paid tithes to Melchisedec and was blessed by him.

Whenever the Priesthood has been upon earth this law has been in effect that the Saints might observe it and partake of the blessings which result therefrom.

The object to which tithes are devoted is to the establishment of Zion—the building of houses to the Lord and such other purposes as are designated by the voice of revelation for the building up of the Kingdom of God. The Lord is to “suddenly come to His Temple” in the last day; and in these sacred edifices are administered ordinances of the Gospel for the salvation of the living and the dead, and instructions are given to prepare the Saints for a residence in the presence of God. The erection of temples and the carrying on of other works necessary to establish the foundations of Zion cannot be done without the means necessary for their accomplishment. The funds are provided by the tithes of the Saints.

Payment of tithes is voluntary. Each person has his agency to receive or reject the law. If those who have taken upon themselves the covenant of the Gospel, keep the commandments of God, blessings and a curse will attend them; if they do not heed His word, an opposite result will follow. For the liquidation of expenses that are to be met by the tithes, it would not do to leave to the generosity of the people the proportion of their means which should be contributed. Some would give liberally, while others would be more or less controlled by selfish motives, and thus an inequality would be caused by a difference in disposition. Such a rule would be unjust, not being based upon the ability of the individual to impart of his substance.

Man is not made the judge of the proportion that is required by the Lord; he is not the framer of the law. The finite mind is not to prescribe the rules which govern the Infinite, for such a procedure would destroy the control by the Almighty and be subversive of the principles of truth. The Lord gives the law; He sets the bounds and declares what is the true principle or doctrine. Man may obey or disregard the divine word, and abide the consequences of his choice. The Almighty has said He requires a tithe or tenth, and applies the law equally to all. The principle is the same today that it was anciently under the same conditions; a change would have been inconsistent. With the restoration of the Gospel in this age came the revelation to the Saints to pay one-tenth of their interest annually as a tithe, for the purposes named. The Saints are exhorted by the Lord to remember the poor, and to consecrate of their properties for their support. He says: “Behold, now it is called today, and verily it is a day of tithing for my people,” and informs us that He has tithed His Saints “to prepare them against the day of vengeance and burning.”

The Latter-day Saints have had the blessings of heaven poured out upon them because of their observance of this law. This is conclusively shown by the prosperity which attends them at their gathering places. They are called by the nations blessed in their material affairs, as was Israel of old, and the land which was a desert when they first occupied it, indeed has blossomed as a rose and become choice above all other lands through the fulfillment of the promises of the Lord to a people who have kept the law.

In the face of such evidences of the Lord's blessings and the revelations He has given, to conclude that salvation does not in any degree depend upon the principle of tithing, or to say that it is an unimportant or unnecessary ordinance, is to contradict an evident fact. Tithing, like all other doctrines of the Gospel, is worthy the most serious consideration of every member of the Church, to know its purpose, understand the necessity of keeping its conditions, and render intelligent obedience to its requirements. No member of the Church is exempt from its provisions or excluded from its benefits when he observes it. All who earn, all who receive an increase of this world's goods, are under the law of tithing, paid voluntarily as a free-will offering to the Lord. Those who comply with it are to receive blessings from the opened windows of heaven in time and eternity. True believers in Christ Jesus will unhesitatingly pursue a course to prove that where men honor the Lord He never fails in fulfilling His promises, but is a rewarder of all that diligently seek Him and keep His commandments.

GRAND AND SAN JUAN COUNTIES.

There will be placed before the Legislature early in the session a proposition to change the boundary line between Grand and San Juan counties. The effect will be to enlarge Grand by a considerable slice off San Juan. The present southern boundary of Grand is on latitude 38 deg. 30 min., on a line with the northern boundary of Wayne county. The change sought is to extend Grand about twenty-five miles to the south, on a line with the southern boundary of Wayne, along the sixth standard parallel.

The arguments used in favor of the alteration in county lines is that the division would be more natural because of the topography of the country, and that the occupiers of the tract proposed to be transferred are in favor of it. Moab, the county seat of Grand, and Bluff City, county seat of San Juan, are both near the southern boundaries of their respective counties. It is a long and difficult trip for the people in north San Juan to go to their county seat, while in case the suggested alteration were made they would be quite close and convenient to Moab.

The proposed new line does not go as far south as the summit of the mountain range and thus make a strictly natural division on topographical lines, but it is stated that it goes so far up the chain of hills as to include all habitable country, leaving to the north of the summit only a comparatively small range for cattle, horses and sheep, the possession of which would be a matter of small moment to either county.

There is one objection which may be urged on the face of the showing made in the suggested change. In depriving San Juan county of a strip of country twenty-five or more miles wide and giving it to Grand county, there would be taken from San Juan a considerable portion of its revenue, derived from taxes on the extensive ranches and herds of stock in that section. Grand county is fairly well provided for already in the matter of taxable property, in proportion to its population, and has the advantage of a considerable section of the Rio Grande Western railway. But if the convenience of the people residing on the tract in question requires the transfer, the particular county that gets the revenue is a matter of secondary importance.

As a rule, it is inadvisable to frequently change the boundaries of counties. In the present instance, however, those who are moving for action by the Legislature make a good showing in behalf of their proposition. The arguments in its favor will be placed before the legislators at the earliest possible date, for their consideration. Whether or not San Juan county will raise any objections to being reduced in area in the manner indicated has not been developed yet. If the officials and residents there do not take kindly to the move, they should make an early presentation of their reasons for opposing it.

DON'T BE RASH.

Promptness in seizing opportunities is as necessary to the success of a community as to that of an individual. It is always an indication of energy and courage, and these two qualities are as potent in the accomplishment of every purpose as any that mankind is gifted with. Yet there is no real safety in energy which is not associated with judgment, nor in courage untempered with sagacity. It frequently happens, therefore, that promptness is nothing more than recklessness, and that sober sense is rendered silly by enthusiasm.

Every community that has no railroad is probably anxious to get one. Almost every community that has already one railroad—no matter whether one horse can do their work quite as well as two and at half the expense for feed—is keen to get the second one. There are certain kinds of property—money and railroads among them—of which the more a people get, the more they want. Nor is this desire, even when it reaches the virulent stage of avarice, altogether to be condemned. To strain, and sweat, and grasp, in the accumulation of means, is not wholly bad, though there may be grinding and miserly methods employed. Means thus acquired will usually benefit some one in the end; and the example furnishes both a good lesson in industry and economy, and a grim warning against cupidity and inhumanity.

So, we applaud the efforts of any community to acquire the untold benefits that come of railroad connection with the rest of the world. We also applaud the reasonable endeavors of any community, already thus favored, to secure by new railroad connections an escape from the monopoly they may be suffering under. But all things in calmness, and with due regard to the sound principles of business sense! It has seemed to the NEWS that some of our southern friends just now need, what some of our northern friends needed a short time ago: a warning against being insanely carried away by prospective benefits that may never materialize, and against being recklessly generous of substantial pledges when they get nothing but glittering promises in return. Anybody can build a railroad on paper. That is the preliminary step, also, of all real railroads. But there is no need to deen away lands heedlessly for right of way, to give city blocks here and there for depot grounds, and to tie up other and valuable kinds of property and pledges in pawn upon a mere promise that in time the compensating benefits will be returned. A community thus hampered to an unreal project occasionally cuts itself off from negotiation with another project much more tangible and much more worthy of confidence. The leading men in southern Utah are quite able to take care of the business interests of their patient and deserving section. The News only urges them to prevent their people taking any leap in the dark, or getting prematurely into any entangling alliance that would debar them from considering other and perhaps more acceptable propositions that the near future may offer.

THE "NEWS" POSITION.

[The following editorial, written for the DESERT EVENING NEWS for January 8rd, the day before the special Legislative election in Salt Lake City, explains a matter that may have interest for readers of the Semi-Weekly and Weekly issues of this paper. It will perhaps also be accepted in lieu of a personal letter to some esteemed correspondents who have written us on the subject.—Editor DESERT NEWS.]

We assume that those who advertise their business, their wares, and their expectations, in the columns of the DESERT EVENING NEWS anticipate that the outlay will do them some good. It does, too; for the NEWS is widely read and by the best people, and in its treatment of actual events it is truthful and unprejudiced. Hence we can afford to ask, and business men can afford to pay, a pretty tidy price for such space as we have to spare in each issue for advertising purposes and announcements.

But the NEWS does not write, does not edit, and does not accept responsibility for the statements its advertisers choose to make. Where we are convinced that these statements are downright falsehoods, or that they are clearly intended to deceive, we reject the ad., or if it has been published without a full understanding, we lose no time in not only striking it out but also in warning the community against its snares. Of course we want legitimate advertising and as much of it as we can get and at the best rates; but we do not want one line, at any time, or at any price, that involves a loss of principle. If we cannot do an honest business, we'll quit.

Now, we reassert that the News, the official organ of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is not a political paper, is unpledged to either party, is independent of them all. It has friends in every party, and thinks there are excellent and worthy principles to be found enunciated in the platforms of each. We have published as advertisements a good deal of matter recently from both the principal parties in this city. The Democrats have had certain paid space in which to ventilate their views, make their promises and formulate their plea. The Republicans have had certain paid space to do the same thing. On some days, one party slipped a cog and didn't get here in time to secure what they wanted; on other days the other party was likewise tardy or neglectful. Today we have them both; nay, more—we have also the ticket, and some advertisements of the third, or Populist party; and in a spirit of the utmost friendship and fairness, we invite the reader to peruse all of them, if he feels like it; if not that, then as much as he can stand; and then tomorrow to go and vote for the man and the principles of his choice; the NEWS doesn't care a straw whether his ballot shall be cast for Hall or Varian or McKenzie, or whether, if he is sick of politics, he keeps out of the turbid stream entirely.

To those who have tried to argue that the publication of these advertisements indicated the political bias of this paper, we shall briefly reply that the same logic would make us a Jewish organ because every day we publish the advertisements of Jewish merchants (good men, too, we believe), or a Chinese organ, because we advertise a Chinese store or two, or a liquor-dealers', or showmen's, or doctors', or bankers', or restaurateurs' organ because we occasionally print the business announcements of those classes of people. Any attempt that may have been made to put us in a false position in this matter of politics we condemn; and any hint from either side that we have leaned toward or against it, we unqualifiedly deny. We may have felt to criticize some of the advertising tricks employed, but we also felt if the advertiser could stand it we could endure though we might not approve it. The contradictions of rivals in politics, as in trade, will bear examination; and none of them must think to use this paper to impose on its own readers. Each one of the latter has a warmer place in our regard than any advertiseer's money can buy. And when we have any advice for the reader, or desire him to be made acquainted with any matter of news as such, we shall present it to him in columns which no advertiser can enter and with a responsibility which no partisan shall be permitted to assume.

In conclusion: The News thinks every legal voter owes it to himself, his family and his country that he deposit an intelligent ballot at every election, and we trust that tomorrow's result will show that this great privilege of citizenship has been fully exercised. As to which candidate ought to be elected, we have not one word to say. Three candidates are already afield: Vote for the one who in himself and in his principles you like best!

THE SHIP CANAL.

The formal opening of the Manchester ship canal took place yesterday, with imposing ceremonies. The new waterway was virtually opened on December 7, as on that date vessels began making regular trips. But the formal opening exercises were deferred till the beginning of the new year. The canal is 85 miles in length, from Eastham, the head of navigation for deep water vessels on the Mersey, to Old Trafford, on the river Irwell, in Manchester. At the Trafford end the docks have an area of 114 acres, and the quay frontage, which occupies both sides of the Irwell within the city, is five and a quarter miles long. The locks and sluices in Manchester are the largest and most difficult and important works of the kind ever executed.

The corporation and people of Manchester have accomplished a vast undertaking in completing the canal and opening it for traffic. They hope that by its aid their city will become one of the most important seaports in Great Britain, rivaling even Liverpool. The canal was first started as a private enterprise, backed by the leading men of the city, on whose representation many shares were subscribed for by working people. When the work had been prosecuted to a considerable extent it was found that the engineers had greatly underestimated the cost. The contractors failed to come up to the agreement because the expense of the work was so much above what they had counted on, and at one time it looked as though the whole scheme would fail because of lack of funds to go on.

It was at this juncture that the corporation of Manchester took hold. There were two great reasons for this action on the part of the municipality. One was a desire to effect the original purpose of the project and make the city a seaport. Another, and one that had great moral influence on those engaged in the administration of affairs, was the fact that so many people of the middle classes had become shareholders that the failure of the scheme would have broken confidence in public officials and business men of the town, and the result would have been disastrous politically as well as financially. So the city took the matter up and is now practically the owner of the canal.

The cost of the enterprise has been, in round numbers, fifty million dollars—a pretty good load for a single city to carry in one department. From the Mersey the canal has followed in the main the line of the river Irwell. The cost of the excavation has been enormous, because of unexpected features in the soil, causing banks to give way, etc. An immense amount of rock masonry has been required on this account. Nor has the cost been in money alone; for the construction of the canal has been attended by a number of serious accidents. At one of these 25 men were killed and 40 injured, some of them for life, by a couple of railway cars going over an embankment upon a force of workmen engaged in the excavation below.

Judging by the persistency which attended the construction of the canal, it will not be the fault of the people of Manchester if its operation does not prove a success. At the outset they have a very serious opposition on the part of railways. The canal managers announced a toll for vessels from Liverpool to Manchester that was less than the cost of hauling freight by rail between the two cities. The three great railway systems that unite Manchester and Liverpool and extend throughout the country—the London and North-western, the Lancashire and Yorkshire, and the Midland or Cheshire lines—immediately responded by making Liverpool and Manchester “common points.” By this arrangement freight will be transported by rail between all sections of Great Britain and Manchester or Liverpool at the same rate, thus discriminating in favor of the latter port, unless the tolls on the canal should be abrogated entirely.

Manchester and its suburbs have, however, a great trade themselves, and it may be that they will be able to wage a successful contest with the railways until the latter are willing to enter an amicable arrangement. The immediate effects of such a contest are, even to the people of Manchester themselves, problematic, though the people seem confident that in it the canal will be able to meet operating expenses, and ultimately to become a dividend paying institution. The canal will accommodate the great majority of the ocean freight traffic, and some of the smaller passenger steamers; but it will not admit such vessels as the Teutonic, Etruria, Paris and Campania, which draw more than thirty feet of water, while the canal is but twenty-six feet deep. There also will be considerable local passenger travel, as the trip on a small steamer can be made in four or five hours, the large freight vessels taking double that time.

A BAD RAILROAD YEAR.

Railway receiverships and foreclosures in 1893 is the subject of an article in the Railway Age and Northwestern Railroader of December 15, in which some startling facts and figures appear. About 13 per cent, it seems, of the entire railway mileage of the country has gone into the hands of receivers during the year; seventy-one roads, with nearly 23,000 miles of line and representing the enormous sum of $1,288,000,000 of stocks and bonds, have failed. And this does not include failures during the latter part of the month, among which are the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the New York & New England, with their vast liabilities. The loss caused by the failure of such large concerns is exceedingly deplorable, reaching as it does not only stockholders and bondholders, but the vast army of employees whose wages are considerably reduced.

The Railway Age says that in ten years 306 railway corporations have become insolvent; and it then makes the following remark: “It is evident that the process of insolvency is moving rapidly on toward the point of involving our entire railway system. There must be an entire change in the attitude of the public and the laws toward capital invested in railways, or the ruin which these figures picture will become general.”

It is impossible to ascribe this state of affairs to hard times alone, after the publication of the alleged maneuvers of the managers of the North-western Pacific and some other roads. Abuse of public confidence by leading officials and extravagance in the management are probably real causes of the disasters referred to. Railway communication in the United States, with the vast inland distances, is vital to the existence of the country in its present state of high development. It can no more cease, without disastrous results to the country, than can the circulation of blood in the human body without suspending the functions of the various organs. Life requires a never-ceasing pulsation, and the progress of this country depends on a steadily growing net of railways, carrying the products of farmers, miners, stock and sheep-owners and manufacturers, with safety, regularity and cheapness from one place to another. If, therefore, it should be found that this vital interest to the country cannot safely be trusted to individuals, the time may arrive when the demand shall become general upon the government to take the management of at least the principal roads in its strong hands. This is a proposition which has already found warm advocates; it is also one whose opponents, under such circumstances as we have cited, will find their task of defeating it ever and ever more difficult.

SPARE THE TREES, PLANT NEW ONES!

In another column of this issue Prof. C. A. Whiting of the University of Utah undertakes a calm and interesting discussion of our native forests in Utah, and points out the duty of our people with reference to the important forestry question as it applies directly to us. With the gentleman's argument, conclusions and suggestions the News is in full and hearty accord. He sounds none too soon a note of warning which every consideration requires us to heed. The conditions which he depicts are so familiar and obvious that no one will be found to dispute them. His advice as to the preservation of the remnants of our meager forests, the planting of trees, the organization of a Forestry Association—all this is sound, timely and in the highest degree necessary. We bespeak for the article the thoughtful perusal of every reader, and for its concluding suggestions the active interest and quick acceptance of the leading men in every county of the Territory.

On more than one occasion recently the News has commented on the importance of the subject of tree culture, in its relations to the health and prosperity of the country; criticizing, also, the reckless and seemingly uncontrolled destruction of the native forests. The matter is at last in a fair way to receive more effective governmental notice than has heretofore been accorded it, though efforts of a more or less desultory character have not been wanting in the past to impose restrictions on tree-slaughtering and extend encouragement to tree-planting. In his recent report the U. S. secretary of the interior gave the important subject extensive mention, and so also did the President in his regular message to Congress. We trust that nothing but a hint will now be necessary to arouse the people of Utah to their duty in the premises, and that they will at once arrange to move out on the lines of intelligence toward the prevention of further spoliation and the cure of the evils already wrought.

FATAL NEGLIGENCE.

We have already commented upon the immense financial losses sustained by the railroad corporations and their employees during the fateful year just closed. In the great railroad business of the country there are, however, other elements that have interest for the public than the mere knowledge of how much or how little the various lines pay their capitalist stockholders or their laborers on train or track. One of these elements is the cause and extent of fatalities to rolling stock, employees and patrons—statistics of which are furnished from time to time, usually with some reluctance on the part of the roads, and invariably with a certain shock to the sensibilities on the part of those who patronize and ride upon them. When we are told, for instance, that at least one hundred persons lost their lives through railway accidents during August, September and October, on their way to the World's Fair and homeward, most of us become so worked up that we are tempted to agree with the Railroad Gazette in branding the ghastly fact as a “national humiliation.” And when these and similar figures are continually thrust before us, and we wait in vain for the railroads to give a satisfactory explanation of them, we are very ready to agree, whether justly or not, with the writer in last month's North American Review, who attributes this fearful sacrifice of human life to “negligence in operation.” This latter writer, Mr. Prout, makes a comparative study of casualties in this and the mother country, and his conclusions are that traveling by rail is at least five times as hazardous in the United States as in England. In England, the block system is used on 90 per cent of the roads against 5 per cent in our own country. Mr. Prout suggests that railways be compelled to pay heavy damages for accidents, which would, in time, lead them to adopt all possible safeguards. On the other hand, it must be admitted that our laws have tended to depress earnings to the minimum and it is believed that freightage in many instances is done below cost already. In England, the revenue from freight is much larger than here. It would appear that our restrictive legislation is carried out at the expense of human martyrdom. This latter suggestion is not alone urged by the railroads, it seems on its face to be reasonable and just. If it may be accepted as such, it confirms the complaint of "negligence of operation" as above; but while directly laying the blame upon the corporations, a large portion properly may be indirectly laid at the door of the government, which, it must be said, has essayed to grapple with the transportation question in a vacillating and impractical way, apparently not knowing where to begin, where to stop, and when to get through.

CATHOLICS PERSECUTED.

A dispatch from Berlin now contains the sickening details of the massacre of Catholics by Cossacks in a small town of the vast Russian empire. It appears that about a hundred of these semi-barbarous soldiers attacked a church where many worshippers were congregated, and commenced to desecrate the place and maltreat the people. An alarm was sounded and the inhabitants of the place gathered and drove away the invaders, after a hot fight. Shortly after this the Cossacks, to the number of six hundred, returned and renewed their work of vandalism in the church. Crucifixes, images and altar ornaments were broken to pieces. About a hundred of the unfortunate people were cruelly murdered, their blood sprinkling the floor of their sacred edifice. Others were captured and driven to an open place, where they were stripped of their clothes, men and women alike, and beaten almost to death. And all this seems to have been done under the direction of regular officers of a Russian regiment.

In connection with this outrage the recent correspondence between Rome and Petersburg will be remembered. The pope a short time ago sent the czar a forcible protest against the persecutions of Catholics in Russia, threatening to denounce the autocrat before the world, if a change did not occur in his attitude toward them. The report says the czar, on the reception of this message, grew furious and proposed to take revenge. His wrath, however, was appeased on representation to him that the Roman pontiff might change his policy towards Russia in favor of the Triple Alliance. A special messenger, a Catholic bishop, was therefore dispatched to Rome to negotiate the conditions of peace between the heads of the two great divisions of the Catholic church.

Of course the question will naturally arise, how far the Russian emperor can be held responsible for the fearful massacre of these Catholics. Probably a great many things are done by his semi-barbarous subjects, which the ruler regrets as much as anyone else. In this case, however, the suspicion is pardonable that the massacre was intended as an answer to the strong language of the pope. Should further investigation prove that suspicion to be only too well founded, and should no adequate reparation be made, it is not improbable that whatever political influence the pope still has will be exercised against Russia and in favor of the powers of the Triple Alliance. Any such leaning, no matter how trifling, will not fail to necessitate new and perhaps critical moves on Europe's great political chess-board.

THE END NOT YET.

The Seventh-day Adventists in Michigan have received another impression that the end of the world is very near. And so strong has the conviction become that a great many of them are donating their worldly goods to missionary funds for the purpose of converting the world to the seventh-day doctrine before the supposed destruction takes place. At a recent meeting held in Battle Creek, Mich., the people present gave up their gold watches, rings and other jewelry; and others are selling their homes at a sacrifice in order to become preachers.

Panics of this kind have occurred before, both in ancient and modern times, but the world still moves. The trouble is that a good many have read the prophetic declarations of sacred writ as if the mere studying of these would turn them into prophets, the falsity of which supposition has been proven again and again. Prophecy was never intended for that purpose.

To prepare the world for a coming change is a most laudable work, for present conditions are such that some change is necessary. Those who seek in worldly possessions their only happiness need to be reminded that they are building on foundations without stability; and those who consider themselves "oppressed" should be called upon to look forward to a time near at hand when such conditions shall no longer exist. The world should be taught that the coming change is the establishment of a new dispensation on earth, not its destruction. Thus, in the doctrine of a second advent of the Savior is hope and an admonition to well-doing to all. Those who think they at this time must sell their homes as a preparation for the end of the world must be ignorant of the teachings of inspired men on that important subject.

A YOUNG PLANT BUT STURDY.

There may be movements in the development of human affairs that have gone forward with greater rapidity than the cause of woman suffrage, but there are few that have been pursued with greater perseverance or promoted with more zeal and devotion. Its champions have encountered incalculable and in most instances unreasonable opposition, and they have had to go about all the time with visor down and lance in rest, not only to gain inch by inch the ground maintained by the enemy, but to defend against insidious attack the small portion already wrested by themselves. But this they have done courageously and uncomplainingly; they have been satisfied with gains that were small and in other eyes would have seemed insignificant; and if at the close of any hard-fought campaign they were able to see their principles extended and their outposts advanced if ever so little, they have considered their tireless vigilance and their undaunted courage amply repaid.

But their progress has not been altogether slow; or late years the equal suffrage idea has obtained immense momentum. A paper before us gives some startling figures as to the present status of the case and makes very interesting comparisons as to the area of land and the number of people over and among whom it has made its influence potent. It is shown that women now have the full suffrage—can vote for all elective offices—in Square miles.	People.

Wyoming .....	97,890	80,000
Colorado .....	103,925	419,000
New Zealand .....	104,083	621,000
Iceland .....	89,643	72,000
Isle of Man .....	280	55,000
Jersey (British Island) .....	45	60,000
Pitcairn Island .....	8	200
	345,723	1,287,200

This much as to statistics. As to comparisons it follows that the women have full suffrage in an area larger than New York, Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida combined; larger than all the states on the Atlantic; larger than all the states on the Pacific; larger than all the territories—Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Oklahoma, and District of Columbia; larger than England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Switzerland, Greece, Turkey, Portugal, Bulgaria and Montenegro combined; larger than all Scandinavia; larger than France and Prussia united. Also that they have full suffrage among more people than either Arkansas, California, Louisiana, Maryland, Nebraska, or South Carolina; more people than New Hampshire, Vermont, Oregon and Delaware combined; more people than all Alaska, Arizona, British Columbia, District of Columbia, Idaho, Indian Territory, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Utah united.

These impressive figures apply only to those lands where woman enjoys full suffrage. The regions where she has the partial suffrage (England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Canada, Sweden, Kansas, Australia, etc.) are many, and enormous in area and population. As still more emphatically showing the progress of the great cause, detailed statistics of these latter would be interesting if space permitted their reproduction here. Enough has probably been given, however, to show that the little acorn of a few years ago has taken firm root in kindly soil, has already made straight, strong and shapely growth, and is casting its welcome shade over and upon responsive sections in all parts of the earth.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.

IN OKLAHOMA.

As the hand on the clock indicated 8 a. m. we loaded our effects in a little spring wagon and bade goodby to our friends at our southern Indian home, Sulphur Springs, Chickasaw Nation, Indian territory. Elders Collet and Davis accompanied their Salt Lake friends to Davis, the railroad station, ten miles distant. As our team moved off in their customary slow and unsteady gait, pulling our wagon by "plow gears," chain-tug harness, with collar and back strap only, and no brake to steady our easy-running wagon, we found ourselves under the necessity of holding fast as we went slambang in the creek and low places. We rolled over the prairie and here and there through a skirt of timber, down in a hollow, up on a hill, where, commanding a view of the country, we could see before us an ocean, as it were, of land, as it reached out in its broad expanse far as the eye could reach.

Our teamster was a good old-fashioned Christian of the Campbellite persuasion. He, with the Elders, were entertained by the reading from Church history by Bro. K. who read aloud on the subject of the early rise of the Church. When the period was reached where Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery received the Aaronic Priesthood, a discussion on authority ensued, which terminated with the good-bye shake several miles distant. Strange, is it not? that our Christian friends still hang to the imaginary authority they claim to have received from Christ, when, in His divine injunction to His Apostles, He, said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," and "go ye therefore and teach all nations." When our respected teamster became confused on this point, he then clung to the descent of authority, which of course was upset again by the apostasy. Here the good old brother was lost at sea, and when John's Revelation concerning "another angel" that was to fly in the midst of heaven, bringing the everlasting Gospel was sprung on him he replied, "Now you've got me—all good natured of course, and an expression of desire to learn more of the good things we preached and practiced, avowing that if he could find we were right he would make the transfer.

The Chickasaw country is much lower and correspondingly warmer than Oklahoma, and as the Elders parted with their visitor at the depot, the train pulled out and commenced a gradual ascent, finally crossing the Canadian river, which, by the way, is the dividing line between our Indian land and the new prospective state of Oklahoma. At about the middle of their "beautiful land" (meaning of the word Oklahoma), we cross the backbone at about fourteen hundred feet, while at the Springs it cannot be more than nine hundred. The altitude of the country averages probably one thousand feet above the sea. Here and there, irregularly located on the creek bottoms, by a clump of timber or on a prairie, we see dotted the Indian homes and their farms cultivated by their white renters.

Now we have crossed the bridge, we are on the surveyed lands of the newly-opened Territory of Oklahoma, which can be readily seen by the regularly laid off lands, the roads, the houses and farms. The towns and cities as we find them are springing up like magic—a wilderness but four and a half years ago, now teeming with vegetation and humanity. We have passed several cities of no small proportions, towns here and there, and on every quarter except school lands, a farm house.

Oklahoma City is called by the brakeman, and the train stops at the second city of the new territory, containing 10,000 inhabitants. Down below the level of the prairie in a bend of the north fork of the Canadian river, nearly surrounded by trees growing on the fertile bottom land of this stream; and on the north and east, on the rolling hills of the prairie, is the bustling little commercial city of Oklahoma. There are several prominent streets of respectable wealth, built up on either side with substantial business blocks two and three stories high, of native stone and brick—banks and mercantile establishments, up to modern cities of twenty years' standing; while in the suburbs are many costly and beautiful dwellings. The city is lighted by electricity and accommodated with water works; it has its manufactures and other modern developments. The Santa Fe train pulls out of the depot and leaves more people standing on the platform than are generally seen at one time in a body these days. The cars are filled, the air is balmy, the weather dry, bright and beautiful—so warm we have to open the car windows for ventilation.

We pass several cities of ordinary railroad town size, and now reach Norman, the highest elevation, whence we descend, coming north still towards the Kansas line, still passing towns and cities, and as far as the feeble eye can survey out over the vast prairie are farms and houses to be seen. A stream of water is crossed; we pass through a skirt of timber reaching from the west to the east till it widens out into the great timbered country of the civilized tribes.

We are now at Guthrie, the metropolis. Fully two hundred people are on the platform, hurrying to and fro; cabs, hacks and wagons are loaded, the streets are thronged, the people are dispersed. The change is made and the train is gone. To the east the city lies on a rise of ground with quite a steep ascent from the railroad track; while west it gradually descends to the Cottonwood—a small river running through the west side of the city; while curving well to the west and north is the Red fork of the Arkansas or Cimmon river. Unlike Oklahoma city, Guthrie is situated on an open bleak prairie among the rolling rough hills of the broken country. Fifteen thousand people live here, who enjoy equal if not superior advantages over the commercial city on the south. Wholesale establishments, manufacturers, other business houses, fine residences, a progressive city—all are here. "These cities are built to stay," said a business man from New York who was erecting a large block, and the surrounding country warrants the statement, unless perchance a cyclone sweeps them away, for such things are known in this country. Not more than four farmers as yet are occupying one section of land. What may be said of the country when five times the present population carry their produce to the cities!

We are now at Orlando, the last city in Oklahoma proper, from which point the greatest rush was made into the Cherokee Strip, which was opened up September 16th of this year, on the train which carried in thousands. We could see on either side the rough, rolling country where for ten miles men and women on horseback kept pace with the train in the mad rush for lots in Perry, the prospective city of the Strip. In three hours not less than 80,000 people were on the spot, and filing on the small lots staked out by the United States surveyor. Two sections are covered by this giant infant of modern times. Tents and rude shanties are being displaced by better and more substantial structures. Order is being established out of confusion. During Perry's early days, they averaged three men in two days killed. There are about 6,200 claims in all, and 5,000 people located; it will take about three years to clear up the contests now standing on them. There were 110 saloons and 500 lawyers at one time. Of course their number has been reduced now to about half. There are about twenty-eight lumber yards, and judging from the thousands of lumber shanties and houses sprung up in the last ninety days, they must have done a rushing business. There are at least sixty-two grocery stores and of course others in proportion. Business lots of small proportions have changed hands already for a consideration of from $300 to $2000, and residence property at half of that amount. Not less than four daily newspapers are in existence, three of which are Democratic. John Brogan was elected mayor on October 21. He and a Democratic council run the municipal machinery. Perry, now hardly one hundred days old, has 20,000 inhabitants, and is becoming somewhat conservative. They don't kill quite so many men per day, claims are being settled, and things generally are assuming a normal condition.

Continuing along this branch of the Santa Fe, as also another line of the same road forty miles west, and on the Rock Island in the western part of the Strip, are other towns and cities, while on almost every quarter section of land a farmer has located. Six months having been provided on which to make final proof, the settlers mostly have gone home during the winter. There was possibly an average of from four to six claimants for every piece of land and as the prior rights are being proven, the population temporarily is being reduced.

In accordance with the organic act in the establishment of Oklahoma, all lands of the Indians opened for settlement subsequently were to belong to Oklahoma proper. With the new additions of the Cherokee Strip and "No Man's Land" it covers an area of at least 200 by 200 miles—fully 20,000,000 acres of land. The lands ceded to the government by the Indian tribes are as follows:

April 22, 1889, the Outlet, belonging to the Seminoles and Creeks, containing over one and a half million acres of land. This was the first settlement and commencement of Oklahoma.

Since then and on the 22nd of Sept., 1891, the Iowa, Sac and Fox, Pottawatomie and Shawnee, called the Pott country, came in.

Early in 1892 the Cheyenne's and Arapahoes furnished a large piece.

And this fall, Sept. 16, the Cherokee Strip of 6,000,000 acres, and "no man's land" of half that amount have been added, making in all 20,000,000 acres at least.

The remaining tribes which have not come in are the five civilized—the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks and Seminoles; the semi-civilized Osages and the Ka sa tribe, the Poncas, Ottos, Missouris, Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches, and some small factions in the northeast corner of the Cherokee country, the Senecas, Wyandottes, Ottawas, Peorias and Quapaws. The present Oklahoma is situated south of Kansas, north of the remaining Kiowas, Comanches and Apaches' reservation, the Chickasaw nation and a piece of unassigned land within the corner by Texas and the Panhandle of Texas, on the west by the Panhandle and on the east by the remaining unallotted Indian territory. A strong pull is being made to get all in and make one great Democratic state.

The settlers of this new territory have come from all parts of the country, more especially from Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, Missouri and the neighboring states—a very good class of citizens. Considering the progress they have made and the indebtedness they have incurred, they must be of the "progressive American" type, possessed of a great deal of the "western push."

Arkansas city is called out; we now have crossed the line into the state of Kansas, where the writer will end his narrative until he is heard from at his old Indian home, at Manard, Indian Territory. ANDREW KIMBALL.

Written for this Paper.

BOLD APACHE THIEVES.

COLONIA SACHECO, Chihuahua, Mexico, Dec. 16, 1893.—Among the many incidents common to pioneer life we have our quota of the dramatic. On Tuesday morning last Bishop Jesse N. Smith Jr., of this place, E. L. Taylor and Elmore Cardon of Juarez started to hunt cattle on the Rio Garilan, expecting to return this (Saturday) evening. Learning this morning that they had returned late last night I went up and found them at breakfast when the following conversation took place:

"Well, Bishop, what success in your cattle drive?"

"Pretty good."

"I didn't expect you home before tonight."

"That was our program, but the presence of some unknown parties in our camp during our absence made it desirable for us to come sooner."

"How, why, what was the matter?"

"The first and second day we rode the North Creek range some fifteen miles west; Thursday night moved our stock and camp three miles south to Father Naegle's corral on the Garilan; Friday morning we separated into two parties one to return to camp at noon and herd the cattle already gathered. The boys returned after about four hours' ride and found our entire outfit had been stolen during our absence and we were left without bedding and provisions."

"Indeed, and what were your losses?"

"Four saddle-horses (you see we each had a fresh mount), eight quilts, two pairs of blankets, a pillow, two coats, a new overcoat, a new oilcloth slicker, provisions, cooking utensils, packing outfit, horse-shoeing tools, etc."

"Did you ascertain who were the thieves?"

"We found not a single track in the camp, the indications being that the thieves had walked about upon the bedding while they gathered up the plunder. Some two hundred yards from camp we found a single track which we supposed to be a muffled horse-track. This would indicate that the thieves were Apache Indians who have a custom of shoeing their horses with rawhide moccasins, which serve the double purpose of preserving the horse's feet from the rocks and his rider from pursuit, as should he make no track except on soft and dusty ground."

"How are they secured?"

"You see the Indians live in great part on beef and game, the hides of which they cut into pieces of convenient size and shape and place them on the horses' feet while yet green (or water soaked and fasten the edges about the ankle with a draw string, where they are left to dry upon the horses' feet when they are removed for future use; I should say that a handful of grass is placed under the horses' feet to prevent the hide from shrinking to the exact size and shape of the foot and to more effectually muffle the tracks. The indications were that our horses as soon as caught were unhobbled and muffled and our efforts to follow the track were unavailing. A party of our boys accidentally coming upon a deserted Indian camp the past summer found a great number of these cast off rawhide shoes lying around."

"Do you then suppose that it was in fact Apache Indian?"

"Since the massacre of the Thompson family a year ago the 19th of last September the notorious 'Kid' and his band have been at large and I believe they have spent much of that time in the fastnesses of these mountains. You will remember they made an attack last June upon a prospecting party only twenty-five miles from here and bore away seven burros laden with provisions, ammunition, clothing and seventy-five dollars in cash; also in September last when potatoes, squashes and corn were unharvested, they actually came into our field and carried off a winter supply. At one of their deserted camps as much as a wagon box full of corn cobs were found where they had apparently cut off and dried the green corn. There, too, was found an old quilt supposed to be one stolen from the Thompson family. Yes, we believe it was Apache Indians and are glad they were satisfied without our scalps, as they must have shadowed us for days, and might have easily surprised or ambushed us."

"What then do you consider to be our condition here as to safety?"

"They are but a small band of perhaps from five to seven and would not likely undertake an attack on our settlements so long as we maintain proper precautionary measures. In fact, I can see no object they could have in doing so, in view of the consequent risk to themselves as long as they are well provided with clothing, bedding and beef on the ranges. Indeed, this last incident would indicate that if their wants could be supplied they would not recklessly take life nor risk their own lives."

You may perhaps have heard of the recent skirmish between some of our brethren and a band of revolutionists in which our brethren were marvelously preserved. Aside from some temporary excitement, little came of it. The governor of the state of Chihuahua wrote the president of the principality in which we live, eulogizing in highest terms the valuable services of our people.

The Saints assembled as usual at their quarterly conference and had a most enjoyable time, winding up on Monday evening with an old-time social party—dancing, speeches, songs and goodfellowship.

Crops the last season were reasonably good for this country. Some losses of wheat and potatoes through excessive rains. Breadstuffs for the coming season are quite an important item with us. No snow has yet fallen here this winter. We are having frosty nights but delightful days. HENRY LUNT.

Written for this Paper.

CATSKILLS TO WASATCH.

I write you today from my distant eastern home according to my promise which was made during my pleasant call at your office a month ago today (November 28).

But now a grave question arises: How am I to write anything concerning my western trip that will at all interest the many readers of your paper? It seems a formidable task, and were it not that I regard my promises not like piecrust—made to be broken—I should indeed give it up.

October 28th dawned dark and rainy. As I looked from my window on the distant Catskill mountains, a fog deep and full met my gaze—not a very pleasant outlook for the day in which to start to Chicago and the World's Fair. Notwithstanding, early in the afternoon I was on my way passing through the old Empire state of New York with Buffalo at the western point where I was to change cars for Niagara Falls and suspension bridge, which every tourist should stop and see.

Of Niagara Falls so many descriptions have been written and rewritten by far abler pens than mine, and have been read and sung at nearly every fireside in the land, that I pass it by with just this thought: It seemed to me, as I looked on the gigantic cataract of Niagara, that if I all my life had been an infidel, that alone would compel me to say there is a God.

But on we go, passing through the bleak fields of the "queen's dominion," stopping for breakfast at London (not big London), then through the rolling hills and broad prairies, till finally, late in the night of the second day, we reach Chicago.

And indeed it is a great city with its lake frontage of twenty-two miles, fifty-eight miles on the river, and the distance between its northern and southern limit twenty-four miles, while at its broadest point it is ten and a half miles wide. But Chicago has labored hard to make the city what it is. For many years after it had become quite a flourishing town, the one invincible, universal, inevitable thing about the town was mud. The people were in despair since water will only run down hill, and part of the town was below the level of the lake.

The first effort at drainage was an experiment; in fact, many were the experiments, many were the failures; the whole prairie was at fault. At last people awoke to the fact that nothing could be of any permanent good short of raising the whole town. At once a high grade was established, to which all new buildings were required to conform. But this was not high enough; a higher one was ordered. Even this was not sufficient. A third raise was made, so that now the city stands nearly sixteen feet above the original prairie. Think of the task of lifting a city like this out of the mud and water high enough not only to make drainage possible, but perfect.

And then again, less than a quarter of a century ago Chicago lay a waste of smouldering ruins; and only about three years ago Jackson park was but a bleak swampy place. Today the whole world recognizes the transformation which converted the swamp into the "White City," the city of palaces such as mankind has never seen before.

But why dwell on Chicago and the great Fair? No pen, no tongue, can do it justice. I might speak of the woman's building, the naval exhibit, the lagoons and ponds, the Midway Plaisance with its curlics and camels, and the powerful electric search lights; but to be understood, to be appreciated, it all had to be seen. The days passed all too quickly and the great Exposition is a memory and we turn our faces westward—Manti City, Utah, being our destination. And while our journey was very pleasant, with the most jovial of traveling companions, yet we found ourselves weary and glad indeed when the trainmen shouted, "Colorado Springs, two hours for refreshments." While we had refreshed ourselves frequently as we came along, yet here was an opportunity for eating, and talking, and walking, and resting, and drinking, for two whole hours.

Colorado Springs lies for the most part on a wide plain, with level streets, yet it is only fifteen miles from the center of the springs to the summit of Pike's Peak, where, snow-capped, it lifts its mighty head as if in silent adoration of its maker. But is it not a curious fact that the springs from which this place takes its name are situated in Manitou, five or six miles distant west. The water of these springs have a world-wide reputation for their medicinal properties. The climate is most invigorating and healthful—the air dry, and a blue sky with a continuous sunshine. I doubt not there are many other places in the Rockies just as fine; but Colorado Springs is the Saratoga of the west, and a name and reputation go a long way.

But on we go, climbing the mountains, with the scenery impressive and grand beyond description. The rocky depths, the towering heights, stretch far up towards the sky—as we pass along we go through many little hamlets and towns nestling in among the canyons of the mountains. From Colorado into Utah Territory, which we find so rich in its attractions and resources; the mountain and river systems are just grand; the elevated regions not only store the moisture to fertilize the adjacent low lands, but they contain the mines of gold and silver, lead and coal and other metals and minerals. God has done great things for Utah—in great natural resources, in the balm of its health-giving and invigorating climate, the wonders of its mountains, the sylvan beauties of its valleys; and notwithstanding the necessity of irrigation, crops of all kinds are plenty. A strong and fertile soil, an unclouded sky, a clear atmosphere, an equable climate, the cereals, fruits and vegetables, are of a very superior quality.

Spending a week with my brother, John C. Witbeck, and his family at Manti City, a week I shall never forget—such warm hearts, such kind welcomes as I met with on every hand—leaves a warm, warm memory which time cannot efface. Being a teacher myself, I was only too glad to accept an invitation to visit the public school at Manti, with Prof. A. C. Nelson at the head of it. Both in methods of teaching and plan of work this school is equal to any of its kind in any place, east or west. The building, a new one, is fine, well planned to do a good work in. I can easily comprehend how proud (and justly so, too) the people of Utah must be of their schools and school buildings. Go back in imagination forty years! Think of how these people in the "valleys of the mountains" have labored, early and late, oftentimes cold and hungry, willing to endure isolation and privation, to be ostracized, only with this one thought in view—to make "the desert blossom like the rose"—to build homes, to rear their families, to serve God. Honor, all honor, I say to the sincere in heart, and the honest in purpose!

From Manti we go to Sterling by carriage. Here we found dear friends expecting us, and a bountiful dinner awaiting us. So on to Gunnison, where a pleasant visit and a good night's rest found us refreshed for a drive through the crisp morning air to the sheep pens where "our boys" were looking after the sheep interests. From here to Juab, where again we found friends looking for our arrival; and after spending a night with them, we start for Nephi, where kindred (near and dear) were also awaiting our coming. We leave them reluctantly after a day in their pleasant homes and this time we take the "iron horse" instead of the carriage for Salt Lake City.

This city was not a disappointment, even in cheerless November, for it is most beautifully situated. It does indeed possess elements of beauty in such variety and of such superior character as are found in few cities; and there clusters about this city matters of historic interest, which are peculiar to herself, and will long continue to be a source of interest to all classes of people. But I must hasten on—I can only speak of a few points in the city. It was my privilege to spend a Sunday there and to hear the Hon. George Q. Cannon speak in the great Tabernacle (which stands so unique in construction with its acoustic properties unequalled and its roof probably the largest span of unsupported wooden roof in the world); with its great organ containing 8000 pipes, and the scores and scores of singers that are gathered there, and there too in the dim light of the afternoon, I listened to the finest anthem I have ever heard sung. The Temple is a beautiful structure of Utah granite, while to the left the Assembly Hall, a building 120 feet long, and its central spire 126 feet in height. But is it not a pity that these really beautiful buildings should be surrounded by a high wall, which almost hides them from the sight of those who walk along the streets? My visit to the city postoffice was a very pleasant one—so perfect and complete are its details and appointments. No wonder Postmaster General Wanamaker during his visit there said it is one of the finest and best regulated offices in the United States. Mr. Nash, the city postmaster, is the right man in the right place. My brief call in the Tribune office, the Deseret News, the Woman's Exponent, were all very pleasant; and last but not least, my introduction and a few minutes conversation with Governor West, whom President Cleveland, with more than his usual good sense, has returned to Utah for this his second term.

But time flies, and in the grey early morning of another day I bid adieu to the city with its beautiful Jordan valley, its Great Salt Lake—and take the Union Pacific road for my far-off home. My pen is too weak, I cannot describe my journey from Salt Lake City to Ogden, with the Lake in sight on the west, and the glorious Wasatch range, rising in majesty and grandeur to the east. I change cars at Ogden from which point on, the scenery is grand. Vast masses of perpendicular rocks, tinted richly with all hues of brown and purple, red and pink, with now and then a sprinkling of gray, lift up their mighty walls; it seemed to me that the rocks were old castles and fortifications or solid masses of masonry—while the bent, upheaved, and twisted ones only added greatly to their beauty.

As we pass on through Wyoming and Nebraska—with lunch time at Green River and Julesburg—the scenery changes into quiet valleys and fertile farms, and very early in the morning of the fifth day the land grows familiar and nearer our own home. And while our trip has been one of much pleasure and marked on every hand with kindness (true politeness) yet in the language of the poet we feel to exclaim—

Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Be it ever so humble
There is no place like home.

ALTA WITBECK.
WEST COXSACKIE, Greene county,
N. Y.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

The Hon. John T. Caine, ex-delegate to Congress, was December 28 appointed, by Governor West, auditor of territorial public accounts and recorder of marks and brands, to succeed Mr. Arthur Pratt.

Z. C. Christensen, of Fountain Green, sends the following brief and unique item to the News: Please inform your many subscribers that the beautiful sidewalks of this town are covered with six inches of snow and that on one day recently the gay, game loving boys of this place killed three hundred rabbits.

The one-story addition to the south side of the Salt Lake county P. O. House was completed Dec. 30 and Selectman Bamberger is accordingly happier than he has been for many moons. The new addition contains thirty beds and will accommodate fifty inmates, thus greatly relieving the great pressure for room in the building proper.

The actual removal of the land office to its new quarters in the B. Y. Trust company's building on First South street west will not take place till next week, but from now on preparations will be made for occupying the new quarters. December 28th the safe was being removed from the old location to the more commodious rooms to be occupied by the land officials.

Coroner Taylor Dec. 28 received the following telegram from Lewiston, Montana, in response to a dispatch sent by him announcing the death of Miss Mattie D. Graham:

Please bury Miss Graham in a Christian cemetery. Will write.
MRS. L. J. HARRIS.

The request of Mrs. Harris, mother of the deceased, will be complied with.

Doctors Root, Witcher and Niles Dec. 28 partially removed a tumor of immense proportions from the body of Mrs. W. W. Stewart, who resides on Sixth South street between Third and Fourth West streets.

The patient was in a very critical condition prior to the operation and the knife was only used as a method of last resort. She is still in an exceedingly precarious state, though Dr. Root says the surgeons hope for the best and thinks that she may recover.

PROVO, Utah county, Dec. 30.—Combs of Sevier county returned today from Denver, where he has been collecting testimony in a big cattle stealing case. Clate Gannett and Aleck Palmer are charged with stealing a large number of cattle from the people of Sevier county and shipping a car load to Denver. The sheriff found the parties who the cattle were sold to and got other affidavits, also marks and brands.

Up to Friday, Dec. 29 no word or intimation of any kind had been received regarding the whereabouts of Miss Graham's little eleven-year old daughter, concerning whom the mother spoke so often and so feelingly shortly before her death. Whoever the persons having her in charge are, they must, it is thought, have heard of the mother's demise by this time, and there is considerable speculation why the authorities have not been communicated with.

Between 2 and 3 o'clock Tuesday, January 2 the combination brick and frame residence of H. G. Button, on Second West near Ninth South was discovered in flames. The fire spread rapidly and in response to a call the West Side department made a good run and prevented the total destruction of the house. The loss, however, will reach close to $1000. There is insurance to the amount. The furniture was carried from the building in time to be saved.

A Norwegian named Peter Evenson, recently employed as a quarryman near Park City, died at the Lincoln House in this city at 2:30 December 27 after a protracted debauch covering, it is said, a couple of weeks or more. Those who are familiar with the case say that he literally drank himself to death. The man had no relatives here so far as known and friends will look after his burial from Skewes' undertaking parlors tomorrow or next day. The idea of holding an inquest has been abandoned.

For thirty years Elder J. P. R. Johnson has been the honored Bishop of the First ecclesiastical ward, Provo city. On Sunday last he was released and was made a Patriarch of the Church. He is succeeded as Bishop by Elder Andrew Knudsen.

A change in the boundaries of the First and Second wards was also made. The two western tiers of blocks between F and H streets were transferred from the First to the Second ward.

Elders F. M. Lyman and Abraham H. Cannon, of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, were present and assisted in the reorganization of the wards.

The present city and county officers and a good many of those for two administrations past gathered at the joint city and county building Monday, January 1st, where the structure, so far as completed, was thoroughly inspected. The Stars and Stripes were hoisted and flung to the breeze over both the city and county portions. In one of the upper rooms a fine luncheon was served and speeches made.

Last night a banquet was given at the Walker House in celebration of the same event. It was a feast of the fine things of the land and continued until near midnight when the guests departed for their homes.

Alex Wilkins, Provo, has received a telegram that his father-in-law and mother-in-law, Edson and Lillis Barney, residing at St. George, are both very ill, Mrs. Barney being scarcely expected to recover. Brother Barney is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, living member of the Church. He was baptized in Ohio, May 13, 1831. He is 87 years of age and his wife is 88 years. Brother Barney was promised by the Prophet Joseph that he should live to be 87 years of age, and a short time since he wrote to his children that his lease of life had expired, and he did not expect to remain on earth much longer.

Deputy Internal Revenue Collector W. W. Bailey has received official instructions to at once commence the work of re-registering the Chinese under the modification of the Geary act. He is especially enjoined to see to it that the requirements of the law regarding photographs, which must be "gun pictures of sufficient size and distinctness to plainly and accurately represent the entire face of the applicant, the head not to be less than one and a half inches from base of hair to base of chin," are taken, and that no tin type or other metal pictures will be received.

The general collector, Mr. Lyman, says he has not been advised as to what extra allowance if any will be made by the government for the work, and adds that it must be borne in mind that all of the Chinese who were registered last year will again have to do so or surely be deported.

Jan. 2, 1894.

As a matter of patriotism I feel to heartily endorse your recent article written by Professor C. A. Whiting on "Our Native Forests," and hope that his candid arguments may rouse the inhabitants of our Territory to a sense of the fact that the future destiny of Utah shall be determined more upon the treatment of our water resources than by the death or survival of political parties over which we are rightly enthused. I sincerely trust that the subject may receive consideration and support proportional to its value. Any assistance I may be able to render in establishing the working force proposed shall be cheerfully granted by

Your humble servant,
ALVIN BORQUEST.
Richfield.

Charles or Edward Mason, better known in these parts as "Kid" Mason, died shortly before 10 o'clock Monday, January 1st, from the effects of the stiletto wound in his left breast inflicted by the desperate and dissolute "Nellie" Ogden at a resort of which the latter was an inmate.

It was known from the first that Mason was a very badly injured man, though for some reason there was a strong effort on the part of certain individuals to make as little of the case as possible and to even pass it by lightly. Now that the worst has resulted they incline to greater silence than before.

It has been ascertained that the deceased has parents residing at Bloomington, Illinois, and that his father is an ex-wagoner of that place.

Coroner Taylor is not satisfied with the appearance of the case and after a consultation with County Attorney Murphy today decided that he would hold an inquest over the remains of Mason.

The champion beggar of the season was fined $30 in the municipal court recently, says the Portland Oregonian, and when she had paid the amount she still had a cash balance of $80 in her pocket. This beggar was a woman who gave her name as Nathalie Vebauwhede and claims to be a native of France. She came to town several years ago, accompanied by her husband and two children, and an old man, whom she claimed was her uncle. Nathalie took occasion to call upon Chief of Police Hunt soon after her arrival with a pitiable story about a blind husband and two small children, and a request that her uncle might be allowed to play the hand organ on the street. The chief refused the request and sent the woman to Secretary Walpole of the city board of charities. She wanted to go to San Francisco, and the city board of charities would not send her, so she went to begging. She must have been very successful, for a few days later she invested $750 of her savings in a ranch in Washington county. She also carries a very fine gold watch.

Territorial Secretary Richards sat as high judge again Dec. 27 at a drawing of lots for office. The proceeding is one with which he is becoming quite familiar and he seems to rather enjoy the marked expressions of serious expectancy on the countenances of those who are obliged to undergo the operation.

The lucky and the unlucky appeared before him today by proxy. They were John E. Eyre and New. S. Whitney, who at the last election received the votes as councilmen. Mr. Eyre was represented by Attorney Thomas Adams and Mr. Whitney by David Mattheson. Mr. Adams drew the lucky piece of paper, and the office accordingly went to Mr. Eyre.

The next case was that of the right to the office of superintendent of schools for Iron county in which the contestants were William H. Dalley and Henry Leigh. Adams also represented Dalley and again drew the lucky scrap of paper from the hat. Mr. Leigh's interests were looked after by Captain F. P. Addeleman.

Tuesday about noon Oscar and Tracey Bingham, sons of Bishop Bingham, of Riverdale, and John Ahlander, of the same place, went skating on the Weber river, which is now covered with a thick layer of ice. The boys enjoyed the exhilarating and pleasant sport for some little time, when one of them observed that the ice was cracking. In vain did the boys try to get off, and down went Tracey Bingham and John Ahlander. Oscar, seeing the danger in which his brother and playmate were, made a heroic effort to rescue them, when he also went into the chilling waters and shared the fate of those whom he would have saved.

A small, crippled boy stood on the bank and witnessed the last struggles of his playmates, but was powerless to render any assistance. He, however, gave the alarm and soon many willing hands appeared. The bodies were recovered within a few minutes after they last went under the ice. Dr. Gordon was hastily summoned from Ogden, but when he arrived death had claimed them. The eldest of the boys was but 12 years old, while the youngest was 9. The parents and other relatives feel very keenly their sad bereavement, and in their grief they have the sympathy of a host of friends.

December 30 the statue of President Brigham Young, which is to adorn the southeast corner of the Temple Block, arrived in this city. It has been on exhibition at the World's Fair for the past six months, and has been viewed there by many Utah people. Today it was conveyed from the railway depot to the Temple Block, and placed inside the east gates, just in front of the architect's office and almost directly in line with the southeast corner of the Temple.

At present the figure, which was made from the model by Sculptor C. E. Dallin, is in the wooden framework in which it was shipped. When the memorial committee go on with their work it will be placed on a pedestal, and will be raised to a height of about 25 feet. The present dark color of the bronze of which the statue is made will probably give way to gold color, as the figure may be gilded like that of the angel on the Temple.

The statue shows to be about ten and a half feet high. The head, shoulders and upper part of the body are a striking likeness of the great Pioneer. The News reporter had to listen to the criticism, however, that the lower part is not so good; this being particularly the case with the right leg. The appearance of that member's being bent between the thigh and knee may, however, be modified or entirely removed by the position which the statue will occupy when it is put in place.

A deep laid and craftily concocted plot on the part of prisoners to escape from the county jail was fortunately nipped in the bud December 26 by Jailor W. F. Hill, but for whose keen eye nearly a score of men under detention at that institution would, in all probability, very soon have been at liberty. Upon going his final rounds about 10:30 last night Mr. Hill caught sight of two small pieces of brick lying upon the cellar floor, immediately underneath the revolving cells. At first he was at a loss to account for this, and a search around there failed to afford any clue as to where the broken brick came from. The jailor determined, however, not to let the matter rest until he had satisfied himself on this point. Instructing the man on night duty to keep a more than usually careful watch, he this morning, immediately after breakfast had been served to the prisoners, set about making a further and closer investigation; this time with satisfactory results.

Against the west wall of the jail, between two of the barred windows, and only a few feet from the ground outside, hangs a framed card setting forth the rules and regulations of the prison. This wall is three bricks in thickness, and upon moving aside the card Mr. Hill at once solved the problem. There, sure enough, was cut a gaping hole some 18 by 16 inches in size. Six or more of the bricks had been carried away; the outside layer had been "tapped," and it would not have required much more labor to let in daylight. In order to prevent the plaster around the ragged edges from falling, the would-be jail breakers had placed a coating of soap upon them.

There are more prisoners in the county jail at this time than at any period since Sheriff McQueen took the reins. They number in all thirty-five, but the majority of them are held to await the action of the next grand jury.

COTTON AND CANDLES.

PABOWAN, Iron Co., Utah, Dec. 27, 1898.—Last Saturday evening, the 23rd inst., the Bishop granted the use of our meeting house to the members of the Sunday school and other parties to erect a Christmas tree, etc., and to have a general good time for all that might wish to attend. Two beautiful pine trees were erected, covered with presents for the children and for others, and filled with lighted candles. The house, including the galleries, was filled with people; between seven and eight hundred were present.

The first part of the program, consisting of songs, recitations, speeches, etc., went off first rate and all went well until Santa Claus and his wife appeared. Santa Claus had finished his speech and introduced his wife to the people but directly after the introduction of Mrs. Santa Claus her dress caught fire in some way from the candles on the tree, and being covered with cotton to represent snow, in a moment she was in a sheet of flame which nearly reached the ceiling. The gentleman representing Santa Claus tried to brush off the fire with his hands; in so doing he burned his hands considerably. Rugs were hastily snatched up and thrown on her; gentlemen pulled off their overcoats and wrapped them around the lady and succeeded in smothering the flames. But during this time parties in the body of the house shouted: "Fire! Fire! The house is going! the house is going!"

Then a stampede for the doors and outside ensued. A number of the leading men stood up shouting to the people that the danger was all over and begging them to sit down, but it seemed of no avail for a time. In the rush to get out one of the heating stoves in the center of the house was knocked over and would have set the house on fire had not some cool men got around it and righted it up again. As it was one woman got her hand rather badly burned; in the crush she was compelled to throw it out to keep herself from falling on the stove. One woman was knocked down and being trampled on when some men rushed in, held the crowd back and got her on her feet again. Some women with babies on their arms fell and rolled to the bottom of the steps going out of the building.

After a little, order was restored, when it was found no one was seriously hurt excepting Miss Ada Orton (daughter of Alexander Orton), the young lady personating Mrs. Santa Claus. She fortunately had on her hands large, white woolen mittens, and throwing her hands over her face kept out the fire to a goodly extent. Yet her face is rather badly burned and her arms very badly. She is now doing quite as well as could be expected and has the very kindest wishes of everybody here for her speedy recovery.

We trust our little experience of last Saturday night will enable us all to be more careful and wiser in the future. One little girl, looking for her mother, finally found her, when the mother said: "My darling, were you afraid the house would burn down?" She replied, "No, ma; I thought it was God's house and He would not let it burn down, but I was afraid for you!"

WM. C. MCGREGOR.

INDUSTRIES, COMMERCE AND MINES.

W. W. Wallace, probate judge of Sevier county, is a firm believer in the prosperous future of his locality. He is full of information regarding the resources of his county, and is filled with a commendable desire to let the public know of the advantages of Sevier as a place for home-seekers. He says regarding the county: At no time since the first settlement of the country have times been more auspicious. While other parts are injuriously affected by the prevailing depression in business, Sevier county is moving along the even tenor of its way. As it never enjoyed the questionable benefits of a "boom," it has none of the evils thereof to recover from.

Judge Wallace states that the climate of Sevier is hard to excel. The atmosphere is dry and the winters mild and pleasant. On account of the mild winters the valley is particularly adapted to the raising of fruit. The county extends about thirty miles north and south and forty-two miles east and west. In this 1,280 square miles there is 45,108 acres of tillable land, which on the county assessment rolls is valued at $458,801. This is exclusive of the university lands, about 8,000 acres, which will be sold this winter.

Taking the rolls of the county assessor as a basis, Sevier county has about 8,000 horses, valued at $160,000; 15,000 cattle, valued at $150,000; and 75,688 sheep, valued at $155,000. The total valuation of taxable property exceeds a million and a half dollars. There are 52 miles of telegraph line in the county, but only 7½ miles of railway.

Sevier was first settled in 1864, but an Indian war the next two years compelled the settlers to abandon their homes, so that it was 1871 before permanent settlements were established. The people have built since that time 206 miles of irrigating canals, exclusive of laterals, etc.; there are 17 canal companies. The ditches are all owned by the farmers, and there are no bonded or floating debts.

The Sevier valley is very fertile, and the mountain sides afford pasturage for vast herds of cattle, horses and sheep. The alfalfa and grain crops are very heavy. Or lucern there can be produced, the judge says, five tons to the acre, and as high as 82 bushels of wheat and 97 bushels of barley to the acre has been realized. These, of course, were special instances, and do not represent the average yield.

There are two mountain ranges passing through the county, the Wasatch and the Oquirrh; the summit of the latter divides Sevier from Millard county. Throughout these mountains building stone of superior quality abounds in great variety, and is easily accessible to all the settlements.

The county seat, Richfield, has about 2,000 inhabitants, and is located in a rich farming district, the soil being red clay loam. Richfield is located on the site of a prehistoric city, as is shown by the ruins which have been found. It has two steam planing mills, a steam flouring mill, a grain elevator with a capacity of 5,000 bushels, and good school and church buildings. A new public school house was completed the past summer, at a cost of about $1,300. A new court house, which Judge Wallace says is the best building of the kind outside of Salt Lake City, was also built the past season at a cost of some $14,000. Richfield is nineteen miles from Salina, the railway terminus.

Monroe, ten miles south of Richfield, and in a similar section of farming country, has a population of 1,250. There are warm springs at Richfield, but at Monroe there are hot springs of high medicinal value. There are in the town a flouring mill, a planing mill, a furniture factory and good school and church buildings. The place is the residence of a number of wealthy cattle and sheep owners, and beautiful streets and good residences are characteristic of the town.

Salina, the terminus of the Rio Grande Western southern branch, has a population of 1,200, and is at present the most important commercial town in southern Utah. The railway company has some good buildings there. While the surrounding district is a rich farming country, the soil is different to that further south in being a black clay loam. There is in process of construction at Salina a stone public school building which will cost $12,000. There are also good church and school buildings, a flouring mill and a planing mill. Salt, onyx, and a superior quality of gypsum abound in the mountains in close proximity to the town, while a few miles up the canyon alum and coal have been discovered in large quantities. Several salt works are engaged in a small way in the manufacture of salt, and there is room for the profitable employment of capital in an extensive line in this industry. The sheep and cattle interests of the town are also large. Judge Wallace says of Salina's prospects: "By reason of its location the town cannot help becoming an important railway center at no distant day. It is situated at the mouth of Salina canyon, which is the natural gateway of that section of country between the east and the west. There are but few passages penetrating the Wasatch range, and most of these are now used by railways and the grades are very steep. Engineers who have surveyed the Salina pass report a grade of only one per cent on one side of the range and two per cent on the other. From this we argue that Salina is destined to a bright future." The streams in the vicinity of the town are well filled with trout, and during the season many sportsmen are attracted there to capture the speckled beauties.

Elsinore is seven miles southwest of Richfield, in a similar section of country. The population will reach 800 souls. The town has a large flouring mill, a small brass foundry, and a porkpacking establishment. Elsinore put in the first system of waterworks in the Sevier valley.

Glenwood is six miles east of Richfield, in a mountain cove, and is beautifully situated. The soil there is black loam. The population is about 700. The town has fine water power, which Judge Wallace says is the best in Utah. There are two flouring mills there. The people have extensive cattle and sheep interests. There are large deposits of silica in the mountains above town.

Joseph City, fourteen miles southwest of Richfield, is a pretty place with 800 inhabitants. The new schoolhouse which has been just completed cost $3500. The soil is fertile, and the cattle and sheep owners are prosperous. Hot mineral springs bubble out near the town and gold, silver, saltpeter, silica and copper are found in the hills close by. Two canyons give outlets to the south and west, and a railway through that country must include Joseph on its route.

The other towns of Sevier county are Redmond, Aurora, Sigurd, Plateau, Central, Annabella, and Burrville. A sanitarium was started at Plateau a couple of years ago, at which there were a number of patients from the East. They were all consumptives, and on some of them disease had made serious inroads. The curative effects of their stay at Plateau were in all instances remarkable. Judge Wallace says he is certain that that locality would have a very beneficial effect on those afflicted with pulmonary diseases, and would greatly prolong their lives and improve their condition even though it might not cure in every case.

D. J. Schofield, vice-president of the Nevada Southern, has recently returned from a trip over the road, says the San Francisco Chronicle. The line is now in operation from Blake, a station on the Atlantic and Pacific, a short distance west of The Needles, to Manvel, a town named after the recently deceased president of the Santa Fe. Manvel is in the vicinity of the famous Vanderbilt mining district. The road is doing a heavy ore business, and quite an amount of merchandise for the mining camps is shipped over its tracks.

"Work on the extension of the Nevada Southern to Good Springs, Lincoln county, Nevada, will be begun at once," said Mr. Schofield. "The contract has been let and the extension will be completed within ninety days. This will add twenty-five miles of trackage to the line. Good Springs is situated in the Yellow Pine mining district. The ores are very rich in lead, and are in demand at the Selby smelter. Ultimately the line will be carried across the Southern Nevada to the coal fields at Cedar City, U. T."

The coal fields in the neighborhood are extensive and will furnish an ample and cheap supply of fuel for Southern California. From Thistle, Utah, on the main line of the Rio Grande Western, a branch extends almost due south to Mantle and Salina. From the latter point the Rio Grande Western has surveyed a line through the rich valley of the Sevier river and touching several prosperous mining centers, to Parowan and westward a short distance north of Cedar City. When the Nevada Southern is completed to Cedar City it would be an easy matter for the Rio Grande Western to close the gap between that point and Salina.

From Los Angeles to Salt Lake there would be, as nearly as the mountainous character of the country permits, an air line.

Denver and San Francisco capitalists are interested in the Nevada Southern. The main offices are in Denver. An election was recently held in that city, at which the following officers were chosen: I. E. Blake, Charles B. Mason, William L. Beardsley and George C. Manley of Denver, and D. J. Schofield of San Francisco. The officers chosen were: President, I. E. Blake; vice president, D. J. Schofield; second vice president and general manager, R. S. DeBeret; secretary and attorney, George C. Manley; auditor and assistant to the president, Charles B. Mason.

George A. Snook is the present editor of the Coalville Chronicle. In the last issue of that journal he says: We are under the painful necessity of conveying the intelligence to the people that the former publisher of this paper, E. E. Newell, has left many people in this community in a state of anxiety as to his whereabouts; most of them are fearing that he has absconded. As to our individual interests, we can state that we have worked faithfully for the Chronicle as have others in its employ, and we have failed to receive our money. Mr. Newell has also misrepresented his affairs to us and we at least denounce his unbecoming methods of conducting the business of this office. We have papers whereby he places the Chronicle in our hands for the time being, and Mr. Newell has paid no attention to the office for two weeks past, except to collect money for his own benefit. To the public we wish to state that we have in our possession a letter from him wherein he places the Chronicle in our hands, to be conducted as our own, till his return. In conversation with the writer, said Newell has repeatedly said his intentions were to leave Coalville, and that the office would be the property of a stock company, a partial payment by the purchasers having been already made. This statement is denied by the men whose names he used, in conversation with us, as the leaders of the company, and people here feel sufficiently justified in believing that Mr. Newell has proved to be just what several citizens have repeatedly said he was. We now ask all subscribers to refuse to pay any bills presented for payment as coming from this office except to the present manager.

A Park City correspondent writing under date of December 29:

Ore shipments from the Crescent have been going on at a lively rate during the week and the Utah Central has been put to the test to supply a sufficiency of cars. Both first and second class ore has been shipped, and the total for the week from the Crescent is about seven hundred tons. The cause of the great rush is to get all the ore possible on the Rio Grande road before that road puts on the higher ore charges for hauling to Leadville.

The Utah Central has been delayed several times during the week by snow, but usually manages to pull in not more than an hour late.

Ontario mill has shipped during the week fifty-five bars of bullion and a large amount of first-class ore.

Silver King and Anchor still keep up their regular shipments, and these keep times lively in the city.

The Park City band boys are to give a concert at the Opera house Saturday evening, being assisted by the best of local talent. The boys are entitled to a large crowd, as they have at all times been willing to assist in every kind of entertainment.

The concert given at the Brick church Tuesday night was largely attended and very much enjoyed.

All the churches gave Christmas entertainments, and all members of Sunday schools were remembered by Santa Claus.

WILL.

R. A. Kirker, member of territorial bureau of information from Grand county is in town. He brought in some very fine samples of grape and cherry wines from this year's fruit. The samples are to be left with the bureau.

Mr. Kirker also said that his county would like to exhibit some specimens from its onyx and agate deposits, which are very extensive. Mr. Kirker says the agate and onyx in Grand county is unexcelled anywhere.

It is likely that Grand county will exhibit some preserved fresh fruits at the Midwinter Fair. Mr. Kirker is enthusiastic over the cattle and sheep raising, and the fruit industries of his county, as well as its mineral resources, and he believes it to be the richest county in Utah. He says the people are planning a big canal scheme to take water out for 500,000 acres of land. The water will be taken out from the river, and when the canal is completed it will be 150 miles in length, and is estimated to cost between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

President Hubbard and Secretary Snyder, of the Chamber of Commerce, are busy on their annual reports which are to be presented at the meeting of the chamber on January 11th.

The report of Mr. Hubbard will embrace a general statement of the resources and growth of Utah, its advantages as a place of investment, and other features, placed in such concise yet comprehensive form as to give a correct general idea of the business and industrial situation and outlook for Utah.

Mr. Snyder's report will enter more into detail in the various agricultural, manufacturing, mining and other industries of the Territory, and will give figures, carefully gathered and compiled, relating to the various subjects.

Neither report aims to be very elaborate this year, but both are intended to be sufficiently specific to give a thorough idea of the various branches with which they will deal.

A dispatch from Yuma, Arizona, dated Dec. 31, says: President Carlson of the San Diego, Yuma and Phoenix railway returned from Mexico today, having secured one of the most valuable concessions ever granted to an American by the Mexican government, consisting of the right-of-way for ninety miles on Mexican soil, freedom from all taxation for thirty and all duties for fifteen years, with a valuable concession of lands, which insures the building of the line and connection through to Denver within two years. Yesterday capitalists wired Carlson to go ahead as the money is ready to build the road. The line parallels the great Colorado canal for forty miles and will open the best portion of California and the Yuma Indian reservation, and insure the building of the big canal, and open up more than 6,000,000 acres of the best lands of the coast to settlement. Carlson says that he will crowd the building of the line.

The work of preparing for Utah's exhibit at the Midwinter Fair is making satisfactory progress. To how great an extent the display will go is as yet undetermined, as that will depend to some extent on what the Legislature will do and when the solons act. It rests with that body to say what portion of the Utah exhibit at the World's Fair shall be taken to the Exposition at San Francisco.

Up to the present, the various county courts have appropriated $2800 toward the fund. The soliciting committees in Salt Lake anticipate that about $2000 will be raised by private subscription in this city, while there are Ogden, Provo and other places to hear from on the private donation list. Several of the counties have not reported any action as yet.

"I feel encouraged at the start for the new year," said a leading merchant today. "We have balanced up our accounts for December and find that we actually have made money. We have done more business and made better collections during the month of December than for any other two months in the year 1898, and have a fair profit for the month's work. For the first eleven months of the year our business has been an actual loss. But December has made an excellent record, and we hope to keep on gaining a little from this time forth."

The following petition to the mayor and city council of Manti is being circulated in that city: "We, the undersigned, citizens of Manti, Sanpete county, Utah, most respectfully request your most honorable body to construct a channel for carrying the surplus waters and floods of City creek outside of the city limits. We would suggest that this channel be made in the most safe, feasible and practicable place to the south, where the floods and debris would be carried upon the saleratus bottom—either by way of the Red Point or upon the South street."

Eastern Utah Telegraph: Another large canal is being built at Ferron. The canal will get its water from Ferron river, and will cover a large body of fertile land north of Ferron. A large force of men are now at work and it is expected that water will be on the land in time to raise a crop next year. The people of Huntington are agitating the question of building a roller mill. Considerable stock is already subscribed, and work will commence in the near future. The mill will be of fifty barrel capacity.

Iron County Record: While in Milford Saturday evening we met gentleman just in from Vanderbilt, California, who stated that the Nevada Southern had just let a contract for the construction of a place to the Utah and Nevada state line, and that the contract is to be completed within ninety days. The company evidently mean business, and has recently asked depot grounds and rights of way privileges at St. George, which request has been granted by the city council of that place.

Bingham Bulletin: A mass meeting of the registered voters of the precinct of Bingham has been called for Wednesday evening next, January 3, 1894, at Social hall, at which will be considered the proposition of incorporating the precinct under the laws of Utah. The business men of the town, with scarcely an exception, believe in the wisdom of the movement, and that it will materially aid in the comfort, safety and prosperity of our citizens.]

The directors of the the Deseret Savings bank met January 2nd, and transacted business of interest to not only the stockholders but to the public at large, as it indicates the prosperity of local institutions notwithstanding the general financial depression in the country. The report presented to the Savings bank directors showed the institution to be in sound condition, and so satisfactory was the state of its finances that the board declared a dividend of two and a half per cent for the past quarter.

Beaver Utonian: Mr. William Pearson and others have made a valuable discovery of coal just south of Beaver, in Iron county. The ledge is five feet wide, is twenty-eight miles a little east of south of Beaver, and croppings can be traced into Beaver county. These discoveries from time to time show of what magnitude our resources are in this southern country, and one day they will become known far and wide, and capital will find a fruitful field for investment.

In a letter written by E. P. Ellis, of Layton, Davis county, that gentleman says: "I raised five acres of beets for the sugar factory at Lehi. They cost me $175.75 all told, and I had left, after all expenses were paid, $189.25, or $27.85 per acre, besides some weight to ten tons of beets left for feed. I claim that beets can be raised here and pay the farmer better than any crop I know of. The only drawback is the distance we are from the factory."

Tonight the Utah Sugar factory will close down for the season. The run throughout has been characterized by remarkable success. In round figures the output has been four million pounds of sugar. Tomorrow the close of the season will be celebrated by a grand ball by the employee. It will take place in Garff's hall, Lehi. Invitations have been sent to the officers and directors, some of whom will go down to this city to attend.

Emmett, Idaho, Index: An excellent quality of coal and in an extensive ledge is found on Squaw creek, somewhere near Horseshoe Bend. The owners of the ledge have developed it some, and next winter propose making an effort to supply Emmett, Caldwell, Boise and other towns in this section, as well as those nearer home. The coal is said to be of good quality, and the mine is about twenty-three miles from Emmett.

The new Mammoth mill which was put into operation this week is to have its capacity doubled in the near future. At present a twenty-stamp mill is in operation, but the foundation and buildings are for a forty stamp mill, and the extra machinery is soon to be added.

Manti Messenger: A specimen of mica at the Messenger office shows what valuable deposits are found in the hills near the city. This will be placed in the mineral exhibit of the Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce, and labeled "Manti Mica," for transportation to the Midwinter Fair.

Mr. J. Q. Packard has put a force of men to blasting the excavation for the foundation of the new mill to be constructed at the Eureka Hill mine, Tintic. The mill will be 40-stamp and from now on the work is to be pushed as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

The Davis county court, which was visited yesterday afternoon by Mr. W. E. Hubbard, as stated in last evening's News, made an appropriation of $200 for the Utah exhibit at the Midwinter Fair.

Don Coray, of Provo, has been designated to visit the Mercur or Camp Floyd district, and give a description of its situation and resources for the bureau of information pamphlet.

The branch of the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railway, from the company's mines to the Anaconda smelters, is to be opened for traffic on January 1st.

A shipment of over 20 tons of Galena ore brought into Salt Lake, showed by assay today 89.7 per cent lead and 141.6 ounces silver to the ton.

It is expected that the report on Utah county, for the bureau of information pamphlet, will be completed and forwarded to the committee this week.

CHURCH THEOLOGY CLASS.

The class was opened with prayer by Elder A. Clawson. Several questions which had been submitted in writing and were bearing on subjects previously considered, were answered. A review was taken upon the lecture of the last session and the subject of "baptism for the dead" more fully discussed.

Dr. J. E. Talmage, the instructor, stated that this was not a new doctrine, it was known of old. Through Isaiah the Lord declares "I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand and will keep thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house."

Latter-day Saints officiate vicariously for their progenitors, in fulfillment of these words and also of Malachi when he says that before the great day of the Lord Elijah should visit the earth and turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to their fathers. This prophecy was fulfilled April 3, 1838, when Elijah appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in the Kirtland Temple, announcing his mission, bestowing the keys of this great labor. Actuated by a belief in this glorious principle, the Latter-day Saints erect temples and provide for the sacred labors of those holy places.

The class adjourned for one week, benediction being pronounced by Elder B. H. Roberts.

DEDICATION OF MEETING HOUSE.

The new assembly hall of the Twenty-second ward, Salt Lake City, was dedicated Sunday evening, Dec. 31st, 1893, the dedicatory prayer being offered by President George Q. Cannon. There were present on the stand: Presidents George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith of the First Presidency of the Church, Elders Angus M. Cannon, Joseph E. Taylor and Charles W. Penrose, of the presidency of the Stake, Bishop Alfred Solomon, of the ward, and other brethren. The house was filled to overflowing, many being unable to get in.

Appropriate remarks were made by Bishop Solomon, Elder Angus M. Cannon and Presidents Joseph F. Smith and George Q. Cannon. The singing by the ward and Sunday school choirs under the leadership of Brother Henry Gardner was a very pleasing feature of the services.

Owing to the death of Brother Alexander Garrick, which occurred some time ago, Brother John L. Nebeker, formerly second counselor in the Bishopric, was set apart as first counselor to Bishop Solomon, and Brother Arthur Winter was ordained a High Priest and set apart as second counselor.

The assembly hall is a beautiful brick and stone structure 40x60 feet, and cost $10,000. The building was tastefully decorated for the very important occasion by the sisters of the ward. The Saints of that ward are elated over their new house of worship, and have good reason for feeling so.

LIBERTY PARK'S FOUNDER.

HARRISVILLE, Utah, Dec. 29, 1893. —In your weekly issue of Dec. 23, 1893, under the heading of "A Modern Moses," and near the center of said communication, the following paragraph occurs:

"President Young was foremost in everything. To him is given the credit for the many shade trees that we now enjoy in Salt Lake City. He planted that forest in the park."

I wish to say that I never pass Liberty Park, but I reflect upon the time I received my first store pay, for my work in Utah, and that on President Young's store, I think Apostle George Teasdale being manager. Bro. Coulam, who I think resided in the Twelfth ward, and a Scotchman, I think Bro. Wilson by name, who I think came to Utah in Rowley's hand-cart company in 1859, when I did, and myself planted the seed in May, 1860, from which that forest arises, and I fully accord with H. J. Faust, that President Brigham Young in his day, was the leading active mover for Utah's welfare and establishment.

By all means let a monument be erected to his great name, that generations yet unborn may know whom to thank for the settlement of these peaceful vales, and for the shades of that beautiful park. Yours fraternally,

PETER LATER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Written for this Paper.

OUR NATIVE FORESTS.

It is said that the power of repentance is one of the psychical differences between man and the lower animals. Wide as this gulf may be, it may still be questioned if a wider gulf is not shown when men avoid those things which call for repentance.

The people of Utah are permitting a work to be done which will not only call for repentance, (a too cheap method of ridding one's self of the effects of sin) but will absolutely demand undoing, and this at the expense of considerable time, money and labor. I refer to the devastation of the limited forest area of our Territory. The mountains of Utah were never heavily timbered, and instead of allowing their scanty covering to be entirely removed, every effort should have been made in the past to preserve what there was and to use all available means to increase the forest area. Since this was not done in the past a halt should now be called, and the ruthless destruction which is still going on should not be permitted for another day. In more parts of Utah than one, men deliberately set fire to the mountain gorges to burn down the trees, because that is easier than to use the ax, although by burning ten trees are consumed for every one which is left in such a condition that it is of future use. This and other wasteful methods of getting timber to use would be bad enough if its worst feature was simply the prodigal use of a scarce article, but as a matter of fact this is one of the least objections which can be urged against the present system.

The water supply is one of the most important questions which confront the people of Utah. With water our valleys may become gardens; without water they can only be deserts, and the relationship between the water supply and our mountain forests is a very intimate one. The distribution of the water throughout the year is even more important than the actual number of inches of rain fall. Thirty inches of rain each year, falling at opportune times, will enable the farmer, in most parts of the United States, to raise a fair crop. Twice that amount of rain falling during one or two storms would only result in useless and disastrous floods.

The farmers of Utah are almost wholly dependent on the melting snows for their supply of water, and whether the snow shall melt during the first few weeks of warm weather in the spring, causing disastrous floods or whether it shall slowly melt during all the summer, yielding water which shall enable the farmer to make the "desert blossom as the rose," depends very largely on whether or not our mountains shall be denuded of their trees.

If there are those who believe that these fears are idle and that there is at best a very remote relationship between the forest area of a country and its available rainfall, they have only to study the past and present condition of Spain and especially of Syria to convince themselves that the obliteration of forests is attended with the most direful results.

Seven hundred years before the time of Christ, Syria was a country of almost boundless fertility, and its mountains were clothed with forests of rare luxuriance. Between seven hundred and six hundred B. C. a combination of circumstances forced Egypt to become a commercial nation, and as she was practically a treeless country it seemed necessary for her to possess herself of some timbered country to furnish lumber for ships, and Syria was the country selected. After long and bloody wars Syria passed under Egyptian control and the destruction of her forests began. As nearly as the facts can be gleaned from history, the decrease of forest area and the decrease of fertility were simultaneous. Today many parts of Syria which once supported a large population are a hopeless desert, and other parts which once were irrigated by the mountain streams are now subject to the most devastating floods. All that has been said of Syria is true to a lesser degree of parts of Spain. Experience of this kind has not been wholly confined to the Old World, for I learn from good authority that Chili, in South America, is today doing her utmost to rectify her mistake of clearing her mountains of timber. Lands which were of great agricultural value when the mountains were timbered are now all but deserts, deeply furrowed by the mountain torrent with which the melting snows of springs now devastate them.

It must not be supposed that all of the evidence of the value of trees is of a negative character. In 1798 the French took temporary possession of Egypt and among other improvements suggested by them was that of timber culture. Napoleon caused some groves to be planted on the delta of the Nile river, and since then the timber area has been considerably increased, and as it has increased the rainfall has increased. In Egypt above the delta rain never falls, and on the delta previous to the planting of trees rain was almost, if not quite, unknown.

In our own country it is almost certain that rain increases in our western states as the timber area is increased. Reports from the Dakotas, Kansas and Nebraska seem to confirm this statement.

Since for every effect there is a cause, it seems highly proper to inquire why trees are thus beneficial in producing and regulating rainfall. No one reason will fully answer the question here suggested.

When the mountains are thickly covered with trees the snow remains somewhat evenly distributed over their surface. The shade cast by the trees causes the snow to melt slowly, and much of that which melts sinks into the ground to reappear as springs. As water passes through the ground slowly, that which would run off from the surface in a few days as a flood flows as a spring for months, and flows as a gentle stream. Without the shade afforded by trees all of the snow which does not slide, or is not blown into the canons, is melted by the first warm weather in the spring and most of the water rushes into the valleys as a mountain torrent which frequently does harm but which never does any good. Snow which is blown or which slides into deep and narrow canons is by no means lost, but it is of little or no use in forming springs. Its only use is in feeding streams which, when they reach the valleys, may be turned into irrigating ditches. If the canons are so wide that the rays of the sun can reach the bottom for any considerable length of time each day, the snow will probably be melted before the irrigating season is over. Of course trees protect the snow in the canons as well as on the sides of the canons. Forests not only aid as just indicated, in distributing the water supply throughout the year, but they directly influence the precipitation of moisture.

Careful observations made by aeronauts show that the air over a forest is a little cooler and contains more vapor of water than air over a bare plain. Hence the conditions are more favorable for the precipitation of rain over a forest when a current of moist air passes over it than when the same current passes over a desert.

Some scientists believe that trees induce an electrical condition in the atmosphere favorable to rainfall, but so little is positively known that I pass this over with bare mention. Another direct benefit derived from trees is that they favor the growth of underbrush on the mountain sides; this brush sends roots into the ground which tend to keep the soil loose and easily permeable to water, and it also keeps the leaves which fall from being blown away and thus a humus is formed which will support grass and other directly useful vegetation.

From the foregoing facts I believe that the only conclusion which can be drawn is that active measures should at once be taken to check all needless destruction of timber; that Utah shall, at what ever expense may be necessary, begin to restore the trees to the mountain sides, and encourage planting trees in all proper places. Every main irrigating ditch should be lined with trees. Probably not one thinking man will seriously disagree with the views herein expressed, but with us, as with the rest of the world, "what is everybody's business is nobody's business." If any effective work in this line is to be done a Forestry Association must be organized in Utah, and under the auspices of this association information of every kind relating to arboriculture must be collected and disseminated among the people.

C. A. WHITING.

University of Utah, Salt Lake City.

Written for this Paper.

WAKEMAN'S WANDERINGS.

LONDON, Dec. 16, 1893.—The interiors of Norwegian peasant homes never present that warm, cheery, snug, restful and almost somnolent atmosphere of the Cumberland statesman's home, but it is still a place of simple comfort and plenty, and is often most characteristic and picturesque. If the ceilings be low, there is always plenty of room. I have come upon many a bonder's kitchen from twenty to thirty feet square, and houses in whose great living-rooms the whole family, and I mean by this the three or four families of each gaard or farm-house, with a goodly part of the neighborhood, could all be fed at a wedding or funeral supper, or engage in dancing, of which they are very fond, at one time without serious inconvenience to the assemblage.

These old kitchens are very ancient. Some are from 300 to 400 years old, and were the original and sole dwelling places of the founders of the family. Some have the remains of the central cone-shaped holes in the roof through which air and light once exclusively came, as is still found in some of the Scottish crofter huts of Lewis and Skye. The corner chimney and open fireplace which now are seen are comparatively modern, though often from one to two hundred years old. Tiny windows are now found in these ancient kitchens; but the floor is usually of beaten earth nearly as hard as stone. A few rude wooden shelves, the heavy iron pots and kettles, a strong pine table and a stool or two, complete the scant and cumbersome furniture.

The living-room is a more pretentious apartment. Huge pine rafters stretch from wall to wall and their natural reddish tint is deepened by age to the rich hue of rosewood. Often the windows have deep casements, with little diamond-shaped panes, and in the summer they are bright and winsome with plants and flowers. This room always has its wide, high fireplace, and occasionally two of them on opposite sides of the room. In one corner, near the fireplace, is a cupboard, wide, deep and extending from floor to ceiling, and if not flaming with paint it will be covered with a profusion of carving, often in imitation of various articles of tableware.

In the angle where the stairs ascend to the second story another curious closet or cupboard is let in to the projection. This will contain the family store of books and what-not for the long winter nights' amusement. A huge pine table stands in the center of the room, and its legs will be fairly flounced with carvings. Usually a smaller pine table is placed at the side of the room with the best chair or stool behind it, against the wall. This is the seat of honor, but no guest must ever occupy it without invitation from the bonde or his wife.

There are a number of shelves always laid on pegs or perched on grotesque carved brackets; and the stools and chairs are a curious collection of home hand-work. I have seen in many peasants' houses more than a score of chairs carved out of solid cross-sections of huge pine trees. The seat is hollowed deep and wide; the back is worked out thin and round with a fine oval top, in which is cut a curved hole for the hand in order to easily move the chair from place to place; wide, well-fashioned and carved arm-rests are at each side; and the bottom of this curious piece of furniture is always worked out as true, thin and perfect as an inverted chopping-bowl or cauldron kettle.

Usually the heads of the household sleep in this comfortable living-room, and the bed will always be found in the long recess behind the angle of the stairs. In many instances the beds are simply bunks built against the wall; and in most of these the chief portion of the bed clothing observable will be skins of sheep, or of the reindeer, beautifully dressed, and the hide itself cured as soft as loosely woven wool. In not a few of the more pretentious peasant homes the beds in these recesses are sufficiently wonderful for exhibition at world's fairs. They are big enough for giants to rest in, and are from four to five feet above the floor. Steps lead up to them, and the single corner-post and the side rail which show, in addition to being carved or painted in the most fantastic manner, will be covered, along with the sides of the ascending steps, with painted texts or mottoes, while a gaily painted rude panel let down from the ceiling above the front of the bed bears in flaring letters the names of the bonder and his wife and the date of their marriage.

In the larger gaards there will be a best room, usually the length of the living-room, but narrower, and if this is not possessed, the chamber above the large living-room bears the same relation to the Norwegian peasant home. It is in either case a sort of show room, where the possessions of the female members of the family are on exhibition, and a sort of huge family closet. Its furniture is always as rude and simple and of as primitive construction as that in other portions of the house, but it is more gaudily painted. Curious old pine bureaus and cheffoniers are here, marvelous in design and coloring, red, yellow and blue paint dominating. These contain the family underwear and all the general drapery.

One always has painted upon it the maiden name of the housewife and the date of her marriage, forming a sort of permanent marriage certificate; and undoubtedly in this, packed carefully away in aromatic leaves and bits of ancient finery, will be found that most glorious bauble to eyes and heart of all Norwegian women, the huge bridal-crown of hand-wrought silver or gilt. I have been shown some which were said to be over 600 years old, and no doubt there are hundreds of these huge and gaudy relics in Norway which have descended in unbroken line from mother to daughter since the days of Olaf the Saint and Hakon the Good.

If this room be the chamber, all around the wall will be ranged a curious collection of little pine trunks or chests. Some are elaborately carved, and all are gaudily painted. When a daughter of the house passes from girlhood to maidenhood she is given one of these chests. Her name is painted or carved upon it; and from this moment the highest ambition of her life aside from honorable marriage is the filling of this chest with bedding, underwear, trinkets, silver ornamentations and gowns, so that by the time she is betrothed she can make a fine showing of accumulated nick-nacks and necessary articles to her lover and her envious companions; and there is no sacrifice she will not make or drudgery she will not cheerfully undertake to worthily accomplish this object.

If this room be the chamber still, numbers of bunks are built against the opposite wall. Depending from ropes strung across the ceiling are rows of dresses. Many are woefully plain, but here and there are glints of tinsel and gimp, bits of wonderful coloring in grotesque embroidery, and flashings of silver buttons, claps and brooches. Along the walls here and there are hung curious embroideries, chiefly in wool. Plainly some are scarfs and wrappings, others seem to be patterns for bodices or best aprons; but most of them simply express the Norwegian peasant woman's ambition to provide unmistakable evidences of her skill with the needle. Brighter than all these however, are the flowers which fill the windows of every Norwegian home. Huge fuchsias and gorgeous geraniums are most common; and these with the wonderful luxuriance of the wild mountain flora almost bring to Norway in summer the seeming of the odor and bloom of wanton tropic lands.

The inbred sturdiness and independence of character of all Norwegian peasants are best illustrated in the simple yet skilfully made belongings of these hamlet-like homes. Their handicraft is wonderful. The timber for their homes has been felled and fashioned by themselves. Every structure in the country—farm-house, storhaus, dairy, bake-house, barn, smithy, shed and bell tower, is built by the peasant himself. Every article of furniture he possesses has been wrought by his own hand. He beats out his cutlery on his own anvil, and carves its handles. All the utensils of the dairy—cheese-molds, tubs, firkins, bowls, churns, milking-pails, and presses, are of wood and of home manufacture. Yokes for the saeter-girl's necks, baskets, saddles, harness, snow-ploughs, and even comfortable stoll carts and sledges are all made in the little family workshop during the long winter months.

The peasant tans hides for the family, a supply of boots and shoes, and makes all the latter beside his own fireplace. Nearly every article of clothing is made on the premises by the housewife and her daughters. The wool is carded and spun at home, the stockings, blouses and scarfs are knit at home, and the woolen cloth for the family clothing is woven in the chamber, the "best-room," or in the huge old kitchens. Even the buttons of wood, of horn or even of brass or silver are products of home-craft, and are often beautifully carved. In scores of peasants' homes where I have tarried the eye could not discover a single article of utility or ornament, save the glass in the windows, the oil lamps, the scarce supply of crockery and the huge clock reaching from floor to ceiling, which was not completely a product of Norwegian peasant ingenuity and skill.

The Norwegian peasant is equally independent of the rest of the world in all the food necessities of life. His chief articles of food are supplied by his own herds. Milk, butter, cream, and cheese are found in startling quantities in the lowliest peasant's home. One or two cows are kept at the farm-house for summer use. The remainder of the herd are at the mountain saeters, from which comes an endless procession of mountaineers and saeter-girls, often accompanied by sure-footed ponies, all laden with huge panniers of butter and cheese, or flasks of sour milk and whey. The butter and cheese are constantly being conveyed to the fiord-side markets, or are stored against the winter's needs; while the sour milk is used for food and the whey aids materially in fattening the swine. There are thus always animals for killing, the flesh usually being dried.

Many peasants are fishermen, and cure their own fish. If not, dried fish can be secured in exchange for the peasant's own products, probably cheaper than in any other country in the world. Each peasant farmer raises his own barley, rye, oats, potatoes, and often a little wheat. On nearly every farm, and certainly in every neighborhood, there is a water-mill for grinding the grain. I know of no other country where strawberries and raspberries grow wild in such vast quantities, or where all small fruits respond to rude and limited culture with such munificence of reward. In many peasant homes dried native fruit adds zest to the winter's enforced sameness of fare. So it will be seen that the Norwegian peasant in his food supply is as independent of the outside world as in all other requirements of life. There are but three articles in his home, sugar, salt and coffee, which the fords, the streams, the mountain hollows and forests and his own saeter and farm do not bountifully provide.

The every day food of these sturdy Norwegian folk consists largely of "groed," a sort of thick gruel or stir-about of oat meal or barley meal or both, of milk, fresh, sour, or curdled and boiled, of cheese, of which there are several varieties powerful in resistance, odor and sustaining qualities, and brown and black bread. The great and universal staple, however, is "fladbrod," or flat-bread. It is the very life and sustenance of these folk as was the bannock once to the Scottish peasantry. Every peasant's house has not merely a pile of it to draw upon, but often whole casks filled with the hearty, wholesome food. It is simply a dough of barley and oatmeal, unfermented and containing a little salt, rolled to the thinness of wafers of great circumference and baked upon an iron plate like a large griddle over a "slow" fire.

It the ordinary housewife in other countries regards the family bread baking as no little task, she would quail before the stint of providing the required supply of "fladbrod" at a Norwegian bonder's gaard. It is about one strong woman's task, to judge by the immense quantities consumed, and I never entered a cottage or gaard without discovering a grandmother, mother or daughter, crouching before the coals or hovering over some huge stove ornamented with quaint Pompeian figures, dexterously flipping with her thin ladle-like stick the dough upon the steaming iron plate, or as cunningly landing the savory dish, without breaking, upon the ever diminishing, ever increasing pile within the "fladbrod" keg.

If the Norwegian peasant knows little else than labor from childhood to old age, it is still a labor which brings the immediate and continuous reward of sufficiency and ample content. The brief summer of but three and at the best of but four months is one of tremendous effort for all the members of the household; for in that little time provision must be made for an almost dayless winter of eight to nine months' duration. The crops of grain, the vegetables, the butter and cheese that are being provided among the mountain saeters, all require unceasing labor; and more important than all else is the supply of hay and other fodder for the winter needs of the then helpless herds. I never before realized how great a value could be set by any people upon a few blades of grass.

Haymaking furnishes both the most picturesque and the most suggestive scenes in Norway. The women are constantly in the fields, picturesque in their short skirts, bright bodices and white caps; and men, women and children are all in a sort of mild frenzy in their efforts to save the precious crop. It is cut with short scythes and sickles, and the prized tufts are even secured with the "tollkniv," which every peasant carries, and with shears from every cleft among the savage rocks. The entire crop is cured upon racks or hurdles, and never left upon the ground for drying; and from almost inaccessible places above the farms the tiny bundles which may be secured among the crags are conveyed to the valleys below on wire runways or tightly stretched ropes. The saeter girls, too, are not idle meanwhile in husbanding fodder for the herds. They are gathering every possible blade of grass, breaking from the birch-trees the tenderest buds and branches, and securing great stacks of reindeer moss. When the terrible winter storms have packed the ice and snow into the chasms and crevices like stone, the peasants in their snow-shoes ascend the heights to the saeters and add this excellent fodder to their store within the sheds and barns.

The religious, social and homeside life of these simple and primitive people could almost be revealed in three sentences. They are hereditarily pious and reverence all sacred things and traditions. Social intercourse finds its chief fruition in christenings, confirmations, weddings and funerals. And the calmness and serenity which seem to characterize the faces of all Norwegian peasants you will meet in homes seem to almost tell the whole grand national story of that blessed domestic repose which broods where faithful labor thrives, where independence has grown through the centuries into a part of a people's religion, and where false ambitions are almost unknown.

For eight years my wanderings have led me into all civilized lands. The tenderest days and ways have been among their lowly folk. Whether beside the sea among the huts of fishermen, in the city's stifling quarters, with the foresters of the mountains or the cotters of the valleys, if in vagrant Gipsy tent, or still if alone in dreary untrodden paths, there has ever been near me the kindly human voice, the helpful human hand and the tender human heart of some one from among those toiling unregarded millions on whose simple, earnest natures and steadfast loyal lives our whole world rests. Among all of these I have nowhere found a folk who must go with me in heart-picture and memory into that measureless land of Romance wherein my way now leads, with finer and nobler presence and tread than my lowly peasant friends of stern yet glorious "Gamle Norge."

EDGAR L. WAKEMAN.

CATHOLICS MASSACRED

BERLIN, Jan. 2.—The Cologne Volks Zeitung has a dispatch from Krusche, Russia, confirming the fragmentary reports of the massacre of many Catholics by Cossack soldiers in the Catholic church at that place.

Between seventy and one hundred Catholics were slaughtered and a great many more injured. The details of the outrage show that the church had been menaced for some time by the Cossacks and that the Catholics guarded it for more than a week against attack.

Early in the morning of November 10th, Prefect Kiltingenbergh reached Krusche from Kovno, accompanied by a detachment of Cossacks. They entered the church, where about seventy Catholics were gathered.

The Cossacks, cursing and yelling, rushed toward the worshippers, knocking them and striking them with their swords until the church echoed with the screams of the wounded. Some of the Catholics fled to the belfry, where they rang the bells in alarm, summoning the rest of the inhabitants, with the result that a thousand people soon collected around the church and the Cossacks were forced out of the building.

Only the prefect and his deputy succeeded in resisting the efforts of the inhabitants, and they, it is stated, retreated to the organ loft, from which place they opened fire upon the people in the church until the prefect escaped.

Late in the day a detachment of 600 Cossacks were sent from Kovno to Krusche, armed with rifles, lances and sabres. Upon their arrival near Krusche, they were divided into two detachments. One body surrounded the township on all sides while the other rode at a gallop toward the Catholic church. They dashed with lances down into the crowd outside the building, spearing, shooting and lashing with knouts all who came within reach. Many persons were killed and wounded.

The Cossacks then rode the horses into the church and a massacre of the people inside began. The unfortunate Catholics threw themselves on their knees in a corner and prayed for help, but the Cossacks shot and speared right and left, until the floor and walls of the church were drenched with blood.

The Cossacks smashed the crucifixes, candlesticks and images. They rode over the people right and left, dragged the bodies of the dead and wounded to a cesspool and threw them into the hole. The people fled in all directions but were pursued and captured or badly wounded by the Cossacks of the detachment detailed to surround the town. Some were so panic stricken that they committed suicide by jumping into the river.

The rest were surrounded by the Cossacks, who drove them to the marketplace. Here every man, woman and child of the town was ordered to be flogged with the knout. A doctor prescribed the number of lashes which each person could stand. The victims had their clothes torn from them and were flogged until many of them were almost dead. They were afterwards compelled to clothe themselves as best they could and were then driven to prison.

Gilbert Gates, George Kollner and Guy Richardson, three youthful tourists who were beating their way south along the railroad, took shelter Monday night in a warm bed of cinders dumped between the rails of the track at Delano, Cal. They dozed off to sleep with fatal results. The midnight train from the south ran over them, severing the body of Gates in two and crushing the legs of Kollner at points below the knees. Kollner was removed to the county hospital, where the necessary amputations were made, and he will probably recover. Richardson, the youngest of the lads, awoke barely in time to escape the fate of his companions. Gates was 19 years old and was a native of Indiana.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Dec. 26.—A horrible story comes from the Mojave Indian reservation near the town of Needles on the Colorado river. One of the prettiest squaws of the tribe, known as Loneta, was married, years ago, to one of the bravest of the young bucks, who was very fond of her. Last Sunday she gave birth to twins. A Mojave tradition says that a woman who gives birth to twins is a witch and the penalty has always been death to mother and children. Accordingly, in spite of the strong plea by the husband, the little ones were brained with clubs and the young wife was driven into her shack, which was fired and she cremated.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 23.—The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and the St. Louis & San Francisco railroads and branches, comprising the Santa Fe system proper, have been placed in the hands of receivers. The application was made by the Union Trust company of New York, trustees of the bondholders of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the Mercantile Trust company of New York, trustees for the bondholders of the St. Louis & San Francisco.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 25.—Great consternation was caused at Zion Baptist church (colored) tonight by a cold-blooded murder. John Tyler boarded with Armistead Morten. The latter had accused the former with being intimate with his wife, and they had previously quarreled over the matter. Tonight Tyler was in the rear of the church when Morten entered. Tyler said: "Now I have got you!" and fired twice. Morten was smothered in the head and side and dropped dead.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26.—The crew of the schooner Milford, which sailed from Mobile to Kingston November 18th, had an extraordinary experience of peril and hardship. On the night of December 3rd, the schooner was driven on the edge of a reef by a heavy squall. The men tried to reach the shore in a boat, but could not get through the surf. The boat was smashed to splinters in hoisting it back on deck. At daylight one of the crew swam to the rocks near by, through water infested with sharks, and made fast the end of a line, by which all the crew reached the shore safely. They remained on the rocks four days with scant food and no shelter, until finally taken off by natives in canoes.

HARTFORD CITY, Ind., Dec. 26.—A band of tramps, armed with revolvers, have been having things all their own way until this afternoon, when six were captured, after an exchange of several volleys with the posse of citizens. One citizen was shot through the leg and a tramp was wounded in the arm.

ATCHISON, Kan., Dec. 26.—The new Populist police commissioners have decided to compel the tramps who apply for meals and lodging to work on the rock pile in payment. Eighty-seven tramps were fed and lodged last week.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 26.—Two thousand unemployed workmen, organized into a parade by socialist agitators, marched in procession today through the leading streets, though repeatedly dispersed by the police. Finally, however, a detachment of a hundred policemen charged with drawn sabers upon the mob. The latter replied by showering stones at the police, and several pitched battles followed, during which a number of people on both sides were more or less injured. Three socialists and one policeman were severely wounded.

CHICAGO, Dec. 27.—W. T. Stead, the London editor and reformer, has mortally offended many prominent women in Chicago by some very plain talk today by a joint meeting of the Women's clubs of the city, called to council regarding aid to suffering women and children. In the course of his remarks Stead said: "Women who have great opportunities and neglect them are more disreputable in the eyes of God and man than the most abandoned woman of the streets."

This language gave much offense, and many ladies declared after the meeting ended that they would never again attend a meeting at which Stead was present.

HANOVER, Dec. 28.—Count William Bismarck, the second son of Prince Bismarck, and governor of Hanover, has received a letter threatening to blow up his house. The place is guarded by detectives.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 27.—The American schooner Grace Andrews, commanded by Captain Andrews, has arrived from Brazil. Captain Andrews tells a story of outrageous treatment by Peixoto's soldiers in Rio harbor. Captain Andrews had started for his ship to the harbor in a small boat, and when within hailing distance of the shore hoisted the American flag, but the soldiers on shore shouted: "If you don't stop we will shoot you," and fired several shots. The captain put his boat on shore and was arrested, together with three sailors, and placed in prison. He was then taken to Rio and the chief of police put them in jail without any food. He managed to communicate with the American consul and obtained release.

The captain complained about the soldiers having hauled down the American flag on his small boat, but the consul paid no attention to it. He claims the facts of the situation at Rio are suppressed by the officials, and that the American press has incorrect news.

BUENOS AYRES, Dec. 28.—News received from Rio de Janeiro is to the effect that yellow fever has been added to the horrors of war, and that five deaths have already occurred. The authorities are taking every precaution to prevent the spread of the disease, but they are greatly hampered by the condition of the city consequent on the war. The fever is of the most virulent form, accompanied by black vomit.

OMAHA, Dec. 28.—A special to the Bee from Grand Island: Adele Egge, aged 25, daughter of one of the oldest families in the city, arose this morning, mixed strychnine into the batter of cakes, baked them and ate of the food. The mother and son had not yet arisen, but her sister Margaret Egge, came into the room where she was eating breakfast and also began to eat.

Margaret noticed that the cakes were bitter, and questioned her sister as to the reason. The young lady answered, with a smile that it was better thus for all of them. Her sister became alarmed and a doctor was called. Five minutes after the arrival of the physician Adele was a corpse, having died in intense agony. Her younger sister was given an emetic and saved.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—Admiral De Horsey sends the Times a letter received from an officer on board the British ship Resolution, describing the fearful experiences of the ship during a gale in the Bay of Biscay. Even in moderate weather the Resolution rolled 45 degrees each way. She steamed slowly, keeping her head to the sea, knowing that any deviation would break down her engines and capsize the ship. Next day the gale moderated and the coal run short. She dared not return for fear of going over, but on the afternoon of December 21st the weather allowed an alteration of the course, and the vessel was able to make for Queenstown. Every man aboard felt unsafe.

FRESNO, Cal., Dec. 29.—The city is up in arms and the whole country roundabout is excited over the escape last night from jail of Chris Evans, the bandit, murderer and desperate character generally.

It now appears that elaborate plans were laid for the escape. In the morning word was received from Ronaon, thirty miles south, that a young man had given information of an intended train robbery and four deputies were sent to the scene, and about the time of the escape several runaways down town attracted others from the jail, so that Jailer Scott was the only man left on watch. He admitted Chris Evans's wife without question or search and admitted Walter Ed Morel, from a neighboring restaurant, with Evans's supper in the same way. When Morel came to the door to go out Scott unlocked the door and as once found himself covered by two revolvers in the hands of Morel and Evans.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.—A special to the Herald from Rome: A high personage of the Vatican, in an interview today said: "The relations between the pope and the czar are at this moment very strained. In July last the pope wrote the czar an autograph letter, in which he complained of the persecutions against the Roman Catholics in Poland. It was written in a sharp way. Leo XIII declared to the czar that if the persecutions did not cease he would be compelled to protest solemnly in the face of Europe against the intolerance of the czar. The czar became frightened and has just sent to Rome the Catholic bishop of Tiraspoli, persona grata at St. Petersburg, to speak a good word to the pope and dissuade him from putting his project into execution."

BERLIN, Dec. 29.—The Neue Nachrichten of Munich, December 5th, announced that on the Sunday previous, December 3rd, at Genoa, Princess Elizabeth of Bavaria had been married to Lieutenant Auf Puttenheim of the Bavarian army. This news caused a decided sensation, as the princess is a granddaughter of the emperor of Austria, as well as a granddaughter of prince regent of Bavaria, but the sensation which the report of the marriage created is as nothing to the consternation caused in imperial and royal circles today when an announcement was made by the Germania, the chief organ of the clerical party, which declares that the Princess Elizabeth was not married to Lieutenant Belgfried, and that she is not now married to him, although they are living together. Germania adds that there is other news, which is undoubtedly most painful to the relatives of the princess, but as it will not be published it is not contained in these dispatches.

CHICAGO, Dec. 29.—Prendergast, the murderer of Carter H. Harrison, will be hanged for his crime. Ably defended as the assassin was, and strong as the evidence adduced to save his neck has been, the jury found him to be sufficiently sane to be responsible for the act, and demanded that he pay the highest penalty for the offense against the law. This, however, is a sorry recompense for the death of Carter H. Harrison.

"We the jury find the defendant, Patrick Eugene John Prendergast, guilty of murder in the manner and form as charged in the indictment, and fix the penalty at death," read Fitzgerald. Prendergast's face turned pale, he opened his mouth to speak, but only a faint murmur came. He moved slightly and would have fallen but for the assistance of a bailiff. He was half led, half carried back, to his cell, where, refusing to speak, he threw himself upon his bunk in an attempt to hide from his fellow prisoners, whose expressions of satisfaction over the verdict were more emphatic than graceful, and more sincere than polite.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 29.—General Carlin, who is in this city, takes no stock in the story from Spokane to the effect that a bottle was found in the Clearwater river, containing a letter signed by George Colgate, the man whom the Carlin party left behind to die, saying he was alive and begging that he be sent him. The letter was dated November 27th. General Carlin is certain that Colgate was dead ten days previous to that time. He thinks the letter was written and placed in the bottle for the purpose of getting money from him.

KENDRICK, Idaho, Dec. 29.—A party of three men with pack animals left today for the headwaters of the Clearwater to search for George Colgate, the cook for the Carlin party. Colgate was left in the mountains, being unable to walk, and it was thought he must certainly perish, but a bottle was picked up in the river Penewawa, sixty miles from Lewiston, which indicates that Colgate is among the living. The bottle contained a note purporting to be from Colgate, in which he says he is fifty miles from civilization, but his legs are better and he can walk. He asks the finder of the note to come to his relief.

OMAHA, Neb. Dec. 30.—Two corpses were found in a box last night at the Pacific express office. They have been identified as those of Mrs. C. A. D. Brown, wife of a well known Omaha man, and buried in Forest Lawn cemetery last Thursday; and M. W. A. McWhinney, an old soldier who died at the county house and was buried last Tuesday. The graves had been robbed by unknown parties. The box in which the bodies were found were addressed to John Robinson, Iowa City, Iowa.

It is believed they were intended for a medical college connected with the Iowa State University. There is no trace of the man who took the box to the express office.

LAHORE, India, Dec. 30.—Resolutions adopted by the national congress declare that fifty million people are on the verge of starvation and urged the government to take immediate steps to succor them.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 30.—A dispatch from Nizni, Novgorod, states that during the charity carnival on the Volga river the ice broke and a large number of persons fell into the river. Twenty-eight were drowned. It is thought some of those rescued will die from the effects of the shock and exposure.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Dec. 30.—Samuel J. Godbe, manager of the Kingston mine, on the proposed extension of the Nevada Southern railway, has sold to Denver parties for $450,000, the Jim Crow and Monitor mines, located near Helene, Nevada, in the Ferguson mining district, one of the camps opened by the extension of the Nevada Southern railroad, from Blake, Cal., to meet in Southern Utah the extension of the Rio Grande Western.

KANSAS CITY, Jan. 1.—A special to the Times from Independence, Kan., says: One of the most horrifying discoveries was made this morning, when Al Brown, a son-in-law of George W. Read, manager of the Long Bell Lumber company, broke into the home of the latter and found Read, clad only in his night clothes, sitting dead in a chair before a hot stove fed by natural gas. The body was in an advanced stage of decomposition. Edith Scott, a domestic of the family, was lying dead on the floor of her room, and Mrs. Read and a five-year-old son were in bed, the boy dying and the mother unconscious. The doctors decided that the family had been poisoned by strychnine.

OMAHA, Dec. 31.—On the marble slabs at the city morgue lie the charred remains of the family of John Cummings, father, mother, baby and grandmother. They are awaiting the outcome of an inquiry which the coroner began this morning.

Nothing in Nebraska's annals approaches the deed for horror. Cummings had been in ill-health for some time and deliberately set fire to his own house and caused the death of his mother-in-law, wife and one-year-old baby.

Little Tommy, when asked how the fire originated, said: "Cummings was sitting on the edge of a bed in the rear room, where Mrs. Cummings also was with the baby. Another person in the room was Mrs. Fox, mother of Mrs. Cummings, my aunt. There was a fuss about something and Cummings upset the lamp and closed the door, compelling all the inmates to stay there. They cried, but he refused to let any of them out."

The police are working on the case yet but have developed nothing to dispute the evidence that Cummings committed the crime while in a fit of insane rage.

COLOGNE, Dec. 31.—The Cologne Zeitung publishes full details of the attack on the Catholic church at Croche, in the government of Kenvo, by Cossacks, last month. The account fully confirms the report originally sent out, and which was afterwards officially denied. The correspondent of the Zeitung adds that the Cossacks were guilty of incredible barbarity and cruelty. They lanced and knouted the defenseless people whom they drove from the churches. Women as well as men were included among the victims. The dead and mutilated bodies were thrown into a lime-pit near the church.

BOSTON, Jan. 2.—The Globe Theater was completely gutted and the property of Hanlon's Superba company ruined by fire this morning.

OAKLAND, Cal., Jan. 2.—The authorities here and in San Francisco are considerably excited over a supposed plot to blow up Mayor Pardee, of this city. A few days ago a woman leaving the ferry boat accidentally dropped a note addressed to "Joe" and signed "Nick," saying: "Have everything ready when the time arrives; have the dynamite at Pardee's office next week. Everything will work." Police in citizen's dress are detailed as a body guard for Pardee and his residence is guarded at night.

MADRID, Jan. 2.—A very important and sensational capture was made by the police of Saragossa. Ever since the Liceo Theater outrage the authorities have been searching in vain for Salvador Franch, known to be the most desperate and forceful of the anarchist leaders, but he seemed to be kept fully informed as to the intentions regarding him and always managed to escape the clutches of the law in the nick of time. It was only after the arrest of a number of sympathizers among the secret police themselves, that they made any headway. Franch was finally located. After most elaborate preparations and the gradual drawing of lines about his house, the police made a descent on his quarters. When they burst in the door and entered with drawn revolvers, Franch drew his revolver and shot himself in the breast, inflicting a severe wound, and attempted to swallow poison. He was taken before a magistrate. He fought desperately, avowed complicity in the Liceo outrage and expressed fiercest regret that no more people were killed, and that he was not able to carry out or further more bloody outrages. He will be taken to Barcelona for trial.

Taylor Branaman, driver of the Riverside stage, brought in news of the attack on a man by a coyote. An old man called "Doc" had camped on the divide just beyond Donnelly's, Tuesday night. Wednesday morning, just at break of day, while he was wide awake and just on the point of arising, a coyote sprang upon and bit him several times in the face, severely. He shook him off and got up, when the animal attacked him a second time, but he finally beat him off. It is very unusual for a coyote to attack a human being, and this animal must have been starving or mad.—Florence (Ariz) Tribune.

Written for this Paper.
NEW YEAR IN ASIA.

Next Monday will be New Year's day in America. It will not be New Year all over the world. Nearly every Asiatic nation has its own calendar. The New Year festivities of the Chinese take place during the latter part of January or the first of February. Russia has a New Year about twelve days different from ours, and the pretty girls of Burmah do not celebrate their New Year until about the first of April. In my trip around the world a few years ago I struck a number of queer New Year celebrations, and I find that every nation celebrates the day differently. The people of Burmah and Siam have the most curious customs. The Burmans think that a spirit king at that time descends from heaven to earth and upon the manner of his coming depends the prosperity of the year. The astrologers fix the time of his appearance and they give the signal when he has come. Then cannons are fired, guns are shot and every man and woman in the country makes a prayer and pours a libation of water on the ground. This is the last night of the old year, and the next morning is to be the beginning of the New Year holidays.

THE BURMESE WATER FEAST.

New Year in Burmah begins with a great water feast, and the Burmese girls and women for this day reign supreme. I wish I could show you a Burmese girl. She is as pretty as any of her kind the world over. She is straight, well-formed and fine looking. Her red lips are luscious, her eyes are large, brown and velvety, and her cheeks are the color of the cream of your own Jersey cow, with a faint tinge of red in the center. She wears but two garments, one is a white saque of fine silk or cotton, which covers the arms and bust and falls to the waist, and the other is a strip of silk or cotton of the brightest colors, which is wrapped tightly around her waist, hips and loins, and fastened with a twist at the front. It falls to her feet and when she walks she kicks her bare heels out behind, so that the only exposure of her person is from her foot to her knee. She wears rings in the lobes of her ears as big around as a silver quarter, and she smokes cigars as long as a lead pencil and as thick as the wrist of a two-year old baby. She has more rights in the way of business and love-making than has her American sister, and on New Year day she is more giddy than ever. As soon as the day breaks she gets a squirt gun made of tin or bamboo and with a bucket of water goes out to saturate her gentlemen friends. No one is safe from her, and boys and girls, men and women, devote the day to sprinkling and soaking each other. No one has the right to get mad on this day, and a boy has the right to pour water over his father, and the girls drop bucketfuls from the roofs of their houses down the backs of their parents and Europeans as well as Americans are soaked. At a New Year not long ago an Englishman in a tall plug hat arrived at Rangoon, Burmah, on New Year's day. He had letters of introduction and he went to present these wearing a high silk hat, a long frock coat and light pantaloons. At the front door he found four pretty Burmese girls, who told him in their lingo they were going to throw water over him. He thought they were asking whether he wanted to see their father, and he raised his hat and said "Yes." Upon this he got about four gallons of water and he was drenched to the skin. Another Englishman who was treated in this way picked up the girl and dropped her into the bath tub from whence she was getting the water. She was a high-toned Burmese girl, this action was entirely contrary to New Year etiquette, and caused, it is said, the young man's social ostracism.

THEY BATHE THEIR GRANDMOTHERS.

The Siamese New Year is the 27th of March and the holidays last for five days. There is no tax on gambling at this time and all the gambling houses of Bangkok are opened. Thousands of these half-naked Siamese squat about playing fan tan and one of the funniest customs is that the children have of bathing their grandmothers on New Year's. The ugliest looking old women of the world are the Siamese. The maidens are plump and bright-eyed. They are short, seldom over five feet in height, but they are straight and well formed. They wear nothing but a strip of cotton cloth a yard wide and about three yards long, which they wind about their hips and fasten by pulling the ends through between the legs and tucking it into the belt at the back. This is the dress of the common woman, and it is only the better classes who have anything about the shoulders, the bust and the neck. In such a costume a plump girl looks well, but a scrawny wrinkled old woman looks horrible. The Siamese women cut their hair short. It grows coarser as they grow older and it stands up like a shoe brush all over their heads, these grandmothers have bristles about an inch long. They all chew the betel and long before they have grandchildren their teeth are black and their lips are cracked and stained. They squat around the house on their haunches doing little but smoking cigarettes and chewing betel nuts and they vary the puffing out the smoke with the spitting out betel juice. This betel juice is red and it looks just like blood. The most of the houses of Bangkok are right on the river and the children dip up the water in buckets and pour it over these old hags as they sit on the porches in the sunshine. They act as though they loved their grandmothers and they probably do. After they are through pouring the water over them they sprinkle them with perfume and powder their necks and faces. They also give them a new suit of clothes on New Year's Day, consisting often of a new waist cloth and a Turkish towel.

The celebration of New Year's Day is sanctioned by the Buddhists and the Siamese believe that the souls of those Buddhists who have gone to purgatory come back to earth on that day. The people pour water out on the ground in celebration of this and they always go to the temples and visit the shrines. Every idol in the kingdom is bathed with perfumed water and incense is burned by the cord. They lay flowers upon the idols and they weave garlands and put them into Buddha's hand. The children play tricks upon one another much the same as we do on Halloween or April first. They black each other's faces and put each other into the river. They have a water celebration much the same as in Burmah and the king has a reception of his officers much the same as has our President.

SIAM'S MOCK KING.

Speaking of the king, Siam has another queer holiday, during which the king nominally gives his power over to a mock king, and the whole of Siam takes part in this celebration. The governor of the province sent me an invitation to it while I was in Bangkok, and I watched the proceedings in company with an Austrian prince, who was visiting Siam at that time. There were thousands on the streets, and the rich Siamese as well as the poor were out. There were lots of royal babies, who were dressed in nothing but diamonds. I remember one young prince, who had a cupful of diamonds upon him, and his sole dress was these and a silver belt. He was about four years old, and he was smoking a cigarette. There were lots of pretty Siamese girls, many of whom wore silk waist cloths, and through the crowd came a number of Siamese debtors, with chains about their legs. They were going to work, and were not allowed to take part in the festivities. The celebration took place in a great court near the city market of Bangkok. We waited about three hours before we heard the procession. Then a noise arose like that of a thousand dogs with tin cans tied to their tails rattling over the stoniest of streets, and a moment later we saw about 2000 naked legs carrying 1000 half naked Siamese, who carried banners and escorted a wrinkled old prince as their king. This old king was as black as the ace of spades, and his under jaw was no thicker than your finger. He was dressed in gold and silver clothing, and he had a crown on his head that looked like a pyramid of ice cream. The people cheered him as he came up, and he stopped in front of our party and wagged his thin lower jaw at the governor, saying something that I could not understand. Right near here there was a great swing fastened to a beam across two poles about 100 feet high. From the top of this beam the ropes holding the swing were hung, and on the board at its foot four naked Siamese stood. A purse of money was tied to a long bamboo fishing pole and fastened to one of the uprights; so that the money hung about thirty feet out from the swing. The pole was so bent that the bag of money hung quivering from the topmost point, far out to the side of the swingers. The feat was for them to get the money while the swing was moving. They first knelt and prayed to the king, and then went up and down upon the swing until they swung themselves high up in the air and nearer and nearer the money. At last one of them reached it. According to the rules he had to bite it off with his teeth and to hold the money in his mouth until the swing stopped. This is no easy feat, and the people went wild. Then other four men took their places on the swing, and more money was put up, and so it went on. I was not able to learn just what it meant, but I was told that it was semi religious in character and that it came from the Brahmins.

QUEER CHINESE CUSTOMS

The Chinese New Year festivities often last for three weeks. The people prepare for them, and the last days of the old year are the busiest. Every one wants money, and the storekeepers are getting ready for their annual settlement. All debts are expected to be paid at the end of the old year, and every one figures up his accounts. The women celebrate the occasion by cleaning house. The floors are washed, the chairs are covered with red cloth, and strips of red paper marked with names of good fortune, wealth and happiness are pasted outside the front doors. The last of the old year is celebrated with a feast, and on the last night the little boys of China run about the streets yelling out good resolutions. One of their cries is that they will sell their folly and their lazy habits to any one who will buy, in order that they may be wiser next year. On the last day of the old year the Chinese pray before their ancestral tablets. They go out to the graves and they worship the gods in the temples. They fire off firecrackers to scare off the bad spirits, and New Year's night in China is a good deal worse than it is in America. New Year' morning finds all the shops closed. The day is devoted to calling and visiting. Presents are given. The ladies visit one another and carry gifts of candy. As soon as they come in each guest is served with a cup of tea, in which an almond has been placed as an emblem of good fortune. The officials hold receptions as we do, and the princes at Peking call upon the emperor and say that they hope he will reign 10,000 years. These New Year festivities are kept up for days. Presents are sent between friends, and one of the most common presents is a cake as round as a ball fried in oil. The Chinese watch the weather very carefully on New Year' and on the week following it. If the first ten days of the year are good they believe that the whole year will be fine and that every thing will flourish. There are lots of prophets, soothsayers and gamblers, and the whole country for the time goes wild. The beggars are out in force. They go about the last night of the old year with buckets of paste and red placards, on which are written good fortune and New Year wishes. They paste these on the walls and doors of the houses of the people who are well to do, and come around early the next day and beg for a gift as a reward for their printed card the night before.

HOW THE KOREANS FLY KITES.

Some of the queerest people I have ever met are the Koreans. The world knew nothing about them ten years ago, and they have today about the same customs which the Chinese had four hundred years ago. They are to a large extent a nation of children and New Year is a great day with them. On this day men and boys turn out to fly kites and they keep this kite flying up during the New Year holidays. When they are over they cut the strings of their kites and let them fly away, believing that the kites will carry of any ill luck which may be waiting for their owners. A Korean kite is different from any other kite in the world. It has no tail and is nearly square. It is made of thin pieces of bamboo covered with paper, with a hole in the center. The fact that it has no tail makes it require great skill to operate it, and the Koreans use reels of strings instead of balls. When they get their kites high up in the air they try to make them swing this way and that so they will cut the strings of their neighbors, and when the strings become entangled their owners pull at them and the one who gets hold of his enemy's kite first has the right to it. These kite fights are very skillfully managed, and a thousand people often watch them with as much interest as the Spaniards do a bull fight and we Americans do, the race track.

ONE SUNDAY A YEAR.

New Year's day is a sort of a Korean Sabbath. It is the only Sunday the Koreans have, and the same may be said of the Chinese. In Korea no one ever works on New Year and there are family reunions like our Thanksgiving day. Children on this day are expected to go home to their parents. All debts have to be paid, and every one expects to get his bills at the last of the year. On New Year' morning it is imperative that you call upon your friends, and you are expected to sacrifice to your ancestors. The giving of New Year presents is common, and these presents are always sent out in a certain kind of box known as New Year's boxes. Every one comes out in new clothes and for a week little else than feasting is done. The Koreans are very superstitious and one of their New Year's customs is the making of effigies of straw representing themselves. In these straw men are hidden pieces of money and also a piece of paper on which is written a prayer asking that the owner be delivered from all plagues and diseases and misfortunes for the year to come. Boys call for these effigies and they cut them up to get the money out of them. The more they are cut the better will be the luck of the persons who make them. After they are torn to pieces the remainders are thrown at some cross roads, where they are burnt.

The Japanese celebrate the New Year much the same as do the Chinese. Calls are made, presents exchanged and settlements are expected. The children are out in force. They play all sorts of games and they make snow men just as our boys do in America.

NEW YEAR IN TURKEY.

The Turks have a number of holidays. I was in Constantinople on Mohammed's birthday and the people were all out in their best clothes, and I watched the sultan go to the mosque. I also saw the procession which goes every year across Constantinople to kiss the mantle of Mohammed. The Mohammedan year is eleven days shorter than ours, and its New Year day changes from year to year. The astrologers fix the exact beginning of it by firing a rocket from one of the heights about Constantinople, and the Turks celebrate it in great shape. The sultan gives a reception in one of his palaces and in this reception every one gets a New Year gift in the shape of some Turkish gold pieces which are especially minted for the purpose. All the high class Mohammedans make presents to their households on this day, and nearly every servant gets a piece of money. FRANK G. CARPENTER.

Written for this Paper.

SEASONABLE REFLECTIONS.

It has been said that "misfortunes never come singly," and as human experience evolved the saying, it may be assumed that later observation will find reasons for continuing such superstition, or faith. Things are so intimately blended in this probation that pestilence springs from famine, and poverty breeds disease and death just as certainly as cause and effect follow each other in most matters whether good or evil. While humanity loses heart under lengthy depression, it is surprising how easily recuperation comes when the turning point is reached; just as when the honored pioneers of these valleys forgot readily their weariness, their hardships, persecution and sacrifice, when they felt the solemn quietude of these mountains, and realized that the old spirit and the trying conditions were gone—possibly never to return again.

Illustrations might be cited, both on a small and a colossal scale, to show how unnoticed calam at the past merges into a present. The destructive flood of Johnstown was but the topic of a few days; the Civil War, of a few years, and save for special fostering it would not have endured as it did. The trying famine, of early Utah times was forgotten almost at the sight of harvest, and the history of the handcart trip across the plains became half-mythical amid the warmth and cheer of welcome given to the survivors on their arrival here. The frenzied fever patient lapses into a passive dreamy state with the returning tide of health; and so, while in many cases calamity follows calamity, in many cases also an apparent calamity produces exceedingly beneficial results. The storm is succeeded by increased wealth of verdure; special good health comes to the recruited invalid, and Nauvoo the beautiful becomes, by an exodus of force, the grandly magnificent self-respecting Utah, conscious of greater power and a loftier sweep of destiny than the prairies ever could have given.

Financial depression is the unexpected parent of cautious economy, and when tens of thousands are unemployed, and necessity in every guise insists upon relief, then the throbbings of the people's mighty heart renege apart the garb of selfishness and indifference, until contributions in unstinted measure assert again and again the essential brotherhood of man, and the fact of Christian charity beneath the surface of personal restraint, cramped conditions, and a future, cloudy at the best. Hesitancy is an unknown factor in such emergency. To divide is hardly considered a virtue—it is a privilege to minister to suffering and want. By the conditions, Providence feels the heartstrings of His children, judges (if it may be so expressed) the progress of the world, and makes me, to themselves an object lesson and testimony to growth in a life's ideal.

Men cannot always mark how chivalry and patriotism flinch to fervor until an enemy is before them in the field; nor can the religious man explain fully how persecution makes him cling the closer to his faith, or how "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church!" Heroism is often exhibited, if not actually born, under the stress of circumstances; and true inspiration burns with greatest brilliancy when its need is made most absolute, by reason that the darkness is so keenly felt. Some of these are the enigmas of life, to be solved only through the abiding consciousness that in the domain of divine routine accident finds no place, and that compensation is inherent in that which to limited vision appears only in the form of calamity, sorrow, trial and loss.

Many men have deplored during this year their non-success in life. Others have mourned a blighted home. Sickness and death invading the precincts of the family circle, have captured its bloom and beauty, and crushed uncounted hopes. Friend has betrayed friend; cool and jealous souls have hinted confidence away. Sympathy has been smothered in its expression, and love has bartered itself for dross. Everything has seemed inconstant, unreliable, shadowy and fleeting as the morning's mist. The days have fled, the year wanes and the lesson of an overruling hand has not impressed itself upon the tablets of all experiences or scarcely claimed an earnest thought. And yet God rules. He directs, controls and hesitates not in the pursuit of Good for every human soul. Some "learn to trust where they cannot trace." Others see "through a glass darkly," but are satisfied in time. A few of rare experience possess unshrinkable faith; and not a few are doubtful as to whether the infirmities, weaknesses, sins of man awake any attention from "the Majesty on High."

Large numbers of the human family exult in their own strength, magnify their own wisdom, extol their own ability, and claim to carve out their own destiny. They never tell of miscalculation, of baffled hopes, of disappointment, failure here and wrong there; but their beginning and end are known alike to Him, and "He will bring them by a way which they have not known to a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker He is." It goes without saying, that since last year's resolves, thoughts have been indulged in which were unworthy; words have been uttered which much would be given to recall; acts have been performed which linger in remembrance, hiding beneath a cheap and flimsy veil the self-laudation of limited experience.

It may be asked, What is this to me, or what to the future? Much every way, if only to say, "Let the dead past bury its dead," and with the dying year, in a contrite spirit let go this blurred and tainted record. Then with chastened thought and conscious weakness seeking to "the strong for strength," and trusting in infinite mercy and wisdom for the condonation of past folly, begin anew the coming segment of human measure, as if the destinies of a world hung on personal integrity and its unflinching effort. So, financial pressure, unusual economy, loss of friends, sacrifice of property, worry and anxiety, self-reproach and failure, shall have yielded precious fruit, and sickness, change or death will have but opened all eyes to the transitory nature of time and things, presenting through faith the permanent and eternal beyond this vale of tears. Even the gigantic calamities of fire and flood, of famine and pestilence, of so-called "accidents and fearful loss of life," are from this view but the shadows of a mighty change, but "signs of the times," which he "who runs may read;" the closing of an era, the opening of another seal, the beginning of a new chapter in man's history and the Divine economy, which shall be more startling than any of its predecessors, more indicative of the culmination of that "controversy" which the Prophet spoke of in the ages long ago.

Utah and her people—the Latter-day Saints—are moving on the lines of destiny to an outcome which shall surprise both friends and foes, for human wisdom hath not devised it, nor can it bring the same to pass. The Saints are but the instrument, an Omnipotent hand alone can sweep its wondrous strings.

STORY OF A LETTER.

Modern mail service is regarded in this country as being well nigh proof against all kinds of miscarriages. Yet, notwithstanding the almost marvelous methods applied to insure prompt and efficient delivery there are instances of the going astray of valuable letters and packages for which no satisfactory explanation can be given. Such a case has just come to light in this city.

The particulars as obtained by a News representative Dec. 28 are as follows: About the 20th of October of the present year George Q. Cannon & Sons company sent out a great many business circulars to its agents in this and surrounding states and territories. Among them was one addressed to George Williams of Beaver, Utah, a gentleman with whom the firm had done some business. This circular like all of the others was enclosed in an ordinary unsealed envelope with a one cent stamp on it.

Mr. Williams, having closed up his dealings with the company declined to take it from the office although it was several times tendered to him by the Beaver postmaster. He knew who the writers were by the envelope, it bearing the usual company advertising.

Quite recently Mr. A. M. Buchanan, one of the firm's traveling agents passed through Beaver and the postmaster being well acquainted with him handed him the letter. Mr. Buchanan mechanically opened it and was surprised on discovering that it contained in addition to the circular a smaller envelope sealed, stamped and cancelled. It bore the stamp of the Salt Lake postoffice of October 22, and was addressed to William A. Davies, president of the Fraternal Life Association, No. 206 Sansome street, Rooms 4 & 5, San Francisco, California.

Well, Mr. Buchanan was very much puzzled over the matter and hardly knew what to do. Finally he arrived at the conclusion that some clever fake advertisers were at work and determined to open the envelope, which he did. In it was a check signed by W. S. McCormick & Co., bankers and made payable to Lipman, Nadel & Sons of this city. This was properly endorsed by the last named firm and was made to apply on a life insurance of M. Nadel, payable at the First National Bank of San Francisco. The letters were brought to this city and Mr. Buchanan went to the place where Mr. Nadel used to do business on East Temple street as a clothier. There he ascertained that the firm had removed, but was not able to learn where they were now holding forth. Today he secured that information from the reporter and at once waited on Mr. Nadel, who informed him that the mysterious miscarriage of the letter had been the occasion of a great deal of annoyance and worry as its failure to reach its destination led to the conclusion it was probably the desire to drop the policy something that may yet be done in case the matter is not satisfactorily explained to the insurance people. The prospects of such a proceeding would seem to be considerably weakened by the statement here made.

It appears, according to Mr. Nadel's statement that he has been paying $21.50 each alternate month on a policy of $5000 for a period of twelve years. This being the case, he is naturally not very anxious to lose the handsome sum that he has paid on the same. Now the query in his mind is: Can Postmaster Nash or any of his clerks explain how this strange miscarriage occurred?

WAYNE COUNTY, AGAIN.

CAINESVILLE, Wayne Co., Utah, Dec. 16, 1893.—As a number of questions have been asked regarding this country, I thought it best to answer in your columns.

There is a good supply of water, which can be taken out very handily, there being water ditches made to convey water to most of the land; one canal is now in progress. The soil is mostly blue clay land, bearing black greasewood and mineral weeds. There is considerable mineral in this kind of soil, but good crops can be raised on it after the first year. As you get near the river the soil is a sandy loam, very rich, covered with willows, rabbit brush, wild canes, etc. There is not much feed for stock, as the range is overdone at present. Lumber is worth twenty dollars per thousand—common lumber. We are 100 miles from the railroad at the nearest point—that is Salina, on the D. & R. G. W. There is no meadow land. The water is very fair except in time of freshets which are worst in July and August.

This country is surrounded by mesas, with a ledge of rock about one hundred feet high all round the top. They are about 500 to 1000 feet high above the valley. The surrounding scenery is not tempting and this is no place for a tenderfoot and scenery seekers. But good working men and energetic people who can bring good recommendations can find homes here. There is not much land to be taken up here, if any, but those who have land will divide with such as I have mentioned for a small figure. We want some one to come here with a good store. In fact, some one to help build up the country. We are new settlers in this part; there is not much sale for produce at present, but one can raise all he wants to eat, if he will till the earth, as we have a splendid climate, can work clearing land, building, fencing, ploughing, etc., most all winter. Snow never lies in the valley over three or four days at a time. Horses and cattle are cheap we have to go fifty miles to the grist mill, and there we can get roller flour; but we have a splendid mill site and are going to raise more grain, if we can get a mill. There is no danger of frost in grain. There have been two crops of oats raised in one season.

We have had considerable sickness this winter, having been visited by that dread disease diphtheria.

Respectfully,
W. E. HANKS.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Jefferson county, Colo., has become the owner, by tax sales, of about 12,000 lots in additions adjoining Denver.

Colorado wheat fed hogs this winter has realized the farmers 80 cents a bushel in the eastern portion of the state.

In Las Animas county, Colo., Mrs. Dr. Beshoar enjoys the honor of being the first lady voter to register in that county.

In Jefferson county, Colorado, some of the farmers on the Church ditch have to haul their water for domestic use a distance of six miles.

Wheat sowing has been going on all winter in Kit Carson county. The weather has been as mild as September on the plains this winter.

The Cache county court has appropriated $500 for the purpose of making a display of Cache county products at the Midwinter Fair.

Nevada is turning its attention largely to hopculture in the valleys. The soil and climate is exactly suitable to the perfection of hops, says an exchange, which do not do well in a wet climate.

The Chinese consul at San Francisco has sent a communication to the board of health stating that he had issued an official notice commanding all Chinese to thoroughly overhaul and cleanse their houses.

Lon Hartigan, captain of Company K, Colorado national guards, and city editor of the Durango Herald has just died of pneumonia. He was a graduate of West Point and a man of fine natural abilities.

Philip O. Koonce, the 18-year-old boy who pleaded guilty to the charge of robbing the mails on the Hailey-Corral route, Idaho, has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the Ada county jail.

Trinidad (Colo.) children contributed enough food, fuel and clothing for the helpless poor of that city to last all winter. About ten wagons of stuff was gathered together, among which was 1350 pounds of flour.

The Montezuma hotel at Las Vegas is said to have been purchased by Wilson Waddingham, who intends converting the place into an American Monte Carlo. A spacious casino is to be added to the hotel.

The firm of Walker & Sons, who have an extensive dry goods concern at Kearney, Nebraska, and who had branches at Cheyenne and other places, have failed with liabilities amounting to $95,000.

A gymnasium has been established in connection with the public schools in Trinidad, Colo. Regular drills and a half hour devoted to physical culture will be among the daily routine of the Trinidad schools hereafter.

In Centennial valley, Montana, and near the town of Lima, a dam, tunnel and canal are being constructed this winter which will bring 80,000 acres of land into cultivation. The canal will extend to Dillon, Montana.

Jefferson county, Colorado, promises to become the greatest poultry producing section of the state. Mr. John Nichols, near Golden, is introducing steam incubators and employing a poultry expert from the East to manage them.

"Nevada doesn't want to be annexed to Utah or vice versa," remarks the Carson Appeal, and then goes on to say that Nevada may be down now but is on a sound financial basis, and is content to hoe its own row and paddle its own canoe.

The Bessemer colony people, who recently located homesteads on the Divide, not far from Colorado Springs, are enthusiastic over their selections. The new settlement promises to become a notable potato-growing community.

In Garfield county, Colorado, the railroads are the heaviest taxpayers. The Rio Grande is taxed $14,418, the Midland $10,588 and the Rio Grande Junction $5,475. This is merely the straight county tax, exclusive of township and school district taxation.

Laramie, Wyo., will share in the benefits derived from the contract awarded to the Pueblo rolling mill by the Union Pacific for 30,000 tons of steel rails. The Laramie mill will furnish the iron angle bars, which will keep the mill running for five months.

John Pechlorich, a Slavonian carpenter employed at the Midwinter Fair grounds, fell into the hands of two footpads on Wednesday evening. He was quietly wending his way to a meeting of the Slavonian club when the assault occurred.

The San Francisco board of education, which has been prolific of more than its share of scandals during the past few months, says the San Francisco Chronicle, is now laboring with what gives every promise of developing into a fair-sized sensation.

On the South Mosquito mountain, near Fairplay, Colo., two miners named McCaul and Lamb observed an avalanche start to move above them. They had just time to run a few hundred feet when an avalanche of snow swept down behind them, right over the spot they had recently stood upon.

The survey of the Coalville Indian reservation, opposite Kitle Falls, Wash., having been completed, and the government inspector having finished his duties of the inspection of the lines, there is a prospect that the reservation will be speedily opened to settlers.

The State University at Reno, Nev., has closed the last season of the old year, and will re-open on January 4th. The Journal says that the present season has been the most important in the history of the institution in point of numbers and the general excellence of the work done. About 175 students have been in attendance.

In the Shoshone mountains, Wyoming, fifteen miles from Cera postoffice, the Cheyenne papers report that a monster has been discovered in a mountain lair. It is said to be sixty feet long and as big around as a horse, and belonging to the prehistoric palaeozoic age. The whisky sold in that neighborhood is awful.

James P. Bushee of Portland, Or., Masonic grand lecturer of Oregon, fell from a Union Pacific train on Christmas day, and was instantly killed. The deceased was returning to spend Christmas with his family, and when the train was within the city limits he slipped on the icy platform and fell, striking on his head.

J. F. Puyne, the Chicago Tribune man, who is attempting the 6,000 mile journey in 100 days on a one cent capital, met with a misfortune between here and Denver, says the Cheyenne Leader. He was sound asleep in the caboose of a train when some person unscrewed a valuable diamond from his scarf and got away with it safely.

There are fully 540,000 acres of land tributary to Mesa City which are unsurpassed for fertility, yet subject to entry by actual settlers. The water problem is the only thing now to be settled in order to transform this vast area into beautiful and profitable farms.

The water problem will be settled ere long.—Albuquerque Citizen.

For a year past the Stockton, Cal., steamers carried passengers both ways over a ninety-mile course for the modest sum of twenty-five cents. This was the price of a first-class passage. Berths were only twenty-five cents each and meals fifty cents under the competitive rates. On the 1st of January, so report says, the rate of fare will be raised to $1.

William T. Roberts, late of Denver, but at present serving a term of twelve years in the Canon City (Colo.) penitentiary for murder, is the latest applicant for pardon. He says the court was prejudiced against him, the prosecuting attorney intimidated a witness, and the wife of the petitioner was allowed to testify, which, he claims, she did falsely.

Naturalists say that the largest serpent of which accurate measurements have been taken in modern times was an anaconda which Dr. Gardner found dead and suspended in the forks of a tree in Mexico. It was dragged out into open ground by two horses and a careful measurement with a tape line proved that it was thirty-seven feet in length.

Cattle on the ranges never averaged better than now, says the Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise. The stock is not fat, but average in very good condition, and a little later will be in prime order for the block. The drought thinned the cattle on the ranges to a reasonable number. An estimate of the losses is one-third of the cattle—most of the dead being old stock.

Three indictments have been formed by the Ada county grand jury against Edward M. Goodrich, a young man who lives in Boise valley, each charging him with grand larceny. One indictment charges him with stealing a calf, another with stealing five calves and two steers, and the third for stealing two calves. Young Goodrich has always borne an excellent reputation. He says he purchased the stock.

A Montana lumber dealer has offered to supply that city with 750,000 feet of lumber, sawed to order and delivered on the track at $15 per 1,000 feet, contract to run six months.

Superintendent of Supplies Clark has laid the matter before Supervisor Mc Murray and Alderman McGilvray, and if the time of delivery can be extended to a year the bid will probably be accepted, as it is 16 per cent below any other bid received.

If the suggestions of the irrigation convention which met recently in California are carried out, says the Phoenix (Ariz.) Gazette, it will not be long before the waste places of this great western country will be made fruitful plains. If to make two blades of grass grow where one has grown is work worthy the philanthropist how infinitely grander is the work of compelling arid lands to become sources of food supply for thousands.

Edward Toohey was seriously injured at the Griffin mine, St. Kevin district, Colorado, on Saturday, and will in all probability lose the sight of both eyes, besides being disfigured for life. He was picking out some loose rock when a terrific explosion occurred. It is supposed that he struck a "missed" hole. The force of the explosion threw Toohey some distance from the rocks with great force, badly bruising him, besides other injuries.

E. S. Pomeroy, a pioneer of 1850 and an old miner, took a dose of poison on Christmas morning and was found dead in his room in the Jefferson hotel, San Jose, Cal. He was a native of New York, aged 65. At one time he was well off, but lost his fortune in mining speculations, and for the last seven years had been clerk in the New York Exchange hotel. He was recently discharged and despondency caused him to end his life.

The other day at the Bitumen mines the one-year-old child of Will Majors was playing in a yard when an eagle swooped down on the child, who defended itself as best it could, the eagle making desperate efforts to carry the little one off. The child's screams attracted Mrs. Majors, who scared off the bird of freedom. Boys spent an entire day trying to find the eagle's nest, but unsuccessfully.—Santa Cruz Sentinel.

A man named Davis has been hauled in by the game warden for killing deer in violation of the provisions of the fish and game law, says the Soda Springs Republican. When Davis heard that the officers were after him he skipped out, but the warden was too cute for him. He was adjudged guilty on the hearing and fined $100. He could not raise the funds, and was committed for fifty days in the county jail at Pocatello.

A sad case of suicide has occurred in Los Angeles. Mrs. C. C. Story, after giving birth to a child became suddenly insane, and before she could be prevented, took her husband's revolver, and placing the muzzle of the weapon over her heart, fired, the bullet passing through the heart and death ensuing in a few seconds. Mrs. Story was the wife of a well-known conductor of the Southern Pacific. She had two children besides the little babe.

A dispatch from Rangely, Colo., says that reports from that part of the state indicate a bad winter for stock and game. The drouth of last summer left the food poor, and the cattle are going into the winter in very bad condition to meet the severe weather. Deputy State Game Warden and Fish Warden C. W. White reports that there are thousands of deer in the neighborhood but that many will die from want of feed, and the loss in cattle from the same cause is expected to reach fully 25 per cent.

Charles Alpe, a butcher's apprentice of Stockton street, San Francisco, was stabbed in the right side on Friday night on the Barbary coast by Paul Escobas, a young Portuguese sailor. The wound, which penetrated the lung, may prove fatal. The affray occurred about 7 o'clock on Broadway between Kearney and Montgomery streets. There are conflicting stories told regarding the trouble which led up to the assault, but it appears as if it were the result of some old feud between the two and their respective friends.

Parties from Summit Lake report a peculiar elopement case in that section says the Lemoore (Cal.) Leader. A fifteen-year-old boy became infatuated with a married woman and left with her for parts unknown. The woman, a comely person, several years the senior of her youthful lover, had been working at the boy's home, and announced the intention of leaving. The boy proposed that he go along to assist her home with her bundles. Both left on horseback, and since then there has been no trace of them.

The Boise Statesman is authority for the report that H. W. Early of that city has announced his intention of bringing suit for damages for $100,000 against Altman & Co. of Buffalo, N. Y., and Isaac Dessau, a representative of that firm. It was Dessau who swore to the complaint on which Early was arrested on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the creditors of T. C. Early & Co. and which resulted in Early's being incarcerated in the county jail for several months pending the action of the grand jury, which only recently ignored the charge.

Sheriff Curtis and Mr. Sommers of Helena, Mont., manager of the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company, are in Butte, looking for G. A. Von Schrititz, manager of the company's Butte office. He is said to be short $1054.05 in his accounts. He is also said to owe a few hundred dollars about town, borrowed money. He left a letter to Mr. Somers confessing his guilt, and saying he had left town to try and get money to make good the shortage. He had been gambling and had used the company's money to play even. A reward of $200 has been offered for him.

The greatest excitement prevails in Chinatown, at Sacramento, over the abduction of a young Chinese woman, says the San Francisco Chronicle. Shortly after 2 o'clock on Christmas morning two villainous-looking highbinders drove up to her house on I street, and, on the plea of waiting to see her on important business, induced her to open the door. Scarcely had the woman appeared when the highbinders threw a blanket over her head and forced her into a wagon. They then whipped up the horses and drove furiously up I street, where they were lost in the darkness. Last accounts of the affair say that the abducted woman has not since been heard of.

Some break in the insulation of the wires connected with incandescent lamps at the bottom of the swimming bath at the Multnomah Athletic club, at Portland, Or., on Christmas night created wild commotion for a time. Several persons who plunged into the bath were severely shocked by the escaping electricity and were unable to help themselves. Friends who rushed to their assistance were smartly shocked by the brass railing around the tank, and in the commotion the bathers came near being drowned before they were pulled out. The wire connected with the lamps was finally cut and an end put to the trouble.

An unlucky and yet lucky boy is Cleme a Wetle of the Dalles, Or., says an exchange, and the several narrow escapes he has had from death can scarcely be counted on the fingers of his hands. He commenced by breaking his leg in three places. Shortly afterward a horse stepped on his foot, cutting off his big toe as neatly as a biscuit cutter could have done it. Last summer he was badly powder-burned while investigating explosive powder with other children. A few days ago a mule kicked him in the abdomen. A few days later he was shot in the stomach with a 32-caliber bullet, and still lives. The bullet went in and out again without lacerating the internal organs.

George C. Hunter, of Oakland, Cal., has lost his memory completely. He is alive and well, says a California exchange, goes about just like any ordinary person, but can recall nothing of his past life. His mind is a blank. He does not remember his wife nor his mother. Though he had a good education, he has forgotten how to read and write, and the multiplication table has fled into regions from which he cannot recall it. He remembers that a face is familiar, but that is all. The name of anything about the person he cannot recall. The accident bringing such consequences occurred on the 15th of October. Young Hunter was working on a locomotive in the railroad round house in West Oakland when an iron plug was blown from a steam pipe and struck him on the head, fracturing the brain.

TOPEKA, Dec. 29.—Mrs. Lease, sent Governor Lewelling the following letter this afternoon, anent her removal from the board of trustees of the state charitable institutions: "Disclaiming any intention of questioning your authority, or wisdom of your acts, or the integrity of your purposes, I beg leave to remind you that you have, as the chief executive of this state, tried and sentenced me without according me that which the law of the land accords the vilest criminal—the right of defense. Were I an employee of yours, your right to perpetrate this act of injustice might depend upon your inclination. As it is, I recognize the fact that I am an employee of the state, accountable as such to the people of this state for my official record, and for them, as well as for myself, I demand a statement and investigation of the charges preferred against me, that I may have an opportunity to concede the manifest justice of your decree, or defend myself from the imputation of hiring politicians."

THE SCANDINAVIAN FATHERLAND.

Prepared from Special Cablegrams.

SWEDEN.

Influenza is raging fearfully in Stockholm.

The island of Gothland in the Baltic will be connected with the Swedish continent by telephone.

The schooner Olga, Captain Jansson, was wrecked off Sandhamaren. The crew was saved, but had a narrow escape.

Three of the Laplanders, who were exhibited in the Lapland village at the World's Fair, arrived at their old home the other day.

Steam turbine fire engines are now being manufactured by Dr. Gustaf de Laval, the great inventor. They work much more satisfactory than the old fire engines.

Sweden, as is known, is chiefly an agricultural country, there being close upon one and three-fourths acres of arable land per inhabitant, an unusually high figure for Europe.

The oath, which the state church demanded every one of her clergymen to take before the preacher was allowed to be a minister of the gospel working in the interest of the national church, has been abolished. A solemn promise will take the place of the oath.

Many English and Dutch skaters will participate in the international skating tournament to be held in Stockholm next year. Harald Hagen, the Norwegian champion, will be there, and two Americans are also out for the stuff. The king and the whole royal family will view the "races" from boxes especially built for the purpose. The contest will decide the world's championship.

In the manufacture of gloves Sweden has obtained a certain reputation abroad in consequence of the introduction into the market of gloves, in which the leather is placed with the hair-side in and the flesh-side out, contrary to the ordinary custom. These gloves, fashionably known as "Gants de Suede," are manufactured solely in the province of Skone, where there are nine such factories, with a produce-value of $140,000.

Of late years, however, in Sweden, as in most other European countries, the soil has not yielded sufficient food for the needs of the population, chiefly in consequence of the increase in consumption and also because, owing to the increasing importance of cattle rearing, more stress has been laid on producing fodder than on growing cereals. The value of all the ground farmed in Sweden is computed at about $783,000,000.

The Swedish soil is divided into about 330,000 parcels, 280,000 being farmed by the owners themselves, and but 50,000 by tenants. Most of the ground belongs to small landowners, even if there are, in certain provinces a number of large estates. The Swedish peasant has always been free and independent, the feudal system and consequent serfdom for the agricultural laborer having never gained a footing in Sweden. Agriculture has made great progress, and the return yielded by the soil is very fair. For instance, wheat yields 20 to 22 bushels per acre, while the average for western and southern Europe is 17 bushels, and for the United States but 12 to 13 bushels.

NORWAY.

The Hoelgenæs Hotel in Romsdalen was burned down.

A moderate-conservative club has been organized in Bodo.

Small landslides are still reported from Værdalen.

A new Methodist church will probably be built in Christiania.

The sixth Norwegian labor convention will be held in Skien Jan. 21.

The railroad line between Ekersund and Flekkefjord will be completed before 1897.

B. Bjornson's "Mary Stuart in Scotland" was performed at the Christiania theater for the 100th time.

The majority of the grocery clerks of Christiania have organized a union for mutual benefit and protection:

Thomas Angell's Institution has bought the country-mansion Lerfossene and large forests in Selby and Tydalen.

It is said that King Oscar will spend the greater part of next year in Christiania. The king and the queen will arrive at Christiania Jan. 23rd.

Ex-minister Berner made a speech in a mass meeting in Stavanger the other night. The Radicals of the city gave later a banquet in honor of Mr. Berner.

The circulation of all the conservative papers of Christiania is said to be much larger than last spring; and the circulation of the organs of the left has decreased a little.

DENMARK.

The first private telephone in Samsø was put up the other day.

Miss Amesen-Kall, Denmark's oldest authoress, celebrated her 80th birthday.

The prominent hotel keeper Staugard, one of the oldest citizens of Loegstoers, is dead.

The Duchess of Chartres, Princess Marguerite and Prince Henri of Orleans paid a visit to the royal family.

The Workingmen's Building Association of Copenhagen completed its 100th house.

Scarlet fever is raging epidemically in Copenhagen, and many hundred cases are reported.

A tunnel may soon be built under the Great Belt between the island of Sjælland and the Jylland peninsula.

About fifty Danish fishermen perished during the last storm. Only off Hanstholm 22 were drowned. Off Agger 13 were drowned.

Sofus Birch, the author has written several new plays which will be published next year by Book Dealer Jacob H. Mansa.

A bill granting municipal suffrage to women passed the Folkething by a vote of 39 to 13, but it is next to certain, that it will be defeated in the Landsting.

Martin Christensen, of Lungby who had the exceedingly rare pleasure of attending the golden wedding of his daughter, recently died at the age of 94 years.

C. Schmidt-Hansen, the painter, has sold one painting to Munich for 25,000 kroner, and "Funeral on Board the Ship" to the Dantzig picture gallery for 8,000 marks.

Since the great importance of needle work instruction in the schools has of late been more and more acknowledged, the equally great importance of following a fixed method has become apparent. The first person who introduced a properly organized system was Rosalie Schallenberg in Germany. In 1881 the Stockholm institution "In Memoriam of Lars Hiarto" sent a Swedish teacher, Miss Hulda Lundin, to Germany, in order to learn the new method of needlework. On Miss Lundin's return from Germany the Schallenberg method was under her superintendence introduced in some of the national schools of Stockholm, and courses were arranged by her for educating teachers in needlework. After having further studied foreign systems Miss Lundin was in 1885 nominated superintendent of the national schools of Stockholm.

She afterwards independently developed these ideas herself and created a pedagogical working system which is more and more recognized as Swedish.

Miss Lundin gives courses of instruction in needlework to teachers, who afterwards spread her method all over the country. Her system has gained many friends in other European countries, and especially in America.

Models of these works as well as explanations of the manner of working were exhibited at the Chicago Exposition, and attracted general attention.

OAKS OF BRITTANY.

About half way down the room, on the east side of the hall in which the Art Exhibition is now being held in this city, hangs a pretty picture, showing a scene of combined forest and field. It is encased in a plain, broad, gold colored frame, on the lower part of which is the inscription in small Gothic letters, "Oaks of Brittany." The central object in the painting is a large, scraggy oak, around which are large boulders of granite, while the background is a dense forest of the giant trees. The foreground of the picture is an open, grassy plat, through which there passes a winding path to a wicket gate leading through a stone fence near the right side of the scene depicted.

The painting is by a Utah artist, J. T. Harwood, of Lehi, who made the sketch from nature while on a visit to northwestern France. The scene is near a village in North Brittany, or Bretagne, as it is called in France. Beyond the wicket gate and a short distance into the woods there runs a pretty brook, which is notable as the scene where is spent a great portion of the time of a man who is unlike any other man in the world. He is vigorous in body, tall and erect, and of muscular build. He has no eyes, no nose, no mouth, and it might be said no face. Of the usual frontal part of a human being's physiognomy he has only the lower jaw and the upper part of the forehead. All the rest of the face is artificial, and throughout the country round he is known as the man with the wooden head. His name is Moreau.

The man is not a freak of nature. He was born perfectly formed, and grew to manhood with his senses unimpaired. In fact, so the people say, he was a good-looking young fellow of the age of 20, when, in 1871, he shouldered his gun in defense of his country in the Franco-German war, where he distinguished himself by his bravery.

His head, or face rather, is not made of wood, though it has that appearance. It is of platinum, shaped into the form of the features and painted so as to resemble human flesh. Of course, the resemblance is very bad, and as Moreau walks about the village where he lives, mingles with the neighbors and engages in the ordinary occupations of life, his appearance is more than strange—it is ghastly. The eyes shine white, like enamel set in a frame of some chalky substance. There is no expression to this curious mask. There is no opening of the mouth nor any movement whatsoever.

The change Moreau's appearance was caused by a remarkable experience in a desperately fought engagement before Paris. He was a gunner at a point in the line where the fire of the Prussians was particularly deadly. Four of his comrades had fallen at his side and he himself had been slightly wounded. Suddenly with a crash and a great roaring in his head, he felt himself spun round eight or ten times like a top, but so curiously poised on his feet that he did not fall. He felt no pain and did not realize that he was seriously injured. It seemed to him that a ball had struck him on the head and glanced off. There was a rush of blood, however, and he put up his hand to find the central part of his face gone. He pressed a handkerchief to the wound and started for the military hospital. His case was then considered hopeless, and it was believed that he would die within twenty-four hours. In fact, it was hoped that he would die.

Curiously enough, in spite of the shell's terrible mutilation, one eye had been left in the shattered socket, so that Moreau was able to see at first, but the hemorrhage was so great that his eye was torn away, and on the second day he was entirely blind. Very much to every one's surprise the poor fellow continued to live, and on the fourth day it was decided to operate upon his head. Thirty-five pieces of shattered bone were taken from the gaping wound, some of them very large pieces. No vital part seemed to have been touched, and owing to his strong constitution he recovered, his face having a terribly mutilated appearance, with parts of the cheek bones and forehead carried away and the eyes, nose, upper lip and a portion of the upper jaw gone. When he spoke his voice had a peculiar sound somewhat resembling a phonograph.

The surgeons made the best of a difficult case. The lower jawbone being intact, an artificial set of teeth was attached to it, raised on a bridge-like platform, and these were made to work against another set of teeth fastened across one of the ribs of a mask, fashioned so as to cover the cavity. This mask was furnished with eyes, nose and lips, so as to give a certain ghastly resemblance to the human face. It was made of wax.

For ten years Moreau wore this mask constantly, even at night; but in 1888, while visiting some friends at Valenciennes, he had a severe attack of brain fever, and in one of his delirious moments he tore off the mask and broke it into pieces. Being very poor—in fact, entirely dependent upon his scanty pension—Moreau could ill afford to have another wax mask made to replace the old one, and for a long time he suffered agonies of humiliation because he had no way of concealing his hideous disfigurement. Finally, however, a petition was made to the French government and an artist was sent to make a platinum mask, and instructions were given that this mask must be kept in repair and painted whenever it became necessary, so as to imitate as nearly as possible the human appearance. Since then, about once a year, an artist from Paris visits the little village where Moreau lives and with brush and pencil makes such changes in the exterior of the platinum mask as are needed, restoring eyebrows and complexion, coloring the eyes and lips and in general making the old soldier look a little more like an animated doll and a little less like some horrible specter.

Notwithstanding his affliction it is said that the unfortunate man lives happily enough and is much liked by his neighbors. Strange as it may seem, he was able some years ago to persuade a comely maiden to become his wife, and she has borne him several children. As is usually the case, the man's remaining senses have become much quickened since his misfortune, and he manages to earn quite a sum every year by weaving baskets and doing odd jobs with his hands in the way of mending and repairing. He greatly enjoys fishing, and it is in this pastime that he often spends many hours along the brook referred to in connection with the painting of "Oaks of Brittany." Sometimes people who have not heard of him but who come across him when he is seated by the side of a stream angling, are startled by the appearance of a man whose eyes stare but never close, whose lips are red but never smile, whose white face gives no changing expression, and whose voice seems to come with a thick sound from behind a drum. When they learn his history he is frequently the object of charity in the way of a goodly gift of money.

Such is the account given of this strange case, the incidents connected with which, when once related, are vividly recalled by gazing upon the picture in the art exhibition of a pretty scene close to the home, and intimately connected with the associations of the gallant and sturdy Breton whose mask is a necessity to his comfort in life.

THE MURDERER of Mayor Harrison of Chicago having been declared sane and guilty, it is now necessary, in order to clear up all controversy, that the lunacy of a good many of the medical experts shall be admitted.

MAORI SUPERSTITITION.

The Auckland (New Zealand) Weekly News of July 29, 1898, contains the following article, kindly sent to the NEWS by Elder B. H. Hollingsworth (now laboring as a missionary in that land) who vouches for the correctness of the incident, and adds that most of the parties named were members of the Church:

Constable Moore, of Kamo, has been making inquiries into the statements made as to several Maories of various ages having died through remedies prescribed by a Maori tohunga against witchcraft, or being makutued. The information he has received is to the effect that between the North Cape and Whangarei 40 or 50 Maories have died from the heroic treatment adopted.

A meeting of natives was to be held at Kaikohe on July 21, to consider the action of the tohunga, and what steps should be taken in the matter.

As a number of natives were said to have died in the Ngunguru district, Constable Moore went to Ngunguru on the 14th July, and made all possible enquiries as to the treatment by the tohunga. It appears the tohunga came to Ngunguru from Kaikohe about the 8th March last with a number of his followers, and had a meeting of natives at Thomas Wellington's pa on the Ngunguru river. At this meeting the tohunga is said to have told several natives that they were makutued, and that they would die if they did not come under his treatment to drive the evil influence away. They were then taken one at a time into a whare, stripped of their clothing and put into a bath of scalding water in a sitting position, and rubbed, and after about an hour of this treatment they were told to go out into the cold air. This operation was performed four times a day, and the patients cried most bitterly whilst it was going on. The constable has learned that of five that were treated in this way, four have since died in the Ngunguru district. Keri Brown died in a week after this treatment at Matakuri, being only six months old. Constable Moore saw Graham, a native, and he informed the constable that the tohunga was leaving Ngunguru for Kaikohe; that his family were makutued, and that they were told they would all die unless they went to Kaikohe and put themselves under the tohunga's treatment. Graham believed the doctrine propounded to him, and went to Kaikohe, where he placed his daughter, aged 15, under treatment. She was then regarded in the best of health. After eight days, being bathed in scalding water four times a day in the presence of her father, who assisted in carrying out this cure for the makutu, she died. The next to be put under the same treatment was his second daughter, aged 12, who died in four days. Graham's baby was put under the same treatment, and died in a week. Then one of his sisters was treated in the same way, and died shortly afterwards, at Walomo, near Kawakawa. Four persons thus died, it is believed, from the effects of the hot baths. Graham informed the constable that in some cases the skin of the patients peeled off after going out of the baths.

Hot potato poultices were placed on their chests as soon as they came out of them. Constable Moore also learned that a girl named Lizzie Kaki and her sister Iva Kaki, aged 17 and 18 respectively, died about two weeks ago, also a little brother in March last who had undergone the same treatment, thus making eight persons who had died in the Ngunguru district alone. The tohunga has visited nearly all the native settlements between Kaikohe and Whangarei, and is now living at Kaikohe, some 20 miles from Kawakawa. Graham is now living near Kaikohe with some of his relatives.

The matter, we understand, has been reported to the government, who will probably take steps to have the matter thoroughly sifted, and the whole of the facts clearly ascertained.

A gentleman, who lately visited the North, writes on this subject:

It was with great interest I read your article on Maori superstition. While staying at Ngunguru (one of the places you mention), I had ample opportunity of seeing the tohunga at work, and his mode of treatment, as he came while I was there. The local natives were all on the qui vive for some weeks previous to the tohunga's coming, as he had notified his intention of spending a few days at Tommy Wellington's pa at the mouth of the Ngunguru river. For days the Maoris had been cooking and preparing food for the tohunga and his people. About the 10th day of March he arrived with upwards of 100 followers, and great feasting and ape chea of welcome were the order of the day for the first day. The next morning after his arrival the tohunga commenced his cures. His mode of treatment was very much the same as you describe in your paper. He first pointed out a native, and said that he or she was makutued, or was possessed of a bad spirit. His assistants, of which the tohunga had two, would then seize the supposed patient, drag him to a whare, strip him of every vestige of clothing, and put him in scalding hot water. It, in the opinion of the tohunga this did not suffice to drive the makutu, or evil spirit from the person being treated, he would order the patient to be doused in the river. These two extremes were considered absolute, but in many cases (when the poor things were suffering so much they could not help yelling and shrieking from pain) hot roasted potatoes were placed near their skin. Under this treatment it is no wonder so many deaths have occurred. In the case of the girl Harriet Graham, she was a daughter of one of the natives residing in the district, and it was with her that I went down from the hotel to see the tohunga at his work. Although a native girl, Harriet had never seen a tohunga before, and during the time we were watching him and his assistants she was absolutely terrified that he would order her to be treated. Her father seems to have had perfect confidence in this man's power, as he eventually placed his family under the tohunga's treatment; and I see by your report that four of the family have died, including the girl Harriet. Most of the patients I saw treated were females ranging from 11 years to 25 years.

Their cries were heartrending, and they would piteously appeal to those around for help, as they were thus being slowly murdered. But the more the patients yelled the more "treatment" they got, as the tohunga would say their surleyness was only due to the spirit, or makutu, coming out of them.

What I have here written is an outline of what I really saw myself. A more hideous or disgusting spectacle I never wish to see again, and it all occurred within 100 miles of Auckland. The matter, I hope, will be thoroughly sifted by the government, as it most decidedly should, and the whole of the facts ascertained.

WRAPPED IN FLAMES.

Captain Harder of the ship Lucipara, which arrived at San Francisco on December 12th, reports a most startling phenomenon encountered by the vessel in the Indian ocean while bound from London to Sydney. The crew observed a peculiar condition of the atmosphere and the sea when in latitude 42 deg. south and longitude 61 deg. east. The sea seemed to be kept down by a compression of the air, and all at once the vessel shivered as if from some submarine convulsion and a sheet of flame enveloped her. It circled about the masts and yards and the crew expected momentarily that the ship would take fire, but the flame snuffed out in a few moments as suddenly as it had appeared and no damage was done. A hurricane followed, but the vessel outroued it. The captain has no explanation to offer for this most remarkable phenomenon, but it is supposed that it was caused by some electrical or submarine explosion. The Lucipara is a four-master of 2,850 tons.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 29.—This morning while laborers were exhuming the bodies of deceased state convicts, to remove them to the new prison cemetery, they found the coffin of Jim Burrows, the train robber, buried two years ago, empty. The discovery caused a sensation, and led to rumors that the bandit may have escaped.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—This is Gladstone's 84th birthday. He passed the forenoon working hard in his study and during the afternoon went to the house of commons, receiving many telegrams of congratulation from distinguished people in all parts of the country.

CHICAGO, Dec. 29.—Attorney Trude in the Prendergast case, resumed his closing argument for the prosecution this morning. In the course of his remarks he had occasion to refer to Henry George, the great single tax advocate, whom he characterized as a "migratory and pestilential parasite."

Judge Britano began his charge to the jury at 1 o'clock p. m. The verdict of the jury in the Prendergast case was guilty, with sentence of death.

OBITUARY NOTES

BENJAMIN P. EVANS.

Benjamin P. Evans, a respected citizen and late resident of Center, Tooele county, died at that place on Wednesday morning last, after a short illness, leaving a family of seven children to mourn his death. Mr. Evans emigrated from Swansea, South Wales, in 1862. For a number of years before emigrating to this country he presided over the Welsh mission and conducted a monthly publication in the interest of the Church in the Welsh language. The funeral took place today at St. Johns, Rush Valley.

ERMA LAVINA ATWOOD.

On Friday, December 22, 1893, Erma Lavina Atwood, daughter of Frank and Amanda Lavina Harman Atwood, died at Mill Creek, Salt Lake county, aged 16 months and 17 days.

AMANDA LAVINA HARMAN ATWOOD.

At Mill Creek, Salt Lake county, on Monday, December 25, 1893, at 4:15 p. m., Amanda Lavina Harman Atwood passed from mortality. She was the beloved wife of Frank Atwood, and eldest daughter of Robert and Amanda Harman. Sister Atwood was born May 12, 1869, and was therefore 24 years, 7 months and 13 days old at the time of her death. She leaves an infant boy two months old.

Sister Atwood's death calls from this sphere of action a beloved and devoted wife, mother and daughter, and a faithful sister, and the families that are called upon to directly bear the loss have the sincere sympathy and condolence of a host of friends in Mill Creek and South Cottonwood wards and elsewhere. The illness and death of her beloved daughter weighed heavily upon Sister Atwood's mind, and her physical nature weakened by the conditions which existed was unable to bear the strain thus placed upon it.

WILLIAM L. ALLRED JR.

Private advices from St. Charles from William M. Allred, a friend of the News and a citizen well-known both in Idaho and Utah, brings news of the death on Dec. 22nd of his grand-son, William Lansing Allred Jr., a most excellent and promising young man aged 22 years. The funeral was held on the 24th, the birthday—a very sad one—of the sick grandfather.

The deceased was born in St. Charles, Idaho, Oct. 28, 1871. He had been attending the Agricultural college at Logan for some time, but nine days before his death he returned home suffering from heart trouble. His parents, William L. and Sarah Wilkes Allred are well nigh prostrated with grief, and a wide circle of relatives and friends mourn his untimely death.

THE DEAD.

Peaceful be their Rest.

DURPHEE.—At Cainesville, Wayne county, Utah, December 13, 1893, of diphtheria, Rosa Durphee, aged 10 years.

NORTON.—At Cainesville, Wayne county, Utah, December 13, 1893, Delos, son of Benjamin and Etie Norton, aged 3 years.

BILLS.—At Riverton, Salt Lake county, Edward A. Bills; born June 15, 1893; died December 17, 1893, of convulsions.

MYERS.—At her residence 410 east Fourth South street, at 8 o'clock a. m., Tuesday, December 28, 1893, Mrs. Ann Meyers; the deceased was aged 84 years.

NOYES.—At Cainesville, Wayne county, Utah, December 3, 1893, of typhoid pneumonia, after an illness of over three weeks, Gustavus, son of Fred and Maria Williams Noyes, aged 23 years.

BEACHAM.—At St. George, Utah, Dec. 20, 1893, Jacob Beacham. He was born in August, 1829, six miles from Bath, Somersetshire, England, and joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day saints in Monmouthshire, Wales, emigrated to the United States in 1856. He remained in Pennsylvania until 1861 and then came on to Utah. When the southern mission was called, he was a volunteer to come and settle St. George. He acceptably filled his mission to the very last.—[COM.]

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

Truth and Liberty.

No. 4.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, JANUARY 13, 1894.

VOL. XLVIII.

DIVINE INSPIRATION.

Discourse Delivered at the Sixty-fourth Semi-Annual Conference, of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Saturday Morning, October 7th, 1893, by

ELDER ABRAHAM H. CANNON.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I hope and pray, my brethren and sisters, that while I occupy this position for a few moments I may have an interest in your prayers and faith, that what I say may be that which the Lord desires to have said.

The Gospel which we have received, as all must know who have listened to the remarks of the brethren during this Conference, teaches us different principles and different ways of doing things than are generally known to the people of the world. God has commenced a marvelous work and a wonder, and He has said that He will carry it forward in His own way. He does not depend upon the counsels of men for His wisdom. He does not leave His work in the hands of men for its accomplishment. But He directs in all things which pertain to the upbuilding of His Church. He has said through one of His prophets, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." We have seen this exemplified in all the course of the Latter-day Saints, from the organization of the Church until the present day. It was not according to the ideas and ways of men that God established His Church and revealed the Gospel which we have received. He did it in His own way; and in the carrying forward of that work He has acted according to the plan which He designed, and has not submitted His purposes for the criticism of men. I believe that in the future, no less than in the past, God will do this. He designs that we shall be different to men in educational matters as well as in religious matters, in financial as well as in social affairs. He designs that in our education we shall occupy a higher plan to that which is common in the world; that we shall not depend alone upon the discoveries and inventions of mankind for our knowledge, but that we shall seek to receive from Him that inspiration and revelation which shall make us grasp in a moment that which it sometimes takes years of study and research on the part of uninspired men to acquire.

God has shown us, so far as we have gone in His work, that He is perfectly capable of pointing out to us truths which the human family, even after fifty years' announcement by the Elders of this Church, have not yet understood. Take, for instance, the Book of Mormon—a revelation giving knowledge to this people concerning the inhabitants of this land; telling of their forefathers, of the cause of the dark skins which they have, and of their destiny; describing the country which we inhabit and the travels of the people who built these great cities in the south, the ruins of which we find almost everywhere in the southern part of this continent. This truth the people of the world are only beginning now to verify through their explorations and their study; and every discovery which they make, every truth which they accept, is only a further evidence of the divine source from which this sacred record came. God has revealed this truth to the children of men; but they have rejected it, because of the source whence it came, and because of the bearers of this great historical record to the people of the earth.

God will open the heavens to His servants, if they will seek Him in faith. I believe it is the duty of the teachers of the youth of Israel, not alone to teach from the text books which are provided for the school, but to have their minds continually open to the impressions of the Holy Spirit, that when they speak to their pupils they may speak by the Spirit of God. I do not feel that a man or a woman who occupies the position of teacher among the youth of Israel is filling the position in its completeness who does not teach by the spirit and inspiration of Almighty God. The Bible itself is even now a book of science and revelation to the world, notwithstanding all the advancement we have made thus far in science and in art. It speaks there of the rotundity of the earth—a truth which was rejected in ancient times. In that book which was written so many centuries ago, we read of God having given to the air its weight; but not until Torricelli announced to the world that the air had weight would the people accept it. We read in this sacred book that the promise to Abraham was that his seed should be as the stars of heaven, innumerable; and yet in early days people ridiculed the expression, because it was announced to the world that there were only some one thousand stars in the heavens above us, and if his seed was to be limited to this small number it was no very great promise. But through the discoveries of the telescope it is revealed to us that the heavens are beset with the workmanship of our God, and the truth which Joseph Smith announced in one of the revelations, that there is no space in which there is no world, is verified by the discoveries which have been made through the inventions of modern times.

Now it is said that in one system alone, which we can see by means of the telescope, there are at least eighteen millions of worlds like this upon which we stand! And of systems there is no end.

God spoke by His Spirit through the holy men of old, and thus revealed truths which it will take the people of the world many years yet to discover by their slow processes of study and research. He intends to speak to this people and reveal to them scientific truths, as He has religious—truths which the world will not readily accept; and it will take years for them to be brought to the knowledge of that which God will reveal instantly to His servants who will seek knowledge from this source.

I believe that in every affair of life it is our privilege to have the guidance of the Spirit of God. Brigham Young, in founding this Territory, sought the inspiration of the Lord and worked continually under the influence of the Holy Ghost. We see the results of his magnificent labor and his grand instructions which He was inspired to give. He told the people to pursue a course which was contrary to the judgment of men. You older people will remember how it was in the early settlement of this valley. When the gold excitement was raised in California he counseled the Saints not to leave these valleys, forbidding as they were, to which God had led them, and he promised that those who would remain should receive a richer reward than those who sought their fortunes in the golden west. The results proved the truth of his prediction; for those who remained not only prospered in their temporal affairs, but their spiritual strength increased. Many of those who left this land and went west lost their faith, or wavered in the truth, the people who remained here, pinched by hardship, tried by adversity, were stronger in their faith and in the Lord, and they today are numbered among the rich and wealthy among the people of God. He told the Saints again that they should not engage in mining. He told them that the basis of their prosperity was the cultivation of the soil and the manufacture of those things necessary for their sustenance. The principle revealed in the Doctrine and Covenants was made expressive in the midst of the people of God, and they were advised to have the beauty of their apparel the workmanship of their own hands. The results which have followed show the wisdom of the counsel which God gave through His servants in those times. For while the mines have been opened, and I am thankful to the Lord for the wealth they have yielded for the benefit of the people, we find today that the prosperous people of this Territory are those who have devoted themselves to the cultivation of the soil and who have sought to produce, according to the ability which God has given them, that which they needed for the sustenance of themselves and their families.

A few weeks ago I supposed in my ignorance that nearly all the Latter-day Saints were in a species of bondage, through their indebtedness. I thought that almost every farm in the Territory was mortgaged, and almost every home possessed by the Latter-day Saints was obligated to some person or firm, because of the indebtedness of the owner. But within a few days I have had this illusion dispelled, and I am happy to say that the condition of the Latter-day Saints is not by any means as bad as I supposed it was. The census bulletin of the government of the United States which was recently issued concerning this Territory, shows how wise and far-seeing was the prophet of God in counseling the people to take the course which he suggested, because it shows that of the farm population of this Territory there are out of every one hundred families eighty-six that own unencumbered the land upon which they dwell and the houses that they occupy; five out of every hundred occupy encumbered possessions; while only nine out of every hundred families who are living upon farms are tenants. You go from the farms into the villages and towns of the people, compare their condition with that of the farming population, and you will find that out of every hundred families who have their homes in the country, without owning the farms, there are fifty-six families only that own their homes, while five own homes encumbered, and thirty-nine rent the places they occupy. Then you come into Ogden and Salt Lake City—the only cities mentioned in this census—and we find there the happy condition of the farming people reversed. In this city and Ogden, out of every hundred families occupying homes there are only thirty-two who own unencumbered the homes in which they dwell; nine out of every hundred have mortgages upon their residences; while the remaining fifty-nine hire the places in which they live. Now you see how it is. People in the country have not the temptations to extravagance which are presented daily to those who live in the cities.

They have not encumbered themselves, and they are comparatively free. They can go to bed at night knowing that the roof that covers them is their own. The labor that they expend upon their home is for their own benefit. On the morrow they cannot be thrust out into the world without home or possession. It is theirs. People should be happy who have their homes in this condition, and they should seek to pursue such a course that they will not lose possession of their lands; but bring them up to the highest possible state of cultivation, make them places of beauty, and use the energies and talents which God has given them for the benefit of themselves and those who are dependent upon them.

I say that herein we can see how God has inspired His servants to teach the people; and though at times they have not understood the wisdom concealed in the counsel that has been given, yet in following strictly that counsel they have found blessing and profit. Take, for instance, the principle of tithing. If you announced that to the world and asked them to observe it, would they not consider it one of the most burdensome taxes that could be inflicted upon them? Yet every Latter-day Saint is my witness that those who follow strictly this law of tithing among the people of God do not find it a burden, but rather find it a temporal as well as a spiritual blessing; for their property has been abundantly blessed, so that they have not missed the tithing which they have given to the work of the Lord. Take, again, the missionaries which we send into the world. If a man in the world was called to leave his business for two years or more to preach the Gospel, he would think it was ruinous to all his temporal affairs. But here are Elders who go out and spend year after year, and the very man who have spent the most time in the missionary field, and who stand at the head of the Church today, are the men who are the most prosperous and the most free from debt. And so the Lord will show forth the wisdom of the course which He presents to the people through the results which follow the efforts of the Latter-day Saints. We can do no better than to observe strictly every command that is given us by the servants of the Lord, however much they may conflict with our present ideas, and God will bless us in pursuing this course. We have before us the promises of great blessings. Only yesterday we had announced from this stand a prophecy in which all of us can take comfort—that we should come out of our present troubles with more credit and in a better financial condition than we have ever yet seen. I know men around me—and I have shared in the feeling myself—who have considered with horror the thought that our names were to be dishonored, our credit ruined, because, perhaps through our lack of wisdom or from some other cause, we have involved ourselves in debts which it seemed we would be unable to pay. We have thought this the greatest trial of our lives, because we are in the midst of it. We thought at one time the greatest trial was that which sent our brethren to prison, exiled our families, and scattered them here and there on the face of the earth without any human prospect of their ever again being gathered together, or of our being permitted to see on these stands the men whom we honored as the leaders of God's people on the earth. Yet out of that dark cloud the Lord has brought the glorious light of His Spirit, and today we are enjoying greater freedom and greater blessings than any we have had for many years. So I believe He will yet bring us out of our present troubles with no loss of honor. I testify that the prophecy which was uttered yesterday is the word of the Lord; for every man who will serve God and hold in his heart the influence of His Spirit will come out of these troubles and these seeming disasters brighter and clearer and better for the experience through which he has been called to pass. It is just as possible for God to do this, with all the darkness which appears before us, as it was for God through His servant to tell the widow who went out to gather sticks that she might bake a cake with which to feed herself and son once more before they died, and who out of that gave to the prophet, that her barrel of meal should not waste nor the cruse of oil fail until the earth brought forth again in its abundance. So it will be in this case. The famine for money which has spread over us and the lack of things which seem necessary for our prosperity, God will supply in one of the many ways which it is possible for Him to adopt to bring about salvation, temporally and eternally, to His children upon the earth. Amen.

Written for this Paper.

CABINET MINISTERS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3, 1894.—It was ten minutes to 11 o'clock last Tuesday. I stood on the White House steps. President Cleveland was in his office up stairs, ready to go to his cabinet meeting, which was to take place when the clock struck 11. A steady stream of visitors, sightseers and bridal couples sauntered up and down in half-moon walks which led from the iron fence to the porte cochere of the Executive Mansion. Some of the sightseers were in the vestibule staring at the wall of glass which separates the long promenade corridor from it. Others were trying the chairs of the east room, and still others were button-holing the guards and asking to be admitted to the private apartments of the house. Two brass buttoned policemen stood at the door, and a half dozen messengers, lounging in chairs or standing guard here and there, could be seen. No Congressmen or office seekers were visible. No one is received on cabinet days, and this order has become so well known that the latter class keep away, and the members, if they call at all, come early. I had taken my stand here to watch the cabinet come up. First I saw a carriage, with prancing horses, driving in at the gate. A swell coachman sat on the box, and a blonde man of fifty odd, dressed in dapper clothes, was its sole occupant. He had a heavy straw colored mustache, bright blue eyes and rosy cheeks. He sat straight up in the carriage, and, as his horses were reined suddenly up before me under the porte cochere, I could see that his yellow gloves were new and that his clothes had been made by a good tailor. This man was Secretary Morton, the horny-handed farmer of the administration. He had a package of papers in his left hand, but he held them gingerly, as though he thought the dried ink might discolor his new gloves; and as he jumped from the carriage I could see no signs of gardening or plowing upon his polished boots. Secretary Morton always drives to the cabinet meetings. He has for years made enough out of his farm to enable him to keep a fancy turnout, and Uncle Sam provides each of his cabinet officers with a carriage. This was a government carriage and it belonged to the department of agriculture. The secretary of agriculture stepped briskly into the White House after alighting from it, then turned to the left and then to the right, going upstairs to the cabinet room.

The next arrival was the Secretary of State. Judge Gresham looks more like a farmer than Morton. He walks from the State Department to the White House at cabinet meetings, and he has a way of pushing himself along with right-angled gestures which is peculiar to himself. He often wears a slouch hat, but today he had on a stiff silk plug, the nap of which was well roughed up. He came up the walk to the porch with a look of determination written all over him. This said, "I am going to get there by and by," and he did. He spoke to the guards as he came up and saluted every one with a Democratic "How do you do." He had no papers to carry, nor did he put on airs. As he passed me I noted that the gray hairs have crept rapidly in and out among the black strands of his hair and beard, and that he is now on the edge of growing old, though his walk shows that he still feels the wound which he received at the battle of Atlanta.

A WAR STORY OF GRESHAM.

Speaking of that battle, I heard the story of Gresham's wound the other day. Gen. McPherson was over him, and a day or two before Atlanta fell, a shell struck Gresham and carried away the fleshy part of his leg above the knee. He was badly hurt, but he had the nerve to send word to Gen. McPherson that he was disabled and had been ordered to the rear. McPherson sent back a sympathetic message and an escort, and Gresham was carried out by a round-about course to a place where he could get medical attention. Here he laid for some time, but as soon as possible he was put into a baggage car on a stretcher and in this way carried off. In this baggage car he found a coffin next to him. It was there when his stretcher was put in. Several men were standing about it, and he heard one of them say, "It is too bad that the general is gone." "What general is it you are talking of?" he asked; whereupon the men told him that they were speaking of Gen. McPherson, who had been shot in the battle and whose dead body was in the coffin at his side. McPherson had been killed shortly after he had sent him his escort and had now overtaken him on his way to the rear.

A MAJOR GENERALSHIP OR BUST.

This battle was fought in July, 1864, and Gresham went into it, I am told, with the hope that he might be made a major general for his bravery. There is no braver man in the country than he. He won his brigadier generalship largely through his gallant conduct at the battle of Vicksburg. He had gone into that battle a colonel of the fifty-third Indiana and had rushed into the storm of it at the head of his men without orders. His regiment had done its full share of hard fighting, and he had ever been in the thickest of the fray. At its close, however, the brigade commander put him under arrest for marching without orders, but Gen. Grant had noticed his bravery and he ordered his release. It was on Grant's recommendation shortly after this that he was made a full brigadier. At this battle near Atlanta he realized that the war was nearly over and that if he was to win higher honors he would have to move quickly. Before riding into the engagement he said to one of his friends on McPherson's staff, "Here goes for a major generalship or bust." He then slouched his hat over his black eyes, dug his spurs into his horse and dashed into the fray. He had ridden barely a dozen rods before he received a shot in the leg which knocked him from his horse and threw him to the ground. The wound was such a severe one that the surgeon at the hospital advised the amputation of the leg, but this Gresham refused to permit. Blood poisoning ensued, and he had a hard struggle for life. I am told that he now and then still feels the effects of the wound. The blood poisoning left his stomach weak, and though he has a great capacity for work he has to use much care as to his health.

I was thinking of this story as I saw the general push his way on into the Executive Mansion. There was hardly a limp in his walk, but what an historic path his feet have trod. From the war until now he has been a part of our history. He has had the closest associations with men of both parties. Gen. Garfield at one time intended to make him Secretary of the Interior, and President Arthur thought enough of him to make him his Postmaster General and Secretary of the Treasury. He has never been an office seeker, and he said not long ago that he had never allowed ambition to take hold of him for fear it would make him its slave. There is no man in the cabinet who has so many strong friends as Gresham, nor any who is more democratic. He has torn the red tape from the State Department and you may find him almost any evening ready for a chat at his home. He has the confidence of the President, and I venture he makes no bones of saying just what he thinks without regard to the consequences of Cleveland liking it or not. He sits at the right of the President in his cabinet meetings, and he usually comes into them about five minutes late.

A LOOK AT THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

As the door closed behind Judge Gresham I saw the Attorney General walk into the White House grounds. A little sober, student-like man, with a gray mustache and iron gray hair, he came gingerly along, with his overcoat on his arm. The day was warm, and Gresham had left his coat at home. Morton was clad in a business suit, but the Attorney General carried his coat, though it was within an hour of high noon and he had only to walk across the street. Olney is one of the reserved men of the United States, and if it were not irreverent I might call him and Secretary Bissell the clams of the cabinet. Neither of them likes to appear in the newspapers. Neither will submit to interviews, and both slip in and out about Washington as though they were walking on eggs and feared the result of boisterous exertion. Olney and Bissell are both lawyers and neither was much known before he came to Washington. Attorney General Olney is sixty-seven years old. He is worth a fortune, and his law practice, largely connected with railroads, has, it is said, been netting him $50,000 a year for a decade or so.

BISSELL AND HIS CARRIAGE.

Postmaster General Bissell always comes to the White house in a carriage. He is rarely seen walking on the streets of Washington, and I venture there are not a hundred men here outside of those who have met him in a business way who know him. Let me tell you how he looked as he stepped from his coupe today and stood upon the White House steps. The Postmaster General has been compared to President Cleveland. I do not see where the likeness comes in. Bissell is a much bigger man than the President. He is taller, broader and better made. He has a giant frame, and the bones of this are loaded down with muscular fat. I don't think his flesh is flabby. It looks solid, and his dark, sallow skin appears to be healthy. He has a bigger head than President Cleveland. If you could trust a ruler through it from ear to ear you would find it quite as thick as that of the President. Its longest dimensions, however, are from top to bottom. I venture it is nine inches from his crown to the medulla oblongata, and his face must be a foot long. His chin is a double one, and it slopes off into a long, strong neck. The Postmaster General has a good, broad forehead. It is high, as well as broad, and he combs his black hair straight up from it, making it look still higher. His head is very high above the ears, and the ears are of a good size and set close to the head. Postmaster General Bissell has a pleasant expression. He is honest in his manner, and he can laugh. I judge he would make a good club man, though he has not spent much time in club life in Washington. He is noted for his reticence in regard to himself and his department, and the cold chills corrugate his fat back until it looks like a wash-board when he is asked to make a statement for newspaper publication. He is, perhaps, the closest to the President of any man in the cabinet, and psychically he and Cleveland are in fact the halves of one soul. The Postmaster General lives here at Washington about two blocks from the White House. His home is a big brick of three stories and an English basement. It has a prison-like entrance, and at the right of this is a little office or library, where the Postmaster General receives his gentlemen friends of an evening. He does much of his work at his home, and he smokes and works here far into the night. He is a man of culture, of good education and a graduate of Yale. His wife is one of the most accomplished women of the capital, young and charming. She is a fine musician, and received a part of her musical education in Europe. She is a New York girl, and was a schoolmate of Mrs. Cleveland at Wells College. The Postmaster General is said to be rich. He has made a fortune at the law and in railroads, and is said to be worth as many hundred thousand dollars as he weighs pounds. As he tips the beam at about three hundred, this would make him the possessor of more than a quarter of a million.

LAMONT AS WAR SECRETARY.

Another rich man in President Cleveland's cabinet is Daniel Lamont. He followed Bissell up the White House steps this afternoon. He is six inches shorter than the Postmaster General, and, though he has materially gained in weight since he was private secretary to Cleveland, he does not now weigh more than half as much as Mr. Bissell. He has not aged in the past eight years. His mustache is the same wiry red. His china-blue eyes look out from under the same heavy, unwrinkled brows, and his only difference is seen in fuller cheeks and a perceptible paunch. Secretary Lamont is always well dressed. He wears business clothes as a rule, but they are new, and the creases in his pants are as clearly defined as were those of Secretary Whitney's. Lamont leads a democratic life at the War Department. He has a little ante-room back of his office, where he receives his friends, and in which many a confidential political chat is held. He is a rapid worker and knows how to make others work for him. There are no frills about him, and though he is now rich and famous he puts on no more airs than he did when he was comparatively poor. I am told that the biggest salary he had ever received up to the time he entered the White House was considerably less than the amount he got there. He was the first private secretary to get $5,000, but it is now said that his New York railroads and other stocks bring him in several times this amount, and he is on the way to a million. Secretary Whitney discovered his sterling abilities during the last administration, and it was through him Lamont became one of the heads of the greatest street railroad syndicates of the country, and I am told Lamont's ability aided materially in making this property so valuable. The company has a capital of $30,000,000 and its stock sells for 150. Not long ago it was only twenty millions, and it sold at 60. Lamont got a good slice of the stock when he entered the company. He had a big salary, and his ability was so pronounced that he was taken into a large number of the biggest institutions of New York. He was secretary or treasurer of a number of these, and he was a director in eighteen different stock companies. He is not a man who talks much about himself. He is very friendly with the newspaper men, but objects to be interviewed, and will not talk for publication if he can help it. When he first came to Washington he lived in a house on H street, not far from the Metropolitan Club. Now his home is a big yellow brick, just across Jackson Park from the Executive Mansion. It is sandwiched between the home of Senator Cal Brice and that of the literateur, Henry Adams. It is within a stone's throw of the War Department and Lamont walks to his office and back again three times a day.

CARLISLE AS A WALKER.

It is the same with Secretary Carlisle, who lives a block or so farther up on K street. Carlisle walks a great deal. He is a tall, angular man with a student's stoop. He has fattened somewhat since last March, but his clothes still hang on his big frame in wrinkles, and he could stand fifty pounds more of flesh without injury. He is a man of many acquaintances and he stops and talks to every other man he meets. In coming from the treasury to the White House today he was button-holed by no less than six men and I noted that each one seemed to leave him well pleased. Carlisle is noted for his honesty. He is blunt in his ways, and he always says what he thinks. There is nothing of the oleaginous politician about him, and he is big enough to be simple. He is not a hard student, though he is a good deal of a worker. He leaves his work at the department when he goes out and delights in playing poker for small stakes of an evening. He is noted for his clearness of intellect and in the point of pure brains he is a heavier weight than any other man of his party. He does not care for show, and he has none of the bluster of Hoke Smith about him.

FULL OF BLOOD AND MUSCLE.

The Secretary of the Interior likes to do things with a rush. He is over six feet in height and he is packed with animal vitality. He has lots of muscle and plenty of good blood. He couldn't keep quiet if he tried, and he moves about Washington with a rush. He is fond of horseback riding, and he rides a big bay steed up to the White House and hands him over to a groom while he goes into cabinet meetings. He is not at all backward in expressing his opinion in the meetings, and his words carry considerable weight. He is perhaps the best mixer of the cabinet, and though he says he would rather be a lawyer than a politician he has shown himself to be eminently fitted for the latter occupation. He is one of the hard workers of the cabinet and one of the heavy weights. He is not fat, but he must weigh at least three hundred, and every ounce of his flesh is solid.

GOSSIP ABOUT HERBERT.

The Secretary of the Navy is another big man. Mr. Herbert is nearly six feet in height and he weighs one hundred and seventy-five pounds. He has a big head, the face of which is covered by a tawny beard, and his blue eyes look out from under heavy brows. His complexion is rather rough and it has just the tinge of the fallow of the south. He dresses plainly and is thoroughly Democratic in all his ways. There is no trouble in getting at him either at the department or at his house. If he can do what you want he tells you so at once, and if not, he will tell you why. He has been so long in public life that he understands how to deal with the Congressmen. He knows most of them personally and is popular in both houses. He has many sociable qualities, can tell a good story and can dictate like a steam engine. He has a rosy-cheeked private secretary named Finney, who can take down his ideas at the rate of two hundred words a minute. With this man on one side of a big mahogany desk and himself on the other, the Secretary begins work about 9 o'clock in the morning. He first runs through his mail, then receives callers and devotes himself to the work of the department. At between one and two he has a light lunch. The afternoon is largely taken up with the chiefs of the various bureaus, and all sorts of questions are disposed of. The navy is now one of the big manufacturing departments of the government, and its estimates amount to millions. There are all sorts of fine questions to be answered, and Secretary Herbert calls in his experts and places these before them. He has been studying the navy all his life and he is thoroughly posted upon it and its needs. He is practical, however, in his ideas and he runs things to suit himself. His evenings he usually spends at home. He is a bookish man and is well read. He likes a good novel and at the same time is thoroughly posted on historical subjects. Much of his reading he carries on in connection with his daughter, Miss Leila Herbert, who presides over his house here and does the honors as the leading lady of the navy. Secretary Herbert is a widower. His wife died a few years ago, leaving two grown up daughters, both of whom are noted for their beauty. The oldest sister is married and now lives in Alabama. The younger is Miss Leila. She is a slender, blue-eyed blonde, with fluffy light hair and delicate features. She is by all odds the youngest woman in the cabinet, but by virtue of Washington society rules she has the place her mother would hold if she were alive. Miss Herbert has had much experience in Washington society. She is the Secretary's constant companion when he is outside of the department. She travels with him everywhere, and it is said that she has been on the deck of every ship in the United States navy. She is a very accomplished young woman, speaks French and Spanish fluently, and has seen enough of Washington life to enable her to preside over her father's house with great credit.

FRANK G. CARPENTER.

Written for this Paper.

HINTS ON BUTTER-MAKING.

LOGAN, Utah, Dec. 28, 1893.

The present condition of affairs in the West leads one to think that Utah is doomed to rely entirely on her agricultural resources. Yet it is my belief that farming is as profitable a business as any one could go into today, if conducted on the right principle. Our advantages over those of the Eastern states are very great, yet we are far behind them in our system of agriculture. The question is, What can be done to bring the farming of Utah up to the standard? Stopping to think for a moment, have we a single agricultural journal in Utah? Have we a newspaper that has an agricultural editor? In fact, have we anything with the exception of the Experiment Station that is doing anything for the furtherance of our system of agriculture?

The manufacture of butter is one of the oldest industries in the country and is exceedingly in money value by only a few of the larger manufacturing interests. While we have made great strides in other directions on the farm, butter-making still continues to be conducted almost entirely by unskilled labor, or at least by persons who have had no special training for the work, and who have little or no knowledge of the constitution of milk or of the principles involved in its care and management. In consequence of this a large proportion of the butter of Utah is still made in practically the same manner that it was one hundred years ago. Three-fourths of the farmers of Utah contribute something to the butter supply. The wide distribution of labor is largely a matter of necessity, growing out of the perishable nature of milk which prevents its being shipped long distances to central factories, as is the case with most raw material in most manufactured articles. It is nevertheless a great disadvantage to the dairy industry, as it has not only prevented the employment of skilled labor, but has given the impression, especially among farmers, that little knowledge or experience is required to make butter. The result of all this is that there is no uniformity in the method practiced or in the quality of the product.

A partial remedy may be found in an extension of the factory system in all counties where sufficient milk can be obtained to warrant the outlay. This would undoubtedly work great improvement in the yield and quality of butter. But there are many sections where cows are not numerous enough to support a creamery, and to such improvements only come through a better understanding of the nature of milk and of the effects which different methods of treatment have upon it.

I will endeavor to present in a brief manner some of the more important facts now known concerning the constitution of milk, and to trace the influence of some of the different constituents upon the separation of cream.

Milk when fresh is a thin emulsion of butter fat in a watery solution of albuminous matter, milk sugar and mineral matter. Under the microscope it appears to be a clear liquid in which is suspended an immense number of small fat globules that are more or less collected into groups. These globules vary considerably in size, the smallest being about one ten-thousandth of an inch in diameter and the largest about one two-thousandth of an inch. The average diameter in cows' milk is about one five-thousandth of an inch. Twenty-five fat globules, placed side by side in contact with each other, would span a distance just about equal to the thickness of a sheet of writing paper. The size of the globules varies considerably with different cows and with different breeds. It is a characteristic of the fat globules of Jersey and Guernsey milk to be large and quite uniform in size; of the Ayrshires to be quite small and variable; while the Holstein globules are small but quite uniform in size. The number of globules in a given volume of milk varies greatly according to their size and to the per cent of fat; the average number would be about 2,000,000,000,000 in one quart. Milk containing large globules will cream more rapidly and efficiently than milk with small globules. Uniformity in the size of globules is also desirable, as globules of the same size will reach the surface in about the same time.

The average composition of milk is approximately as follows:

	Per cent
Fat.....	3.5
Nitrogenous matter.....	4.3
Milk sugar.....	4.5
Milk Serum { Ash.....	7
Water.....	87.0
	100

The first portion of milk drawn at any milking contains much less fat than the last portion. Numerous analyses of such milk show that the first milk drawn from the udder rarely contains more than 2 per cent of fat, and often falls below 1 per cent, while it is not uncommon for the "strippings" to contain 8 to 10 per cent of fat. The phenomenon has been explained by a partial creaming of the milk in the udder of the cow previous to milking, also by the fat being more retarded in the small vessels of the udder than are the other portions of the milk, and by the secretion of the fat being stimulated by the act of milking. Perhaps each of these contributes somewhat to the result. Dr. Babcock is of the opinion that much of the milk is elaborated during the milking and that in its passage through the small vessels of the udder the fat is retarded and consequently more of it is obtained at the end of the milking.

I have stated that under the microscope the fat globules of the milk appear to be more or less collected into groups that are not easily broken up. The groups are quite different character from those formed in the churning process, as the globules composing them retain their spherical form and are rarely distorted or united with each other; in the grouping formed in churning, the globules are to a greater extent distorted and are more or less incorporated with one another.

The cream which separates upon standing from a perfect emulsion is composed of the same constituents as the original emulsion, and differs from it only in the relative amount of serum and fat which it contains. The separation of the cream is purely a physical phenomenon, depending upon the difference between the specific gravity of the fat and that of the serum, and upon the resistance which the serum offers to the movement of the fat globules. The greater the difference in the specific gravity of the serum and the fat, other conditions being the same, the more rapidly will the cream rise, and the less volume it will occupy after a given time. The more viscous the cream, the more resistance will it offer to the separation of the cream and the greater will be the volume of cream after a given time.

When first drawn from the cow, milk is a perfect emulsion, and I shall assume that it continues in that condition throughout the creaming process, and on this basis shall consider the circumstances which influence the creaming. The difference in the specific gravity of the fat and the milk serum, which is the cause of the separation, depends mostly upon the nature and amount of solids, not fat, that the milk serum holds in solution; for we may safely assume that the slight change which occurs in the composition of the fat will not materially affect its specific gravity. One per cent of solids not fat increases the specific gravity of the milk serum .00875; consequently the greater will be the difference in the specific gravity of the milk serum and the fat, and the greater will be the tendency of the fat to rise. But, on the other hand, the viscosity of the serum, and consequently the resistance of the movement through it, increases with the amount of the solids, not fat, more rapidly than the specific gravity. It follows that the higher the per cent of solids not fat in the serum the more slowly and the more imperfectly will the cream separate. The conditions, however, are somewhat modified by the size of the fat globules, for the resistance of the serum is much less with the large globules than with the small ones. Large fat globules and small amount of solids not fat are therefore favorable to the creaming, whether we regard the time required or the thoroughness with which it is accomplished, while small fat globules and a high per cent of solids, not fat, are opposed to creaming.

ARTHUR BARRETT.

GREETINGS FROM ANN ARBOR.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Dec. 31, 1893.—To the "standard of Truth"—the welcome DESERET NEWS—we all send hearty new year's wishes—that it may be prospered and continue in casting its golden rays of right about it, is our hope. The NEWS happened to be late this week, and an hour after its regular time of arrival several of the boys had popped their heads in, asking, "Has the NEWS arrived?"

Christmas saw the ground dry, the weather balmy, our hearts happy. Instead of overcoats we noticed many of "our brethren" coming from the postoffice with packages under their arms. Your correspondent was obliged to get his room mate help him carry his presents from the office, an obligation happily carried out. We were not slighted at all by our Utah friends during this annual gift offering.

The "Utah Debating Society" elected new officers last week, viz: J. Z. Stewart (of Logan) president, Jos. E. Page (of Payson) secretary. The meetings are very interesting, and that they are a great benefit to the boys is clearly evinced by the speeches and debates so ably given. The "Utah Club Court" is doing good work. New cases are heard each week, giving splendid, practical experience to the "laws."

Mrs. L. Henry, of Fillmore, has been cordially welcomed in our midst. She is the oldest of our ladies here, and therefore has acquired the title Grandma from many of us.

The officers of the "Utah Club Court" are Mr. Halverson (of Ogden) judge; Jos. E. Page, clerk; J. J. McClellan, assistant clerk.

Some fifteen of our members were invited to a party given them by Miss Phillips on Thursday evening last. Games were played, music that gave pleasure was given, and at about 11:30 p. m. an elegant dinner was spread before us. Oranges ("as big as your hat"), four of the most delicious varieties of cake, and sandwiches such as but few can make (except our "mothers") were the main factors which pleased our palates. And the final Candy pulling in real earnest, making more than one hand smart and nearly blistered. We were royally entertained and informed our kind hostess so before withdrawing.

Ernest Partridge and Joseph L. Horne have returned from their visit with college friends "up north," and now many times give us sweet music from the mandolin and guitar.

January 8th all branches of the U. of M. open and all will be work. Some of the "laws" are writing their "theses"—while others read Shakespeare, etc. The "lits" (literary students) are writing essays, speeches, or reading the poets, and the others are reading books not allied with their studies—to get a rest—deserved.

Once again a glorious new year to our NEWS, and our greetings to friends and dear ones! May '94 ease up the panic '93 has so cruelly given us.

Q. U. E. F. N.

WHAT ARE we to understand from the following, taken from the columns of the good old Presbyterian Mail and Express of New York?

It is reported that the bill for the admission of Utah as a state, which recently passed the House of Representatives at Washington without a division, has occasioned the deepest anxiety among the representative Christian laborers in that Territory. Men like Drs. McMillan, Wishard and McNiece do not see how a truly Christian nation can be so indifferent as not to enter a vigorous protest against the passage of this bill by Congress.

"A truly Christian nation" would seem to have a mighty hard time in satisfying all observers, wearing every manner and color of sectarian spectacles, as to its right to the proud title.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

EACH FOR ITSELF.

We cannot believe that Senator Proctor's bill making the admission of Utah to statehood conditional on the union of the Territory with Nevada, is going to be rationally regarded—as some of the eastern papers call it—as the only true, logical, and easy solution of a “double problem.” On the contrary, all such talk, and every such proposition, only complicates whatever problem already exists; to the ordinary observer, the object really sought is the defeat of statehood, through setting by the ears the people of both the commonwealths affected. On their part, the people of Nevada are opposed to the idea of union; their political autonomy would be gone, and their senators and representative in Congress, and their state official machinery would be out of employment; for Utah has many times Nevada's population and wealth, and would naturally dominate the new state. On the other hand, Utah feels perfectly able to sustain, unaided, the dignities and responsibilities of statehood for herself, and has no relish for the plan of wedding her to another—a ceremony whose only benefit and gratification would be in supporting and keeping alive her decrepit spouse.

Meantime all regrets on the one hand that Nevada was inconsiderately admitted and that the act was a blunder, and all denials, on the other hand, that there was any mistake at all, are vain and useless. As a state she was admitted, and there she is; and as to her rights, it is not in the power of Congress to annul or tamper with them. Poor Utah, as a territory, may perhaps be kicked and cuffed about and made a football for political parties, and all she can do is to repeat, between sobs, that she wants statehood, but no such alliance as this that is proposed by the Vermont senator. But with Nevada the case is somewhat different. She can consent to annexation if she desires it; if she refuses it, no power can force it on her. She surrenders nothing, she merely accepts new domain; and it is obvious that, however desirable this might seem, the consent of her people must first be had to it. In the light of existing facts, it is not probable that this consent will be obtained, and we surely hope it will not. If Nevada will accordingly do us this kindness, and reject the proposal the great Green Mountain senator presumes to make for us, we shall be glad to recognize that she is not only a true friend, but that, as the love stories in such instances have it, she also “will be a sister” to us.

KING SOLOMON'S MINES.

In the history of King Solomon it is related that he built a navy in a Red Sea port, which was manned by Phœnicians and sent to Ophir, where large quantities of gold were found and carried to the royal treasury. He also built another navy at Tarshis, a Phœnician colony in Spain, probably, and from this station regular voyages were made for the purpose of bringing back gold, silver, ivory, etc.

Much speculation has been indulged in as to the part of the world to which these ships were sent. The Jewish chronicler gives no clue whatever to the solution of the problem. He merely states that each voyage was completed in three years. The opinions are much divided, some favoring some part of Africa; others Arabia or even India.

Lately explorers have discovered ruins in Africa which may throw some light on the subject. Mr. Robert M. W. Swan, who now is exploring the country between the Limpopo river and Matabele land, announces the existence of ruins in that region which he has no doubt are of Semitic origin. The hills, he says, are crowned with the remains of forts and temples. The builders of these structures, he thinks, were attracted to the place on account of the presence there of precious stones, and that they carried on their work under difficulties that necessitated the erection of fortifications. In a tumulus consisting of wood, ashes, bones and pottery, Mr. Swan found little images of terra cotta and many fragments of vessels, some of which were peculiar in shape and curiously decorated. A fragment of an ivory bracelet was also found, the indications being that the place had once been used for the cremation of the dead. It is not impossible that Mr. Swan has discovered one of the places from which the ancient Phœnicians in Solomon's vessels carried precious metals to the coast of Phœnicia.

The problem where those ancient rich mines were situated has practical value only as its solution will serve to prove the historical accuracy of the Jewish historian. Josephus places Ophir in the peninsula of Malacca, but he has not, curiously enough, many followers in this view.

IS IT PLAGIARISM?

The News has just received a piece of vocal music, “Deal Gently With the Erring,” from the publishing house of F. W. Helmick, New York, the words of the song being credited to Mrs. Julia A. Carney and the music to Charles Baker; and underneath all is the announcement “Copyright, 1893.”

This would seem to indicate that the musical world was favored with something new. We beg to say, however, that the Latter-day Saints Hymn Book, published in its first addition 53 years ago, and of which there have since been twenty editions, contains on pages 184-5 a little hymn of four verses, beginning, “Think Gently of the Erring One,” and credited in the index to “Miss Fletcher.” The verses are of four lines each, while the verses in the piece of music before us are of eight lines. But in the latter we note that with scarcely the change of a word the second verse is made up of the first and second verses of our old familiar hymn, and the fourth is made up of the third and fourth as they appear in our hymn book.

It is therefore evident that either Mrs. Carney is Miss Fletcher, or that the former has plagiarized at least half her present verses from the maiden lady named, and in either event that there is nothing new enough about the production to entitle it to make even a part of an entirety coming under the distinction of “copyrighted, 1893.” The music we presume is entirely new, it is at any rate charming and should become popular; and the words lose none of their sweet fervor through age. Our point is, not to criticize either on the score of melody or rhyme, but merely to ascertain if there has not been a trifle of deception on the part of some one connected with the present publication.

FORTUNES IN TEA.

A vast amount of money is spent annually in the United States for tea for use as a beverage. Great Britain takes first rank as a heavy tea-drinking nation, but in Utah there are a good many people who hold their own even with the tea-loving Briton in the quantity of the beverage injected into their systems, notwithstanding the injurious effects which the best authorities indicate as following its excessive use.

During the past five years the island of Ceylon has come to the front as a tea-producer. Formerly coffee was the great staple product of that country. But a fungus appeared in the coffee plantations and they failed. In 1883 Ceylon had 250,000 acres in coffee fields; in 1893 she had less than 25,000 acres. The fungus which destroyed the crops has disappeared, but while its ravages were being carried on in the island the coffee planters in America increased their product and occupied the field. Thus a business that once flourished in Ceylon, and from which vast fortunes were made, is now almost a thing of the past. During the hard times of the years of coffee failure many of the planters sought new homes in the United States and elsewhere.

Ceylon is, however, suited to the cultivation of the tea plant, and a number of those formerly engaged in raising coffee turned their attention to cultivating tea. They succeeded so well that their example was soon followed by others, and in 1893 there were over 250,000 acres of tea fields in the island. The crop does remarkably well, and it is said the quality is as good as that of the plant anywhere. The value of the product for the past year is placed at $200,000,000 by the time it gets to the market.

Under this condition, the tea planters have made a great deal of money. The cheap cultivation of the plant enables them to sell its product at a low price and then reap immense profits. F. W. Mackwood, who is an extensive tea-grower in Ceylon, was here a few days ago, and stated that labor in the fields there costs on an average but ten cents per day. He is of opinion that if the same wages had to be paid as prevail in this country for the same class of labor, the planters would not be able to compete with the cheap production of other parts of Southern Asia. As it is, the native Cingalese are employed only to a limited extent. The natives from the mainland of Southeastern India furnish the bulk of the laborers. Both sexes are employed, and during the picking season a great many little boys and girls are enlisted. The women and children are far better at picking the leaves than are the men, as their fingers are more nimble and they are thus able to work faster.

There is one lesson that might be learned from the way in which tea cultivation is carried on in Ceylon, and that is the attention given to the growing crop and the care shown to gather it clean. The soil is well-worked and kept free from noxious growths, so that the entire field will give forth its full strength to the plant that is being cultivated; while the leaves are carefully collected and kept clean so there will be no loss by waste. These features go a long way toward securing a good return to the tea-grower, the price of whose crop depends largely upon its cleanliness and freedom from foreign plants and substances. A reputation for excellence in this regard is, (like a reputation for excellence in producing any crop or article of commerce,) an important factor in enabling the grower to dispose of his crop. Mr. Mackwood says the rowers in Ceylon have gained this reputation, therefore there is no difficulty in their finding a good market, even in these times of depression. Meanwhile the tea-drinkers in Utah and elsewhere are contributing of their means to a much greater extent than is essential for their welfare to the piling up of fortunes for tea-growers.

CHINA AND FRANCE.

The dispatches state that there is danger of trouble between China and France that will bring other nations into the controversy in such a way as to destroy the peace of Europe. There is a feeling of intense indignation among the inhabitants of the Flowery Kingdom at the French aggression in Siam. It is said the Chinese are not averse to a quarrel with France, whose forces they feel confident of overpowering. The recent dispatch of several Chinese warships to Menam is regarded by the European powers as significant, as was shown by British, Russian and Spanish war vessels quickly following the Chinese squadron on the occasion referred to, and watching for developments.

There is no doubt that the Chinese military force is greatly superior in numbers to that of France. Precisely what the army of the empire aggregates in available men is not definitely known. The regular army consists of 6,459 officers and 650,000 men, with an estimated available strength in the nation of 4,000,000. France cannot put anything like such a force in the field, much less transport it to southern Asia. But the superiority of the French as fighters will go a long way toward making up for the disparity in numbers, though the Chinese evidently believe that the training their troops have received under English and American officers, and the recent improvements in the equipment of the army, place the advantage on their side.

While it seems hardly probable that the Chinese will provoke a quarrel with France or will find it profitable if they do, it may be interesting to note the condition of the French military preparation now compared with what it was previous to the last great war in which France was engaged. Since the war of 1870, the republic has spent on its army over three billions of dollars, exclusive of a vast amount for pensions and the construction of strategic railways. Of this amount about one-fifth has been employed in the reconstitution of matériel, while the remaining four-fifths has been devoted to the maintenance of the different arms of the service.

With this great outlay it is hardly to be wondered that France has improved her armament beyond what it was in 1869. Then it consisted of 25,005 officers and 380,372 men, with 89,702 horses. The recent report of the army shows that now it is composed of 28,382 officers and 484,015 men, with 140,879 horses. Whereas in 1869 the regular army practically represented all the troops at the disposal of the government, the case is very different now. With the addition of the territorial army, and without taking into account the reserves of the latter—which amount to 850,000 men—there are 1,650 battalions of infantry, 600 squadrons of cavalry, and 750 batteries of artillery, representing a force of over 2,000,000 men that can be brought into the field on brief notice. The Lebel rifle, with which the troops were armed in 1892, can send, at a distance of 2000 meters, or 2200 yards, a bullet through an oak board three inches in thickness; the magazine of this gun contains eight cartridges, and can be emptied with great rapidity. Besides this the army is supplied with new cannon which carry twice as far as did the old pattern and throw projectiles which have a much greater destructive force than those in use in 1870. There is also as marked an improvement in other arms and equipments.

This showing for France makes it plain that she is a very powerful antagonist in a conflict close at home, and in a tussle with the Mongolian the latter would have his hands full if he provoked the quarrel and the sympathetic support of the French were thereby unitedly brought to bear in a warfare against him. It does not seem probable that Chinese diplomats fail to realize the gravity of the situation in which their nation would be placed by the precipitation of such a conflict. A shortsightedness in this respect is not in accord with the history of Chinese diplomacy, for however stupid and incompetent the Mongolian rulers may be from the standpoint of Western civilization and enlightenment, they have not afforded the world heretofore an opportunity to accuse them of undue haste or rashness in international complications.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY.

Undoubtedly sane, as the world views sanity in reformers, and yet most woefully unpractical in his theories, is the veteran Count de Chambrun, whose essays on sociology in certain French newspapers, and collected in pamphlet form with the title "Mes Conclusions Sociologiques," have reached the exchange table of nearly every important newspaper in this country. They furnish rather entertaining reading, and yet they excite almost pity for the aristocratic, senile dreamer who writes and evidently believes in them.

The present work, "My New Conclusions in Sociology," has followed by only a year "My Conclusions in Sociology," and is sent forth upon a distracted world from the peaceful retreats of the Auvergne mountains. In it the good old nobleman retracts nothing of his former views; his diagnosis of the ills of the times and their remedy is adhered to implicitly. Abstract and vague as are his "conclusions" in general, their drift may be understood from a brief summary: "In the world of industry the factory or the mine is to be the self-governing unit. The Chambrun will have nothing of co-operation or participation in profits. A council elected by suffrage of the employed is to adjust all disputes with the management. The revolution of '89 upset the tyranny of the crown; that of '48 the tyranny of the stock jobbers; the tyranny still remaining to be upset is that of the wage payer."

That our author's scheme, as elaborated in his book, involves the entire reorganization of the social order, naturally does not, in the least militate against the favor with which his effusions are received by the socialist press in Paris. Indeed, he tells us that there are more than a hundred Parisian periodicals devoted to the discussion of the principles of "machine civilization," as the new era may not improperly be called. And while he would doubtless be shocked at the supposition that this propaganda can only be made effective through anarchy and ruin, he curiously fails to grasp the coincidence that the stormy days preceding the fall of Bastille were heated to a point of fury by just such restrained sedition and tolerated anarchy chief from the columns of the press.

The legitimate fruit of such agitation—though the old Count de Chambrun may mean only well—is seen in the mutterings of anarchy which fill the air of western Europe. Paris stands upon the thin crust of a seething volcano—any day may see her wrapped in its fiery embrace. Spain is shaken to its very center, and plot and murder lurk in every shadow. Italy has not escaped the blight—assassination defies detection and threat is open as the day. The Latin races are in the throes which until lately were deemed peculiar to the Teuton and the Slav. Alas, that philanthropic souls should unconsciously add to the terrors of the case by childishly playing with and yielding to the monster; that instead of hounding the enemies and eradicating the evils of society, they should cajole the one and build fantastically upon the other, until in some dark hour the whole social fabric comes down in tumult, ruin and death! A reformation must indeed come; but it will the easier be wrought, and ought universally to be more desired, by the white, stout wand of Order and Peace, than by the lurid, hissing brand of Anarchy and Desolation! We are bound to say the tendency of Count de Chambrun's "conclusions" is toward the latter form of remedy.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

An exchange, in answer to a question, devotes a paragraph to the various theories about the location of the garden of Eden, remarking that any endeavor positively to identify the place at present is useless.

The brief description of the beautiful spot where man's first days on earth were spent is found in the opening chapters of Genesis. It is stated that the Lord planted a garden in the eastern part of Eden. In this country a certain river was running, which after having watered the garden divided in four separate branches, Pison, Gihon, Hiddekel and Euphrates. The first of these rivers "compasseth" Havilah, a country famous for gold. The second "compasseth" Ethiopia; the third Assyria.

Commentators, who believe that the Mosaic narrative is historical, and should be understood literally, have naturally seized upon the name Euphrates and commenced their search for the garden somewhere near the sources of that historic river. But the problem was to find a water system consisting of one stream that branched out in four, of which the Euphrates was one. The impossibility of solving this problem in a rational manner soon became apparent. True enough, the Hiddekel is identical with the Tigris, two of the Eden rivers would apparently be accounted for; but the second river Gihon, which is said to have passed through Ethiopia, in Africa, could never have been a branch of the Euphrates system. Besides, modern researches have pretty well proved that the two rivers Euphrates and Tigris, now united in their course for some distance, were once two separate rivers, a fact which contradicts the theory that the Hiddekel of Moses is the Tigris of later historians.

Luther, with the clearness of thought that generally characterized his mode of dealing with vexatious questions, pointed out that the Deluge had probably changed the topography of the country to such an extent that no effort to locate the garden by the description in Genesis would avail. With this view once adopted the scholars have been left free to follow their own fancies in their search for the home of our first parents. And almost every part of the globe has been suggested. The most general opinion has been that the cradle of mankind stood somewhere in Asia. But others guess at the South Sea Islands, and others even at Scandinavia.

It is clear enough that with the ordinary means of research the question will ever be unsolved. But here, as so often, revelation comes to the aid of science and designates clearly where the land of Eden and the garden were located. Josephus is right in considering Eden a vast country. But he is wrong in locating it between the Ganges in India and the Nile in Africa. According to revelations given in this generation through Joseph the Seer, neither Asia nor Africa, but this continent, America, contains what was once called the land of Eden in which the garden was planted. Here, on this continent, blessed above all others with liberty, light and the riches of the earth, Adam once dwelt. Here he blessed his sons and daughters, committing to them the knowledge of God and the power of the Priesthood. Here, on this continent he builded an altar, and to this continent he shall again come, the Ancient of Days, to visit his people.

There is no contradiction in the supposition that Eden was located in America and the fact that the names Euphrates, Ethiopia and Assyria are attached to rivers and countries on other continents. All these names may originally have been given to place, rivers, cities, valleys, etc., in this country by Adam and his descendants. When these emigrated, they would naturally call new localities with familiar names, a practice which is known to be extensively carried out in our own day. This removes the difficulties about the names in the Biblical narrative. Revelation has thrown its light through the depths that to science seemed impenetrable.

The latest that has been published concerning Eden is the theory of Lieutenant Totten, which, however, is more curious than valuable. He thinks that at the time of Adam, the earth was still surrounded by a luminous ring similar to that of Saturn. The four streams mentioned by Moses, he thinks, were four divisions of this luminous ring, which to the spectator were literally "encompassing" certain countries. This ring, consisting of gaseous substances, gradually cooled, he thinks, and fell down on the earth, causing the great deluge.

But leaving all theories, the fact remains that man once was favored with the direct guidance of the Almighty, or revelation. This is man's natural privilege as God's child. The fall and the voluntary stay in a fallen condition is what cuts off the direct communication between God and man. Salvation restores the communication, so necessary for the guidance of the individual, the Church, and mankind. This is one great lesson of the garden of Eden.

EXERCISING FORBEARANCE.

While an irascible person causes a great deal of discomfort and brings little or no pleasure to others in his association with them, it is usually the rule that he is himself the greatest sufferer through his own irritability, and it is probably a realization of this fact, as well as a desire to avoid quarrels as far as possible, that causes ordinary people to exhibit a large degree of forbearance and submit to many things that are unjust and improper from the hands of unduly hasty-tempered people.

There is a strong contrast between the brittleness of nature manifest in some people and the patience that is exhibited by others. The type of the latter class is like a well-constructed machine which, though run at a high speed and required to perform a great amount of labor, yet is kept so carefully cleaned and oiled that every part operates with perfect smoothness and regularity. The energies of such persons are applied in the most economical manner, because their faculties are united under intelligent control, thus reducing the loss of power to a minimum; and their advancement in the sphere of life which they occupy is comparatively rapid, and the mortal probation is with them a period of marked progress toward a better state.

The majority of mankind, however, have not been as yet educated up to this standard. With many of them there is so much of sputtering, and grumbling, and jolting, that if a comparison were to be made they would be of necessity likened to a machine so dry through the absence of a lubricant or so clogged with dirt that all but the slowest or most gentle movements are accompanied by a jarring and grating that are injurious as well as unpleasant.

There is no difficulty in arriving at a conclusion as to which of these classes those who have received the Gospel ordinances should belong. Their place is with the latter. It may be that occasionally they will be pressed by various circumstances and conditions, both external and internal, to an extent that there must be a slight variance from the even tenor of their way; but it is not long before their characteristically well-directed energies restore the equilibrium and all moves smoothly as before. And since the Lord desires His Saints to serve Him with all their heart, might, mind and strength, it plainly is essential that for them to do so properly they must not waste their energies by irritability and unnecessary friction. They may display great zeal and earnestness, yet if they are restive and impatient there is an unapplication of force which could be profitably used to a nobler purpose, and they are like the machine that needs the cleaning and oiling process in that they fall in a measure short of the purpose of their creation.

Patience,—long-suffering, forbearance,—is as essential to the thoroughly Christian life as oil is to the swiftly-revolving bearings of a smooth-running machine. Without it, harshness and discord take the place of gentleness and harmony, and contact with others produces a feeling like that experienced through too close proximity to an over-filled kettle of boiling water—there is a constant dread of being splashed on and scalded. Such a feeling of discomfort is not a fruit of the Gospel of Christ, and those whose impatience is the cause of it need further development and care in the way of eliminating selfishness and exercising self-control, before their hearts are sufficiently mellow to retain the good seed until it can germinate, grow and yield its kind.

In His explanation of the parable of the sower, the Lord said of the seed which produced an hundred fold because of the richness and depth of the soil in which it fell: "But that on good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." There were the good seed and the good ground, but the work of production therefrom had to be attended with patience, for the plant must have time to take root, to grow, to yield. Some of those to whom the word of God came received it with joy, and the seed sprang up; but they were too impatient to await the time of taking root, therefore they were compared by the Savior to a rock on which the young plant withered away because it lacked moisture. Some of those who today are numbered as members of the Church exhibit similar impatience. Things do not move rapidly enough to suit them; they want to crowd along the day of judgment before the day of warning is ended. Sometimes very good people manifest great impatience. When experience has gained them more knowledge they may realize the need in themselves of forbearance toward others.

It is not a reasonable requirement to insist that a proper manifestation of patience is a never-ending submission to extreme irritability of temper in others. Such a patience as that is of the kind that ceases to be a virtue, which the genuine article never does. But it requires careful discrimination and thoughtful judgment to draw the line. A continued bristling of temper toward others is a sin, and in the home circle especially is productive of widespread evils. A continued submission to it when it might be checked by firm, peaceful and decisive action and a better state of things thereby be inaugurated, is also improper, just as the unnecessary permitting of wrong actions is sinful. It is sometimes necessary for people to protect themselves from unpleasantness in others, but it is never justifiable in so doing to fall into the same error that is being resisted. Irrascibility in one person does not act as an emollient on the irascibility of another. The divine patience is that which leads men, by softening their harsher natures when they will permit it and harmonizing them with true principles, to a higher and better life. This is the attribute which Saints cultivate in themselves and seek to impart to others, that by the earnest, constant and powerful works of faith they may render acceptable service to the Divine Ruler.

THE LEGISLATURE.

There are not many new laws, or amendments of old ones, needed at the hands of the Legislative Assembly at its present session. The Territory already has a tolerable surfeit of enactments, and the proverb tells us that "enough is as good as a feast." We venture to say, in behalf of the whole commonwealth, that the new legislators will most acceptably earn their $4 per day each, and mileage, if during the next sixty days they study how few, not how many, fresh measures and changes in those already in force, they find it necessary to force upon the statute books. That community is governed best which is governed least; and in the multitude of laws with vexing paraphernalia and complicated provisions, the average mortal finds more mystery than satisfaction, and more confusion than sense. In the changes that have occurred during the last two years, and the changes that are imminent in the near future, important items of legislative necessity are of course before us; what we wish to urge is, not that any needed measures be postponed, but that the standard of legislative excellence be sought rather in the quality than in the quantity of the work done.

The News welcomes the representatives of the people to the capital, and wishes them a pleasant and profitable session. We believe they will be actuated by the sole desire to promote the Territory's welfare; and in pursuance of that end they will receive, regardless of politics or creed, the encouragement and applause of this paper and, we believe, of the whole people.

A VERY BAD JOKE.

The Brigham Bugler of Saturday, Jan. 6, contains an account of a mock marriage performed in that city on New Year's day. It appears that "a young dude" of Salt Lake and an equally young widow of Brigham City met at a party. Among the fun indulged in was that of a marriage ceremony, the above mentioned pair consenting to appear as the principal actors. It so happened, however, that the fun-loving gentleman who drew up the license was a notary public, and the one that performed the ceremony was an ecclesiastical officer, with legal power to tie hands and hearts together. All this did not dawn upon the principals in the disgusting farce, till everything was over. But when light came upon the situation the youth was ready to faint. He has a sweetheart, it is understood, in this city, and, should the ceremony be declared legal, as similar ceremonies have been in other parts of the country, by the courts, he finds himself in a truly awkward position.

In some countries in the civilized world a mock performance of this kind would render the performers liable to prosecution and probably result in fines or imprisonment. From the position of the Church, it deserves the severest condemnation. Marriage being instituted by the Lord for man, partakes of the nature of a divine ordinance. Like baptism, the Lord's Supper, and other ordinances, it should be considered holy, and not a subject of merriment and laughter. But apart from any religious motive, wise men have considered the relations entered into by the marriage ceremony the main foundation of society. All just laws aim at the protection of the family in its various relations. No true patriotism can exist where the marriage covenants are disregarded or made light of. To be true to these covenants and to regard them as a sacred trust is the essence of that virtue which leads to the defense of home and country in times of supreme danger. No matter, then, from what point of view a practical joke like the one referred to is regarded, it is an act which the serious part of the community will censure. Some will regard it as being almost blasphemous, and all will agree that it is dangerous in its demoralizing influence, if it is allowed to pass without some consequence to its perpetrators and participants. It would probably gain pretty general approval if the young couple were made to undertake in earnest the responsibilities involved in the ceremony which they have profaned. No other reparation within their power would appear to be adequate; and yet the enforcement of those obligations might, and probably would, result in mutual unhappiness. In whatever way the parties may succeed in extricating themselves, the duty of the community is plain: to visit upon the act full public censure and convey adequate notice that it is regarded as little less than a grave crime.

DIPHTHERIA IN SCHOOLS.

Anything pertaining to the study, prevention and cure of that dread enemy of childhood and youth—the deadly disease diphtheria—is certain to be received with interest by every class in every community that has suffered from the destroyer's ravages. It is accordingly with pleasure that the public will learn that, according to the report of the New York health board, diphtheria is a preventable ill; precautions against it are advised that are said to be effective, and the promise is that where strict sanitary regulations are enforced, there is no need of the disease obtaining a foothold at all.

This gratifying news is associated with a report that advances some very novel suggestions as to the cause and spread of the malady. It is well known that the disease is increasing; that it is most deadly in its effects—one in four cases proving fatal, whereas in the dreaded scarlet fever only one in twenty results fatally; that its germs are not readily killed by the ordinary extremes of heat and cold; and that it is spread and propagated chiefly by the contact of children in the public schools. The recommendations referred to are to the effect that the living of janitors in school buildings should be strictly prohibited; that muslin covers for books ought to be discarded; and that since the contagion is spread by means of indiscriminate mingling of slate pencils, these should be done away with entirely, and instead of them and slates, pens and paper should be substituted. These suggestions are reinforced by a cloud of expert testimony, and they are strongly urged upon the attention of all those who have at heart the preservation of life and the success of the country's common schools. Whether our local physicians are prepared to agree with their eastern colleagues in the position taken, we have not taken the time to ascertain; but the matter is important enough to deserve their notice without further invitation, to the end that if there is any negligence that can be avoided it may be pointed out, and the measure of immunity this Territory has already enjoyed may be made effectual and still greater through the employment of every precaution that skill and observation can suggest.

OUR FRIENDS, THE RAILROADS.

In the local railway situation there ought to be much food for thought on the part of every man who now is, has been, or expects to be in business for himself or for another, as well on the part of those whose hopes are bound up in the development of this country and the advancement of all its interests. Firstly, the aspect of affairs indicates the determination of the railroads to enter upon a line of policy that cannot but result disastrously to themselves. And secondly, the program plainly hinted at, and, as we learn, in some degree inaugurated, is nothing more nor less than a declaration of hostility to the public's best interests, a notice that in the accomplishment of certain defined ends the common weal is regarded with supreme indifference.

Of course a policy that will inevitably bring about these results will just as inevitably compass its own defeat. The difficulty lies in enduring till it works its own ruin. We may all be sure that the game of grab and extortion is brief and unsavory, and that short-sightedness in business always brings about a fatal stumble. But while the grinding game continues, experience proves that many an honest, worthy cause receives a squeezing from which it may never recover; and while the blundering, blinded course is reaching its end, many are kicked and maimed and crushed beyond possibility of restoration.

If all reports are true, the healthy competition that ought to exist where two railways do the business that could formerly have been monopolized by one, is likely to prove in our case a yawning sham. The glory that belongs to him who causes two blades of grass to grow where but one grew before, will hardly be snared by those who fasten two or more voracious leeches upon a spot which could have been successfully and abundantly sucked by one. Phlebotomy has not lately been as popular, even among medical men, as it was a few decades ago; and it was hoped the railway men had also been moved to adopt other measures. There is no evidence that the patients in the one case, or the public in the other, have developed any increased fondness for the practice. Once in a while, under great stress and provocation, it has been necessary to notify would-be blood-letters that the operation is so distasteful that it will not be tolerated. It may be necessary in our case to signify, as plainly as words and acts can express it, that this long-suffering but still resolute community has not even one more drop to spare—it will fight and die first.

But, dropping metaphor—what the News wishes to say in all kindness to the railroad companies doing business with and drawing support from the people of Utah is this:

Do not attempt to ride a free horse to death.

Do not plan and scheme to add here a little and there a little to the gross burdens the business community are already called to bear.

Go slow in increasing the freight tariff, on which you were very glad to compromise a little while ago.

Do not introduce the hideous features of the cutthroat game of "freeze-out," either against competitors or the people.

Deal generously, not niggardly, with your patrons either in the passenger or the freight service.

Remember that the anomaly of the public condition with reference to coal alone, is almost outrageous and that but one more straw is needed to smash your alleged combine into bits.

Begin the New Year right, not wrong;—and you will merit, not the manifestation of contempt, but the continuance of the friendship that the people have ever felt towards you for all you have done in the past—in broadening their foundations, multiplying their advantages, and adding to and beautifying the superstructure of grace and prosperity which is the delight of a continent.

If no move contrary to this advice has been made or even thought of, there is still no harm in giving it, and we crave the railroads' pardon for trespassing on their esteemed attention. If such moves have not only been thought of but actually begun—and rumors to this effect are plentiful as snowflakes—we trust our words will not come too late to cause a reconsideration and an orderly retreat.

AN ABLE CHAMPION.

The Irrigation Age begins its fourth volume and the year with many changes in make-up and style—all improvements. It has assumed in its general appearance some of the best features of the Review of Reviews and, being compact and classified in its literary arrangement, is now much more convenient for handling; either in the monthly part or the bound volume.

The opening pages are devoted, as they ought to be in a magazine of this character, to the progress of Western America, and our enterprising municipal neighbor, Ogden, receives a flattering notice on the very first one. Later on, the question of territorial admission to statehood is calmly and favorably discussed; there appears an excellent portrait of our fellow-townsmen W. H. Rowe, as president of the Bear River system, with a personal sketch on a later page; a glowing paragraph follows regarding the orange industry in the Salt River valley, Arizona, a locality inhabited by many former Utah citizens, and then comes this bit of straight advice on the matter of the Salt Lake-Los Angeles railway, one of three lines practically determined upon that are bound to exert so marvellous an influence in the building up of Western America:

Of all the railroads that might be built to employ the idle labor of the country today the most beneficent would be the line suggested between Salt Lake City and Los Angeles. Better than almost any existing line this would illustrate the high function of the railroad as an avenue for the exchange of products between localities of radically different capabilities. This road would open to the citrus fruits of Southern California the splendid markets of Utah, Idaho and Montana. It would furnish an outlet for agricultural and horticultural products, which the high altitudes raise with more success and profit than the expensive lands of the South, and it would encourage the budding manufacturing industries of the inter-mountain states. Not only this, but it would open up to the miner the wonderful Deep Creek country of western Utah and eastern Nevada, and awaken the slumbering agricultural possibilities in the central and southern portions of the later state. And if San Diego rather than Los Angeles be made the western terminus, it would give the localities connected with it by this road the benefit of the grandest seaport on the Pacific coast. Further than this, the existence of such a direct line between the growing cities of the mountain regions and the growing cities of the far southwest would develop a surprising passenger traffic. Utah would then winter in California and California would summer in Utah—the fairest land beneath the western sky! It is exasperating to realize that this inevitable railroad of the future, with all its potentialities for good, must remain unbuilt for an indefinite period to the tremendous disadvantage of the men of today.

A thoughtful article on "Fruit Growing in Utah," from the pen of Joel Shoomaker of Mantli, is given the place of honor in the department devoted to "Horticulture by Irrigation;" and as showing that this Territory is alive to the use of water power and electricity, appropriate reference is made to the organization recently of the Pioneer Electric Power company, which, as has been set forth in these columns, proposes to harness and utilize the wasted force of the rushing and beautiful Ogden river.

It will thus be seen that in the January number of the Age, Utah has had her fair share of mention; and yet from a scanning of other pages this does not seem to have been given at the sacrifice of space of any other western commonwealth. On these lines the magazine ought to enjoy an extensive patronage, and be the means of accomplishing incalculable good.

"FIGURES WON'T LIE."

The fallacy of the above phrase, as the expression of a commonly-accepted truth, is beautifully shown in the following extract from the usually accurate Springfield Republican:

Wells, Fargo & Co. estimate the value of the silver mined in Utah in 1893 at $5,233,935, and the total quantity at 7,107,503 ounces. The estimate of value is made on a basis of 30.64 cents per ounce, which is called the export value. This must mean value at the mines, and include all the cost of mining and smelting, and if so it shows that there is profit in silver mining in Utah at the lowest price yet reached for silver bullion, which was about 68 cents.

After the foregoing, we need not say that the Republican is what radical silverites would call a "gold-bug" paper; and yet we do feel to say that it is rarely drawn into an error in statistics to fortify its side in any controversy. Observe, however, the complete destruction of its own point in the quotation above, by a blunder in two figures, and draw from it the conclusion that whereas figures properly used do not lie, figures improperly used can be made to lie like fury:

If the total quantity of Utah's silver output for 1893 was 7,107,503 ounces, and the estimate of its value was made upon a basis of 30.64 cents per ounce, the total value would be about $2,177,739 instead of $5,233,935. The sale of silver bullion at 31.64 cents when "the lowest price yet reached for silver bullion was about 68 cents," would then indeed indicate, not only "that there is profit in silver mining in Utah," but also that there are a whole population of silver mine owners in Utah so demented that they should not be at large without a guardian. So hard have the times not yet been that in order to raise a little ready money, the bullion owners have had to make any such sacrifice as this.

Now, if the Republican will take its pencil and work a simple problem in long division, it will find that 7,107,503 ounces of silver aggregating a total value of $5,238,965, means a value per ounce, not of 80.64 but of 73.64. And if without further argument the esteemed Republican will accept our figures on this point, we will accept its figures on another one named—the lowest market price. All this will bring us both, by a similar line of logic, to radically different conclusions. If the estimated value of the product per ounce is 73.64 cents ("including all the cost of mining and smelting"), and the market price of bullion gets as low as "about 68 cents," it shows that instead of "there being a profit in silver mining in Utah," there is an actual loss of nearly 5 cents per ounce, or, on the total output, something like $850,000.

We do not wish to be understood as arguing either that it costs 73.64 cents per ounce, or more, or less, than that figure, to get the bullion. Neither do we reckon much on the 68-cent figure as the lowest or average market price: it has been lower, it is now higher and probably will remain so. Neither do we believe that silver mining in Utah has been, is, or is going to be, unprofitable. Our contention at this time merely is that according to the Republican's corrected calculation it would be disastrously so.

A RUSSIAN VISITOR.

Our country, it appears, is honored with the presence of Baron de Wagstaffe, a Russian dignitary, who has been sent by his government on a secret mission. It is stated, however, that the gentleman comes with the intention of looking for new ideas that may be useful for defensive and offensive purposes in the long expected European upheaval, when at last that event shall take place. That the distinguished Russian will make the places where arms and ammunition are manufactured the special objects of his visit is natural, and it is even thought probable that he will order a handsome supply from American manufacturers.

It is only a guess that the visit of Baron Wagstaffe has some connection with the recent purchase by Russia of the Brazil line of steamers, as reported in the dispatches. It was stated that the transfer of these steamers was made merely for commercial purposes. But it is now thought possible that the czar's intention is to arm these ships. In the event of a war with a nation whose keels are plowing every sea, these ships would be particularly serviceable on the Pacific. But even as an innocent merchant fleet, they would serve as a pretext for Russia to maintain in the Pacific a squadron for their protection, with a naval station on the Siberian coast. By means of the Siberian railroad and this fleet, it will be seen that the influence of the European giant would be considerably extended.

The czar's representative is doing the right thing in coming to this country for new ideas. If there is anything newly discovered about the art of destroying life and property, our manufacturers of projectiles and armament are sure to know it. And if the peculiar conditions of Russia need peculiar constructions of the means of defense, our inventors are sure to find the exact thing needed on land or sea. In this respect no country can successfully compete with the United States.

But Mr. Wagstaffe may in this country learn something of far greater importance if he will but do so. He can learn that a great and mighty people can exist without maintaining a million soldiers as a standing army to suck the very life out of the nation; that intelligence, liberty and regard for the laws are surer bulwarks of a state than the decrees of despotism, sacred only in the darkness of ignorance. These lessons would be of inestimable value to the great empire of the czar. It is his misfortune that he does not send his ablest representatives, and a great many of them, to look into, study, adopt and transfer to Russian soil, some of the sturdy supports of true and safe government which the New World has developed with such surprising accuracy and such assurance of perpetuity.

DON'T WARM A VIPER.

There is in this city a paper published in the Swedish language under the name of Korrespondenten. It was started a few years ago, professing to be an exponent of the cause of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints among the Swedish people. Under these professions and by various other means, which we are not required to enumerate, it is understood to have gained a welcome among some of the Swedish Saints, who subscribed to it, thinking they were supporting a friendly and a laudable enterprise. Soon, however, the dual spirit of the paper manifested itself. It commenced to attack worthy persons and institutions indiscriminately. The religious services and public speakers were particular objects of the venom of its writers. The bitterness of the language employed was equal only to the stupidity manifested on occasions, as, for instance, when one speaker was ridiculed for having quoted a celebrated Swedish poet and made a suitable application of the quotation.

But all this would not have been worth while the notice here given, as most of the readers of the NEWS are not even aware of the existence of the publication, had it not been for the fact that a recent number of the paper contains a rhyme which is so indecent that not to denounce it, the publication and the author, would be to neglect a duty we owe to the Swedish-speaking Saints. By the publication of this contribution, in which the author prays the Lord to condemn certain honored men to eternal torment, the paper has forfeited all right to the sympathy and support of those whose patronage it from the beginning sought; and Church members should be made aware of the fact, lest they unawares be further led into supporting something their own self-respect would prompt them to shun.

It is perhaps only right to state that Mr. Rydman has severed his connection with the paper; and, in order to fasten the odium where it belongs, that the miserable rhyme above referred to appears over the signature "Nels," whose identity, we think, is not difficult to determine.

A KANSAS paper sagely says: "In these practical days no man thinks of proposing to a woman on his knees." We should think not, indeed; before that stage of familiarity, he had surely already not only proposed to, but married her.

IT MUST be remembered that in the proposed prize fight in Florida there figure two Mitchells—the bully, and the state governor. In all predictions as to who is going to win, be sure to designate by initials.

EMPEROR WILLIAM of Germany is evidently in no particular financial straits. He is negotiating for the purchase of the noted Cape diamond, now in the vaults of the Bank of England, for an even five million dollars.

A NEW YORK woman is suing her husband for divorce for the real reason that he stutters so terribly, but probably on the ostensible ground of cruelty.

THE ANTIQUE and curio cabinet of Massachusetts is adorned with ten living ex-governors of the state.

Written for this Paper.

THE GOLDEN RAY SUBLIME.

A golden ray of sunshine sweet,
Looked gently down on me;
It sparkled in the Orient
And sped across the sea.
It fringed the mountain tops with gold
And glittered in the rain,
While beams of life-reviving light
Bespangled all the plain.

A golden ray of beauty rare
At dawn of day did rise
It crimson-decked the horizon,
And dappled blue the skies.
Yon brilliant bow in graceful curve,
The ray sublime has sent,
The king of day a triumphal arch,
In seven colors blent.

"Let there be light, and there was light."
The edict was divine;
It was the God Omnipotent,
Who caused the sun to shine.
When this decree was thundered forth,
It was the morn of time,
The universe looked up and thanked
The golden ray sublime!

The silvered moon and twinkling stars,
By their reflection bright,
Acknowledge whence their radiance comes,
In waves of glimmering light.
Ten million voices from the depths
In concert seem to say
From all the worlds in yonder skies,
God bless the golden ray!

A climax of beneficence!
The greatest, not the least;
The planets sing thy praises while
They roll from west to east.
All nature warms to light and life,
In thy bright glittering band,
And lo, a magic carpet green
Spreads all throughout the land.

Oh, golden ray of beauty rare!
Oh, line of light sublime!
A thousand bells may chime thy praise,
A million poets rhyme,
And write immortal verses
Till the end of mortal time:
Yet cannot span the goodness of
The golden ray sublime!

MACK LINTON.

Moroni, December 25, 1893.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.

SPARE THE TREES!

In your issue of December 30, the article of Prof. C. A. Whiting, on the preservation of our native forests, was a most timely topic, and I feel sure that he gave voice to the sentiments of a large body of thoughtful people throughout the Territory, who, like him, hope that the near future will see measures taken to secure the ends pointed out in that paper. It is no longer a mooted question that forest areas have an immense influence in promoting the economic well-being of a country, and the question is sure to come home to us with increasing force the longer we delay it; for, soon or late, we shall be compelled to adopt systematic methods of preserving and increasing our forest growths.

In common with the greater part of the West, the forest growths of Utah are extremely meager, and are limited almost entirely to the mountain slopes. As the country was settled these scanty stores were drawn upon more and more heavily, until in the more populous centers there is no further supply to draw upon. In the mountains east of Salt Lake City, pine trees can only be found in inaccessible places, and the few that remain are secure simply because Nature, more provident than ourselves, has thrown around them a bulwark of rugged rocks. And yet in these pine trees, protected by an intelligent public sentiment and fostered by wise regulations, is to be found a source of wealth of no inconsiderable proportions.

It has been my fortune to travel over a large portion of the Territory, and wherever I have gone I have seen evidences of the same wasteful methods. Trees are cut down without the slightest discrimination, the only apparent object being to satisfy the needs of the moment. But even if it stopped here, there would not be so much room for complaint—how often are we called upon to witness those mountain fires, that sometimes burn for weeks at a time, lighted up by the stupid carelessness or wanton destructiveness of persons who, if they will, not do better things of themselves, should be constrained to do so by the strong arm of the law! In some portions of the Territory, the mountains are clothed with a thick growth of cedars, which are being drawn upon for fuel, fence posts and other current necessities, without the slightest thought of any compensating measures for the future. The only thought of the man who goes to the canyon is, "where can I get my load the most easily and the most quickly?" By the drain upon it, the wood grows scarcer and more difficult to get with each successive year; and the simple sight soon bewails the lamentable fact that the "cedars are growing scarce." Poor improvident fellow! The very prodigality of nature has taught him bad habits. If he could only learn to see that there is a way to supply his every proper need, and still rather to increase than to decrease to the eternal detriment of the country he dwells in, the store he draws upon! He must have the wood, but let him join in a common effort to make it a perpetual treasure-house to himself and his children.

During the past summer the town of Mount Pleasant, Sanpete county, was visited with a tremendous flood. Water came down from the mountains in torrents, carrying with it whatever lay in its path. When it subsided, a most promiscuous lot of debris was scattered in various parts of the town, and in the principal street was deposited a foot or more of soft mud. Even now traces of the flood are plainly visible, and the people of that place will long remember the flood of 1898. Other Sanpete valley towns have had similar visitations in the past two or three years, and are now devising plans for steering the floods away when they chance to come; but not one of them, so far as I have learned, has given any attention to forest culture as a means of keeping the water back in the mountains, so there may be no floods. These are object lessons that should awaken the people of Utah to a more enlightened policy.

But perhaps little can be done in this way without organized effort; and system and science must come in to direct this effort in the best directions. Prof. Whiting suggests a Forestry Association, and such an organization is an imperative necessity if we would secure results proportional with the importance of the matter at issue. It would serve as a center of inspiration as well as of information, and might be a worthy father to many local organizations in various parts of the Territory. Nor would we be trying an experiment. We have the example of other states and other countries before us, and although our condition and environments may call for special work, yet their experience will be valuable to us. Germany has a thorough system of forest regulations, reduced to a science, and that country has been wonderfully benefited by the organized efforts that have been made. The results could only have been gained by institutions for that purpose. If we better our condition, it will be only by pursuing similar methods.

The physical condition of every country is largely the result of the policy of its inhabitants in respect to forest culture. The Mediterranean countries of Europe are today suffering from the wholesale destruction of the mountain forests. Where once were springs are now dry places; and unless some compensating movement on a large scale takes place in those lands, decadence in material prosperity is certain to follow.

The famines of India and China in large part are traceable to the denudation of the mountain sides of their trees; the forests are no longer there to absorb the rains, which now run quickly off in disastrous floods.

New York has been agitated in recent years concerning the devastation of the forests in the northern part of that state, around the headwaters of the Hudson. Their disappearance was being followed by floods. The state is now taking measures to protect them for the future.

Let Utah be as wise! We have no surplus to squander. The faults of the past may yet be condoned by a wise and vigorous policy for the future. Let us foster our meager forests and add to them by every means in our power, both as individuals and as members of an enlightened community—and success will be ours. Nature stands anxiously waiting to welcome us as laborers in her vineyard. Then let's to work, and the acknowledgements of a grateful posterity will commend the wisdom of the fathers!

AN OBSERVER.

Written for this Paper.

TALKS WITH OLD-TIMERS.

In reading over the sermons delivered at the late Semi-Annual Conference by the Authorities of the Church when the people were advised to be more economical and self-sustaining and to keep out of debt, I was reminded of a story told my companion and myself by a gentleman who had visited Utah early in the "fifties."

The gentleman was Mr. Joshua Woods, of Bristol, Pa., and one of Green county's most respected citizens.

Hearing of our presence in Green county, he sent for us to come and see him which we did; and our visit to his home was a very pleasant one, not only for us but himself as well, for he enjoyed talking about "old-times." He said he went out West during the great gold excitement in California and traveled around in Montana, Wyoming and those northern countries and when winter came on he found himself in Utah and in the heart of the Mormon settlement. He was struck with awe when he entered the beautiful little city of Great Salt Lake and saw the people living so happily together in their comfortable little homes, when all around them for hundreds of miles there was naught but rugged mountains and barren plains to invite the weary wanderer.

He gave a good description of the city as it was then and said he never could forget his visit there; "for," said he, "I was treated just like one of the 'Saints.'" He spoke in glowing terms of the industry and frugality of the people and of their hospitable ways, and ever since his visit there he has defended them whenever an opportunity presented itself.

Some of the bread that the early Saints cast upon the waters returned to us in the form of Mr. Wood's hospitality, though it had been floating many years seeking a place to lodge.

Mr. Wood said the most unique and interesting feature about Mormonism was the preaching of its Elders which did not consist of some old story reiterated every Sunday morning, but the sermons were full of instructions about temporal as well as spiritual affairs; and he thought that was one reason why we made such successful farmers. He said that a good many farmers of this country lacked the advice given to those Mormons out in Utah; and when I look over this country and see some of the half-tilled farms, I cannot help but think if the owners of them had some man like Brigham Young or Heber C. Kimball to instruct them they would be better off financially as well as intellectually.

Mr. Woods spoke of attending a ward meeting over which Bishop Woolley presided and said he: "I hear part of that man's sermon surging through my ears now;" and judging from the appearance of his surrounding I cannot help but think he profited by it, for he is the possessor of a nice home and a well disciplined family. He said the Bishop told the people that spring would soon be on and he wanted them to prepare for it by getting all of their farming utensils in working order so there would be no delay in putting in their crops; and when gardening time came he wanted the people to keep up their pigs and chickens so that they would not bother their neighbors; and he wanted them to learn to lay away for a "rainy day" and that "a penny saved is a penny earned." Mr. Woods also gave a good account of the "teachers' visits" "whose duty," says he, "is to visit every family and find out how they are getting along," to see if there are any poor or sick and if so to see that they have the proper care and the necessities of life. He thinks our system of taking care of the poor the best he has ever seen and never tires singing its virtues to his friends. He spoke of Brigham Young as a "smart man" and a "leader" and what honest man who is acquainted with his history will not?

Our visit to Mr. Woods is one long to be remembered for a talk with an honest man who is acquainted with Utah and her people is a thing of beauty not easily forgotten; but a talk with a man like I met a few weeks ago is longed to be forgotten. He at one time, so he said, "went through Utah to California and if it had not been for the snow in the Sierra Nevadas he would have helped wipe us d—n Mormons out of existence." He then went on in a great tirade about the Mountain Meadow massacre, and when I corrected him in some of his statements, he said: "What do you know about it. You are too young to know anything about that affair? I have been there and I ought to know something about it." I then asked him where Mountain meadows were situated, and when he said "on this side of Salt Lake City on a tributary of Bear river," I left him disgusted, with the words running through my mind, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

JOHN Q. CRITCHLOW.
FAIRMONT, W. Va., Jan. 8, 1894.

Written for this Paper.

AN ESSAY ON UTAH.

Utah derives its name from the Indian tribe Utes (dwellers in mountains). It is an immense basin about 6,000 feet above the sea, surrounded by mountains reaching at some points the altitude of 13,000 feet.

This great basin extending into Nevada is formed by the Wasatch on the east and Sierra Nevada mountains on the west. It is drained by the Colorado river and tributaries, boasts of a net work of railroads of 2,500 miles, of manufacturing of silk, sugar, woolen and other goods; has an agricultural college, university, and other educational buildings.

Its commerce, taxable wealth, religion, newspapers, population, history, etc., make a fine showing.

Vast mineral deposits, with the yellow metal at the head of them all, and our agriculture, gardening and floral cultivations aided by a very commendable system of irrigation attains a distinction almost without a rival. No less attention is elicited by her facilities afforded for grazing. The salubrious climate, warm days and cool nights during the summer months and short, moderate, invigorating winters, pure refreshing air, hundreds of lakes, countless fresh mineral and thermal springs valued for general use, particularly for their properties for the destruction of disease, have few if any equals.

Lying serene and within sublime view of our lovely capital is the Great Salt Lake, recognized as one of the greatest wonders of the world, with its perennial blue and complacent bosom covering inestimable fathoms of briny water, noted for the exquisite pleasure it affords and peculiar qualities it possesses for the float or surface bath, which invites and holds to its shores thousands annually, including invalids, with a fascination irresistible.

The sickly crippled, aged and decrepit once within the boundaries of this Territory and introduced to its fine climate, waters, etc., heralded everywhere as the promoters of health, joy and the prolongation of life, are loth indeed to leave it. Men of small means come here, locate, earn a livelihood, become independent and self-sustaining, seemingly but with little effort.

The capitalist finds safe and profitable investment for his money, realizing returns beyond his most pecuniary expectations. The laborer, mechanic, artist, scientific and professional man each, here, have ample material for the thorough cultivation of their talents. The hunter sees a great variety of wild game gamboling playfully in many parts of the Territory, among which are the deer, mountain sheep, catamount, wolves, foxes, beavers and bears; in their feathered relations we have grouse, quail, geese, pelican and duck, and in the streams fish of many kinds, of good size, including the pike, bass and salmon trout acquiring the nice weight of thirty pounds. Our scenery is of infinite beauty. The grand, lofty, imposing, snow-capped mountains, studded with fir and pine trees, standing solemn and magnificent in relief with their interesting reverse of green, fertile valleys, carpeted in their turn with luxuriant vegetation, accompanied with a great expanse of rolling prairie, overspread by the broad canopy of an azure sky lined with silvery clouds, enlivened with the rays of an eternal sun, disseminating cheerfulness and lending enchantment to all, and furnishing a combination of natural subjects for the landscape painter without parallel. Vocal and instrumental music are rated with our leading accomplishments, having a position second to none in the world, as recently proven at the great Fair notwithstanding a biased decision to the contrary. We may well feel proud of our land of poetry, scenery, song and dreams. Only half a century has elapsed since this land, now flowing with milk and honey, was entered by a few courageous, oppressed people, who, being driven from their eastern homes and fatigued with their long journey, halted here for rest and began at once with indomitable courage the struggle for life in this great, barren, forbidding plain of sand and sage (once a part of the American desert), subduing and making it an oasis at once inviting, growing, substantial, and presenting an appearance of ages of careful cultivation, with a thousand times as much yet to be done to bring it to the point its proud sons contemplate.

It was a monstrous undertaking and the pioneers deserve great credit for the manner in which they have reclaimed and improved so vast and desolate an area, at the same time instilling in the bosoms of their descendants the hallowed principles of truth. No land may I favorably compare with our own fair Utah, and being one of her adopted children I observe with ecstatic enjoyment her multifarious resources. Many distinguished men have homes here, including some of the most noted of modern times. Utah unquestionably produces her share of the greatest statesmen, theologians, literary and philosophical geniuses. When our Territory reaches that goal—statehood—for which she has so long and vainly striven, which has been so unjustly withheld from her and which now seems within her grasp, she will occupy a position among the sisterhood of states, the envy of all. She will be recognized as a grand acquisition, even superiority, worthy of her name. She will occasion much surprise among her foes for so long having forced her—a gem in purity, so eminently entitled to the respect, admiration and esteem of the laws and states of our common union—to tolerate a territorial form of government.

She will not only bring with her admission the coveted title of state, but many modern improvements in science and art. She will be found grandly and fearlessly revolutionizing social evils, promulgating educational and religious principles, aggrandizing national interests, advancing in physical science and culture, and in systems of commercial associations already of high order.

Our great union will find her baby state Herculean in strength, a colossus in soul and a Phebus in beauty.

HOMER KENDALL.

LEHI, Utah, Jan. 5, 1894.

Written for this Paper.

OUR STOCKHOLM LETTER.

STOCKHOLM, Dec. 16.—The Americans, who visit Stockholm during the winter months, are few and far between. By Americans I here mean such fortunate mortals, whose forefathers have made the United States their home one or two centuries ago.

These native born citizens of the great Republic usually pay a visit to the "Venice of the North" during June or July, when the gay Swedish capital is at her loveliest. They take up their abode either at the Grand hotel or at the Rydberg hotel, from the windows of which the view of the city and its many islands is most picturesque.

But there is another contingent of American travelers, who arrive here a short time before Christmas and stay from one to two weeks or sometimes a whole month after the holidays. Those are the naturalized Swedish-American citizens, who come to spend Christmas with their relatives and friends.

You can often see them go shopping in the large stores, and you will also find them in the theaters and large concert saloons, where they make themselves observed by reason of their custom to put in some English words while carrying on their conversation in Swedish.

Last summer I became acquainted with several American gentlemen, among others three merchants from New York, who were stopping at the Grand. The conversation drifted, as it often does, when you have a good talk with Americans, to politics, and the Cleveland appointments were especially the subject we discussed.

I took great pleasure to inform them how the present Swedish-speaking American minister was one of the most popular men in King Oscar's domain, and how the whole nation, from the king himself to the humblest subject, took a keen and lively interest in the question of Mr. Thomas's retention as minister of the United States to Sweden and Norway.

The three New York merchants were red-hot Democrats, as I believe you call it. One of them was also a politician of note, who had taken a very active part in the Presidential campaign of 1892. They did not know Mr. Thomas before their arrival at Stockholm, but had become acquainted with him during their stay in the capital, and it goes without saying, that he made the most favorable impression on them. The democratic politician was the most enthusiastic of the three, and he made us all smile when he most emphatically stated: "To the victors belong the spoil, but the American ministry in Stockholm ought to always belong to Mr. Thomas. I will tell Cleveland all about it when I see him."

I do not know if the gentleman has "seen Cleveland and told him all about it." I suppose the President has a will of his own, and is not very easily influenced even by more prominent politicians than our New York merchant. Even if King Oscar himself should ask for Mr. Thomas's retention, as a rumor here says he has already done, I believe that Cleveland would care very little for His Majesty's wish, if he had made up his mind to appoint some other man for the position: The hope of everybody here is, that Minister Thomas will be his own successor. There is no doubt that President Cleveland would gain many friends both in the United States and in Sweden by retaining him.

I have interviewed a great many other American travelers on the subject and I have also tried to get the opinions of naturalized Swedish-Americans. They have all agreed in expressing their belief that a person who is more fit to represent the United States in Stockholm, does not exist. As one of them put it, "Thomas is the right kind of man for that position. He never enquires whether a man is a Democrat or a Republican. All he wants to know is that he is an American, 4,000 miles away from home, and he will immediately offer him his hospitality and kindly services."

The Stockholm Aftonbladet quotes the following from a private letter by Anders Zorn, the celebrated painter and Sweden's art commissioner at the World's Fair, to one of his artist friends in Stockholm. "I do not say too much if I declare that never before has the Swedish art celebrated such triumphs as in Chicago. All European nations were represented by the best works their art had produced, and then Sweden sends only one and a half hundred paintings, and comes out victorious. I have not been asked to make any report, but other commissioners have sent reports to their governments, and as I have heard, in favor of Sweden. Lectures on Swedish art are now being held both in New York, Boston and Chicago. I would have preferred to write on this subject in the newspapers, but I am too timid to see my thoughts in print."

***

There is an anecdote about Zola, Alphonse Daudet and the Loncourt brothers once coming in a dispute, about the importance of a name. Daudet, always idealist, proposed to demonstrate practically that it was not the name of the author but the work itself, which decided its success. He sent anonymously one of his novels to his publisher, but the manuscript was returned. Other publishers treated it in the same manner. The novel was sent back by everyone, seldom read, always refused. He did only need to put his name on the front page, and the publishers tried to outbid each other in order to obtain the right of publishing the work.

A variation of this theme was recently discussed in a newspaper article published in the magazine Ord och Bild (Words and Pictures). The article, the author of which is Mrs. Helene Nyblom, one of Sweden's most prominent female writers, treats a very delicate subject. Mrs. Nyblom asks namely in full earnest, whether Henrik Ibsen is a poet or not, and she answers the question with no, insisting upon that many of his latest dramas would not have been published, had anybody with a less famous name than Ibsen written them. How she arrives at the conclusion—well that would take several columns to relate. Enough may be said, however, that Mrs. Nyblom gives many good reasons for her opinion which undoubtedly is shared by many people who do not take the trouble of studying closer the most mysterious and incomprehensible of modern authors.

***

The fact that the Swedes are a musical people is best proved, says an author, by their national melodies, their songstresses and their students, choruses being each in their kind admitted to be the finest in the world. Rossini is stated to have declared that such a melody as Neckens Polska, neither he nor any other composer then living could have written. Jenny Lind was the most gifted singer that any country has ever produced, and other Swedish songstresses have won a world-wide celebrity, e. g. Christine Nilsson. In 1867, at the World's Fair in Paris, when the Upsala Students' chorus carried on the competition in singing, it was unanimously adjudged the first prize. Singing and its cultivation generally forms the focus of musical life. Ever since the royal opera was founded in 1773, it has had plenty of good voices, more especially sopranos and tenors.

NOTES.

Glenwood, Colo., papers announce a coming coal rate war. New Castle dealers threaten to bear the market with $3.50 coal.

Reno, Nevada, is enjoying a season of old-fashioned winter, with superb sleighing; and the merry jingle of the bells is heard on every side.

Buffalo, Wyo., rejoices in the possession of booming times. Ninety per cent of the taxes have been paid and business is brisk, writes an exchange.

At New Castle, Colo., the kind hearted farmers bring in loads of vegetables as donations to the families of the idle coal miners.

At Kingman, Ariz., an estimate is published by the Mineral Wealth, showing that the mineral output shipped out of Mohave county, Arizona, for 1898, was $600,000.

At Ouray, Routt county, Colorado, the standard price for wheat is $1.50 a bushel. This has been the price for two years. Plenty of vacant land in that region.

Three thousand rabbits were donated to the poor of Pueblo by the citizens of Caduca and Lamar last week. The Arkansas valley below Pueblo has been overrun by rabbits.

A lemon tree is flourishing in Long Beach, Southern California, within a quarter of a mile from the ocean. A number of lemon trees will be set out this year at the seaside.

The Silverton and Red Mountain railroad line has been kept open thus far this winter by railroad men "bucking snowdrifts" each day. Fears are expressed that the road will close.

Casper, Wyo., can now boast of a full blooded Lincoln buck which took the prize at the World's Fair and fifteen blue ribbons at other fairs. It weighs 275 pounds and will be used for breeding purposes in Wyoming.

Alamosa, Colo., is assured of the location of a packing house at that point next spring. The surplus grain of the San Luis valley will then be converted into clear sides and sugar cured hams, lard and canned corn beef.

At Antlers, Garfield county, Colo., Messrs. Horan and Moore raised 823 pounds of potatoes from one pound planted. They also produced sixty-five bushels of oats from one bushel of seed. They challenge the state to beat that.

A Monte Vista, Colo., inventor named Mead has perfected and patented a light, durable and economical hay baler. It weighs only 2,400 pounds and can be loaded on a wagon by two men. It is said to be a great improvement in hay balers.

A fatal lung disease has broken out among the horses in Northern Wyoming. Those that do not die are worthless when the disease leaves them. The Eureka Cattle company, near Bonanza, has lost some valuable thoroughbred horses.

Johnson county, Wyoming, the scene of the tragic cattle baron raid of 1892, is producing pork. At Buffalo last week several hogs were marketed weighing over 600 pounds. One Johnson county beef was killed weighing 960 pounds dressed.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

PROVO, Utah, Jan. 5.—R. R. Irvine has filed suit against the Enquirer for twenty-five thousand dollars damages for libel. The alleged libelous statements were made that Irvine, while judge of election, removed ballots from the ballot-box.

PROVO, Utah, Jan. 5.—Judge J. W. Blackburn was found dead in bed this morning. The cause of death was rheumatism of the heart. The body was warm when found. The judge has not been well for some time, but his demise was unexpected. He was outdriving yesterday afternoon.

Thursday's election in this city resulted in an unexpectedly large and sweeping victory for the Republicans whose standard bearer, Hon. C. S. Varian, was successful over Hon. W. C. Hall, the Democratic nominee. The number of nearly one thousand votes.

There were 1261 votes less cast yesterday in the whole city than in November, and 3308 less than the total registration.

John Ahern, a lad of 12, while coasting on Twenty-third street, Ogden, yesterday, collided with another sled and broke his left leg just above the ankle. He was removed to his home at 230 Twenty-sixth street and Dr. Powers was summoned. The broken limb was set and the lad made as comfortable as possible. The fracture is a very bad one, but Dr. Powers anticipates no serious results.

The condition of Hon. Wm. R. Smith, of Davis Stake, is still most critical, and nothing but the patient's extraordinary vitality could have enabled him to survive so long. On Saturday evening last it was thought the end had come, and the family were unmoved to the bedside. But the sufferer rallied, and a friend who is in the city today reports that he is somewhat better though seeming to grow weaker with each relapse.

The preliminary hearing of the charge against March McKinney, of Cedar Fork, of causing the death of John Lewis, at Lewiston, Tooele county, is set down for Tuesday morning next, before U. S. Commissioner Pratt. It is alleged that the defendant stabbed the unfortunate man in the head with a knife on December 18th. Lewis was conveyed to the hospital, lingered until the 23rd of the same month and then died from the effects of the injury.

News comes from Eureka to the effect that Luke Skinner, a miner, fell from the sixth to the eighth level, a distance of 200 feet, in the Keystone mine and was dashed to death. He was seen a few minutes before, walking towards the shaft with a lighted candle in his hand as though looking for something. Suddenly he disappeared and a search for him resulted in finding his mangled remains at the bottom of the shaft.

An inquest was held and a verdict of accidental death returned.

At Ogden, in the Fourth district court, the Jarvis Conklin Mortgage Trust company asked for the appointment of a receiver and for the foreclosing of a mortgage amounting to $2,070,000, with interest at 7 per cent from October, 1891.

The defendants called are: Bear Lake and River Water Works and Irrigation company, Salt Lake Land and Irrigation company, Wm. Garland, W. W. Corey, A. B. Corey, Charles R. Corey, W. H. Wattis, Samuel M. Jarvis, E. O. Wattis, Roland R. Conklin.

A Hailey, Idaho, dispatch to the Boise Statesman says that word was received yesterday, Friday, that Theodore F. Shaw of Sawtooth, Custer county, was found frozen stiff about eight miles from Sawtooth. Information is meager, but it seems Shaw was going from one of his mines to another a mile distant and is supposed to have sat down to rest and was overcome by the severe cold. He was found lying on a ledge of rocks that had been bared by the wind. He met his fate before Friday, December 29. On that date his remains were found. They were badly mutilated by wild animals.

At about 7 o'clock Tuesday night, when the janitor of the Weber Stake Academy went to heat up the building preparatory to Dr. Phillips's night school, he found it full of smoke, and, on investigation, found a fire burning in the cellarway under the building. The fire was luckily of small dimensions, and the janitor speedily succeeded in extinguishing it. That there was a deliberate attempt at firing the building there can be no doubt; because the place where the fire occurred is never used, and a mass of debris and wood was burning. Two of the pieces of the wood were found to be pickets taken from the fence of an adjoining house.

SUGAR HOUSE, Salt Lake County, Jan. 5, 1894.—Sugar House turned out en-masse last night to pay its respect to one of its best citizens, Brother Bird Murphy, who leaves in a few days for a mission to the Southern States. A committee consisting of Brothers W. Summerhays, W. C. A. Smoot, Jr., J. M. Whittaker, A. Stayner, Jr. and A. Castleton, arranged a happy program—consisting of songs, speeches and recitations, which was well received by those present. Brother Murphy has been a faithful worker in the ward, both in the Sunday School and as a teacher, and his worth was duly appreciated by the members of the ward as evinced last night.

W. C. A. SMOOT JR.,
In behalf of the Committee.

Mrs. Lucas, the unfortunate woman who wandered away from her home in Ogden last Saturday afternoon, was found at the mouth of Weber canyon on Sunday by Joseph Bambrrough. Mr. Bambrrough's attention was attracted to her by her groans, and he discovered her lying in the snow half-conscious, not far from the county road. She was removed to Mr. Bambrrough's house, when it was found that both of her feet were badly frozen up to her ankles. She was given every possible care and her limbs thawed out in so skillful a manner that they will probably be saved. Yesterday she was brought home, where she now is in a very critical condition. On Sunday she was tracked from down at the southwestern part of town for two or three miles, when the track was lost.

On Saturday night last, William C. Parkinson's store at Preston, Idaho, was broken into and about $1000 in cash and scrip stolen. They had the money in two small iron boxes. Saturday had been a very busy day with them, and at night they were in a hurry to go to a concert, so they left boxes in the office, a very unusual thing for Mr. Parkinson to do, for they have always been very careful to put their money in a safe place. On Sunday morning they found the back door of the store burst open, and the boxes with the money gone. They suspected two or three boys, and watched them. They followed them closely on Sunday, and on Monday they were caught. The stolen box was found in a barn hid in the hay. The boys confessed to the crime and are bound over in $2000 each to appear at the district court in Malad. One of the young men broke into the same store before and was in Malad jail for it. They all denied knowing anything about the robbery at first, but at last gave in and told all about it.

It seems strange that in a place like Cache valley, enjoying, as it does, a reputation for the energy and progressiveness of its inhabitants, one of its most important natural resources should have been so nearly overlooked as has been its supply of natural gas. It has been known for many years that that it existed in some sections in large quantities, and parties striking it while boring for water, have lit it many times just to see it burn, and have then bored down below the gas belt in search of water. The only use being made of it by any one, is by Mr. William Toombs, on his ranch about two miles west of Smithfield. While boring for a flowing well he struck gas at a depth of 150 feet, and thought he would utilize it. He conveyed it to his house, and during the fall and winter his house has been heated and lighted by it. While boring he ran through many different strata, and when in the neighborhood of the gas, brought up whole, perfect leaves and pieces of wood of a kind not now found in this part of the country. His discoveries in this direction might be of interest to botanists and geologists. As Mr. Toombs has demonstrated the value of this gas it should not be long before a company is formed to furnish it to the residents of Logan and other towns in the valley.

There was a most shocking and painful coasting accident at the intersection of Center of and Peach streets Tuesday night, January 23 at twenty minutes past nine o'clock.

A number of schooner parties were organized, one of them containing fifteen persons. This particular one was under the management of Joe Richardson, a young married man who resided in the neighborhood.

One of the members of the party was Miss Emma Bollwinkel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Bollwinkel, who reside at the corner of Center and Apricot streets. It is directly in front of their home that the coasters commence their dangerous descent. The young lady had just recovered from a long and severe spell of sickness and her mother was anxious for her to come into the house and so informed her. But her companions insisted on her taking one more ride. This was consented to and a moment later she had taken up a position on the schooner, next to Mr. Richardson, the pilot, and they started away amid merry hurrahs and shouts of laughter. Their course was parallel with the track of the Center street car line. A block from the starting point the car was seen coming up the hill, but all relied on Richardson's ability to steer clear of the car and track and it looked as though he would be able to do so. But at the last he lost control of the schooner and it dashed diagonally across the street and directly into the side of the car between the front and hind wheels.

As a result Richardson sustained a terrible fracture of the right leg both above and below the knee, the member being crushed to fragments. Miss Bollwinkel's right leg was also broken below the knee near the ankle, while the knee itself is frightfully crushed. A Miss Bear was also badly hurt, but had no bones broken. She was at once removed to her home, while the other two unfortunates were put on board the car and brought down town, where they were waited upon by Doctors Richards and Wilcox, the company's physicians. Later both of them were taken to their homes.

It is thought that Miss Bollwinkel's limb may be saved, though it will always be stiff. Richardson's death followed two days after the accident.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The thirty-first session of the Territorial Legislature convened in Salt Lake City, on Monday, January 8th.

THE COUNCIL ORGANIZED.

Promptly at 2 o'clock, J. M. McNutt, Esq., of Ogden, the chief clerk of the last Council, called that body to order. On motion, Breedon and Williams were appointed to wait on the secretary of the Territory, and inform him that the members of the Council were ready to be sworn in. Immediately Secretary Richards appeared when the members of the Council rose to their feet in a body and took the oath of office.

Mr. McNutt then read the roll of members of the Council from the certified list furnished him by the Secretary of the Territory, and all the members answered to their names.

Booth nominated Mr. Breedon, of Weber county, as president, and Hart, with a brief eulogy, nominated P. L. Williams. Mr. Breedon was elected by a strict party vote, as were the remainder of the Republican caucus nominees as below given.

Chief Clerk—Colonel Percy S. Sowers of Salt Lake County.

Minute Clerk—J. H. Clove of Provo.

Sergeant-at-arms—Henry Adams of Juab county.

Enrolling and Engrossing Clerk—Joel Ricks of Cache county.

Watchman—William H. Payne of Salt Lake county.

Messenger—John M. Hansen, of Millard county.

Chaplain—R. G. Lambert of Salt Lake county.

HOUSE ORGANIZED.

At 2:15 J. R. Letcher Esq., chief clerk of the last House, called the lower branch of the Legislature to order, and read the names of members from a certified list furnished by the Secretary of the Territory.

Varian moved that the House now proceed with the election of Speaker. Carried.

In a eulogistic speech, Allen nominated A. B. Emery of Summit county.

Powers spoke admiringly of Emery, but thought the House should choose its presiding officer from the north, as it had been claimed that heretofore Salt Lake and Summit county had controlled the Legislature, and he nominated Aquila Nebeker.

Nominations were closed and the vote was taken by ayes and noes, the result being:

Emery..... 14
Nebeker..... 8

Emery was elected.

Varian offered a resolution providing for the election of the remaining officers of the House, the Republican caucus nominees being named in the resolution:

Chief Clerk—C. E. Stanton of Salt Lake county.

Sergeant-at-Arm—W. H. Wilson of Utah county.

Minute Clerk—John D. Spencer of Salt Lake county.

Engrossing and Enrolling Clerk—Thomas B. Evans of Weber county.

Watchman—John McKeller Jr., of Tooele county.

Messenger—Rasmus Clawson of Sanpete county.

Chaplain—Samuel J. Clark of Sevier county.

Jaulter—William Dole of Salt Lake county.

The Secretary of the Territory then administered the oath of office to the officers of the House.

JOINT SESSION.

Chairs were provided in Representatives' hall for the members of the Council, who were all in their seats at 8:35, when the proceedings of the joint session opened, President Breedon of the Council presiding.

The chaplain of the Council offered prayer.

The rolls of the two houses were called; all the members of both were present, except one member of the Council.

Varian and Williams were appointed a committee to notify the Governor that the joint session was in readiness to receive his message.

At 3:40 his Excellency Governor West entered, and was received by the joint session, the members rising as he appeared, and the large audience gave a round of applause. He was introduced to the joint session by President Breedon, and read his message, which was listened to with profound interest by legislators and audience alike. At its conclusion a tremendous burst of applause filled the hall.

Powers offered a resolution providing that 2,000 copies of the message and accompanying documents be printed. Adopted.

The chief clerk of the Council read the minutes of the joint session, which were approved, and the joint session adjourned. The chaplain of the House pronounced the benediction.

A breezy air of variety, not to say diversion, was imparted to the proceedings of the House by repeated passages between Allen and Powers. As is generally understood, each aspires to the leadership of his party, and while Powers will doubtless hold that position, at least in debates, it is a question whether Varian will not quietly take from Allen the Republican laurels of leadership.

At times Allen would give Powers a whack with a bludgeon, but while Allen was making this effort Powers would retaliate with several cuts with a whip. And so the pair had it back and forth to the amusement of members and the delight of a crowded audience.

Territorial Finances.

The annual report of the ex-Territorial auditor, Arthur Pratt, which the Governor appended to his message to the Legislature shows that the total debt of the territory on December 31, 1893, amounted to $1,230,523.80, made up of a bonded indebtedness of $700,000, territorial warrants in circulation, $121,867.58, and sundry amounts due the various territorial institutions and to employee, etc., of $408,655.72.

The resources are:

Cash in Territorial treasury.....	$ 159,547 22
Counties, due from .....	350,876 95
Contingent expenses.....	05
Total Territorial deficit, or excess of liabilities over and above its available resources as above.....	740,099 04
Total.....	$1,230,523 80

The deficiency is $40,099.44, but to offset the total deficiency of the Territory there are institutions valued at $1,175,459.76. The total assessed valuation of the Territory is $115,114,842, some $4,000,000 less than in 1892.

Territorial School Funds.

The territorial school commissioner has completed the work of apportioning money to the various counties, it being the first installment of 1893 taxes. The second will be made on the 31st of March. The apportionment is made on a basis of $2.10 per child of school age. The report in detail shows:

County	Childr	Amount
Beaver.....	1,227	$ 2,576 70
Box Elder.....	2,665	5,596 50
Cache.....	4,385	9,168 50
Logan City.....	1,618	3,393 60
Davis.....	2,505	5,260 50
Emery.....	2,046	4,296 60
Garfield.....	1,118	2,347 80
Grand.....	145	304 50
Iron.....	957	2,009 70
Juab.....	1,565	3,286 50
Kane.....	687	1,442 70
Millard.....	1,581	3,320 10
Morga.....	652	1,369 20
Plute.....	584	1,214 40
Rich.....	634	1,314 40
Salt Lake County.....	5,906	12,402 60
Salt Lake City.....	11,294	23,717 40
San Juan.....	144	302 40
Sanpete.....	4,542	9,538 20
Sevier.....	2,484	5,216 40
Summit.....	2,622	5,506 20
Tooele.....	1,268	2,662 80
Uintah.....	1,120	2,352 00
Utah County.....	7,364	15,464 40
Provo City.....	1,623	3,382 30
Wasatch.....	1,441	3,026 10
Washington.....	1,451	3,047 10
Wayne.....	681	1,430 10
Weber County.....	3,067	6,432 70
Ogden City.....	3,385	7,108 50
	71,709	$150,588 90

INDUSTRIES, COMMERCE AND MINES.

Virginia City, Nevada, Enterprise: The total ore product of the Comstock lode during the first three-quarters of the year 1893 was 46,365 tons. The bullion yield of this ore was $68,162; total cost of extraction, transportation and reduction foot up $955,616 according to the sworn statements of mine superintendents. The returns from the Savage include only the first quarter of 1893 and the Hale & Norcross has made no statement. When the statement for the last quarter is received it will probably swell the total bullion yield for the year 1893 to $300,000. This is a marked falling off below the product of any year since 1884. Of the total bullion yield last year nearly $300,000 was in gold. As a majority of the other mining districts in Nevada are largely silver producing and as the extraction of ore has been almost totally suspended since the depression in the price of bar silver, the entire bullion yield of the state for 1893 may not exceed $3,000,000, against over $6,000,000 for the year 1892. It is estimated that of the $555,000,000 in bullion produced from Comstock mines that $250,000,000 was gold. Before the bonanza uncovered in the Consolidated California & Virginia mines was developed, the ore extracted from the upper workings of the lode was nearly one-half gold, and in the early history of the Comstock gold largely predominated in the surface workings. The ore extracted from the Consolidated California & Virginia during the past two years has produced nearly 50 per cent of its value in gold bullion.

Don Corey, member of the territorial bureau of information for Utah county, was up from Provo today. He filed the county's report on resources with Secretary Snyder of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Corey says of the threatened suits against Salt Lake City and the various canals in Salt Lake county, by land owners along Utah lake, that within a short space of time there will be forty of these suits filed in the district court at Provo. All of these will claim damages by reason of the overflow of their lands by Utah lake, the cause of which they alleged to be the crowding back of the water by the canal companies' dam in Jordan river.

In connection with this it may be stated that while the suits are being filed in the First district court it is by no means certain that they will be tried there. The defendants in these cases have made no complaint against the judge, but allege that the prejudice of jurors in Utah county will give the verdict to the Utah county farmers every time. Because of the situation which they thus claim to exist, there will be an effort to secure a change of venue, and have the cases tried at either Salt Lake, Ogden or Beaver.

A movement is on foot to raise funds to carry the case of E. C. S. Greco to the Supreme court of Utah for decision as the construction of the law of 1888, entitled "Befouling Waters," and the law of 1892, on the same question, which latter law is believed by many to be explanatory and in modification of the 1888 law, fixing a limit where or within which sheep may not be herded, camped or bedded, within seven miles of any city, town, village or settlement, where the drainage will flow into any stream used by the inhabitants below, says the Mount Pleasant Pyramid. In the Greco case it seems distance from a settlement, city or town makes no difference if the sheep are near a stream which is used by the inhabitants below. Such men as are sheep owners of the highest respectability in the community and of known responsibility and integrity, have decided to carry the Greco case to the Supreme court for decision and if the court holds against them, to use all lawful means to have the incoming legislature pass such a law as will protect the wool industry, as well as farming and other industries in the Territory.

Grand Junction, Colo., Times-Star: There is said to be, by coal experts, the largest coal field in the world surrounding Grand Junction and Mesa county. It extends west from Grand Junction to the Wasatch mountains in Utah, a distance of over 200 miles, along the Book mountain range, and no place at or near the foot of which a drill of 200 feet would not encounter from two to five veins of coal averaging from two to twenty feet thick, most all of which is on the unsurveyed government land. There is a store of wealth deposited in this territory upon which future generations will continue to develop for ages to come, within a radius of fifteen miles from Grand Junction. There are no less than fifty openings where the farmers from Grand valley haul their own fuel at a cost of digging and carting only, and a better quality of bituminous coal does not exist in the world. The towns of Aspen, Leadville and other places have been partially supplied with coal from this point, but the full development of these wonderful deposits can only be had by the establishment of manufacturing factories among us.

The Engineering News states that "a question involving both interstate and international water rights has arisen in connection with the proposed canal of the Colorado river Irrigation company. This canal was to head in the Colorado river, nine miles above Yuma, Ariz., pass through a portion of California, then for some forty-five miles in Lower California, to take advantage of grade, and finally back into California. The people of Arizona claim that the canal is to head in that state, and object to water being diverted from them, while the Mexicans claim that if the canal passes through their territory sufficient water must be given them to irrigate lands coming under it. The boundary of Arizona and California is in dispute, and it seems likely that legal steps must be taken to settle both the interstate and international questions involved."

A reporter interviewed J. M. Toombs, of Willard, says the Brigham Bugler. He says that for one year he and Warren Hickman have been quietly developing a valuable onyx quarry situated on Promontory, twelve miles south of the station on the S. P. Ry. in Box Elder county, by that name. They have got out some beautiful samples, varying from very dark to a white. Fine specimens of marble are also found in the vicinity. Representatives of an eastern company have lately been out and inspected the place and they are so well satisfied with the value of the discovery that they have organized a company called the Western Onyx & Marble Co., at Eau Claire, Wis., where they will erect a new plant purposely to work the precious stones from the place. Mr. Toombs says that they expect to put eight or nine men to work on the quarries some time in February.

W. H. Boose was instantly killed in the Stevens mine at Butte Friday. He was cleaning up a drift on the hundred foot level, when a rock weighing about four tons slipped from the hanging wall and completely covered him. Sam Stevens, who was working close to him, managed to escape the big rock by jumping, but was struck by a number of smaller stones and knocked senseless. The accident was not discovered until evening, when the men failed to show up for supper, and a search was instituted. It took three hours to get Boose's body out from under the rocks. Stevens is suffering from concussion of the brain and may die.

The Utah Sugar Company directors were wroth Jan. 6 at the unfounded assertion of a morning contemporary that at the meeting yesterday afternoon a form of contract with the farmers who raise beets for next season's crop was adopted, and that "it is intimated that the producers of beets will not get as much for their product next year as they have in the past." This is denounced as untrue, and the statement was given out that no contract was adopted. "The subject of reducing the price to the farmers has never been discussed," said Manager T. R. Cutler today; "there has been no intimation of a reduction, and that matter has not been taken up at all."

Lehi Banner, 4th: The Tickville district is forging ahead at a rapid rate. Clark & Taylor, Mason & Sharp, W. H. Winn, Dave Winn, H. Walker, Mr. Briggs, Yearnace & Coleman went out there yesterday prepared to do work. All who own claims there are jubilant over the good showing being made. There will be a meeting of the owners of mining claims located in what is known as the Low Hills and Tickville, held in the Lehi City hall on January 11, 1894, for the purpose of organizing a mining district, electing a recorder, passing by-laws, etc.

Returns were received today from Boston on the sale of 26,000 pounds of Utah wool shipped east last July. The clip was placed in the hands of a prominent Boston commission house, and during the closing days of December the final sales were made, and the report thereon has come to hand. John A. Carson, who shipped the wool from Kelton, Utah, receives for his clip less than six cents per pound. It was good average wool, too.

Boise, Idaho, Statesman: John Nurminster, an aged and decrepit German, who arrived in this city several days ago from Salt Lake, has applied to the city for assistance. Nurminter says he walked most of the way from Salt Lake. His feet are badly frozen and he is almost dead from exposure. Chief Chinn has been keeping the unfortunate fellow at his own expense, but yesterday he applied to the relief society to take charge of the man. Nurminter says he is on his way to Oregon, where he has a daughter.

Mt. Pleasant Pyramid: Sophus E. Jensen came in from the sheep camps for the holidays, and brought the most encouraging word yet received. He says there is plenty of water now, and the herds are scattering out in the ranges on good feed. Considerable flesh was lost on account of the dry spell, but it is expected to soon regain this now. Mr. Jensen has set out for the desert again.

Mount Pleasant Pyramid: Sheriff Burns was considerably worried last week over the absence of one of his boys in the Henry mountains. The young man is down there with his father's sheep, and it being a new country and no word having been received from the boy since storms set in, Mr. Burns was intending to start out to inquire if all was well. Whether he has departed yet or not, we are unable to say.

The stockholders in the Brigham City Co-op held their annual meeting Monday. The business was shown to be in a prosperous condition. A dividend of three per cent was declared. Apostle Lorenzo Snow was elected president and Samuel Smith, L. Snow Jr., Adolph Madsen, Alvin Nichols, Rudger Clawson, A. E. Snow, and Carl Jensen were chosen directors. This is the first time a dividend has been declared for a number of years.

American Fork Item: Dr. Bostwick, who is at the head of a new patent medicine company, has located here and will put up a large plant for the manufacture of the medicine, which are, one for rheumatism and malarial fever, a catarrh remedy, a liniment and a hair grower, the latter being a most wonderful discovery, producing hair on anything from an old bachelor to a hair trunk. The machinery is ordered and will arrive soon.

Eben Smith, A. F. Wuensch and Warren Hussey, of Denver, are in the city, on their return from Helene, Nevada, where they have been looking over the Jim Crow and Monitor mines, which S. T. Goube entered into an agreement to sell for $450,000, as stated in the NEWS some time since. The three gentlemen will visit the Bingham mines, and then return to Denver.

The Mammoth mill closed down at noon yesterday, and there is no certainty as to the time when it will resume. The cause of the shut down is the obstruction of the tramway from the mine to the mill by some parties who claim that the track passes over their ground.

Another gold discovery is reported from Ophir, Tooele county. It is at Larkin's ranch, three miles west of the town. The scene of the new discoveries is probably on the same belt as the mines at Mercur, Juab county. A large number of locations has been made.

Adjutant General Case, of the Idaho militia, in his official report, gives the number of Idaho militia at 24 commissioned officers and 208 enlisted men, a total of 232. The number of men in the state available for military duty is 13,932.

New Castle, Colorado, has been selected by Ohio parties as a suitable location for a stoneware manufactory. It has good clay and cheap coal. The projectors will manufacture stoneware suitable for fruit preserving for the fruit raisers of the Grand Valley and Utah.

A party of Colorado capitalists and mining men went out to the Camp Floyd and Mercur districts today. Among them was Henry Wolcott, brother of the Centennial state senator of that name. Mr. Wolcott is already largely interested in these districts and has great hopes for the future.

A gentleman who returned to this city from the Camp Floyd district today says that a great deal of work is being done in that part of the Territory and he has strong hopes that with the coming of spring a great camp will be built up there.

An eight-foot vein of ore was uncovered on Monday in the Poorman mine at Cripple Creek, Colorado. It assayed $65.50 per ton. In the Free Coinage mine a body of gold ore was met with which showed nearly $5000 to the ton.

Lehi Banner: One of our mining men informs us that he has discovered a fine deposit of corundum near our city. This is a mineral of extreme hardness and is much used for making emery wheels. This deposit may prove valuable.

J. C. Leary manager of the Union Stock yards has resigned his position as such to engage in business in Kansas city. He will find a successor in the person of Edward H. Mack, recently connected with the Pueblo Stock yards.

W. L. Pickard reports that in Denver the business men are feeling encouraged over the fact that there December showed up to be the best business month of 1893.

Boise, Idaho, Statesman.—It has been definitely decided there will be no Idaho exhibit at the Midwinter fair.

The Hansauer, Germania and Mingo smelters have made a reduction of 10 per cent in wages.

PRIESTHOOD MEETING.

The Priesthood of the Salt Lake Stake assembled Saturday at 11 a. m., Elder Angus M. Cannon, president of the Stake, with his counselors, Elders Joseph E. Taylor and Charles W. Penrose, presiding.

There were present of the First Presidency, Wilford Woodruff and George Q. Cannon; of the Apostles, John Henry Smith and Heber J. Grant; Elder Seymour B. Young of the first Council of Seventies.

The roll was called and responded to by twelve pre-idents of Seventies and eighteen home missionaries. All the wards in the Stake were properly represented excepting the Sixteenth city ward, and Pleasant Green and North Point of the country.

The First, Fourth, Fifth, Tenth, Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth and Twenty-second quorums of Elders were represented by their presiding officers.

Upon the recommendation of their respective Bishops, twenty-five young men received certificates authorizing their ordination to the office of Elder, each of whom promised to honor and magnify their office and calling if ordained.

The speakers were Presidents Wilford Woodruff and George Q. Cannon, and Elders Angus M. Cannon, Charles W. Penrose and Heber J. Grant.

The subjects treated were the necessity of the Bishops returning recommends for entrance to the Temple in this city every six months; the conscientious settlement of tithing; the full preparation of young men to receive the Melchizedek Priesthood, and the proper exercise of this authority; the necessity of implicit dependence upon prayer to secure temporal and spiritual blessings; and the vast responsibility resting upon those who are called to the work of God.

Communications from President Lorenzo Snow, of the Salt Lake Temple, to the president of the Stake, were read, stating that until further notice members of this Stake will be admitted to the Temple without previous arrangement of days, also that those who are unable to make cash contributions to the Temple may present produce at the Bishop's Store House, and hand in receipt therefor as donation to the Temple. It was also stated that the poor should not hesitate to come forward and perform work in the Temple for their dead, though their means for purposes of donation may be limited.

Bishops of wards and clerks of Elders quorums and other Stake organizations are requested to see that their reports for the six months ending January 31st 1894, are forthcoming at the February Priesthood meeting.

Adjourned until the first Saturday in February.

THE EUROPEAN MISSION.

[Millennial Star, Dec. 25.]

Arrivals.—The following missionaries arrived from Utah per Cunard Line Steamer Lucania, Friday evening, December 15, 1893: Albert Edward Jarman, of Salt Lake City, Utah, Jobe Hill, of Clarkston, Utah, and Thorgrim Bjarnason, of Spanish Fork, Utah, all for the British mission. The last named Elder will take up his labors in Iceland. The Elders experienced quite a rough voyage. Considerable sickness prevailed among the passengers and three deaths occurred.

Appointments.—Elder Albert E. Jarman has been appointed to labor as traveling elder in the London conference.

Elder Jobe Hill has been appointed to labor as traveling elder in the Irish conference.

Elder Thorgrim Bjarnason has been appointed to labor in Iceland, which island has been detached from the Scandinavian mission and added to the British mission.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Written for this Paper.

ORATORY.

The following address was delivered before a recent meeting of the Monday Night Club, by Frank B. Stephens, Esq.:

I have been asked by your committee to read a paper upon the influence of oratory in the nineteenth century. I shall confine myself to its influence in the United States, as that affords a field far too broad to be covered in the limits allotted to this paper.

Emerson says, "Eloquence is the power to translate a truth into language perfectly intelligible to those to whom you speak." A French philosopher says of eloquence, "That the prodigies which it often works in the hands of a single man upon an entire nation, are, perhaps, the most shining testimony of the superiority of one man over another." Emerson also expresses a similar opinion when he says that eloquence is the appropriate organ of the highest personal energy, and in his essay on eloquence he says that "Courage is an indispensable attribute of the orator. There is no true orator who is not a hero. His attitude on the platform requires that he counterbalance his auditory. He is a challenger, and must answer all comers. The orator must ever stand with forward foot, in the attitude of advancing. His speech must be just ahead of the assembly, ahead of the whole human race, or it is superfluous. His speech is not to be distinguished from action; it is the electricity of action. It is action as the general's word of command or chart of battle is action."

The definition of eloquence familiar to every school boy given by Daniel Webster in his oration upon Jefferson and Adams, probably expresses more completely than any other that has ever been given, the attributes of the orator, but is too familiar to need question here.

Matthews says that "Oratory, like satire, is fed by the misfortunes of society. Its element is the whirlwind and the storm, when society is upheaved to its foundation, when the moral and political darkness is thickest, it shines forth with the greatest splendor. As the science of medicine would be useless among a people free from disease, so if there were a Utopia in the world free from crimes and disturbances, there would be no demand for oratory."

Athenian oratory was at its height when the Athenian empire was at its lowest point of degradation. Not at the time when Greece was achieving her glorious victories, but when she was ruled by foreign despot, did Demosthenes herald the dawn of an eloquence never since surpassed. It was when the Roman people were under a terrible oppression that Brutus, waving the bloody knife of Lucretia, burst forth into the terrible denunciations that aroused the populace to drive the Tarquins from Rome, and establish the republic. It was a father's cries and prayers for vengeance, as he rushed from the dead body of Virginia, appealing to his countrymen, that aroused the legions of the Tusculan camp to seize upon the sacred mount, and achieve another freedom.

So it was when the spirits of the colonists were galled by the unjust laws of George III, that Patrick Henry gave utterance to that speech never to be forgotten in the history of our country which so influenced his hearers, that they rushed forth from the hall re-echoing his cry of "To arms, to arms!"

So it was again, in 1830, when Calhoun and Hayne were stabbing at the very life of the nation with their speeches of nullification and secession, that Webster delivered his memorable effort in the senate of the United States, in reply to Hayne, universally conceded by dispassionate historians as having a greater effect than any other upon the destiny of this nation. When dire necessity arises, Providence furnishes the remedy to meet it.

It is, however, believed by many, that oratory as a force in the destiny of nations, or to influence the actions of men for the time being, is a thing of the past. It is believed by many that in the pulpit, on the platform, before the court, or in legislative halls, oratory has lost its power to thrill the audience, sway the jury, or influence the passage of legislative enactments. To a great extent, this is no doubt true. The present generation is eminently a commercial one. The people of today are devoting their energies to money-getting. Most men now would rather be an Edison with a million than a Webster in debt.

In this latter part of the nineteenth century, the patentee of a quick-selling invention stands a better chance to win success, measured by our standard, than does the student who stores his mind with the grandest utterances of the greatest speakers, and seeks to inspire his fellow-men with patriotic fervor. Shrewd manipulation gains the point—seeing the right man at the right time; keen foresight and shrewd tact is making arrangements with the leaders of various factions—does more towards getting the bill through Congress or the legislature, than any impassioned utterance of the political orator. The question now is, how will the bill, if passed, affect our pockets, or the votes of our constituents? not, how will it affect our liberties or what moral effect will it have?

Eloquence addressed to minds and hearts glowing with patriotic or religious enthusiasm is sublime; eloquence addressed to the pocket-book is ridiculous.

Following the civil war and reconstruction of the southern states, came a long era of commercial prosperity, which, with the exception of occasional depressions like the present, is likely to continue for years to come. Facts and figures now occupy the attention of those who must work; and those who are so rich that they are not compelled to work, are either in pursuit of pleasure or devoted to the arts and belles lettres.

But do not misunderstand me. I do not mean to say that in this last quarter of the century public speakers have no influence. They have; but it is the brief business-like speech, teeming with facts, and not the winged thunderbolt of rhetorical metaphor, hurled by the impassioned orator, that carries the point.

The people of today are so generally well informed upon all current questions, and take such pride in making up their own minds, that they are not easily swayed by the magnetic speeches of men who, had they lived in the time of Wirt, Clay and Calhoun, would unquestionably have risen to the occasion and ranked with them. Up to very recently, party spirit has steeled the minds of voters against the influence of the speaker. The issues arising out of the slavery question, and the war of the Rebellion, intensified party spirit to a degree never before known. Since 1860 it has been impossible for a Republican to believe that any good can come out of the Nazareth of Democracy, and it is still very hard for a Democrat to vote for a Republican. This party spirit and fear of the party lash, in the speaker himself, has been potent against his power as an orator. The orator, if he would influence men, must be bold, manly and fearless. He must strike for what, in his heart of hearts, he believes to be right, let the blows fall where they will, or his utterances will be a sham. The fear of how his speech may be taken by the church members in one part of his district, or the whisky men in another part, cripples the influence of men who otherwise might speak in tones of thunder and with the effect of lightning.

There is another reason why at the present time men do not become more famous as orators. We unquestionably have men of great oratorical power, but the great commercial enterprises of the day, the great corporations, seize upon these men as soon as they show what is in them, and no man can become a splendid orator in the service of enterprises and corporations that too often compel him to take the side against the rights of the people.

John M. Thurston, general solicitor of the Union Pacific railway, will probably end his days in its service, without leaving a lasting impression behind him as a public speaker, but I think he is, without exception, the most eloquent man I have ever listened to.

Robert G. Ingersoll, in his nomination of James G. Blaine, where he described him as "The plumed knight," carried the convention by storm. In the days of Burke, Chatham and Sheridan he would, I believe, have outranked any of them as an orator. Had it not been for his unfortunate attacks upon the Bible and Christianity, at a time when infidelity fed him with flattery, he would undoubtedly be the greatest American orator of today. In personal magnetism and in the power to express beautiful sentiments in the most touching language, he has on equal. There are many other men in the United States who possess the natural qualifications of great orators and should there be a national crisis would no doubt become famous, but whose names for reasons before stated are not likely to pass into history as those of great speakers.

Let us, however, turn back to the second quarter of the nineteenth century, when historians concede that oratorical power was potent in our destiny, and a study of its influence at this time and of the conditions that rendered it possible may give us another answer to the question of why it is not more effective today. In the history of the United States there have been two periods in which the power of oratory was supremely felt; from 1760 to 1785, or during the time of the securing of the independence by the American colonies; and from 1825 or 1830 to 1860, when the questions of nullification, states rights and slavery were before the people. It is of the later period that I shall particularly speak; but in order to understand the later, we must refer to the earlier.

The conditions in the last half of the eighteenth and the first half of the nineteenth centuries were peculiarly favorable to oratorical influence. We were then a homogeneous people; we were alike in impulse, language and education. A great majority of us were English-speaking Americans. The nations of continental Europe had not yet poured their millions upon us, who neither understand our language nor appreciate our institutions. We were a people dominated by strong moral convictions. The strong moral energy of the Pilgrims and other colonists who came to the New World to seek political and religious liberty was still potent among us.

The latter part of the eighteenth century had been richly fruited with enlarged civil and religious liberty. Mirabeau in France, Curran, Erskine, Chatham, Burke and Fox, in England; Patrick Henry, Adams, Jefferson and Hamilton, in America, had in the latter part of the eighteenth century given utterance to sentiments of liberty and patriotism that were declined by every school boy in the first half of the nineteenth. It was not then in bad form to show a little enthusiasm for our native land. The American flag was always hailed with a cheer. The Fourth of July was a great day. It was not then the fashion to be English. The men who now turn up their "trousers" because it rains in London, would then have been tarred and feathered. In the schools, patriotic speeches were learned by heart. There were not as many books in the homes, but the quality averaged better. A copy of Milton was in almost every farm-house. The light literature was not there, consequently no temptation to read it to the exclusion of the other. In the schools every Friday afternoon was given up to rhetorical culture. Choice extracts from ancient and modern classics were memorized and made a part of the very fiber of the young student's nature. A contempt for the classics and a craze for a smattering of the sciences had not yet entered our colleges. Daniel Webster never spent a day dissecting the tail of a tadpole, and he probably did not know the difference between a gasteropod and a cephalopod, except that his knowledge of Latin and Greek would tell him at once that the one has its feet upon its stomach, and the other on its head.

The great orators of this and the last century were educated mainly in mathematics and classics, and more classics than mathematics. Pitt, from his earliest boyhood, had his powers of speech and expression trained by reciting daily choice passages from the best English authors, by rendering aloud passages of Greek and Roman orations in choice English. He familiarized himself thoroughly with Milton and Shakespeare, and learned page after page by heart. The same was true of Fox, Curran, Erskine and Burke. Burke had Cicero's orations at his tongue's end, and Webster read and re-read the Greek, Roman and English classics, until they were a part of his very being, and his own thoughts took wing upon those vehicles of expression that will never cease to excite the wonder and admiration of those who study them.

Take a homogeneous people speaking the same language, all imbued with the spirit of patriotism, generally familiar with the speeches of great champions of liberty, ancient and modern, most of whom had heard from the lips of revolutionary patriots the story of Lexington, Bunker Hill and Valley Forge, let such an audience be addressed by a man of great moral and intellectual force, able to clothe his thoughts in choice language, and at the same time perfectly intelligible to his hearers, on an occasion when the liberties of the people and the safety of the nation is threatened, and you have conditions highly favorable to the effective influence of oratory. Such were the conditions in the second quarter of the nineteenth century. The influence of the orator was not greatly felt in the first quarter. There were many heated discussions in Congress and upon the stump; but after the war of 1812, the questions were less of principle than of expediency. It was not until 1829, when treason and disunion appeared in the nullification sentiments of South Carolina, that the occasion was presented for great oratorical effort. In this period, Daniel Webster towers above his fellows like an oak above the underbrush.

Matthews says, "Doubtless Calhoun had a more acute and metaphysical mind; Clay had a more electric and magnetic nature, and showed a far keener sagacity in divining public sentiment, and in sweeping the strings of popular feeling, but in sheer intellectual might, in that comprehensiveness of vision which sees all sides of a subject, and judges it in all its relations, in that largeness and weight of utterance which gives the greatest impressiveness to everything one says, and in hard logic which links conclusion to conclusion like a chain of iron, neither Clay nor Calhoun, nor any other American was ever equal to Webster! On small subjects he was dull. As Grattan said of Flood, Put a distaff in his hand, and like Hercules he makes sad work of it; but give him a thunder bolt, and he has the arm of Jove."

It was, says the same writer, "On momentous occasions, when great public interests were at stake, that the full might of his intellect was visible. When feeble men, awed by the darkness of the political sky, fled for shelter from the tempest, he rushed forth exultingly to the elemental war, with all his faculties stimulated to their utmost. When the thunders of nullification muttered in the distance, he coolly watched the coming storm, and when it burst, he bared his head to the bolts, like the mammoth of tradition, shaking them off as they fell."

When Hayne concluded his speech, it was feared by the friends of the Constitution that he could not be answered; but Webster thoroughly and completely vanquished him. His speech was so widely read, and carried such conviction, and the entire North became so indoctrinated with his views of the structure of our government, that when his bones lay mouldering at Marshfield, the North was ready to fight to a man against the heresy of secession.

I believe that every school-boy today should read and re-read and commit to memory the peroration of his speech in reply to Hayne, beginning:

"When my eyes shall be turned to behold, for the last time, the sun in heaven, may I not see him shining on the broken and dishonored fragments of a once glorious Union; on states severed, discordant, belligerent! on a land rent with civil feuds, or drenched, it may be, in fraternal blood! Let their last feeble and lingering glance rather behold the gorgeous ensign of the Republic, now known and honored throughout the earth, still full high advanced, its arms and trophies streaming in their original luster, not a stripe erased or polluted, not a single star obscured, bearing for its motto no such miserable interrogatory as 'What is all this worth?' Nor those other words of delusion and folly, 'Liberty first, and Union afterwards;' but everywhere, spread all over in characters of living light, blazing on all its ample folds, as they float over the sea and over the land, and in every wind under the whole heavens, that other sentiment, dear to every American heart, liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable."

Parker gives the period from 1830 to 1860 as the golden age of American oratory, and certain it is that all of the conditions most favorable to oratorical influence were present. Eloquence existed "in the subject, in the man and in the occasion." Since the Declaration of Independence and the adoption of the Constitution, no such critical period had been known.

An influence similar to that wielded by Webster in the North, was exercised by Calhoun and Hayne in the South. As Webster stemmed the tide of nullification flowing toward the North, and united the entire North in the support of the Constitution, so Calhoun filled the entire South with the spirit of secession and opposition to the Constitution.

During the period from 1830 until 1845, Webster was the reliance of the entire North in the support of the Constitution; and his power was undiminished until the slavery question became all important, and the odious compromise act of 1850 was passed. I wish the historian might have recorded that Webster took the same exalted stand upon the slavery question that he did in the defense of the Constitution. Had he done so, the world could not endure long enough to dim the lustre of his fame. An opportunity so grand the world had never seen; four million slaves in a nation whose boast was the liberty of its people! the slave power greedily extending its bounds until the whole North was threatened! Then, indeed, was the time when the matchless orator might have taken a stand that would truly have made his name immortal. But he favored the compromise act of 1850. As Secretary of State he took unnecessary ground in favor of slavery, and though James Russell Lowell says that at the meeting in Faneuil Hall in 1850, those who came as accusers remained his captives, the fact remains that he ceased to be the idol of the North. It was left for men of less intellectual power but with greater moral courage to combat the extension of slavery and champion the cause of freedom.

William Lloyd Garrison began the fight when to speak of the abolition of slavery was to be dragged from a Boston church by Boston citizens, who tried to hang him for uttering the sentiment. We can now hardly appreciate the splendid manhood of such men as John Quincy Adams, who presented petition after petition in the House of Representatives for the abolition of slavery, when his only reward was threatened expulsion. William Lloyd Garrison, John Quincy Adams, Wendell Phillips, Henry Ward Beecher, Theodore Parker, Joshua R. Giddings and many others whom I can not recall—with them culminated this period of American oratory of which I have spoken. They rose to Emerson's definition of an orator; they stood with forward foot in advance of their auditory, challenging all comers. They dared to lift their voices when to do so was to be scoffed at and spit upon by the very ones whose commendations would have been most dear to them.

It was at this time that pulpit oratory reached its zenith. The ministers were among the first to come to their senses on the slavery question, and from brave old Peter Cartwright in Illinois to Theodore Parker in Boston and Beecher in Brooklyn, Methodist, Unitarian, Congregational and all, from the pulpits all over the land, freedom's orators pleaded for the removal of the stain upon our national honor for which every true American yet blushes.

Abraham Lincoln, while not a brilliant orator, yet possessed such power as a public speaker that between 1850 and 1860 he probably exercised more influence upon the voters of the North than any other one man, and, his biographers claim, more than all other men together. His Cooper Institute speech was a revelation to the United States of his power as a public speaker. Lincoln was not a magnetic speaker, but he possessed the power to convince men by sheer force of logic. His style of oratory was perfectly suited to the popular mind of the time in which he spoke. The people of the North, during the few years immediately preceding the war of the rebellion, were not in a mood to be carried away by oratorical platitudes. They thought intensely upon the questions of the day, and what they wanted was not a magnetic speaker, but one who could aid their own reason in arriving at the right conclusion. Lincoln was a thorough master of the fundamental principles underlying the constitution of the United States, and of the principles of human rights. The closing paragraph of his first inaugural shows the tenderness and pathos of which his great heart was capable. His is a character which should be studied by every American youth. He was the ideal statesman of the last half of the nineteenth century. No other American, no other human being could have taken his place. Webster, although by far a more powerful speaker and greater master of language, and in some respects, of far greater intellect, had not that greatness of soul which made Lincoln almost godlike; taking the whole country, rebels and all, into his embrace, and doing fearlessly, impartially and sympathetically, exact justice to all.

With the freedom of the slave and the death of Lincoln, this period of oratory passed away. Great-hearted Abraham Lincoln, emancipator of millions, the golden age of American oratory went out with his life. It came in the muttering thunder of assaults upon the Constitution; it culminated in the tempest of anti-slavery agitation and disunion; it passed away midst the sobbing of broken-hearted mothers of soldiers dead, with a mournful requiem for the martyred President slain. Let me end with the closing words of his first inaugural:

"In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the government, while I shall have a most solemn one to preserve, protect and defend it.

"We are not enemies, but friends; we must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battle-field and patriot grave, to every loving heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

CHURCH THEOLOGY CLASS.

Instructor James E. Talmage called the assembly to order promptly at 12:30 p.m. Prayer was offered by Elder R. K. Thomas. After the consideration of an incidental question, the review of the previous lesson was taken up and the subject of baptism finished. The class was recommended to read up and study more on every subject connected with the Articles of Faith, as only those topics more directly bearing upon the doctrines mentioned, could be discussed in the regular course of these lectures. Passing on, the last part of the Fourth Article of Faith received attention.

We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are: (4) Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. The promise was made by all the true servants of God who taught water-baptism, that the Holy Ghost should follow. John the Baptist proclaimed: "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance but he that cometh after me, is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Baptism of water and of the Spirit were always associated by Christ and his teachings among men. He said it was necessary that he should go to the Father, that the "Comforter" might be sent and they should remain in Jerusalem until that promise was fulfilled. And when on the day of Pentecost, there "came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind," while "there appeared cloven tongues like as of fire" they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and the multitude asked: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" On condition of their repenting and being baptized, Peter said, they should receive the Holy Ghost. Book of Mormon prophets and apostles promised the same gift, Alma stating that baptism by water alone was incomplete.

The Lord speaking through Joseph Smith in our day makes the same assurance: "Therefore, as I said unto mine Apostles I say unto you again, that every soul who believeth on your words, and is baptized by water for the remission of sins, shall receive the Holy Ghost."

The lecturer next considered the personality and office of the Holy Ghost. In the Doctrine and Covenants he, the Holy Ghost, is described as a personage of spirit, possessing personal attributes.

What the spirit is, we all cannot at present fully understand. It is a characteristic of the weakness of the human intellect that things heavenly can only be made known to us by comparisons. Through His attributes we may form a conception as far as necessary for our study. The Holy scriptures inform us that He is the great teacher that came after the other great teacher had left; further that He testifies, reproves, speaks, commands, intercedes, searches, is grieved, and knoweth all things. Nephi, as recorded, spoke to him as one man speaks to another. To understand that by which the delicate fibers of our conscious organism are affected something higher than human reason is required. Of nature's many phenomena around us but few are understood by men; yet to make comparisons with even those inexplicable, we would only belittle the wonderful manifestations of that mighty Spirit.

In considering those who are the recipients of the Holy Ghost it may be stated that all men have some measure given unto them, since it is the Spirit of life, of truth in art, science and history. Yet the special gift referred to consists in the right to a continually increasing portion of that spirit, the authoritative claim, which shall ever remain with the faithful. Its bestowal is to follow the acceptable baptism in water. Man's tabernacle may thus become a temple of the Holy Ghost, to be enlightened, purified and sanctified—and we are correctly warned against defiling the place inhabited by such a spirit.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Joseph E. Taylor.

FATHER WILLIAM PROBERT.

A correspondent writing from Holden, Millard county, under date of Jan. 3, says: Father William Probert died here suddenly this morning. He got out of bed and made a fire at three o'clock a.m., and at five was lifeless. He and his wife have had a bad cough and got up to warm themselves to see if it would not stop their coughing. They then went back to bed. At five this morning Sister Probert called for her husband to again make a fire. He did not answer so she put her hand on him and found he was cold. He had been dead perhaps an hour. There was no one but the aged couple in the house and Sister Probert had to dress herself and go one block to Brother John Crawling to whom she conveyed the sorrowful news. Brother Probert was a native of Herefordshire, England, where he was born on November 3, 1818. He joined the Church in 1848.

Durango, Colo., papers warn miners and prospectors not to come to the La Plata gold fields before spring.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Soon after the organization of the two houses of the Legislature at their first session on Monday the 8th, Governor West's message was read before a joint session of both houses. The message was read by the chief executive himself. It was received with applause and two thousand copies of the same were ordered printed for distribution. The full text of the document is as follows:

Gentlemen—As citizens of Utah I congratulate you and myself that it is more than probable in welcoming you, which I heartily do, that it is my pleasure to greet our last Territorial Legislative Assembly.

The early passage of the enabling act for the admission of the Territory into the Union, which now seems assured, will require the assembling of a convention which will formulate the fundamental principles that shall control the new State, and the meeting of a new Legislature that will follow, to readjust our laws to meet the changed conditions, admonish us of the propriety of confining present legislation to matters of urgent necessity, and the taking of preliminary steps only in the inauguration of new subjects of importance, which will require time for their completion.

Believing in the wisdom of such a course, I have endeavored to so confine my recommendations.

UNIVERSITY AND AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

The question of the advisability of consolidating and making one institution of the University of Utah and the Agricultural College, has been the subject of much recent interesting discussion. The present site and ground for the University are considered unsuitable and insufficient, and a bill looking to obtaining a more suitable location on the Fort Douglas Military Reservation was introduced in the last Congress and reintroduced in the present Congress. It is expected that favorable action will be taken when the bill is reached. The pending statehood bill provides for the donation of public lands to the University and to the College. Both institutions have been established by and fostered and nurtured by liberal appropriations from the Territory and each is in successful operation. In view of the existing situation and the grave importance of the question, I would respectfully suggest the wisdom at this time of making only necessary appropriations for the successful carrying on of the respective institutions under present conditions, thus affording ample time for a complete investigation, and thorough discussion of the question of consolidation.

COMMISSION ON IRRIGATION.

In my message to the Legislative Assembly six years ago I submitted the following:

"The great value of water to our people, and the prosperity to flow from a complete utilization of our supply, is readily recognized by all. I recommend the appointment of a commission of three persons, one of whom at least shall be required to be a competent civil engineer, skilled in his science; the commission to be charged with the duty of making a full and exhaustive investigation of the question, and required to report to the next Legislative Assembly the result of its labors, with such suggestions as it may be enabled to make, for the inauguration of a comprehensive and thorough system of irrigation for the use of our reclaimed lands and the reclamation of other lands. Necessary appropriations for this purpose I recommend.

Time, and the agitation of, and the increased interest in the question of irrigation, has confirmed me in the view that much good would come from the action of such a commission, and I respectfully ask your favorable consideration.

CAPITOL BUILDING.

Being advised of the request of the Capitol commission (its report will follow later) for an appropriation of $125,000 to begin the construction of the Capitol by building a wing, which will furnish necessary offices for the present, in my opinion it should be granted.

It would be judicious economy to make the saving that would result from doing so. The rents that would have to be paid to secure necessary and suitable accommodations for the different branches and offices of the government, would be much more than the interest upon the investment. The building would provide more appropriate and better quarters in which the business of the people could be transacted than could possibly be obtained elsewhere. A permanent building for the purpose must sooner or later be erected, and the advantages to accrue to our material men and laborers to prosecute the work are obvious.

MONUMENT TO BRIGHAM YOUNG.

A Memorial association has been inaugurated by a number of our citizens to erect a suitable monument in honor of Brigham Young. They have contracted with a Utah artist who has furnished the design for, and has it part completed a great work. It would seem that no more fitting and appropriate site could be selected for the erection of such a memorial to Governor Young than the Capitol grounds of the Territory of which he was the first Governor and of the state of which he was the pioneer statesman and founder.

I recommend that you take such steps as you may deem advisable to obtain the desired end.

A MILITIA RECOMMENDED.

A properly organized militia is almost a necessity of a well ordered, free commonwealth. Our young men, for several years with commendable patriotic manliness, have been ready and willing to assume the duties and responsibilities of service and have only awaited the direction and authority of the law makers to give us a military establishment which will be the pride of the inter-mountain country. Of the appropriations made by the general government in aid of the State and Territorial militia, $75,057.05 had been allotted to this Territory up to June 30, 1889, and none since that time. In view of our early admission as a state into the Union, let us by prompt enactment of a law enable our people to avail themselves of their desires and opportunities to establish a military force and thus, as in all other respects, show that our Territory is well prepared and fitted for admission into the Union of States.

EIGHT HOURS A DAY'S WORK.

Entertaining a firm conviction that the happiness of mankind would be greatly contributed to by lessening the hours of labor, I earnestly recommend in the interest of this great reform, an act providing that eight hours shall constitute a day's work on all public works.

AMEND AND REVISE THE LIEN LAW.

Our mechanics' lien law is imperfect and needs revising and amending. I commend to your wisdom the preparation and enactment of a wise and just measure that will fully protect the material men and laborers.

TERRITORIAL WARRANTS SHOULD BE KEPT AT PAR.

For years the managers of public institutions of the Territory have been compelled, in order to sustain them, to borrow money at a high rate of interest and without authority of law to do so.

The holders of Territorial warrants have been compelled often to submit to heavy discounts to realize on them. Such a grievous and shameful condition should be promptly remedied, and no longer tolerated. There is no reasonable excuse why all the debtors of this rich and prosperous Territory should not be promptly and fully paid, and its warrants be at all times as good as coin.

REPORTS OF PUBLIC OFFICERS AND INSTITUTIONS.

The following reports made to the Governor I lay before you:

The Auditor of Public Accounts, the Treasurer, the Librarian, the Sealer of Weights and Measures, the President and Directors of the Desert Agricultural and Manufacturing Society.

In due time you will receive reports from the Regents of the University of Utah, the Trustees of the Agricultural College, Directors of the Insane Asylum and Trustees of the Reform School, informing you of the progress, condition and the needs of the respective institutions.

DELAYED LEGISLATION.

I earnestly request that the Assembly may so dispose of business before it that ample time for investigation and deliberation on all measures sent them may be given to the Governor. It is too often the case that the most important legislation is crowded into the last days of the session and must be hastily and inconsiderately disposed of.

Animated, as I do not doubt we all are, with the great purpose of serving the people well, I invoke God's blessing upon your labors, that they may redound to His glory and the people's good.

CALEB W. WEST.
Executive Mansion, Salt Lake City, Utah, January 8, 1894.

Durango, Colo., people are pleased to hear that Otto Mears, the "pathfinder" and roadbuilder, has accepted the position of manager of the Standard Smelting and Refining company at Durango.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 2.—The British ship Volga, with 840 Chinese laborers on board, from Calcutta to Demerara and Philadelphia, was lost off Windward islands December 10th, says a report received here today. It is believed several of the Chinese were drowned. The Volga had on board 1050 tons of rice, besides a quantity of other stores, but that was all lost.

DENVER, Jan. 2.—One of the evil effects of Governor Waite calling an extra session of the legislature was made apparent today. The banking house of White & Co., New York, had contracted to take $400,000 worth of the public improvement bonds of this city. They today wired, withdrawing all negotiations until after it is determined what the legislature will do.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—A Herald special from Managua, Jan. 2, says the war between Nicaragua and Honduras has begun in good earnest. Already Policarpo Bonilla, leader of the Honduran insurgents, has invaded Honduras from the Nicaragua lines, captured the town of Yugaran, set up a provisional government in the town and President Zellaya, of Nicaragua, has been recognized as authority. The provisional government was set up in the town of Corpus on Dec. 30, the day on which that place was captured by Bonilla, after five hours' siege. President Vazquez's losses in the engagement were twenty-three killed and five wounded. The invaders had two killed and several wounded.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The Polish newspapers publish accounts of a recent attempt to poison the czar of Russia at a banquet. The fish course was only half consumed and the czar ordered the remainder sent to an orphan asylum. Later, the czar, the orphans and all who partook of the fish were taken sick, and an investigation showed that the fish had been poisoned.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Jan. 2.—A large crowd of unemployed men, accompanied by women, many carrying children in their arms, marched to the city hall this morning demanding work from the city. When informed that there was no work, they made many threats. One leader said: "We will have work or tear down the city hall. Our families are suffering. We must have employment or bread." The police dispersed them.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 3.—A cut in granulated sugar, placing it nominally at 4 cents a pound but really at 3.74 cents to favored rebate dealers, the lowest price on record, has been made by the sugar trust. The object of the reduction is to influence Congress. There are, however, several other causes. The general trade depression which has limited buying is an important factor. Another element is the increase in the Cuban crop, which for the present season is estimated at 1,006,000 tons against 840,000 tons last year.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The Ostend boat was unable to land passengers owing to the severity of the weather. Terrible weather with much snow is reported in all parts of England. Severe weather prevails throughout Germany.

The drifting of ice in the Rhine has interrupted navigation on the river.

A severe storm is reported to have done much damage in the Baltic ports, and several disasters to the shipping are anticipated. Full details of the storm have not yet been obtained, but there is no doubt that much damage is done.

In France and Germany the sea coast is being made the scene of the greatest damage.

EVANSTON, Wyo., Jan. 3.—Webster & Moran of this place have patented a machine for clearing the ground of sage brush. The machine is made with a large revolving cylinder filled with teeth which will pull the brush up by the roots.

JACKSONVILLE, Jan. 3.—Unless something of an unexpected nature turns up, the Corbett-Mitchell battle will surely take place. If found impossible to pull the fight off in this city, a secret battle ground will be selected within the limits of Duval or St. John's county, and the contest will go on as if nothing had happened.

FORT MONROE, Va., Jan. 3.—The marriage of Senator Faulkner and Miss Whiting took place at 5 o'clock this afternoon in the old St. John's church, Hampton, to the music of the bridal march from Lohengrin, sung by eight young lady friends of the bride, with organ and orchestra accompanying. The senator and his bride left for the South tonight.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The secretary of state and the British ambassador are pursuing negotiations for an agreement upon regulations to police the Bering sea. It is important that these regulations be agreed upon before the opening of the sealing season.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 3.—In the United States court of Frankfort Judge Barr appointed J. W. Buchanan receiver of the Southern Land Improvement company. The failure seems to be an unusually bad one. There were not sufficient realizable assets to pay the commission of the assignee.

MADRID, Jan. 3.—Telegrams from Barcelona say ten arrested anarchist leaders were handed over by the civil authorities to the military authorities, owing to the fact that the latter have declared that the prisoners were accomplices of Pallas in the attempt upon the life of General Compo, and must consequently be tried by martial law. The anarchists were terror-stricken when handed over to the officers, as they expected they were being led out for immediate execution.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—Extremely cold weather prevails here and on the continent.

The gale on the English Channel is so severe that the mail boats are unable to cross.

TOLEDO, Jan. 4.—Careful estimate of the losses by last night's fire foot up to three-quarters of a million dollars. It was by far the greatest fire Toledo has ever suffered. The wind carried burning brands half a mile to the northeast, and only the vigilance of the house owners who watched their premises and extinguished incipient blazes, prevented a general conflagration.

TOPEKA, Jan. 4.—Mrs. Lease has filed quo warranto proceedings in the supreme court against M. Freeborn, appointed by Governor Lewellyn as her successor on the state board of charities.

DENVER, Jan. 4.—Twenty-five members of the lower house, called to meet in extra session next Wednesday, held a caucus and decided that on account of the many subjects of local importance, such as state reservoir, irrigating ditches, etc., which would give work to the unemployed, it would be best not to adjourn at once, as suggested.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The pension office has decided in view of the act of Congress of Dec. 21st, 1893, it no longer has the right to withhold the pension of Judge Long, of Michigan, and has directed that he be again placed on the pension rolls.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., Jan. 4.—Caroline Sankey, formerly a pauper in Lyecoming county, but now an accomplished belle, is living at 1120 Twenty-first street, San Francisco, with the family of Charles Scoggins. She has just been declared heiress to a fortune of $100,000.

Samuel Sankey was a pioneer of 1849. He had a boy, who was drowned while swimming in Mission creek. The father saw a little orphan niece, adopted her and took her to his lonely home.

Sankey died possessed of $12,000 in money and Chicago real estate worth $10,000, besides a tannery in Mifflinburg said to be worth $50,000, and notes and judgments for over $9,000. Before his death Caroline had found a friend in Charles S. Scoggins of San Francisco, and when Sankey's death came Scoggins was appointed her guardian and applied to Judge Coffey for letters of administration on her adopted father's estate. This application was combated by John Sankey, on behalf of Pennsylvania relatives. Thus began a long legal struggle which has just ended.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 4.—The existence of a new secret national labor organization was discovered here this afternoon through a secret meeting of the national committee. The order was secretly founded in Chicago, Dec. 27th, by representatives from thirty-seven states, and is called the Ancient Order of Loyal Americans.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 4.—Isaac T. Van Duser, a prominent railroad contractor and builder, died, aged 77. In 1841 he built the first railway in the United States at New York, and shortly after built the Hudson River Railroad from Poughkeepsie to New York City.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The severe cold continues throughout Great Britain. The temperature in many places is the lowest known. Though the thermometer registers five to ten degrees above zero, the suffering is as great as when it is twenty below in the United States. People are entirely unprepared for it and the suffering among the poor is intense. There have been many deaths from exposure. Outdoor work is entirely suspended.

The gale in the channel has somewhat abated and the mail boats have resumed their trips. Tidal streams are frozen solid, and a heavy snowstorm prevails.

Reports from Spain say that most in tense cold prevails there. At Zorita the temperature is ten degrees above; at Burgos several people are frozen to death. Snow is still falling and the cold is increasing.

The same conditions prevail in Russia. At Moscow the temperature is 26 below zero; at Nijoi-Novgorod, 34 below; at Kharkoff, 28 below.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—There was a good attendance at the Democratic caucus last night. Holman presided. It is estimated that 147 out of the total of 216 House Democrats were present.

Wheeler made a vigorous speech against putting coal and iron on the free list.

Speaker Crisp followed. He offered a resolution declaring it the duty of every Democrat to vote for consideration of the tariff bill, and also the duty of all Democrats to attend the sessions of the House and maintain a quorum until the tariff bill is disposed of.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—[Special].—The Republicans, aided by a score of disaffected Democrats, close the week with a continuation of their obstructive tactics. The call of the House developed 270 present. On motion to adopt the report of the committee on rules requiring the consideration of the tariff bill, 169 Democrats answered the roll call. To make a quorum 179 are necessary. The incessant repetition of roll call looks like child's play, while the crowded galleries wait day after day for the opening of the tariff debate. Doubtless Monday will enable the Democrats to get a quorum and overcome the obstacles. The tariff bill will probably pass during January. The income tax will be the great bone of contention. C. R.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 6.—Captain Munger's report to the treasury department of the arrival of the revenue cutter Corwin at San Francisco, stated that the vessel sailed from Honolulu on December 24th, but gave nothing else of interest. This is two days later than the Associated Press report from Auckland.

The incredulity expressed by the state department yesterday concerning the exclusive Associated Press news from Auckland has been changed by the receipt of a cipher dispatch brought by the cutter Corwin, which fully confirmed the Associated Press news. It seems the queen reconsidered her objections to the conditions exacted by this government and that Minister Willis has proceeded on the line of his original instructions, notifying the provisional government that they are expected to retire and allow the restoration of the queen.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 7.—A sensational murder occurred here this afternoon. Harry G. Poole, a young man well known about town and of a well-to-do family, was shot and almost instantly killed by Mrs. Shattuck, the aged mother of Estrulla Shattuck, a young and pretty chorus girl of the Tivoli Opera house, who severed her connection with the Tivoli company last night and was to have left the city tomorrow with Henderson's Sinbad company.

Young Poole was summoned to Miss Shattuck's home, on Stevenson street, this morning, where the girl's mother met him, and demanded that he marry Miss Shattuck at once. Poole refused and Mrs. Shattuck put a pistol to his temple and shot him dead.

The woman was arrested for murder, and is now a raving maniac at the city prison. The girl is also in hysterics and unable to talk.

NOGALES, Ariz., Jan. 7.—It is stated that the Aztec Indians intend to join the Yaquis in their fight against the Mexican government. Prisoners captured by Tecopa have said they are Aztecs, but this is not believed. As a general thing the Aztecs are far above the average, in point of culture, of any citizen of Sonora. The most of them speak and write English as well as Spanish. They say they school their children in their houses, independent of the Mexican government. An impression has long existed that the Aztecs are in sympathy with the Yaquis, but, strange to say, none have ever been found in the soldiery.

DALLAS, Tex., Jan. 6.—A New's Fort, Hancock, Texas, special: Last Monday, J. H. Bond, of the Corrites ranch, Chihuahua, in company with Luis Acosta and four assistants, left there for Rancho Borrero, forty miles below, to gather stock. After completing their work they started back, and when ten miles from the ranch were surrounded by a band of twenty-five Mexican revolutionists, under command of General Ochoa, and relieved of six mules, fifteen horses, eleven revolvers, saddles and ammunition, and carried back to the ranch, where all the provisions and everything useful were taken off, including all the laborers who were enlisted.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 7.—A dispatch from Janapy says a special runner from Tatti brings news that Lobengula has arrived on the banks of the Zambezi with 2000 young and well-armed warriors. Small bodies of Matateles are concentrating around Lovats.

ROME, Jan. 7.—A crowd of workmen tonight assembled in the Transvere quarter and marched to the center of Rome, bearing two red flags and shouting, "Live socialism!" "Live Sicilian martyr!" Police on guard at the passage of Garibaldi's bridge ordered the crowd to disperse, but the latter opened fire on the police with revolvers, and during the riot which followed a policeman was stabbed with a dagger. Finally the police succeeded in dispersing the crowd, and in capturing two red flags and two anarchists.

A mob yesterday evening attacked and disarmed a corporal refusing to join in the seditious cries, and afterwards they brutally beat him with cudgels.

A manifesto signed by the socialist deputies has been circulated at Modena. It says the deputies are going to Sicily to force the government to take proper and beneficent measures to restore peace.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 8.—The House proceedings opened with a lively tilt between Boutelle and Reed against the ruling of the Speaker, on the Hawaiian resolution as a question of privilege.

With a vigorous and long continued thumping the Speaker ordered the roll called on the previous question demanded by the committee on rules, on the report of order of business. The roll developed 189 Democrats answering aye, ten more than a quorum. After the discussion Wilson by consent modified the order of business as follows: General debate and night sessions this week; five minutes rule for amendment during two weeks; final vote on the Wilson bill the 29th of January; voting at 8 o'clock; adoption of the report.

The report of the committee on rules was adopted; 185 to 1.

LANDER, Wyo., Jan. 8.—A peculiar kind of lung disease affecting horses is prevalent along Owl creek and vicinity of Embar, in the northern part of Fremont county. The Embar Cattle company recently lost a valuable stallion besides several other animals which have not died but are rendered unfit for further use.

ROME, Jan. 8.—Rev. Father Wiso of the church of St. Lucia and sacristan of that church, arrested on Saturday with the priest's sister and nephew on suspicion of being connected with the revolutionists and subsequently released on the ground that a thousand or more letters found at their residences had been confided to them, they being ignorant of their contents, was rearrested this morning.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 8.—The government thermometer registered this morning twenty-three below, the coldest of the season. Private thermometers run as high as thirty and thirty-five below.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The President has sent the following nominations to the Senate:

Samuel A. Merritt, Utah, chief justice of the Supreme court of Utah. Receiver of Public Money—Frank Harris of Salt Lake City, Utah.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The investigation of the water resources of the United States undertaken by the geological survey has been practically completed. The work was commenced in October, 1889, with the object of determining the quantity of water available for irrigation of arid lands in the West or for the use as water power. Studies have been made of most of the drainage basins west of the 100th meridian as well as several of the "catchments" of the East. Scientists have devoted a large part of the time in examining the run offs of the Missouri, Arkansas, Rio Grande and Snake rivers. "It does not appear probable," said Geologist F. Newell, "that even as high as 10 per cent of the land now owned by the government can ever be irrigated. In fact, there is not sufficient supply of water to bring under cultivation an arid region equal to that which has passed into the hands of individuals and corporations. There are, however, localities where thousands of acres can be profitably irrigated by construction of dams and irrigating canals."

Attorney W. H. Holcomb was publicly horsewhipped on the streets of Los Angeles, Cal., on Friday afternoon, by his divorced wife and a woman named Hylands. Mrs. Hyland a week ago brought disbarment proceedings against Holcomb, alleging that he used his wife as a dummy for other women in divorce cases. Holcomb is a prominent attorney and politician. The affair created the greatest sensation. It is said the women were afraid that Holcomb would attack their characters in court, and planned a public castigation for effect.

Written for this Paper.

CHOCTAW INDIANS.

Having given a brief sketch of the Cherokees in a previous article, I will now give your readers the benefit of the information I obtained concerning the Choctaws during my recent labors among them. After spending a short time at Manard, we went to Briartown, the headquarters for the southern part of the territory, including the Choctaw Nation. There we were kindly received by Brother Seaborn G. Mabry and wife. Brother Mabry is a white man from Georgia, but his wife is part Cherokee, and was the first of her people to embrace the Gospel. She and her husband were baptized by Elder Joseph H. Felt while he was laboring in the Indian Territory with Elder M. W. Dalton in 1884. Since that time their house has been open to the Elders. At first the labors of the Elders were confined to the Cherokee nation, but the field has been constantly spreading into the surrounding nations.

Leaving Briartown we crossed the Canadian river, the dividing line between the nations, and found ourselves among the Choctaws. So far the Elders have not been as successful here as in the Cherokee nation, though some of the Indians have embraced the Gospel and are witnesses to the fact that the signs follow the true believer. Among this number is Sister Louisa Griffith, a half-breed Choctaw nearly seventy years of age, who was restored to health and has since done her own work to the surprise of her former acquaintances. Many others are investigating, and the prejudice is gradually disappearing.

It is a trait of the Indian people to be very cautious, and not to rush into anything hastily, therefore they are very slow about accepting the Gospel. This fact is easily accounted for. So many whites have gone among them for the express purpose of taking advantage of them, that the Indians have lost confidence in the whites, and will not have much to do with them until they become acquainted. There also have been many false reports circulated among them by the whites concerning the Mormon people, and when they once form an opinion it is difficult to change it. Some are very indifferent and do not care to listen to the Gospel, while others seem interested, and desire to learn all they can about their forefathers, as well as the plan of salvation.

As the Indians have kept no history of themselves it is difficult to obtain a correct account of them for many generations back. It is said by some of the principal men among the Choctaws that the four tribes—Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek and Seminole—were at one time united as one tribe called "Muskooges." Others deny this, and as there is no record of it, we cannot prove either claim. But it is almost certain that the Choctaws and Chickasaws were originally the same people, and according to tradition their king died and left twin sons. These two sons both claimed the right to succeed their father, and as neither would relinquish his claim a war was the result. The names of the brothers being Choctaw and Chickasaw, their followers took upon them the name of their respective leaders, separated into two tribes, and have since been known by these names.

The Choctaws at one time occupied what is now Alabama and Georgia, but afterwards removed to Mississippi, where they remained until they were brought west by the government. Prior to the Revolutionary war the kings were appointed by the British, and still farther back the French had the choosing of the crowned head. The next officers to the king were the chiefs, each "iksa" or clan having one principal and subordinate chiefs. Next in rank were the capitalists and warriors, who were dominant over the tillers of the soil, etc. There were six of these "iksas," and they lived apart from each other. They never married outside their own "iksa," as their laws prohibited them from so doing, until 1836, when this law was repealed. The most enlightened of the "iksas" was the Hyah-pah-tuk-kalo. The royal house or house of kings was of this clan, and was called the "Hattak-i-hollatah" (Beloved of the people). None but those of royal blood were permitted to occupy the throne.

Before there were any missionaries among them the Choctaws believed in the Great Spirit, and their customs and habits are evidence that they are of Israelitish origin. Though many of them accepted the Christian religion, they did not relinquish their old customs and superstitions, in the shape of burning or otherwise torturing and killing those accused of witchcraft, until 1834, at which time laws were passed prohibiting such deeds.

After consenting to the allotment of their lands in Mississippi and the adoption of the United States laws, the Choctaw people saw the position in which they were placed, and at once petitioned the government to remove them to a new country, and give them the right of self-government. The treaty of Dancing Rabbit creek was accordingly made, providing for the sale of their lands east of the Mississippi, and the purchase of the tract now occupied by the Choctaws and the Chickasaws. The proceeds of the sale were to have been placed in the United States treasury for a certain length of time, and then were to be paid to the Choctaws with five per cent interest. But the payment was deferred for half a century and then only paid in part. Soon after the treaty was made the people prepared to remove to their new lands, many of the aged as well as the very young sharing in the hardships of the journey. Disease getting among them many died on the way and after arriving at their destination; others became discouraged and returned to Mississippi.

The removal was commenced in the year 1831, and was continued until 1834. It was again resumed in 1846 and ended in 1849, the majority of the Choctaws being at the time located on the lands now occupied by them in the Indian Territory.

Since coming west a change has been made in the form of government. Instead of having a king over them they now have a governor, or principal chief, as he is sometimes called, who is elected by the people for a term of two years. Next in importance are the district chiefs, one for each of the four districts into which the nation is divided. Each district is divided into counties, and these are presided over by county judges, who, together with the sheriffs and other minor officers, are elected by the people.

The judicial power of the nation is vested in a supreme court composed of three district judges, one of whom is styled chief justice, and the circuit and county courts.

The senate is composed of sixteen members, four from each district. The representatives are sent from the counties, each thousand citizens being entitled to one representative in the house. The legislature convenes annually in October at Tus-ka-homa, Wade county, where the capitol—a large stone building—has been erected. Each session usually occupies from five to seven weeks, and the members receive $5 per day during this time. No person can become a member of this body except he have Indian blood in his veins. The principal chief is vested with the veto power, but is subject to a two-thirds vote of the legislature.

Their government has been well conducted, very little trouble having been experienced until the fall of 1892. At this time they were expecting money to be paid them by the United States government, and some trouble arose about this and other matters, which resulted in the loss of a number of lives. The difficulty remained unsettled and in the spring of 1893 more fighting was indulged in, though with less serious consequences, as no one was killed. United States troops were sent to the scene of trouble to preserve order until a settlement could be effected. The money has been since paid them, over $100 per head, and the trouble is thought to be settled.

The royalties annually turned in by the national agent, permit and other collectors amount to about $250,000. This sum is sufficient to pay all expenses of the government, as well as to carry on a very good school system. Small neighborhood schools are established in most of the settlements throughout the nation. There are also four academies where more advanced studies are taught; and if the Choctaw student desires to pursue his studies still further provision is made for sending him to the high schools in the states, all expenses being paid by the Choctaw government. Non-citizens cannot send their children to the Choctaw schools, but must provide schools for their own.

The cost is greater to become a citizen of the Choctaw nation than of the Cherokee, $100 being the price of a license to marry a citizen. Fifty dollars was the price until the last few years, when it was raised for the purpose of keeping out those who marry for the sole purpose of gain. Couples frequently avoid paying for a license by crossing the line into one of the states to get married. In such case the wife still retains her rights as a citizen, and can hold property in her own name, but the husband has no more rights than any other non-citizen.

The Choctaws have the largest country, of any of the five civilized tribes, their nation covering an area of 10,450 square miles. The population in 1890, including freedmen and adopted citizens, was estimated at 18,000. There are also about the same number of non-citizen whites. The latter own no land, but they rent from the citizens and pay the owner one-third or one-fourth of their crops. They are also required to obtain a permit from Indian government to live in the nation. Some parts of this nation are very productive, the soil being very rich; but a large portion is rough and mountainous, and very inferior farming land, though well adapted to stock-raising.

The chief wealth of the Choctaw country, however, is the seemingly inexhaustible coal beds, which are being developed very rapidly, and the royalty paid to the nation from this source amounts to a considerable sum. There is also an abundance of timber in the Choctaw nation, which increases their revenue materially since the advent of the railroads.

The full blood Choctaws are very strict in keeping their word. When one is convicted of crime and sentenced to be shot, instead of being confined in prison, he is given his liberty until the time set for execution. It is said that they are always on hand at the hour designated.

The majority of the Choctaws are becoming very much enlightened and many of them have large farms under cultivation. Some of these live in good houses. But there are still a few of the full-bloods who live in the backwoods and cultivate a "tom fuller" patch, and keep a few hogs. The latter live on the "maat" and roots found in the woods, which are usually very plentiful, and cause the owners very little trouble.

The Elders have not been as kindly received by the people in this part as in some other parts of the territory. Some few meetings have been interrupted and broken up by the rough element at the instigation of those who are supposed to be teachers of the Gospel. But of late no such disturbances have occurred. It was in this part where two of our Elders were robbed of their watches last spring, an account of which appeared in the NEWS at the time. In the same vicinity myself and companion were required to remain out in the cold all night, as the people were so prejudiced they would not allow us to even sit up by their fire. It was a bitterly cold night, but because we were "Mormons" they would not give us shelter, although some of them were well able to do so. But we have many friends in this nation, who would sacrifice a great deal for the Elders, realizing that they will receive the blessings promised for so doing.

F. B. WOODBURY.

Written for this Paper.

AFTER THE HOLIDAYS!

From a business standpoint it may be said that much more was done than even the sanguine expected, and while there was a color of economy, in that those who bought were less lavish than usual and selected less costly presents, or more useful and necessary ones, the aggregate was somewhat surprising.

Business men and firms, during the lull which generally comes with the New Year, engage in stock-taking, and have a regular cleaning up, and we hear already of prominent business houses in this city which are thus engaged. Not unlikely some will shrink from this, for with high taxation, heavy rents, and little business, some fear as to the showing is naturally felt; but it is better to know the worst, and this can only be done by thorough overhauling. The more hopeful may endeavor to make their assets more than is justified by the circumstances. There is always, in the best managed firms, a proportion of their stock which should be heavily discounted. Late styles, unseasonable goods, articles in excess of demand, some things bought in all good faith which do not "catch on" with buyers; a few generally which are old and shopworn, should be overlooked altogether, and in these times of fluctuation when tariff agitation affects certain lines, they should be handled at depreciated rates. Then, while a dealer is expected to meet his obligations, he is not always sure that his patrons will be as reliable. Some accounts become uncollectable at all, others will cost all the profit on the first transaction before collection. Some are good if slow, and a few are beyond suspicion. The grading of this indebtedness is one that every business man must look squarely in the face. If hopefully counted at par, this is not a trustworthy, honest representation of financial standing. Fixtures, teams, grain, all appliances of business, including real estate, should be revised and discounted at least annually; wear and tear counts, and even real estate forced on to a market from necessity, rarely brings its estimated value.

Of course the instincts of business are self-preservative. Men give to it their time and attention for the profit expected; but trying times come, and the most experienced become anxious and sometimes doubt the outcome. All they have is at stake, including business honor and reputation, to maintain which "no stone is left unturned." If they succumb it is a calamity, and to a sensitive man akin to death. Another class meet such a condition with stoicism and indifference. Their sensibilities are not quick and repudiation is a venial thing. The few, seeing the inevitable, fortify themselves, and, after failure, they are better off than ever. It is a difficult thing for a wholesale house to meet this diversity of business ability or to fathom the ultimate of those to whom they give credit from time to time. Continual supervision and a conservative weeding out of unreliable patrons is the test of true business insight and the knowledge which comes by experience of chameleon-like human nature.

It hardly does to "holler until you are out of the woods;" but Utah merchants have "kept a stiff upper lip" during nearly a year's depression. Lenity may have been shown to them—they have certainly shown it to others, and this confidence of the older and larger houses and firms has been financial salvation to the Territory at large. There has been an abiding faith in the honesty and integrity of debtors, from the wholesale to the retail, which finds no equal in our entire country; and as a consequence failures have been comparatively few; indebtedness has been quietly reduced both at home and abroad, stocks are low in most instances, and collections fair, so that whether a change comes or otherwise, panic has found no place, and there is a fearless and healthy looking into the future. The lessons of restraint, economy and consideration are worth all that they have cost, and an education has come which is both appreciated and understood, not to the death of enterprise or the placing of an undue brake upon the wheels of progress, but a too sanguine—a semi-reckless spirit has been brought to bay, which unchecked might have permeated all through society.

This stock-taking season is also likely to confirm a feeling of legitimate business caution—caution in buying, caution as to selling. There will be a greater disposition to look after the resources of even a small store. Grain held or produce waiting for better prices, will be placed in market, even if the anticipated price is not secured. Dealers will see that live money commands interest where dead stock suffers depreciation; and there is more likely to be a profit in selling than in holding. Besides, there will come a feeling of relief to the wholesale house, whose patience perchance has been stretched to a point which was unpleasant, to say the least. Besides, this reacts upon the public mind, and the farmer begins to conclude that he, too, can better afford to sell for a few cents less than to pay interest or lose the esteem of his trading neighbors. Every store—nay, every small dealer, will take to heart the situation. Mammoth stores, like Z. C. M. I., have to do this, and we understand that this institution is already counting up for stock-taking, and its officers would no doubt recommend this course to all their patrons, so that a fair, honest, reliable statement of the humblest store may be had if it were deemed desirable.

The NEWS would not be invidious nor have its readers think that stock-taking should be confined to the dealer in imported merchandise exclusively. There is no branch of business, there is no occupation followed, but will admit of this intelligent inquiry and supervision; and even among men earning daily wages the writer has found that a man who keeps an account of his income and expenditure is generally among the most thrifty and prosperous of his class. Business habits are a restraint against random deal to any right-minded man. He must gauge his ability to meet obligations which are no less sacred than those of the merchant. In fact, it is this lack of consideration among the people of this Territory which has made of their hopeful feeling a snare of indebtedness, far, far too great for an emergency, similar to the present, whatever it might be in unobstructed times.

This thought of stock-taking, if it were our purpose, might be carried out into the domain of moral, social and religious life. There is ample room for reflection, inquiry and comment. But business is uppermost for the moment, and the Press is in its legitimate sphere when it suggests to all its readers of the mercantile profession, who are so easily affected by financial influences originating outside of Utah, that they continue to sail under "close-reefed topsails" until they are in smooth waters, with all the sea room they can ask; and from all our friends who are of the great body, that they will not cease their efforts at extricating themselves from the bondage of indebtedness, so that when stock-taking comes again the balance sheet may be in their favor. They will thus secure an independent business condition—one without incumbrance to them, their families or their posterity. May this be the realization as well as the promise of this eventful year to our Territory or our coming State!

Written for this Paper.

MORMONS IN MEXICO.

From a warm friend of the News, G. H. Snell, Esq., of this city, but now traveling in the southern countries of the North American continent, we have received the December 21 number of The Two Republics published at the City of Mexico, containing the following interesting account of Mormon colonies in the land of the Aztecs:

The following particulars regarding the Mormon colonies of Mexico have been obtained by a Two Republics reporter from Mr. S. C. Bentley, a very intelligent colonist of the colony of Juarez. There are five colonies altogether, four being in the state of Chihuahua and one in the state of Sonora, all being within a radius of about 100 miles.

The first colony established was the colony of Diaz in the state of Chihuahua, which has been in existence about 7 years. The lands are situated 70 miles from Casas Grandes and 4 miles from La Ascension. The colonists number about 700. Irrigation is resorted to, the water being obtained from springs and by means of windmills. The colonists manufacture brooms from broom corn, which are sold in Chihuahua, Durango and other places. Among the other products are honey, corn and cattle. One flour mill has been erected and another is being built. Lately, an artesian well company has been formed for the purpose of obtaining more water, which has already commenced operations. The colonists own one threshing machine and several mowing machines, and a new reaper has recently been introduced.

The colony of Dublan consists of about 300 people, and is located about four miles north of Las Casas Grandes, on the river of the same name. Water for irrigation purposes is largely obtained from the river, and windmills are also used to increase the supply. Wheat, corn, barley and oats are the chief cereals raised. Cattle-raising is an important feature, the land being well suited for stock. Butter and cheese of very fine quality are produced. A new roller mill has recently been established, embodying all the latest improvements. The colonists own two threshing machines, two reapers and several mowing machines.

The colony of Juarez was established, about six years ago, some ten miles southwest of Las Casas Grandes, in the state of Chihuahua. Their land is somewhat mountainous.

Irrigation is resorted to all the year round, water for the purpose being tolerably plentiful. Fruit, including peaches, grapes, apples, plums, nectarines, strawberries and blackberries, etc., is freely raised. A cannery has been established, not only for the purpose of preserving the fruit but meat as well. The colonists have two shoe shops, a tannery, grist mill and brick manufactory. The bricks manufactured are for the purpose of building their houses. They also possess a harness shop, threshing machines, reapers and mowers.

About five years ago the colonies of Pacheco and Cave Valley (really one colony) were established on the top of the Sierra Madre mountains, where famous old caves are found. This was, some years ago, the stalking ground of the Apache Indians. Seven of said Indians visited their ancient haunts a little more than a year ago and brutally murdered a woman and her child belonging to the colonists. Her husband had left his house one evening to start work threshing next day some distance away. The woman and three children remained behind, the latter consisting of two boys and a girl. The children, soon after, started out to feed some pigs. While thus engaged the Apaches fired upon them, instantly killing one of the boys and wounding another. The mother, thereupon, came out of the house, when she also was fired upon, and afterwards her head was beaten in with a big stone. The little girl all this time remained unhurt, and while the Indians were maltreating the mother the wounded boy took his sister into a chicken coop, where they hid themselves. The Indians subsequently made search, but were unable to find the children. The brutes then looted the house and took away all the horses they could lay their hands on. After the Indians had departed the little children crept out of their hiding place to get to their nearest neighbors some six miles away. On the journey the boy fainting from loss of blood and was unable to proceed further. The little girl, however, went on her way, soon met a colonist, and told him what had happened. A vigorous pursuit of the Indians was at once made, but none of them were overtaken, although all the stolen horses were recaptured. This is the only trouble the colonists have had with the Apache Indians, and since its occurrence, all the houses have been fortified with stockades, etc.

The colonists own two saw mills and shingle mills and supply lumber and shingles for 100 miles around. Pine is the principal timber. Potato raising is carried on with great success, the tubers being of excellent quality. Oats, and some barley, are raised. Irrigation is unnecessary.

A colony of from 300 to 400 people has also been established in Sonora, which is doing exceedingly well, but Mr. Bentley was not in possession of details concerning it.

The colonists spent over $7,000 last year in purchasing machinery, wagons, etc. They do all the corn-cutting and threshing for their Mexican neighbors. They have also introduced short horned Durham cattle and Holsteins as well as horses for the purpose of crossing and improving the native stock. They contemplate raising alfalfa for their cows. They raise fine marine sheep.

The colonists individually own their holdings, but they co-operate for the purpose of establishing stores, purchasing and working threshers, erecting and working factories, etc. The co-operation, however, is voluntary.

Good schools have been established and among the subjects taught the Spanish language is included. Children above 8 years of age are expected to attend the schools, but they are not compelled to do so.

The colonists and the natives are on remarkably good terms, and the prospect of the colonies is so good as to encourage the Mormons to extend their colonizing efforts. Most of the colonists come from Utah.

Want of transportation is their chief drawback, the nearest railway station being Gallego on the Central railway—about 120 miles away. Had the Deming to Chihuahua railway (the concession for which has recently been declared forfeited) been proceeded with, it would have run through the lands belonging to two of the colonies and near the others.

Y. M. A CIRCULAR LETTER.

To the Young Men of Israel,

Dear Brethren:—The manifest interest taken in our systematic course of instruction, as shown by the calls for advanced lessons, is very encouraging, as it bespeaks careful home reading and preparation, weekly progressive class exercises, and general advancement of the entire associations, which are truly strong educational factors in the midst of the people and therefore direct aids to the local and general authorities of the Church.

This universal system of education, through our young men, is carried to every home in the land, and only requires proper recognition and application to bring about the results for which the associations were established, namely, testimony of the truth, development of the individual capability, and a practical knowledge of Theology, History, Science and Literature.

For the benefit of those associations that have completed Part 1 of the Manual, sets of lectures are prepared and published in the current numbers of the Contributor, the direct organ of the associations and exponent of the thoughts of our young men. We thus call attention to these advanced lessons that there may be no cessation of interest in the line of progressive related work.

Your Brethren and co-workers,
WILFORD WOODRUFF,
JOS. F. SMITH,
MOSES THATCHER.

General Superintendency of Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association.

William Francis Perry, past master of Live Oak Lodge of Oakland, (Cal.) Free and Accepted Masons, has been arrested on a charge of felony and embezzlement. The plaintiff is on the board of trustees of the Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home, and the sum which it is charged he has misappropriated is in the neighborhood of $5,000. Perry is a real estate man doing business in Oakland.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Roswell, N. M., is becoming noted for its large production of fine onions.

Strawberries are shipped daily from Gardena, says the Los Angeles Express.

Butte, Mont., merchants report a better holiday trade than they had one year ago.

Idaho's diamond fields are again attracting attention and claims being staked off.

The Rio Grande Southern railroad has reduced passenger rates from 10 cents to 8 cents per mile.

Morgan county, Colorado, declines to receive more coyote scalps, because the state bounty fund is exhausted.

At Eddy, N. M., the great dam which was washed out last August, causing a loss of $125,000, has been restored.

The Laramie, Wyo., glass works are to cost $100,000; of this amount the people are to pay a bonus of $30,000 in cash.

Deep snow in the South park of Colorado insures abundance of water for irrigation in the Platte valley next summer.

New Mexico college of agriculture at Las Cruces has issued a valuable pamphlet on insect pests of the Rocky mountain region.

Greeley, Colo., papers announce a plentiful fall of snow along the headwaters of the Cache la Poudre. Water will be plentiful.

At Ordway, in the Arkansas valley, Colo., 70 cents a hundred is being offered for 10,000 bushels of wheat suitable for sheep feed.

Wyoming convicts in the Laramie penitentiary, 117 in number, were treated to a chicken and mince pie dinner on Christmas day.

The first rails for the Florence and Cripple Creek railroad have arrived at Florence and will soon be laid for the use of a construction train.

At Greeley, Colo., Mr. C. A. M. Loud has just received a present of a 100-pound sack of potatoes. The sack contained just thirteen potatoes.

Charles Bodman, one of the best known engineers of the Northwest, has been arrested at Spokane, Wash., on a charge of smuggling opium.

James R. Tyler, a clerk in the auditing department of the Southern Pacific Railroad company, has died from the effects of escaping gas.

The public school at Lusk, Wyo., has closed because the directors refused to purchase coal, and the children's parents refused to contribute fuel.

Kit Carson county, Colo., contains much rich unclaimed government land which the settlers of that county desire occupied before spring crop planting.

At Cheyenne a mass meeting has been held on resolutions passed by taxpayers demanding a reduction of city officials salaries to a hard times basis.

A mass meeting of the citizens of Reno, Nevada, has been held for the purpose of appointing a committee to provide for the deserving poor of that town.

At Lamar, Colo., on January 15, another large rabbit hunt will take place, Trinidad and La Junta will send their crack shots to the bunnie shoot.

Trinidad, Colo., has developed a sensation. Postmaster Roca has filed a suit for divorce and names the city marshal of Trinidad as the cause of his action.

The governor of New Mexico has offered a reward of $500 for the arrest of the two men who recently brutally murdered ex-Sheriff Doherty, of Moro county, N. M.

Near Montrose, Colo., twelve orchard tracts have just been sold under the Louisenbiser ditch, upon which preparations are being made to plant 5,000 fruit trees.

A petition is circulating at Grantsville, Idaho, requesting the county commissioners to put a bounty of $1 on coyote scalps and 5 cents per head on squirrel scalps.

At Trinidad the snow was sufficient on New Year's eve for sleighing, and the streets of the Southern Colorado metropolis were thronged with sleighs and cutters.

Farmers of Montezuma valley, Colorado, are hauling their wheat from thirty to sixty-five miles to Durango in wagons, and make good wages by saving railroad charges.

Golden, Colo., clays have recently been tested in eastern glass and pottery works and pronounced to be the finest and purest known for making glass and pottery.

White Oaks, N. M., indignantly denies that miners are starving or that hard times prevail there. The Colorado papers are requested to revise their slanderous statements.

The Eddy-Bissell Cattle company of the Peoee, N. M., valley, has marketed recently 1755 head of fat cattle, mostly old bulls and cows, at prices ranging from $14 to $17 a head.

Silver depression has caused Kingston, N. M., to lose its paper. The Shaft, published by J. P. Hyland, will remove to Rincon, Dona Ana county, N. M., early in January.

In White Oaks, N. M., last week artesian water was struck at a depth of 110 feet. The water immediately rose 60 feet in the tube. The water problem has been solved in White Oaks.

In Eddy county, N. M., thousands of Texas sheep are being herded in the Guadalupe mountains and the sheriff and assessor are called upon to assess the trespassing Texans for taxes.

Maricopa county, Arizona, schools cost $96,000 last year, $45,000 of which went to improvements and new school houses. This is a significant and favorable sign in the coming new state.

The Helena land office has received from the surveyor general plats of recently surveyed lands located in Cascade and Mesagher counties. The land will be open to entry February 2nd.

Sheridan, Wyo., has just finished a handsome brick City Hall. It contains a fire department, mayor's office and council chamber. It is said to be the finest municipal building in Wyoming.

Sheridan, Wyo., has just finished a handsome new brick city hall. It contains a fire department, mayor's office and council chamber. It is said to be the finest municipal building in Wyoming.

Las Vegas, N. M., has enjoyed summerlike weather this winter while ice has frozen fifteen inches thick seven or eight miles away. The Las Vegas ice crop will be a very valuable one this year.

Natural gas has been struck at a depth of 255 feet, while a Mr. Blake was boring for water near Farmington, N. M. The people in the San Juan region are much elated over the discovery.

Delta, Colo., has shipped by express during the past four months 281,853 pounds of fruit, 32,992 pounds of vegetables and 529 boxes of eggs. Also two freight cars of apples weighing 32,000 pounds.

The Saguache, Colo., reservoir will soon be commenced. An appropriation of $80,000 is available for the work and now the title to the reservoir site has been secured the dirt will soon begin to fly.

Trinidad, Colo., appears to be determined to suppress the gambling dens which have so long been a feature as a nuisance upon Trinidad's main streets. The crusade is in full blast there now.

Thirty five-tael tins of the finest Hongkong opium have been seized in the forward hold of the steamer Gaelic, lying at the Pacific Mail dock at San Francisco. The steamer arrived last Saturday night.

An aged mail carrier became lost in the snow between Buffalo and Red Rock, Wyo., last week, and wandered in a circle for two days. When found he was about to lie down and die, as he was quite exhausted.

At Cheyenne, Wyo., there is a magnificent display of native grasses on exhibition in the state capitol. There are 100 varieties, and among them blue stem grass five feet long and buffalo grass half that length.

Crested Butte, Colo., the noted coal and coke town of Gunnison county, requires six locomotives daily to haul its product away. From $18,000 to $20,000 monthly is paid out among the workmen of Crested Butte.

Boulder county has decided to relieve its unemployed by building a road from Oredell to Crisman. Only married men are to be given work and those who decline to work will receive no relief from Boulder county.

Utah and Ute Indians are said to be organizing for a big hunt outside their reservations. Game wardens have warned the redskins to look out for trouble if they trespass within the White River settlements of Colorado.

From Farmington, N. M., Colonel E. L. Johnson, of Philadelphia, is about to fit out an expedition of six men with pack mules and start on a trip to Patagonia and Cape Horn. He goes to obtain material for a book.

La Porte, near Fort Collins, Colo., has this year shipped 810,000 pound of onions. The onion crop of Larimer county is estimated at 600,000 pounds which at $1.25 per hundred netted $7,500 for the county's onion crop in 1898.

A Missoula, Mont., man has perfected a plan for "corralling an avalanche." He has found an immense gorge of snow which never melts, and he proposes to excavate it and use it for cold storage for dressed meat for shipment east.

Squads of Chinamen, numbering several hundred, have been passing through Monclova, Mexico, during the past two weeks on their way toward the Rio Grande, where they expect to find an easy entrance into the United States.

At New Castle, Colo., a letter has been received from the Strouse brothers of that place, who have discovered good gold placers down the Colorado river, near the head of the Gila river, Ariz., and are panning out good wages all winter.

Hunters in the Yellowstone Park, Montana, have been captured by soldiers while killing elk on that reservation. Their horses and outfits were confiscated and they have been confined in the guard house at Fort Yellowstone.

At Sheridan, Wyo., it is said that about 500 men are waiting for work on a branch of the Burlington road to be built into the Big Horn basin next spring. The new road will start from Sheridan and will open up a rich farming country.

Laramie city, Wyo., has abandoned negotiations with Denver parties for a glass factory at Laramie soda lakes. The glass men demanded a bonus of $30,000 cash, the old glass works, 1000 acres of land, the soda lakes and 320 acres of limestone.

Montrose, Colo., is determined to have a creamery in operation through 1894. A meeting was held last week and a committee appointed to canvass among the farmers and formulate a plan for a permanent butter manufactory at Montrose.

A thesacodus-primaenus found in the rocks of the Wind river region of Wyoming is on exhibition at Philadelphia. It is said to be the first of hoofed animals, is about the size of a calf and lived about 500,000 years ago, more or less. It is valued at $10,000.

Eaton, Colo., farmers are looking over the lands of the Wyoming Development company of Wheatland, in northern Larimer county, with a view to making an extensive settlement there. They are successful irrigators and wheat and potato raisers.

Some rascal sawed in two the shaft of the water wheel operated on the Rothenbaugh placer, near the Jackson bridge, last Sunday, says the Grangerville (Idaho) Free Press, and work on the claim has been delayed for a few days in consequence.

Governor Hughes and Territorial Secretary Bruce have been to Yuma, Arizona, in communication with the authorities in regard to the San Diego, Yuma and Phoenix railroad, the great desert canal in California and the improvement of the Colorado river, matters of great interest to southwestern Arizona.

Aztec towns of a prehistoric age have been discovered near Eddy, N. M. The ruins indicate cities of from 15,000 to 30,000 inhabitants. Drifting sands have covered the ruins, but extensive buildings, streets, aqueducts, etc., are found when the sand is removed.

Greeley, Colo., has set a very humane example to the balance of the state. Dumb brutes left to starve and shiver without food and shelter upon the streets or roads are to be taken up and sold for the expense of their keep. Burros, goats and cows are to be corralled and fed.

Laramie county farmers are closely observing the experimental fattening of 170 hogs and 100 head of cattle on the Loomis and Maxwell ranch near Fort Collins. Whole wheat is being fed to this stock and the result will determine whether Colorado wheat can profitably be fed to live stock.

The Douglas Budget says that the unprecented amount of snow in northern Wyoming at this time of the year is the subject of general comment. Portions of the Big Horn that have heretofore been accessible at all times during the winter are beyond reach, and they have had three weeks' sleighing at Buffalo.

Near Palisade and Clifton, in the Grand valley, the Mount Lincoln Ditch company has completed machinery for pumping irrigating water for 3000 acres of irrigating land, and will supply water to ten and twenty-acre subdivisions at $20 per acre for fruit raising purposes. The water is pumped by water power.

The stockmen have no particular complaint to make of the hard times and the panic we have been going through remarks the Texas Live Stock Journal. They have been able to get ready cash enough to supply their immediate wants, and in that particular they were more fortunate than the general run of people.

Near Grant in the Sybille valley northwest of Cheyenne, Wyo., a graphite grease factory will soon be established for the manufacture of the products of American graphite. The tests of the graphite deposits there show them to be 90 per cent of pure graphite. Abundant water power is obtainable for the factory.

Walter Starburg, engineer at the Grand opera house, Pueblo, Colo., attempted suicide on Tuesday by swallowing, in a drink of whiskey, some arsenic which he has been carrying around with him for some years. The poison was pumped out of him and he will be all right unless stomach trouble sets in. Domestic troubles are believed to have been the cause of his attempt at self-destruction.

A young lady who lives on Pine street near Stockton street, San Francisco, Cal., was accosted the other night by a man who ordered her to hand over her purse. Instead of acceding to the request she drew from her pocket a huge door key, which, in the darkness, looked like a revolver, and, pointing it at the head of the footpad, ordered him to move on or have his brains blown out. The man made his escape down the hill without loss of time.

It is told of the methods of Kid, the renegade, says the Tucson, Arizona,

Olsen, that when any signs of him are found it is an indication he is far away. When staying in any region he carefully conceals all indications of his presence, when ready to leave he leaves indications and vanishes. When sign of him is found it, therefore, indicates that he is far away, instead of near, as he would be willing to take chances of his being far away under such circumstances, however.

Emma S. Douglass has procured from Judge Hubbard, at San Francisco, a writ of habeas corpus, by which she seeks to gain the custody of her nine-year-old son, Dudley Douglass. The boy's father is dead and he has been living with his grandfather, who has refused to surrender the child. He claims that the mother deserted her offspring six years ago and has since paid but little attention to its welfare. The mother is a dressmaker, and, as the grandfather claims, has not sufficient means to support her child.

The committee appointed by the water right owners under the Grand Valley canal has been in session with J. P. Brockway for the past two days endeavoring to arrange for a sale of the ditch to water right holders. Mr. Brockway demands $50,000 and states that his offer will remain open for three weeks. The committee regards the price as too high, and thus far nothing has been accomplished. The water right owners are desirous of purchasing and ending the misunderstandings and litigation of the past years, but do not wish to pay more than the ditch is worth. The conference is still in session.

A young man by the name of Thomas McDonald undertook to "shuffle off this mortal coil" last evening by the aid of a penknife. It seems that he had taken a young lady to the Catholic ball at the opera house on New Year's night, and after escorting her home he learned that she regarded another young man with more favor than she bestowed upon him. This information so worked upon his feelings that he threatened to kill himself right then and there, and in order to carry out his threat he took out his penknife and jabbed it into the right side of his neck, inflicting a very severe wound. Fortunately no artery was cut, and he bids fair to recovery.

J. W. Reid has commenced the argument of an important case in the Federal court at Boise, Idaho, involving the title of Colonel Craig's heirs to a valuable tract of land in Nez Perce county, valued at $25,000. Colonel Craig was an important figure in the early history of Idaho. He went to Oregon in 1829, married a Nez Perce woman and secured a tract of land on Lapwai creek, under the Provisional government, the title of which Congress ratified in 1851. In 1855 Craig proved up on the land, but could get no patent, because it had not been surveyed. That same year, when the Nez Perce Indians made a treaty with the government ceding certain lands, Craig's tract was exempt for the friendship the Indians had for him, and this exemption was entered as part of the contract between the government and Indians. Recently an attempt was made to remove the descendants of Craig from the land, and the suit is to determine the title.

THE SCANDINAVIAN FATHERLAND.

Prepared from Special Cablegrams.

SWEDEN.

The new iron-clad "Thule" has been delivered to the state.

■ The Hernösand-Luleå railroad will be opened to the public in a few days.

Lars Larson, a hunter of Hyttan, Norrland, shot and killed four bears in one day.

A famine is threatening many Laplanders in the utmost northern part of the country.

Judge C. J. Schöping, one of the oldest jurists in Sweden, died at Stockholm at the advanced age of 76 years.

The farmers of Jämtland have declared war against the wolves, who have killed a large number of their cattle during the last month.

S. Mortenson, a well-to-do citizen of Ringshult, Smoland, committed suicide by hanging himself. The cause is not known.

The Stockholm Aftonbladet has now a circulation of 50,000, which is a good showing for a city of only 260,000 inhabitants.

Prince Bernadotte is suffering from influenza. Some of the public schools of Stockholm have been closed on account of the epidemic.

Ex-Sheriff Ola Nilsson, of Kaxelakra, died at the age of 90 years. He had been one of the bravest sheriffs of the parish of Flämsjö.

Queen Sophia, who a few days ago was reported improved in health is again growing worse. She is in bed nearly the whole day in her room in the Ulriksdal castle.

Many fairs and entertainments, to be held in January and February have been arranged by the society of Stockholm. All the receipts will be used for the matter of defenses.

A patriotic poem, written by King Oscar has just been published by some of the Stockholm dailies. The poem is beautiful and speaks of how necessary it is that every citizen makes sacrifices for his country.

The steamer "Tirfing" from Gothenburg arrived at Carlshamn the other day. She had met with a disaster near Carlshamn, and one of her engineers was scalded to death by the bursting of a steam pipe.

Mrs. Anna Lisa Wahlsten, the oldest female inhabitant of Gothenburg, celebrated her 97th birthday. The old woman who is still in good health received many gifts and presents both from known and unknown persons.

One of the leading clergymen of Stockholm is said to be much disgusted with the archbishop, who for some cause has reprimanded him, and will probably soon resign. The most peculiar is that the name of the preacher is not given in the daily papers.

The yearly sale of photographs made in the country amounts in value to about $1,000,000. It is estimated that nearly 2,500 people are engaged exclusively in the photograph trade in Sweden. Among Swedish portrait photographers may be especially mentioned the great collection of Swedish national costumes, which are colored and made by G. Florman, of Stockholm. These photographs have been justly admired by foreigners and many of them have found their way to America.

The blind people in Sweden receive instruction at the new and magnificent Royal Institute for the blind at Tomtebodå, in the vicinity of Stockholm, as also at a couple of smaller institutes receiving support from the government. The institute first mentioned receives an annual grant of $14,000, and during the past year imparted instruction to 76 pupils. The two smaller asylums receive an annual grant of about $13,000 each. In Sweden, in 1892, the blind numbered more than 4,000.

The heating of the cars on all the Swedish railroad lines is done—with very few exceptions—by steam, furnished by the locomotive boiler for express trains and by a special boiler in the baggage car for the mixed trains, or by a combination of both when the cold is excessive and the train is unusually long, as it has been found that steam cannot be carried to advantage for heating purposes for a length of train exceeding 100 meters, when the outside temperature is lower than 15 degrees.

High up in the most northern provinces of Sweden rye is grown in favorable localities even close to the polar circle, though this is exceptional, as the real limit towards the north is considered to be 61 degrees. As a rule so-called winter rye is cultivated, being sown in the fall green during the winter and earing the following spring. The spring-rye, which is not so generally cultivated, is annual, has smaller ears, being sown in spring and reaped at the close of the summer. In 1892 an area of 975,000 acres was sown with rye. In Sweden the rye sown in the fall yields on an average 20 to 22 bushels per acre, and weighs 56 lbs per bushel.

The manufacture of scales holds a prominent position in Sweden, and increases the more, partly because most merchandise is now-a-days sold by weight, and partly because, since the introduction of the metric system, scales can be manufactured also for export. All kinds of scales are made, both for wholesale and retail trade. Amongst the eight Swedish factories existing in 1892 for scale manufacture, Tengelin's scale factory in Stockholm takes the first place. This establishment, which was founded in 1823, manufactures a speciality namely the so-called Steelyards, according to their own patent, and specially suitable for market business.

NORWAY.

The number of factories in Norway may be estimated at about 1,000.

Many new large office buildings are being erected in Christiania at present.

Three men, of Hurdalen were drowned while skating on Lake Hurdal the other day.

No landslides have been reported from Værdalen during the last three weeks.

Ex-Admiral Rasmus Andrews Knap died in Copenhagen at the age of 75 years.

Bjornson's "A Gauntlet" will soon be performed at the Royalty Theater at London.

Their golden wedding was celebrated by Emil Larsen, a farmer of Jæderen, and his wife.

The export of lumber from Norway has been much less in 1893 than the previous year.

After the 1st of January next year no more saloons will be found in the city of Christianssand.

The conservatives are making tremendous efforts to come out victorious at the next election.

Bjorn Bjornson, the actor and son of the famous poet of the same name, was married to Miss Gina Oselio, the court singer.

Their wedding was celebrated by Miss Ragunhild Juell, the well-known Norwegian singer and Dr. Baekstrom of the Upsala university.

Martin Hovdet, of Foldalen was found frozen to death the other night. Hovdet was a peculiar old man, something of a modern Rip Van Winkle.

The radicals will ask Bjornstjerne Bjornson to make stump speeches as soon as the campaign begins in full earnest. Bjornson will probably be only too willing.

A collision between the steamer Anna of Christianssand, and the steamer Augusta of Haugesund took place off Ryvarden. Augusta sank in a few minutes, but her crew was rescued.

Miss Beate Kjelland, a daughter of Alexander L. Kjelland, the famous author, will soon marry Dr. Axel Salomonsen, son of the wholesale merchant Salomonsen, of Brede, Denmark.

The Norwegians and Danes living in Paris gave a banquet in honor of Jonas Lie, the Norwegian poet. The speech of the evening was made by Herman Bang, the eccentric Danish actor.

Bjornson's "En Fallit" was given for the first time at the Valle theater in Rome, and met with a great success. The Italian paper Popolo Romano publishes a detailed and very favorable critic.

DENMARK.

Herman Bang, the author, is lying sick in Paris.

Two fishing-smacks capsized off Vardo and eight people were drowned.

Actor Th. Liebe, of the Royal theater, died at Copenhagen.

Hogsbro has been reelected Speaker of the Danish Folkething.

The export from Denmark to the United States, is valued at $2,160,000.

The wholesale merchant, E. Toermoes, of Copenhagen, died the other day.

Baron Rahden, who some time ago shot and killed Lieutenant Castenschold, has been acquitted.

Fourteen of the fishermen, perished during the late storm, were buried at the Harboore cemetery.

Rev. Hans Peter Kofoed-Hansen, a well-known author, died at Copenhagen at the age of 80 years.

Prince Henri of Orleans has returned to Paris after a short stay in Copenhagen.

Consul Carl Lund has bought 16 buildings on Skydebanegade in Copenhagen at a price of 1,665,000 kroner.

The collections for the families of the fishermen, perished during the November storm, have now reached the large amount of 300,000 kroner.

The liberal voters Union of Copenhagen, at a largely attended meeting, passed strong resolutions against the present cabinet.

Mr. Klubien, one of the most prominent attorneys at law of Copenhagen, died from an apoplectic fit while pleading a case in the Supreme court, December 15th.

The woman's geographical work of 1,200 pages will be published by Salmonson Bros., Copenhagen, next year. The preparation of the work is in charge of nine authors, eight of whom are Danes and one Norwegian.

The syndicate which bought "Almindeligheden" or the commons of Copenhagen, has petitioned the city government for permission to connect the two pieces of ground on either side of Ny Toldbogade by a tunnel under the street and a bridge above it.

RELIEF IN TEMPERANCE.

In the northern part of the Sea of Japan, some forty miles distant from the large island of Ezo, lies a tiny island called Okushiri. Its soil is fertile. Trees of varying proportions cluster thickly over its surface. The agriculturist and the lumberman might find profitable occupation there. But the chief pursuit of the people is fishing.

Every spring, says the Japan Mail, great shoals of herring approach the coast, and the fish are easily captured in such quantities that this one beautiful dispensation of nature suffices to feed and clothe the inhabitants from year's end to year's end. Living thus in ease and plenty the people might be expected to develop qualities usually incidental to such circumstances, and they appear to have fallen pretty freely into the vice of drunkenness. In 1895 there were some 260 souls in the island. They possessed only four fixed nets. They lived in houses thatched with coarse grass; they had scarcely any roads and they could boast only a single school. Yet they consumed annually $3000 worth of sake in addition to shochu and other strong drinks. In short these common fisher folks spent upon intoxicating beverages more than $1 per month for every unit of their number, including women and children. The same ratio of intemperance applied to the whole of Japan would signify an annual expenditure of $500,000,000 on intoxicating beverages alone. In the face of this reckless outlay for liquor the people often suffered severely from hunger and cold during the winter, the price of rice ranging very high in the midwinter months and the dwelling-houses being ill-adapted to exclude the inclement atmosphere. The local authorities prevailed upon them to adopt a system of storing provisions against times of scarcity, but their sources, reduced by payments on account of sake, were insufficient to accomplish anything effective in that line. These circumstances induced some bold men among them to openly denounce the excessive use of alcoholic beverages as the cause of all the people's sufferings, and to preach the necessity of applying to useful purposes the funds thus squandered. The crusade provoked violent opposition, but in 1884 the inhabitants were induced to enter into the following agreement:

Covenant made by the people of Okushiri Island concerning the sale and purchase of alcoholic beverages and the use of the same in the Island of Okushiri.

This land which we inhabit is a lonely island in the Pacific ocean. Its inhabitants numbering ninety families, find almost their only means of amusement in drinking alcohol. Nine out of every ten are addicted to sake, the sums annually spent upon which aggregate a heavy amount.

Debtors are unable to meet their engagements, and some are even compelled to depend on official aid for supplies of food. We are threatened with misery and some extraordinary measure is necessary to save us. Frugality must be the rule of our conduct, and every kind of excess must be avoided. We, therefore, hereby resolve to abstain from the luxury which we relish above all others, namely, sake, so as to terminate the importation of the liquor into the island. The money hitherto devoted to the purchase of sake shall be applied to lay in stocks of rice and other grain as a provision against future want, on the one hand, and to increase the capital available for fishery purposes on the other.

SIGNATURES OF THE PROMOTERS.

Dated July, 1884.

Art. 1.—We, the inhabitants of Okushiri Island, jointly and severally, in accordance with the covenant hereby signed, do pledge ourselves to abandon wholly the sale, purchase and use of alcoholic beverages.

(Signed)

117 OKUSHIRI ISLANDERS.

The consequences of this covenant were very marked. It was rigorously observed. Even government officials, whatever their rank, had to give up sake drinking when they visited the island, and as a matter of course, every dramster who could not reform, was compelled to take his departure. Order thenceforth reigned completely, and prosperity came with rapid strides. The population increased fivefold in five years and the capital invested in the fishing industry tenfold. Reed thatches were replaced by shingles. Four large granaries were kept full of rice, and in addition, each house had a store of its own. It is stated that there is now stored in the island rice sufficient to support the people for three or four years, even though the herring fishery should fail entirely. Roads have been constructed in places where nothing of the kind existed before. The principal school has been greatly improved and several branch schools have been established.

New lands have been brought into cultivation, and hemp to the value of $2,000 is grown annually for the manufacture of fishing nets which before the signing of the covenant, had to be imported entirely from the mainland. Statistics also show a marked decrease of crime, and so famous did the success of the experiment become that a large community of settlers in the neighboring island of Ezo pledged themselves to a covenant similar to that of Okushiri and with similarly happy results. Finally, we may add that when the five years originally contemplated by the covenant expired, it was renewed for another term of five years, despite the opposition of an influential local official.

BURNED TO DEATH.

MANASSA, Colo., Jan. 4, 1894.—A sad and fatal accident occurred in Bishop John Dalton's family on New Year's morning.

Breakfast was over and Sister D. had just stepped to the corral to attend to some chores and was not out five minutes, having left George M. (a little fellow of two and a half years) and the baby in the cradle in the house alone. During this short absence little George had taken up a new broom, undoubtedly trying to sweep with it, which caught fire from a small fire smouldering in the fire-place. From the broom his clothes caught fire and when found by his parents he was wrapped in flames, writhing on the kitchen floor in agony.

Medical aid was immediately called and all was done that could be to relieve the little sufferer, but all in vain to save life. He died about half-past 12 o'clock p.m., two hours after the accident occurred.

The funeral service was held January 2, at 2 o'clock p.m., at the family residence, and was largely attended by sympathizing relatives and friends.

This sudden and sad accident cast a gloom over the whole ward and all festivities of the day were dispensed with.

WM. CHRISTENSON.

OBITUARY NOTES.

MARIA D. CHAMBERS.

On January 2nd, 1894, at 9:30 o'clock a.m., Mother Maria D. Chambers passed from this sphere of life at Ogden. For over a year past she has been a very severe and constant sufferer, and for several weeks has been confined to her bed. It always has been a pleasure to Mother Chambers to minister to the wants of the needy, the sick and the afflicted, and for several years previous to her affliction she was a zealous and active worker as counselor in the Relief society of the Fourth ward. She was highly respected and beloved by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

It is only fourteen months since the death of her husband, Father John G. Chambers, and now the parting of the mother from the large family of sons, daughters and grandchildren makes it doubly hard for them to bear. Her eldest son, John H., is at present performing missionary labor in England.

In company with her husband Mother Chambers left England, her native country, in February, 1853, and arrived in Utah in October of the same year, where she has resided with her family ever since.

WELCOOME CHAPMAN.

St. Johns, Arizona, December 28, 1893. In your SEMI-WEEKLY issue of the 22nd inst. I saw the announcement of my father's death. I now forward a correct but brief history of Welcome Chapman Sr., deceased. He was born in Reed-borough, Vermont, on the 24th of July 1805. At the age of 10 years he with his parents moved to New York state; he embraced the Gospel about the year 1833, joined the Saints in Missouri, and was with them in their troubles. He came to Nauvoo and engaged in cutting stone for the Temple there; left Nauvoo in the spring of 1846 and came to Garden Grove; assisted in putting in a crop, and arrived in Winter Quarters in the fall, remaining until the spring of 1848, at which time he started to cross the Plains, arriving in Salt Lake valley in the fall of 1848.

In 1850 he moved to Manti and in 1853 succeeded Isaac Morley as president of Sanpete. In 1861 he was called by letter from President Brigham Young to come and cut stone for the Salt Lake Temple, continuing until its dedication.

HYRUM CHAPMAN.

JANE MCKAY SMITH.

Sister Jane McKay Smith was the daughter of Joseph and Martha Blair McKay. She was born in S. rone, county of Autrine, Ireland, April 25, 1837; removed to Scotland with her father's family when six years of age; embraced the Gospel March 7, 1851; emigrated from Johnston, Scotland, April 2, 1859; crossed the plains by pulling a handcart from Florence, Neb. to Utah, arriving in Salt Lake City on the 4th of September, 1859. She was married to Andrew Smith on the 24th of October, 1859, was the mother of eleven children, seven sons and four daughters. She leaves eight children, five sons and three daughters, and four grand-children surviving her. She was a true and faithful woman, firm in her religious convictions from the time she embraced the Gospel to her death. She was a great sufferer for nine years, the cause of her affliction and death being heart disease and lung trouble. She bore the suffering with a degree of patience that is seldom met with.

O. M. ALLEN.

PIMA, Graham Co., Ariz., Dec. 24, 1893. —Orval Morgan Allen, son of John E. and Pamela Parry Allen, died at his residence in Pima, November 10th, 1893. Brother O. M. Allen was born in the township of Saint Ferdinand, St. Louis county, Missouri, June 9th, 1805. He joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in an early day and shared in all the persecutions of the Saints in those days. He was one of Joseph Smith's body guard during the troubles in Nauvoo and was in charge of Zion's Camp at the time they were so mysteriously fed by the hand of Providence in sending thousands of quails to their relief. Brother Allen never tired rehearsing the trials and hardships of those days. Papers and certificates in his possession, signed by Joseph Smith and others of the Church Presidency, show that he was worthy to enter and work in all the sacred places of the House of the Lord, and a certificate of election issued by Thomas Carlin, governor of Illinois, showed he was duly elected captain in the second cohort of the Nauvoo Legion of the militia of the state of Illinois, April 2nd, 1842.

He emigrated with his family to Utah in the fall of 1852 and settled at Springville, Utah county; he was one of the most active in the defense of the people during the Indian troubles of those days. In 1854, he moved to Palmyra Fort, which was three miles west of Spanish Fork; then when President Brigham Young advised that that place be abandoned, he went and helped to locate Spanish Fork city. In 1861 he was called to go and help build the city of St. George, where he labored hard to make that mission a success; he was afterwards called to Toquerville, where he burned the first bricks burned in southern Utah. On October 6, 1869, he was called on a mission to the United States, which he filled with honor; while absent he secured the genealogy of his ancestors as far back as 1670, establishing that he was of the old Puritan stock. He has since done Temple work for hundreds of them. In 1880 he was called to Arizona, and settled at Taylor, Apache county; in 1883 he removed to Luna valley, Socorro county, N.M., then in 1886 he came to Pima, where many have been benefited by his wise counsel.

Brother Allen was 88 years and 5 months old at his death, and might have lived several years yet but for an accident which befel him four weeks previous to his death, by falling down stairs, dislocating the hip joint of the left leg, which caused him to suffer very much, and had a tendency to hasten his death. During his illness he never faltered but was true to his convictions of the truthfulness of the Gospel. He passed off quietly in full faith in the principles of his religion in full hopes of a glorious resurrection. He leaves a wife and 17 children, 83 grandchildren, 29 great-grandchildren and a host of friends to mourn his loss. G. W. WILLIAMS.

ELIZABETH YOUNG.

From a letter from Joseph Young, of Layton, Davis County, we learn that his wife, Elizabeth Young, died Dec. 5, of acute pneumonia, induced by la grippe. The deceased was born near Harrowgate, Yorkshire, England, in the year 1830; she was married to Joseph Young in 1852. She was a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at least 46 years. She came to Utah in 1861, crossing the ocean in the ship City of Manchester. She passed through the states the same year as the rebellion was breaking out, and with difficulty reached Florence some time in May, where the company waited six weeks for the Church teams. She crossed the plains in Captain Eldredge's company of fifty-four wagons and reached Salt Lake City in September. She spent the first winter in Peterson's settlement, in Weber valley, and moved to Kayesville the following spring, 1862, the year of high water. Such a season has never been known since. With her husband she passed through the privations incidental to the settlement of a new country, but of late years had got nicely fixed and comfortable. She was tenderly nursed and cared for and had the best local medical help. She passed away surrounded by six grown-up sorrowing sons and daughters.

SARAH GWYNNE.

Sarah Gwynne, relict of the late Wm. Gwynne, was born at Merhyr Tydvil, Glamorganshire, South Wales, Dec. 31, 1827; died, after an illness of nearly three years, resulting from a paralytic stroke, Dec. 16, 1893.

Deceased embraced the Gospel in 1850, and came to Utah in 1855, residing up to the time of her death, at Bountiful, Davis County, Utah. She will be remembered by the Elders who have labored in Wales, for her house was always open to the servants of God, and they were always made welcome. Last April death robbed her of her youngest daughter (Mary Ida,) whose lovable disposition and gentleness of spirit endeared her to the hearts of all who knew her. The blow came with terrific force to the distracted mother, she having ever since been confined to her bed, until death relieved her of her sufferings.

Sister Gwynne leaves two children to mourn her departure—a son and daughter, the former still a resident of Wales, the latter (wife of David Lewis,) reside at Bountiful.

The funeral services were held at the Bountiful Tabernacle on Monday the 18th of December, and were largely attended. The speakers on the occasion were Elders Chas. R. Jones, John James, Samuel Smedley and Thomas Briggs. Each bore testimony to her consistent life and integrity to the truth.

AMANDA MARIA TIETJEN.

Died at Ramah, Valencia county, N. M., December 31, 1893, Amanda Maria Tietjen, daughter of Ira and Sarah Hatch. She was born June 25, 1867, at St. George, Utah. Sister Amanda was the mother of four children, three of whom survive her. The eldest was burned to death May 1, 1888, from the shock of which our deceased sister never recovered, but gradually declined until she peacefully fell asleep. She was a thorough Latter-day Saint in all that the word implies and passed through many and severe trials. She was a devoted wife and mother, ever ready to assist those who were in trouble and was best beloved by those who knew her best.—[COM.]

THE DEAD.

Peaceful be their Rest.

DYER.—In this city, December 31, 1893, of asthma, William C. Dyer; born in Devonshire, England, February 1, 1829.

DUNN.—In Glasgow, December 5, 1893, Thomas Dunn. He was born in Glasgow, January 25, 1840, and was baptized May 29, 1870.

WALKER.—At Anubank, November 22, 1893, Thomas Walker, aged 43 years and 5 months. He was born at Tallcross, in Glasgow, and was baptized in Parkhead, in 1873.—Millennial Star.

LINTON.—In Glasgow, December 6, 1893, Mary Linton. She was born at Rathfriland county, Down Island, March 28, 1871, and was baptized July 7, 1893.—Millennial Star.

ORGILL.—In Mount Pleasant, Sanpete Co. Utah, January 8, 1894, Thomas Orgill, aged 74. Many of the Elders will remember Brother Orgill of Burslem, Staffordshire Potteries.

RAMSEY.—At Payson, Utah, January 7, 1894, at 9 a.m., Lewis Ramsey. Funeral services at his late home in Payson, on Wednesday, January 10, 1894, at 1 p.m.

SMITH.—In Farmers ward, Salt Lake county, Utah, January 6, 1894, of brain fever, Alice, daughter of Albert and Mary Ann S. Smith, aged 5 years, 11 months and 8 days.

EVANS.—At Murray, Salt Lake county, on December 5, 1893, of epileptic fits, Sarah Ann Davis Evans, daughter of James and Mary Evans. She was born April 23, 1863, at Astley, Shropshire, England.

SMITH.—In the Eighth ward, Salt Lake City, January 1, 1894, at 6 a.m., of heart disease, Jane McKay Smith, wife of Andrew Smith. She was born April 25, 1837, in Strone, County of Antrim, Ireland.

BEACHAM.—In St. George, January 2, 1894, Richard William Beacham; born in St. George August 22, 1863. He was the oldest son of the late Jacob Beacham, and was the main support of his aged mother. He leaves many relatives and friends that will long remember him and mourn his loss.

SHOELL.—At Pleasant Grove, Dec. 15th 1893, Bertha Shoell, of typhoid fever. Aged 19 years and 11 months.

Also at the same place Dec. 29th, Ella Glines, wife of Lawrence Glines, of typhoid fever. Aged 24 years. Both were daughters of Brother and Sister Frederick Shoell. Mrs. Glines leaves a husband and one child 10 months old. The sympathies of the community go out in behalf of the afflicted families.

SMITH.—At her residence, Heber City, Wasatch Co., U. T., December 3, 1893, Sister Sarah Smith, leaving her companion, 9 children, 34 grandchildren, 1 great-grandchild and a numerous host of relatives and friends to mourn her loss.

Sister Sarah was the daughter of David and Elizabeth Frampton; born November 14th, 1834, in Clay county, Mo. Brother Frampton and family suffered in common with the Saints under Governor Boggs' exterminating order from the state of Missouri; located and assisted in building up the city of Nauvoo, Ill. He died from the effects of an accident while cutting saw timber, leaving his young family, who participated in the unpleasant exodus of 1846. January 13, 1850, Sister Sarah was married to Thomas Smith, emigrated to Utah in 1852, and can truthfully be placed among the Pioneer Saints who braved the trials and has fought the good fight.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

Truth and Liberty.

No. 5.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, JANUARY 20, 1894.

VOL. XLVIII.

THE BONDAGE OF DEBT.

Discourse Delivered at the Sixty-fourth Semi-Annual Conference, of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Saturday Afternoon, October 7th, 1893, by

ELDER MOSES THATCHER.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

The words to which I have listened during this Conference appear to me to be opportune and suited to the needs of the people. I have nothing specially resting upon my mind upon which to speak during the brief time I may occupy; but I have noticed that as the pendulum swings to the right so it must swing back again to the left, if the clock continues to do its duty; or if it swings to the left it must swing back again to the right; and thus extremes follow each other. It is written that "sacrifice brings forth blessings." Three years ago the Latter-day Saints laid a great sacrifice upon the altar of their consciences, for when the Manifesto was then read in this building many men and women with aching hearts voted for it. However much the world may have thought us mistaken, there had been ties formed that were sacred to the heart of many a father and mother. Upon the brow of their children at no time had appeared the blush of shame. But the pendulum had gone far in the direction of oppression. It was useless to argue with prejudice dark as midnight. It was useless to supplicate at the feet of cruelty, for the public mind was wrought up to such an extent that it demanded a sacrifice unparalleled in the history of the world. That sacrifice was given. And all around us we see today the blessings that have followed. Yet had it been left to this people to have decided the time and place wherein and when such an announcement should be made, we possibly would have been until today in doubt. Some said it was too late; others said it came too soon. But we, having a man of God standing at our head able to communicate with Jehovah, he noted the time and fixed the place, and the results are before us. Brother Grant stated that "the American people are a generous people." And so I state. They are a broad-minded people. They have built upon the broad foundations of human liberty. But they like others when prejudiced are blind. Give prejudice play among this people, and we have not wisdom; for they go not hand in hand. Witness the recent trip of the First Presidency, allusion to which has been made. A perfect ovation! Where they had been hated and despised before, honor was done and every courtesy extended to them. Is not this one of the blessings that have followed that great sacrifice? Listen to the sweet singing of our choir, and note the homage done them. See the impression made upon the hearts of thousands of people by the revelation contained in that beautiful hymn, "O, my Father." Why, when a certain train left Utah and passed through the before intolerant State of Missouri, it was difficult to state for whom the cries of the people were loudest, Grover Cleveland or Utah. Who brought about this change, and caused men of the world to grasp the hand of our venerable President, and from the inmost depths of their hearts desire God's blessing upon him? That which was despised has been exalted, and the Joseph that was cast into the dungeon wrongfully accused by Potiphar's harlot wife, who took from his shoulder the garment of innocence and laid it at the feet of her husband with accusations—I say Joseph the innocent who was thrust into the jail, while guarding the honor of Potiphar's house, has been called out of the dungeon, and if he does not wear the golden chain of honor today, he will wear it in the future, and he will wear the signet ring, too, and will yet ride in one of the first chariots of the land, honored, glorified, and the magnanimous savior of his brethren and father's house, with his hand against anarchy and misrule in every land and clime. God will raise up this people. He having permitted them to be trodden down, He now will exalt them. I rejoice in the words of encouragement offered yesterday by President George Q. Cannon. I, too, bear my testimony that the clouds will break away.

But as we have learned by the experience of our trials in the past, in reference to the Manifesto, in reference to the political division of the people, so let us learn, my brethren and sisters, wisdom by what is occurring around us day by day. Money has been scarce. A man being worth a thousand dollars and owing a hundred dollars, if he was pushed might have to sacrifice all he had to meet that obligation. One extreme will follow another; and unfortunate is he who, through untoward circumstances, has had to create obligations at high rates of interest; for when the panic has passed by, those who have money in abundance in the East will not find it so easy to place it again among the people. Those who have had their fingers burned; industries that were paying more in interest than they could produce, will withdraw themselves from the productive fields and the result will be, if I can read the future, that one extreme in this also will follow another. Money today in New York at call is bringing but one to two per cent per annum, however scarce and high it may be here. They are not offering it to the people on time loans, because they are waiting for the action of Congress. Whatever action Congress may take, those who hold the money will desire again to throw it out among the people and when that desire comes strongly upon them they will throw it out upon securities that they would not today look at at all. I have had but one advice to give to people, and that is, pay your debts as soon as you can, both principal and interest. Pay every farthing; give the pound of flesh if it is required. But remember that the power of money is not a natural power. It has force only in legal enactment. Unlike the tree that produces the fruit, unlike the germ in the grain of wheat, it is dead except it is given power by legislation.

We speak of the interest on money. Really there is no such thing as interest on money. It is the rent of the land or of the house that you occupy, if the money is invested in land or in the house. The farmer borrows today, we will say a thousand dollars. He does not put it in the safety vault and lock it up. He does not put it in his stocking and bury it. If he does, at the expiration of the year, if thieves have not broken through and stolen, it is just the thousand dollars that he borrowed; it has not increased a single farthing. But if he takes that thousand dollars and puts it in land which with his labor produces a thousand bushels of wheat, what is the result? Two hundred bushels of that wheat, at prices ruling today, are needed to meet, not the principal, but the interest. One fifth part of his labor meets the interest, so called, of money, but really meets the rent upon his land; for money produces nothing. You may lock up a hundred million of dollars for a thousand years, and when you bring it out it will be no more, no less. The manufacturer borrows a hundred thousand dollars at ten per cent interest per annum. For what purpose does he borrow it? If in the manufacture of his goods last year he found no market that was remunerative, he borrows the money to pay his obligations, in order that he may hold his goods until he finds a better and advanced market; and if he finds not that better and advanced market, he borrows again—or goes into bankruptcy. It is, then, his goods that produce the income or the rent on the money.

Careful reading of history discloses this fact beyond any question: that as money receives its power through legislation, so from the beginning of time that legislation has been in the interest of those that accumulate, rather than in the interest of those who produce the wealth of the world. At the close of the war we owed nearly four billions of dollars, bringing ten per cent per annum. What did it mean to pay interest on it annually? At the price of wheat this year it would require eight hundred millions of bushels of wheat annually to meet the interest alone. You farmers in Utah who have borrowed money on your real estate, have you ever thought that your farm, being valued at twenty thousand dollars when interest is six per cent, shrinks to the value of ten thousand dollars the very moment interest reaches twelve per cent? Did you ever think of it in that light? Take the interest today on the debt of Great Britain and destroy that amount in property, and then compel her to pay one hundred and twenty millions per annum, and it would paralyze the whole nation. Take our condition in Utah. All the products of Cache county put together—one of the fairest counties in the Territory—are not sufficient to pay its interest on the annual indebtedness of this Territory alone. Now, if the tithings of the people there have represented one-tenth of all the tithings of the people; if their contributions have represented one-tenth of the contributions of the whole Church, then we have reached a point in financeering where one-tenth of the labor of the people is being expended on interest account alone. Is it wise or prudent? No, it is not. It is not in the line marked out by President Brigham Young. It is not in the line taught by President John Taylor. It is not in the line of the wisdom of President Wilford Woodruff. Bondage is debt; and whoever heard of the rich of any nation meeting together to plan for the good of the whole people? The poor inveigh against the extravagance of the rich and the luxury in which they live; and yet, my brethren and sisters, the very thing against which they inveigh is their only valve of safety. It is a boon to the poor that some of the rich expend their money like water thrown on the ground. It is a boon also that the rich must die as well as the poor; for children rocked in the cradle of luxury—and I may say, too, in the cradle of immorality—will throw to the winds the wealth accumulated by their parents. A few rich men in any community, outside of the influences of the Gospel, by combining under special laws, living the habits of industry and practising usury, can soon reap the wealth accumulated by the labor toiling masses. That is the history of the world. In Belgium they have salutary laws, however, that we may copy after later on in our nation. If a man dies possessed of fifty thousand dollars of property, five per cent, I think, of that property must go to state institutions of learning. If he dies possessed of a hundred thousand dollars' worth of property he is taxed ten per cent, and so on up until reaching a certain point, which, as I remember, is half a million dollars; and anything above that goes to the state for the education of the people of the state and for charitable institutions. Whatever we may say in praise of civilization, a nation cannot be Christian that does not have a system of income taxation, thereby placing the burdens of taxation according to their ability to bear it equally upon the poor and the rich; justice, equity and statesmanship put it upon the income of the rich man, because the poor man, when the nation is in danger, is the foremost man to bear the flag of his country in the front of the battle; he not only offers his sacred honor, but his life. Why then should legislation be in favor of the few as against the many?

The "kingdom of God will rectify all the evils that we speak of. But the world has not been willing to give it place. Let the genius of the Gospel of the Son of God have play in the midst of the nations of the earth, and there will be none of these inequalities that we now complain of. Brighter times are before us. Utah in passing through what she is now passing through will turn her attention to the wealth around her—to the silk in the leaves and the honey in the flowers whose fragrance we breathe; to the wealth that we dig out of the soil, to the gold and silver in our mountains, to the sugar in our ground, to home industry—and we will become a great people; and as we advocate and practice this, we will stand up erect as God made us, not only independent within ourselves, but able to feed the alien that may come to us. They will come, and will bring their gold and silver by the millions; and will lay it, too, at the feet of the servants of God, asking for wisdom to invest it. Up to date none of the institutions of Utah have been pressed to the wall; not a bank, not a single Mormon institution of note. Their credit is still maintained, and the honor of the Church is the pride of its people. That is something for which we ought to feel grateful.

I feel that I have spoken as long as I should. But my heart is not depressed. All things do not seem dark to me. Much light is beyond the clouds that hover over us today; and God will give them not only a silver but a golden lining. Abundance will come upon Zion; for He hath decreed that He will glorify her and He will make the feet of those who bring glad tidings very beautiful upon the mountains. God bless President Wilford Woodruff, and speedily take from his heart and mind the load resting upon him by reason of the financial distress upon the whole people; that he may be free from these things; permitted during his remaining days and by his remaining strength to pour blessings upon the people. And may the Spirit of the Lord make strong all the quorums of the Church, uniting them like a threefold cord that cannot be broken; and in the midst of our trials and tribulations let us see to it that we wound not the hearts of our friends. Let us do nothing in the hour of distress that will alienate our friends from us. And, whatever else we do, let us not forget the worthy poor in the midst of the people; and if we have no labor for them, let us at least divide our crust with them. Let the rich who have abundance dispose of their surplus and give liberally to the worthy poor. And above all things, let no thought enter into the heart of any Latter-day Saint that we shall ever reach a point when it will be honorable not to pay our honest debts, not only to the Gentile, but also to the Jew, and to Latter-day Saints. I believe that the Senate will pass the bill that the House of Representatives passed, and that, too, promptly. I believe also that President Cleveland will sign the bill, restoring to the Church its property, now so much needed. May God grant that this people may continue to advance and prosper until they shall see as they are seen and know as they are known. Amen.

Written for this Paper.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 10, 1894.—I have come to Columbus from Washington to give you a letter about Governor McKinley. He is today one of the most interesting characters in the United States. We are a nation of hero worshipers, and each of our great parties has to have its demigod. McKinley is the demigod of the Republican party. He fills the niche where stood Garfield and Blaine, and his worshipers hope to elevate him to the White House. I have no doubt but that the gray matter under his black hair is permeated with the Presidential itch, but I have looked in vain to find any evidence of the disease in his face or his surroundings. He has the same clear, brunette complexion which he maintained under the malarial influences of Washington. His eyes are just as bright, and there is no austerity or snobbishness in his manner. He leads much the same life that he did while he was in Congress. He lives at a hotel and walks like an ordinary citizen every morning to his office. He spends his day in attending to the duties of his position, and walks back to his hotel at sunset. He remains almost the whole time, while he is not in his office, in his rooms at the hotel, and his manners and tastes are of the simplest character. He goes to bed early and sleeps well. He is in good physical condition, and his mental health seems to be sound.

I went over to the state house this morning to look at his work shop. The Ohio capitol is situated in the middle of the city. It has a big park about it and a wide stone walk leads up to its front entrance. On each side of this walk are now big blocks of granite, from the pedestal of the Ohio statue at the exposition, and above these and by the steps of the state house lie the bronze statues which formed that monument. Giant figures of Gen. Sherman, President Garfield, Gen. Grant and Chief Justice Chase are laid out on their backs on one side of the walk, and on the other the great bronze matron, supposed to be the mother of the state, lies on her stomach, as though she had the nose bleed and wanted to let the fluid trickle off into the gutter over which her bronze nose rests. Passing these you reach the steps of the capitol and go through a long row of stone pillars up the steps into a gloomy rotunda, filled with bad paintings, which you see through a dim light. The whole state house is solemn and funereal. It is built of brown sand stone, and it looks like a prison. It was made by penitentiary convicts, and their sad souls seem to have shrouded this great stone box in gloom, and Ohio taste has come to help in carrying out the illusion. In the rotunda, for instance, one wall is given up to a great glass case filled with the flowers that rested on Garfield's catafalque, and other solemn relics hang here and there. Passing through the rotunda you have to go down a gloomy corridor to get to the governor's office, which lies below this, and the negro messenger who stands at the door would be worth a fortune as a eunuch or a mute. The governor's apartments consist of two large rooms. His private office is finished in mahogany, and he does his work behind a big, flat desk, seated in a mahogany chair on a cushion of drab leather. He has his private secretary on the opposite side of him, and there are one or two clerks in the front room, but I looked in vain to find any literary bureau, and I saw no signs of the activity which usually hangs about the office of a statesman who is pulling his wires for a presidential nomination.

As far as I can learn McKinley is not a wire puller. He has faith in his destiny, and he believes that all things come to him who waits. He thinks that the people lead the politicians, and he recently said that when they laid out a campaign the politicians had to follow. He believes in the people rather than in organizations, and I think he is something of a fatalist as regards himself. He will not talk about his chances as a Presidential candidate, and he will let no one else talk with him on the subject. He gets bushels of mail every week, and there are scores of letters now coming in from politicians all over the country who want to organize their districts for him. They say that they did so and so in such a campaign, and they can now do as much for McKinley. Such letters generally find their way into the waste basket unless they are from personal acquaintances or men of undoubted standing. In the latter cases they are respectfully acknowledged, but nothing more. A great many political adventurers call at the state house to see Gov. McKinley on this subject. All are received, for there is no red tape about the office, and access is as easy to the beggar as to the millionaire. No encouragement, however, is given to the adventurers, and so far as I can learn McKinley has not yet laid out any campaign nor planned any organization with a view to 1896. I have made some study of him both here and at Washington in connection with his treatment of men. He is a fair judge of human nature, and he usually gets a good insight into the souls of his callers before they leave him. He does this by listening rather than by asking questions. He is a good listener, and he lets the men who have business with him do the most of the talking. In nine cases out of ten they show up their own characters before they leave.

Gov. McKinley is a very cautious man. He seldom says or does anything without having thought the matter over well before-hand. He is a serious man as regards public matters, and he never jests on the stump. He seldom tells stories while making a stump speech, though he is a good story teller and has a decidedly humorous side to his nature. In his private life he can laugh like a young satyr, and he enjoys the company of his fellows. He is especially fond of children and delights in teasing them and in playing with them. His tastes are naturally very domestic, and his great objection to public life is that it has robbed him of his home. He has to live, as it were, in a trunk, and his books are stored away.

It is not generally known that Gov. McKinley has a religious side to his nature. He has nothing to do with the infidelity and free thought of the age. He believes in the Christian religion and is a member of the Methodist Church. He never says anything against religion even in jest. He only says that it is a mystery to him which he cannot explain, but in which he has implicit faith. Not long ago he said that the greatest men of our history had been believers, and though he never carries his religion on his sleeve I imagine he rather despises those who try to make themselves notorious by their disbelief. He is, I am told, very fond of the Methodist hymns and he often hums them over to himself while he is at work. He is a pure man in thought and a pure man in language. His closest friends tell me that they have never heard him tell a story nor utter an expression which could not be repeated in the presence of ladies.

One of the most remarkable features of Gov. McKinley's private life is his devotion to his wife. She has been, you know, a great invalid, and she is not today well. He has spent every moment of his leisure for years by her side, and today he gives every spare hour to her. Her life is wrapped up in his and she cannot bear to have him away from her for any length of time. She lives with him here at the Neil House, and the governor courts her as ardently as he did in the first days of his honeymoon. When she is sick he nurses her, and she has been of great assistance to him in his work.

Speaking of McKinley's health, he is a man of wonderful staying powers. He can travel from one end of a campaign to the other without tiring, and as a rule he uses up all his associates and comes out fresh. He has naturally a strong constitution. His mother is still living, at the age of eighty two, and she is strong and healthy. His father died only a short time ago at eighty five, and he kept his strength up to the last. His name was William, and Gov. McKinley has always signed himself William McKinley, jr. From the first of this year he has dropped the "jr," and now signs himself plain William McKinley. McKinley's father was of Scotch-Irish descent and his life at the time McKinley was born was made up of hard physical labors. He was one of the chief men in a furnace or rolling mill at Niles, Ohio. Niles is in the mining districts of northern Ohio. It is a town of about 5,000 people, and during a visit which I paid to the town last year I was shown the house in which McKinley was born. It is a two-story frame, and what was probably the parlor in young McKinley's day is now used as a grocery store. Over the front door there is a porch covered with vines, and Gov. McKinley comes out upon this porch and makes his stump speeches whenever he comes to Niles. I found the people of Niles very proud of him. Some of the old citizens told me that he was a black-haired, dark-faced chubby little boy, and that he usually went there then, as he does today, by the name of Bill McKinley.

I called upon Gov. McKinley last night at his rooms in the hotel. I am stopping at the same place, and I can tell you that the governor of Ohio has a negro in a swallow tailed coat to wait upon him, and without he has more persuasive manners than I have, he has to pay a quarter three times a day if he expects a full meal. I did not see him in the dining room, and I suppose he dines with his family in his apartments on the second floor. He has a number of large rooms here, and the one in which he received me was about fifteen feet square and was ordinarily well furnished. Its windows looked out on the main business street of the city, and the governor sat in a swinging chair by the side of a fire before a high-roller top desk, which was pushed up against the wall near the window. He stood up as I entered and I had a good chance to see how he looks in this year of our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety-four. He has grown fleshier since he left Congress and his form is beginning to assume what the French madame would call embonpoint. He stands about 5 feet 7 in his stockings, and he weighs, I venture, 175 pounds. He is a straight, broad-shouldered, big chested man, with a form and face which have often justly been compared to those of Napoleon Bonaparte. He is taller than was Napoleon, but he grows more like him in feature and form as he grows older. He does not like the comparison, and he once told me he would kill me if I repeated it concerning him in the newspapers. But the resemblance is so obvious that I can best describe him by using it. Gov. McKinley has a very handsome face and a very strong one. He looks a trifle older than he did six years ago and his black hair is mixed with gray at the temples, and there are a few more serious wrinkles in his face. His blue eyes, however, are still full of life, and when he smiles his face grows younger. He is smooth shaven, and his dress, as usual, was black. I don't think I have ever seen Gov. McKinley in anything else than a suit of black clothes, and he always looks clean and well dressed. He wears a standing collar, a black necktie, and his only jewelry is a gold ring on the third finger of his left hand and a gold watch chain, which runs across his vest from one pocket to the other. The governor is a very pleasant man in his manners with his guests. He is accustomed to meeting men and he puts his callers at their ease. There is no gush about him, and he has a dignified, common sense way which is very home-like and pleasing. I talked with him for perhaps an hour. He is an easy conversationalist and his face changes in expression as he becomes serious, or the reverse, in his talk. During a part of the time he chewed at a bit of a cigar which he had taken out of his pocket and broken off, and I was struck with his earnestness, his simplicity and his evident honesty.

During the conversation I asked Gov. McKinley as to the tendencies of politics. Associated as he has been with all classes of statesmen at Washington during his term in Congress, closely connected with the organization of politics in Ohio and living today, as he does, under the shadow of a legislature which has been accused several times of having sold its choice of a United States Senator, it struck me that he ought to know something of the purity or impurity of politics, and I asked him if it was not true that public life was full of corruption. He replied, "No, it is not. The profession of politics is as pure today as that of any profession in the United States, and our public men have as high a sense of honor as any other class of men in the world. Take Congress. I was in the House of Representtatives fourteen years, and of the 300 or 400 men with whom I was associated from year to year during that time I do not know one whom I would have dared to approach with a corrupt proposition. Had I had the money and the inclination to have bought Congress I do not see how I could have gone about it, and I don't believe there is a body of men, legislative or otherwise on the globe which has a higher sense of honor than the Congress of the United States. There may be corruption and corrupt men among them, but I do not know where it exists if it is so. Politics, I believe, grows purer as this country grows older, and our standard of political honor and political morality is higher today than ever before."

"The most of your life has been spent in politics, governor," said I. "What do you think of politics as a business? Would you advise a young man to adopt public life as a profession?"

"No," was the reply, "I would not. There is no life more full of disappointment. No matter how successful it may be at the start, it is sure before it comes to an end to bring sorrow and grief. I know of no trouble which seems to affect men so much as that of apparent unappreciation and disappointed ambition. Take a look at the careers of the most noted men of our history and you will find every one of them full of disappointment. Times change. Conditions change, and men change. The story of the ablest of our statesmen and the most famous of our public men runs through the graveyards of their own disappointed hopes. No, I would not advise a young man to make politics his profession."

"Looking at the condition of parties today, do not the signs of the times point to the organization in the future of a party of the poor against the rich?"

"No," replied Gov. McKinley; "there will never be a party of the rich and a party of the poor in this country. If the present state of things keeps on there can only be a party of the poor, for we will all be poor."

"What are the causes of the hard times?"

"I think there is no doubt but that it is the uncertainty as regards the tariff. No one knows what the Democratic party is going to do, and there will be no change for better times until that matter is settled."

"How about the Wilson bill?"

"No one knows what the Wilson bill is going to be. I must say that it does not promise well, and the voices which comes from the ways and means committee room at Washington must be a very unwelcome one to the starving among our people. It is poor comfort to the 7,000 idle miners on Lake Superior to be told that Congress proposes to admit into free competition with them Spanish iron under its clause of free raw materials. It does not take much thought to tell how such men would regard this bill, and I might go on as to a dozen other items. Everyone knows my position on that question. You ask as to the remedy for the hard times, and if you want my answer I will say in the words of Mr. Ingalls, the railroad president:

"Kick the Wilson tariff bill under the table and let it stay there."

My talk with Gov. McKinley was rather in the nature of a running chat that a fixed interview. The conversation drifted here and there and covered quite a wide range. During it I asked him when he first became interested in the protective tariff idea and when he made his first speech upon it. He replied:

"I was brought up as it were, on the protective tariff principle. My boyhood was spent in an iron manufacturing district and among miners, and my youth was spent in the manufacturing district of Stark county, where the questions of the tariff have always been living ones. The first speech I made in Congress was made against Fernando Wood's tariff bill. I remember that I made the speech at night, and the congressional committee thought enough of it to reprint it and circulate it as a campaign document."

The conversation here turned to speech making, and I asked Gov. McKinley as to whether he wrote out and committed his speeches. He replied: "No, I do not; I think the matters that I am to talk about well over beforehand, and after I have pretty thoroughly settled in my mind what I am going to say I sometimes call in a stenographer and dictate the speech to him. It is this speech that always goes to the printer. It is by no means the exact speech that I make on the stump. This may be changed by the occasion, though I usually follow the lines laid down in the speeches I dictate. I find that I change my speeches a great deal during the campaign, and seldom repeat the same speech in the same words, though, of course, the matter is much the same."

"What is Ohio doing to relieve the unemployed?"

"She is responding nobly to the occasion," replied the governor. "Popular charities have been organized in all of our towns and cities. Some of the cities have commenced public works in order to give relief to the unemployed, and we are doing all in our power to allay the suffering and want."

FRANK G. CARPENTER.

Written for this Paper.

DOCTORS DISAGREE.

OGDEN, Jan. 6th, 1894.

Please permit me to call your attention to a law placed upon our statute books by our last legislature. The design undoubtedly was good, but the spirit of it has been fearfully distorted and twisted into shape to answer selfish purposes rather than to enhance the welfare of the whole people, the real object for which all laws should be framed.

A careful review of the whole law would require too much space of your valuable paper; I desire therefore to only call such points of it and make such comments upon it as immediately effect the welfare of the people and with which therefore the members of our legislature should become familiar. In short then the law provides:

1. That there shall be a medical board of examiners appointed by the Governor by and through the consent of the council consisting of seven members from the various recognized schools of practice.

2. They shall issue certificates to all who furnish satisfactory proof of having received degrees or licenses to practice medicine from chartered medical colleges in good legal standing.

3. They shall issue certificates to graduates of respectable medical colleges, who are at this time engaged in actual practice in the Territory.

4. They shall issue certificates to all persons who are not graduates of medical colleges, but who have practiced over ten years in the Territory, provided the applicant present a petition signed by twenty-five legal voters of his district where he has been practicing, and by paying the small fee of twenty-five dollars, after which he shall be admitted for examination, and if satisfactory, shall receive a certificate from said board; the contrary of course if he does not pass.

Now let us see the effect of this. As will be observed, according to the first clause of this law that seven men were to be appointed by the governor from the various recognized schools to form this board. But licence was immediately taken under this clause, for instead of appointing seven men from the various recognized schools, our ex-governor took the liberty of selecting four from one school, two from a second and one from a third, thus virtually placing the interpretation of the law and management of the whole affair in the hands of four men instead of seven. Now, when the fact becomes known that this school is the one which engineered the law through, and that they will not associate with any other school, and further that they have banded themselves together to pass laws in all states and territories with the avowed purpose of driving all other schools from the field, the extraordinary power placed in the hands of these four men to accomplish selfish purposes must be apparent to all; an advantage which they did not neglect as will be proved further on.

Under the second clause no man, however able and experienced, and whatever reputation he may have achieved in other states or territories, nor from what school he may bring his diploma, can practice without presenting himself first before the board to be quizzed and hampered with catch questions. Who cannot see the cloven foot in this clause, for here they have it simply in their power to curtail the future number of practitioners to such a limit as will satisfy their elastic consciences and the length of their purse strings.

According to the third clause, these gentlemen are constituted sole judges to say which diplomas of persons now practicing in the Territory shall be recognized and which shall not. Here again they have the power of applying the knife with the same terrible effect as in the preceding clause and the acts of the present incumbents, only show how willing men are to take the full advantage of all the power granted them when their own personal interests are at stake; for no sooner were they clothed with their little brief authority than all practitioners were notified to present their diplomas; and all who did not suit them and come up to their standard of name and estimation, irrespective of experience and qualifications, were simply rejected and the individual prosecuted or threatened with prosecution by them (not by the people) if they did not pull down their shingle.

The next or 4th clause is so glaring and so self-evident of the same design and purpose, that comment is almost superfluous. Here they have it entirely within their power to make a clean sweep of everything in their way. Now it is a known fact and acknowledged by all practitioners that one year of actual experience in the sick room is worth two years of college life. According to the claim, however, the applicant for a license to practice must have two years experience, in addition to which he must present a petition, signed by twenty-five legal voters of the district where he has been practicing, and pay the modest little sum of $25 before he even dare present himself before this august body for examination.

The effect of this law is keenly felt in several sections of our Territory where medical practice has been limited to just such talent. An incident brought to the attention of the author of this article will serve to illustrate: A family residing in a town from which such a person had been dismissed from practice, had one of its members afflicted with disease. The M. D. remaining, being a person of questionable character in whom the public had no confidence, the family were compelled to send to a neighboring city about 18 miles distant, for medical aid. The licensed M. D. made three trips by rail, going with the 9 o'clock train a.m., and coming with the 2 p.m. After the burial the small doctor's bill of $125 was presented for payment besides the medicine. Such charges will be common if this law be permitted to remain upon our statute books.

But there is another feature connected with this law which demands additional notice. It has been observed that this bill was engendered through the Legislature by a certain school seeking control of the Territory in the exclusion of all others and who form the majority of the present examining board. Now the question is, have the gentlemen from this school anything that is worthy of the protection of the strong arm of the law? It is a well known fact, that the people are getting tired of drugs, the principal agents which form the materia medica of this very school and which also has very nigh run its course, hence the different schools which are springing up and threatening to drive it from the field through just and fair competition. Let us see what confidence some of the leading physicians of the world and graduates of this particular school have in this subject.

Dr. Cogswell, of Boston, says: "It is my firm opinion that the prevailing mode of practice is productive of vastly more evil than good and were it absolutely abolished mankind would be infinitely the gainer by it."

Dr. Benjamin Waterhouse, in Harvard University, says: "I am sick of learned quackery."

D. R. R. Noyes, M. D., in his history of medicine, declares: "A drug or substance can never be called a healer of disease, there can be no reason or justice or necessity in the use of drugs in disease. I believe that this profession, this art, this misnamed knowledge of medicine, is none other than a practice of fundamentally fallacious principles, impotent of good, morally wrong and bodily hurtful."

Dr. Evans, fellow of the Royal College of London, says: "It will be a great blessing to the world if heaven ever reveals to earth any substitute for the nauseous and noxious drugs that are now employed in the practice of medicine. It has neither philosophy nor common sense to commend it to confidence."

But according to the present statute and especially under the interpretation of the present incumbents, there never will be a chance for heaven to introduce a new system in our Territory, for the moment it would make its appearance these gentlemen would be prosecuting and persecuting it with the strong arm of the law.

Numerous other testimonies as strong as these and from men just as able might be added, but space and valuable time forbids.

Now, we candidly ask our honorable Governor who, we fully believe, has the welfare of our people at heart, and also the members of our present Legislature, if, with such a record before them as this school has, it will be wise and just to the people whom they represent and whose rights they have sworn to protect, to permit such a law to remain on the statute books; a law which is unconstitutional and unjust and under which as complete a medical trust there is today being formed as any hydra-headed monster that ever reared its head in our Territory for selfish purpose. If there is to be a law, let it be against the administration of poisonous drugs so severely condemned by the authorities above quoted; and the wholesale butchery so commonly carried on in the sick room. Similar attempts have been made by these same gentlemen with previous legislatures but the wise and farseeing minds have invariably foisted them in their attempts.

A member of the last Legislature on being approached about the law observed: "We were all opposed to it in our minds, but these gentlemen clamored and urged us so hard that we finally consented just to see what they would do. I am not surprised for I expected just such results." We were also informed that the law was forced through at the close of the session when the members did not have sufficient time to thoroughly consider the nature of its bearings.

An effort of a like character was made in the Idaho legislature last year, but that honorable body, be it said to its credit, saw through the scheme and with an overwhelming majority rejected the miserable scheme. In this Idaho does not stand alone, for similar attempts have been made in Maine, New Hampshire, Ohio, Massachusetts and many more of the older and leading states, by this same school, but their attempts in every instance have signally failed, and those states stand as free and untrammelled from this law today as did our Territory before our last legislature convened.

Let us hope before the next adjourns that the people will have their rights restored again, and that this medical trust will be a thing of the past.

JUSTICE.

ELIZABETH DANIELS.

OGDEN CITY, Utah, Jan 12th, 1894.

I have just received a letter from Elder Thomas L. Cox, of the New Zealand mission. The letter is dated Owaka, Catlin River, Otago, New Zealand, November 23, 1893. He asks for information which he hopes can be obtained through the columns of the DESERT NEWS. He says: "In my travels lately I met with a man who said he had a sister, a Latter-day Saint, who left England for America about September, 1845. He had in his possession a few letters which his sister had written to the family since leaving her home. He has handed them to me to read, with a request that I would try to find out something of her or his family, as he has entirely lost track of them. The first letter was dated Liverpool, England, Sept. 11th, 1845; the next was dated St. Louis, Mo., April 12, 1846, in which she spoke of her marriage to a man named Samuel Smith."

The next letter was dated at Council Bluffs, Iowa, on June 8, 1852. At that time she was preparing to cross the plains to Utah. It is supposed that Samuel Smith was at that time dead, for she had been married again to a man named Casto—she signed herself as Elizabeth Matthew Casto (her maiden name was Elizabeth Daniels). The last letter received from her was dated Salt Lake City, April 1, 1853. She was then well and happy, though not rich. It appears the family address in England was: Mr. Daniels, No. 23, West Euston street, Clerkenwell, London. Her brother's name is James Daniels; he is in New Zealand, and is very anxious to learn, if possible, the whereabouts of his long lost sister.

Elder Cox is president of the Otago conference, and speaking of his labors in the ministry there, he says: "Elder Peterson and I have been, since I last wrote, laboring in Balclutha, Milton, and the surrounding country. We have been very successful in getting the people to open their school houses and churches for us to preach in. In some other places where we were unable to obtain such places free we hire halls to hold services in, and in nearly all cases the people come out in large numbers to hear us. Since being in this vicinity we have, within the last few months, held from four to five meetings each week. These meetings are always held in the evening, and we have to walk all distances from six to twelve miles to attend them."

"After the services are over we retrace our steps homeward, arriving there at all hours of the night. We feel happy in doing this because it is apparent that we are doing some good; and whereas the people had previously been filled with prejudice towards us on account of evil rumors spread abroad concerning us, after they have heard us preach they become very much changed in their views, and we are now treated with great respect by the people in this vicinity. We anticipate good results from our labors in the near future. Within the last three months we have held fifty meetings among those who do not belong to the Church. We live like Paul did—in our own rented house, and expect to do so for several months to come."

JOSEPH HALL.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

SALVATION FOR ALL.

In the Gospel according to John an incident is related, which lives the Savior occasion to proclaim the glorious doctrine that the plan of salvation embraces the whole human race. But although the doctrine was taught by Christ and further explained by His messenger to the world, it was gradually lost sight of by men, until the notion became very general that the greatest part of mankind was destined for eternal existence in flames never to be extinguished. Only through the teachings of the inspired Prophets of this age the truth in this respect has again been made known.

The Evangelist John tells us that certain Greeks, or rather "Hellenists" as Jews who lived outside of Palestine were called, had come to Jerusalem to worship. Having heard of the great Prophet of Nazareth they desired to become acquainted with him and secured an introduction by two of His disciples.

In this incident, trivial as it apparently is, the Lord sees the beginning of His triumph as the Savior of a world. The homage paid him by these strangers was but a type of that day when every tongue shall confess that He is the Lord. Anticipating this He exclaims: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

Clear as this language seems to be, it has been strangely perverted. If it means anything at all, it is an unequalled promise that a time will come when Jesus is universally recognized as the Lord and master both in heaven and on earth. Through His death and exaltation this is to be accomplished.

The reason why so many Bible readers fail to see this important truth is because they do not recognize the work of the Lord for the salvation of man, after He had been "lifted up from the earth." They lay all stress on the saving virtue of His death, ignoring the fact that it is by virtue of His exaltation that salvation is possible. One consequence of this false conception is the unscriptural idea that salvation is limited to the living, while all the millions who died before hearing anything about a Redeemer are supposed to be eternally lost. God's power to save is thus limited to the brief span of time allotted a human being, and death is the termination of that mercy which is said to endure for ever. In fact, by this awful view, death and hell are stronger than the Almighty, if they consume the greater part of His children.

How different is the true Gospel sound! It teaches us that Christ lives; that salvation is offered to the dead, "that they may live according to God in the spirit;" that the work of redemption is carried out beyond the grave and will be continued until every erring son and daughter of God has an opportunity to hear the Father's loving invitation to return to the Father's house.

As yet this beautiful doctrine is but imperfectly, if at all, understood, outside the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. But like all truth it is mighty and will prevail. It is the testimony of the messengers sent in these last days to the world from God, as it is the silent testimony of the majestic temples reared in these mountain valleys. For the answer to the often repeated question, why these structures are erected, is this: that through the faithful work of Saints even those beyond the veil shall be offered participation in that glory the fulness of which mortal tongue cannot describe. The work dependent on Christ's exaltation is committed to His Church in the most holy places. For here heaven and earth are united for the salvation of man.

HAPPILY ENDED.

With the decree of the Territorial Supreme court ordering the restoration of the personal property and money in the hands of the Receiver to the First Presidency of the Church, we apprehend there will be not one word of complaint from any source whatever. That the order was in great measure formal—the recent act of Congress and the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States having made it so—does not in the least detract from the satisfaction with which the happy ending of the long litigation is regarded. The change in official and public sentiment which began, with reference to this confiscation business, about a couple of years ago, has worked its way step by step to the gratifying conclusion now recorded. It only needed time and gentle guidance into regular channels, not particularly hot, hard fighting, to make it effective. And while hereby thanking all those whose friendly words and attitude have helped it to this result, the News as the organ of the Church feels that the objects of chief congratulation are the nation and its people, on the re-enthronement of their sense of justice, generosity and right. The "Mormon" Church could much better sustain the permanent loss of its property than the great American Republic could temporarily survive this loss of reputation. In the restoration of both in the manner now indicated, there is accordingly room for nothing but contentment and pleasure all round.

The phrasing of the decree is so plain as to need no additional elucidation. Of course the congressional proviso as to the uses to which the property may be applied is incorporated; the language on this point being as follows: "It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said receiver deliver said property and money to Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, to be applied under their direction and control and that of their successors in office to the charitable uses and purposes of said Church, that is to say, for the payment of the debts for which said Church is legally or equitably liable; for the relief of the poor and distressed members of said Church; for the education of the children of such members, and for the building and repair of houses of worship for the use of said Church, but in which the rightfulness of the practice of polygamy shall not be inculcated."

As to other property belonging to the Church, and now under control of the Receiver, it is only consistent to hope that its restoration also will speedily follow. A memorial to Congress to this effect has been introduced into the Legislature and will probably pass both houses without delay and receive the Governor's approval. It applies to all the real estate, whereas the above decree refers to personal property only.

A QUESTION OF ECONOMICS.

An important addition to the tariff literature of the country is a little work by Prof. Shulze-Governitz, a German economist who has completed a series of exhaustive studies as to the relation of wages to the cost of labor. That his views are in accord with the arguments of leading tariff-reformers in the United States will perhaps be sufficient reason for their rejection by a large proportion of American economists; and yet, since his deductions directly assail the value of the comparisons of wage rates for the United States and other countries, so frequently seen in the arguments of high protectionists, it ought to be worth the while of the latter to give him some attention, if only for the purpose of demolishing him.

This is the gauntlet which he boldly throws down: "Where the cost of labor is lowest the conditions of labor are most favorable, the working day is shortest and the weekly wages of operatives are highest." This means, if it is true, that the comparisons of wage rates so approvingly quoted in favor of the American workman, is worthless as proof as to the cost of labor per unit of product. In other words, while the German statistician finds that wages in his country and Switzerland are lower than in England, and lower in England than in the United States, yet his calculations show him that in the weaving mills of the two first named countries the weekly product per worker is only 466 yards as compared with 708 yards in England and 1200 yards in the United States. Thus it would seem to come about that the higher wage rate accompanies or causes a lower cost of production—a result just the opposite of that claimed for the higher wage rate by the high-tariff people.

To these latter, who are generally amply able to take care of their side of a debate, these conclusions are commended as worthy of notice. The News gives this much space and prominence to them because they strike us as casting an interesting and really important side-light on the great subject of present political contention.

A LIVE VOLCANO.

Our neighbors beyond the Rio Grande are having a real sensation, outside of their perennial revolutions and Indian outbreaks. This is neither more nor less than a fiery eruption of their matchless volcano mountain, Popocatepetl, which, if really in progress, is the first occurrence of the kind for nearly four hundred years. Popocatepetl, if not the highest, is at least next to the highest mountain in North America, the doubt being rather in favor of Orizaba, another Mexican volcano.

Readers of history will remember that the "great smoking mountain," as its name means, was reputed to be in active and disastrous commotion about the time of the Spanish conquest of the Aztec's land. Since then it has been quiescent, though keeping up a peaceful and continuous smoking. The column ascending from its cone has at times been visible for great distances, but there has not usually been anything to interfere with a descent into the crater or with the operations of the laborers engaged in collecting sulphur there. The Boston Herald, describing the vast fields of lava and the hundreds of extinct cones in that part of Mexico, argues that these all show that at a period of comparatively recent date, in a geological sense, there was a terrible volcanic activity. One great bed of lava runs far towards the Pacific coast from the peak of Ajusco, the third highest elevation about the valley of Mexico. Many scientists have regarded it as not at all unlikely that Popocatepetl should break out very actively some day. Mexico has two very active volcanoes: The peak of Colima, near the coast, and the comparatively slight eminence of Jorulla in the state of Michoacan. These are both remote from lines of travel. As Popocatepetl is very near the City of Mexico, with railway lines across both its western and eastern flanks, it would offer an unrivalled opportunity for tourists to see a "live volcano," should it really prove to be in active eruption.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

The recent news from Europe is of a rather serious character. As startling as a peal of thunder from a clear sky came the intelligence that three English officers and sixteen black soldiers in the British service had been killed by Frenchmen in Africa, somewhere in the Niger valley. The nightly encounter was thought likely to result in serious complications, but as it was explained that the affair was the result of a mistake of the commanding French officer, who also was killed in the encounter, it is expected that the payment of an indemnity and an explanation of the circumstances by the French will appease the wrath of the British lion. However, the affair is not calculated to strengthen the friendly relations between the two countries, already rather strained since the Siam affair.

Still more startling rumors come from Italy. The scanty telegraphic advice tell of the revolt on Sicily and the mobilization of troops all over the kingdom, but particularly on the French frontier, from which the inference may be drawn that not all, by a long way, is told. Special correspondents to foreign papers say that Italy is on the verge of a revolution and that matters have gone so far that the king has transferred his private cash amounting to about $29,000,000 to London bankers, as if preparing for the possible emergency of having to leave the country a fugitive.

Should these rumors prove true, the situation in Italy may be compared to that of France before the last war. The rottenness of the administration had become so obnoxious to the people, that the only resource left the imperial government was to divert the attention to other matters, in which said government succeeded so well that the popular outcry against the emperor was changed to one yell against Germany. It is already stated that the present Italian rulers are prepared to try a similar plan. Subsidized papers tell of French intrigues in Sicily and hostile intentions against the kingdom. There may be no truth in such rumors but they harmonize with the popular anti-French sentiment and serve to keep the embers glowing ready for a big blaze at any time.

It is significant that while Italy is working up a strong feeling against the French, German papers are equally busy against Russia. The story of the massacre of Catholics in the church at Kroshe serves this purpose admirably. The condemnation of this fiendish affair, the particulars of which have appeared in the News, can hardly be expressed in too strong terms, and it is used with effect.

In Austria, the third power of the Triple Alliance, a story is circulated to the effect that a Czech conspiracy has been discovered in Bohemia, paid for and stimulated by French money. All this certainly looks like a concerted effort to unite firmly the three powers of the Triple Alliance by strengthening the hostile sentiment against France and Russia.

When the present state of affairs in the old world is considered, the keen statesmanship necessary to keep the equilibrium undisturbed may be conjectured. How long, we may well ask, shall the nations suffer their rulers to keep them on the edge of a burning volcano, threatening eruption every minute? How long before it will be seen that the best interests of all are best served by everybody attending to his own affairs, and all striving to excel in the pursuit of peace and the promotion of individual happiness on the basis of the great principles of that religion which all Europe confesses!

POLISH SUGAR-MAKERS.

A New Orleans weekly, sailing under the tremendous title of The Louisiana Planter and Sugar Manufacturer, is a bright and new way exponent of the interests that such a periodical might be expected to look after. Its range of information seems to be wide as the earth, and it gleans and gathers from various climes with much skill and freedom. California, as "the paradise of the sugar beet," and some of the work done in that great state in sugar-making, come in for prominent mention, and among news items is the following reproduced from a Pacific coast paper:

The Poles are after the persimmons in spite of the danger to the bounty. It is telegraphed from Omaha that Count Lubinski and other Polish capitalists have been there for months investigating the beet sugar industry with the view to establishing large factories. They have decided to establish a factory and a refinery at a cost of $1,500,000, and will bring over a colony of Polish beet sugar farmers.

A GREAT PAWNSHOP.

Plans for the relief of the poor—practicable, visionary, and other kinds—have probably excited more attention from philanthropists and publicists during the past three years than at any previous time in all the world's history. The schemes proposed range all the way from the fundamentally correct idea of furnishing work to the unemployed, up to the wildest vagaries of some calling themselves Populists, and to the bloodiest mutterings of the anarchists. There is no doubt that the generosity of the classes, employed through organized charity, has been adequate to the relief of millions of deserving poor. On the other hand it is undeniable that vast sums have been squandered in improper distribution, and that thousands of the beneficiaries are undeserving according to any definition that law or morality or common sense is acquainted with.

It now appears that in thickly populated eastern sections of our country the actually needy are not confined to the ranks of those usually regarded as destitute. The wants of the latter can be seen at a glance; receiving no income from any source, and with nothing to sell, not even their labor, their only recourse is to the charity of the state or their better-supplied fellow-men. But evidence is accumulating that among those formerly held to be tardy and well-to-do, continued loss of employment has reduced many to the severest straits, and is surely and rapidly absorbing not only their little savings but personal possessions which are commonly regarded as indispensable. How best to aid these really deserving persons—who require only temporary assistance, not regular charity, is a new feature of the grave problem of the day. One solution is offered by the New York Tribune, in the establishment of a great pawnshop. That paper argues that since an immense amount of money and supplies is sure to be provided by the benevolent people of New York, and there is danger that it will not only be largely wasted but that its distribution will develop permanent evils, every citizen is bound so far as he can to avert these consequences by seeing to it that his own gifts are not unwisely bestowed. It continues, that of a different sort, though directly suggested by these considerations, is the relief that might be furnished by the creation, under proper regulations, of a great pawnshop similar in organization and administration to the Mont de Piété in Paris. In New York, as in all great cities, the pawnbrokerage system is little better than an instrument of rapacity; and the Tribune maintains that no greater service could be rendered to the deserving poor in the present emergency than by the establishment of an institution for loaning money to them upon the miscellaneous articles which they could spare now and which they might redeem upon payment of reasonable interest hereafter. By that means they might redeem themselves from present distress without loss of self-respect or practical forfeiture of their property. To generous men of wealth who would like to unite in some undertaking for the benefit of the unfortunate, but do not know what to do, it commends the idea of a legitimate pawnshop on a scale suitable to an experiment, and capable of expansion if the business warrants the investment. The idea does not seem to be a bad one by any means, and it has met with considerable encouragement. The workings of the experiment will be watched with interest in many other places where similar conditions exist and a similar remedy may be worth trying.

THE TAXATION OF MORTGAGES.

At first sight, and indeed in every view which the NEWS has as yet been able to give it, one of the bills already introduced into the lower house of the Territorial Assembly is ill-timed, impolitic, and unjust, and hence ought to be defeated. We refer to the measure to provide for the taxation of debts secured by mortgages and trust deeds, and repealing the law of the last Legislature exempting such possessions from taxation. The matter is one which need invoke neither party opposition nor party support. It deserves to be discussed on its merits; and the NEWS can accordingly consider it without any suspicion of partisanship.

The question of taxation is one that has puzzled more legislative brains than any other that ever arose since the world was made. In general it may be said that the very best plan of taxation contains features of inequality and injustice; the one that is the best is the one that contains the fewest of these; the ingenuity of man has not yet been equal to the task of devising one in which none of them appear. Similarly it may be said that common justice would suggest the laying of taxes against him who is best able to pay them; and as the rich man owns more than the poor man, and as he, through that fact, is and ought to be forced to bear the larger burden of taxation, so should the man who has money to lend rather than the man who is forced to borrow, pay the tax on the sum thus temporarily transferred. We admit that all this looks proper and incontrovertible and just.

But as a matter of fact, it does not work well in practice. The borrower invariably pays the tax. He may not pay it to the tax collector, but if not, he pays it to the money-lender. The latter has the one object ever in view—to make his money yield him a certain per cent in interest. Now, does any one suppose that if a capitalist is willing to loan money at 6 per cent, the borrower to pay the taxes, he will also be willing to loan at 6 per cent if he himself must pay the tax? It is idle to expect such generosity; capitalists are not built that way. The only conclusion is, therefore, that whether the lender or the borrower be legally held for the tax, the result in the end is the same,—the borrower has to pay it.

So much for the actual workings of the case. Now as to the particular conditions and circumstances that add importance to the question as it affects the community at this time. Whether fortunately or unfortunately, we are large borrowers. Eastern and western money has been loaned or loaned here and at certain rates of interest, fixed after an understanding that the mortgages securing it were exempt from taxation—that the property paid the tax. If the proposed law be enacted, the rate of interest on this money will be raised at once. But that is not the only or worst feature. The money will be withdrawn as quickly as possible, because the proverbial timidity of capital will cause it to shun a locality where legislative temper can in so short a time show such fickleness and change. As it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, either to renew the old loans at all, or to secure new ones, the foreclosing process will start—and no one knows where it will end.

It would be fortunate perhaps if the people of Utah were so abundantly supplied with money of their own that they did not need to borrow at all. As at present arranged, however, we seem to need outside capital to develop our resources and keep us going—at least, the records show that we have obtained a great deal. As long as this is our condition, we must cater a little to the wishes of those whose money we employ. And the next best thing to having all the money of our own that we need, is the having of such reputation for fairness, stability and thorough honesty that we can get all the money we want, and at the best rates, from elsewhere. The NEWS doesn't believe the bill now before the House is calculated to strengthen that kind of a reputation just at the present time.

LEARN IN YOUTH.

The instructions given by the Prophet Alma to his son Helaman afford food for thoughtful consideration by the young men in Israel today, as well as by some of more mature years. Said Alma:

Oh remember, my son, and learn wisdom in thy youth; yea, learn in thy youth to keep the commandments of God; yea, and cry unto God for all thy support; yea, let all thy doings be unto the Lord, and whithersoever thou goest, let it be in the Lord; yea, let thy thoughts be directed unto the Lord; yea, let the affections of thy heart be placed upon the Lord forever; counsel the Lord in all thy doings, and He will direct thee for good; yea, when thou liest down at night, lie down unto the Lord, that He may watch over you in your sleep; and when thou risest in the morning, let thy heart be full of thanks unto God; and if ye do these things ye shall be lifted up at the last day.

There are many people who think it unnecessary for the young to undergo a work of preparation to fit them for religious duties in life, and who argue that the rule of the scriptures is that in the very hour they need it shall be given to them what to say. Such an open construction as this to the sentiment quoted may well receive careful examination before it is adopted, as it involves a direct contradiction of the inspired counsel of the Prophet Alma. It is true that under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost men comparatively unlearned have founded those wise and prudent after the manner of the world, and will continue to do so. And it is also true that the men so blessed with a gift from the Source of superior knowledge did not acquire it through a wilful rejection or neglect of the opportunity to acquire the information and power which came to them as a revelation from heaven. It was rather their eagerness to obtain that knowledge and their realization of the necessity of its possession which wrought their faith up to the point of receiving it. Had any of them rejected in earlier life the opportunity for gaining the required understanding it would not have been bestowed upon them as a divine gift until they had repented of their former folly. A lesson of the experiences referred to is that unavoidable illiteracy is not a disqualification for receiving the blessings and exercising the powers of heaven; but it does not follow that wilful ignorance is a qualification.

The possession and proper use of an understanding of the sciences, of history, and of other branches of education, are an advantage to a servant of the Lord, notwithstanding assertions sometimes made to the contrary in public assemblages. It is a fact that there are many instances where the Latter-day Saint Elders have received this understanding by direct revelation in the time of necessity; the possession of the knowledge thus obtained, not their ignorance of the revelation bestowed, is what gave them power. Its sudden manifestation to them was a marked evidence of the interest of the Almighty in their behalf in the work they were performing; if the knowledge had been gained by them under other circumstances and through study, it would have been just as much a providence of the Lord in preparing for the special occasion of its use, though its acquirement may have shown less contrast with surrounding conditions.

Where a man of high educational attainments, however, seeks to minister as a servant of the Lord in the strength of his individual powers and outside of perfect reliance on the Almighty, he closes, by this course, the door to divine instruction. In his self-sufficiency he says in effect that he does not need the information which the Lord may have to reveal, consequently he is not in harmony with the Almighty and is not sustained by Him. So, when a man less learned concludes that he will not acquire an understanding of correct principles even in the providence of the Lord the opportunity is given him, he is in a similar state to the other in his antagonism to the purposes of the Almighty. Both are in the situation of refusing to receive light, and thereby set a premium upon ignorance of the divine will.

The Lord commands His people to seek wisdom by study and also by faith. The advice of Alma to his son to learn wisdom in his youth and the promise that the servants of the Lord will receive inspiration in the time of need, are exponents of principles of divine truth that operate in perfect accord. Those who rely wholly upon one to the rejection of the other are in about the same state of inconsistency, from the Gospel standpoint, as are those who would receive the ordinance either for the birth of the water or of the Spirit, but upon no consideration would consent to both.

The young people in Israel owe it to themselves to learn wisdom in the days of their youth; it is a sacred obligation resting on them as members of the Church of Christ. To wilfully reject opportunities for obtaining wisdom is to learn folly, which brings sorrow instead of blessing. When people have little chance to learn they are free from condemnation for not obtaining that which was beyond their reach. The man with the one talent, as related in the parable, was not adjudged to be under sin because he did not have five or ten talents, but because he had not put to its full and proper use the one which he was entrusted with.

In the advice given by the Prophet Alma is the rule of conduct for youthful Saints. It is the path in which Christ walked. In this age the Lord has revealed the laws and ordinances of the Gospel; its keys have been committed to the Saints. The power thus bestowed is for salvation. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," said Jesus. There can be no rejection of fundamental principle, no neglect of one's duty in the hope that the Lord will do all the work, and at the same time be harmony with heaven's laws. When men receive the light that is placed within their reach, and continue in God, He will add to them greater light, which will grow brighter and brighter "unto the perfect day." This is a truth that cannot be too deeply impressed upon the minds of the youth in Israel.

A MISSIONARY EXPERIENCE.

A private letter from Elder Albert Schoenfeld, formerly of Z. C. M. I., now on a mission in Dresden, the capital of Saxony, Germany, gives an incident in his recent experience that is worthy of reproduction as going to show how the Lord can turn everything for the best. While distributing tracts on the 9th of December, Elder Schoenfeld and his companion, Elder Tobler, from Santa Clara, were informed on by some evil-disposed persons; and as there is a law in Germany against "proselyting," they were promptly arrested and taken to police headquarters. There they had to show their passports, and also had to give proof of their visible means of support. Having done all this to the official's satisfaction, they were released with a good "talking to" and a warning. The Elders went home, knelt down in prayer before the Lord, and here came to both the thought of going back to the chief of police, giving him a tract, and bearing their testimony to him. This they did, and they added, that inasmuch as they kept the laws and bore their own expenses, would not the authorities rather be glad to have the people informed concerning the things of God? The officer told them to call in two days. They did so and he wrote out a permit, stating that Albert Schoenfeld and W. Tobler were permitted to distribute tracts under the auspices of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in said city of Dresden.

The incident is interesting and valuable as showing that the Lord has His own peculiar ways of accomplishing His designs, and that these ways can be learned by humble prayer; furthermore, that it is wise and proper for our Elders to keep the laws of the lands wherein they sojourn, at the same time not compromising or yielding away the requirements of the Lord. In this line of conduct the Lord will invariably bear out His servants; and if their way is not opened up before them, they have at least acquitted themselves of responsibility.

ABOLISH IT.

The News is ready to vote with both hands in favor of the proposal that the most appropriate and sensible change in the Utah Commission would be its entire abolishment. Changes in the personnel of that extraordinary board have sometimes improved, sometimes injured it as regards the plain non-partisan mission it was instituted to perform. We shall not say, because at this writing we do not know, that the personal changes now proposed would have the first or the second of these effects; but we can say, with full confidence, that the notion will be endorsed by all classes and parties, that the most acceptable change of all would be the wiping out of the useless and expensive set of sinecures altogether.

Whatever duty may lie upon the Legislature in the bringing about of this happy consummation should be undertaken at once and without malice. That at previous sessions the people's representatives have shown this degree of patriotism in vain is no reason why the present Assembly should not also essay it. The whole thing is a standing insult to the intelligence and honesty of the greatest of western commonwealths; and while, if it must be endured, it were probably less obnoxious if composed of residents of the Territory, especially where these are not of the office-holding class and are of irreproachable integrity, it seems to have outlived the measure of any possible usefulness and to be now worthy of nothing but immediate and painless extinction.

THE COUNTY BOUNDARY CHANGE.

When the News two or three weeks ago alluded to the proposition to change the present boundary lines between Grand and San Juan counties in this Territory, and mentioned some of the arguments that were urged in favor of such change, we took the liberty of suggesting that there were doubtless arguments on the other side also, and these should be presented without delay, so that the Legislature if called upon to deal with the matter might be able to do so intelligently and with all the facts before it.

With commendable alacrity Judge F. A. Hammond of Bluff, San Juan county, accepts the invitation thus extended, and in another column adduces reasons why the change should not be made. The main argument of the advocates of the change was, if we remember rightly, the great distance some of the citizens of San Juan, as at present bounded, had to travel in order to reach the county seat. This objection our present correspondent answers by giving assurance that a change in the location of the county seat will be made. Another point previously made—that in the belt proposed to be transferred there was little taxable property and it yielded little revenue—is met by the statement that the revenue from it is not inconsiderable, and that whether much or little, San Juan needs it.

The News' conclusions in the other article are still of force. Frequent changes in the lines of counties are not desirable under any circumstances, and should never be made except where public necessity and undisputed benefits all round make them imperative. Whether such conditions exist in the case of the two counties named, the Legislature will no doubt carefully ascertain before acting in the matter at all. We commend Judge Hammond's letter to all who are interested in the question, either on one side or the other.

FARMERS AND STOCKMEN.

A correspondent on another page of this paper somewhat sharply, and yet in all good-nature, takes the News to task for its answers to certain questions propounded to it a few weeks ago with reference to the respective rights of farmers and stockmen, and the injuries which the former are called upon to sustain from depredations by cattle and sheep running at large. He makes a strong, earnest presentation of his case, and we see nothing in his statement that we feel to take issue with.

On this great dispute there is abundance of room for calm and high-minded consideration. Agriculture is the great basis and bulwark of all our prosperity, and those who make it their pursuit are entitled to all the protection from marauders, either bipeds or quadrupeds, that the law can give. At the same time, cattle, horses and sheep are a necessity to every community; they are quite indispensable and as producers of money they take front rank among our resources. They and their owners are also entitled to every legitimate guaranty against onslaught, either legal or physical, that their opponents may attempt against them.

The importance of the two industries is the very reason why the line of demarkation between their respective rights and prerogatives is so difficult to draw. The diverse conditions prevailing in different parts of the country add to the difficulty. And yet it is not insurmountable, if the experience of Claremont county, Ohio, is correctly stated. The main trouble, we think, in previous attempts to secure suitable legislation in this Territory is that each party to the issue has tried to get advantage of the other; whereupon hasty and ill-considered compromises have followed, in which neither was benefited. The problem would not seem to be at all impossible of solution. Simply stated it is, that such regulations be made as to prevent either from infringing upon the rights of the other; and certainly to trespass upon and waste the property of another is a right belonging to no one.

One word more: the less law, and the less complicated the provisions that are framed for this question, the better. The people of Utah are averse as a rule to haling their neighbors before courts. This aversion should be encouraged, both on the score of profit and of amiability. The simpler the enactment, the more satisfactory it will be. Of course it will take a master's hand to frame such a statute, but the News thinks there are that kind of hands in the present Legislature.

CHANGES IN PALESTINE.

Rev. A. Ben-Oliel, who has been living at Jerusalem for some years and laboring as a missionary in the interest of the Presbyterian church, is at present in this country and attracting much attention among his co-religionists. Mr. Ben-Oliel is of Jewish descent, born at Tangers. Since his acceptance of Christian doctrines and baptism he has labored in various countries among the Hebrews and is said to have organized not a few churches. So far, however, his efforts in Palestine have not been crowned with much success, if this be measured by the number of converts made among the Jews in that country.

Speaking of the Holy Land to a representative of the Pittsburg Dispatch, he says that he is confident that the prophecies concerning the Hebrews are being fulfilled today. A few years ago there were not over 8,000 Hebrews in Palestine. There are now 80,000, of whom 40,000 live in Jerusalem. They are coming at the rate of 10,000 a year. On the remarkable return in later years of the rain, without which the country is about worthless, Mr. Ben-Oliel remarks that this is another fulfillment of prophecy.

He might have added, if he were a believer in Mormonism, that both the gathering of the scattered people and the return of the early rains and later rains, which for centuries were known only through history, are a direct answer to the dedicatory prayer offered by Orson Hyde on the Mount of Olives in the early part of the history of our Church. Indeed, to a thoughtful observer the present condition of Palestine is almost an ocular demonstration of the truth of Mormonism. There is a work going on among Israel and Judah alike, and it is a part of that great and marvelous work which was announced and commenced by Joseph the Prophet, as he was directed by the great Ruler of the destinies of the children of men.

MISLEADING FIGURES.

During December there landed at Ellis Island, N. Y., 11,262 immigrants from nearly every quarter of the globe. Three thousand were ignorant and unable to read and write, and more than half without any trade or profession. They will add largely to the free soup-house list during the winter.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The foregoing statement will doubtless have the effect intended upon the majority of those who read it, by giving them to understand that the ignorant and pauper element of Europe are admitted to this country notwithstanding the strict immigration laws. But persons who are acquainted with the workings of the immigration commissioners' office will at once detect the fraud. An account is taken of every arrival at Ellis Island, down to the youngest babe. And as three thousand children under seven or eight years of age would not be over the usual proportion of the little tots among the immigrants, it is quite probable that the babies alone constitute the number classed as "ignorant and unable to read or write." Of the "more than half without any trade or profession," this includes the wives and mothers as well as the children who arrive, and as these constitute perhaps more than half of the total number of immigrants, there is really nothing to form a basis for the suggestion that they will add largely to the free soup-house list. The News has had occasion recently to observe that "figures don't lie;" and this gives opportunity again to remark that they are sometimes made the means of expressing glaring untruths. Such is the case with the Inter-Ocean's statistics. We do not deny that the immigration question is becoming a grave one and in the near future will require heroic yet careful treatment. But the case is not helped a bit by falsehood—no case ever is.

CUT THEM DOWN!

A reduction of some ten thousand dollars per annum in the official salary part of the running expenses of a city like Salt Lake is no very great stroke of economy, and can certainly escape the odious designation of cheese-paring. Still, it is an indication that is hopeful and promising. The City Council in this first ordinance may have only inserted the thin edge of the wedge. At some later hour they may again wield the ax of wise retrenchment with lusty vigor, and in a particularly consistent mood they may even vote to reduce their own stipend. Patience, dear public, yet a little longer!

An argument frequently used against low salaries is that they are an inducement only to cheap and incapable men. There is some truth in this, as there is in almost every sophistry—but not much. Some of the best officials the city ever had, worked for nothing. In fact, the best qualification we can think of in any office-holder is that he obtained and occupies his place without thought of the monetary emoluments. A man who seeks election or appointment to any place merely for the money there is in it, is a good man to defeat. That ideal political condition where the office seeks the man, and not the man the office, can rarely be attained where fat salaries are the rule. In such cases it is men's cupidity, not their desire to promote the public interest, that makes them hunters or occupants of place. We'll warrant that plenty of equally good men for the public service can be found any day at much less compensation than even this reduced salary ordinance specifies. Honor has still a high and fixed value among our citizens, and patriotism is not altogether a lost attribute.

But is not the laborer worthy of his hire? Most certainly; we only urge a recollection of the terms "laborer" and "hire." Shall a man be asked to give his time and energies to the public without compensation at all? No; the public are able to pay their servants and ought to do so. Isn't a good man cheaper at a high salary than an incapable man at a low salary? Yes; but high salaries are not always an assurance of good men, any more than low wages and a cheap coat mark invariably an ignominious or a scrub.

We would have salaries so low that there would be no scramble for the places as a means of making a living and of feeding riotously at the public crib. We have seen too much of the practice, among party-workers and possessors of "influence," of scanning the list of offices, calculating the compensation of each, and then bravely and bolsterously setting out to capture this, that or the other position—anything, so long as it pays so much per year. It is a disgrace. If the City Council under the pressure of heavy financial burdens and a sense of the need of rigid economy can help to correct this evil by removing a portion of its cause, well and good—we're with them. Meanwhile we yield the floor to the carping critic who now will doubtless want to say the News is arguing that an experienced man is worth no better wages than a clown.

INTO SPACE FROM MONT BLANC.

One of the great scientific undertakings of the age, the erection of an observatory on Mont Blanc, was completed last year by the energetic efforts of the French astronomer Jansen. Three years previous he had made an ascent for the purpose of studying the solar spectrum, and by his report to the Academy of Science he succeeded in interesting such men as Prince Roland Bonaparte, who was recently in Salt Lake City, M. Eiffel and Baron de Rothschild for the project, and with their aid it was soon realized.

The first question was to find the rock for a foundation among the seemingly endless masses of snow and ice. The engineer charged with this task ran a gallery into the snow about forty feet from the summit, but although this was continued for seventy feet nothing was found but frozen snow. Another gallery was run in an opposite direction, but with the same result. Nothing then remained but to build the house in the snow.

The structure was prepared at Mentone. It was given the form of a quadrangular truncated pyramid, two stories high, of which the lower story was to be buried three-fourths in the snow, an arrangement necessary on account of the windstorms that sometimes rage among the Alps. The whole weighed fifteen tons. It was divided among carriers, who succeeded in bringing it to the summit. They commenced their work in the summer of 1892 and finished it the following summer. By the 8th of September 1893, everything was ready, and Jansen hastened to the place and commenced his labors.

The importance to science of the observations possible in this high altitude servatt be overestimated. M. Jansen has devoted much of his life to the study of the spectra of gases and vapors forming the atmosphere of the earth. This he has done with a view of learning something definite about the atmospheres of other bodies in our solar system. He soon discovered that the solar spectrum exhibits the lines and bands peculiar to oxygen, and the conclusion would seem warranted that the atmosphere of the heavenly luminary contains gases similar to those of the earth. But did those lines originate from anything in the sun or were they merely a reflex of the earth's atmosphere? This question could be solved only by observations from various heights. After an experiment in 1888, ten thousand feet above the sea, Jansen announced that the lines referred to were due entirely to the oxygen of the earth's atmosphere. From the top of the highest mountain in Europe the astronomer will continue his studies. The question is to determine whether the other planets are habitable or not. In the atmosphere of Mars vapor has been discovered by means of the spectral analysis. The seas are therefore thought to be real oceans and the polar caps, snow and ice. On Saturn, too, vapor has been detected, and perhaps on Venus. M. Jansen, speaking of these discoveries and their importance in the further advance of our knowledge about the worlds around us, is quoted as follows:

When these investigations are finished; when science shall have determined rigorously the astronomic conditions in which each planet is placed; when she shall have fixed the geological period, the chemical constitution of the star, the nature of the gases which form its atmosphere and that of the fluids which compose its oceans, then she will be able to say with certainty if the planets are habitable and what is the nature of the life they can support, for these are the points which determine the question. It is a fine problem that we are on the point of solving; perhaps the highest that human intelligence has ever proposed.

PREACHERS' PECULIARITIES.

Recently a number of our correspondents have treated the readers of the News to a number of suggestions for the benefit and guidance of preachers. Some of these hints have been quite pertinent and worthy of being adopted. Some particular habitual peculiarities are injurious to both preacher and congregation. A common one is for the speaker to make the introductory announcement that he is dreadfully scared. It is bad enough to be in such a condition, but the situation is made still worse by making a statement of its existence, for the following reasons: The information is not edifying; it creates a feeling of discomfort in the minds of the congregation, who, in their commiseration for the speaker are liable to have their thoughts diverted from his discourse. Sensitive people are sometimes seized with apprehension lest the scare should result in a collapse. The sympathy and mental activity of the assemblage ought to be centered upon the thoughts of the discourse rather than upon the person who expresses them. Neither is it conducive to the growth of intelligence and edification for the preacher to preface his remarks with a statement to the effect that he has nothing to say. This announcement is unprofitable, because unnecessary. If the alleged blank mental condition of the preacher be correct, the audience will make the discovery before he proceeds any great distance with his discourse. Should his mind, after all, prove to be prolific, it will be clear to the auditors that the statement was not only superfluous but inaccurate. This will naturally affect the estimate of the speaker's reliability.

A LONE VOYAGER.

The passing through this city, en route to the Midwinter Fair from Chicago, of a canvas covered folding boat, is suggestive of some of the exploits of its owner and builder, Wm. A. Andrews, of Boston. The boat is only fourteen feet long, and its fame is recorded in the legend attached to it while on exhibition at the World's Fair—"The smallest boat that ever carried a passenger across the Atlantic." On the 28th of July, 1892, Captain Andrews started from Atlantic City, New Jersey, as the sole occupant of this little craft, and on September 8th of that year landed at Lisbon, Portugal. He afterwards attended the Spanish celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus.

Captain Andrews began his sea going exploits in 1878. Previous to that time he had been a carpenter, then a worker in a piano factory. His first boat was the Nautilus, in which he made the trip from Boston to Havre, going in forty-five days. His vessel was nineteen feet long. Ten years later, in 1888, he made the voyage from Boston to Queenstown in a dory, the Dark Secret. This boat was but fifteen feet long, and was sixty-one days on the voyage. The third transatlantic voyage was on the Mermald, fifteen feet long, from Boston to Antwerp, in fifty-seven days. On each of these trips the lone voyager experienced considerable hardships from storms. His fourth and last voyage thus far was the most pleasant of any.

The venturesome Bostonian is now preparing for another ocean journey almost twice as long as any he has yet essayed. He proposes to go from San Francisco to Yokohama in the little craft which has just been shipped west. At first he thought of making the trip from Liverpool, but finally concluded it would be better to venture from the Golden Gate, as the distance would be less and he would be more in the way of ocean steamers, to be picked up in case of a mishap.

Of course there are a good many people who look upon Captain Andrews as a crank in his venturesome expedition; and most people of sense will at least consider him egregiously foolhardy. But there is a financial side to his eccentric proceedings, senseless and useless as they may appear. By means of his exploits he not only acquires considerable fame, but finds in this form of recklessness a much more profitable employment than his old business of wood-working. He is now the recipient of considerable sums from various sources because of the prominence into which he has been brought; and as he is of an economical turn of mind he has netted already, it is said, a snug little sum which requires but a small increase to enable him to spend the remainder of his days in comfortable retirement with his family. He is now fifty years of age and robust in health. He expects to sail for Yokohama early in the summer. And while we cannot say he deserves a safe and prosperous journey, we still hope he may have it.

THE SIBERIAN RAILROAD.

The Siberian railroad is nearing its completion and many people are already directing their attention towards the fertile land which this road will make accessible to the world. Word comes from St. Petersburg that it is the intention of the Russian government to open for settlement a belt of land along the six thousand miles' long road, several miles wide on each side. To desirable settlers the land will practically be a free gift. The importance of this movement may be understood when it is considered that a territory as large as Germany, Austria, Holland, Belgium and Denmark, with favorable climate and exceedingly fertile soil, will thereby be thrown open to the surplus population of the world. At present all industrial products are sold at a high price in Siberia, and it is therefore natural that a lively commerce will be one of the first results of the completion of the great project. The country has an abundance of mines containing iron, gold, coal, salt, etc., which only need more labor for development to yield enough to enrich the nation. With all these possibilities it is not unlikely that the opening up of the Siberian railroad will relieve our statesmen from the difficult task of solving the immigration problem, by diverting a greater part of the current of home seekers to the vast country in Asia which has hitherto been almost a terra incognita. It is also stated that by the aid of this road a traveler will be able to trot around the earth in forty-five days.

THE SITUATION in Florida has resolved itself into this decisive condition: The Duval club says the fight will occur as advertised on Jan. 25; Governor Mitchell says it will not. What more can anybody ask?

GEN. ALGER's boast, that he "began life as a barefooted boy," moves a flip-sant Michigan paper to say that "se did all of us." This in turn admits of the amendment: what about those "of us" who are girls?

AFTER READING that the Bell telephone has paid more than twenty-three million dollars in dividends in the past twelve years, it would be a bold old fossil who could still insist that talk is cheap.

CONGRESS COSTS the United States government $8,000 per day. It isn't worth the money, at least in hard times like these.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.

FARMERS AND STOCKMEN.

Noting three questions recently sent you in regard to sheep and stock running at large, and your answers thereto, permit me to make a few further observations.

The questions were these: 1st: If there were no benefits to be derived from sheep or stock, should they not be declared a nuisance, running at large?

2nd. Is it right and just for the owners of animals to turn them loose in or around our fields?

3rd.—Should they not be required to fence their own land if they wish to turn their animals on it? (not animals out, as it appears in the News.)

The only correct answer that can be given to the first question is yes. Now let us see what Webster's definition of the word nuisance is. First—That which annoys or gives trouble and vexation—that which is offensive or noxious; second (law)—that which incommodes or annoys, something that produces inconvenience or damage. Nuisances are public when they annoy citizens in general, private when they affect individuals only.

According to this definition they cannot be called anything else but a nuisance. As we read history we find that in the first settlement of Australia the emigrants took with them rabbits as pets, or for profit, or both. Now the animals have increased to such an extent that the government, a great many years ago, (and no doubt it holds good yet) offered a large sum of money to any one that could devise a method for the successful extermination of these (pets) pests. Even a few years ago there was a bounty paid in this Territory for the scalps of rabbits. What was the reason? The great damage they did. No matter how much benefit they might be otherwise to the human family they would still continue this destruction if allowed to run at large. It is the same with sheep and stock. But the question in this case is whose right and duty it is to take care of and prevent them doing this damage (for be it known we are not advocating in this case the usual remedy for living nuisances, namely extermination), because "there are benefits, many and great, incalculable and indispensable, to be derived from sheep and stock." It is certainly the duty of those that keep them for profit. If this was not the case, they certainly will put them in places where they will do the most good to their owners no matter how much damage they do to other people.

This reminds me that a few weeks ago I came to a crowd of men that were discussing this question. A man that holds a very prominent position here, and has had experience in these matters, said that the great area of government land here that ought to be a great blessing to the people was being made a curse, because a few men could feed thousands of head of sheep and stock there in the summer, and with the same animals destroy the farmer's crops in the fall.

If sheep or stock men want anything better than this, I don't know where they would go to get it.

There is another thing that should be mentioned; that is, that we have a sugar factory here now, and the beets that are raised to supply the same are late in maturing; and long before the beets were dug and while being gathered, the stock were all over them night and day. In fact the owners of animals turn them in just when they please and think they have a right to do so; such is the force of this pernicious custom and the lack of law to prevent it.

But suppose our legislators at the present session would give us a law similar to this: "Claremont county, Ohio, several years ago voted upon a stock law involving the question of allowing stock to run at large or keeping them within enclosures at all times. The fence law prevailed and property increased in value from that time. The stock was bred up, farms were carefully cultivated, and an era of prosperity never known before began and kept up, on account of every man attending to his own business, fencing his own farm and caring for his own stock. If such could be done in Utah, exclusive of the public range, similar results would certainly follow and the vexed question of trespassing animals, estrays and litigation between farmers and stockmen would cease." Mr. Shoemaker, assistant editor, Irrigation Age, Salt Lake City.

I would also refer you to Mr. Smythe's account of the trouble between stockmen and honest settlers in Wyoming. You will find it in the Irrigation Age for 1892. In the 1st of July number is given an exhaustive history of the affair which gave so much trouble, and cost so many lives, and would have resulted in the utter destruction of the stockmen and cowboys but for the timely arrival of United States cavalry. It also gives the picture of the man that said: "There are too many men and too few cattle in Wyoming now."

There are men that say they have a right to turn any kind of animals on their own land either with or without a fence, and the only right their neighbors have is to prove that their animals did the damage and collect it in court. This seems to be the substance of the answer of the News to the second question. Herein lies the foundation of the whole question.

In answering the third question you say, "We prefer to give no absolute opinion, and a rule that might be right and wholesome in one locality would perhaps be absurd and injurious in another." And then you say: "We know very well which would be the easier of the two plans if that were the only question to be considered." I am sorry you did not show us which was the easiest way to do. I will give a statement of conditions here, supposing they are similar to other parts of the Territory. We have one field (all farming land), a thousand acres more or less in extent, lying between two cities about three miles apart. There is a main road on one side, and a street running parallel through the center of the field, and mostly government dry land on the other side. Running in the other direction are streets a quarter of a mile apart, or about six or eight streets. The people of these two cities own this field in lots of from five to twenty acres. Now, any time during the year when work can be done in the field you will see men going in and out at most of these streets just as it suits their own convenience. Just imagine men hauling grain or lucern hay getting off and on their loads to open and shut gates if even we had them at all these places in order to keep these animals out of the field, and on land where most of the year a cow would starve to death on a hundred acres of it if it was possible to keep her out of the field! But we will suppose there is feed on it and it is for the good of the people that our animals should have the privilege of using it. In this case all that would need to be done is to put a good fence around it, put your animals in and shut the gate and there being no such thing as plowing, hauling grain or hay, or any other farm work, these gates would not be disturbed only when it is necessary to put animals in or take them out. This is just as it is with all our pastures, by far the easiest and best way, besides being the only just solution of this vexed question.

Your idea in regard to counties that are unfit for anything but grazing is all right to declare stock free to run at large in that county. In the next sentence you seem willing to accord to each community to regulate these matters according to its own notion of right and propriety. We have never had this in the form we ought to have it; I mean, all the law we have had is either to fence out, or a no fence law. What we ought to have is a law to fence in and every one take care of his own animals, with the exception of grazing counties as stated above. Instead of this, some men build and fence their own land in the field and make a pasture of their neighbors' crops—a hard story, you say, but nevertheless true.

I wish to say right here, that it is not my purpose, or in my heart to find fault with any one, the only object I have is to help to bring about a better state of affairs in regard to this matter than exists at the present time. If you could publish the law as it stands in Claremont county, Ohio, in regard to this matter for the benefit of our coming Legislature and the people generally, you would confer a great favor.

Yours Respectfully,

X.

Written for this Paper.

HE SEEKS NO CHANGE.

BLUFF, San Juan County, Utah,
January 8, 1894.

Dear Sir:—I see by your issue of January 2nd SEMI-WEEKLY an article relating to the changing of the boundary lines of San Juan and Grand counties. In this proposed change a slice from this county twenty-five miles wide will be added to Grand county. Now this, to my mind, would be very wrong, for the reason that our present revenue is scarcely sufficient to keep up a respectable county organization, and a goodly per cent of our taxes are derived from cattle and sheep that are ranged upon this portion of our county; besides this there are quite a number of fine ranches that have deeds or United States patents that are taxable, being the only tracts of land that have secured government title; these are located also on this tract proposed to be given to Grand county.

One reason set forth in behalf of this change is the long distance that citizens located on that side of San Juan county have to travel on any business with the county, as the county seat is at Bluff. This objection would be well taken were it not the fact that the county seat is sure to be removed to Monticello, a more central point. When this shall have been accomplished, those who make this objection will have less distance to reach Monticello than they would to reach Moab, the present county seat of Grand county. Our revenue is mostly derived from taxes assessed on our stock raising industry. This is fast decreasing as our cattle range is overstocked, and some large herds found here a few years ago have been removed, which of course tends to lessen our revenue. This is not an agricultural county; this industry is very limited, and for lack of irrigation water must remain so until we have means and skill to make a success of reservoiring water. Again, we have no mines that we can depend upon for support or taxation. This kind of property is confined to a limited effort at placer digging here on the river, and a few undeveloped lead or silver claims on the Blue mountains.

Thus it can, I think, be seen why we should object to the proposed change, for it will largely decrease our already very limited revenue. There is now ranging on the strip of country in question at least 12,000 head of horned stock and hundreds of horses; and there is some of the finest real estate found in the country.

There is another subject I wish to speak of; it is the craze or fad now being followed by many people of flocking down here and roving over hill and dale in search of what is termed Aztec relics and remains. This has been going on now for some four years, pursued mostly by parties from Colorado. One party sold his collection, the result of some two or three months' exploration or search, I am told, for $4000. The Messrs. Witherill, also from Colorado, have recently left here with one of the largest collections yet obtained. They found in one place some seventy odd skeletons buried some eight feet under the present surface of the ground. Besides these bones were large quantities of relics, consisting of pottery ware of very unique design, war clubs, arrow heads of immense size, feather robes, etc. These parties, I understand, are in the employ of some society in the East who pay the boys a stipulated wage per day or month. Judging from what other collections have been sold for, this last lot should bring some $8,000 or more. You may ask, well, what shall we do, or what can we do about it? Can not the Legislature pass a law prohibiting people from coming into this Territory and desecrating the graves of the dead, and if these dead in the interest of science, must be resurrected, reserve the right to the bona fide citizens of Utah? These relics of a lost race I think should be placed in our museum, and let our professors and scientists have the first right of examining them, and then give the results to the world. In this much I am a protectionist. I would have all this raising of the dead bones of this extinct race confined to the people of Utah in general and to the citizens of San Juan county in particular, provided there is any money in it; for we need it awfully bad. We have no hard feelings towards our Colorado neighbors, for they have been and are among our best friends; but when it comes to dividing up the honors, and especially the profits of this raising of dead business, we feel to object, and I am thinking that should our boys make a raid over into Colorado and commence to carry off the relics of their Indians they would make a kick, and their governor, Mr. Waite, would feel like "wading in blood up to the horses' bridle," and staying with it "till hell freezes over."

We have had two weeks of frolicking, rollicking, dancing, and one very good theatrical performance, "Leah, the Forsaken." It was placed on the boards by the presidents of the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement association, Mrs. Lucinda Read, Miss Ann Bailes and Miss Lucinda Neilson. Miss Ann Bailes took the leading character, in which role she made a decided hit. All other parts were well sustained, especially the part of Roland, taken by Prof. William Allen, our district school teacher.

I now feel, as to our holiday season, like some of the brethren way back in 1856 and '57—the time of the reformation—"I am glad it is over." We are having what we call down here a cold snap; the mercury says four degrees above zero. A good many are complaining of bad colds and sore throats, on account, no doubt, of our late dissipating.

Our Co-op. declared no dividend this year for the first time—cause, hard times. We have plenty to eat and good store clothes to wear. Most of the brethren sport a "biled shirt," which used to be the exception a few years ago. We have plenty of beef to eat and most of the families have a year's and some have two years' bread stuff on hand. We also have plenty of debts and we expect to pay them all, without discount or defalcation.

All our improvement associations are in good running order, especially the Young Ladies', who have continued their meetings throughout the entire year. We have baptized six new members into the Church since that fool gold-craze we had down here last winter. They are all fine, intelligent men; one young man was raised and educated in the Catholic church. They all bid fair to make good, staunch Latter-day Saints. Our new rock meeting house is finished up to the square and carpenters are now engaged in putting on the roof, thanks to our worthy Bishop and counselors, the building committee.

Thanks, my boy, to you for your reply some time ago to an article from here signed "Walter," wherein the writer attempted to go for me in regard to my attitude on the Ute Indian bill business. I felt when you left him there was not enough of him in sight to strike at.

Success to the NEWS, the champion of the right and a terror always to the evil-doer.
F. A. HAMMOND.

Written for this Paper.

AMONG THE CHEROKEES.

MANARD, Indian Territory.—On Tuesday the 19th at 10 p.m., the Iron Mountain train on the Mo. P. drew up at Fort Gibson, an evacuated United States barracks, situated on the rocky banks of the Grand River, just above where this beautiful stream empties in, and with the Verdigris, helps to swell the Arkansas, which in its serpentine curves winds its way from the Rocky Mountains to the Mississippi. Elders Harper and Jeppson were in waiting for their Salt Lake friend, and soon the noise of our wagon was heard rolling over the prairie. The moon shone brightly, the air was keenly cold, and by the time we reached Manard, a distance of nine miles, we were chilled through, and accordingly enjoyed the log fire on the old hearth stone, in the Elder's room of our Indian home.

Manard is situated about half-way between Fort Gibson and Tablequah, the capital of the Cherokee nation—a city built irregularly among the trees, and rugged, rolling hills of that region. The first thing that greets the eye of an Elder at Manard is a small frame building under the shade of a huge oak tree, on the brow of a low hill, at the back of which is an almost endless forest. Near by is a little log house and blacksmith shop. Inscribed on the front of the frame building is, "Manard P. O. Wm. H. Hendricks, P. M." About two hundred yards further we come to the Bayou, the famous stream near which a part of the settlement known as Manard is situated. After having crossed this creek, on a foot log of course—for there are no bridges in this country—we continue eastward half a mile, still winding through the forest, until we come to a little rise of ground. Ascending this and to the left of the main road, we come to a double log house, with gables east and west, the chimneys on those outer walls. In front is a porch extending out from the main building, and leading back between the two log rooms continues through to the kitchen at the rear. To the right is the lot (as a barnyard is termed here) with barns and corn cribs. East of the house is a small peach orchard, set out eight years ago by two Mormon Elders. Extending east, north and west, for a half mile or more, are the fields, while between the farm and north of the house is a garden-patch fenced in with pickets. A splendid cellar and granary is between that and the kitchen, also built by the Elders. Under the projecting roof of the granary is a well of good cold water, in which swings "the old oaken bucket, the iron bound bucket, the moss covered bucket that hangs in the well." To the west is the smoke house, where during the winter season the tables are filled with fat sides of meat, while on the hooks are hung the hams of hogs which have run in the woods. To the west of the smoke house is the cowpen, where many a time we've wrestled with the calves in the spring, while milking Aunty's fat cows. Inside the inclosure around the house is a variety of trees, native of this climate, such as the elm, cedar, maple and walnut.

Climbing the front steps we will now see what's inside. To the left and passing through the door we are welcomed into the apartment of our friends. The room is papered and decorated with various pictures. Among the furniture is an organ which generally furnishes an accompaniment to the songs of the Elders. Their pictures taken in groups and otherwise adorn the instrument, showing the appreciation our Aunty has for her boys. By the fire-place sits our good old "Uncle" William H. Hendricks and near by Auntie, Sister A. E. Hendricks, and Henry, a Shawnee, an adopted boy of our friends, constituting her family. Just across the hall is the Elders' room, furnished with beds and other conveniences of comfort, while standing over the cheerful fireplace is the native walnut mantelpiece, on which many articles, books, etc., are found, showing that men of mental culture dwell here. The kitchen must not be forgotten. A huge range, and a long table with lumber benches around it are about the only furniture. Many a meal has been enjoyed around that hospitable board.

As to the meeting house: Two years ago in January the Elders and Saints met on a selected spot of ground about three hundred yards south from here, where they assembled in a circle and unitedly dedicated to the Lord the spot where now stands the Manard meeting house.

In the course of the dedicatory prayer we asked God's blessings upon this people, the land and the work of God in this country, which has made rapid strides ever since. Plans drawn and all arrangements made—the work was left in the hands of Presiding Elder Rawlins, who, aided by the Elders, went to work, and Oct. 16, 1892, the best log house in the Cherokee nation was dedicated to the Lord. The building is about 16 x 30, with three twelve-light windows on either side, a door in the western gable end, the ceiling half circle, is ceiled with nicely grained lumber well oiled; the side walls, pulpit and benches are white; the stand is a little elevated; the floor is clean enough for a table top, and everything shows the workmanship of men of culture and refinement, so clean and neat that it becomes a barrier to men who are accustomed to spitting on floors of meeting houses. It may keep some away, but the refining influence has a tendency to teach them better. As yet we have been successful in maintaining proper respect for our sacred little edifice. The meeting house, and groves of timber surrounding it, the farm, the orchard and garden, the stock and poultry, the house and yard, and every spot of land around our Indian home seem blessed and hallowed by a sacred influence arising from the blessings of God through the labors and prayers of His servants.

A word about our Christmas day at Manard: The characteristic good-heartedness of our friends was exemplified on this day by the welcome extended to the many friends of the Elders and their kinsfolk. Between twenty-five and thirty persons feasted at their hospitable board, where the turkey (which for some time past has been fattened for the occasion) with other meats and delicacies abundant, making as sumptuous a repast as a king would care to sit down to. After dinner all assembled in the front room where appropriate Christmas services were held, songs or Christmas chimes were sung by the Elders, and I had the privilege of relating the life of Christ from the manger to His ascension, and in conclusion showed that He had been to earth again, and had commenced the "restitution of all things spoken of by the mouths of all of the holy Prophets since the world began," showing that a work was being done by the Latter-day Saints preparatory to His second coming and ushering in of the Millennium.

ANDREW KIMBALL.

MANARD, Dec. 26, 1893.

CONFERENCE AT MANARD.

Editor Deseret News.—Since the 19th of December, the Elders and Saints of Manard, Indian Territory have been favored with a visit from President Andrew Kimball. Saturday morning the Elders met in Priesthood meeting, Elder Ephraim Jeppson was sustained as presiding Elder in this field. In the afternoon the Saints assembled in special conference, the first part of the meeting was occupied by the young Elders speaking on the fundamental principles of the Gospel, after which Elder Kimball spoke on the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, setting forth in plainness his proofs from the Bible. At the evening service presiding Elder R. M. Harper spoke on the principles of salvation for the dead. Elder Kimball then continued on the subjects of the restoration and apostasy.

Sunday morning, the young ladies bore their testimonies and spoke on the various organizations existing in the Church and the benefits derived therefrom. Elder Harper spoke on the atonement. In conclusion Brother Kimball showed conclusively that the Lamanites were of the house of Israel, and that Zion was established in the tops of the mountains.

Elder Kimball occupied the time during the Sacrament meeting in the afternoon, giving general instructions to the Saints. Meeting continued in the evening in which we received some more valuable instructions from our president. In fulfillment of a dream given to Elder Kimball while in Oklahoma he had the privilege of baptizing a Cherokee lady at Manard.

All the meetings were well attended and a spirit of interest manifested with an increasing desire for more. We held a meeting each evening in which Brother Kimball put the young Elders through a course of training. The health of all the Elders and Saints is good, the weather is beautiful, no snow or rain, yard cleaning is in fashion, all would think spring had come. Brother Kimball has gone into the southern part of this nation and among the Choctaws.

Respectfully,

D. W. COOLBEAR,

Clerk.

Manard, Indian Territory, December 27, 1893.

CHURCH THEOLOGY CLASS.

The class was opened with prayer by Elder Bywater. After the consideration of several incidental questions and a review of the previous lesson, Dr. Jas. E. Talmage proceeded with his lecture. Finishing the subject matter of Leaflet No. 10, the last subdivision, "Bestowal of the Holy Ghost," was discussed. This ceremony was performed by the laying on of hands, as stated in the Fourth Article of Faith. It was so practiced among the former-day Saints, for we read in the Scriptures, "When these Apostles had laid their hands on them, they received the Holy Ghost." Christ also performed the ceremony in this manner, when he appeared to the Nephites on this continent. In the Church of Christ this ordinance is the same today, confirmation being associated with it. It is declared unto the candidate that he is now a member of the Church, which is not done in the ordinance of baptism. The authority to bestow the Holy Ghost through the laying on of hands belongs to the Melchisedek Priesthood, spiritual gifts being promised to those who receive and honor this Comforter. Moroni, the last of the Nephite prophets, after enumerating and explaining many of the gifts spoken of says: "And all these gifts come by the Spirit of Christ, and they come unto every man severally, according as he will."

Closely connected with the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel is the Sacrament, provided as it is for those who, by complying with the same, have become members of Christ's Church. The word sacrament has a specific and general application. Some religious denominations recognize two, some seven, some any number of sacraments. To the Latter-day Saints the Sacrament means only one ordinance, viz: the Lord's Supper. The institution of the Sacrament at the feast of Passover can only be connected with that feast, inasmuch as the sacrifice offered on those occasions was not only in commemoration but considered a type of the coming sacrifice of Messiah. One was an annual feast, the other was to be partaken of often. After His resurrection Christ also established the Sacrament among the Nephites.

In order to be a fit partaker of the sacrament, some preparation is needed. Paul says: "Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord—he eateth and drinketh damnation to himself." We ought to make reconciliation of any wrong done and partake with "clean hands." The priests who administer the sacrament are commanded that no one except worthy members of the Church, shall be permitted to eat or drink. Among other denominations this is also observed in some way; "communion" being only given to members of good standing.

Benediction was pronounced by Bishop Preston.

New Mexico's World's Fair exhibits are to be used for advertising purposes by the territorial bureau of immigration.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

At Friday evening's meeting of the Ogden board of education a resolution passed to memorialize the Legislature to authorize the county court to attach adjacent outlying school districts in the county to the city district.

In the suit of Gilbert D. Amos vs. S. M. Green, et al., the hearing upon the order to show cause why an injunction and restraining order should not issue has been referred to Judge S. A. Merritt.

The marriage of U. S. Marshal Brigham with Mrs. Luella C. Young took place January 10th at No. 1058 south Fifth East street, the Rev. Dr. Utter officiating. Only a few of the relatives and immediate friends of the contracting parties were present.

FILLMORE, Millard Co., Jan. 11, 1894. —Yesterday morning the wife of Mr. Norton, a barber, formerly of Deseret and Provo, while in a fit fell into the fire and was terribly burned. One arm is completely roasted and the poor woman's body is burned so badly that her life is despaired of. A. B.

The question of a creamery, says the Millard county Blade, is getting into such shape as to be nearly a certainty. A. J. Henry was appointed a committee of one to visit the Fillmore creamery and collect practical data, to be submitted next Monday evening, when it will be in order to organize a dairy company.

The many friends of William S. Burton will regret to learn of the very sad and painful accident that happened to him at the Burton-Gardener company's mill, Monday, in the loss of two fingers at the second joints of the left hand. While using the joiner his hand slipped from the piece of wood on to the knives, and in a second his fingers were off.

The acting fish commissioner at Washington has notified Fish Commissioner A. M. Musser, of Utah, that the commissioner has allotted to Utah 100,000 lake trout eggs. These are to be shipped from Northville, Michigan. Mr. Musser will ascertain at once when the eggs are to be delivered here, and will make arrangements for placing them in Utah Lake.

"Friday, near Cisco, Utah," says the Ogden Standard, "an unknown man was run down and killed by train No. 2 on the Rio Grande Western. No particulars of the affair were obtainable at a late hour this morning."

Inquiries were made at the various Rio Grande Western offices in this city today regarding the rumor and in each instance the positive declaration was made that the report was untrue.

A fire said and believed to be of incendiary origin occurred in the Warwick building at No. 112 west First South street at 10:30 o'clock Jan. 11. The structure is the property of the Jennings estate and is rented by Mrs. Townsend and run as a lodging house. The seat of the fire was underneath a stairway where there were evidences of kerosene. A fire occurred at the same place the day after New Years.

In the matter of the application of George C. Whitmore, the Nephi banker, for a writ of habeas corpus, Judge Miner delivered the opinion of the court, in which Judge Bartholomew concurred and Judge Smith dissented.

The petition for habeas corpus was therefore denied, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Salt Lake county, in compliance with the commitment of the Third district court.

A syndicate article on the Mormon choir, written by Eugene Traugher, appeared in the Denver News and a number of Eastern journals yesterday. It is two columns long, contains a brief sketch of each of the leading members of the choir, Professor Stephens and portraits of Bessie Dean Allison, Lizzie Thomas Edwards, Nellie Druce Pugsley and Agnes Olsen Thomas. The article is well written and highly complimentary.

Quantities of gas shale have recently been discovered in Sanpete county. Ledges have also been located near Mayfield, in that county. The cropings run forty per cent gas, while it is said the Australian gas shale used here runs eighty per cent and costs forty dollars a ton. The article from Sanpete county, it is said, can be laid down in this city at a big profit, even at twenty dollars a ton. It is thought it will improve greatly in quality as it is developed.

The Iron county Record says that the Great Eastern Reservoir & Irrigation company is taking out a high line canal from Coal creek for the purpose of bringing under cultivation the bench land north of Cedar City. Two miles of the ditch is already completed, and as soon as the frost is out of the ground work will be resumed and the canal extended six miles further this season. There is a large acreage of arable land subject to entry under the proposed ditch.

Some parties out in the hills, six miles west of Manti, in Sanpete county, recently discovered a strange freak of nature. It is an aperture in the earth surrounded by limestone formation, from which issues hot, dry air—so hot that it melts all the snow for a considerable distance around. It also emits or "puffs" out dry dust in considerable quantities. The discoverers dug down into it about six feet and found the heat to increase. There is no disagreeable odor to the fumes.

Robert Martin, the section foreman who was seriously injured at Frisco, Southern Utah, on Thursday last, says the Ogden Sun of last evening, succumbed to his injuries at the Union Pacific hospital this morning. The unfortunate man received his injuries by being accidentally run over by a car while attending to his duties, and although everything has been done to save his life since his arrival at the hospital all efforts were without avail. Deceased was a young man and unmarried.

Two youngsters captured a large eagle in the Paysen canyon on Monday and paraded it on Main street the same day. It had been frozen or injured in some way and appeared to be very tame. As some school children were viewing the huge bird, the boys who held it by the tips of the wings tossed it toward a boy named John Schramm, when the eagle fastened its claws in his leg. It was immediately taken off, but the wound was a painful one and the injured boy was taken home in a sleigh.

The News has received a copy of the invitation being circulated through Utah county for a grand reunion and camp fire of the men of that county who served in the Blackhawk Indian war in this Territory—1865-1868. The event will take place on Jan. 24th at Springville. All the veterans now living in Utah county are invited and will be the guests of their Springville comrades. The chairman of the committee writes: "We expect to form a society in the county for the purpose of having a reunion in one of the towns of Utah county once a year."

While out on the Little Mountain range rounding up cattle a few days ago, says the Brigham Bugler, Joseph Fredsham, one of Call's Fort's most respected citizens, was the chief participant in a most painful accident. The horse he rode stumbled or slipped and fell on his side, crushing the left leg of the rider, breaking both bones below the knee. Joseph Yates, Mr. Fredsham's partner, was present and assisted the wounded man to remount his horse. He rode several miles horseback, then was taken into a buggy and afterwards into a sleigh, in which he reached home.

The friends of Peter Cremin and William Shultz, says the Boise, Idaho Statesman of yesterday, who left here last week for Snake river, are solicitous for their safety. The young men went out to bring in two mules which were lost at a former trip to some placer mines on the Snake.

The fact that a blinding snow storm has raged on the Snake river plains ever since their departure and that they have been overdue here for several days gives rise to the belief they are lost.

The sugar Co., says the Lehi Banner, have got the new contracts for 1894, and are distributing them. There are some changes from the one used by them last year, the principal one being the kind of beets taken. Last year they took all weighing 3½ pounds and under but this season they must not weigh over 3½ pounds and not contain less than 11 per cent sugar with a purity co-efficient of 80 per cent, for which they agree to pay five dollars per ton. Beets are to be dug only as the company orders until Oct. 15 after which they may be delivered as fast as the growers may desire.

Concerning the progress of missionary work in Denmark, Brother Adam Petersen, president of the Copenhagen conference, writes that it is very encouraging even though there are few baptisms. A spirit of freedom is being manifest among the people, and the clergymen have no longer the power over the thoughts of men they formerly had. As a consequence of this the Elders have more liberty and the people are willing to listen to them. Prejudice and hatred are vanishing, and the Saints were never looked on in a more favorable light than at the present time. The Elders rejoice that they can bear their testimony to their fellowmen.

At a session of the board of education, Provo, the clerk submitted a financial statement for the year of 1893. The total receipts were $16,377.08; disbursements, $15,075.54; cash on hand January 2, 1894, $1,801.54. The reserve, aside from school property which is valued at $58,813.11, yet available during the present school year, from all sources, amount to $10,609.85. The present liabilities are $8,283.17, leaving a balance of $2,371.18. Under this financial showing the board will in all probability discontinue the schools for the year at the end of the third term, or perhaps at an earlier date.

The man who fell from a Rapid Transit car near the penitentiary a few days ago and fractured his skull died Jan. 9 at the county infirmary. His body was brought up to Skewes's undertaking establishment from where it will probably be buried January 12. It was learned that the man was not a stranger as heretofore reported; that he was employed on a dairy south of this city and that his name was Andrew Hszelett. He was about 35 years of age and has a mother living at North Cambridge, Massachusetts, who has been notified of his death. The deceased lost his wife about a year ago, the unfortunate woman dying in a hospital in this city.

News comes from Moab, Grand county, Utah, to the effect that on the night of the 10th inst. a fatal shooting occurred at that place. The shooting was caused by a quarrel and a fight over a money dispute. The principals were Charles Davenport and John Woods. The former drew a revolver, pointed it at his antagonist, pulled the trigger and shot him dead. Two bullets were fired into Woods's body. Davenport surrendered and is now in the custody of the sheriff of Grand county. An official investigation of the shooting was held by the coroner's jury who returned a verdict of wilful murder.

Sanpete county is the only one besides Utah county, says the Manti Sentinel, that has complied with the law in relation to leasing school lands, and has contributed to the territorial treasury in this way $1,400 per year. While this sum is considerable for the people of Sanpete to pay, it does but little for the Territory. In consideration of these facts, a number of citizens of Moroni, petitioned the county court to annul the leases. The court decided to table the petition, and to allow the matter to stand as before, but to make no collection until the rest of the Territory takes action in the matter.

The county court has decided not to take any steps at present, says the Manti Messenger, toward the erection of a court house in the county seat. The reason assigned for this action is that the building could not be erected without bonding the county and that if the question was submitted to the people they would vote against it. The least that the court could do would be to submit the question to the people, and see whether or not they would vote for bonds. No court house can be built without bonding. It is the only legitimate business method of erecting public buildings. The people of Sanpete have waited long enough for a respectable county building.

Willie, the fifteen year old son of W. A. Crabtree of the Tenth ward, met with a painful and serious accident on Saturday afternoon, while coasting. In company with a number of other boys about his own age, he went coasting on a big schooner down the hill on Sixth South street, between Eleventh and Ninth East. The schooner ran into a pile of rocks, and all were thrown off, Willie striking the cobbles head first, inflicting a severe scalp wound about four inches in length, besides sustaining severe bruises on other parts of his body. Dr. Benedict was called and sewed up the cut; the patient is reported to be in a favorable condition for recovery.

A section foreman named Bob Marsden was brought in from the south on the 8:05 Union Pacific train Jan. 10th, and taken to the hospital here for treatment. It appears that Marsden went to bed Tuesday night in the bunk car on the line between Milford and Frisco, and in the morning was found lying unconscious between the car and the tender. He was unable to give any explanation of his condition, but there was a fracture of the skull at the base, and it is supposed he got up in the night and fell from the platform, striking his head against the coupling. He was still unconscious at an early hour this morning.

Mr. Lewis Ramsey, father of Mr. Geo. W. Ramsey of this city, died on Sunday last. He was eighty-two years of age, came to Utah about eight years since and has been totally blind for ten years. Deceased was born in the state of Illinois. Although his aged wife and the remainder of the family now in Utah had embraced the Gospel before leaving their native state, Father Ramsey could not see the light of the Gospel until a few days before his death, when he requested to be baptized. This ordinance was attended to and the Priesthood conferred upon him but a few hours before the spirit left the mortal clay. The funeral services were held today at one o'clock at the First ward meeting house.

A disastrous fire occurred at the corner of B and South Temple streets shortly after 3 o'clock January 12. As a result the interior of the magnificent brick barn belonging to Councilman J. J. Daly was completely burned out while three valuable carriages, a cow, a flock of poultry and other property was consumed in the flames.

Mr. Daly stated to a News representative this afternoon that the first he knew of the fire was when awakened by the firemen who were working like Trojans to extinguish it. He is of the opinion that a tramp passed the night in the building and that he either willfully set it afire or that he dropped a spark from a pipe or cigarette, thus igniting it.

The county clerk of Johnson county, says the Laramie, Wyoming, Boomerang, received no less than ninety-seven oil placer locations, comprising 15,520 acres of land, last week.

Most of these have been filed by Omaha parties, who have become interested in that part of the state, and are satisfied that it is destined to outrival Ohio or Pennsylvania in the output and quality of its oil. There seems to be little doubt that a branch road from Casper will be run into the district in the near future, in the event of which many wells will be put down and wholesale shipments of oil be made. The future of the oil interests of Johnson county is very bright indeed.

The board of public works has approved its annual report to the Mayor and City Council for the year 1893. A recapitulation of it is as follows:

Expense account—
Parley's Canyon conduit.....	$ 281 94
Sidewalk improvements.....	12,470 07
Street improvements.....	858 28
State street.....	3,455 73
Commercial street.....	804 94
Richards street.....	48 83
East Temple, First and
Second South streets.....	127,923 89
West Temple street.....	92,160 81
Aqueduct on North Temple.....	3 791 94
Gravity sewer.....	136,789 49
Fire engine houses.....	60 40
Total.....	$372,803 11

The claims against contractors for labor and material allowed by the board and submitted to the City Council amounts to $4,863.75.

A week ago, says the Ogden Sun of the 9th inst., an abortive attempt was made to set the Weber Stake Academy on fire. January 8 the attempt was repeated, but, fortunately, was again unsuccessful. Some miscreant, presumably the one who made the former attempt, had carried a quantity of hay into one of the closets and ignited it, left in the expectation that the fire would do its dreadful work. In this, however, he was mistaken, as the hay burned itself out without doing any damage. The authorities should exert themselves to the utmost to bring this incendiary to justice. Should he not be secured it is possible that he may yet succeed in his diabolical work, and destroy one of the handsomest edifices in the city.

Just as people were congratulating themselves that the dangerous pastime of coasting down the big hill at the head of East Temple street below the McCormick residence had been abolished, at least for the present, another accident occurred. This time the victim is Miss N. S. Mann. The lady on Saturday evening was walking leisurely down the sidewalk when like a flash she was struck by a schooner on which a number of boys were seated. She was thrown violently to the ground and rendered unconscious. On being removed to her home it was ascertained that she was so badly hurt that it will be necessary for her to remain within doors for a month or more. The young ruffians who run the lady down immediately beat a hasty retreat and have taken good care to keep their identity hidden.

One of the city water mains burst at the corner of East Temple and Second South streets at an early hour Saturday morning and a tremendous volume of water was discharged into the street. In a remarkably short time the basement under the Union National Bank and the big cellar adjoining which was used by Remington & Johnson for storage purposes were completely filled with water. The flood also extended to Hogle Bros. basement.

The waterworks officials and the Walker Brothers were summoned, but for a long time could do nothing beyond watch the water as it ran into and out of the basements and flooded the street. Finally it was turned off above and the fire department engines set to work pumping the water out. The loss will reach way up into the thousands and the persons whose property was injured will hold the city responsible.

Jedediah Smith, of Farmington, died at St. Mark's Hospital opposite the Warm Springs January 13th. He met with an accident at his home one week ago. He had killed a beef and appears was in the act of carrying a quarter of it weighing between two and three hundred pounds, up a flight of stairs when he received a sprain in the region of the abdomen that prostrated him. It appears that the conditions conducive to a pelvic abscess already existed unknown to the injured man. After the accident they developed very rapidly and he was brought to the hospital for treatment. A complete stoppage of the bowels had resulted and he was operated on by a quartette of skilful surgeons but with only temporary relief.

He was the son of Jane and the late Lot Smith. He was 36 years old and leaves a wife and five children.

The county court of Box Elder recently adopted a preamble, which set forth that there were, in that county, large tracts of grant lands belonging to the Central Pacific Railroad company, and private individuals, which varied greatly in value, and were not justly assessed under the present order of things. The preamble recommends that the assessment of such lands be done exclusively by the county assessor, and is followed by the subjoined:

Therefore be it Resolved, That our representatives to the Legislature of this Territory be requested to present to said Legislature a suitable bill for the amendment of said act of 1892, to provide for the assessment of all grant lands, belonging to railway companies (but not used immediately or pertaining to the operation of their railways) as well as other corporations, by the county assessors of the several counties in which such grant lands are situated.

And be it further Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be presented to the several counties of this Territory for their consideration and co-operation.

On the occasion of the visit of the Legislature to the Reform school at Ogden yesterday, the following facts were elicited in relation to it:

The commitments during the year just ended were: Cache, 1; Garfield, 1; Sanpete, 2; Salt Lake, 20; Summit, 1; Tooele, 1; Utah, 7; Washington, 1; Weber, 8.

The crimes committed were: Assault to commit robbery, 1; attempted rape, 1; burglary, 10; house-breaking, 3; forgery, 1; incorrigibility, 10; petit larceny, 11; grand larceny, 4; robbery, 1.

Ages, 10 years, 3, 11 years, 1; 12 years, 1; 18 years, 4; 14 years, 3; 15 years, 7; 16 years, 6; 17 years, 17.

Nativity.—California, Germany,

Idaho, Louisiana, Minnesota, New York, Nevada, Texas, Switzerland and Tennessee, one each; Kansas, Sweden and Wyoming, two each; Missouri, four; Utah, twenty-one.

The present number of inmates is 89—83 boys and 6 girls.

The average cost of each inmate is $307.65 per annum, covering $120.08 for food, $21.98 for clothing, 135.84 for salaries, and $29.75 for general maintenance. A shoemaker shop, a broom factory and a printing office are, as yet, all the industries followed, except farming in its season.

The Governor and members of the Legislature appeared to take a kindly interest in the institution and its inmates.

The citizens at Deseret a few days ago met in mass assembly and passed the following resolutions:

Whereas, Many of our citizens are being allured from their families and employment by the baneful influence of the saloons; and

Whereas, It is charged by reputable citizens that gambling is allowed in the saloons; and

Whereas, The Sunday laws are being openly violated; and

Whereas, Minors are allowed to frequent the saloons against the wishes of their parents and guardians; therefore be it

Resolved, That the residents of Deseret, in mass meeting assembled, hereby enter our earnest protest against the lax enforcement of the laws relating to the regulation of the whisky traffic, and hereby demand a rigid enforcement of the laws, to the end that society and our homes may be protected; and be it

Resolved, That we demand of the county court of Millard county that they cease the alleged practice of remitting one-half of the quarterly license, and that they collect the full minimum license of $600 per annum from all vendors of spirituous liquors in Millard county; and be it further

Resolved, That the local prosecuting attorney be, and is hereby instructed to enter complaints and prosecute all infractions of the liquor laws; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the local officers either enforce the laws or resign, and that, failing to do so, their bondsmen are hereby requested to withdraw from their bonds.

Wilson, the ex-convict arrested in Denver a few days ago, victimized a good many people at Ogden, according to the Sun of that city. His method of operation "was to represent himself as the agent of a Denver artist, and upon victims depositing $1 he gave what purported to be a contract for having their photographs taken, and one enlarged in oils at remarkably low rates. It is needless to say that once the bogus agent received the dollar he was never seen again.

"It appears that a large number of people in Ogden have been taken in and done for in a similar way, and in all probability by the same polished swindler. Some time ago a man called on Mrs. T. J. Emmett, of this city, and induced her to deposit $2, giving her in return a bogus contract from 'The International Art Co.,' of Denver, for two large crayon or India ink portraits. The 'agent' never came back, and Mrs. Emmett is waiting in vain for her portraits.

"The man signed the name of J. E. Fox, but the change of name in this case makes no material difference, as in all likelihood such a scoundrel would have as many aliases as a cat has lives. 'Fox' hailed from the same place as 'Wilson,' and both employed the same methods, and it is almost certain that further investigation will reveal the fact that Fox and Wilson are one and the same. It is understood that about two hundred people in Ogden have been duped."

The same kind of a game is now being played in this city, a fact which leads to the belief that it is being worked by a gang. Three or four families were victimized in the Nineteenth ward in precisely the same manner as late as yesterday and housewives are hereby warned to look out for the fellow.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The Council continues to lead the House in the number of bills introduced. At least some of those that have been introduced in the upper house propose to duplicate statutes already in force. This is the case, at

Mr. Breedon's bill to provide for the maintenance of illegitimate children, raises a peculiar inquiry. Is the class referred to so numerous in Utah that special legislation is required to provide for their support? Such is certainly not the prevailing public impression.

Hon. Joseph Stanford, of the capitol grounds commission, says the commission would endeavor to prevail upon the Assembly to grant an appropriation of $125,000, to be expended as follows:

For completing the work of grading and improving the grounds, $12,000; for care, etc., of the grounds for two years, $5,000; the balance of the appropriation to be used for the erection of a part of the Capitol building sufficient for the temporary needs of the Territory.

The question of uniting the University and Agricultural College is probably the most important one that will be presented to the Assembly. A member of the Council said that he had heard but one other member express an opinion on the question, and that all the others were reticent in relation to the subject. He declined to state the opinion he had heard, and also his own, and expressed the view that a serious contest over the question would probably be had. While evidently resolved not to commit himself to a reporter, he went far enough to say that, in his opinion, an average climate should be chosen for an agricultural experiment station. The connection in which this was said conveyed the inference, whether intended or not, that Cache valley was too cold. Hall's memorial asking Congress to locate the lands for the Agricultural College, provided for in the statehood bill which passed the national House, in the Uintah Indian reservation, has no bearing on the question of union. It merely asks to have the lands located there, but offers no plan for disposing of them, this being left to Congress.

The most interesting proceedings that have yet occurred in the House, were had Thursday afternoon when the memorial protesting against free lead and incidentally against the passage of the Wilson bill was under consideration. The Republicans were determined to push it through, and the Democrats were determined to prevent this. The latter resorted to dilatory tactics, but were at length obliged to allow the final vote on the measure to be taken. Several Democrats refrained from voting. The same contest and tactics were continued in regard to the sugar bounty memorial, which was next in order. Powers said he voted against it because he thought the gradual reduction of the sugar bounty proposed by the pending measure in Congress was all that the sugar interest ought to ask. Hubbard said he voted no because not fully informed on the question, and Stoker said he voted no because he was opposed to all legislative bounties on principle and believed them to be unconstitutional.

Probably at every session of the Legislature for twenty years, a bill to amend the estray law has been introduced. This antiquated precedent has been promptly followed at the present session. Johnson has introduced an estray bill. It provides for the appraisal of damage done by estrays by one disinterested voter of the precinct. The person damaged may hold the animals twenty-four hours, during which time he must try to find the owner. If the owner be not found, the estrays must be delivered to the constable, who is made precinct pondkeeper. The certificate of appointment is filed with the justice of the peace and is made the complaint in a civil action, the person charged being the plaintiff and the owner of the animals, known or unknown, being defendant. Summons issues and the usual proceedings in a civil action take place. If the owner does not claim the animals and pay damages, costs, etc., they are sold, but may be redeemed within ninety days; if not redeemed within that time the sale is absolute, but the owner may obtain from the justice any surplus above damages, costs, etc., for which the estrays sold, by proving the same were his property, within six months. After six months the surplus goes to the county school fund.

The report of the commission on Capitol grounds offered in the House, recites that, owing to the small appropriation last session and the delay in cashing the warrants, work was done only on the portion of the grounds improved during 1892; that roadways have been graded, trees, evergreens and shrubbery, etc., planted and the old beds of shrubbery enlarged; 447 ornamental trees and evergreens, and 1,650 shrubs, rose trees, etc., have been planted, costing $1,538.50; lawns had been enlarged, several hundred feet of iron water pipe have been laid; the fence has been repainted, and rustic park seats have been provided. Thousands of people have visited the grounds during the season. The report recommends an appropriation of $12,000 to improve, and $5,000 to care for the grounds during the next two years, and $125,000 to build a wing of the Capitol. The assembly is invited to visit the grounds. The report is signed by Caleb W. West, chairman, and Joseph Stanford, secretary.

It was an interesting debate that was had in the House over the eight hour law. The measure, as it passed, is as follows:

Section 1. That hereafter eight hours shall be a legal day's work on all public works in the Territory of Utah.

Sec. 2. All advertisements for the letting of contracts, and all contracts hereafter entered into shall specify for the performance of public work, shall be conditioned that in all work performed thereunder eight hours shall be a day's work.

Sec. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the Governor.

There was no partisan feeling in the debate, and members seemed to speak their sentiments with marked candor and earnestness. A crowded lobby listened with intense interest to the discussion, and once or twice burst forth into applause, thereby bringing into requisition the services and authority of the sergeant-at-arms.

Nebeker has an appreciation of the ludicrous. On Thursday the House fixed Jan. 18th (today) as the date of the visit to the reform school, but immediately before adjournment that day, a communication from the Council announced that it had fixed Jan. 28th. Yesterday when the same matter came up again, Ivins moved to correct the record by reconsidering the vote fixing the 18th, and Nebeker supported him. The Speaker ruled the motion out of order and the record stood. Later a motion was made and carried to appoint a conference committee to fix the date. Nebeker arose and gravely suggested that the House has fixed the 18th as the day it would visit the reform school, and therefore the House, constructively at least, would make the visit on that day. Hence, unless the Speaker would appoint on the conference committee gentlemen who would act promptly the House might make the visit before the conference committee should agree on a date for it. The House now saw its error in not having the record corrected, and a motion to that effect was carried.

Stoker's bill to regulate artesian wells and prevent the waste of artesian water, springs the old question as to whether or not it is better to stop the flow of water from such wells when not needed. It is claimed that to plug a flowing well, even for a short time, will often ruin it, by causing a deposit of sand to settle at the lower end of the pipe. One or two former sessions of the assembly have decided that until science should make this subject clearer, legislators had better let it alone.

It is tolerably certain that the University contest will not be the only one which will be characterized with spirit and resolution. It is given out that the society of eclectic physicians have prepared a bill, having for its object the repeal of some portions of the present medical practice law, and the amendment of other portions of it, and there is every reason to believe that strong opposition to the passage of this bill will be exerted by the regular physicians. In support of the measure it will be urged that the present law is unjust to physicians who do not belong to the regular school and discriminates against them; that it is intended to prevent them from earning a livelihood by the practice of a profession which they are well qualified for, and that it prevents citizens of the Territory from having such a physician as they may choose, and, in many cases, deprives them of having any at all. On the other hand it will be urged that the public practice of medicine should be confined to physicians who possess a scientific education, and such qualifications as to justify a patient entrusting to them his health, and perhaps his life; and that the only way to so restrict it is to provide for the examination and licensing of applicants for permission to practice. It is a vexed question, and one concerning which much feeling exists among the representatives of the different schools of medicine, in this city especially, and their sympathizers.

VERNON WARD CONFERENCE.

VERNON, Tooele Co., Jan. 10th, 1894. —Sunday, the 7th inst., the Saints at Vernon held their annual ward conference, Elder F. M. Lyman, of the Apostles, and Elders H. S. Gowans and G. F. Richards, of the Stake presidency, being present. The occasion was rendered unusually important by the fact that the new ward meeting house, a substantial brick edifice, 28x36, begun and completed within a period of four months, was ready for dedication.

In the forenoon, Sabbath school was held in the old meeting house, now a school house; and at 2 o'clock p. m. the Saints filed into their new quarters. After the opening exercises, Bishop John C. Sharp, to whose energy and determination in pushing the house to its completion much credit is due, gave a short history of the work.

Elder Lyman complimented the Saints on their diligence and promptness and encouraged them to make still further improvements. He spoke on the importance of properly recording important events, both as individuals and as a ward; and also on the subject of order in the Priesthood. He also asked, and obtained the unanimous vote of the congregation that the new meeting house be held and used for sacred purposes only, and recommended the building of other houses for other purposes.

The Church authorities were presented and sustained, and the sacrament administered, after which Patriarch Israel Bennion offered the dedicatory prayer.

In the evening another meeting was held, at which each of the visiting brethren and others spoke, and the Saints assembled had a feast of instruction, warning and encouragement, that should give them great spiritual strength to overcome obstacles and press onward in the Lord's kingdom.

Elder Lyman offered the closing prayer, confirming therein the dedication of the house.

ISRAEL BENNION, Ward Clerk.

For some time a movement has been on foot among the members of the different churches to commence a crusade against gambling in Durango, Colo., and the district attorney has now filed a number of informations against the proprietors of gambling houses. The gamblers will pull together and an interesting time is promised.

INDUSTRIES, COMMERCE AND MINES.

RICHFIELD, Sevier Co., U. T., Jan. 14, 1894.—At a convention recently held in this place, consisting of delegates from all parts of the county, the necessity and propriety of endeavoring to get a sugar plant established here was considered and all present were enthusiastically in favor of the move. From the knowledge we have of the climatic conditions favorable to the successful growth of the sugar beet, this county seems to be peculiarly adapted to its culture. We are informed, that in some places north, the soil is so moist that the beets grow so large as to materially decrease the percentage of sugar. We would not have that difficulty to contend with here, as the soil is naturally very dry.

While we are supplied with a liberal amount of that fertilizing element, water, yet there is a vast amount of land which only has secondary water right. On this land such crops as dry-land wheat, barley, corn and lucern are grown. Should this land prove to be too dry for the beet, then there is a great deal of land which has primary water right, where such quantities of the liquid could be applied as would insure proper growth.

In addition to these excellent climatic conditions we have a population consisting principally of Scandinavians who are noted for patience and industry. All these good qualities combined would undoubtedly result in the successful growth of the beet, both in quality and quantity.

Inasmuch as the eyes of capitalists have been directed to far off Utah, through the successful exhibit of Utah sugar at the World's Fair, we hope that this favored spot of our Fair Territory will not be overlooked.

J. W. BUTTER.

A meeting was held in Tuttle's hall on Tuesday night to consider the situation in relation to the railroads, says the Manti Sentinel. Quite a number of Ephraim people were in attendance and some from Moroni. Mr. Brubeck called the meeting to order and explained that the U. P. and R. G. W. railroads had combined and intended to freeze out the little road. He asked the people to back the road with their patronage, declaring that he would ship freight and passengers to Nephi free, if he had to, and even if necessary "furnish each passenger with a chromo." He stated that the road would be carrying the mail within ten days, and that he had just completed the purchase of another locomotive, passenger coach and ten freight cars, which showed that the management were not afraid of the outcome. W. K. Reid, Alex. Tennant, F. Alder, Albert Tuttle and others expressed their feelings in the matter, and a resolution that the road should receive the backing of the community in the fight, was carried unanimously. A meeting will be held at Ephraim tonight for a similar purpose.

The Ephraim Enterprise states that at the mass meeting in that city the resolution passed at Manti was adopted unanimously.

The Union Pacific coal mine at Scofield closed down last July owing to a contest over some land, and up to the present the Union Pacific railway has been buying a considerable quantity of fuel from the Rio Grande mine. The land dispute arose over the filing of a claim by John Eckles to a tract which the Union Pacific wanted for switch purposes, the outcome being that the mine was shut down till the affair was settled. A compromise has been effected by which the railway will come into possession of the land, and the mine therefore be reopened.

Work will be resumed on or about February 1st, it is said, and about 100 coal miners will be given employment. While the U. P. mine is not developed to as great an extent as are others in that locality, its body of coal is perhaps larger than any other, the vein being twenty-one feet in height. The people about Scofield and Pleasant Valley are jubilant at the prospect of recommending work in the mine, as it will afford employment for many who have been out of work since the shutdown. It is expected that the old employees will be taken on again, so that there will be little or no demand for miners from outside the district.

A Park City correspondent writing under date of Jan. 12:

The weather during the week has been comparatively mild as to that of last week. But very little extra snow has fallen and sleighing is now just at the finest.

After a shut down of nearly two weeks the Marsac mill will again start up tonight, prepared to make another long run. The entire plant has been overhauled, and a large amount of new timber and iron work has been placed in position.

Work at the various mills and mines is keeping up with a rush, and the Ontario mill is making a record for the great amount of bullion turned out every week.

The Crescent is still piling up the ore at their mill, only awaiting the settlement of ore rates before shipping.

Silver King shipped two lots of 350 tons each to the Mingo company during the week.

Anchor Concentrator is still running double shift, and a large amount of concentrates is being put down to the sampling mill.

Manti Sentinel: The S. P. V. R. R. are at work near the Edmonds mine, developing a claim. It is said that the Edmonds are likely to lose the property through some technicality of law. It appears that they purchased ten acres of land from the Funk estate, and have been working on that piece of ground. As the land is unsurveyed all that is necessary is to hold the land and work it in good faith. Their works are all within forty acres, and as their claim covers a quarter section, and it seems to be a question whether the work done would hold the property, Mr. Brubeck has filed a location notice, but the company claim that their action is not intended to injure the Edmonds but to keep out all further claimants. The result will be watched with interest. It appears from the general instruction of the land commissioner that the Edmonds are safe in their claim.

The ice season has opened up with an unusually brisk business this year, and large quantities are being stored for use when warmer weather comes on. Extensive shipments of what is called Park City ice are being made. This ice is really from Kimball's, several miles below Park City, and is shipped by the company whose office is at the last named place. The Utah Central railway is now hauling to this city ten to twenty carloads daily, fifty-one cars having been brought in up to this morning. The ice is of the very best quality. From present indications there is no likelihood of a scarcity in the cooling substance next season.

Logan Nation: About 125 head of horses were yesterday offered at sheriff's sale, Fred Turner doing the selling. Those which were sold went for from $1.50 to $7.50 each. They were sold as the property of F. A. Mitchell, but it is rumored that they are owned by a Mr. Blackhurst, of Salt Lake, and the sale may be stopped, as the chances are that litigation will follow.

The board of directors of the Sanpete Valley railway company have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Theodore J. Brubeck, president; R. L. Scannell, secretary; J. E. Clinton, vice-president; Judge J. B. Blair, George Collins, and Superintendent H. S. Kerr. The board also authorized the issuance of seventy-five $1000 bonds to be placed by the president.

Nephi McLean, of Pleasant Valley, who was hurt on the 18th of December, in the coal mine, and was brought to the hospital in this city for attention, is steadily improving, and now moves around with comparative ease on crutches. He hopes to be able to return home on Monday or Tuesday next.

Brigham City Bugler: The onyx and marble quarry, discovered last year on Promontory hill, bids fair to eventually develop into one of our county's chief sources of wealth. The supply of beautiful varieties of onyx and marble, capable of a high polish, is said to be practically inexhaustible.

K. E. Stoker, of Logan, says the Nation, has invented a washing machine which will likely prove one of the greatest finds woman has ever known. He claims it will do the work quicker, better and easier than any machine in the market.

In the Black mountains, thirty-two miles east of Las Cruces, N. M., a thriving mining district has been organized by miners from Colorado, Utah and Idaho. Large quantities of decomposed gold quartz have recently been discovered there.

Denver parties are preparing to work the Arctic lode on Bobtail hill, Gilpin county. They have secured the plant of machinery formerly located at the Prospectors' tunnel in Quartz valley.

Articles of incorporation of the Laramie Meat company have been filed. The company has a capital of $5000, with fifty shares of $100 each.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

There was a very fair attendance at the Sunday School Union meeting held last evening, January 15th. Nearly all the city schools were represented, also the schools of Big Cottonwood, Sandy, Forest Dale, Union and Deaf Mutes.

The very excellent singing exercises were given by the Juvenile Choir of the Second ward, directed by Brother Ernest Bassett, whose labors in training the children of that ward are very commendable and gratifying.

Prof. Willard Done, as per previous announcement, gave a very instructive lecture upon the subject of "Sunday School Teaching." The speaker began his remarks with a brief history of Sabbath schools. In early days of this work the teaching was very much disconnected, there being no system, or plan, or definite purpose in view until the organization of Sunday school unions, under which was inaugurated harmonious work throughout the various Christian nations, until at present the work is so thoroughly systematized as to become a profession.

The history of our own Sunday schools is very similar. At present it forms one of the greatest "helps" in the Church, working harmoniously with all other church organizations for the development of the souls and faculties of the rising generation.

The old idea of teaching was to cram the minds of the children with the knowledge of words and phrases, without regard to the growth of mind. The modern and true idea of teaching is to place a child under the best circumstances for development and then give him an opportunity for growth, and instead of cramming his mind with words, or sentences, or ideas he does not comprehend, present subjects to him in such a way as to draw him out, and give him an opportunity to formulate ideas and thoughts of his own.

The first duty of teachers, as also of parents, is to study child nature, and seek to understand the children they have to deal with mentally and spiritually, to learn to feel as they feel, to look at things as they do. The more thoroughly the teacher understands the children the greater his success.

Give the children an opportunity to think for themselves. If, for instance, a child comes with a question for information, instead of giving a direct answer, question him upon the subject and lead him to see for himself, and by the exercise of his own judgment to deduce the information he sought. To do this successfully is true teaching. In this way the child learns to think for himself and learns to exercise his own judgment.

No teacher should attempt to teach his class unless he knows what he is going to teach, and should adapt his instructions to the capacity of his class—never cram the minds of his children with finished and matured information, but stir up their minds with earnest enthusiasm, and plant the seeds of knowledge and let the matured and perfected plant of knowledge grow and develop in the minds of the children.

The golden rule of all teaching is that the teacher cannot impart to others that which he does not himself possess. A teacher must therefore possess the characteristics he wishes to develop in his pupils, mentally and morally.

The art of questioning, called the Socratic method of teaching, is one of the best means of drawing out and developing the minds of the children. Jesus was a Teacher of all teachers, and used this method of instruction to infinite perfection, as often instanced in the discomfiture of his enemies by a pertinent question. By this method the children are led to discover truths for themselves, and the more of this the better. Give in this way all the opportunity possible for the children to learn for themselves, as they most effectually learn to do by doing. The true teacher should do as little talking (or telling) as possible, and draw out by judicious questions the information or knowledge he desires to impart. A class or a school should not be bored to death by too much talking, either by teacher or superintendent.

"Aim high" should be the motto of our teachers and superintendents—not the quietest class or school, but the BEST. It is better to aim too high and strive to reach that ideal than to aim lower and reach our ideals.

Supt. Griggs offered a few excellent remarks, commending the faithfulness of the Sunday School workers during the past year, and expressed his pleasure in seeing so good a representation at these meetings of the officers of the Sunday Schools. He noted the better condition of those schools which were usually represented at these meetings.

Superintendents were requested to see that the annual reports for 1893 were sent in at once.

The names of Elders Wm. J. Kerr, Chas. M. Cannon and W. H. Chamberlin were presented as additional workers in the Sunday school missionary corps, and were unanimously sustained.

The Third ward school will furnish the music at the next meeting of the Union, the general program for which will be published hereafter.

Benediction was pronounced by Assistant Superintendent W. C. Burton, and the meeting adjourned for one month.

JOS. HYRUM PARRY,
Secretary.

DEATH OF WILLIAM R. SMITH.

William R. Smith, president of the Davis Stake, died at his home in Centerville January 16 at 7:30, after a long and severe illness, resulting from stricture of the bowels.

William Reed Smith was born near Farmeraville, Ontario, Canada, August 11th, 1826, and was therefore in his sixty-eighth year. His father was a native of the New England States, but removed to Canada, where he married Mary Reed, mother of the deceased, who was the daughter of Major Reed of the British army. President Smith was the youngest of nine children and was left an orphan in his early childhood. Fortunately he found a good home with a Quaker family by the name of Parish. From the time he was three years old until he was sixteen he was kindly cared for by this good family.

In the fall of 1837 the Parishes, with three of their sons and their families, came to the United States, settling in Stark county, Illinois. About this time large numbers of the members of the Church were moving into and building up the city of Nauvoo and it was then that the deceased became interested in Mormonism. In 1841 he was baptized into the Church and during the same year several of the Parishes did the same thing. After joining the Church Mr. Smith took up his residence in Nauvoo, where he remained for a year and a half, during the whole of which time, however, he was in a feeble condition from frequent and severe attacks of chills and fever.

At the expiration of this time he returned to Stark county, where he engaged in stock raising until 1849 when, in company with Austin Grant, he started for the Rocky Mountains, arriving here the same year. In 1850 he went to California where he spent considerable time in stock and mining business, made some money and returning to Utah settled in Centerville, where he continued in the stock business and where he made his home up to the time of his death. He subsequently took large herds of stock to California, where he disposed of them advantageously.

In the spring of 1855 he was ordained Bishop of Centerville, and in 1857 was made captain of the Carson Colony which left Carson valley near the middle of September and arrived in Salt Lake City during the following month after a very successful journey. President Smith resumed his duties over the Centerville ward, and under his immediate direction they moved during the Utah war of that period—1858—to Spanish Fork, but returned to their homes the year following after peace had been declared.

In the fall of 1859 he was elected a member of the Legislative Council to fill the unexpired term of Charles C. Rich. He was subsequently elected three times a member of the House of Representatives, and afterwards—in 1878—he was again elected to a seat in the Council. In 1874 he was elected probate judge of Davis county and held that office for nine years.

In June, 1877, he was appointed president of the Davis Stake, a position he held until the end of his busy and useful life. He also served as a missionary abroad and was at home a most ardent and faithful worker. In all of his offices of trust, both civil and ecclesiastical, he exhibited untiring energy, excellent judgment and first-class ability. He was ever known as one of the solid conservative men of the Territory. He leaves a large and well respected family to mourn his death.

MISSIONARY EXPERIENCES.

A private letter from Elder John Nicholson Jr., dated at Moscos, Miss., Jan. 9th., relates a somewhat interesting incident in missionary experience.

He and Elder Holbrook proceeded to fill an appointment for Sunday, Dec. 31, at a point thirty miles distant, where no meetings had yet been held. They arrived in the neighborhood the evening previous and were entertained by Mr. Ball, a hospitable gentleman and one of the main owners of the house where the services were to be held. The Elders, on the following morning, proceeded to the place of appointment and found a number of people congregated outside of the building, the door of which was fastened with a log-chain and padlock. The missionaries awaited the arrival of Mr. Ball, who soon appeared. That gentleman took in the situation at a glance. Certain parties had evidently resolved to prevent the holding of the meeting and he was just as determined that it should be held. He procured an ax and chopped his way into the building. This accomplished he said to the Elders: "Now, gentlemen, come in and preach to us." This invitation was accepted and the brethren occupied an hour and a half in explaining the principles of the Gospel.

After meeting the missionaries left to fill another appointment in Walley settlement on the following Tuesday, where they were to join President Rencher, an efficient Elder who has charge of the Mississippi conference, and Elder Haycock. It had been arranged that all four should proceed to points further west, but the people were urgent that two should remain among them, so the president decided that he and Elder Holbrook should stay and labor there and that Elder Nicholson should proceed to a point designated and meet a new Elder. He did not know at the time, as he learned subsequently, that the new Elder was his brother Angus. The two brothers have been directed to go into another county and open a field where the Elders have never been. The letter goes on to say: "I feel the responsibility keenly, but I know the Lord is with the boys who are sent out to declare His message; and with His assistance and the faith and prayers of those at home I believe we can do our duty. I feel that I have been assisted by your faith in the past and if I ever needed it it will be from now on."

"Brother Thad Speed's wife requested baptism on Saturday. We informed her we would attend to it on Sunday, which we did. About fifteen congregated at the creek. Elder Haycock, my present companion, dedicated the spot. I spoke about fifteen minutes upon the nature of the ordinance of baptism, then led the lady into the water and administered the sacred ordinance. On the return to the house Sister Speed was confirmed and the two children of the family blessed."

WEBER STAKE CONFERENCE.

OGDEN CITY,

Jan. 15, 1894.

The two days' conference closed this afternoon. It opened on Sunday morning at ten o'clock.

There were present Elders Lorenz, Snow, F. D. Richards, and A. H. Cannon of the quorum of the Twelve; also Elders Seymour B. Young, C. J. Fjelstad and J. G. Kimball of the first Presidents of the Seventies; the Stake Presidency, High Council, and a large representation of the Bishops of the wards. The tabernacle was filled to its utmost capacity with Saints from the settlements.

After the opening exercises Elder C. F. Middleton reported the condition of the stake generally to be good. But few difficulties existed, and the Saints were mostly united and trying to keep the commandments of God. The Stake presidency and the High Council were united in their labors to build up and sustain the work of the Lord, and the Priesthood generally labored in harmony with them. The people of course have felt and still feel the effects of the stringency in monetary matters, but all are hopeful that a brighter day will dawn in the near future, and that they will be enabled to more fully sustain the work of the Lord even according to their desires.

Elder Lorenzo Snow delivered an excellent and soul-inspiring discourse on Temple work, showing not only the necessity but also the importance of the ordinances performed in the House of the Lord, and their far-reaching influence and power for salvation of the living and for the dead. He laid before the Saints the imperative duty that is incumbent on them to search out as far as possible and obtain the genealogies of their ancestors who have passed away, and when obtained to go to the Temple of God and attend to the ordinances for them.

In the afternoon Elder A. H. Cannon spoke at length on the mercy of God in relation to the redemption of the human family, and showed all mankind, except a certain few, will receive salvation either in this world or the world to come. He exhorted the Saints to emulate the Savior as far as possible and to cultivate the spirit of forgiveness, forbearance, love and kindness to each other.

Elder S. B. Young followed on the same subject, and counseled the Saints to be faithful and true to their trust; to be exemplary in all things that the people may have confidence in them and that they be not afraid to emulate their examples.

Today was another day of gladness. The house was again filled to overflowing. In the morning the general authorities of the Church and local authorities of the Stake were presented and sustained by a hearty unanimous vote. The reports of the Sabbath schools, the Young Men's Mutual Improvement associations and other stake and ward organizations showed that these were all in a healthy condition, and doing excellent work in their several capacities.

Elder C. J. Fjelstad occupied the remainder of the morning instructing the Saints in their duties towards God and each other. He referred in an interesting way to the entering of the Pioneers into the vales of Utah, and reviewed the dedicatory prayer that was offered by the late Apostle Orson Pratt, when under the instructions of President Brigham Young he dedicated this land which was then barren. He reminded the Latter-day Saints of the covenants that were made in that prayer on behalf of the whole people to keep the commandments of the Lord—to pay their tithes and offerings, and to perform all other duties devolving upon them that they may be entitled to the blessings and protection of God. He urged upon them the importance of fulfilling these obligations.

This afternoon was occupied by Elders J. G. Kimball and S. B. Young. In the course of his remarks the former spoke in high commendation of the young missionaries who are laboring in the Southern States. Their industry, their integrity, their fidelity, and willingness to endure hardships and persecution for the Gospel's sake stamp them as men of God; and, he said, the parents of these youthful missionaries should thank God that they have such sons in the field.

Elder Young spoke of the beauty, the order and the completeness of the organization of the Church of God. Having truth and intelligence for its basis, its mission will effect the salvation of the human race.

The Spirit of the Lord was abundantly poured out upon speakers and hearers, rendering these seasons of joy long to be remembered.

Yours in the Gospel,

JOSEPH HALL.

THE HANDLING OF MILK.

LOGAN, Utah, Jan. 15, 1894.—I will endeavor to present to those interested a few facts in relation to the handling of milk on the farm or in the dairy.

Milk should be disturbed as little as possible before it is set, and should be strained directly into the creamery vessel, immediately after milking. It is bad policy to strain milk into large cans and dip the milk into other vessels for creaming, as it prevents a thorough separation of the cream. It should be set in tin vessels that are immersed in ice water to cool as quickly as possible, as this offers the best physical condition for separation.

The style of creaming vessels will depend upon various conditions. In the first place the depth should be such as will permit the creaming to take place in a reasonable time. It is desirable in most cases that the creaming be completed between milking, or in ten or twelve hours, so that the cans may be used at the next milking. It has been found in practice that this may be accomplished under favorable conditions with a depth of twenty inches, and this depth should not be much exceeded. The diameter of the can may depend upon the number of milkers; it should not be so great as to prevent its being quickly filled, but providing this can be done, the longer the cans the better. Where there are a number of milkers large cans may be used; but where there are only one or two milkers small cans should be used. In any case it is not well to have a can so large that it cannot be conveniently handled.

It has been confirmed by nearly all comparative tests, that deep vessels with ice are the most favorable to the separation of cream. Shallow setting furnishes a large surface exposure of the milk to the air and to the bottom and sides of the vessel, conditions which are very unfavorable to creaming. Milk set in this manner should not be skimmed until after thirty-six hours. By this time some acid is developed which tends to give a fair creaming, not, however, as good as may be obtained by ice setting in ten hours, if the most favorable conditions are maintained. There is a very general opinion that cold materially interferes with the separation of cream when shallow setting is used. This is a mistake; cold favors the separation of cream more in shallow pans than in deep cans as the former present more surface to the milk than the latter. There is, however, a practical disadvantage in the use of cold setting when shallow pans are used, as cold setting always gives their cream with little more consistency than the milk itself, and such cream cannot be removed from the shallow vessels without being more or less mixed with the skim milk. In a tall, narrow vessel this difficulty is not met with, as the skim milk may be drawn from the bottom without disturbing the cream enough to effect the result.

To make the maximum amount of butter as well as the best quality, the milk must be kept pure and sweet. The greatest source of impurities is in the unclean vessels in which the milk is drawn and in the filth which surrounds the cow. When drawn from the cow, milk is at a high temperature, and indeed at just the temperature at which it can be contaminated the most rapidly. Evidently the milk should be cooled to a low temperature immediately after it is drawn. This treatment is also the best remedy for the rapid souring of milk. The first lessons for the dairyman to learn are scrupulous cleanliness in all affairs relating to milk, care in the dairy, thorough washing with boiling water of all milk vessels, and low temperature applied to the milk immediately after it is drawn from the cow.

Very respectfully,
ARTHUR BARRETT.

CAPITOL GROUNDS REPORT.

We, the Undersigned, in behalf of the commissioners on capitol grounds, C. W. West, Thomas Marshall, James Sharp, Joseph Stanford, Anthon H. Lund, A. O. Smoot and Aaron F. Farr, hereby respectfully submit to your honorable body a report of the labor performed, and the improvements made on the capitol grounds, during the past two years.

The limited amount appropriated by the last legislative assembly and the delay attending the cashing of auditor's warrants necessarily restricted our attention to the caring for that portion of the grounds already improved during the year 1892, for after paying outstanding obligations, there was little money available for other purposes; but by strict economy, we have been enabled to make the following improvements during the past year:

The roadways leading up to and around the site selected for the capitol buildings and extending quite a distance north of the east and west gates, have been graded; shade trees of different varieties have been planted around the roads and walks. Many ornamental trees, groups of evergreens and shrubbery, have also been planted in other parts of the grounds. The old beds of shrubbery have been enlarged over one-third of their original size. These additions necessitated the purchase of 477 ornamental trees and evergreens, 1,650 shrubs and rose trees, etc., etc., all well selected, embracing many choice varieties, at a cost of $7,583.50. Several additions have also been made to the lawns. To provide in part for watering the extensions here referred to, we have had several hundred more feet of iron piping laid, with hydrants attached at suitable distances apart, at a cost of $837.90.

The fence has also been repaired, and a tool house, large enough to store all the tools and other movable property belonging to the grounds, has been erected.

In June last, twenty Utah manufactured rustic park seats were purchased and placed at suitable points along the walks, and the grounds under proper regulations were thrown open to the public.

The action was noticed by the press of Salt Lake City and the Territory in appreciative terms, and much favorable comment was made upon the improved condition of the grounds, in the growth of trees affording shade to visitors, and the whole surroundings were represented as reflecting great credit on the enterprising spirit of territorial officials. Several thousand people, many from different parts of the Territory, availed themselves of the opportunity to visit the grounds during the summer season.

Your committee respectfully represent that an estimate has been made looking to the completion in improvements of the whole twenty-one acres of land embraced in the capitol ground enclosure, as per plans adopted by the commission and which plans were submitted and approved by the legislature of the Territory which will cost in labor, piping, planting trees, etc., about $12,000, and when said grounds are so completed, it will cost $2,500 annually to look after them and keep them in proper condition, making a total of $17,000 which we ask your honorable body to appropriate. We also most respectfully direct the attention of your honorable body to the necessity of commencing the erection of the capitol building and recommend that the sum of $125,000 be appropriated for the erection of one wing of such building. The great necessity existing for the erection of this structure, the advantages to be obtained by the Territory in various ways are so apparent that we do not consider it necessary to dwell at any length on the subject.

For particulars as to the receipts and expenditures, we most respectfully refer you to our financial statement hereto attached:

Liabilities.
To Salt Lake Nursery Co.....	$ 631 00
Hoverland foot plans.....	15 00
Balance.....	618 11
	$1,274 11
Balance (credit).....	$608 11

In conclusion, we ask that your honorable body will, ere the close of the Legislative Session, visit the grounds. We also invite your inspection of our books and accounts and shall be pleased to extend to you all the courtesy in our power to make you thoroughly familiar with all the facts connected with our labors in all the work committed to our supervision, and in the interest of the people of our fair Territory. Respectfully,

CALEB W. WEST,
Chairman.

JOSEPH STANFORD, Secretary.

RECEIPTS.

Balance on hand last report.....	$ 436 88
Appropriation, Legislative Assembly.	6,010 00
Appropriation, Legislative Assembly.	5,000 00
Bills payable, due from Mr. McCoy..	650 00
	$ 12,096 88

EXPENDITURES.

Fence account.....	$ 324 00
Grounds.....	6,048 20
Waterworks.....	2,163 20
Per diem and mileage.....	813 80
Salary.....	356 00
Mis. ex.....	329 88
Interest and discount.....	211 83
Building.....	127 79
Bills payable.....	650 00
	$ 10,842 71
Balance, Dec. 31, 1893.....	$ 1,274 11

IDAHO ITEMS.

Deputy Sheriff William Wardrop, says the Idaho, Boise, Statesman, of Owyhee county, arrived in Nampa late Sunday night and reported the capture, near Vale, Oregon, of Gideon Lewis, the man who, on the night of Dec. 20, stabbed and killed John Harris at Delamar.

The man gave his name as Jack Rhodes and denies he is the man wanted for the murder of Harris.

Rhodes answers the description of Lewis in every respect with the exception of a change which the officers think he has made by removing his whiskers. Rhodes, when questioned closely, told some very improbable stories; among other things he said he spent Christmas in Boise, and when asked what hotel he stopped at, he replied that he thought it was the Boise house. The officers brought Rhodes to Vale, Or., where he was lodged in jail to await identification.

A heavy storm of snow and sleet has been raging over the Wood river country since Saturday last and still continues at this writing with unabated fury. In the mountains the snow has reached a great depth, and there have been numerous slides in various gulches between Bellevue and Ketchum and above, but at this writing no fatalities have been heard of. Grave fears are entertained for the miners, so many of whom are known to be out in the hills at Bullion, Deer Creek, Triumph, East Fork and at the Red Elephant and Red Cloud groups of mines.

The crusade against the using of cigarettes by school boys in San Francisco is about to be conducted on organized lines and by no less a body than the city school department. A resolution has been introduced appointing a committee of three to investigate the evil, and to report to the board some feasible plan for eradicating the pernicious habit, so injurious to the morals, minds and bodies of our boys.

The McCee Rankin Theatrical company seems to be in hard lines. On Friday night at Pasadena, Cal., Rankin demanded money of the manager, but the receipts had been attached. Rankin and the company went to Los Angeles and attempted to assault the manager, Mr. Maher, for not stopping the levy at Pasadena, but they were threatened with arrest and did not harm the manager. Miss Phyllis McKee Rankin has now sworn to a complaint charging Manager T. M. Maher with embezzlement.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

CHICAGO, Jan. 8.—The World's Fair Pompeii came tonight — a rushing volcano of flame, a huge Gothic architecture tumbling into chaos, bewildering mobs of people, all were there, under a great starry sky of Italian clearness, with Lake Michigan's broad expanse, a second Mediterranean.

Long after dark tonight belated people returning from their work noticed a constantly enlarging column of fire and smoke ascending skyward in the east.

"The World's Fair is on fire," was the cry, and few indeed of the fascinated watchers from the train windows alighted until the famous terminal at the exposition grounds was reached.

The fire had been burning less than an hour when a thunderous crash of falling timber and tremendous shout from the crowd announced the collapse of the Peristyle. A moment later a terrific yell from the crowd told that the Liberal Arts building was on fire, and the whole exposition was threatened.

A dramatic incident marked the destruction of the Peristyle. One of the ladders bearing up a group of firemen fell with the columns, and one heroic fireman went down to his death, while a number of others suffered injuries more or less severe.

The fire started in the Casino, just east of the agricultural building and south of the Peristyle. The Casino was quickly devoured, and the flames urged north on top of the Peristyle, and dropping made a second line of fire along the base of the columns. The flames then sprang through Music Hall. While the fire was burning there one of the most singular and fascinating sights of the night was witnessed. Along the top of the Peristyle were scores of heroic statues. The spectacle of those people on the moving sidewalk east of the Peristyle was that of a succession of gigantic human beings, plunging one after another headlong into the waters of the lake below.

The origin of the fire is said to have been revenge on the part of a couple of tramps. The solitary guard in Music Hall said that just before the flames broke out he kicked two vagabonds out of the building. They left in the direction of the Casino.

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 9.—Rev. Hy. E. Cheesman, pastor of the Eighth street M. E. church, was deliberately drowned tonight in the Delaware river at the foot of Chestnut street by two men. Officer Zaeser heard the clergyman cry for help, but owing to the darkness was unable to locate the direction from which the sound came. He heard a second cry but much stifled. Two sailors who had also heard the cries, reached the spot about the same time as the officer. They saw the body of a man floating in the river and, leaping in, brought it to the shore. Cheesman expired in a few minutes.

Shortly after the cries were heard two men are known to have run away from the wharf. The police shortly before midnight arrested Isaac George and Solomon Willis on suspicion of having committed the crime. What the clergyman was doing on the wharf at that time of night and what the motive for the murder was is a mystery.

BUFFALO, Jan. 9.—The story of John L. Sullivan's latest knockout has just leaked out. Saturday night John went out to "do the town." He drank heavily, and soon after returning to his hotel a great crash was heard in his room. John's wife had chided him and he in return had assaulted her. She defended herself with an Indian club, knocking her husband senseless. It was daylight before he opened his eyes or showed signs of life. Mrs. Sullivan says she struck her husband harder than she intended.

JERSEY CITY, Jan. 9.—Rev. Patrick Corrigan, of Hoboken, died this evening, aged 58. In the events which have kept the Catholic Church in the United States in a turmoil for the past four years, Father Corrigan took a prominent part. He was a vigorous supporter of Archbishop Ireland and the liberal and progressive element, and at the time of his death was as widely known as any Catholic in the country.

PERNAMBUCO, Dec. 23.—[Copyright by Associated Press.]—After more than a week's delay the Niotheroy's reshipment difficulty seems to be over and she will probably leave for the south tomorrow. She has about 160 of the original crew on board and also 200 Brazilians. The Niotheroy and America left St. Thomas December 3rd. December 10th, Ceara was sighted. A steamer started from port, headed for the Niotheroy. The pipe of the boat-swain rang through the ship, calling all hands to quarters, and soon they began to cast loose and manned ready to turn upon the vessel if she should prove to be an enemy. A small boat soon came alongside and it proved to be a pilot, sent out by the Brazilian authorities to bring the Niotheroy in.

Tuesday morning the Niotheroy steamed away once more and reached Pernambuco in forty-eight hours. The officials of the government came aboard and had a discussion with Captain Baker and Lieutenant Hill, asking that both officers and men should prepare a scale of pay, such as they would require to induce them to reship in the Brazilian navy. They were also to state for how long they were willing to enlist. Immediately afterwards the crew were told they would receive $500 bounty and $100 a month if they chose to reship. Fifty men left the ship, and as no communication is now allowed with the ship it is supposed all on board signed.

ROME, Jan. 9.—A dispatch from Bare says an anti-tax mob overran the town of Rulodi Puglia and burned the octroi office, sentry boxes and tax bureau. The mob also destroyed the Union Club house and tore up the rails of the horse car line, cut the telegraph wires and attacked the gen-darmes in their barracks. The gen-darmes were eventually so hard pressed that they fired a volley at the mob, but the rioting continued until the arrival of troops sent for from Bare. One of the rioters was killed, four wounded and twenty captured.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Jan. 10.—The Burlington train leaving this city at 6:25 was held up about three miles east of St. Joe by five masked men. The train was stopped by torpedoes being placed on the track and a red lantern swung across the road in the regulation custom.

As soon as the train stopped three robbers boarded the engine with drawn revolvers and ordered the engineer and fireman to accompany them to the express car and order the express messenger to open the door. This they did, and when the express messenger opened the door the three robbers, with revolvers in each hand, entered the car, and ordered the messenger to open the safe. He did so, and the robbers then took all in the safe, an amount claimed by the railroad officials not to exceed $50. This statement is not credited here, however.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 11.—Twenty-six counties of the Choctaw nation voted almost unanimously against statehood or the severance of the tribal relation. The same feeling exists in the other four civilized tribes, it is said, and the advances of the government will undoubtedly be repulsed.

NEW CASTLE, Pa., Jan. 11.—A sensation was created by the arrest of Prof. R. C. Hartsorn, principal of the High school, on the charge of attempting to murder Alda and Maggie Robinson with chloroform. It is alleged that a criminal operation had been performed on Alda and the child cremated in a kitchen stove New Years day. The attempted double murder was to conceal the crime. Alda is still unconscious and may die. A prominent physician is said to be implicated. He has fled.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 11.—Tonight four negroes entered the home of an old couple named Benny, at Florissant, a suburb of this city, and made a demand for money which they believed was concealed in the house. The negroes beat Benny and wife so severely that the latter is dead and the former cannot recover from his injuries. A hired man, hearing the screams of the old couple, ran to their assistance and was beaten into insensibility.

The negroes then secured $3000 and fled. At 11 o'clock the city police department received word that over 100 Florissant citizens were searching for the negroes, with the avowed intention of lynching them if found.

DENVER, Jan. 11.—The senate today received the majority report of the special committee appointed to consider the governor's message. The report declared that there is no occasion for an extraordinary session and recommended adjournment tomorrow.

In the house today, the member from El Paso county created a sensation by introducing the following resolution:

It looks like the devil for the members of the Ninth General Assembly to be stopping at sumptuous hotels in Denver and drawing $7 per day from impoverished constituency, under the pretence that they can better their condition by legislation, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the members of this assembly and employees of the same will stay here without pay 'until he freezes over,' and do all we can for the good of the state."

The merriment over this effort shook the building and Speaker Amos refused to entertain it. Baldwin asked the reason.

"Because the language is objectionable," said the Speaker.

"Well, I only quoted the governor," Baldwin replied, but the resolution was not received.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 11.—The police have suddenly been confronted by one of the most mysterious cases they ever tried to solve. This morning Steve K. Wileko applied at a boarding house and engaged a room for a week, paying in advance. He then left the place, returning late in the afternoon, and going to a room on the same floor occupied by Josie Stevenson.

Late tonight a man called at the house and asked to see Miss Stevenson. The landlady found the door of the room open. Miss Stevenson was lying on the floor dead, with a bullet hole through her forehead. Wileko was on the bed, shot twice through the heart. Between the two on the floor was a revolver, with all five chambers empty.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 12.—During the tariff debate in the House yesterday, Jerry Simpson loosed a broadside against protection and trusts.

The People's party, he said, stands on a platform pledged, as he interpreted it, to the principle of free trade. The intolerable burden put upon the agricultural classes through the indirect system of taxation had been one of the potent causes which produced the present condition of affairs. The farmers of the country in 1850 owned 60 per cent of the wealth, 53 per cent in 1860, 40 per cent in 1880 and 30 per cent in 1890.

It was at this juncture that Simpson created great applause and amusement by treating the House to the spectacle of a dilapidated coat. He proposed to show the House exactly what the poor people of the country did wear. Reaching down under his desk he seized a tattered old overcoat, fringed at the edge and bespangled with great patches. He held it on high, while the house and galleries cheered. "I bought that of a farmer," said he, "who told me he left home at twelve o'clock at night and had traveled twenty-five miles to sell his product in your boasted home market. There, as Cleveland said, is an object lesson." (Laughter.)

"There is a sample of what men wear under the beneficent system of protection," he continued. "It is made of shoddy and rage. Set!" Here he ripped it up the back. "Yet," he added, "I can find its duplicate on the backs of a million men in this country."

"Where did he buy it?" asked Cannon (Rep.) of Illinois.

"He bought it a year ago in this city, for $8, and I bought him another shoddy coat to take its place for $1.40." [Laughter.]

"Is it American or imported?" asked Cannon.

"I don't know," replied Simpson, "I don't care; but it is the product of American protection. No one can deny that." [Laughter and applause.]

BALTIMORE, Jan. 12.—During a storm eight sailors, accompanied by a ferryman, started in a boat to go to Locust Point. The boat was swamped and five sailors and the ferryman were drowned. The others were rescued by a tug. The names of the drowned sailors, who were on shore leave from the British ship Mareca, are: Neal Finlayson, W. H. Nelson, R. J. Wilson, John Hughes, Peter Sanfranski. The name of the ferryman is not learned.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—A Washington special to the morning papers says Cleveland has called for the resignation of the members of the Utah Commission with a view of increasing its efficiency. It is represented that there are conflicting interests among its members and that good government will be served by a new deal. When the Democrats in Congress come to admit Utah as a state the commission will die a natural death.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The executive committee today did what it considered a fine stroke of policy by passing resolutions, first for the admission of Utah to the Union; second for the admission of all the territories to the Union of states.

PORT TOWNSEND, Wash., Jan. 12.—Very few white men in Alaska are married, nearly all, according to native custom, having bought their wives. It has been impossible to get the grand juries to indict, because the members of the juries themselves are guilty. Now, United States Marshal Porter has instructed his deputies throughout the territory to arrest all such violators of the law. As a result nearly every man on board the United States steamer Pinta are in jail at Sitka. Hundreds of others, leading citizens, will be taken in custody.

DENVER, Jan. 14.—A committee of Santa Fe railroad employes from La Junta, Colo., inform Governor Waite that the engineers, conductors, brakemen, switchmen and trackmen of all grades on the western division of the road have received no salary since last October, and many of the men and their families are on the verge of starvation.

RUSSELL, Kan., Jan. 14.—Last night a mob of about twenty men entered the jail, took out S. G. Burton, Wm. Gay and his son, John Gay, and hung the trio. About midnight the residents of the north part of town heard a party of fifteen or twenty horsemen come in from the north, who left their horses at the stockyards, where the plans were arranged and the party proceeded to the jail. No officers were aroused or even were aware of what was going on until early this morning. In the jail were two steel cells, in which the prisoners were confined. Guards were placed about the jail, and it was not the work of a moment for the mob to gain an entrance. About this time Burton gave a few loud yells and asked what was wanted with him. The mob began to break the locks of the jail with sledge hammers.

Burton was the first one taken out and proceeded to the spot selected for the lynching and left under guard, the balance of the party returning and joining the guards watching the jail. The two Gays were then marched to the bridge where Burton had been left. Ropes were placed around their necks and each given a chance to speak.

Burton said he could tell lots about his connection with stealing cattle, selling whiskey and other things, but when asked to tell about the Dinning murder replied, No, sir."

Young Gay made a prayer and said Burton had killed Dinning with an ax. Old man Gay stated: "We were led into this." The leaders then clapped their hands three times, and, quick as a flash, all three were pushed off the bridge. The Gays evidently died from strangulation, but the noose on Burton's neck slipped around up over the chin and he was heard to breathe heavily for a moment, when several shots were fired into his body. Each of the others also had a bullet sent into him.

WESTON, W. Va., Jan. 14.—Information was received here this afternoon of the apprehension of Calvert and Hennol Flemming, two notorious outlaws, for whom the state of Virginia offers a reward of $2000 and the county $800. The Flemming brothers Saturday evening stopped at the store of John Boggs. While they were engaged in making purchases at the store the officers came in and demanded an immediate surrender. The desperadoes resisted arrest, and opened fire. Their shots were returned by the officers and a fierce conflict ensued. Calvert Flemming was killed outright and his brother, Hennon, mortally wounded. He received three shots in the left breast. He is still alive, but cannot recover. The two officers, John H. Branham and Doc Swannell, were seriously wounded.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A Berlin dispatch to the Standard says Bismarck's health is reported not quite satisfactory. Besides the old gastric disorder, he has suffered recently from influenza.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 14.—The Pacific Mail steamship City of Peking brought details from Ningpo of one of the most terrible fires on record, which occurred in the big temple of that city December 8th, and caused the death of nearly 300 women and children. It appears that the annual theatrical performance of the first of the eleventh moon, in honor of the gods, was being given in the temple, and was attended by upwards of 400 people. Some were trampled to death, others jumped out of the windows and were either killed or so badly injured that they were unable to escape the flames and so perished, while others passively awaited their fate.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—An accident occurred this morning at the Hackensack bridge on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western road, near Jersey City. Two passenger trains collided with fatal result. The collision was between the Dover and Orange express trains and was caused by fog. Two cars were telescoped, fifteen people killed and twenty-five injured.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—An attempt to blow up with two bombs a tenement house at No. 54 avenue D, was made tonight. A tailor shop on the first floor had been locked up over a month, owing to the hard times. At 10 o'clock there was a terrific explosion in the tailor shop, and an alarm was promptly turned in. The whole front of the house had been blown out by the explosion, all the glass in the building shattered. The shock aroused the whole neighborhood.

Written for this Paper.

"WITH ALL THY GETTING!"

Men should learn wisdom by the facts of their experience; but alas, too often that experience needs to be repeated, just as the lessons of the tardy school boy have to be renewed until he makes them all his own. An overweening self-confidence is often ruthlessly overthrown by unexpected or untoward circumstances. Confidence in others has melted away a thousand times in the strange crucible of human life. Labor has been spent, means lavished and hopes blighted, in the pursuit of things long proved as delusions by our predecessors—nay, even by ourselves. Men have been allured by fame to find it but a bubble; by wealth, which when acquired, took to itself wings and flew away; by business, which involved worry, anxiety, sorrow, and failure after all! Even the pursuit of right things did not always bring peace, for the right way was persistently ignored. Self-love suggested, urged, almost compelled action, forgetting at the time that "there is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is death!"

It is difficult at times to analyze personal motive, much less the motive of another. Human nature is a complex instrument. Its gamut may run to unanticipated depths profound, or it may soar to the confines of the Infinite; and yet the all-unworthy motive may find a greater deep, or clip its wings when flight seems most assured success! The young man glorying in his strength goes into the arena of life as a reformer. Where hundreds have been disconcerted before him, he treads with airy footsteps the path marked out by hopeful youth. He notes not the ghastly skeletons around him, who, once joyous and fervid as he, lay down and died. Bitter experience tells upon his grand physique; and by and bye, he, too, sinks into premature nothingness by the rugged wayside.

Another goes forth with a more subtle luster in his eye and a more elastic step. Political methods of reform are chimerical with him. Education is the panacea which he provides. Schoolhouses spring up at the magic of his voice. Professors and courtiers catch or assume the enthusiasm he bears. Crowds flock around "as the doves to their windows." The intelligence of books, classes and routine are assumed to be the all in all. Money as water is poured upon the thirsty soil of ignorance, which like a sponge absorbs it all. And yet behind this very effort lies the cunning demon, self, and personal advantage like "the specter of the Broken" looms up through the mist of effort on the mountain tops of false illusion.

One more goes out amid the masses of mankind. His mission is one of mercy and of peace. He meets each one as a brother and grasps his trembling hand. He notes the marks of sin and sorrow, but he comes to save. A consecrated life is his, and grand the message which he brings. It is not by the devious ways of politics that he would bring reform; not by the lore of schools that he would redeem or regenerate the world; but taking humanity as it is, he would captivate the heart, he would touch the soul, he would allure and draw out the man. Not his "to break the bruised reed, or quench the smoking flax;" not his to present the Dead Sea apples of man's device, how beautiful to the eye soever yet are they ashes to the taste.

No step is urged but progress stamps it as its own. No thought but leads to loftier ground. No toll, no sacrifice or tear, but works its destined end. This teacher's lore is from the heavens; the message swells in Father's voice; self-perished on the well-loved mission field, and every convert thus inspired waken to this wondrous life of love. Full consecration told its story to the world, and human wisdom found itself at fault. The stripping of the cross, sense wealth, or fame, or culture such as hirelings know, and yet success! The work was none of his, and yet it was! "In earthen vessel was this treasure hid, that the excellence of the power might be of God, and not of us!" And so from land to land, with neither purse nor scrip, the mighty herald goes, his trust in heaven and God; his words the words of life, the truth; his testimony like a flame of fire; he sows the good seed of the kingdom yet to be, and as it roots and swells to nobler life and verdure green as tender grass, light cleaves to light, and gathering neth the shades of Utah's hoary mountain slopes, they grow and multiply and spread; the basin overflows, and on the outer thirsty vagrant lands the power of life is felt and seen; nor all ignored the science there of rule or cultured mind, these come of course—without constraint, fer Truth. All truth is ours and theirs, but no foundation made of sand can bear that stately temple to the skies.

Religion binds, and yet its heaven works on every line of thought and action as it comes; if business, it pervades and purifies the steward of a trust; if science speaks, the finger of the Deity is there, and element, refined or crude, but waits His fiat ere it ministers to man; if government or rule, tis not of force, but for a common good and self defense from outer force; if now religion moves, on lines of brotherhood and Priesthood all its work begins and ends; the Nazarene its grandest, highest type, a Savior thus, one sent indeed, example pure as snow and sweet as early flower; a reflex of the Highest, "the brightness of His glory, and express image of His person!"

Who shall declare the generations of these mighty ones? Who aid them in this grand unselfish work? Where can the counterpart be found on earth? And what or who hath power to "all things draw unto himself?"

The latter-days are here, their spirit permeates uncounted hearts. These valleys teem with those inspired, those who their armor have already donned, and on the battle-field have often been, nay now are, found. They cope with ignorance and sin; with shame and counterfeits of every grade; with self however disguised; with error though it staid in trust and place; with wrong where'er it lifts its hoary head and claims the right to rule.

Doubt not that every wrong shall be redressed, that joy shall come to every one oppressed, that righteousness the earth shall cover as the mighty deep is water-filled; but not by man nor by his skill, or dreams, or thought, or work, unless these are of God; and those who work, who hail success, must seek His face, and find the strength in Him. The Alpha and Omega He intends to be, save when this was conferred upon His Son, before the stars with joy were filled. And though in toll we build our homes, and plant our fields, or multiply our flock; though by His spirit we have wrought and victory gained, the glory His, for in us "He did move to do His pleasure and His will." Who would not consecrate anew his all, his body, soul, the labor of his hands and brain, his force of life, each day's pursuit, and ask that blessing which is better far than gold? And 'neath all trial, mid a life's pursuits, His hand but see, as Paul but saw, and planted while the watering was by other hands, yet over—after all, the increase came from Him who is supreme, and out of evil brings all good; unto the utmost saving those who put their trust in Him, and sanctify themselves by faith and duty, love for all His high behests, and so they gain—must gain at last—a crown.

Written for this Paper.

READ THE COLD FIGURES!

My attention was attracted, a few days ago, by an article in the Tribune signed by a Mr. Ryland, where it is stated that agricultural education receives more for its support than all other higher educational interests combined. I made inquiry and elicited the following information relating to the comparative financial support of the two institutions for the present year:

THE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.
From the U. S. as an Agricultural College	$19,000
From the U. S. as an Experiment Station	15,000
From Territorial appropriations—one-half the biennial period	$1,500
	$35,500
THE UNIVERSITY.
From Territorial appropriations—one-half the biennial period	$45,000
Interest, etc., on land sales	2,500
	$47,500
Deducting amount for deaf mute school	10,000
	$37,500

It thus seems that the Agricultural school receives $17,000 more this year for its support than do all other higher educational interests combined.

The number of students at the college, according to its president's statement, is about 226, many of whom are, as has been admitted and shown, pupils who should be in a high school or even in a district school.

$35,500 divided by 226 equals $245.57.

Thus it costs $245.57 to educate one student this year at the College.

The number of students attending the University this year, according to its president's statement, is 347; according to published statements 128 of these are doing college grade work and the others preparatory work either as normals or as preparatory students; the last should be in a high school.

$37,500 divided by 347 equals $110.95.

Thus it costs $110.95 to educate one student this year at the University.

In other words, $17,000 a year more is paid to educate 226 students in the Agricultural College than to educate 347 students of much higher grade of scholarship in the University. That is, it costs about $184 more (or more than twice as much) to educate each of the students in the Agricultural College for this one year than to educate each of the students in the University.

The College has 21 professors and instructors; the University has 16, or, if the librarian be counted, 19.

Thus, on $17,000 less money per year the University is educating 121 more students than the Agricultural College, and with a fewer number of professors and instructors.

These figures are the more interesting since the president of the Agricultural College has been preaching economy to the University, and has taken occasion in the newspapers to show how much more economical his institution was in the way of salaries to its professors. If he pays, as he says, from forty to fifty per cent lower salaries, he pays pitiful wages indeed, and it is a thing for him to blush over rather than for him to boast of. The figures may or may not have bearing on the question, but they interested me much and I thought they might be equally interesting to the tax-payers.

I would not for an instant wish to deprive the College of a cent of its support; it abundantly deserves all it gets, and more too, if only to raise the salaries of its professors, who, if they are at all competent to occupy a place in the faculty of such an institution, should be very much better paid than I understand they are. And yet it does seem as though there should be some sort of rearrangement of the relative incomes of the two institutions.

Yours truly,
UTAH.

THE CHURCH CASES.

At Wednesday morning's session of the Territorial Supreme court all the judges were present, namely, Chief Justice Zane, Associate Justices Miner, Barth and Smith. The minutes of Saturday were read by Clerk Bache and confirmed, and after some other preliminary matters had been run through mention was made of

THE RECEIVER'S ACCOUNTS.

Hon. F. S. Richards arose and said—I understand, your honors, that the master appointed the other day to examine the accounts of the receiver in the case of the U. S. vs the late corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is ready to report.

Judge Zane—Let it be filed.

Attorney Richards—The court will not act upon it this morning, then?

Judge Zane—Not without an opportunity to examine it.

Attorney Richards observed that the report of Master Bache had been submitted to all the parties concerned; the decree had been prepared in accordance therewith, and counsel, in now submitting it, asked that it be entered this afternoon if convenient to the court.

The Hon. F. S. Richards submitted the following for the court's approval, and there being no objection offered by U. S. District Attorney Judd, the same was passed:

U. S. of America, plaintiff, vs the late corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, et al, defendants.

Whereas it is made to appear to the court that Henry W. Lawrence, as receiver of said late corporation, had loaned to various banks the moneys in his hands as such receiver under the orders of this court; and

Whereas the terms of said loans provided that the same should be repaid to said receiver after thirty days' notice of an intention to demand repayment of the same; and

Whereas in the month of November, 1893, the said receiver gave said notice, so as to be in a position to comply with any order this court might make for the final disposition of said property; and

Whereas in compliance with said notice the said banks were forced after the thirty days expired to keep on hand the said funds and were thereby prevented from gaining any profit by the loan of said funds;

Therefore, by the consent of the attorneys for the respective parties to this action, it is hereby ordered that the said receiver shall not collect any interest on said loans accruing after the 31st day of December, 1893, and that said receiver shall not be liable for such interest.

Dated January 12th, 1894.

Following is the report of Special Master Joseph P. Bache in the case of the United States of America, plaintiff, vs the late corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints et al, defendants, as submitted to the Supreme court of the Territory this morning and taken under advisement by their honors until Wednesday afternoon:

"Pursuant to the order of this court heretofore made, referring this cause to me as Special Master, for examination and inquiry, and to report the amount of personal property and money now in the hands of the receiver of the court herein, not arising from the sale or rents of real estate since March 3rd, 1887, I beg leave to submit the following report:

The receiver has in his hands, as such receiver, in money, the sum of $454,113.19; of this amount the sum of $36,824.25 has been derived from the net revenues of the several pieces of real estate held by him, against which amount should be charged and deducted the sum of $24,895.45, being the pro rata share of the general expenses of the receivership, which said real estate should bear, leaving therefor a net sum of $11,928.80 which has arisen from the rents of real estate since March 3rd, 1887, and should be deducted from the sum mentioned above, as being now in the hands of the receiver. These figures include the payments to be made by the receiver for compensation to the receiver and his counsel for the year 1893 and the expenses of this examination.

I therefore report that the net sum now in the hands of the receiver, after paying said compensation and expenses not arising from the sale or rents of real estate since March 3rd, 1887, is $438,174.39.

The receiver has in his possession the following personal property other than money, to wit: 4,732 shares of stock in Deseret Telegraph company; office furniture in the hands of James Jack in Church office in President's office; office furniture and books in Historian's office; office furniture turned over by late Receiver Dyer to the present receiver H. W. Lawrence."

ADDITIONAL.

The subjoined was also submitted by Master Bache in connection with the foregoing report:

"I have made a personal examination of the books, papers and accounts of the receiver and carefully examined the doings and acts of the receiver for the year 1893.

The amount of cash in the hands of the receiver on January 1st, 1894, is $454,113.19. This is an increase over the amount on hand January 1st, 1893, of $18,445.27 and is accounted for as follows:

From rents of real estate.....	$ 7,764 88
Interest.....	17,391 50
Total.....	25,156 38

The disbursements for the year 1893 have been the sum of $6,711.11 distributed as follows, to wit: General and legal expense, $4,681.35; repairs, special taxes, fire insurance premiums on account of the several pieces of real estate, $2,079.76.

I have found no items of disbursements that were not necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of the receiver and I recommend that the same be approved.

The receiver has been able to obtain four per cent per annum interest on the entire fund, except $5,000, on which no interest is paid, the receiver carrying his open account with this bank.

No rent is charged the fund for office accommodations and but $35 per month is charged for services of bookkeeper, collector, etc.

The receiver has had considerable trouble in the matter of the renting of the Gardo House and has been unable to collect the full amount of rent due for that property. He has, however, obtained a note for the balance of rent due up to January 10th, 1894, which will without much doubt be collected.

I find the fund is deposited in the following banks:

Wells, Fargo & Co.....	$ 70,000 00
McCormick & Co.....	50,000 00
State Bank of Utah.....	50,000 00
Zion's Savings Bank & Trust Co.....	50,000 00
Commercial National Bank.....	30,115 35
Utah Loan & Trust Co., Ogden.....	30,000 00
Ogden State Bank, Ogden.....	10,000 00
Bank of Commerce.....	12,500 00
Union National Bank.....	1,146 73

Total..... $454,113 19

Upon the question of compensation of the receiver and his counsel for the year 1893, I recommend that the same amounts be allowed as were allowed by this court for the year 1892, to wit, the sum of $250 per month for the receiver and the sum of $75 per month for the counsel. The services rendered by the receiver have been, if anything, increased over those of 1892. The counsel for the receiver has rendered legal advice to the receiver from time to time during the year upon various matters that have arisen.

The receiver has passed through a period of depression which has made itself felt throughout the entire country, without the loss of a dollar to the fund.

The amounts as recommended above, if allowed, will be satisfactory to the receiver and his counsel and the several parties interested appear to have no objection to the same being allowed."

THE DECREE.

Here is the decree as submitted by counsel to their honors for approval:

"It appearing from the report of the special master, heretofore appointed to make examination and report to this court the personal property and money now in the hands of the receiver not arising from the sale or rents of real estate since March 8th, 1887, that there is of such money and personal property the sum of four hundred and thirty-eight thousand, one hundred and seventy-four and 89-100 ($438,174.39), and the following personal property to wit: 4732 shares of stock in the Deseret Telegraph Company; office furniture in the hands of James Jack in Church Office in President's Office; office furniture and books in Historian's Office; and office furniture turned over by late Receiver Dyer to present Receiver H. W. Lawrence, now in the hands of said receiver; after deducting the expenses of receivership.

Wherefore it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said receiver deliver said property and money, to wit, the sum of four hundred and thirty-eight thousand, one hundred and seventy-four and 89-100 ($438,174.39) to Willford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, to be applied under their direction and control and that of their successors in office to the charitable uses and purposes of said Church, that is to say, for the payment of the debts for which said Church is legally or equitably liable; for the relief of the poor and distressed members of said Church; for the education of the children of such members, and for the building and repair of houses of worship for the use of said Church, but in which the rightfulness or the practice of polygamy shall not be incalcated.

And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the remainder of the money now in the hands of the receiver, to wit, the sum of eleven thousand, nine hundred and thirty-eight and 30-100 ($11,938.80) arising from the rents of real estate since March 8, 1887, be and remain in the custody of said receiver till the further order of this court.

Dated January 10, 1894.

THE COURT'S ORDER.

This afternoon Judge Bartch (in the absence of Chief Justice Zane from the bench) announced that the court approved the report of the special master and the decree, as submitted this morning, likewise ordering that the money be now turned over to the First Presidency of the Church.

SHOT THROUGH THE HEART.

There was a frightful and fatal accident at Mill Creek on Tuesday last and strange to say that particulars of it were not sent to this city until this morning, though the scene of the fatality is not more than half a dozen miles away.

The victim was Harry Leggett, a young man in his twentieth year. I appears that he had been to the post office which is about a mile from his parents' home. On returning he saw a rabbit a short distance from the house and taking a double-barreled breech-loading gun from its resting place informed his father that he would go out and bag it. A moment later and he disappeared over a small hill into a ravine on the other side.

Nothing more was seen or heard of him till his dead body was found five or six hours later. It was about 11:30 a.m. when he left the house, and late in the afternoon his mother commenced to worry over his protracted absence, and calling her husband, impressed him that there might be something wrong. Mr. Leggett, accompanied by a younger son, Joseph, went in search of Harry. They found it a comparatively easy matter to follow his footsteps, as there was considerable snow on the ground. They had been gone but a few minutes when they were horror-stricken by finding the young man's body cold and lifeless.

Examination showed that he had been dead several hours as his body was stiff and rigid. The grief of the father and his little son over their terrible discovery was overwhelming. The former, after a time, however, partly recovered himself, but the latter refused to be comforted, and his sobbings were most pitiful.

When the unwelcome intelligence was borne to the mother she, too, was fearfully startled and shocked and wept bitterly. Neighbors were notified and assisted in removing the body to the family residence. An examination disclosed a terrible hole in the left breast directly over the heart. It had been caused by the discharge of the cartridge from one of the barrels of the shot gun which lay near the body. Just how the accident occurred is of course merely a matter of conjecture though it is believed, and the conclusion seems to be borne out by the facts, that the deceased was carrying the gun, with the hammer raised when in pursuit of the rabbit, and that he tripped and fell, causing the discharge of the fowling piece. When found there were no evidences of the presence of either man or beast near the body during the day as the snow was unbroken and undisturbed. The muzzle of the gun was near his breast when discharged as his clothes were powder burned for several inches around the wound which was itself no larger than a silver dollar. An inquest was held and a verdict of accidental death returned.

Young Leggett was highly respected in the community in which he lived and the shocking and unexpected manner in which he came to his death has stricken the hearts of his many friends with sorrow. The Leggett family were formerly residents of the Twenty-first ward of this city but removed to East Mill Creek a few years ago.

WHY EVERYTHING FREE?

I have noticed considerable controversy lately in the News on the question of uniting the Utah University and Agricultural College, and much has been said pro and con. In all this discussion there is nothing whatever said as to the most important point in the whole matter and that is, why should the Utah University be maintained at all as a free institution at the expense of the taxpayers?

If the state provide a free ordinary business education such as is now obtainable in the district schools it is in every sense all that can reasonably be expected of it, and those who desire to study the classics should pay their own way.

The increased school facilities in this Territory within the last few years have increased taxation so greatly that it is really working oppression on very many people in this city and other parts of the Territory. To compel people to maintain an institution such as the Utah University when many are forced to see their property sold to raise the taxes to help do it is no sense wise or statesmanlike. Were the Utah University an absolute necessity and a general benefit to the whole state there might be some more plausible excuse for its maintenance at public expense; but it is not such a necessity as to justify its being supported by public taxation.

It is time unnecessary expenditures of public means were checked and zeal and enthusiasm gave way to wisdom and sound judgment in public school matters, which at present are in every direction far more costly than public necessity demands. It is to be earnestly hoped that the present legislature will take hold of the matter clearly and begin by eradicating unnecessary expense and place the Utah University on its own merits and not on a free basis.

There is also ample room for legislation in the economical management of the district schools and some effort should be made to relieve the heavy expense now carried by the overburdened taxpayer in that direction also. Much might be said on this matter if space permitted.

BERNARD.

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 12, 1894.

A Jap has recently turned out a neat little device for defending himself against footpads, burglars and other nuisances, says the San Francisco Chronicle. It is a small piece of mechanism that shoots a charge of fine dust into the eyes at a distance of ten or twelve yards, so as to close them up tightly. It doesn't blind, however. After twenty minutes or so the eyes of the person so treated are as right as ever again. Of course, there is nothing to prevent the tables being turned and the wicked man using the instrument against his victims.

Charles Bierman, the man in charge of the wild animals at Columbia gardens, has had a desperate struggle with mountain lion, says the Butte (Mont.) Inter-Mountain. Bierman was engaged in cleaning the cage when the lion reached one of its paws out through the bars of the cage. The lion caught Bierman in the right hand, sinking one of its claws in between the index finger and thumb. The animal tried to pull the man toward him. He struggled for a long time trying to release the lion's grasp but could not. Then he reached into the cage with his left hand and caught the lion by the nose. He twisted and squeezed the nose so as to come near choking the lion, and finally the infuriated animal released his paw from Mr. Bierman's hand.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

In Tucson, Ariz., pretty girls are employed as ushers in the churches.

A new paper has been started in Albion, Idaho. It is named the Busy Bee.

Wolf scalp bounties are no longer paid in Colorado, the funds being exhausted.

Canyon City, Colo., will soon have a very handsome new Santa Fe passenger depot.

Durango, Colo., papers are discussing the reason why there are no bald headed Ute Indians.

At Glenrock, near Casper, Wyo., about ninety miners are kept employed in the coal mines.

Garfield county, Colo., stockmen say the winters are less hard on their cattle than the heat of summer.

A Riverside, Cal., tramp, taken in the act of stealing oranges, was sentenced to ten days in jail.

Saturday Morning at Boca, Nevada county, Cal., the thermometer registered 22 deg. below zero.

At Yuma, Ariz., a politician has sued the Western Union for $10 for delivering him an insulting telegram.

At Florence, Colo., the war between the oil companies has knocked another 5 cents off the price of petroleum.

Five hundred umbrella trees have just been planted along the streets of a Phoenix, Ariz., addition. It sometimes rains there.

Robert Smith, the proprietor of the Rock Springs (Wyo.) Miner, is contemplating the publication of the Miner as a daily paper.

At Trinidad, Colo., the Sunflower creamery is run to its full capacity, and Trinidad papers urge the establishment of more creameries.

There are good prospects that the town of Lander will soon be lighted by arc light instead of incandescent as now, says the Gazette of that town.

Several merchants of Butte, Mont., have suffered through the operations of a clever windler, who raised $1 bills to $10.

The home of the cashier of the Arizona National bank, at Phoenix, has been entered by burglars three times within a month.

Eagle county, Colo., is making a vigorous effort to suppress cattle killing on the Roaring Fork range. Several cattle thieves have been caught lately.

Rifle, Colo., ranchmen to the number of nearly one hundred are ready to pledge a supply of sugar beets to keep a sugar factory running if one can be located in Garfield county.

Pueblo coal dealers have combined to resist the law compelling them to weigh their coal. Buyers should now combine to let such dealers keep their unweighed coal.

The Abeyta pass wagon road to be constructed through portions of Huerfano and Costilla counties, Colorado, has been incorporated. The road will cost about $20,000.

Twenty-two applicants for pardon have been filed for consideration of the Nevada state board at its next session. Of these eight are serving sentence for murder in the second degree and two for the first degree.

More than 4,000 rabbits were killed in the Arkansas valley within a hundred miles of Pueblo last week. The farmers now begin to realize the danger their young crops were threatened with next spring.

Cannon City, Colo., apples were in such urgent demand last fall that buyers begged for winesaps and Ben Davis apples at $4.25@4.50 a barrel. Tree planting will have a boom near Cannon this year.

Laramie county, Colo., has 457,377 acres of grazing land assessed at $1.81 an acre, and 112,646 acres of agricultural lands assessed at $8.16 an acre. The total land assessment is $597,865.

Northern Arizona will make a great display of fine ornamental cabinet and furniture wood at the Midwinter Fair. The fine woods of Arizona will cut an important figure in manufactures before long.

Phoenix, Ariz., is shipping alfalfa hay to Galveston and New Orleans, and also into Old Mexico, while Arizona barley is finding its way to the New York breweries in large quantities.

Eagle county, Colo., men are preparing to run a cross-cut tunnel into Mineral mountain, near Glenwood, for the purpose of striking the iron vein in that mountain and putting it on the market.

In Garfield county, Colo., cattlemen are steadily marketing range fed cattle at fair prices, and are converting their surplus cash into alfalfa meadows. All the small valleys are being utilized for alfalfa.

In and around Canon City, Col., the winter apple crop sold for about $50,000, and the summer fruit for about as much more. Outside the city the fruit crop of Fremont county realized about $20,000 for 1893.

Percy Brillhart, a boy of fifteen, arrested on complaint of the secretary of the state board of charities and corrections, Cal., for stealing stamps from his office, escaped from the city jail on Tuesday night.

Medicine Bow range of mountains, Wyoming, are destined to be a scene of busy mining excitement next spring. At Rockvale several thousand acres of gold placer ground was taken up and recorded last month by capitalists.

A Saguache, Col., farmer took 960 head of sheep to Omaha, but could not sell at any price because they were not fat. He had to leave them with a farmer outside of Omaha to be fattened. Moral: Fatten your stock before shipment.

Routt county, Colo., ranks first in the state for cattle. It has $367,603 invested. Rio Blanco comes second with $314,875 in cattle; Larimer with $296,515; Weld, $208,395; Montrose, $204,080. Eastern Colorado no longer figures as a great cattle range.

At Green River station, Wyoming, last week a Chinese cook quarreled with a pretty white dining room girl and revenged himself by pasting her in the face with a hot custard pie. The girl was badly burned, the pastry was ruined and the Mongolian went to jail.

Chief of Police Archibald, who was shot Saturday night at Prescott, A. T., is still alive, and the physicians have hopes of his recovery. Constable Miller, who did the shooting, has been released on $2,000 bail, awaiting the result of his victim's wounds.

Near Eddy, N. M., the Seven Pines dam recently completed is said to be rapidly filling up and will form a lake as large as Lake Chautauqua, New York. It is an immense concrete and will contain enough water to run the connecting irrigation ditches for about seventy-two days if required.

The Pecos valley, New Mexico, is the coming cattle fattening region. On the La Cueva ranch in Mora county, 1,000 head of cattle are being fattened this winter on alfalfa, which realizes $8 a ton fed this way. Immense alfalfa meadows are being formed in the Pecos valley.

The experimental farm in the San Luis valley, Colo., after testing many varieties of potatoes, declares the following as most profitable for the San Luis valley: Rubicund, Late Ohio, Yankee Nation, Prince Edward Island Rose, Monroe Seedling, White Sport and White Elephant.

An overland tramp accepted the bantering offer of a brakeman of a free ride on the back of a steer. He climbed upon a steer's back and rode from Winnemucca to Reno, Nev., a distance of 175 miles, in the night time. When he got cold he dropped down among the cattle for warmth.

John Nurmlinter, an aged and decrepit German, who arrived in Boise city several days ago from Salt Lake, has applied to the city for assistance, says the Boise Statesman. Nurmlinter says he walked most of the way from Salt Lake. His feet are badly frozen and he is almost dead from exposure.

Trinidad, Colo., is hopefully looking forward to the commencement before March 1, of the Trinidad and San Luis Valley railroad. This is said to be a section of the Rock Island road now graded from Liberal, Kan., to Emery Gap, on the Fort Worth road. The Rock Island is certainly headed for Trinidad.

In this land, flowing with milk and honey, says the San Francisco Chronicle, the honey is probably made by bees, but the milk is not always manufactured by cows. Over a third of the liquid sold as milk in this city never passed through the lactal distillery of a quadruped. To concoct it only burnt sugar, salt and water are needed.

A young lady named Holiday who resides at Monument Park, Colo., started to drive from Colorado Springs to her home on Saturday evening. When she had reached her destination she was almost frozen to death. After she had become thoroughly warm it was found that she had lost the power of speech.

The Western Union Beef company who have vast herds of cattle grazing in Northwestern Colorado, have sworn out warrants for the arrest of J. Beckley and Ed Morand, living near Pinneo in Akron county, for stealing calves and for killing range cattle and doing a butcher's business, selling the choicest beef for 2 cents per pound.

The South Gila canal construction commenced January 1, giving employment to about 800 men. The main canal is 70 miles long and will irrigate 160,000 acres of land in Yuma and Maricopa counties, Ariz. It will be 40 feet wide and have a flow of water six feet deep. The reservoir will cover 3,000 acres and the dam will be 110 feet high.

Ranchmen say that the recent storm on the plains was a terror, remarks the Laramie (Wyo.) Boomerang. Cattle not hayed suffered considerably, many dying on account of the excessive cold. A large herd of strays were driven in town during the storm and took shelter behind barns and other places. They were quite poor and will have a hard time to live through the winter.

Some woodchoppers on the Bowers ranch, eight miles south of Chico, Cal., discovered the dead body of a man lying in the brush on Tuesday. The man had no clothes on above the waist and his throat was cut from ear to ear. In his right hand was a lady's penknife open and covered with blood and it is supposed he committed suicide. From letters on the body it is learned that the man's name was Holton. He was a laborer on the ranch. No cause is known for the suicide.

The Kaysville Eagle says it is estimated that there were 2,880 horses and mules in Davis county last year. It is a curious fact that while they have continually decreased during the past few years the price has gone down. There were only one-third as many sheep assessed in Davis county in 1888 as were assessed in 1891. Statistics show the number assessed in the county during the past three years to be as follows: 1891, 10,788; 1892, 4,708; 1893, 3,500.

The Sundance (Wyo.) Gazette says: John Anderson informs us that he recently found the skeleton of a Sioux Indian squaw in the boughs of a large pine tree on Donkey creek. The remains were at the time of death wrapped in several blankets and outside of this a buffalo hide. All these things had decayed. On the arms were found eight metal bracelets and on the fingers several rings. There was also about a peck of glass beads found with the skeleton.

A dispatch from Fort Collins, Colo., says the short course in agriculture promises to be a great success from the start, and a large number is being enrolled for the work. The attendance upon these lectures is voluntary, but a record is made by the secretary of the college of each person taking the course. The freedom of the college is extended to those taking the work of the short course, the opportunities will be extended those desiring to work along special lines in all subjects pertaining to agriculture.

An amusing incident has come to light at Colorado Springs, namely, a burglary in the county jail. A prisoner named Beeson, who was doing a short time for misdemeanor, broke open some boxes of gents furnishing goods which had been levied upon and placed for safe keeping in the basement of the jail by the sheriff, and placed about $50 worth of goods in his blankets. When his time was up he walked out of the jail with the blankets over his shoulder. The robbery was soon discovered and Beeson was re-arrested in Colorado city before he had had time to dispose of the goods.

Lewellyn R. Williams, who has been working at Rockvale, Colo., as a coal miner, was shot and killed by Brakeman E. E. Rhodes, of the Denver and Rio Grande at Larimer on Tuesday. Williams and four companions were beating their way on a freight train and paid $1 apiece to a brakeman. Rhodes then wanted a dollar himself, but retired when Williams drew a gun. A few minutes afterwards he came from the caboose with a revolver and fatally shot Williams in the head. The dead man's companions say that Williams did not pull his gun on the occasion of the brakeman's second visit. Rhodes has been arrested.

For nearly two years the assassination of ex-Sheriff Frank Chaves has been under investigation by the courts and officials of Santa Fe county, N. M. Recently Sheriff Cunningham has made special efforts to trace the guilty persons, and a few days ago made it so warm for them that one of them turned state's evidence. On warrants issued by the district judge the sheriff has arrested three of the gang, Frank and Antonio Borrega and Chino Alarid. Hipolito Vigil, a policeman, who is supposed to be the principal in the affair, fired on the sheriff's posse and was instantly shot down. The other three are in jail under heavy guard. A reward of $2,500, the offer of citizens, is outstanding for the capture and conviction of the assassins of Chaves.

Niles Archibald, chief of police, was shot fatally on Monday night by police constable Miller, at Prescott, A. T.—The two had quarreled about the arrest of a man by Miller who was in the custody of Archibald, but in the hospital. During the quarrel Miller called Archibald a liar, and the latter advanced toward him in a threatening manner, as if intending to strike him, when Miller drew his pistol and fired three shots. Two took effect, one entering his left shoulder from behind, passing entirely through him and coming out in front, going through the upper part of the lung. The other shot took effect in the back, also under the right shoulder, and the physicians have been unable to locate the ball. Miller claims that he acted in self-defense. He is in jail.

Worn with a fruitless search for the notorious outlaw and jail breaker, Evans, Sheriff Scott's posse reached Pine Flat, Cal., on Tuesday afternoon, having abandoned all hope of finding their man on the north side of Kings river, where they had been searching a full week. A report was received which has every indication of being correct. It says that Evans and Morrell were seen in Squaw valley last Thursday. This place is south of Kings river, near the Tulare county line. According to the report Evans and Morrell stopped at the house of a man named Colewell and ate dinner. Evans was armed heavily and Morrell had a rifle and a shotgun. They had the appearance of good treatment and plenty to eat.

A rather unusual shipment of brandy has been made from the Minturn distillery, in Fresno county, Cal. An order was received some time ago from the orthodox Greek church at St. Petersburg, Russia, for 200 barrels of triple-test brandy, to be used for sacramental purposes in that country. The order was accepted and the church in Russia was so notified. Thereupon two priests armed with ecclesiastical authority came from Russia to this country and superintended the making of the brandy. Six hundred barrels were redistilled till reduced to one-third of its bulk. The priests stood guard. There never was a minute during the whole time that one of them was not standing by and watching the brandy come from the still. They relieved each other at this sentinel duty. When the 200 barrels had been filled the priests sealed them and stamped the seal of the church of Russia on each barrel, and all was ready for the shipment. The brandy has just gone forward over the Sunset route to New Orleans, the priests accompanying it, riding in the cars or visiting them at every station. From New Orleans the brandy will go by water to Russia.

What promises to be one of the biggest sensations of the season in Idaho is developing in connection with the death of William McKim at one time superintendent of the Bonapart Hill mine, a prominent property in Rocky Bar. In 1887 McKim mysteriously disappeared, and it was thought at that time that he had absconded, taking with him money belonging to the company. Some time ago a skeleton was found in the Boise river, which from some articles found on it, was identified as being that of the missing superintendent. In addition a witness was produced who said he saw McKim drown. The Bonapart mine is a splendid property, but since McKim disappeared it has not been worked. Prominent owners of the mine now here doubt whether the skeleton found was actually McKim's. It is charged that other miners in Rocky Bar have been taking ore from the Bonapart Hill Mine by working below, and that it has developed great richness. It is broadly hinted that McKim became cognizant of the underground work, and that the parties killed him and then threw him into the river. Detectives are at work on the case, but are very reticent, though it has leaked out that evidence has been unearthed which will bring the matter into the criminal courts.

ON ONE street in New York, Mme. Eve holds forth as a ladies' dress-maker, and only a square or two distant glitters the sign of Mr. Adam, tailor. Any thought of primeval coincidence ends here, however; Gotham is no Garden of Eden.

THE HANDSOMEST calendar for 1894 thus far to hand is that issued by the Winchester Arms company, distributed in local circles by their Utah friends and associates, Browning Brothers, of Ogden and Salt Lake. The Winchesters are noted for making these annual compliments real works of art, and truly the present offering is no exception.

THE SCANDINAVIAN FATHERLAND.

Prepared from Special Cablegrams.

SWEDEN.

Dr. G. F. Sjercke, of Carlstad, died at the age of 85 years.

Natural gas has been discovered at Wilhelmsfelt near the city of Engelholm.

Dr. Elowson, of Carlstad, has been elected congressman from the Carlstad-Filipstad district.

Dr. E. Person, of Falun, committed suicide by hanging himself. He leaves a wife and three children.

The riksdag was opened Jan. 8th instead of the 15th, as has usually been the case.

The health of Queen Sophia has improved, and she has left the Drottningholm castle for Stockholm.

A. von Stockenstrom, the Swedish sculptor, took the first prize at the competition at Academie Julien in Paris.

A Swedish importing agency has been opened in Transvaal, Africa, by Captain Zweigbergk.

Their golden wedding was celebrated by Judge C. F. Erickson, of Baerby, and his wife.

The large Nordanas flour mill and steam saw mill near Ornskoldsvik was burned to the ground.

Mr. Paul Segerberg, a well-known citizen of Nederhoegen Raetan, celebrated his 100th birthday.

The national emblem, the blue and yellow flag of Sweden, is now being hoisted on nearly all the public school buildings.

By cause of her sickness it is not probable that the Queen will accompany King Oscar when he leaves for Norway Jan. 23, as has been decided.

Hilma Nilsson, a young girl of Norrköping, was shot and dangerously wounded by her lover, who had just returned from America.

Diphtheria is raging epidemically in Naesinge and Krokstrand. Eleven children in Naesinge died within the course of a few hours.

Mrs. Anna Maria Jonassdotter, of Ersörpet, the oldest inhabitant in the Skeda parish of Ostergothland, died at the age of 100 years.

Emanuel Deutch, a former banker of Stockholm, who was very well known in business circles, died at the age of 85 years.

The government of China has agreed to pay $40,000 as damages for the murder of the two Swedish missionaries.

On the tomb of August Blanche, the Swedish author, was recently laid a wreath, which had been sent by Swedes in America.

The history of the Bernadotte dynasty has now been written. The author is Mr. John Almen, and the work has already been published in an edition de luxe.

Small-pox has reappeared in Gothenburg. Several weeks ago it was thought that the epidemic had been stamped out, but several cases were reported the other day.

The French paper Le Figaro contains a notice that Prince Louis Napoleon, who at present is serving in the Russian army, intends to make Stockholm his permanent home.

Dr. Sven Hedin, the famous Swedish explorer, arrived at the Taschkent in Turkestan, after having travelled from the Russian town Orenburg by means of horses and wagon. The distance from Orenburg to Taschkent is 1300 miles.

Miss Anna Zetterberg, the young actress, formerly of the Royal Dramatic Theater of Stockholm, is at present playing in London, and will soon appear at the Haymarket Theater in some of Ibsen's dramas.

A large singing festival will be held in Stockholm next June. The most prominent male choruses in the country will participate and compete for a money prize, the amount of which has not yet been fixed.

Chief Engineer S. A. Andre, who recently crossed the Baltic in a balloon and had a narrow escape from being drowned in the sea, proposes now to cross the Atlantic in a giant balloon, which will be especially manufactured for the purpose.

Prince Yorihito Komatsu, of Japan, is at present staying in Stockholm, where he has registered at the Grand hotel under the name of Comte de Mishima. The prince is a son of Prince Nikahito, who attracted great attention, when he visited the courts of Europe in 1887, accompanied by a large number of servants.

Baron von der Kettenburg, who has sued the Swedish government for a debt of several hundred thousand kronor, which Sweden borrowed from some of Kettenburg's forefathers during the Thirty Years' War, made a friendly call on King Oscar the other day. The papers do not inform us whether Oscar and Kettenburg came to an understanding or not.

Sculpture has been practised by several Swedish women, and one of the first known amateurs in this branch was the late Princess Eugenie, sister of King Oscar. Of the present generation the most distinguished are Miss Agnes Kjellberg, who is a member of the Academy of Fine Arts in Sweden, and Miss Ida Mattson, who was represented at the Chicago exposition.

During the last decade many women have studied at the universities of Upsala and Lund, which—in spite of their old statutes, having no close "colleges" as is the case in England, for instance—present no difficulty to women for matriculating as university students. With their male fellow students they have partaken in public and private instruction; they have also entered as member of the provinces.

It is expected here, that the international skating tournament to be held in February, will be the greatest contest of its kind which has ever taken place. The Swedes will have to fight it out against the most prominent American, English, Finnish, Norwegian, Danish and Dutch skaters in the world. The Swedish skaters seem to be very confident, and regard the Americans and Norwegians as their only dangerous rivals.

Funds contributed to the opening of reading rooms have very often been given by Swedish women. The largest reading room in Stockholm with lending library attached was founded in 1866 by the Baroness Adlersparre. It has afterwards been supported and further developed under female management. Many other reading rooms in the larger cities of Sweden are managed by women. The first reading room for working people in Stockholm was opened by Miss Ljungstedt in 1892.

A literary prize competition has been arranged by the newspaper Idun, a journal, which champions the rights of Swedish women. The prize to be given is 2,000 kronor and will go to the author of the best and most original novel. The author must be a Swede, and the action must take place in Sweden. Besides the money compensation the author will receive 500 handsomely bound copies of the book, after it has been published, the manuscript must be sent to the editor of the Idun before Sept. 1st, next year.

The representative of a French tourist bureau arrived at Gothenburg the other day to make arrangements for a trip through Sweden by a large number of American tourists who intend to visit Europe next year. They will arrive at a French harbor and travel through France, Italy, Austria, Turkey, Germany and Denmark. From Copenhagen they will cross the Sound, and visit the Swedish cities of Helsingborg, Gothenburg and Stockholm. After a short visit to Christiania they will return to their native country by way of Paris.

Norrbottnen, the largest of all the Swedish provinces, being 40,000 square miles, is about as large as Ohio, and the most northern provinces (Norrbottnen and Vesterbotten) together 62,000 square miles) are somewhat larger than Illinois. These two provinces embrace the whole of the utmost north of Sweden and occupy one third of the entire area of the kingdom, but together contain only 230,000 inhabitants, or less than one twentieth of the entire population of the country. Half the inhabitants of Sweden live in the part of the country lying farthest south.

The Swedish Anthropological and Geographical Society at its last meeting elected Prof. H. Sjögren president and Dr. H. Stolpe vice-president. Dr. G. Nordenskiöld, a son of the famous explorer, delivered a lecture on the Björling-Kallstenius arctic expedition, and concluded by proposing, that something be done in order to get a full knowledge as to the fate of the two men. Prof. Nordenskiöld spoke also in favor of his son's proposition, and the society decided to appoint a committee, the purpose of which will be to organize a relief expedition. The two Nordenskiölds and several other prominent men were elected members of this committee.

NORWAY.

The Mission church in Akers-garden was burned down.

A new independent labor union is being organized in Christiania.

Dr. I. M. Undset, the well-known archæologist, died at Christiania.

The coal dealers of Christiania have organized a trust.

Dr. H. J. Rink, the prominent Danish scientist, died at Christiania.

Ex-Congressman and consul Axel Winge died at Christiania.

Carl Bund's large printing establishment on Kragerø was burned to the ground.

Consul Johannes Hovig, of Namsos, died at Trondhjem at the age of 55 years.

Nearly all the labor unions of Christiania have passed resolutions in favor of universal suffrage.

The steamer Hilda was wrecked off Lofoten. Two men of her crew were drowned.

Three fishermen, a father and two sons, were drowned by their boat capsizing off Vardo.

Ex-premier Lovenskiold has been elected president of the "Royal Society for the Welfare of Norway."

The aldermen of Christiania have fixed the expenses of the city to 6,595,000 kroner during 1894.

Minister Qvam had a narrow escape from drowning, when he fell from a steamer at Stenkjær the other day.

An appropriation of 300,000 kroner has been granted for the proposed railroad between Ekersund and Flekkefjord.

Bjornson's "Over Evne" has been translated into English and will be published under the name of "Pastor Sang."

The number of births out of wedlock in Norway is about  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, two and a half per cent lower than in Sweden.

Commodore Jens Trampe, of Horten, is dead. He was one of the oldest men in the Norwegian marine, and leaves a wife and three children.

Ten people, two women and eight men, who all had their homes in Stavanger, were drowned by their boat capsizing while off Riskekværnen.

A steamship line between Norway and Spain has been established. Steamers will leave Christiania for Genoa every fourteenth day.

The most elegant skates in the world have been manufactured for Axel Paulsen, the Norwegian champion skater. The skates are said to be worth several hundred kr. ner.

The commercial navy of Norway has suffered the most heavy losses by cause of the late storms, and more sailors perished than during any of the fishing seasons of the last decade.

Congressman Hagen, who last summer cut out the union mark from the Norwegian flag, and then hoisted it on the telegraph station (in Skjerno) whose manager he was, has been removed from office.

The consumption of wine has certainly decreased during the past 20 years, but this is of less consequence since the beverage is solely used by the wealthier classes. However, the consumption of brandy (whiskey) has also decreased, while the consumption of beer has increased. It goes without saying, that as regards the use of intoxicating liquors' Norway is far from ranking among the nations occupying the most unfavorable position in this respect.

DENMARK.

The Copenhagen free harbor is now nearly filled with water.

A steamship line will be established between Copenhagen and Newcastle.

Thousands of people are without work in Helsingfors, the capital of Finland.

There are 250 post offices in Denmark, and the number of employes is 48,00.

C. C. F. Schiørring, the prominent Danish violinist, died at Copenhagen.

The Finnish sculptor Runeberg is working on a great monument of Czar Alexander II.

Carl Ludvig Ferdinand Messman, a prominent artist of Copenhagen, died at the age of 67 years.

Minister Philip W. Heyman, one of the largest packers of Denmark, died at Copenhagen.

Count Chamberlain Luttichan has been elected president of the Academy of Agriculture.

About 55 per cent of the population of Denmark gain their livelihood by agriculture.

A new steamship line between Copenhagen and New Orleans will be opened by the Hamburg American P. Co.

During the month of November 523 persons emigrated to America, against 1,253 for the same month last year.

The subscriptions for the suffering families of the perished Jutland fishers have now reached 250,000 kroner.

Ex-congressman Jacob Jacobsen died at his country-mansion Falkenstein, near Slagelse, at the age of 77 years.

Tivoli, the large amusement establishment in Copenhagen, has declared a dividend of 26 per cent.

Mrs. K. . . . e, a society belle and daughter of Baron Gedalia, will soon make her debut as a variety singer on the stage of the Tivoli.

A five year old girl at Vojers weighs 136 pounds, and she can carry a little more than one-half of her own weight. Her father proudly calls her "the biggest child in the world."

Miss Rigmor Pasbjerg, the Danish singer, who for some time has been connected with the Trafalgar Square Theater in London, has been engaged for a concert tour through southern Africa.

"Poor People's Christmas Joy" is a society at Copenhagen, which has been in operation a quarter of a century. Its aim is to provide for Christmas presents for such people as have seen better days in the past.

The increase of population in Denmark is not so much weakened by emigration at present, as has been the case during many of the years of the last decade. There is no doubt that emigration is decreasing.

Tivoli, at Copenhagen, was visited by 544,632 persons during the summer, and the receipts exceeded the expenditures by the snug little sum of \$32,000. This surplus gives the stockholders a dividend of  $8\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

Einar Amundsen, a member of the Althing of Iceland, who died some time ago, illustrates the great literary activity of that country. Being the son of a poor peasant, Einar Amundsen did not enjoy any school education. But as he grew up, he learned English, German, French and Danish, and in the course of the last few years of his life he studied Latin in order to read Cicero in the original.

MASSACRE OF WILSON'S PARTY.

CAPETOWN, Jan. 18.—Details of the massacre of Captain Wilson's party by the Matabeles were received here today when natives who were with King Lobengula at the time of the fight arrived at Bulawayo to surrender and tell the story of the struggle. Wilson's party consisted of forty British troopers and about a hundred native auxiliaries. They came upon King Lobengula, who had a strong force. Confident that the Spirit of the Matabeles was thoroughly broken, and in trying to capture the king, Wilson, without taking precautions against a surprise, dashed forward with his troopers. Lobengula discovering the smallness of the attacking forces planned a successful ruse. He ordered the centre of his column to retreat before the British advance, while the flanks fell away on either side in order to surround the British. The plan worked perfectly, the troopers dashing recklessly forward and soon left the native auxiliaries far behind. Then the Matabeles in front made a stand and those on the flanks began to close in. Wilson discovered his danger and tried to cut his way out to join his auxiliaries, but the Matabeles pressed him on every side in overwhelming numbers. The troopers' horses fell beneath them and they were finally compelled to make a life and death stand, fighting from behind their dead horses as breast works. The ammunition for their carbines soon gave out and they then had to resort to the revolver, and when they had no more cartridges they defended themselves with their swords, while savages pressed closer and closer, and finally, with savage yells, swept down upon those who remained alive of the little band and with assegais and clubs beat them to the earth, and all was over, after a struggle characterized by almost unexampled bravery. So ended another tragic chapter in the history of Great Britain's military operations in Africa, in which as in others perished some of her bravest soldiers and young sons of some of her best families, sent out to get the first taste of war.

AUGUSTE VAILLANT.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—After Vaillant had admitted in reply to questions of the public prosecutor, that he had been several times in prison for theft, he exclaimed fiercely: "The unjust conditions were responsible for what you are pleased to term robberies." Vaillant said he conceived the idea of blowing up the chamber of deputies while living at Choleyle Roi. He admitted that he obtained the money with which he purchased the materials for making the bomb from the results of theft; later on he reluctantly admitted that he received 20 francs from Madame Paul Recluse, the wife of a young engineer and nephew of the distinguished French geographical writer Jacques Elyze Recluse. Vaillant, however, insisted that Madame Recluse gave him the money as an act of charity, not as a subscription to the cause of anarchy or in any way to further the ends which he had in view. Vaillant said he regretted that the bomb did not have the effect he desired and explained that this was owing to the fact that one of his neighbors in the gallery accidentally knocked his arm while he was in the act of throwing the loaded missile at the deputies.

At this point the presiding judge turned to him and said: "I suppose you wanted to hit Cassimir Perrier, the premier." "No," replied Vaillant, "I did not aim at any one in particular; but I wanted to kill some ministers. All ministers are the same to me." He continued:

"It is true I hit some of the spectators, but I only intended to hit the deputies or ministers and I would rather see three or four ministers or deputies killed than have one spectator injured."

The judge tried to interrupt the person, but Vaillant succeeded in adding: "I am not waging war against the people but against society, and I aimed directly at these parasite deputies."

The jury retired at 5:35 p.m. and were absent twenty-five minutes. Upon their return it was announced that they had found the prisoner guilty.

Upon hearing the foreman's answer to the judge's question, asking him if the jury had agreed on a verdict, Vaillant sprang to his feet and shouted: "It is death. I thank you for it."

The presiding judge then announced the sentence of death, and Vaillant upon hearing the words which condemned him to death shouted: "Vive l'anarchie."

The Tooele county court has notified the Chamber of Commerce authorities in this city that it has appropriated $75 towards the Midwinter Fair fund.

At Butte, Mont., members of a family who were being given assistance by the county used the money to attend the theater. They were soon cut off the list when their action was known.

In Arizona only two papers oppose statehood, the Silver Belt and the Tucson Star. In New Mexico all the Democratic papers favor the postponement of statehood until March, 1895.

Four chains for the Mare Island navy yard have been sent from Sacramento, where they arrived by rail from the East. They are designed for some of the war ships. The combined weight of the four is over thirteen tons.

A tramp knocked at the door of Mrs. Hunt at Riverside, Cal., and when she opened it he seized her hand and tried to remove the rings from her fingers. A shot fired through the door by the lady caused the hasty departure of the thief.

At Greene Highlands in the Pecos valley, N. M., a stream of water was struck by well borers last week which rose to the height of the second story of a neighboring court house. Artesian water assures the prosperity of the Pecos valley.

Colorado City is determined to develop its petroleum resources. The oil company has leased 400 acres of oil lands near Colorado City and decided to issue stock to raise money to go down for oil. Petroleum is known to exist there.

Now that the holidays are over, says the Brigham Bugler, let us turn our attention to the canning factory project. Brigham is in need of all the small enterprises that she can secure, as they will give employment to our young men and women. A canning factory would prove of incalculable benefit to us all, and we can have it in operation by next summer. If a meeting is called to take action regarding the enterprise, let everyone attend and hear what is to be done.

OBITUARY NOTES.

SISTER KJER JORGENSEN.

Fountain Green, Jan. 8.—After a severe illness of 25 years, a patient, kind, and highly respectable lady passes to the other sphere. She was born in Denmark on the 1st of December, 1821, and departed from this world of trouble on Jan. 5th, 1894. She emigrated to Utah with her husband in the year 1873, and made their home at Fountain Green, where herself and husband lived for seven years, and then moved to Huntington, Emery county. After living there for eleven years a return was made to Fountain Green.

The funeral services were held at the meeting house last Sabbath. The deceased bore an excellent reputation, and is quite widely known throughout the Territory.

Z. C.

JEHU COX.

Jehu Cox died at Fairview on December 26, 1893, of old age. The deceased was born in Knox county, Ky., Sept. 5, 1803; was married to Sarah R. Pyle, Jan. 13, 1824, in Monroe county, Ind.; joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Crawford county, Mo., Jan. 12, 1838, and was ordained an Elder the same day by Elders Benjamin Clapp and Isaac Alred. In November, 1839, he moved to Adams county, Illinois, into Hancock county in April, 1842; and in May, 1846, left Nauvoo with the exodus of the Saints from that place; came to the Bluffs and wintered at Council Point. In the spring of 1847 he crossed the Missouri river, went up to what was known as "Kimball's Farm," six miles above Winter Quarters, on the west side of the river, and raised a crop there; crossed the plains in the summer of 1848 in Heber C. Kimball's company, arriving in Salt Lake valley September 24th. He located on Little Cottonwood in February, 1850, where he resided for ten years, filling the office of counselor to the Bishop most of the time. In 1860 he moved to North Bend, Sanpete county (afterwards called Fairview), where he filled the offices of counselor to the Bishop and president of the High Priests' quorum until becoming so enfeebled by age that he could not attend to the duties of the office.

He died true and faithful to the principles of the Gospel; and his last words were exhorting all to faithfulness and speaking of the glories of the Gospel.

—[COM.]

ELIAS COX.

JAMES BOYACK.

James Boyack died at his residence in Spanish Fork City, December 19th, 1893, from an attack of pneumonia, brought on by la grippe. He was confined to his bed for one week, and passed quietly away surrounded by his family.

Brother Boyack was born September

14th, 1828, in the parish of Maine, Fortshire, Scotland; was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Feb. 9th, 1850; emigrated to Utah in 1853, arriving in Salt Lake City Oct. 5th, 1853; moved to Spanish Fork March, 1856, at which place he resided until his death. He assisted in quarrying rock for the foundation of the Salt Lake Temple, and took active part in the troubles of 1857-8. He was a true Latter-day Saint and a good citizen, having the confidence and esteem of all classes of the people. He leaves behind him a wife and a large family of sons and daughters who through their tears are looking for a happy reunion in the near future. Brother Boyack, while for many years taking active part in ministering to the necessities of the living, did not forget the dead, and hundreds on the other side will give him a joyous welcome.

SAMUEL J. DENTON.

Many Ogdenites will regret to learn of the sudden death of Mr. Samuel Denton at Corning, New York, on Friday last. Mr. Denton spent several months in Ogden during the fall of 1890 as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Cannon, and made many friends while here. Mr. Denton was related by marriage to Francis A. Brown of this city, having married his niece, who lives at Corning. F. J. Cannon, who is in the east, will attend the funeral before returning home.

THOMAS ORGILL.

Thomas Orgill, of Mount Pleasant, Sanpete county, died at his home on Jan. 3, 1894. He was born August 31, 1821, in Newall, Derbyshire, England; was baptized in 1843; married Ann Cartwright in February, 1848, and moved to Staffordshire Pottery, where he was widely known among the Elders and Saints. His wife died in 1860, and in 1864 he married again, his wife being Louisa Cresswell. In 1869 he emigrated to Utah with his family; in the spring of 1870 he moved from this city and located at Mount Pleasant. His wife died Jan. 25, 1871, and some years after he married Mary Christoffsen, who now survives him. He leaves thirteen children and thirty-six grandchildren. Brother Orgill died as he had lived, a faithful Latter-day Saint. Millennial Star, please copy.

LEWIS RICKS.

Lewis Ricks, a brother of President Ricks, who died at Paris, Idaho, January 2nd, was born at Madison county, Ill., in 1831. He came to Utah in 1858 and emigrated to Bear Lake with the pioneers. He was married to Emmert Allen December 25, 1859. She died over twenty years ago, and he never married again. Brother Ricks was a member of the High Council of Bear Lake Stake, and held that position from the time the Stake was organized up to the day of his death. He leaves a family consisting of four daughters and one son. The funeral was held at Paris on January 4th, and was largely attended. President Budge and other leading brethren spoke of his good qualities.—Reburr, Idaho, Silver Hammer.

THE DEAD.

Peaceful be their Rest.

EVANS.—At Center, Tooele county, December 26, 1893, Benjamin P. Evans; born April 26, 1818, in Cardiganshire, South Wales.

SMITH.—Entered into eternal rest, at her home in Salt Lake City, January 9, 1894, of consumption, in her fifty-third year, Cordelia Peet Ferrell Allen Smith, wife of Amos K. Smith, M. D.

GRIFFITHS.—In this city, Jan. 10th, of dropsy, Ethel Vilate, the daughter of Richard and Betsy Griffiths; aged eleven years, two months and nine days.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

Truth and Liberty.

No. 6.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, JANUARY 27, 1894.

VOL. XLVIII.

THE GOSPEL UNCHANGEABLE.

*Discourse Delivered in the Tabernacle,
Salt Lake City, Sunday, December 31st, 1893, by*

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I will read a portion of Paul's epistle to the Galatians:

Paul, an apostle, (not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead;)

And all the brethren which are with me, unto the churches of Galatia:

Grace be to you, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ.

Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father:

To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, unto another gospel:

Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.

But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man:

For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it;

And profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.

But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace,

To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood:

Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus.

Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother.

Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not.

In this chapter Paul makes a very emphatic declaration, and one that is often quoted by the Elders of this Church, as they look upon it as a very strong statement concerning the Gospel of the Son of God. Certainly Paul understood what he was talking about, if we may believe his testimony; for it seems from his own words that it was not necessary that he should go to Jerusalem, where the main body of the Church was then organized, in order to be taught concerning the principles of life and salvation. He had been, as you all know, stricken blind as he was on his way to Damascus, the object of his journey being to persecute the members of the Church of Christ. He was led into that city blind and helpless, conscience-smitten and awakened to the knowledge that he was persecuting those who were really the followers of God. In this condition he was visited by a servant of God and no doubt received the Priesthood under his hands, and he commenced preaching and declaring the testimony of Jesus which he had received. The principles which he taught, he declares, were made known to him by the revelations of Jesus Christ. And this was not a singular case. Peter, James, John, Andrew and the other Apostles had to depend for their information and knowledge respecting the principles of salvation upon the revelations of Jesus. While the Savior lived He taught these men; but after His departure they did not have Him to look to; they had to depend upon revelation through the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, which He had promised to send unto them, and with which power they were endowed from on high on the day of Pentecost at Jerusalem.

The principles which were taught by the Twelve Apostles at Jerusalem and in the various places where they labored and those taught by Paul, were the same. They were eternal principles. We have reason to believe that they were taught to and obeyed by the ancients, although there is very little written in the scriptures upon these points; but Paul himself declares that the Gospel was preached unto Abraham; and we know that righteous men, among whom Abraham was numbered, were in close communion with God the Eternal Father. The revelations which have been given in our day cast a flood of light upon this obscure point. It has come down in plainness to us—in such plainness that none who have faith in God can question its truth—that even our father Adam and those of his descendants who were associated with him, were made familiar with the principles of life and salvation. Enoch, we are told, walked with God, and if he did so for the long period that we are told that he lived, we have reason to believe that he certainly became familiar with all the principles of salvation. He knew that Jesus would come, He being the Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world. His name, as we are told in the scriptures, being the only name given under heaven whereby man can be saved, it must have followed that Adam and his righteous posterity were familiar with the plan of salvation and with the coming of the Savior and His mission on the earth.

These principles were revealed in great plainness by the Son of God when He came to the earth. John the Baptist taught the people the necessity of being baptized, and Jesus obeyed that ordinance. Some might suppose that the ordinance of baptism was something new—an innovation on the part of John the Baptist. There is very little in the Bible about baptism until the time of John; still there are references enough to show that it was an ordinance; for the children of Israel, we are told by Paul, "were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." But John had the authority. The authority to baptize belonged to the Priesthood which he held, and he, inspired of God, and ordained in his childhood by an angel, came forth as a forerunner of the Son of God, to prepare the way; and he called upon the people to repent of their sins and to be baptized. for what? For the remission of their sins, of course, they having repented of them and he having the authority to administer the ordinance of baptism. There need be no argument on this, for the reason that the Son of God himself came and presented himself as a candidate for baptism. He did not question John's authority, and He certainly did not go to the river Jordan merely to comply with a form. It was an essential ordinance; and when John remonstrated with Him, considering himself unworthy to administer this holy ordinance to the Son of God, He plainly told John that it was right it should be done, "to fulfil all righteousness." The Savior was willing and desirous to obey that holy ordinance, and in doing this He set an example to all the children of men.

Paul undoubtedly received revelations to establish in his mind the importance of being buried with Christ in baptism. His writings prove that he had received that knowledge from on high. So also with the other Apostles. They had been taught by the Son of God in person the necessity of obeying all the ordinances that had been instituted for man's salvation, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ being the first principle, repentance of sin the second, and baptism for the remission of sin the third. John had not authority to go beyond this; but he said, "He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." This authority Jesus received, and this authority He bestowed upon others, enabling them to go forth and give promises unto the people concerning these precious gifts of the Holy Ghost and have those promises literally fulfilled.

Now, Paul says that "if any man preach any other gospel unto you than ye have received, let him be accursed." It seems that they had in those days men who preached different doctrines and who endeavored to weaken the faith of the converts to the true Gospel by teaching false doctrines, and therefore he speaks in this emphatic manner concerning the principles and ordinances that he had taught. Do these principles of faith, repentance and baptism constitute the entire Gospel of the Son of God? Do they comprise the full plan of salvation which God has revealed and will reveal for the redemption of the human family? Certainly not.

All truth, no matter what it may be, is a part of the Gospel of the Son of God. These principles and ordinances are essential. They must be obeyed by the inhabitants of the earth. There is no way to obtain full and complete salvation without obedience to them. And that which is important, too, is that these ordinances must be administered by men having authority. For a man to believe in Jesus, repent of his sins, and then to be baptized by a man that has not the authority would not bring complete salvation. To have hands laid upon one by a man not having authority would not bring the gift that the Lord has said shall follow the administration of this ordinance by His servants. Repentance will always bring a blessing. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ will always bring a blessing. I do not care what nation a man may belong to, nor what church he may enter, if he will only repent of his sins it will bring a blessing to him. He can do that if he is a Mohammedan, or if he is not a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ; he can repent of his sins and he can receive a blessing from God for doing so. For God will accept the repentance of His children. No matter what a man's standing or what his connections may be; he may propose to become a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or a member of the Catholic Church, or of the Episcopal Church, or of a pagan organization, so-called, and if he truly and sincerely repents of his sins, the blessing of repentance will rest down upon him. This may seem strange to you; it is nevertheless true. Of course, if he were a Mohammedan, he would not have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; he would not believe in the Son of God as the Redeemer of the world; but so far as repentance goes and turning away from sin with a determination to live a purer and better life, the blessing of God would rest upon that individual. If he believed in Jesus, then the blessing of that belief would rest upon him; and the man who is in that condition of faith has the advantage, so far as that goes, over the unbeliever. But will repentance save people? Is that all that is necessary for salvation? No. That is only one of the requirements which the Lord makes of us. He requires of us that when we hear the name of Jesus and are taught the mission of Jesus we shall accept Him as our Savior, as the Son of God, as our Redeemer, and have faith in Him. Then we are required to repent of all our wrongdoing. How shall we know that which is wrong? Do we derive the knowledge of it from books alone? No. God has given to every human being who possesses the powers of his mind a knowledge, to a certain extent, concerning sin. It is born with us; it is the direct gift of the Father. We have that portion of His Spirit within us that tells us that which is wrong. We may have it in different forms, because of the difference in our education. That which our consciences, so to speak, may tell us is right under one set of circumstances, may be considered in a different light under other circumstances. But there is a certain amount of light, of intelligence, of spirit that comes from God, that causes the truth and the right to appeal instantly to an honest-hearted man when he hears it, and he has a testimony within himself concerning this truth. This is not, as I say, confined to one class, nor to one nation, nor to one creed; it is as extensive as the human family. Wherever the human family live they have that spirit with them. Hence it is that when the Gospel is preached, when the Elders bear testimony to the truth of the Gospel, and men and women hear it, they will be judged by that testimony; that is, that testimony will stand against them unless they listen to it and obey the Gospel. Therefore the servants of God in ancient days, as in our day, could go to the various nations of the earth and proclaim the truth and warn the people, and the people would be under condemnation if they did not receive the testimony of the servants of God; for the witness of the Spirit would be in their own hearts and it would testify to them. God has not left any of us without a witness. He may withdraw it from us through our hardening our hearts and committing sin, and we may be left in the dark; but otherwise there is in every human breast a witness of the truth.

As I have said, not only is faith necessary, but repentance also. These are two principles of the Gospel which we are required to obey. Then comes baptism. And baptism, as I have remarked, must be administered by a man having authority—for this reason, if for no other: there are sins to be forgiven, and who can forgive sin but God, or some one whom He authorizes? For He does give that power to man sometimes, that "whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained." But speaking generally, no man has this authority. It is God alone that can remit sins. For a man to immerse another in water without having the authority from God amounts to nothing, except to the wetting of the man that is immersed. It does not bring the remission of sins. The Lord must wash away the sins of the individual, or the ordinance is of no effect. Therefore, though men may have faith and may repent, they must do something more than this to obtain the washing away of their sins and the blessings of salvation that attend the remission of sins. And so with the reception of the Holy Ghost. That is a gift from God. Man in and of himself does not possess the power either to receive or bestow it; it must come from the Lord. Hence the importance that the Lord has always attached to the sending of men forth to preach the Gospel who are authorized. It is a trite theme in this Tabernacle that the cause of all the confusion, dissension and contention that exist in the religious world is that there is no authority which God recognizes and whose actions God confirms by bestowing the blessings that the people need. Paul understood this when he wrote this epistle to the Galatians. Somebody had come in doubtless and taught false doctrine, and called it the Gospel; but he said it was not the Gospel, and that they must have the legitimate authority. Hence it is that the Catholic Church is so strenuous on this point. That church recognizes the importance of there being a priesthood. It is the most strenuous probably of any Christian denomination on this point. They claim to have a continued descent of priesthood from the days of Peter down, and that the Pope of Rome stands in the place and occupies the position that Peter did as the head of the church. The church of England has somewhat similar claims; but they cannot claim the priesthood with the same propriety and as much force as the church of Rome. But the great mass of the Protestant denominations, realizing how defective they are in this respect, discard all authority as coming directly from the Apostles. In the most of instances they claim their authority under the commission which was given to the Apostles by the Son of God when He told them to go "into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." By looking at this carefully you can see how destitute of foundation such a claim is, because if every man on the face of the earth has the right to administer the ordinances of the Gospel, then every man must have been commissioned by the Lord to do so. Such a claim is entirely baseless. Paul distinctly says that men must be called of God as was Aaron, and we know how Aaron was called. He was called by direct revelation from God to Moses. So that today there are thousands of well-meaning men who are devoted in their feelings to the work of God, who would like to benefit their fellow men, and who are educated for the ministry, going around among the people, from one end of Christendom to the other, endeavoring to convert the inhabitants of the earth to their way of thinking and administering to them ordinances without having any authority whatever. When you contemplate this condition of affairs you can see the reasons there are for so much confusion in the earth, there being no regular channel of authority, no way of obtaining revelation direct from God; because if there were, it would come through one channel, and there would not be any diversity of views concerning points of doctrine. One man would not say, "This is the proper mode of administering baptism," and another contradict him and say "That is not right;" but they would all be alike, as Paul and the Apostles were when they met. When Paul went up to Jerusalem, they found that he was teaching exactly the same principles that they themselves taught, and with the same authority. As I have said, the Church of Rome claims to have a descent of priesthood from the days of Peter; but those who are familiar with the history of that church must have an immense amount of faith and confidence to believe that the Priesthood of the Son of God could have come down through that channel, in the midst of the impurities, the wickedness and the wrongs that have existed and have been practiced from the days of the Apostles of Jesus up to the present. It was only by assimilating itself to the pagan practices and adopting heathen customs and ceremonies that any form of Christianity was able to prevail or to maintain itself, apparently. Every man that professed to have revelation from God was killed, until all those who had the pure authority from God disappeared from among men, and corruptions of an indescribable character have existed from that day until the present time. God withdrew the Priesthood from among men. The men who bore it were slain and taken back to heaven, and the Priesthood remained there until the Lord condescended to send messengers from the eternal world to restore it once more to the children of men upon the earth. The authority to administer the ordinance of baptism, the authority to lay on hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, the authority to organize the Church of Christ, to guide it and to receive revelations for the Church—that authority had to be restored, and we testify that it has been restored in our day and is once more upon the earth, and the ordinances of life and salvation are administered with an authority recognized of God.

Hence the change that has taken place in the last sixty years. A new thing is seen in the earth. An organization exists that is similar in every respect to the organization in the days of the Apostles of Jesus—an organization possessing the same officers, claiming the same authority, teaching the same doctrine, administering the same ordinances, and, that which is most glorious to contemplate, having the same blessings and gifts following the administration of the ordinances; men and women by the thousands receiving a testimony from God that their sins are remitted by the ordinance of baptism as administered unto them, and testifying also that they have received the gift of the Holy Ghost under the administration of these men who are the servants of God. We have this before us today. It is not a chimera; it is not something that is fanciful; it is tangible—before our eyes—that we can see and examine and test for ourselves, and it is not a cunningly devised fable. Those who become members of the Church are witnesses for God, testifying that this is true, and that they have received these blessings as they have been promised, and as they read of them in the scriptures.

But let me ask again, Is the plan of salvation confined to these ordinances and principles to which I have referred? No. If we could understand it as it is, the plan of salvation embraces everything that belongs to men in the flesh on the earth. In the mind of our God there is no distinction between that which is spiritual and that which is temporal. He uses this phrase in revelations to us because He adapts Himself to our condition and to our mode of looking at affairs; but with Him there is no distinction between temporal and spiritual things. There is no distinction between spiritual salvation—of course, with some qualification—and temporal salvation. Our bodies are as dear in the sight of God as our spirits. Our spirits cannot be separated from our bodies, to have us perfect. The body and the spirit are the soul of man; not the spirit alone, not the body alone, but the body and the spirit. And God gives revelations for the temporal salvation of His children—that is, for the salvation of their bodies—and they are as important in their place as His revelations concerning their spirits. Hence it is that the Latter-day Saints are a practical people. We have offended the religious world because we deal so much in temporal things and speak so much about them, as though they were a part of salvation. Well, we view them as being a part of salvation. But it gives offense to many, and they think that it is improper for men who are ministers of religion to meddle with such things. We have had that to contend with from the beginning, especially since we gathered together. It has been necessary that there should be care bestowed upon the temporal salvation of the people, and the leaders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have been animated by the Spirit of God to do this, and to provide, by counseling in the greatest wisdom that they could obtain, for the deliverance of the people from evils which threatened them. In early days in these valleys this was recognized more than it is at the present time. Various causes have operated to produce changes in this respect, some of which I think very unhappy. There was a time when it was absolutely necessary that the people should be counseled upon many points which affected their temporal salvation. As I have said, everything that belongs to man's existence on the earth and to his existence hereafter is a part of the Gospel. There is no truth that does not belong to the plan of salvation. You cannot get outside of that plan and think, "Well, this is something that does not pertain to the Gospel." If it be a truth pertaining to the starry heavens; if it be a truth concerning chemistry; if it be a truth in relation to the formation of the earth, or what we are pleased to term geology; if it be a truth in physics, in mechanics, or a truth of any kind, it belongs to God the Eternal Father and to the system of salvation that He has revealed. It was a truth, and a most important truth, that men in the days of Noah should be warned that there was a flood coming. It had been predicted, according to revelation, years and years—centuries it may be said—before it came. Enoch knew of it. In his record he has left a knowledge of it, which God gave to him. It was revealed to him that the flood was coming upon the earth, and that man would be destroyed because of his wickedness, and that it was reserved for one of his descendants to start, as it were, a new creation. That was an important truth. If the inhabitants of the earth at that time had received it, it would have saved them. It was a part of the plan of salvation at that time, and was revealed for the purpose of saving the inhabitants of the earth, if they would accept it. It was a truth connected with salvation that the Israelites should flee out of Egypt. We are not told how many there were that did not obey that cry. In fact, many suppose that all did. I do not think so. Knowing human nature as I think I do, and having seen illustrations in our experience concerning these things, I would not be surprised if we should yet learn that hundreds, perhaps thousands, of Israelites refused to obey the command of the Lord through Moses, and remained with the fleshpots in Egypt. But whether this is so or not makes no particular difference to us now. It certainly was a part of the plan of salvation that they should leave Egypt at that time and be delivered from the thralldom in which they were and lay the foundation of a new order of things in the holy land, as it has since been called. So it has been from that time until the present. God has revealed various matters to His servants and counseled them to do certain things, and prophets have been raised up who have counseled kings and rulers, and who have told them what to do and how to do in order to escape threatened evils. In their battles, in their famines, and in various events, righteous men have stood up in the land who, enlightened by the spirit and revelations of God, have been enabled to counsel these ruling men, and this counsel has proved salvation to those who accepted it. So it has been in our day. It is a part of salvation to-day.

The Lord has revealed the gathering. In one sense, it is not an ordinance of the Gospel; but it is a command of God which, when obeyed, results in salvation. God commanded His servants to teach this doctrine to the inhabitants of the earth, and to inspire them with a disposition to gather together; and confirmatory of the teachings of His servants He poured out upon those who received the Gospel the spirit of gathering. This spirit filled them and they had the testimony concerning gathering, just as they had regarding the other requirements of the Gospel. How many thousands there are who can recall how this spirit of gathering burned in their bones and in their hearts; how they felt concerning it; their yearning desire to gather with the saints of God; and everything that had been dear to them before in connection with their surroundings lost its attraction, and their eyes were turned to Zion. They wanted to go where the servants of God were; to listen to their voices, to be in their presence, to receive of their teachings, and to rejoice in the spirit of the Gospel in the place which God had appointed. I say how many thousands are there throughout these valleys who had that feeling, and who can recall it, and in times when the Spirit of God rests upon them and their hearts are softened, weep with tears of joy, because God in His infinite goodness and mercy gave them that spirit and then provided the means by which they were enabled to carry out the desires of their hearts.

It is a part of the plan of salvation to us that we should gather together. We should not scatter. The spirit of scattering, I want to say to you Latter-day Saints, is not the spirit of the Gospel of the Son of God. There seems to be a growing disposition among us to scatter. We hear of some good valley, or some good region afar off, that we think we could live easier in. The climate is better perhaps; the facilities for living are better; the inducement of one kind and another are more attractive, and we want to draw off and go there. The First Presidency of the Church has this to meet occasionally. Letters are written to us, in which the great advantages of such and such places are set forth. Now, I want to say to you that this is not right. The spirit of the Gospel is a spirit of gathering, causing those who possess it to gather and to cling together, that they may build up Zion. What is Zion? We are told that it is the pure in heart. God wants to have a pure people. He has gathered us out by His wonderful power. It is a marvelous work and a wonder the way these Latter-day Saints have been gathered to these mountains. No man can travel throughout our settlements, either north or south, without feeling impressed with the wonderful power that has brought the people together and enabled them to endure the hardships, the inconveniences and the trials that are connected with their lives. And they are happy people. I was talking only a few days ago in New York with a very prominent man who had come up from Arizona through all our settlements, and he said it was the most remarkable thing that he had ever met with in his life, the happiness of the people, the contentment that reigned, the way they enjoyed themselves, their love and union, as well as the extraordinary exertions, patience, perseverance and courage which had been required to form these settlements. I am sure that no thoughtful person can travel throughout our land without being impressed in this manner. And what has done this? It has been the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the people which has held them together. It is our duty to constantly keep in remembrance that this is a part of the plan of salvation to us. We were not gathered to get the best places in the land and to accumulate riches. God has promised that we shall have riches. We shall have them. We will be the richest of all people. I know that. God's hands, if I may use that expression, are full of blessings and of riches to bestow upon us. But that is not the object for which we were brought together. The object that brought us together was to lay the foundation of a new order of things in the earth. Do I mean by that to overturn existing political systems? No. God has revealed to us that this form of government under which we live is the best on the face of the earth, and that He raised up wise men and patriots in order that this form of government might be established, under which the spiritual kingdom of God might be established and grow and become a great power in the earth. God never intended that we should be revolutionists, and we have no designs in that direction. That is not our mission. We have not the spirit of it. We have to establish a new order of things. In what respect? To check this dreadful stream of corruption of every kind that is flooding our land, and not only our land but all the lands of the earth, to a greater or less extent. He has gathered us out from the various nations of the earth in order that we may do this. It is our destiny. It is the mission which He has given to us, and we should have an eye single to the glory of God in doing it. We should keep that first and foremost in our thoughts. No personal aggrandizement; no asking "Is this going to benefit me individually?" but to put our trust in God, who has always fed and clothed us, and will still do so and furnish us with all that is necessary if our hearts are pure before Him and we labor for the carrying out of His purposes in the earth.

My brethren and sisters, God has called us with the greatest of callings. No people could have a greater calling given them. And when we have been threatened with overwhelming destruction our Father has rescued us. When we have been surrounded by thick clouds of darkness, and there has been no ray of light visible, He has dissipated these clouds and let the light of heaven shine upon our pathway. When it has seemed as though our enemies were so numerous and so filled with anger that our destruction appeared inevitable, He has softened their hearts, He has turned aside their wrath, and has given us favor in their sight. He has blessed us in wonderful ways, in making us to dwell in peace and love among ourselves, and also to have this feeling towards others. We should realize the greatness of our calling and keep our eyes single to the glory of God. What difference does it make to us in the end whether we are poor or rich? True, it is delightful to have all our physical wants supplied; but God in His infinite goodness and wisdom has not seen fit to permit us to have this condition always surrounding us. We have seen times of poverty, times of privation and great hardship; we have suffered great persecutions; but in the midst of it all who is there among you that has been destitute of the comforting influence of the Spirit of God? I know when we came to this valley and our food was dealt out to us by the ounce, as carefully as if it were gold, and the people were destitute of clothing, no happier people could be found on this continent than were the Latter-day Saints. Brother Wallace, was not that so? [Brother Wallace replied, "Yes, sir; it is a fact."] Why was this? Because the spirit and blessing of God rested down upon them. It has been so in the midst of all the trials that we have had to pass through, and it will be so from this day until Jesus shall come, whose right it is to reign, and He puts all enemies under His feet. All for us to do is to have our eyes single to the glory of God. Of course it is our duty to take care of those entrusted to us and of that which God has given us; but let us as a people keep our eyes single to His glory and our hearts pure. Let us live each day so that when the night comes and we reflect upon the actions of the day, before composing ourselves to sleep, there will be nothing in our minds to condemn us. In addition to that spirit of which I have spoken, and which every human being possesses who does not drive it out, we have the gift of the Holy Ghost, which quickens our understanding and enables us to see where we do wrong or where we do right. It puts us in a condition always to be in communion with our Father and God, and to have the fellowship of the Holy Ghost and of pure and holy beings. This is the way we should live, repenting each day. Some people think there is no need for repentance after they enter the Church, but it is a principle that must be exercised always. We have cause to repent every day of our lives, because we are weak and fallible and liable to err. We sometimes speak words that are not right; we have thoughts that are not right; we do things that are not right; and we can review ourselves in the light which God has given unto us; confess these wrongs before Him, repent of them and obtain forgiveness from Him. If we have offended any of our fellow men; if we have offended our wives, our husbands, our children, or our fathers, repent of it, ask God to forgive us; and thus go on day by day, until we shall emerge into the fullness of the glory of our God, which I humbly ask in behalf of all of us, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen

Written for this Paper.

ON COMPETITION.

It has been said that "competition is the life of trade," and some have jocularly said in regard to new claimants for business patronage, "the more the merrier." Like many other so-called "wise old saws," these quoted contain a truth, but they involve also a vast amount of error and loss! In fact, there is everywhere today an acknowledged and active protest against unrestrained competition; for it is as a protective measure that "trusts" are organized, to preserve investment and secure a profit thereon, if human nature can, or will, submit to the measurable suppression of individual enterprise, at the dictation of a central rule. Competition finds no place, when production is less than demand. Both buyer and seller are then satisfied, whether the supply be labor or its products, such as sugar, wheat, iron, wool, cotton, stock, or any other thing. The one who disposes of his labor or its results is no more satisfied than is the consumer. But no sooner is this demand foreseen or observed, than a host, experienced in production or otherwise, endeavor to fill a presumed vacuum. The selling price recedes, and profit vanishes from undue and unneeded competition.

In the case of labor there is the same drift toward protective organization, and among artisans there are rules and restrictions for preventing any excess of educated or trained supply. So apprenticeship is limited, and organization being less potent than necessity, when a strike is resorted to, its success is always problematical, for clever artisans are not always the outcome of training. There is everywhere a certain amount of spontaneous ability, or ability proceeding from somewhat similar pursuits, which in an emergency can be relied upon to fill an advanced plane of labor from time to time. So the fireman becomes the engineer, the mixer of mortar the plasterer, and the common laborer steps into the shoes of one whom he has watched and can imitate to his own advantage.

To be sure, immense and continuous effort is made to include in organization every branch of skilled and auxiliary labor, so as to preclude failure in a contest with the employer or capitalist. But after all there are facile elements in the masses which, desiring advancement, seize upon circumstances and make strikes futile in the main. Persecution, abuse, hard names, and even violence have been resorted to as so-called protective measures. Then the strong arm of the law is invoked for the preservation of property and that liberty of the man which is fundamental—"that in the pursuit of subsistence for himself or family, he shall dispose of his labor and ability in his own way and on his own terms!" Organization claim that individual right must yield to the presumed good of the whole, much on the same basis that society exacts the relinquishment of some things of individual right for the securing of others!

Malthus alone, among the philosophers, has suggested on a broad scale the regulation of this supply of common labor among men, by legislation and education. But human nature as it is, does not seem prepared for a practical, forceful application of an improved theory at the best. Certain it is that poverty appears more prolific than where wealth prevails. If suspension of reproduction is an evidence of nature's intention, the well-to-do, the cultured, the educated so to speak, are limited in increase, and so, in humanity at least, "the survival of the fittest" appears to be rather a questionable conclusion. Whether statesmanship will ever grapple with this problem, or whether to solve it humanity will try to wash it out in anarchy and blood, time can only determine. But when the unemployed are numbered by hundreds of thousands, and life depends upon labor which cannot be reached, surely the temptation to appropriate at least the necessities which are everywhere in visible abundance is one which may become irresistible, and in the taking or protection thereof much destruction may take place of that which is most valuable because beyond reproduction.

However, the intent was not to extend observation on these phases of intense competition, but to call attention to a local condition, which materially affects our interests as a business community. We need not recapitulate the fact of financial strain to which the last few months bear witness, or to the conclusion, unwelcome though it may be, that recuperation is not as rapid as some would desire. We note that pressure has been and is upon the entire community. Naturally hopeful, most have become more or less indebted one to another, and every one has wanted to collect, and every one who had anything—in view of responsibility—wanted to sell. The merchant, the farmer, the stockman, and the laborer, in making honorable effort, have become competitors in their respective lines. Advertisements in the papers of our leading cities call attention to enforced sacrifice of goods and commodities. Here and there one has failed, and assignees for realization have paid little attention to cost or value. Legitimate business has become more or less paralyzed, buyers bewildered, and every one almost somewhat restless, uncertain and confused.

It has been a query in far more pretentious cities and communities than ours as to whether distributors or storekeepers were not very much in excess of necessity, and whether in multiplication they do not demoralize and destroy each other. To secure patronage is there not an undue cutting of prices, and to increase trade is there not a disposition to give more for produce than it will bring in any market? And does not this excess of stores lead to a looseness in the giving of credit? Men keep stores to sell goods, and they indulge in rivalry at times which creates ill feeling and may be depreciation of an opponent, or as may be thought, an enemy. In fact, instances are not far to seek where class-feeling, partisanship, disunion, are the fruits of increasing business and ill-natured competition.

To say that selfishness and personal success are seen in this, is only to say that human nature unrenovated is pretty much the same. It is given to but few to pay no attention to a competitor or to allow the price at which he sells to become a worry and an anxiety. Yet the wise man never allows a customer to realize that he has a competitor, or to indulge in feelings of bitterness because of an assumed rivalry in his neighborhood or town. Neither is it at present possible to keep persons out of any line of business, or, if so engaged, to interfere with their methods save they become involved. Then creditors have their redress in law, while weak rivals rejoice at a failure which may inure to their individual good!

Immunity was promised, nay assured, to many places for years, because by practicing the principle of co-operation one store was enough for most settlements. As they enlarged, branches were easily arranged. The people owned both and might have enjoyed the profits or benefits as they preferred to elect. But having receded from this, unregulated competition makes all such investment subject to unusual risk, and more or less disaster. For because of loose competition, indebtedness has gone beyond all reasonable bounds, even for an honest people. Denied in one place, a customer has been welcomed in another, or got credit in several as the case might be; and none seemed aware of danger until, with unexpected pressure, collapse came almost as a matter of course.

Is there a remedy, or have circumstances brought education enough to make business men renounce the practice of unrestricted accommodation? Or has the great public—the consumer—realized that economy and retrenchment are better than debt? Or will competition be curtailed in trade and manufactures, as it appears to be in the wholesale trade, or as it appears to be in professional life, where exorbitant fees (or profits) are paid without compunction, consideration, rivalry or competition!

Is not manufacturing a more laudable, necessary and profitable pursuit for us and ours? One meaning labor, the utilization of raw material, the cultivation of independence, and the supply of markets used by those less thoughtful? Would not this be better than simple distribution possibly can be, although all countries may be ransacked, and our store-shelves groan with the accumulated products of a teeming world? What say you?

WORKING A COAL MINE.

There are three main systems in working stratified mines: The pillar and stall, square work and long wall; all of which can be subjected to modifications suited to the general state and condition of the measure. In opening a mine the agent should make a careful examination of the seam, so far as it has been proved; the angle of inclination; the state of the overlying measures, and the methods that should be adopted to work the mine.

As aforesaid, the Almy coal is a very combustible measure, and requires great care and attention to keep it in good working order.

We have both No. 7 and No. 4 shut down for fire, and No. 1 and No. 8 because they cost a little more a ton for working than the company cared to pay. So from all appearance it would seem that they will remain shut down for some time to come. No. 7 can be reopened on the south side at a light cost but we cannot say that for No. 4: To reopen No. 4 and do it in the most permanent way would cost about two hundred thousand dollars at least.

From the large number of fires we have had in the coal measure of this valley, it seems to me as if the pillar and stall method, the principle upon which these mines are worked, is not suited to the conditions of the measures in this district. We cannot consider that the system of working a mine is right where only one-third or one-half and in some cases only one-fifth of the coal is got from the openings of the mine. This fact in itself is sufficient to convince every intelligent person that there is something wrong in this matter. Under present existing circumstances the question is, What can be done to change this state of affairs? I answer, Work the mines on the square block principle, and clean out not only one-third or one-half, but the whole quantity of coal within the measure; by the square work system you can do this, but by the pillar and stall principle you cannot do it in this valley.

Objections to this method can and will most likely be made, on the ground that the company would have too long to wait for a return on the capital invested in the mine. I answer, Mr. Editor, that this is a fast-living age. The craving anxiety of business firms to become millionaires is too prominent for steady, safe working. That a fair return upon the capital invested in mines should be expected and obtained within a reasonable time, no person would question; but to expect the dollar at every stroke of the pick to fall into our hands, is far too aerial a theory to be realized. The writer is fully cognizant of the fact that office mine-engineers can do much with the pen and paper in the office, but in the mine, as a rule, they are at sea and the general voice is that their absence is worth more than their presence with the everlasting gong on their lips, "cut down the expense, cut down the expense." Ah, until your destroy both life and property, and then as a reward shoulder the responsibility.

In opening a mine in this valley on the square block principle with good management and with the measure free from large faults, the production can, and ought to be, 500 tons per day—in twelve months from the start.

R. R. H.

RED CANNON, Uinta, Co., Wyo.,
January 17th, 1894.

DEATH OF SISTER SMOOT.

PROVO, Utah, Jan. 20.—Sister Annie K. Smoot, wife of the President of Utah Stake, Elder A. O. Smoot, and president of the Utah Stake Primary association, died at 10 o'clock this morning after many weeks of suffering and illness. She was sixty years of age. She joined the Church in the early fifties in Norway, and emigrated shortly after. When she joined the Church she was turned out of doors by her parents and persecuted by former friends and neighbors. She was always a faithful and consistent Latter-day Saint.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

A TESTIMONY FOR JOSEPH.

On another page of this issue will be found the account of an interview with William Smith, a brother of the Prophet Joseph. The conversation recorded took place shortly before his death, and as the subject of it was the Book of Mormon and the character of Joseph, it has peculiar interest to the Latter-day Saints.

The testimony of the aged brother of the martyrs is important for several reasons. In the first place the views he expressed may be looked upon as the result of a life-long consideration of the topics discussed. It is not the sentiments of a youthful enthusiast, who might have been led astray by inflaming oratory. William Smith was born in 1811, and had consequently reached a mature age at his demise. He had ample time to change his views, had he found, on a second thought, that his brother was not what he claimed to be. But he did not change his opinion concerning Joseph, but testified to the last to his nobility of character and integrity of purpose. In the second place, his testimony is that of a natural brother. He knew what he was speaking of. They had been reared in the same home, shared with each other joys and sorrows and various duties, and knew well the characteristics of one another. And further, William Smith, although once identified with the Church and a member of the Quorum of the Twelve, was eventually led to associate with other organizations, and may on that ground be supposed to have had an interest in exposing any fraudulent plans with which, during his early familiarity with the organizers of the Church, he might have become acquainted, had there been any such to expose. His testimony is therefore that of an impartial witness, and as a man who filled prominent positions in public life to the satisfaction of his constituents, his words are entitled to particular respect.

"Uncle William" touches upon several important points in connection with the rise of this Church. He says, for instance, that nobody in the family would think of doubting the words of Joseph. His record was that of absolute truthfulness, and his assertion was always enough to those who knew him best. He was never known to indulge in fabulous stories. The consequence was that when he told his people that angels had visited him, they believed him. Another feature of Joseph's character was his diligence as a worker. This, according to William, was a well known and acknowledged fact among the neighbors. The opponents of Joseph, in later years, invented the story that he was too indolent to work and sought to obtain a living by means of utilizing the credulity of men. But never was a more absurd charge brought against anybody. The magnificent physique of the Prophet shows a man who was developed in the school of toil, and the whole of his career is one ample refutation of this silly charge. Think of a man, who in a few years masters several branches of learning, including languages; who directs a large missionary enterprise comprising two continents; who translates and publishes volumes; who builds cities and temples and superintends the ecclesiastical concerns of a growing Church; who preaches and administers to the spiritual wants of coreligionists, and besides cares with loving tenderness for his own family! All this did Joseph accomplish in the few years between his call and martyrdom. Was there ever in the world a greater example of faithful work and diligence exhibited? No wonder that already as a boy Joseph's neighbors should prefer him to anybody, when a good day's work was wanted.

Of peculiar interest is the account "Uncle William" gives of the way in which Joseph was led to seek the Lord in prayer. Having heard a Methodist minister preach a sermon on the familiar text: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God," Joseph understood this to mean what it says and decided to follow the advice. Like the greatest of the reformers, Luther, he grasped the reality of the word of God and regulated his conduct accordingly without fear of men. This made him fit to be the instrument in the hand of the Lord to accomplish the greatest work in this age.

The friends of Joseph, who stood by him during all the various phases of his eventful career, learned to love, honor and respect him as only a good man, a man of God, can be loved and revered. And the thousands who in his teachings have found a true message from the Eternal Father, share these feelings. They honor him as they honor the Prophets of old. The world at large is not yet prepared to view him in the same light. He is still looked upon more in the same way the majority of the Jews and Romans looked upon the crucified Messiah. But this will change some time, as he is better understood and his real character is seen through the mists of slander and vilification that have been gathered about his memory. It was always so. Future generations honor those who were slain by the forefathers for the sake of righteousness.

OBJECTIONABLE BILLS.

At least two bills now pending in the lower house of the Legislature are open to serious objection. One is that which relates to artesian wells, and the other is the so-called attorney's lien bill.

The former provides, in section 1, that any artesian well which is not furnished with such mechanical appliances as will readily and effectually stop the flow of water, is a public nuisance, and the owner, tenant or occupant of the land upon which said well is situated, who causes, or even permits the well to remain in that condition, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 2 makes it a misdemeanor to permit "water to unnecessarily flow from such well, or go to waste." Section 3 defines an artesian well to be one, "the waters of which, when properly cased, will flow continuously over the natural surface of the ground adjacent to such well, at any season of the year." Mining shafts are excluded from the application of the proposed law. Section 4 defines what constitutes waste of water from artesian wells, and the definition accords with the popular meaning of the term. Section 5 makes the penalty for violating any provision of the act, a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $50, and costs. Section 6 authorizes certain public officers, upon complaint of any citizen, to enter upon any premises and inspect any artesian well thereon.

Numerous practical tests have demonstrated that there is great danger of ruining an artesian well by stopping the flow, even for a short time. The theory is that, at the base of the pipe, there exists a cavity in the earth which remains filled with water as long as the flow of the latter continues at the surface, but when the flow ceases, the cavity, and the lower end of the pipe, fill with sand, which prevents any further flow after the pipe is opened at the surface, and the well is ruined. Experiences of this kind have been so numerous that it is an insult to common intelligence to name or make further mention of them by way of proof.

Moreover, to punish a mere tenant or occupant of realty for failing to make improvements upon some appurtenance thereto, over which the terms upon which he holds possession may give him no rightful control, is unjust, absurd and unconstitutional. One man cannot be punished for failing to improve property belonging to another.

Again, many artesian wells have connected with them hydraulic rams, or other devices for elevating, or using for different purposes, a portion of the water they produce, while the balance runs to waste, as the latter term is defined in this bill. The wells were driven for this express purpose and frequently at great expense. Such property and improvements are practically destroyed by the bill. For these, and other reasons that could be named, this bill should be rejected.

The attorney's lien bill is as follows:

Sec. 1—An attorney-at-law has a lien for a general balance of compensation:

1—Upon any papers and personal property of his client which have come into his possession in the course of his professional employment.

2—Upon money in his hands belonging to his client.

Sec. 2—From the commencement of an action or the service of an answer containing a counterclaim, the attorney who appears for a party has a lien upon his client's cause of action or counterclaim which attaches to a verdict, report, decision or judgment in his client's favor, and the proceeds thereof in whosever hands they may come; and cannot be effected by any settlement between the parties before or after judgment: Provided, that the lien given by this section shall attach to all actions heretofore commenced and which are now pending.

Sec. 3—This act shall take effect from and after its approval.

If this bill were a law, an attorney could hold and sell any promissory notes, stock certificates, evidences of debt or personal property of any kind, belonging to a client, that might come into his possession, for the payment of his fee; or the attorney might help himself, to the full extent of his fee, to any money belonging to his client, which he might be able to get hold of. The bill gives to an attorney, as security for his fee, a first mortgage on property belonging to his client, which might, and often would, be many times the value of the amount so secured. Thus a client, by the operation of this proposed law, might have property worth any amount, even a fortune, placed under mortgage, and consequently tied up and unavailable, until he should pay a lawyer's fee; and should such fee not be promptly paid, the client's property might be sold at any sacrifice in order to pay it.

Under existing laws, a plaintiff and defendant may settle a suit at any stage, before or after judgment, on terms to suit themselves. But this bill virtually creates a third party to every lawsuit without whose consent no compromise of any pending suit can be effected, nor can satisfaction of any judgment rendered be entered; for the attorney has a lien on the cause of action before judgment, and upon the judgment after it is entered.

The bill is class legislation of an odious type, and is open to all the objections that apply thereto. Without regard to a client's circumstances or necessities, nor his obligations to other creditors, it encumbers his property to any amount, and renders it liable to any sacrifice, in order to secure the payment of his attorney's fee. This measure comes about as near giving "the earth" to a class of professional men usually well enough able to take care of themselves, regardless of the welfare of the rest of its inhabitants, as any that could well be devised. It should be promptly killed.

ELECTRICITY ON STREET RAILWAYS.

The past year has been a heavy one all around on railroads, and several street car lines, as well as larger systems, have been placed in the hands of receivers. It is a notable fact that while a number of steam and cable street car lines have thus been taken hold of under direction of the courts, because the operating expenses were too heavy for the receipts, not a single electric car line has had to go that way from such a cause. Where lines were made to pay in flush times, the falling off in business has been met by a commensurate reduction in operating expenses, so that a call for judicial supervision has not been necessary. With the steam and cable lines, however, expenses could be cut only so far, and then the system, to be operated at all, had to be run at a loss.

These facts were elicited by an investigation by the receiver of the Piedmont cable road in California, and now that official is desirous of changing the motive power of his line. He states that to continue the operation of the cable is to run at a constant loss, and he asks the courts to permit electricity to be substituted. He claims that even with the expense of alterations the reduced cost of operating will be on a basis proportionate to the service required, so that the road can be made to pay.

If the situation as stated by Receiver Bishop should be borne out by the experience and investigation of others, as appears from the showing made to be the probable case, it will be only a matter of a few years until even cable systems, which at first were thought to be proof against the newly adopted motive power, will become a thing of the past except for very steep grades. When the change from the old mule car system was contemplated in Salt Lake, there was considerable discussion as to whether an electric or a cable system should go in. From the careful examination of Hon. Francis Armstrong and his associates, then in control of the local line, it was concluded to adopt the electric system, and as a result Salt Lake was given a street car service unexcelled anywhere in the country. There was considerable adverse comment in railway circles at the time over the new motive power, and the most was made of the inconveniences suffered through heavy snowstorms. These difficulties, however, are being overcome, and all in all there is much less inconvenience and delay on the electric lines here than on steam and cable systems elsewhere. It is interesting to note that the practical judgment of our townsmen in investigating and passing upon the claims of what was then a new and imperfectly developed competitor in railway service is being fully confirmed by the subsequent experience of others in different parts of the country.

AN ANCIENT RELIGION.

The school of theologians which at present enjoys a brief distinction of being fashionable in certain circles is the one that denies the high antiquity claimed for the sacred Scriptures. But its representatives generally accept the sacred books of the orientals as dating back beyond the limits of secular history. It now appears, however, that a species of "higher criticism" is being applied to other books than those of the Hebrews and Christians, and with similar results. Recently a French savant, M. Darmester, has startled oriental scholars by the assertion that the Zend-Avesta, the sacred scriptures of the Parsees, cannot be older than the first century of our era. The date of these books has formerly been supposed to be between 1200 and 1500 before Christ. It is claimed that the text as now extant contains well marked traces of new Platonism and that probably various other elements have found their way into it during the ages past since the time of Zoroaster. If by the methods of the "higher criticism" the Vedas, the ancient Sanscrit books of the Hindus, could be proved to belong to the time of the first century too, the absurdity of the method of reasoning might be apparent and a reaction towards the truth as to the origin of the religions of mankind might follow.

The books known as the Zend-Avesta are supposed to have been the work of Zoroaster originally. They treated on numerous subjects, both secular and religious, and were first written on 12,000 cowskins (parchments), if Arabic accounts are to be believed. Their contents were regarded as divine revelations. In course of time much of this literature was lost. The Parsees accuse Alexander the Great of the destruction of their books. Later, the revival of interest in this ancient religion resulted in efforts to gather the fragments that still were left, and thus a volume was obtained, the one still extant.

But who was Zoroaster? Arabian writers accept the tradition that the author of these books was Abraham. It is held that the word Zoroaster is a title meaning chief or high priest and that several persons were so designated. The first Zoroaster is thus referred to in a Parsee prayer: "The first who thought good thoughts, who first spoke good words, who first performed good actions, who was the first priest, the first warrior, the first cultivator of the soil, the first prophet, the first who was inspired, the first who has given to mankind nature, and reality, and word and hearing of word, and wealth, and all good things created by Mazda, which embellished reality; who first caused the wheel to turn among gods and men, who first praised the purity of the living creation and destroyed idolatry, who confessed the Zarathustrian belief in Ahura—Mazda, the religion of the living God against the devils * * * through whom the whole true and revealed word was heard, which is the life and guidance of the world."

Assuming that this reference to the first Zoroaster or high priest is based on a tradition held at the time this prayer was composed, or perhaps on historical documents then available, the description would seem to point to Noah, the chief and first among men after the flood. The religion as taught originally was clearly that of the ancient patriarchs. The errors later introduced do not belong to Zoroaster's age. They are the result of spurious interpretations, misunderstandings, changes and corruptions, due to influences of later years.

The subject is one of great interest and it is hoped the criticism of M. Darmester may tend to have more light thrown upon it from a truly scientific source.

WAR IN THE AIR.

One report from Brazil is to the effect that President Peixoto is but waiting for the completion of a dirigable balloon to annihilate the rebels, and that this machine of warfare will soon be ready. It is to be used, like the air ships in "Cæsar's Column," to float over the rebel ships and drop dynamite bombs on their decks.

If the Brazilian president really is experimenting in this direction and is successful—something as yet highly doubtful—the monotonous conflict in the South American republic will mark an era in the art of warfare. If aeronautics have attained the perfection necessary to admit of the construction of ships moving in the air at the command of man, and if these are adapted to purposes of war, naval forces, land fortifications and armies are useless, for with a few of these implements of destruction raining dynamite bombs on an adversary, no protection would be efficient. The heaviest armored ships would be as helpless as the old wooden vessels were against the monitors. Each country would then be under the necessity of constructing similar air ships and the battleground would be transferred to the upper deep.

There may not be much foundation for the story of Peixoto's intended air ship, but some time the idea will surely be realized. A Swedish aeronaut has already announced his intention of crossing the Atlantic in a balloon. He must think he knows how to steer an air ship. If he does, others will soon be constructed, and the air will be navigated as the oceans. When this time comes, the new conveyances will speedily be adopted for purposes of war. But may we not hope that then, if not before, warfare will be rendered impossible? When an army can be annihilated in an instant, there should be no desire for a struggle. It has often been remarked that the perfection of the implements of destruction would finally lead to the cessation of war. With the adaptation of the balloon for such purposes, the development would seem to have reached that perfection. In the interest of peace, then, the sooner the air ships be built the better.

TREASONABLE DESIGNS.

At noon on Monday next, January 22, 1894, is the time set for what is designated as the Ancient Order of Loyal Americans to institute its alleged "battle with monopoly." The society is an industrial organization which its leaders assume to believe will become the most powerful of the many kindred associations that have flourished in the United States. Its promoters are chiefly officials of extensive organizations such as the Patrons of Industry, Farmers' Alliance, and societies of that class, but the new order is intended to be broader still, and include farmers, laborers, mechanics and business men.

The society was instituted by representatives from thirty-seven of the states, at secret meetings held in Chicago on December 27 and 28 last. It now has division commanders in forty-two of the states, Delaware and South Carolina being the exceptions. The commencement of the "battle with monopoly" means that at that time the division commanders will institute a general work of proselytism and will organize the recruits into brigades, regiments, etc. The grand commander of the order is D. A. Reynolds, of Lansing, Michigan, whose "grand orders No. 1" begins as follows:

You are each and all hereby ordained, instructed and commanded to call about you such trustworthy assistants as you may select, obligate them in the language of the official oath, instruct them in the duties of the order and command them to report to you for duty on Monday, Jan. 22, 1894. You are further commanded to take the field at 12 o'clock, noon, on Monday, Jan. 22, 1894, and proceed to organize your respective commands by the enlistment of loyal Americans.

The command then goes on to direct in detail certain reports to be made. The new organization is military in its character and political in its purpose. There are three degrees in the order—workmen, knights militant and national council. While it is claimed that the latter two are purely fraternal in their secret movements, yet they dominate in official prerogative the first-named class, wherein the political work is claimed to be done. The officers include J. J. England, treasurer of the Patrons of Industry of Michigan, as grand quartermaster; Rev. Myron Reed, of Denver, as grand chaplain; W. C. Bateman, a Maine Farmer's Alliance leader, as grand sentinel, and other prominent labor agitators to whom have been given high-sounding titles. The basic principles of the order are stated to be these:

The equal legal and political rights of all loyal Americans.

The prosecution as traitors of all armed forces not recognized by the Constitution.

The establishment of postal savings banks.

The absolute non-interference of any foreign power in American industries or American finance.

Governmental ownership or control of all national monopolies.

The reclaiming of all unearned land grants, the same to be held as homesteads for actual settlers.

Governmental issue of all money in sufficient volume to transact the business of the country on a cash basis.

The referendum of all legislation of vital importance.

The exclusion of European criminal and pauper labor, and the making of bribery a capital crime, to be dealt with as treason against the national government.

According to the statement of its presiding officer, the mission of the order is to unite all industrial orders in one progressive and aggressive brotherhood, the furnishing of a means through which the people may express to Congress their wishes on all questions of great national importance, and for the protection of the inherent rights of Americans from the encroachments of monopoly. It is proposed to urge legislation in the interests of the masses through the initiative and to submit all questions of national importance to the order and by the order to the people through the referendum in the following manner: All great national questions are referred through the order from national to state, state to county, county to local, and finally by the local organizations to the people, who vote on the question by writing their names and the word "yes" or "no" upon a ballot. These ballots are certified to by the local commanding officer and sent back through the proper channels to be laid before Congress. This is what is called the referendum and it is what makes the order political. It also makes apparent the object in locating the national headquarters at Washington.

As is usually the case with organizations which are inimical to the government of the country where they are instituted, the Ancient Order of Loyal Americans has a catchy title to enlist patriotic sentiment in its behalf. Its slogan of anti-monopoly is a taking cry in these days of conflicting business and laboring interests. But an examination into its stated purposes shows that they are unpatriotic to an extreme degree in being subversive of the national Constitution, and that the anti-monopoly feature is but the sheep's clothing for the ravenous wolf that would create the most gigantic monopoly the world has even seen, by binding within its grasp not only the industrial but the political powers of the nation.

The proposition to submit to the society's referendum all legislation of vital importance is sufficient to stamp the order as traitorous in the minds of every loyal citizen. It would relegate the legislative department of the country to a tribunal not provided by and antagonistic to the genius of the national Constitution, and would set up as above and superior to the government of the Constitution the government of a secret society established on principles opposed to those which brought forth the Republic. Such a society cannot be tolerated with safety to the Union.

In the questions that should be brought before the national legislature for consideration is that of the necessity for emphasizing national existence and institutions. The idea that the right of secession came before the duty of union was effectually disposed of in the last great war. The idea that new methods of government can be introduced here through secret societies should be as thoroughly removed by appropriate legislation, and that, too, before there is any necessity for a resort to arms. If there are people in the United States, native or foreign born, who are not content with the form of government prescribed by the Constitution, they should be given to understand that while they are at liberty to go elsewhere to carry out their ideas into effect, this country is not the place for their attempts. The design exhibited by the Ancient Order of Loyal Americans is subversive of the Constitution and therefore traitorous in its nature, and its promoters should receive the treatment which dabblers in that kind of business deserve.

THE STRIKE BUSINESS.

S. J. Cooper, Esq., who is owner and operator of seven large coal mines near Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, in a letter to a friend in this city, says that the recent miners' strike there cost the country not less than thirty million pounds sterling. Much of this was due to destruction of property, trees being cut down and fences being carried away for fuel. Mr. Cooper states that the distress in some cases was terrible.

The coal strike extended over a period of twelve weeks, kept 250,000 men out of employment, and reduced tens of thousands of families to destitution. The striking miners lost in wages alone £5,000,000; the miners' union fund of £300,000 was exhausted in the fight, and £1,000,000, gathered from public charity, went the same way. The loss to industries that had to be closed down because of the scarcity of coal amounted to £5,000,000. The cost of the strike to the mine owners is computed at £3,700,000, while manufacturers and trade dependent upon coal mining suffered to the extent of more than £15,000,000. This brings the total damage of the strike while it lasted up to twelve and a half million dollars a month, or about $150,000,000 in all. Of course the striking miners got the worst of it all along the line, for even in the arbitration which was instituted by the government, the schedule of wages was reduced according to the original demand, though not to the advanced amount which the mine operators asked after the strike was instituted.

After such an experience one would think labor unions would feel that in some cases it was "better to bear the ills they have than fly to others they know not of," but this evidently is not the case. In the particular instance referred to the mine owners said the general depression of business forced them to the reduction, but the miners took another view. Perhaps both sides went to the extreme in their way of looking at the affair; at any rate the greater wrong was perpetrated in the precipitation of the strike, one effect of which was to morally and financially weaken the power of the unions.

But there is a more vital issue in this strike business than the mere question as to whether the employer or employee shall win in any particular contest as to the desires of either. This issue is the right that the general public has in connection with the proceeding, and which is inspiring a demand for anti-strike legislation and is leading the judicial department to take a stand against strikes in defense of the public weal. In the English coal strike the greater burden fell on the general public. More than two-thirds of the expense, or upwards of $100,000,000, fell directly on those who had no immediate agency in bringing about the conflict. This load came through the effect of the strike on business, its closing of industrial institutions and its demands on public charity. And this is aside from the distress brought to hundreds of thousands who had no voice in deciding the question that involved them in destitution.

It is hardly to be wondered that there is a growing sentiment in favor of direct legislation on the subject of strikes, in the way of forming judicial boards of arbitration for the purpose of settling disputes between employers and employees. As such a procedure is an untried experiment there is no knowing just how it will work. But the continued and exasperating disputes between capital and labor are growing more and more bitter and disastrous, and unless there is a change in the trend of affairs through some agency, the prospect for a series of awful eruptions in the industrial world is decidedly promising.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

There is one fact which cannot be too strongly impressed upon the mind of every member of the Legislature. It is this: The present is an exceedingly bad time to alarm the creditor class, or the capitalist, by means of legislation which they may regard as adverse to their interests. On the contrary, the law-making power should, if it must touch the subject at all, pursue a policy that will increase harmony and forbearance between debtors and creditors, and confidence among men who command money.

The subject of a mechanic's lien law was talked of more or less, prior to the last election, and to some extent was made, or sought to be made, an issue of the campaign. While it may not be denied that the present statute relating to mechanics' liens is imperfect in some particulars, its imperfections were exaggerated by stump speakers who were reaching after the labor vote. As a matter of fact, the laboring man has excellent protection under it, if he will but take advantage of its provisions. It is the lumber merchant and material man, if any one, rather than the mechanic or laborer, who has insufficient protection.)

Three or more bills have been introduced since the present session of the Legislature opened "to secure liens to mechanics and others," and to repeal all existing laws upon the subject. In other words, several members of the Assembly are committed to radical and sweeping legislation regarding it.

One proposition is to give a mechanic's lien precedence over a mortgage having priority of date, under certain circumstances. Waiving discussion of the constitutionality of such a measure, it should be refused any consideration at all, on grounds of sound policy. Such a law would vastly increase the difficulty of securing loans, and in many cases would render it impossible to get them. To illustrate: It is proposed to construct a building, factory, canal, electric railroad, or other improvement, and to borrow money for the purpose, giving as security a mortgage on the property, franchises, etc., to be created or improved; who would lend the money under a law giving a mechanic's lien a priority over the mortgage?

Again: Many pieces of realty now under mortgage have greatly depreciated in value—that is, their value in the market has decreased, since the mortgage was given. For the purpose of procuring an extension of payment, and at the same time make the property more productive, the owner is willing to improve it; if a mechanic's lien on the improvement is going to take precedence of the existing mortgage, will that improvement be made? Certainly not; and if the extension of the mortgage shall be dependent upon it, there will be an immediate foreclosure. In such a case the mortgagee is safer without the improvement than with it, for if it were to be made, his lien would become a second one instead of a first.

If any member of the Assembly aspires to distinguish himself by drawing and securing the passage of a bill that will radically change relations between capital and labor, or debtor and creditor, at the present time, he should suppress such an ambition or be himself suppressed. One of the greatest Presidents is credited with the motto: "Never swap horses while you are fording a stream." This applies to laws in this Territory at the present time. We know how the ones we have are working, and that under them Utah is today feeling the financial pressure less than most other portions of the Union, while her commercial credit ranks with the best. But if some of the would-be reformers in the Legislature shall be given their way, there is every reason to fear for the result. These remarks will not be construed, we hope, as denoting an opposition to the working classes and their rights, and an undue friendship for the capitalist class. If the News leans at all in this matter, it is toward the opposite of this. But we are thoroughly honest in the belief that such radical legislation as has been mentioned can only result injuriously.

A MOST SACRED ORDINANCE.

A correspondent in Heber City requests the News to express an opinion on I Cor. xi, 30: "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." The question is whether the weakness and sleep here mentioned are to be understood of a spiritually weak condition or literal bodily sickness and death.

Paul is treating on the subject of partaking of the Lord's Supper and explains how necessary it is that this Sacrament be partaken of with great reverence and after sufficient preparation. In rebuking some members of the Church at Corinth for eating and drinking unworthily, he says their conduct will bring "damnation." The word so translated means condemnation or judgment, and the thirtieth verse explains the nature of the judgment threatened, viz., sickness and sleep.

From this it is clear that Paul here refers to literal sickness and death. It is unquestionable that Church members who unworthily partake of the Sacrament are spiritually weak and asleep; they have no strong faith in the Lord, whose death the ordinance commemorates, and they are liable to fail in the performance of every other duty; but this lamentable spiritual condition is not the result of going to the Sacrament table unprepared, and it is not so in this verse referred to by Paul. It is not a judgment of God on account of the error he seeks to correct. Rather, this spiritual weakness and dreaminess precedes that sin. When professed Christians allow worldly interests to become paramount, they will lose their spiritual strength and become to all intents and purposes as useless to the Church of Christ as if they were diseased or asleep. If in this condition they continue to partake of the holy emblems, not discerning the Lord's body, their own bodies will be made to exhibit their true spiritual condition. They will become afflicted with sickness. This is the just chastisement of the Lord. But if the warning is not heeded, death will ensue. This was the case with a great number of Corinthians. They had prematurely "fallen asleep" in death.

It will be remembered that Paul often refers to death as a sleep. In this same epistle, speaking of the resurrection from the dead, he mentions those "who are fallen asleep in Christ," meaning departed Saints. In the first letter to the Thessalonians he also uses the expression: "Them which are asleep," referring to the dead. It was a favorite figure of speech of Paul and indeed of the first Christians generally. It is therefore no violation of the text to interpret the word "sleep" in I Cor. xi, 30 as "death."

Moreover, it is but natural to expect sickness and death to follow as a result of the violation of the commandments of God. It is by faith that we are enabled to battle successfully against the evil influences that shorten our lives. In the degree that faith is becoming weak, the power to rebuke sickness and "evil spirits" is lost, wherefore people who are unworthy members of the community of Christ are liable to fatal diseases. Their spiritual condition being one of weak faith, the administrations of the servants of the Lord cannot be expected to have the effect intended. All is but the natural consequence of a departure from the path of duty and the continual breaking of the commandments of the Almighty. Hence the importance of the following injunction: "But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup."

THE SENATE'S "COURTESY."

The Senate's rejection of a nomination for the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, when both Senate and President belonged to the same political party, is not by any means an unknown development in the workings of the governmental machine. President Grant had three experiences such as President Cleveland has just had in the case of Judge Hornblower; his respective nominations of E. R. Hoar of Massachusetts, George H. Williams of Oregon—who, having been a senator, ought in pursuance of precedent and the senatorial idea of courtesy to have been confirmed without the formality of reference to a committee—and Caleb Cushing, were in turn rejected by the upper house. Only in one of these cases—that of Williams—is it understood that doubt as to the nominee's fitness for the highest judicial place in the nation caused the rejection. In the other two it was no secret that personal and political dislike was made the issue.

Such is the case also with Mr. Hornblower. The New York senators were not "consulted" about his selection, they were offended at the slight, they were politically at sword's points with him by reason of his antagonism to Tammany and their state machine, and they prevailed upon their colleagues to resent this insult, as they were pleased to term it. Of course there was some talk, for outside use and effect, as to the gentleman's inexperience, instincts, training and lack of fitness, but the fact remains that save for the personal fight made against him by Senators Hill and Murphy, in retaliation for his fight against their man Maynard for judge in New York, and who was effectually buried under a mountain of ballots last November, he would have been promptly confirmed.

It is but another and a prominent instance of the unhappy trend of modern politics. If ever a man was justified in bolting a party candidate and placing honor and integrity above partisan subservency, Hornblower and thousands of New York Democrats were to be commended for their stand against Maynard and the impudence with which the Hill faction sought to force him down the party's throat. The case was surely one where men could be loved for the enemies they had made. Yet Messrs. Hill and Murphy put the lash sharply around their senatorial associates and a sufficient number of the latter were weak enough to dance to it. If such maneuvers are to continue, there should, in all decency, be a slight amendment to the Constitution, to the end that everybody may understand the President's power "to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," means his power to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the respective senators.

UTAH'S STATEHOOD.

The sensible newspaper reader these days will not permit himself to be beguiled or disturbed by special or regular telegrams from Washington or any where else announcing that the Republicans as a party are in favor and the Democrats as a party are opposed to Utah's admission to statehood, or that Democrats as a party are in favor and Republicans as a party are opposed to that measure of justice to this great Territory. As a matter of fact, the question is not a party issue at all. It has friends, as well as opponents, on both sides. The platforms favor the admission of all the territories as fast as they are ready to assume the responsibilities and bear the burdens of statehood; but platforms never yet controlled parties, least of all do they control, or does anybody continue to expect them to control, persons or politicians.

With fend confidence: that their readers are still a race of sublime ninners, some of the eastern papers continue their entirely ludicrous remarks about conditions past and present in Utah. Forgetting that several railroads span the continent, and that millions of eastern people through travel know much more about western affairs than a great many of these writers seem to know, a precious few of the latter go on piling up airy fabrications and delving deep into the mire of malice. These productions have long ceased to excite indignation or even surprise here—they are perused with huge amusement, and with a degree of admiration for the fecundity of their writers' fancy. A womanly weekly in Washington, for instance, works itself into a fine frenzy and tearfully tears its scanty hair at the thought that Utah should even be given a respectful hearing on her petition to Congress for admission into the national family. A much more effeminate, yet presumably a more masculine, objector ludicrously swings a sort of stuffed club against this Territory from the classic precincts of Boston. The New York Recorder gives a Salt Lake writer a full column of space to argue that the Mormons have been betrayed by President Cleveland and have all become Republicans. A Pittsburg paper lets a local news-purveyor plead that the Mormons will be all Democrats if their eastern fellow partisans will do right by them. The New York Mail and Express asserts that "in adopting a resolution endorsing the proposition to admit Utah, Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma as states, the Republican national committee did not speak for the Republican party. Not one of these territories is qualified for statehood," it continues, "and the Republican voters know it. Utah is tainted with the evil of Mormonism, Arizona and New Mexico have a population largely composed of ignorant persons, and Oklahoma has not reached a settled condition. In favoring the admission of these states the Republican national committee not only got on the wrong side, but it also went beyond its province." Another New York paper, Democratic, as well as a good staunch Democratic organ in New England, agree that the report of the Democratic committee on territories, quoted some time ago in these columns, was prompted by a feeling of justice, but it was not "good politics"—Utah, at least, ought to wait awhile.

And thus it goes, each side playing for what it thinks will be popular, both probably willing to do what it believes to be right if this, that or the other objection can be swept away. Local organs of either party are accordingly unable to lay truthfully the blame for delay or defeat of Utah's petition to the opposite party; in no phase that the case has yet assumed can either side claim all the glory for what has been accomplished or for what is in prospect. What possesses chief interest in the matter for the News and for News readers is the gratifying fact that Utah and her people are being better understood, and can now number among their friends the brainiest and best men of all parties and in all sections of the country. There is no politics in this, and that is why the News is so pleased with it.

NEW YORK DOOMED BY STARS.

A prediction concerning the fate of New York, for which Dr. Falb, an astrologer, is responsible, is making its round in the press at present. It is to the effect that the great city will be destroyed by means of a tidal wave, the result of a submarine earthquake, about July 8th or August 17th, probably the latter date, as this is the most disastrous of the year. By the same means, it is added, Florida may sink beneath the water and California may be turned into an island. A Columbia college professor is credited with the statement that Prof. Falb is always true in his predictions, and that New Yorkers would better look out for the disaster threatened by the stars.

A divination of this kind in a country where astrology is looked upon as a true science might have had serious consequences. It would most probably have caused a panic, paralyzing business and resulting in the derangement of the various affairs of the community, public and private. But fortunately people in this country do not as a general rule credit astrological predictions, so Mr. Falb will not injure the great city's finances materially. A very few people may for the time being leave the city to be on the safe side, but the vast majority will forget both the date and the alleged danger. Should the inundation occur it will find the people about as much prepared as were the antediluvians for the deluge.

Astrology is an old science. At a time when the earth was looked upon as the center of the creation with the stars moving round it, it was but natural that men should ascribe to the various positions of the heavenly bodies a certain influence over the affairs of men. Chaldeans were especially celebrated for their astrology, and other ancient nations studied the stars diligently. The Arabs after Mohammed saw in this science a reasonable way of accounting for the doctrine of predestination, and to this day their learned men believe in the stars. The Christians of the first centuries were not entirely averse to the study, but later the Catholic church officially condemned it, although even cardinals are said to have cultivated it in secret. Astrology lost its reputation first when the Copernican system had been accepted as a fact. It was sophistically argued that if the earth was but a planet among many, there was no reason why they should exercise influence over each other. The argument prevailed and the study was discarded as idle superstition, although it always has had and still has its advocates both in Europe and America.

There seems to be no reasonable ground why the positions of the planets should not affect our globe to some extent. If the universe, after all, is a harmonious whole, in which the various parts work together like the parts in a vast engine, one planet is certainly influenced by another. So far astrology has probably some foundation. But when men on this broad principle proceed to predict in detail the lives and fortunes of individual persons or foretell the happenings of particular cities and localities, they evidently go too far and indulge in mere guesses. Sometimes they may be right, but oftener they are wrong, a conclusive proof that what they call a science is but a delusive system of the imagination.

THE SICILIAN REVOLT.

The island of Sicily which at present causes the Italian government more trouble than Ireland ever gave to England, is peopled by a race the condition of which would seem to justify an uprising in the interest of better government. The present Sicilians are oppressed. The wealth of the island is in the hands of a few bankers and land-owners. These live in palatial residences in Palermo or in Italy and let the land to the so-called "gabel-lotti," who sublet it to other "gabel-lotti" from whom the farmers rent. These work the land at their own expense and are allowed to keep about a fourth part of the produce, while all the rest goes to those who do nothing to earn it. The laborers are mostly uneducated, living as best they can on wages averaging five centimes an hour. When out of work the landlord has a chance to advance breadstuffs at exorbitant prices and 50 per cent interest a year.

The hapless laborers are subject to robbery not only from the landlords but also from members of their own ranks. Many of the oppressed people have turned robbers and highwaymen, favored in their pursuit by the absence of highroads, as well as by the inefficiency of the government to protect the law-abiding, patient citizens. The following description, which occurs in an article by Sig. Tazio written for an Italian paper, shows the awful condition among the laborers of that beautiful island:

The extreme verge of labor tyranny has been reached in the case of the carusi, or mine boys, under 12 years of age, who carry sulphur out of the pits, climbing steep narrow gangways more than 300 feet high. The picconieri, who extract the sulphur, engage the boys by advancing to their parents flour or corn worth 50 francs. So long as the parents are in debt the boys remain slaves, their masters being able even to kill them without risk. Recently one boy was killed by eight strokes of a pick, and another by a kick in the stomach. The officials gave their deaths as due to natural causes. The boys are pale, sickly, stooping and rickety, and they suffer continually from fatigue. Their backs are scarred with old wounds. They work twelve hours a day, sleep in the mines and feed on bread and onions. They can obtain water only by a long walk. Military statistics prove that conscripts who have been carusi are incapable of service, owing to sickness and defects in physique.

In later years labor unions have been introduced and the honest working-men have flocked to their standards. They have a membership of 300,000, and their political creed has gradually become socialistic, an equal distribution of land being demanded. There are secret societies with passwords and means of communication unknown to the government police. The matter of education has been largely attended to and schools are established for the children of members. Women are taking a leading part in the movement, encouraging their brothers or husbands to go forward in the work of liberating the people from tyranny.

The present uprising is all the more serious because it is the work of the honest, tolling masses who feel that they have suffered enough. The news from Italy is meager, owing to the censorship exercised, but it can readily be gathered that the revolt in Sicily is supported by the laborers all over Italy. Much of it is directed against the prevailing church. The priests having failed to use their influence for the amelioration of the destitute condition of the masses, are looked upon as the natural friends and allies of the oppressors. The war is therefore directed equally against the church and the state, and so serious has the situation become that the pope has taken the alarm and sought a place of refuge in Spain, if an emergency should arise. Evidently the workmen of Italy are rising en masse, and the country is trembling under the tread of the marching masses.

Under ordinary circumstances, any European government would be able to put down a movement of this kind in its incipency. Against the hosts of the people a trained army would be sent, and the former would fall like grass before the scythe. But the condition of affairs is no longer what it used to be. The vast population of Europe are now-a-days made up largely of the people themselves who have been trained for years to military service. One result of this is that the laborers are no longer entirely unacquainted with military tactics. If they have arms and ammunition and bold leaders, they are able to make a stand against the regular armies. The curse of the rule of militarism is fairly in the way of being turned against the rulers themselves.

Another fact is that the soldiers in the standing armies are not quite as reliable as they used to be, and many of them would refuse to do effective service against their brothers and fathers and fellow-countrymen. Socialistic and even anarchistic ideas are spread among the armies of Europe. Agents of these organizations enlist in the regiments and secretly propagate their doctrines. This is a known fact, and the governments are aware that there are contingencies in which the armies can no longer be implicitly trusted. It would seem that something of this kind must be feared concerning the Italian army, otherwise the uprising would long ago have been suppressed.

THE LEAN ATTORNEYS' LIEN.

No advice as to keeping out of litigation and out of the clutches of lawyers could be so effective as the proposed act to protect attorneys (!) by giving them a general lien for balance of compensation upon property of clients in their hands. In that view of the case we can almost afford to give the measure a hearty welcome. With one amendment we feel we could support it without inconsistency or regrets. This is, that in addition to protection there should also be a bounty for such members of the profession as are unable to defend themselves against swindling clients. The rarity of the product would not make the expense heavy, and the most radical free trader would doubtless be inclined to deal generously with an industry so truly insatiable.

For the high-class, conscientious lawyer, the useful citizen who while assisting others in maintaining their rights is still desirous of settling rather than fomenting litigation, we have the highest regard. We wish none but that sort could get into the Legislature; for we do not believe they would be in favor of placing power—which might be perfectly safe in wise hands—in the hands of pettifoggers and shysters to keep lawsuits interminably open and forever drawing the life blood out of litigants. That there are dishonest clients as well as dishonest lawyers is not at all an answer to the statement that where there is one dishonest client there are ten whose simplicity and ignorance of legal procedure makes them as clay in the hands into which they fall. It is for these and for the great public that every newspaper that does its duty speaks. They are our clients, and we propose to continue defending them. The issue cannot be obscured by the personalities and sneers of any jabberwock who sweats his mouth in the interest of a few clients but keeps his hands busy in his own.

Two wretched little youngsters were found all alone and half frozen in a house in Bell avenue, Denver, on Sunday afternoon. They were "Bud" and "Boulder" Dawson, aged six and eight years, and their mother is in the county hospital. Their father had inhumanly deserted them two days ago. They have been taken to the Ladies' Relief home.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.
DISTANT MAORIDOM.

A year has elapsed since the NEWS published an account of the labors of Elders from the Manawatu district, in the province of Marlborough. At that time all the South Island was included in the above named district, and hence the few scattered Saints were seldom visited. When vigorous efforts were made to push the work there the enemy was aroused, and a venerable arch-deacon of the Church of England endeavored to counteract the work by slanderous reports and strong denunciations from the pulpit. This had the effect of scattering the seed, and the Elders succeeded in establishing a good branch at Rangitoto, and the nucleus of another at Whangarae. Inquiries from the extreme south indicated that there was an opening in that vicinity amongst the Europeans, which ultimately resulted in the organization of the district of Otago, where Elder T. L. Cox presides, assisted by Elders C. Peterson and John G. Young. A branch of the church was established at Otago Owake, and the good work is progressing satisfactorily.

At the annual conference of the Australasian mission held last April, the Wairau district was formed and Elder R. G. Meikle was called to preside, assisted by Elder J. W. Linford. In connection with the semi-annual conference of this new district, a second visit was paid to the South Island. After a few hours' pleasant sail across the straits, Picton was reached and an eighteen mile evening drive was made through the valley of Tua Marina. After a night's rest at the Maori village, Wairau, the journey was continued from Blenheim to Te Hora, a distance of thirty-eight miles.

The river Wairau was flooded, rendering it impossible to ford, and hence ten miles additional travel was necessary to cross the bridge at Tua Marina.

This little village marks the scene of one of the most appalling massacres in Maori history. In the early forties, unscrupulous Europeans endeavored, by force, to obtain possession of Maori lands and the natives naturally resented their advance. Captain Wakefield, and other influential Europeans, with a strong force, sailed up the Wairau river and disembarked near the Tua Marina creek. Two brave Ngatitua chiefs, Te Rauparaha and Rangihaua, with a large band of natives, met them. An altercation took place, which increased in violence till both natives and Europeans lost their tempers. Magistrate Thompson called for the troops to advance, upon which Puha, a young native chief, advanced with Bible in hand, and pleaded for peace. The Maori had received the word of God many years before, and the young warrior probably thought that the "Pakehas" would be governed by its teachings. He soon realized, however, that it was a dead letter to them. His intercessions were unheeded. The Maoris quickly returned the shots of their enemies, and finally slaughtered all the leaders, and nearly all their followers. A large monument, containing the names of the distinguished victims and about twenty of their followers, now marks the scene of this sanguinary conflict, which was precipitated by the imprudent and aggressive policy of influential land-grabbers.

A visit was paid to the cemetery, containing the above named monument and the graves of the soldiery, and, from the summit of the hill, a beautiful view was obtained of the Wairau valley with its adjacent green-clad hills. No wonder it attracted the covetous eyes of speculators, who ultimately paid so dearly for their rash folly!

After a pleasant journey through the Waituna valley, the placid waters of the Pelorus sound were reached, and the town of Havelock was passed. Six miles further the travelers arrive at the Maori Pah, Te Hora, near the little village of Canvas town.

A large number of Maoris had assembled from Rangitoto Island, Whangarae, Wairau and the surrounding country. Some had traveled for two days in small boats, rowing nearly all the way. The Whangarae members walked through dense brush for eighteen miles, as there is no wagon road to this village, but this did not deter the members from attending and nearly all the branch was present.

As the travelers approached the Pah, they were received with lusty shouts of welcome, "Nau mai," "Haere mai," etc.

Elder Goddard had not visited them since he officiated at the baptism of those present, who indicated their joy by numerous and prolonged "hongs," while others greeted him as their "Matua," (father). Quite a change had taken place at Te Hora, since the previous visit, when only a few scattered members were present. A large dining room, 60 feet long, had been specially erected, and the numerous sheep and slaughtered beefs, hanging in the vicinity, clearly proved that ample preparations had been made to accommodate the visitors. The meeting house was comfortably seated and a neat stand had been made, near to which was a piano, obtained for the occasion. The merry laughter of the children, the incessant chatter of the dear sisters' tongues and the earnest and animated conversation of the Maori brethren, all testified to the happy influence of the Gospel upon the hearts of the people.

According to custom in Maoridom the usual weekly testimony meeting was held on Thursday evening. Thirty-four members bore their testimonies, and the presiding Elder had some difficulty in finding an opening for closing ceremonies.

The conference commenced on Saturday morning, Nov. 25th, at 10 a. m., though the usual morning Karakia, or prayer meeting, was held at 7 a. m.

On the stand were the following Elders from Zion, viz, Elders R. G. Meikle, B. Goddard, J. W. Linford and J. Johnson.

Elder Meikle delivered the opening address, welcoming all the Saints, who had assembled to worship God. He reported the condition of the district, which was very encouraging. Four branches were in good running order, three of which also had flourishing Sunday schools connected therewith. He briefly exhorted the Saints to diligence in the discharge of their duties, and showed the importance of living exemplary lives.

Hoere te Ruruku, a native Elder, greeted the members who had gathered together in the love of the Gospel. He reported the Rangitoto branch as in a prosperous condition, and then spoke earnestly and at some length on the precious truths of the Gospel restored in the latter days and now brought by true servants of God to this branch of the house of Israel. After commenting intelligently on various principles he closed by exhorting the members to observe the counsel of the Elders of Israel and exercise faith in the ordinances of the Gospel.

Renata te Morehu, the aged president of Whangarae branch, stated that his members were very diligent in performing their various duties. He bore a faithful testimony to the blessings received personally through the ministrations of the Elders, as he had been restored to health by faith in the ordinances, and therefore urged all to be faithful to their covenants.

Hanikamu Te Hiko, a visiting member from the Manawatu district, delivered an interesting address, and congratulated the members on the good condition of the district. He dwelt principally upon the subject of the gathering of Israel, quoting extensively from the prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah and Micah to show that God had clearly revealed this important event and their prophecies are now literally fulfilled. He urged the members to overcome the weaknesses of the flesh and prove themselves worthy of the name of Saints.

After a favorable report of the Wairau branch by the President, Mehaka Watere, the meeting was closed with singing and prayer.

In the afternoon meeting Rewi Maaka, a native Elder from Parirua, spoke, with native eloquence, on the organization of the Church of Christ in the latter days. He showed how the principles of the true Gospel had been delivered to the Maori people, a remnant of the house of Israel. He commented upon the laws given by Christ, which were restored and in force today. The fruits of the Gospel were now seen amongst the people. He quoted from 1 Corinthians 12th chapter to show the gifts and blessings and true organization of the Church, and dwelt at some length on the subject. He exhorted all the members to live righteous lives, reminding them that all would be judged according to their works.

Te Watene Hemi gave a good report of the Hora branch and Sunday school, both of which were flourishing. He also addressed the Saints on obedience to the laws of God.

Elder Joseph W. Linford spoke of his pleasure in meeting with the members in a conference capacity, and especially rejoiced to listen to the faithful testimonies of the members in the testimony meeting. He showed how the faithful Saints would be saved in the Kingdom of God, and exhorted all to be prayerful and true to their professions. He also bore testimony to the divine mission of Joseph Smith, the Prophet of God in the latter days.

The meeting was closed with the usual ceremonies.

In the evening a Priesthood meeting was held, presided over by Elder R. G. Meikle, and suitable instructions were given to the Priesthood. Simultaneously a testimony meeting was held for the sisters, presided over by Elder B. Goddard, and the Spirit of God was poured out abundantly.

This meeting continued over three hours, and thirty-one members spoke, amongst whom were a number of Children from seven to ten years of age. It was quite affecting and gratifying to listen to their sweet childish voices. Young boys and girls spoke freely of the blessings of the Gospel, and defended their faith with numerous scriptural passages. Invariably, at the close of their remarks, they would lift up their hearts to God in prayer, and especially crave that the blessings of Heaven might rest upon the servants of God sent from Zion to teach them. Well might the Elders rejoice in singing Elder Thatcher's beautiful hymn, "The children are praying for me."

Conference meetings were resumed on Sunday, Nov. 26th, and the first meeting was addressed by Elders John Johnson and R. G. Meikle. The meeting house was crowded with attentive listeners. The labors of the servants of God among the Maori people was referred to, and very good instructions were given on the necessity of obedience to all the laws of God.

During the forenoon a number of Europeans entered, so the speakers commented at some length on the restoration of the Gospel.

At the close of the meeting Elder Meikle announced that the afternoon meeting would be reserved for European visitors, as so many were present. During the noon recess their number was augmented and long before the time of meeting the meeting house was filled to its utmost capacity with Europeans, the Maori members readily retiring and taking seats under the windows outside. Over 300 Europeans were present, many of whom could not gain admittance. The meeting was opened with singing, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah." Prayer by Elder John Johnson. The members then sang, "We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

Elder B. Goddard addressed the congregation and commented upon the labors of the Elders among the Maoris showing the good results of their efforts, and that the same fruits of the Gospel would be manifest among all people who received and obeyed the laws of God. He took the opportunity of refuting many of the false reports circulated in the vicinity, quoting from the Doctrine and Covenants to show how inconsistent were the charges made against the Latter-day Saints. The second coming of Christ was dwelt upon and the important events that must precede it were shown from the prophecies of Isaiah, A Malachi and the postiles. The fulfillment of these prophecies in the latter days, and the restoration of the Gospel, and ministrations of angels to the Prophet Joseph Smith, were spoken on at some length, and the congregation gave earnest attention to these principles for over an hour.

Meeting was closed with singing "O my Father, etc." Prayer by Elder R. G. Meikle.

After meeting large crowds remained and many inquiries were made. A desire was expressed for an evening meeting, and as the people appeared much interested, a special meeting was announced for the following evening.

On Sunday evening, another prolonged testimony meeting was held, which continued for several hours.

On Monday the natives amused themselves during the day with various games, and in the afternoon our old friend, the venerable archdeacon referred to above, visited the Pah.

He reluctantly permitted himself to be seated at the table with the Elders, whom he had previously slandered, but endeavored to hide his chagrin. He was kindly informed that in the evening a discourse would be delivered on the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, and that the Spaulding story circulated by him a year ago would be refuted. He promised to attend, and fulfilled the promise by lingering near the door, apparently not daring to enter.

At 7 p.m. the meeting house was crowded to overflowing, some of the Europeans having traveled many miles in order to be present.

The meeting was opened with singing, "Glorious things are sung of Zion."

Prayer by Elder R. G. Meikle.

Singing, "Oh say what is truth."

Elder B. Goddard occupied the time on the subject announced. He first refuted the various false theories with regard to the Book of Mormon, and then dwelt upon the appearance of Moroni unto the youthful seeker after truth. The divine mission of Joseph Smith was explained, after which historical evidences of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon were adduced. The prophetic utterances of Isaiah, Ezekiel and other ancient prophets, were commented upon, also the fulfillment of the patriarchal promises of Jacob unto his favored son Joseph and his posterity. A more attentive audience could not be desired, and after the close of the meeting many of the visiting Europeans expressed their satisfaction and desired regular services, if possible.

Subsequent meetings prove conclusively that many of the honest-hearted of Israel are in the vicinity, and undoubtedly the field is ripe for the harvest of precious souls.

Many newspaper reports of the conference have appeared, and, with one exception, all are highly complimentary of the labors of the Elders.

The president of the district has since received a request from some of the residents of Havelock to hold a series of meetings there, the large and newly furnished town hall being offered gratuitously.

Such encouraging and cheering receptions fill the hearts of the Elders with joy and gratitude for the blessings of the Gospel, and they earnestly pray that the Spirit of God will seal the feeblest effort unto the salvation of souls.

"PHOENIX."

The Manawatu district conference convened at Porirua, New Zealand, on December 28rd, 24th and 25th, 1893. It was a time looked forward to by many of the Saints, when they would be privileged to meet together for spiritual enjoyment and to drink from the fountain of truth.

Both the natives and the Pakehas were interested, though the Maoris were greatly in the majority, as many of the European Saints could not be present. Notwithstanding it was but a district conference, many members from surrounding counties were in attendance.

Extensive preparations had been made by the Porirua members for the accommodation of all visitors. The meeting house had been enlarged so as to seat double the number that it formerly could, having a present seating capacity of about 200. The decorations consisting of mottoes and tissue hangings, were artistically arranged, giving life and splendor to the inside appearance. Most attractive were the beautiful pictures from the Book of Mormon charts, which adorned either side of the ceiling.

A spacious dining hall was also erected capable of seating eighty persons around the two tables, reaching through the whole length of the building. The tent roof made it light and airy, the two requisites for comfort on a midsummer's day in New Zealand. Let it be said to the praise of all interested, that nothing which would add to the happiness and well being of all comers was left undone. The hospitality of the aborigines cannot but be admired, and all present could testify to the prevalence of that quality manifested in them.

The Elders began to arrive several days before the commencement of the conference until Thursday, Dec. 21st, when ten of them had come and were enjoying each other's company, talking about the remembrances of their dear mountain home. The feelings that animated their souls can easily be imagined, not knowing that they would meet under such favorable circumstances. Many of them had parted in Zion, other had separated at Auckland for their various fields of labor, knowing not when or where they would meet again.

On Wednesday the Saints from the various districts and branches began to gather. Affectionate scenes, such as we do not often witness at home, were enacted by the loving natives. The greetings were spirited and sympathetic, revealing the well known trait of Maori affection. The heartrending "tangi" and the good natured "hongi" completed the introductory meeting. Now the lively conversation, and the cheerful demeanor of the mourners, put on quite a different aspect, and all around was life and animation.

The time for the commencement of the conference had now arrived. It was a fine December morning, not such as it would be at home, but ushered in by the songs of birds and brilliant sunshine. The ringing of the church bell announced that it was time for the first meeting. The spacious hall was filled to overflowing, and a number of the people outside could not gain admittance. There were present of the Elders from Zion, B.

Goddard, J. Johnson, Geo. Bowles, Jas. Barrow, W. Gibson, R. G. Meikle, J. W. Linford, Frank Nebeker, L. G. Hoagland and Magnus Nielsen.

The attention of the congregation was called by Elder Goddard. All joined in singing a Maori hymn, after which prayer was offered by Arapata Meha. Elder Goddard greeted the Saints and visitors, inviting outsiders to attend all the meetings. He concluded his introductory remarks by asking God to bless the Saints while they should be together.

Hohepa, Horomona was the next speaker. He testified to the truthfulness of the principles of the Gospel, and encouraged all to be faithful in the performance of every duty.

Elder Hoagland next spoke. He expressed his pleasure at being permitted to meet his brethren and sisters under such favorable circumstances. His instructions were calculated to benefit and elevate those who would adhere to them.

Elder Nielsen spoke through an interpreter (Brother Gibson) on the blessings the Latter-day Saints enjoy, and the reward promised them through obedience to the laws of God. He invoked the blessings of the Lord upon those who had assembled, and desired that each one should be actuated by His Spirit in all their endeavors.

The congregation sang a Maori hymn, after which the benediction was pronounced by Paratene Sui.

2 o'clock p. m.—After singing by the congregation and prayer by Ratima, Elder Bowles addressed the audience on the subject, "Faith and Works," upon which he brought many scriptural references to bear. His remarks were of an encouraging character, and he exhorted the Saints to be faithful in keeping the covenants they had entered into and diligent in doing that which the Lord required at their hands.

Elder Meikle chose the text, "Seek Ye First the Kingdom of God," etc., upon which subject he quoted many passages of Scripture. Much interest was manifested in his remarks, and doubts many determined in their minds to do as Jesus and His Apostles taught the former day Saints.

One of the native brethren, Wiremu Takana, next addressed the assembly. He expressed his willingness to respond to every call made of him by those placed over him. He spoke briefly on the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, indicating that the Maoris were descendants of the seed spoken of in the sacred record. He closed by asking the Lord to shower His choicest blessings upon those who had assembled to worship.

The evening meeting commenced at 8 o'clock. Elder Goddard presided. The congregation sang a Maori hymn, prayer was engaged in by Hakarai Hemi (native.)

Wi Neera was the first speaker. The testimony he bore evidenced that his faith in the Gospel was firm; he expressed his desire to so live that he would merit the approbation of God.

Elder Nebeker spoke next; he bore an earnest testimony in the native tongue. His admonitions were of an encouraging nature and such as all would do well to adhere to.

Arapata Meha greeted the Saints, and testified that he knew the Gospel was true, and that Joseph Smith was a great Prophet of God, that through him the Gospel had been restored in the latter days.

Hoera Te Ruruku was next called; he was glad to have the opportunity of speaking of the goodness of God toward His children, and the blessings He delighted to shower upon them through their faithfulness.

The Saints sang a Maori hymn, and Tamihana pronounced the benediction.

Sunday morning, December 14th, a previous announcement for a European meeting had been made, in response to which more than a hundred came. The choir, consisting of sweet-toned Maori singers, rendered beautifully one of Zion's sweetest songs, entitled "Beautiful Day;" every part was perfect and the harmonious strains greeted every ear as though they poured from angelic throats. Our visiting friends complimented the songsters, and requested that the pieces be repeated in a subsequent meeting. It was a striking evidence that were the talent possessed by the Maoris cultivated and directed in the proper channel, good results in the line of music could be accomplished. Prayer was offered by Elder John Johnson; the choir with much spirit sang a selection from Sankey's compositions.

Elder Goddard then addressed a large and attentive audience, on the character and belief of the Latter-day Saints. He requested that his listeners rid themselves of all prejudice, and consider in their hearts the principles he set forth, for they were in accordance with holy writ. Judging from the request made by some of the visitors that another European service be held, we think good resulted.

The choir reached its climax in the rendition of Evan Stephens's cheering duet, "God Bless Our Mountain Home," after which the benediction was pronounced by Elder Nielsen.

In behalf of the Maoris, Brother Goddard extended an invitation to all visitors to remain and partake of the hospitality of the natives. Nearly all accepted, and in a few moments were seated around beautifully spread tables laden with every delicacy.

Following was the bill of fare:

Roasts—Goose, sucking pig, beef, mutton, pork, cold beef.

Boiled—Corned beef, mutton, pork, fish, eel, mutton, bird.

Puddings—Plum, custard, rice, jam tart and blanc mange.

Pies—Rhubarb, apple and plum jam roll.

The fruits were fresh and delicious, while the cakes fresh from the hands of expert bakers, were fine in appearance and fine to the taste. So delighted were the European guests that they requested the privilege of speaking. An eloquent gentleman was chosen, who spared no occasion in commenting as the occasion merited. He had noticed a great change in the aborigines and accredited the good results to the labors of the Elders. He looked upon the Maoris as friends, and desired that their future associations should continue to increase, that a spirit of peace and union should exist among them until all reached a common brotherhood.

At the afternoon meeting the Sacrament was administered by Elders Goddard and Johnson. It was evident from the fact that all of the Saints partook of the Lord's Supper that good feelings prevailed among them.

Piripi Te Maari occupied the time. He is an eloquent expounder of the Gospel and commanded the interest and attention of the meeting. He is among the most influential chiefs in the land, and is looked upon by all who know as an intelligent and exemplary man. He is a staunch Latter-day Saint.

A testimony meeting convened in the evening, and after an opening address by Elder Johnson many Saints bore truthful testimonies to the principles which they had embraced, and expressed unalterable desires to remain faithful to the covenants they had made with God. There being such a vast number who desired to speak, it was decided that another testimony meeting be held the following evening, and though it should take till morning all should have a chance to express their feelings. The spirit of testimony certainly possessed our Maori brethren and sisters, as intimated by the good influence that accompanied each speaker.

Monday morning, 10 a. m.—Sunday night the conference should have closed, but the interest manifested was so great and the request so urgent that another meeting was announced for Monday morning. The choir, by special request, repeated "Beautiful Day," Piripi Te Maari led in prayer, and "God Bless Our Mountain Home" was then rendered by the choir.

Elder Gibson occupied the time, on the subject of Christ and His second coming. Brother Gibson has mastered the Maori language and is thoroughly capable of interesting the most critical native.

The evening meeting commenced at 7:30 p. m.; a testimony meeting had been promised the Saints, and they had all met, eager to speak of the things of God and His mercy towards them. The fact that the services lasted until 2:30 a. m., demonstrates the unbounded interest that was manifested. The spirit of truth burned in every bosom, and all felt to rejoice. Singing, benediction by Piripi Te Maari.

Thus closed the conference. The Saints had enjoyed a spiritual feast, and were better prepared for the stern duties of life. They parted with reluctance, and yet their hearts were filled with gratitude for the peaceful privilege they had of associating together.

God bless the Maoris and the Saints throughout the world!

JOHN JOHNSON,

Clerk of the Conference.

PORIRUA, New Zealand, Dec. 25, 1893.

At Casper, Wyo., immense oil tanks are being built with a supply capacity of furnishing 1,000 barrels of lubricating oil every week. Until a pipe line has been constructed from the Salt creek wells to Casper the oil supply will be hauled by wagon.

In Douglas, Wyo., last week, twenty-seven citizens were arrested and fined $9 each for getting on a big spree. It was a jollification over the acquittal of County Treasurer Burne, who had been unjustly arrested for alleged embezzlement.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

The new 60 horse power boiler for the Provo Woolen mills has arrived and is being placed in position.

The Wellsville shoe factory is doing a very satisfactory business. They turn out shoes that are both durable and cheap, and the business is steadily increasing.

There is now an attendance of nearly six hundred students at the B. Y. Academy. The institution is filled to its utmost capacity, several applicants for admission having been turned away.

The body of a mountain lion, measuring six and a half feet from tip to tip, and weighing 150 pounds, was on exhibition a few days since. It was killed in Blacksmith Fork canyon by Ezra and George Wilson, of Hyrum.

Dr. Maesser departed for the Midwinter Fair on Saturday. He will be accompanied by his daughter Ottilie. While in California, which will be for five or six months, Dr. Maesser will have charge of the California mission. He will take with him a complete supply of Church literature.

Mr. George Patten will leave Payson next week for the Mormon colonies in Old Mexico. He will go by way of El Paso, Texas, and will visit Dublin, where he has property, and also Colonia Juarez, both in the state of Chihuahua. As his visit is only on business matters, his stay will not be a protracted one.

Hon. Moses Thatcher and wife of Logan expect to leave this city Jan. 23 for California where they extend to remain two months. The trip is taken with a view mainly for the benefit of Mr. Thatcher's health which is now improving, but a complete restoration of which is hoped will follow a change of climate.

A house vacated a couple of days since by Enders the carpenter, located in the western part of Provo, was at 3 o'clock on Friday morning totally destroyed by fire. The building was too far distant from the water mains for the fire department to be of much service. The loss is perhaps $1000, and the insurance is $900. In the absence of any better theory of the origin of the fire, incendiarism is suggested. There

Elder Andrew Kimball, president of the Indian Territory mission, has returned home, and called on the NEWS. He reports that on his visit to the mission he found everything progressing satisfactorily. The Elders are all feeling well, and doing a good work. The weather there now is like summer weather here. The rainy season will soon start in. In Oklahoma it has been much colder than in Indian Territory. There are five Elders there now, and they are being well received.

The Seventies of Payson have made arrangements with Rev. G. W. Rich, of the Methodist church, and Rev. A. C. Todd, the Presbyterian pastor, to deliver two lectures before that body in the near future. Rev. Rich will treat on "Justification by Faith Alone," and

Rev. Todd on "Predestination." It is understood that this is not to be in the nature of a debate, but simply to receive the views of the representatives of these two religious persuasions on these important subjects. The date for the lectures has not yet been announced.

A frightful find and one that brings to mind a long list of similar discoveries beginning at about the same time last winter, was made at an early hour January 19th by Police Officer Parry.

That officer was walking along his beat on East Temple, between Second and Third South streets, between three and four o'clock, when he observed what appeared to be a bundle lying on the sidewalk opposite the Walker House. He stooped and picked it up and commenced to examine it. When he discovered that under the thin covering there was the dead body of a prematurely born babe he was greatly surprised not to say horrified. He at once took his charge to the police station.

The little innocent is a female and was wrapped simply in a cream colored brocade silk handkerchief without any monogram or other sign which might be an indication as to who the owner is.

A shocking affair happened at Beaver. John Houseman took his own life, the unfortunate man's dead body having been discovered on the floor of the sheriff's office about 6 o'clock. He had shot himself through the head with a revolver. Houseman recently underwent a terrible experience while passing over the mountains through Fremont's pass, and fears were entertained that his feet, which were shockingly frozen, would have to be amputated. It is thought that this so preyed upon his mind as to drive him to suicide.

On Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Patterson of Beaver were returning home after shopping, having their children with them, when the little three-year-old daughter fell from the wagon on which the family were riding and was almost instantly killed, the wheel passing over her head. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved parents.

Thursday morning Park City was startled by the news of a suicide up town, and upon investigation it was soon learned that W. F. Thornburg, a dancing teacher here, had committed suicide by shooting himself through the head. The act occurred at about 2:30 o'clock in the morning. He had come to his room at about 2 o'clock under the influence of liquor, and his room mate, Mr. Jennings, insisted upon his retiring immediately. He did so, but in a few minutes got up, for the purpose he said of lighting a cigarette. Mr. Jennings turned his face to the wall to go to sleep, but was startled by the report of a pistol shot, and springing up he discovered that Thornburg had shot himself. The alarm was given and medical attendance was immediately secured, and everything possible was done to save his life, but he passed away at four o'clock Friday afternoon, never regaining consciousness.

PAROWAN, Utah, Jan. 19, 1894.—On Wednesday last, the 17th inst., the little two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Skougard, of this place, fell into the fire and was fatally burned. The mother left the little one in care of an older child while she went on errand to a neighbor's house near by. She heard the children scream and rushed back to the house. She and her friends did everything they could do for the poor little thing, but it was burned badly, especially so on the right side. The little sufferer lingered twenty-four hours and then died. The parents are plunged in the deepest grief over their loss. She was their only girl; they have a number of boys.

The boys wound up a rabbit hunt with a dance last night, the losing party bearing all the expenses. They killed eight hundred rabbits, which means perhaps about three thousand less rabbits next spring. They are going to choose up for another hunt soon.

SPRINGVILLE, Jan. 20, 1894.—I am instructed by the Springville comrades of the Blackhawk war to answer the communication to Comrade Elbridge Tufts through your paper.

Nothing would please us better than to see you all here, and the only reason you were not invited was that there is no house large enough to hold them all and their wives.

We hope you will hold a reunion in Salt Lake county this winter and some time in the near future we hope to have a grand reunion in the summer time when we can meet in a grove and have plenty of room.

Comrades of Salt Lake county, do not feel slighted, for we will all think of you and wish you were here to take part with us. We have nearly two hundred comrades in Utah county and they, with their wives, will fill our hall. The Springville comrades are going to bear the expense of the entire gathering. Yours truly,

J. M. WESTWOOD,
Chairman General Committee.

Secretary McDaniel and his assistant January 17th completed the count of the names of the Utah people who registered in a big book kept for that purpose in the Utah building at the World's Fair. Mr. McDaniel informed a NEWS representative today that it was his intention—also that of the other members of the commission—to have every person visiting the Fair from Utah inscribe their autograph in the register book, but it is estimated that from a thousand to fifteen hundred of them failed to do so.

The number who complied with this request, however, could only be guessed at until this morning when the result was announced on the count being finished. It showed that just 5,544 persons had left their names on the book in question as a reminder of their visit to the great Exposition. This will make up a total of about 7,000 persons who went to Chicago from this Territory during the time the Fair was on.

Mr. McDaniel says it is a surprising fact that Utah sent far more people to the Fair than any of the other Western states or territories. He claims that even the great state of California fell below Utah in this respect to the number of nearly three thousand. He accounts for this from the fact that Californians had much farther to go, but when the wealth and number of the Golden State's population are considered the fact is apparent that Utah has just cause to be proud of her excellent showing.

Something akin to a sensation has again been sprung in court circles. Monday, January 22 John Beck, of the Bullion-Beck mining company, began legal proceedings in the Third district court by filing a suit against J. J. Cushing, C. W. Powell and others in which it was stated that in a case tried in that court some time ago, in which Cushing and Powell were plaintiffs and Beck was defendant, a verdict was rendered by the jury for $10,500 damages alleged to be due for the breach of a contract under which plaintiffs claimed to have furnished or prepared themselves to furnish a certain lumber of trees to the defendant; that a motion for a new trial was made and overruled and that no appeal was taken. Mr. Beck now alleges that the verdict was unlawful the same having been obtained by fraud on the part of the plaintiffs and with their knowledge and consent; that during the progress of the trial and after the jury was impaneled Powell corruptly offered and paid one of the jurors a sum of $200 for the wrongful purpose of influencing the verdict. Hence he prays that the defendants be restrained from collecting on said judgment and that the same be declared void.

Mr. Beck has also entered suit against Alonzo E. Hyde, his late manager, in which he demands an accounting for the sum of $1,085,000.

Rawlins & Critchlow are plaintiff's attorneys.

Monday afternoon the first biennial report of the board of medical examiners was transmitted by the Governor to the Council. The members of the board were appointed in the latter part of 1892, and organized in December of that year with the following officers: Allen Fowler, president; J. M. Dart, treasurer, and C. C. Shinick, secretary.

The following statistics are given: Number of meetings of the board for the purpose of examining applicants, 25; number of applications for license received, 380; number that required written examinations, 86; number of the latter that were successful, 24; number of graduates licensed in 1898, 169; number of non-graduates licensed, 5.

The licenses are divided as follows: Regulars, 142; homeopaths, 18; eclectic, 6; physio medicos, 2, hygienic, 1; number of persons licensed to practice midwifery, 156.

There have been 19 rejections of applications for license, 12 of which were on account of failure to pass satisfactory examinations, 6 because of unsatisfactory credentials, and 1 because of dishonorable conduct. Several applications are now pending.

The report states that the board treats all applicants alike, and that examinations are conducted by members of the school to which the applicant belongs.

The total moneys received amount to $1,910.82, and the disbursements to $1,224.05, leaving a balance of $686.77.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah,
January 20th, 1894.

The Herald of the 14th inst. has the following concerning the proposed Sunday rabbit hunt:

"Those of a fanatical inclination are much set against a Sabbath hunt and declare in favor of week days, regardless of the people who would be unable to leave their work."

Whether I am fanatical or not, for myself I will say that I am utterly opposed to the proposed Sabbath hunt. I would not accept of any such charity as the rabbits killed in such a hunt, unless I was in a condition of absolute starvation and could get relief in no way less objectionable.

All Christian people and many others revere the Sabbath as a divinely established day of rest and worship. Tramping over the snowy prairie and hunting and killing rabbits are neither rest nor worship. Though termed sport, such exertion is very hard work, harder than most ordinary work, and is also utterly unnecessary. It is further in express and defiant disregard of the fourth commandment, and therefore is extremely repugnant to all believers in the ten commandments. The two or three or more dollars expenses per head of the several hunters would purchase more and better meat, without the divinely forbidden labor.

As to fanaticism in objecting to the hunt on Sunday: If it is fanaticism to keep the Sabbath day holy according to the commandment, it must be fanaticism also to keep the commandments not to bear false witness, not to steal, not to commit adultery, not to commit murder.

J. A. Q.

Utah's World's Fair commissioners made a full and exhaustive report of their labors in connection with the exhibit made by this Territory at the recent Columbian Exposition. So much has been written and said on that matter that a brief synopsis is sufficient to publish at this time.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

General financial statement of the Utah World's Fair commission:

Receipts—
From Territorial appropriations, bank loans, and cash advanced by commissioners.....	$50,184 65
Disbursements—
Salaries.....	$10,708 25
Building.....	11,860 00
Furniture.....	1,381 29
Mineral, agricultural, paving and cases.....	5,000 00
Ladies' board.....	2,725 00
Collecting exhibits.....	6,050 00
General expenses.....	14,063 11
Total.....	$50,184 65

The following are the liabilities of the board, for which an appropriation covering the total amount is desired:

Money borrowed.....	$48,898 00
Interest to January 1, 1894.....	8,500 00
Andrew & Co., on warrant.....	2,835 52
Interest on warrant to January 1, 1894.....	70 05
Salaries.....	825 01
Printing.....	135 00
Sale of minerals.....	428 08
Sundry bills.....	375 00
Incidental expenses.....	800 00
Expense Commissioners and Ladies' Board.....	2,500 00
Estimated expense, closing up of business.....	1,200 00
Total.....	$59,557 25

The above statement embodies the general items of the financial statement. Vouchers for money expended and claims for interest and other charges are on file in the secretary's office and will be supplied when required.

There was a big sensation and a great deal of individual uneasiness in this city a few months ago on the exposure of a secret society at that time known as the Western Star and later as the Amorines or a branch of the American Protective association.

The statement and proof that there is another oath-bound organization in Salt Lake of recent formation, more terrible in its character than the most fearful ever dreamed of concerning the Amorinian society, will doubtless cause a flurry of excitement that will be felt for many days to come.

This is certain to be the case when it is known that the organization is of the anarchistic order and that it has a membership of between two and three hundred men pledged to support each other under vows of the most solemn secrecy even to the taking of life and destroying of property.

A NEWS representative obtained a clue as to the society and some of its objects two or three days ago in a manner that was to say the least rather extraordinary but which need not now be recited. A rumor traced to its origin discloses the fact that a diabolical plot has been brewing for some time which has in view the deliberate murder of some of Salt Lake's officials.

These latter are elective and appointive peace officers whose names are withheld at the request of the heads of the police department who have the case in hand and who hope to trace the matter down and if possible land the anarchists in jail or at least those of them who have been threatening to commit murder.

A noticeable feature in connection with the society is that most of those who are said to be identified with it, are foreigners—men, many of them—who have not even taken out their first papers and who probably never intend to become citizens of the United States and who, in case they did, could not be in any way regarded as useful or desirable.

It will be unwelcome information to these oath-bound would-be takers of human life and destroyers of property that the names and purposes of their most desperate members are fully known to the police authorities and that they will be closely watched and that they will be promptly arrested and put where they will not be able to execute their evil designs. The next few days are expected to bring forth interesting and sensational developments.

The Tabor Amusement company at Denver has filed a new damage suit against Manager David Henderson and his Sinbad Extravaganza company in the district court. This is in addition to the $25,000 suit for breach of contract instituted early last week. The complaint recites that serious damage has resulted to the plaintiff corporation from the closing of its opera house and the removal of its attraction to its rival, the Broadway theater. The Tabor was to have had one quarter of the receipts and it wants the equivalent of this and such other relief as the court may grant.

INDUSTRIES, COMMERCE AND MINES.

The plans of the company which intends to utilize the water power of the river Jordan at the Narrows to generate electricity, as mentioned in the NEWS some time since, have been about matured. There has been but little question regarding the granting of the franchises, as the work will be an extensive improvement. There will be two plants located on the river, to duplicate the use of the water power. In one there will be generated a current of electricity sufficient to provide 1,800 horse-power for operating machinery. The other plant will furnish 1,000 horse-power.

The power thus obtained will be capable of operating all the smelters around Sandy and the Cottonwoods, running all the electric lights and street car lines in this city, keeping the machinery in the mines at Bingham going, and then there will be some to spare for various shops in this city to which it is intended to furnish the motive power. Already the new company has been promised by the smelters and other heavy machinery establishments a patronage that will amount to $85,000 a year. In point of cheapness it is estimated that the electric power obtained by this company will fall so far below the present cost that plants now operating in the city will find it more profitable to stop their engines and purchase power from the new works. For instance, it now costs the street car company $37 to $40 for coal alone each ten hours; whereas it is stated that the whole power necessary to operate the line can be furnished by the water power at not to exceed $30 for a day of 24 hours. The distance which it will be necessary to transmit this power to town—20½ miles—will be no drawback, as electric power is now successfully carried in several places double that distance without material loss.

A Park City correspondent writing under date of Jan. 19:

With the advance of winter the cold and snow increase. For the past week zero and below has been the ruling state of the thermometer.

The Marac mill is now running full force again, and the noise of the forty stamps is pleasing to the ears of the Park people. The mill is now in shape for another long run, and it is hoped that the metals will keep at such a point that it will not be necessary to shut down very soon. Amalgamating pans have been started to work again at this mill for a test run, to make a comparison with the leaching process.

At the Ontario mill work is going on as usual, and a larger amount of bullion is expected to be turned out this month than was turned out in December, the largest month's run since the mill was started. Material for the leaching plant is still arriving, and it is expected to be in operation early this spring.

The Crescent company has started shipment of ore again to Leadville, and a large amount is being brought down daily from the mine—all first class. It is estimated that there is over 1000 tons of first class ore on the platform at the mill ready for shipment. The Utah Central has been kept busy all week furnishing plenty of cars for them.

Beaver Utonian: We are in receipt of a sample of coal which came from the recently discovered ledge of Pearson and others. The coal makes a nice flame and appears to burn easily and freely, leaving very little refuse. The blacksmiths report that they have tried this coal and find it far ahead of any other they have been using, being more free from foreign substances. There is a fortune for the owners of this ledge if it is of sufficient quality and can be worked to advantage. We are informed that both these points do not exist as hindrances, but that there is an immense body of the coal and it can be handled with unusual advantage. Good for the finders and good for Beaver.

Pioche, Nev., Record: Nearly every claim on which much work has been done in Ferguson district shows up promisingly. One of the latest is the Paymaster, situated about a mile east of town and about the same distance north of the April Fool. Joseph Bryant and John Reese have put up a twenty-six foot shaft and exposed a fine face of mineralized quartz from five to seven feet in width with assays running from $9 to $100 a ton in gold. It is believed to be the same mineral belt as that on which the April Fool and Monitor claims are located. The work still continues and shipments to mill will be made as soon as the mill will receive them.

Mercur Mercury: Hudson Smith, who is interested in a valuable group in the district, and Professor Marcus E. Jones, considered to be one of the best mineralogists and mining experts in the West, came out from Salt Lake Tuesday. This is the professor's first visit to the camp, and he spent several days in examining the formation of the district. He informs us that in his opinion this district will be as great, if not the greatest, producer during the next year in Utah, that the probabilities of new strikes are good, and that the chances of the camp as regards richness and permanency are most excellent.

The Utah Central Railway is having its annual tussle with snow between this city and the Park. The line has been kept pretty well open, but yesterday's fall of "the beautiful" in the mountains was rather too much for the lifting qualities of improvised snow plows on the little locomotives. This morning a trainload of shovelers went out and cleared the track, and with the present calm weather it is expected traffic will not be impeded to any great extent. This morning's train got through to the Park and the passenger trains are keeping fairly near to the schedule time.

Summit county Chronicle: Work at the new coal mine owned by Mark Hopkins is progressing as rapidly as circumstances will permit. The new engine, boilers and other machinery are in place, and in a very short time Coalville will have another producer of the superior quality of black diamonds for which she is noted, and when we have that other railroad, we will show Salt Lake and Ogden and other cities west of us that we produce what we claim—coal that is unexcelled by any in the West.

The Idaho prune industry is becoming quite important to that state. A report made on Saturday to Senator Shoup gives the following figures: Number of pounds cured 1892, 100,000; in 1893, 200,000. Number of pounds green, raised and shipped in 1892, 800,000; in 1893, 700,000. Approximate value of crop in 1892, $20,000, in 1893, $48,000. Amount of money invested, $500,000. Present value in acreage, $4,000,000. Number of people in the business, 800.

Beaver Utonian: Some very fine samples of ore are exhibited from the Bald hills. This promises to be an interesting mining district before long. The ore from this section is all gold bearing and is said by those who know, to be as rich as any yet found in the country.

Ephraim Enterprise: Notwithstanding the heavy snow in the mountains a number of citizens are prospecting for precious metals. A number of good claims will be opened up as soon as spring comes. Next season promises to be a lively one for this city.

CHURCH THEOLOGY CLASS.

At the usual time and place over one thousand students convened with their instructor, Elder James E. Talmage. The opening prayer was spoken by Elder LeGrand Young. After the consideration of incidental questions a review was taken upon the subjects of (1) Personality and office of the Holy Ghost. (2) Recipients of the Holy Ghost. (3) Bestowal of the Holy Ghost. The thorough catechization showed careful preparation on the part of many students. Proceeding with the lecture the sacrament was further considered. Attention had already been drawn to the "institution of the sacrament" and "who are fit partakers of the sacred emblems," "the purpose of the sacrament" being now set forth. Very early after the apostolic age this ordinance, as many others, was much distorted in meaning, spirit and form. The doctrine of transubstantiation was introduced. Thereby the people were taught to look upon the bread and the wine as things to be adored and not as emblems of Him who should be adored. Many complex theories were advanced and discussed, but those thus engaged sought rather to obtain triumph than truth in discussion, and were therefore led into darkness. The real purpose was simple, it meant just what Christ had said, viz: to commemorate His atoning sacrifice, to bear witness before the Father that we will ever remember the sufferings and death of His Son, that we still profess the name of Christ and will strive to keep His commandments. Some have thought that the sacrament was ordained as a special means of obtaining remission of sins, to take the place of baptism. The fact that the partaking of these holy emblems is forbidden unto those who need forgiveness most, proved the fallacy of such a belief.

The sacramental emblems usually employed should be bread and wine, but according to a revelation to the Prophet Joseph, when wine cannot be obtained pure, water may be used in its stead.

To administer the sacrament is a duty of the Priest, the highest officer in the Aaronic Priesthood, who has authority to ask for the blessing upon the emblems. Other officers in that Priesthood may assist him, or any one holding the higher Priesthood may also officiate. The exact words of and minute instructions regarding the ceremony are written in the Doctrine and Covenants as well as the Book of Mormon, no one having personal authority to change the prayer.

Benediction was pronounced by Dr. Karl G. Maeser.

DESTROYING FLAMES.

Shortly before midnight Jan. 21 a fire broke out in the old adobe barn on the John Sharp estate at the corner of First and D streets, which has been a landmark in that part of the city for many years.

Just how the fire started is not known, though, as in the burning of the Daily Star, it is believed that tramps had entered and were sleeping in the building and that they either wilfully or accidentally ignited it. The fire department was called out and made as rapid a run as possible and at once set about taking out movable property. Of this there was considerable. Four horses were rescued from the burning structure while two others were so badly burned that they had to be killed on the spot. Insurance was carried to the amount of $1000, but the loss will probably reach twice that amount.

While the department was at work extinguishing the fire at the Sharp barn, a blaze broke out in a drug store at the corner of Fourth South and Second West streets, owned by Laymon & company. In this instance the fire was caused by an over-heated stove. It was extinguished by the West Side brigade. The loss was estimated at $300 and is fully covered by insurance.

A destructive fire of unknown origin broke out in the residence of Cashier C. L. Hawley, of the Utah National bank midnight Jan. 19 and burned with consuming velocity for more than two hours. The house was situated at the corner of P and First streets, considerably more than a mile from the fire station and by the time the brigade had arrived the flames had made alarming progress. It required a good deal of hard work on the part of the firemen to get the blaze under control.

Bishop L. P. Overson's house of Cleveland was totally destroyed by fire one day last week and all its contents excepting a few pieces of furniture, says the Eastern Utah Telegraph. The fire started between the upper floor and the ceiling, supposed to have caught from the stove pipe. When the fire was discovered it had got under such headway that it was impossible to stop it. We understand there was no insurance on the house or contents. The neighbors have all joined together and assisted in replacing the house.

On Saturday evening about 9 o'clock says the Ogden Sun of last evening, a fire was discovered in the basement of the Z. C. M. I. by Mr. R. J. Lambert. An alarm was rung in, and quickly responded to by the fire ladders who succeeded in extinguishing the fire in a short time. The amount of damage cannot be stated.

When the fire was raging at the Z. C. M. I., some fellow shouted "fire" in the opera house which caused a general stampede from the building, and the performance closed. No serious injury occurred to any one, the crowd being more frightened than hurt.

THE LEGISLATURE.

Committee sessions are the order of the forenoon, and sometimes of the evening, with many members of both houses. There has been an unprecedentedly large number of bills introduced, considering the early stage of the session, and these afford employment for committees. This forenoon the House committee on elections held a session for the consideration of the contest of Dougall vs Robertson. The facts are conceded, the issue being one of law purely. The contestant was represented by Whitecotton & Brown, of Provo, who made an argument for their client, Mr. Dougall. The sitting member, Mr. Robertson, is represented by Schroeder & Williams. The session of the committee adjourned until 8 o'clock this evening, when counsel will be further heard.

It is a gratifying fact that the claims against the Territory thus far presented in the Legislature are neither large in number nor amount. They mostly consist of sheriffs' accounts for fees in Territorial business. The most important claim yet introduced is that of Judge J. S. Boreman, which is now in the hands of the House committee on claims and public accounts. The amount is $1,750. The petition recites that in 1890, certain parties were applying for patents on school lands in Weber and Salt Lake counties, and that petitioner, at the instance of Governor Thomas, appeared for the Territory to resist the applications, being aided by a firm of land attorneys of this city, Messrs. Parks & Thompson. A long trial was had in the land office here, in which the Territory was victorious, but the applicants for patents appealed to the general land office at Washington, where the Territory was again victorious. The petitioner's claim for $1,725 was presented to the Assembly or 1892, but only $500 of it was allowed. Subsequent to this, further litigation followed, in which petitioner represented the Territory, the latter being finally victorious. The lands involved were worth, so the petition states, $300,000, which amount was saved to the schools of the Territory, largely through the efforts of the petitioner. As the reasonable compensation still due him, he asks for an appropriation of $1,750.

One of the issues of the campaign which resulted in the election of the present Legislature was the need of a good mechanic's lien law. That the statute in force did not properly cover the subject was conceded by all, and some of the candidates for legislative honors and powers were pledged to remedy the deficiency, and these pledges are being kept. At least three or four bills upon the subject have been introduced in the Assembly, the last of which was offered in the House yesterday by Monson. One thing is certain: The Legislature is fully alive to the need for a good mechanic's lien law, and probably material for the construction of one will be procured from the contents of the bills upon the subject that have been offered.

Jan. 17 J. E. Booth, in the Council, and Allen, in the House, introduced a bill which contemplates the early abolishment of the Utah Commission. The measure restores to county courts the management of elections.

J. E. Booth introduced in the Council a bill to provide for a uniform system of free schools throughout the Territory. A similar measure is in the hands of the House committee on education, and there seems to be a strong probability that the Assembly will amend the present school law in the direction indicated by these bills.

The conclusion reached by the House committee on elections, and endorsed by the vote of the House, which seats Dougall, the Republican, in place of Robertson, the Democrat, is very generally conceded to be in harmony with the facts and the law in the case. While five Democrats voted against the seating of Dougall, Powers, the recognized leader of the Democratic side of the House, voted to adopt the report of the committee. The House now stands 8 Democrats and 18 Republicans.

The Speaker referred those portions of the Governor's message relating to the University and Agricultural College to the committee on agriculture and irrigation, and it is probable that this committee will open the discussion by offering its recommendations.

A proposition to create a new county, to be called Carbon, out of the northern part of Emery county, is being urged. The proposed county would take about one-third the area now embraced in Emery county and would be almost a parallelogram, extending to Green river on the east, and taking in Scofield and the Pleasant valley coal mines on the west. It is asserted that the members of the Assembly from the district embracing the territory to be effected favor the creation of the new county.

The Council had a session in which party politics consumed most of the time yesterday. The sugar bounty and tariff memorials were under consideration in connection with majority and minority reports on each and the talking and voting were on party lines, the Republicans, of course, prevailing.

Nebeker made the following statement to a NEWS representative:

"My bill, which has for its purpose the union of the Agricultural College and the University of Utah, I regard as the most important measure that may come before this Legislature.

"It is in the interests of education and economy that union shall take place. I have named Logan as the location for the University of Utah for the reason that I believe Logan possesses the most advantages for it, and the interests of all the people of the Territory would be better subserved by putting it there. However, I am desirous of considering the subject in its broadest sense. Union must be the paramount idea."

MISCELLANEOUS.

ANOTHER TESTIMONY.

Some time ago the News contained a notice of the death of William Smith, the last surviving brother of the martyred Prophet, and also biographical notes on the career of this member of the celebrated family. The readers of the News will peruse with interest the following account of an interview with him some time before his death. It is written for Zion's Ensign, a paper published at Independence, Mo.

BRADTVILLE, Wis.—I am under promise to Bro. E. C. Briggs and others, to send to your paper a transcript of an interview between Uncle Wm. B. Smith and E. C. Briggs. I herewith submit the following taken from notes and also from memory:

Bro. Briggs and I visited him next day after he returned from St. Paul being about two weeks before his death. We found him able to be about the house and quite willing to talk. After passing the time of day, etc., Bro. Briggs and he spoke of former meetings and finally drifted on to the subject of Bro. Smith's early boyhood and his knowledge of the rise of the Church, Book of Mormon, etc.

Bro. Briggs then handed me a pencil and asked Bro. Smith if he ever saw the plates his brother had had, from which the Book of Mormon was translated.

He replied, "I did not see them uncovered, but I handled them and hefted them while wrapped in a tow-frock and judged them to have weighed about sixty pounds. I could tell they were plates of some kind and that they were fastened together by rings running through the back. Their size was as described in mother's history."

Bro. Briggs then asked, "Did any others of the family see them?"

"Yes," said he; "Father and my brother Samuel saw them as I did while in the frock. So did Hyrum and others of the family."

Was this frock one that Joseph took with him especially to wrap the plates in?"

"No, it was his every day frock such as young men used to wear then."

"Didn't you want to remove the cloth and see the bare plates?" said Bro. B.

"No," he replied; "for father had just asked if he might not be permitted to do so, and Joseph, putting his hand on them said; 'No, I am instructed not to show them to any one. If I do, I will transgress and lose them again.' Besides we did not care to have him break the commandment and suffer as he did before."

"Did you not doubt Joseph's testimony sometimes?" said Bro. Briggs.

"No," was the reply. "We all had the most implicit confidence in what he said. He was a truthful boy. Father and mother believed him, why should not the children? I suppose if he had told crooked stories about other things we might have doubted his word about the plates, but Joseph was a truthful boy. That father and mother believed his report and suffered persecution for that belief shows that he was truthful. No sir, we never doubted his word for one minute."

"Well," said Bro. B. "It is said that Joseph and the rest of the family were lazy and indolent."

"We never heard of such a thing until after Joseph told his vision, and not then, by our friends. Whenever the neighbors wanted a good day's work done they knew where they could get a good hand and they were not particular to take any of the other boys before Joseph either. We cleared sixty acres of the heaviest timber I ever saw. We had a good place. We also had on it from twelve to fifteen hundred sugar trees, and to gather the sap and make sugar and molasses from that number of trees was no lazy job. We worked hard to clear our place and the neighbors were a little jealous. If you will figure up how much work it would take to clear sixty acres of heavy timber land, heavier than any here, trees you could not conveniently cut down, you can tell whether we were lazy or not, and Joseph did his share of the work with the rest of the boys."

"We never knew we were bad folks until Joseph told his vision. We were considered respectable till then, but at once people began to circulate falsehoods and stories in a wonderful way."

"Were your folks religiously inclined before Joseph saw the angel?" asked brother Briggs.

"Yes, we always had family prayers since I can remember. I well remember father used to carry his spectacles in his vest pocket, (feeling in his lower right hand pocket to show us how and where) and when us boys saw him feel for his specs, we knew that was a signal to get ready for prayer, and if we did not notice it mother would say, 'William,' or whoever was the negligent one, 'get ready for prayer.' After the prayer we had a song we would sing, I remember part of it yet."

Another day has passed and gone,
We lay our garments by.

"Hyrum, Samuel, Katharine and mother were members of the Presbyterian church. My father would not join. He did not like it because a Rev. Stockton had preached my brother's funeral sermon and intimated very strongly that he had gone to hell, for Alvin was not a church member, but he was a good boy and my father did not like it."

"What caused Joseph to ask for guidance as to what church he ought to join," asked Bro. B.

"Why, there was a joint revival in the neighborhood between the Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians and they had succeeded in stirring up quite a feeling, and after the meeting the question arose which church should have the converts. Rev. Stockton was the president of the meeting and suggested that it was their meeting and under their care and they had a church there and they ought to join the Presbyterians, but as father did not like Rev. Stockton very well, our folks hesitated and the next evening a Rev. Mr. Lane of the Methodists preached a sermon on 'what church shall I join?' And the burden of his discourse was to ask God, using as a text, 'If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally.' And of course when Joseph went home and was looking over the text he was impressed to do just what the preacher had said, and going out in the woods with child-like, simple trusting faith believing that God meant just what He said, he kneeled down and prayed; and the time having come for the reorganization of His church, God was pleased to show him that he should join none of these churches but if faithful he should be chosen to establish the true Church."

We also talked with him concerning his connection with the Church during the days of his brother, and after Bro. Briggs had gone to Minneapolis I succeeded in getting an affidavit from him on that subject which I will send in my next.

J. W. PETERSON.

Written for this Paper.

MILLIONAIRES' TAXES.

The rich men of the United States will be hiding behind their wood piles during the next few months. The Democrats of the Congress are bound that we shall have an income tax, and they propose to collect two per cent on all incomes of more than $4,000 per year. This will affect hundreds of thousands of men in the United States, and if human nature is the same today as it has been in the past not one-tenth of them will pay the taxes. It is laws like this which make it very difficult for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. In 1868, when the United States was booming, we had an income tax on all persons who made over $1,000 per year and less than 260,000 people paid taxes on their incomes. The number who received more than this and escaped taxation amounted to hundreds of thousands, and it was even worse when the limit was raised. It was not long after this before the amount of exemption was increased to $2,000 and then the taxable incomes were returned to the number of 116,000 and this number fell right along until 1870, when Senator Sherman estimated that only 60,000 people were paying income taxes. At this time we had a population of about 40,000,000, and nine-tenths of the people and ninety-nine hundredths of the property holders of the country escaped taxation. At incomes of over $4,000 it will be worse yet. The gold-plated liar and perjurer will be abroad in the land and the tax will to a certain extent be a premium on corruption.

If it could be justly collected it would bring in millions. I have been looking over the rich men of the United States and estimating what they will have to pay if they are taxed on the incomes that they ought to have in proportion to their supposed wealth. Every Congressman on his salary alone will have to drop $20 a year into the treasury. The cabinet ministers will each fork over $80 to Uncle Sam, and President Cleveland will have $920 deducted from his White House income. Private Secretary Thurber will yield up $20 and the justices of the Supreme Court will each have $120 a year less to spend on the capons which line their fat, round bellies. If in addition to this they return the incomes that they should have, supposing their wealth brought them five per cent, Cleveland's two hundred odd thousand dollars would make him pay $200 more of an income tax, and Secretary Lamont will have to plank down the same amount out of his profits of street railway investments. Every millionaire in the Senate ought at this rate to pay something like $1,000 a year income tax, and if Don Cameron, Cal Brice and John P. Jones do not wince when they are asked to give up $5,000 and upward apiece to the treasury I am much mistaken in the men. Senator Stewart is said to be worth a million. He will pay $1,000. Watson C. Squire has a million dollars' worth of real estate in the state of Washington and he is too sharp a business man to let it bring him in less than a $50,000 income. He ought to pay $1,000. Of all of John Sherman's big fortune I doubt whether there are many dollars lying idle, and Vilas will probably have to drop $1,000 a year from his Wisconsin assets. Fully half of the members of the Senate have incomes of $5,000 and upward in addition to their salaries. They will have to pay $100 and upward apiece, and Henry Cabot Lodge, George C. Perkins and Senator Stockbridge are among those who will be expected to pay their thousands. The most of these men will kick when the bill comes before the Senate and the general opinion is that it will not be allowed to become a law.

The millionaires of the United States! Their name is legion. Each one of their millions ought to bring in between $40,000 and $50,000 a year, and from this tax they should pay at least $1,000 per million. Look at the list and see some of the golden spots upon which the muriatic acid of this tax ought to fall to prove whether the figures are genuine. William Waldorf Astor is said to be worth $150,000,000. His vast wealth is in lands and houses in New York city, and it is supposed to bring him in six per cent. If this is so he gets more than $9,000,000 a year, and his tax will be more than $180,000, or about $15,000 per month. The Gould estate, it is said, amounts to over $100,000,000, and at six per cent it will bring in $6,000,000 a year and would have to pay a tax of $120,000. One of the biggest fortunes of the United States is that of the Vanderbilts, which amounts to in the neighborhood of $200,000,000, and which, if reduced to gold, would equal more than 700,000 pounds of the precious metal. It is all safely and conservatively invested, and it probably brings in an income of $12,000,000 a year and it ought to pay a tax of something like $20,000 per month, or over $600 a day. The two brothers, William K. and Cornelius Vanderbilt, are together supposed to be worth nearly $200,000,000, and when William H. Vanderbilt was living I got an idea at the Treasury Department of his immense estate. I was looking into the investments of our millionaires in four per cent bonds, and I was told that at one time Commodore Vanderbilt had held $45,000,000 in these securities alone. The amount appalled me, and the income from it made my eyes as big as saucers. The interest was paid quarterly, and this one man got from the United States treasury one per cent on this amount every three months. Without the slightest risk he received from the United States government a check for $450,000 every ninety days. It made me feel like an anarchist. I could have forgiven him the receiving ten times this amount from an investment in which he stood some chance of losing, but to receive $150,000 a month, $5,000 a day, or over $200 an hour, without doing a stroke of work or risking a cent of loss was entirely too much for me, and for the moment I flaunted the red flag and envied him.

It is hard to get an idea of what these millions mean, and the enormous incomes which they bring in. The Astro fortune if put into $1 bills and pasted together would make a crazy quilt big enough to cover fifty-six farms of 100 acres each. The Gould estate would carpet more than 3,000 acres, and if the bills were pasted together end to end those which could be realized from the Vanderbilt fortunes would make a green ribbon more than 22,000 miles long, or long enough to almost reach around the earth. And still there are other fortunes nearly as great as these Collis P. Huntington is said to be worth $50,000,000 and he ought to pay $50,000 a year of an income tax. I would like to see the long face of Russell Sage shrivel up when he is asked to give Uncle Sam $50,000 out of his income. I venture he would have the money brought in in barrels of pennies and paid out one at a time in order to hold on to it the longer. Russell Sage makes his money at high rates of interest. He always has a vast amount on call, and he can figure up what four per cent means without using a pencil or pen. He is supposed to be worth $50,000,000 and his transactions are such that the tax inquisitors will not find it hard to estimate something as to its profits. He is besides this a member of Dr. Paxton's church, and I am sure that he would not think of returning one cent less than he makes. I have seen the exact amount estimated, but I do not know as to whether it includes all of the millionaire's earnings. According to the published account, however, Russell Sage is credited with taking in ten cents every second, $6 a minute, a little more than $8,000 a day, about $250,000 a month, and over $3,000,000 a year. His property must be protected, and you will agree with me that an income tax as to him would be just.

By the way, speaking of the justice of an income tax, makes me think of a question which was debated in one of the literary societies of John Allen's congressional district in Mississippi. This was:

"Where is the best place to have a boil?"

The decision arrived at was: "On the other fellow." And this is the way with the income tax, it is all right provided it comes on the other fellow, and these millionaires are the other fellows. Take the Standard Oil magnates. They have turned globules of oil into gobs of gold and their own heads buzz when they try to compute their incomes.

John Rockefeller is said to be worth almost as much as William Waldorf Astor and the most conservative estimates put him at $100,000,000. He did many a job of hauling along the wharves in Cleveland when he was a young man for a dollar a load, and he knows how much $1 means, but even he cannot figure out in his mind the enormous amount of $100,000,000. His money is invested in standard oil stocks, which are supposed to be as good as gold and which sometimes pay 12 per cent dividends. His income must be in the neighborhood of $10,000,000 a year, and an income tax of $200,000 would not hurt him as much as a tax of $2 would injure the average reader of this letter. He spends his thousands on horses, country homes and Baptist Sunday schools, but they don't begin to eat up his income, much less his vast principal, and he can pay this tax and not come to want.

Another rich Standard Oil man is Oliver Payne, who is said to be worth a hundred million and who is a bachelor with no house to take care of, no children to keep in shoes and no grocery bills to pay. You would think that he would not object to helping Uncle Sam out to the extent of a paltry couple of hundred thousand dollars a year. Henry M. Flagler has his extravagances in the way of his immense Florida hotels, but these are but mice bites at the great round cheese of his income. At 5 per cent his fortune is said to bring him in $3,000,000 a year or $250,000 a month. The income tax would leave him more than $2,900,000 for his year's expenses, and his principal would remain untouched. He is said to be worth $50,000,000 and at 5 per cent his income is nearly $350 per hour. Flagler was once as poor as John Rockefeller. When he was a boy he thought he could make a fortune at keeping a hotel and he longed for the change to try it. The result was that when his connection with the Standard Oil Company brought him in money faster than he could count it he concluded to realize his boyish ambition and he built his big hotel at St. Augustine. I don't know that it pays, but you can spend there, I am told, from $6 to $60 a day without knowing where it has gone, and in the winter it is packed from cellar to attic with rich men and women.

One reason why our rich men object to paying taxes lies in their early lives. The most of them began saving penny by penny. Until they were of age a dollar was as big as a cart wheel, and they can now appreciate small amounts better than they can large ones. They look upon their millions as matters of course, and in the way of business they make and lose fortunes without winking. When it comes to spending, however, they pinch the coin until the nose of the Goddess of Liberty is pushed down into her throat and the eagle fairly screams in his agony. Even in his last days, it is said, Jay Gould estimated the dollars he spent as the profit from the sale of so many rat traps. Andrew Carnegie once worked for $3 a week, and though there is no man more liberal in the lump I venture he can tell you how many meals a poor man can get from every dollar he spends, and Levi S. Leiter, who has been paying $10,000 for house rent and who has just finished a palace more gorgeous than that of any second class kingdom of Europe used to hustle about trying to get a start on $6 a week. Russell Sage made his first money in selling sugar as a grocer in Troy, N. Y., and he thinks of the barrels and barrels of sweet mixture which the $50,000 tax on his income would buy, and his face is anything but sweet at the thought. Joseph Pulitzer will have to pay several times $10,000 if this bill passes, and he will remember how hard he worked to make his first dollars in driving a coach in St. Louis or as a poor reporter on the smaller newspapers there. Sidney Dillon will remember how he ran errands as an office boy, Henry Clews will figure up the whole on the basis of the value of the money to him when he was getting $3 a week, and D. O. Mills will estimate how much his income tax would amount to if he were back in Sacramento, California, trying to get enough money to start life by selling lemonade and root beer. I hope they can squeeze a big tax out of Lucky Baldwin. He ought to pay $50,000 a year, and if he does it will make him feel as if he had 50,000 pins pricking at 50,000 different places in his anatomy. This will not be the case with George W. Childs. He began life a poor boy, but he has never been miserly, and the big income tax he will have to pay will not hurt him. He has made money rapidly, but he has spent it just as freely, and though he made no more than $600 a year until he was seventeen, before he was twenty he was on his way to fortune. Still he worked once for $4 a month. Whitelaw Reid, who will have to pay an income tax as big as the President's salary, said not long ago that he was glad to get $5 a week as a correspondent of a Cincinnati newspaper, and John Wanamaker, another of these prospective big income tax payers, began life by working for $1.25 a week. Phil Armour will pay a tax on millions. He worked hard in the mines of California to get his start, and he knows the exact value of the tens of thousands of dollars which he will have to pay. It is the same with a dozen other rich men whom I could mention. They all began at the bottom, and the most of them will realize the value of the money they will have to give up. A few of them will, I venture, lie about it, and say that they make less than they do, but many will be honest and turn in to Uncle Sam a fair account of their profits and their losses.

It will be the same with professional men. The best brain and the most skilled fingers of the United States will be affected by this tax. There are a number of lawyers in New York who make many times $4,000 a year, and there are railroad officials, editors and bank presidents in all the big cities who receive fortunes for their work. George B. Roberts, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, is said to receive $50,000 a year as his salary, and Chauncey Depew receives a like amount. Both of these men have big estates outside of their salaries, but on their salaries alone they will pay $1000 to Uncle Sam, and the same will be the case of a number of other high salaried men. The president of the Western Union Telegraph Company is said to receive $50,000 a year. The president of the Equitable Life Insurance Company gets a like amount, and he is a poor bank president, who does not receive as much as the chief justice of the United States. Bob Ingersoll is supposed to make $100,000 a year out of his law practice and lecturing. He ought to pay $2000 of a tax. George Hoadley probably makes $50,000, and it is said that Bourke Cockran still gets the same amount out of his practice. I know a lawyer in New York who made about $25,000 last year, and who gets a big salary from a corporation, and is paid in addition $100 a day whenever he is away from the city on business for it. It is the same with doctors. There are said to be a hundred doctors in New York who make $10,000 a year and upward, and it is said that Dr. Weir Mitchell once refused a fee of $25,000 to go over to Europe and back on the next steamer to pay a single medical visit. There are more than twenty doctors in New York who make over $20,000 a year, and nearly every profession has its $10,000 men. Even the preachers will have to pay income taxes. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage will pay $160 out of the salary he gets from the Brooklyn Tabernacle, and the assessment on the remainder of his income will call, I venture, for $500 more. Dr. Morgan Dix will be asked for $200, and Robert Collyer will give Uncle Sam a like amount. Even the newspaper men will have to pay. All of the big editors will be assessed and a number of the literary men. W. D. Howells will probably give at least $500 out of his income to the United States treasury. John Brisben Walker will be one whose income taxes will run into the thousands, and Mark Twain will shell out several times as many gold dollars as he made during the days when he worked for a living as a newspaper correspondent here at Washington.

Among the people upon whom this tax will most heavily fall will be the rich women of the United States. Their incomes are better known than those of the men, and the widows of our millionaires, the exact amount of whose estates have been told in the courts, will be assessed at two per cent of all they receive over this $4,000. Mrs. Stanford will have to pay many thousands every year. Mrs. Senator Hearst will annually pay a fortune to the government, and Mrs. Zach Chandler will be called upon for a large amount. Everyone has heard of the great wealth of Miss Hetty Green. She is said to be worth $30,000,000 and at six per cent her income from this must be $1,800,000 a year. At this rate she will pay $36,000 in taxes. Miss Mary Garrett of Baltimore will be another large tax payer, and there are some women in Washington who could buy diamond necklaces out of the amounts they will have to pay if this bill passes.

FRANK G. CARPENTER.

FROM A MISSIONARY.

The following is from a private letter from Elder Angus K. Nicholson, dated at McComb City, Mississippi, January 15th, 1894:

My journey here and subsequent stay in this village has been marked by many scenes and reflections which have left a deep impression upon my mind. The change in manners and customs and in the scenery with which we are familiar is so wonderful in its completeness as to be scarcely credible to one who has not beheld it. Here the wealth of energy and "push" of the westerner are no longer distinguishable. The people are almost entirely without ambition, and display a dearth of life and industry which must be enervating in the extreme.

The tall and seemingly endless woods which stretch far beyond the vision's farthest sight present a picture which often have I tried to grasp but never yet had realized. Majestic oaks and towering cypresses are to be seen on every hand. Here and there are bogs and marshy regions, from which the giants of the forests rear their sapless forms or spread forth their hollow trunks in mute appeal. Pine trees and oaks rise side by side and seem to run a giant race that one might cap the other's topmost bough. The oak is vanquished. Straight to a height of five score feet the haughty pine tree speeds, then spreads a victor's crown which bristles, green and sharp, like a prodigious porcupine. The beaten oak fights to his last, and then spreads forth his gnarled boughs as if to hide within their shade the deep-laid shame that gnaws within.

But leaving things descriptive, I shall tell you something of my journey. The trip to Chattanooga was, as the society papers would have it, a "most enjoyable affair." Brother Mosley proved himself an intelligent gentleman and desirable companion.

The sun and bleak wastes of Wyoming wore their usual appearance of desolation, which was probably increased by the snow which lay in heaps upon the ground, and the howling of the wind. At Evanston a group of hilarious boys composing a foot-ball team entered the car and at once broke in upon the even tenor of our dreams. One of them accidentally shot off a revolver. The bullet passed through the seat and grazed his knee. Ten minutes later I saw him eating a banana with much gusto.

On the day after our arrival at Chattanooga, we were visited by Elder George A. Smith, whom I have learned to hold in high esteem.

On the following day we visited the National Cemetery, in which 12,956 Union soldiers, who fell during the late war of the rebellion, lie at rest. The entrance to the cemetery is marked by an immense stone gateway. The burial grounds are beautifully planted, and though it is now midwinter, the scene presented is one of sylvan beauty such as I have scarcely seen equalled elsewhere. The white grave stones of the fallen heroes rise clear and bright in the midst of smiling lawns and underneath the shades of peaceful evergreens and red-faced hollies.

Giving way to that atmosphere of solemnity and sadness which seems to hang over the burial grounds of the dead, I wandered aimlessly among the winding paths which intertwine upon the lawn, to mingle art with nature.

While thus engaged, the thought suddenly struck me there might be some one buried there who bore the same name as ourselves. I had not gone more than three steps farther when I deciphered the following inscription: "3674. Neil Nicholson, U. S. C. T." It seems singular that I should find this, which is probably the only gravestone in the cemetery bearing the same name. The leaves which I enclose are from the cemetery trees, and mother will probably be glad to preserve them.

On the day following I visited what is known as Lookout Mountain, which commands a view of the scene where the bloody battle of Missionary Ridge and Lookout occurred. The steep ascent is made by cable cars, which, were the cable to break, would clinch the track and hold fast.

Sixteen hundred feet below winds the majestic Tennessee river, forming the wonderful prodigy known as Moccasin Bend. It is in the exact form of an immense foot. The different positions of Generals Grant, Hooker and other chiefs on the memorable day of battle are all plainly discernible from this height, which, on a day which is clear, commands a view of seven surrounding states. Appearances from this point are extremely deceptive. The Tennessee, which looks to be no more than 200 feet in width, measures, in reality, 1400 feet at the nearest point.

The scene is one of grandeur, and the historic associations which cling to it lend sublimity to the view.

There are many other things, a description of which might interest you, but I have already described at greater length than I intended.

I will return for a moment to my affairs. On the evening of my visit to Lookout Mountain, Brother Smith informed me that it was his desire that I should start at 8:10 p. m. for the state of Mississippi, where, as you know, my brother John is laboring. I had no hand in the matter of choosing a field of labor, but I am fully contented with the result. Mississippi is progressing better than any other conference in the mission.

I reached my destination, McComb City, about 5 o'clock in the evening and hired a conveyance to the house of one Brother Reid. We found that he had moved six miles further on. We attempted the journey, but, meeting with a slight mishap, decided to return to McComb for the night. The next morning I met Brother Reid returning to his former residence. He directed me to the house of one Brother Ward, where I am penning this letter. My health is good and I feel well in the Gospel.

On the 6th we walked twenty miles to the home of a Brother Collins, where we expected to find Brother Rencher and John. I was overjoyed at the prospect of seeing John, and was greatly disappointed that he did not arrive. We returned on Friday to the home of Brother Ward.

We held a meeting yesterday (Sunday) at the home of a Brother Crane, and I tried to lay down the Gospel for ten minutes. I touched upon the universal blessings and responsibilities attending the restoration of the Gospel, and then dwelt upon the powers of the Holy Ghost.

John will probably be here this afternoon. Time seems to pass very slowly. When I have the blessed privilege of seeing him, you can depend upon me to write, for I can realize something of how much you are interested in his welfare. I think I shall have the privilege of traveling with John for a few months. We shall probably go to Copiah county, which is a new field.

Though I have been harassed with doubts and perplexities, I now feel as if I had reached a calm sea and look forward to my labors with pleasure.

Give my love to mother. There is no reason to be worried about me in the least. I shall certainly have a good companion in John. I trust that you will be pleased to learn that circumstances have turned out as they have.

Elders Walker and Blackwell have just arrived. We were not expecting them. Brother Walker and I will start for Collins' on Wednesday, where we expect to find John and Elder Haycock. Elder Walker is now enjoying excellent health and takes the greatest pleasure in his missionary labors.

Park and Boulder county (Colo.) people are protesting against the wholesale waste of timber on government land.

Written for this Paper.

ANAA AND ITS PEOPLE.

TEMARIE ANAA, Nov. 14, 1893.

Supposing, or at least hoping, that a few lines would be of interest to you and your many readers, I take pleasure in writing you as to our labors. People as a rule have little conception of the peculiar customs, habits and occupations of this branch of the House of Israel.

It is many years since this people first heard the Gospel, and comparatively few have heeded its teachings. When the Elders first landed here on the fourth day of May, 1845, Anaa was a flourishing island of some 8,000 inhabitants, the most of whom were of the hard-working class. Deep trenches were thrown up and two cultivated which answered for flour. In fact they accomplished many tasks that the people of this day and generation dare not attempt. Since the introduction of flour, clothing and liquor by the wholesale, they have ceased manufacturing their own cloth, stopped cultivating taro and other vegetation, and adopted foreign grain for sustenance. This has not agreed with them, or God has been displeased with their actions. The result is Anaa has now a population of not more than four hundred.

At one time there were nine cities, while now there are but six, and these are full of empty dwellings and places where houses have been.

What has become of the people? Who can tell? are questions almost unanswerable, but one thing is true, their offspring has decreased. The majority of the people drink heavily and the men not only habituate themselves to the evil, but women are likewise equally prone to drunkenness and dissipation. When a community continually indulges in this kind of work, any sensible man can foresee their future condition, but who can offer them an acceptable remedy? We present the Gospel. Do they receive it? Very few. Still the salvation of every soul is important to God.

There are three religious denominations here, one of which held its conference in this city three weeks ago. At that date the people had a great feast, killing twenty-nine pigs and baking that many sacks of flour. Of course liquor was not distributed among them as meat and bread. But it was nevertheless obtained. When night dawned many were "top heavy" and these made a great deal of noise during the darkness, but never molested us, therefore, we cannot complain.

During the past three months nine baptisms were made. This makes us rejoice and we feel like pressing onward and upward. As a rule our people are sober, good men and women, who seek to obey the Gospel and comply with our teachings.

At the October conference held at Tunhora, Saints from the surrounding islands and the following Elders were in attendance, President Joseph W. Damron, W. A. Seegmiller, Thomas Jones, Charles J. Carson and Thomas L. Woodbury. The report for the past six months showed forty-five baptisms and good prospects for the future. The conference lasted three days. All of the brethren expressed themselves as feeling well and deeply interested in the work. The meeting adjourned for six months to the island of Kanehi.

President Damron has left for Hikuern and Brothers Jones and Larsen are at Tukapoto. These islands have been opened for pearl diving and many people have flocked there. From latest reports there were 1800 people at Hikuern and more coming every day.

This is the wet or rainy season. One day the wind will blow and water pour down in torrents while the next day will probably be calm and so warm you are hardly able to endure it. This kind of weather is unhealthy, causing the natives to continually complain. The missionaries appear to stand it better than the natives.

The chief occupation of the native is manufacturing copra from the coconut. Perhaps the process would be interesting to you.

When I was a boy we were taught that coconut trees were too high for men to climb and monkeys were sent up in their stead. It is not true here, and I don't believe there is a tree too tall for these people to ascend. If the tree is perpendicular the natives tie some coconut leaves together, making a figure eight of them; putting both feet through the ciphers he ascends the tree in a scientific manner, holding by his hands and drawing his feet under, or placing them close to his hands; he then holds by his feet, straightens his body and repeats the process. If the tree be on an angle or slanting he walks up on all fours. The nut is encompassed by a tough, fibrous husk about an inch thick, which is used for the manufacture of ropes, fuel, etc. The husk is torn asunder by a man thrusting it upon a pointed stick and prying it from the nut. When this process is completed the nut is broken in half and contents dried by the sun. When dry the meat is shaken from the shell and sacked up ready for shipping. Thousands of tons are made here annually.

The coconut is the most useful tree known. People build houses complete with the wood, husks and leaves. The nut is eaten by man and beast. The top of the tree is tender and when cooked resembles cabbage. The husk is extensively used for manufacturing harness, mattresses, etc., besides making the strongest of rope, and the leaves are good for making baskets, roofs, mats, hats, and a dozen other useful articles.

I will close by asking the reader a question. Can you show me a tree and its fruit that a man, his family and animals can subsist on? Is there another tree that you can build ships and houses with, manufacture your clothing, ropes, mats, baskets and beds, and, last of all, give unto man so delightful a beverage on a warm day, as the milk from a young coconut?

THOMAS L. WOODBURY.

While cleaning out a pantry at Leadville, Colo., Molly McNulty, a domestic, tasted the contents of each old bottle she came to, finally taking a mouthful of carbolic acid. Her mouth and throat were horribly burned, and it was thought for a time that she could not recover, but prompt medical aid brought her through. She is young and did not know the meaning of a skull and crossbones.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

SAN RAFAEL, Cal., Jan. 15.—A frightful railroad accident occurred at Austin creek bridge, on the North Pacific railroad, between Duncan's Mills and Cazadero. An engine, with eight men on board, was crossing a bridge last evening when the bridge gave way and the engine crashed down a distance of forty feet into the stream below. The stream was greatly swelled by heavy rains and all the men drowned excepting Conductor Brown, who preserved his life by jumping.

FOUNTAIN CITY, Ind., Jan. 15.—Rev. Benjamin Baldwin, a Methodist minister, now in Troy, O., has confessed to the murder, three years ago, of William Henshaw, killed while returning home from an evening call on a young lady of whom the minister was a suitor. It is asserted that the father of the girl favored the minister's suit, and with him concocted the plan to murder the young man.

BERLIN, Jan. 15.—A duel with pistols was fought today between Dr. Roewer and Herr Delacroix, a military outfitter. The doctor killed Delacroix and surrendered to the police.

ROME, Jan. 16.—Most sensational news is received from Carrara. The inhabitants were terrified by the sound of heavy firing in the hills near Tirano, where a band of six hundred, to a thousand anarchists were reported fighting a pitched battle with a force of infantry and gendarmes, sent against them.

It is believed the loss of life is great as the infantry, according to the report, has been firing volley after volley at the anarchists. The latter are said to have taken a strong position behind the rocks in the hills and to make a desperate resistance.

It is reported finally that they were defeated and fled, leaving the dead and wounded on the field.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 16.—Governor Fishback has received information of a reign of terror which exists among the colored people of the town Black Rock. Black Rock is the center of a large manufacturing and lumber district and, owing to the present financial stringency, a number of men are out of employment. Among them are a number of lawless characters who have organized for the purpose of driving all negroes out of town. They have succeeded in intimidating many factory owners. So far they have discharged all negroes in their employ.

Last Friday night the following notice was posted in a public place: "All negroes must leave the town inside of ten days or take what follows, and all who have houses rented to them must fire them or we will fire the houses inside of ten days. Negroes, don't let this slip your mind." This was followed by verbal and written notices to mill and factory men that they must discharge every negro in their employ or their property will be burned. The mills and factories are guarded and the streets patrolled by men armed with Winchester. The other side claim they have outside help and serious trouble seems imminent. The colored population, numbering about 300, are completely cowed. About one-third have left and others will go if the mill should follow the advice of the white-caps.

PARIS, Jan. 16.—The daughter of the condemned anarchist Vaillant has disappeared. It is believed she has been kidnapped by some would-be guardian.

KANSAS CITY, Jan. 17.—A crowd of 2,000 men collected outside Turner hall last night to take vengeance on the A. P. A. lecturer, J. V. McNamara, the ex-priest of Rome. The speaker appeared on the platform with a rifle and revolver, stating that there was murder in the air. After the lecture he and his wife, both armed, entered a carriage. Some one threw a stone and McNamara fired into the crowd and a running fight for several blocks, in which many shots were exchanged, ensued. They finally reached the hotel in safety.

DANVILLE, Pa., Jan. 17.—Five masked outlaws made a raid on the postoffice at an early hour this morning. A policeman saw a masked man crouching in the doorway and drew a revolver, but before he could fire the stranger slipped around the corner. The policeman gave alarm and in a few minutes was reinforced by two other officers. They ran to the postoffice in time to meet a mysterious stranger emerging from the door, followed by a companion. They blew the whistle and commenced firing at the police, who dodged behind lamp posts and returned the fire. Ten shots were exchanged, when the robbers were reinforced by three more men, every one well armed, and a continuous round of firing commenced. Numerous citizens appeared armed with weapons of every description, and the firing became so warm that the robbers concluded to retreat to the river bank. Van Gilder, who led the pursuers, suddenly threw up his hands and fell, shot through the lungs. About the same time two robbers fell. Their comrades grabbed them, and, during the momentary halt of the pursuers, managed to reach Susquehanna river. A row boat was secured and the three outlaws, after laying their three wounded companions at the bottom of the boat, commenced sculling in the direction of the Northumberland side.

The pursuers were now a force of a hundred infuriated men. They secured boats and an exciting chase commenced, revolvers and rifles cracking at every turn, but no one was hit. The outlaws succeeded in reaching the opposite shore before the, foremost boat was half way across, and when the pursuers touched land the robbers had reached the mountains.

In the event of their being surprised another desperate battle will occur. The sheriff declares he will bring back the slayers of Van Gilder, dead or alive.

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—The Dutch steamer, Amsterdam, from Rotterdam, arrived this morning and reports a succession of gales and tremendous seas. On Sunday last during the storm of northwest gales she sighted what was supposed to be the American fishing schooner, Maggie E. Wells, of Gloucester, Mass., in a sinking condition and with the boats stove. In response to signals for assistance, Chief Officer J. Meyers, Second Boat-swain Eriqhart, Carpenter A. J. Oudyn, Steerage Steward A. Boas, Quartermaster F. G. Eichhorn, Seaman A. Vanleet and Seaman A. Vanderweilt volunteered to man a boat to rescue the crew of the sinking vessel numbering about 14. When the boat neared the unfortunate vessel, it capsized in a squall and all perished except Vanderweilt. Another crew volunteered, but the captain decided it was too hazardous and decided to wait till the gale had subsided. The steamer kept in the neighborhood, but in the heavy squall and snowstorm lost sight of the schooner and was thereafter unable to find any trace of her. It is believed she foundered with all on board.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 18.—The steamer China arrived this morning from Hong Kong and Yokohama. She brings an account of the appalling accident at Kingpo a month ago, resulting in the death of between two and three thousand women and children at the annual theatrical performance in honor of the gods, being given in a temple. About four hundred people were present, smoking and drinking tea. A boy threw a lighted cigarette into a heap of straw at the foot of the stair case leading to the upper story, where women and children were. The stair was quickly ablaze and there was a rush to escape. Many were trampled to death. Others were killed by jumping from the windows. The whole building was soon ablaze and those unable to escape were burned alive.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 18.—The steamer China brings advices from Singapore. Harold M. Sewall, of Maine, formerly United States consul general at Samoa, and wife, who were married in San Francisco six months ago and are on their honeymoon trip around the world, took passage at Minila for Singapore on the steamer Normandy. On December 6 in the China sea, the steamer was wrecked. Sewall and wife were the only passengers in the mate's boat who with a part of the crew finally landed on an island, drenched and shoeless, after drifting about all night and suffering intensely. They were cared for by the natives and later the controller of Rio, a Dutch settlement, sent the government's steamer and took them to Singapore.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Jan. 18.—A gang of five robbers, supposed to be the same men who robbed the fast train on the Burlington road here a week ago held up a Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs train, at Roy's branch two miles north of this city early this morning. The holdup was on the same spot where last September a gang undertook to hold up a train but found that the railroad officials had information of the fact and had made up a dummy train loaded with officers, the result of which was that two robbers were killed in the fight that ensued. Last night's robbery was conducted in an unusual way. A torpedo was exploded under the train and a red light swung before it. When the train stopped the engineer and fireman were covered with revolvers and marched back to the express car, a part of the gang in the meanwhile guarding the rest of the train and firing occasional shots with a warning to the passengers not to put their heads out of the windows. When demanded the express messenger opened the car door and while one of the robbers covered the engineer and fireman, the express messenger and baggage man with revolvers, making them stand in a line with hands up inside the car, others went through the safe. This work completed, the trainmen were marched to the middle of the train and the robbers disappeared in the willows beside the track. The train was brought back to this city and the authorities notified. No attempt was made to rob the passengers or mail car. The express messenger says the robbers got nothing to speak of as there was very little in the way of money or valuables in the safe.

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—In the case of H. H. Porter against ex-Senator D. M. Sabin, Minnesota, the jury this morning came into court and reported a verdict, giving Porter something over $100,000 damages in the dispute growing out of their business relations. Sabin's lawyer asked to have the jury polled. This was done and two of the jurors declared it not their verdict. They were sent back to the jury room, but later they came in saying they could not agree and were discharged.

APPLETON, Wis., Jan. 18.—Major Sims, an A. P. A. lecturer, was mobbed at Kaukauna last night. The meeting was broken up by a mob of two thousand collected outside, who stoned the building. Sims and a party of guards barricaded the doors and resisted the assaults of the mob. The sheriff was sent for by Mayor Reuter, who also telegraphed for the militia, which Governor Peck refused to send, unless asked for by the sheriff. The sheriff partly dispersed the mob, and with the help of local officers escorted Sims to his boarding place. The mob followed, throwing stones. Sims was knocked senseless by a stone, but the officers fought the mob off and got him safely to the lodgings, when the crowd dispersed. Sims was escorted to the train this morning by men armed with Winchesters and left for Ashland.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 18.—The Senate, in executive session, today made public the rejection of Hon. W. B. Hornblower to be associate justice of the Supreme court of the United States, and J. Scott Harrison to be surveyor of customs at Kansas City, Mo., and also the following confirmations: S. A. Merritt, chief Justice of the Supreme court of the Territory of Utah; A. C. Curtin, associate justice of the supreme court of Oklahoma.

Receivers of public moneys—Frank Mills, Evanston, Wyo.; Frank Harris, at Salt Lake City, Utah.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 19.—A special from Birmingham, Ala., says a posse has been organized by Sheriff Dexter of Blocton. He had a terrible battle at Goethe, ten miles from Pratt city, early this morning, with four of a gang of seven convicts who escaped from the Tennessee Coal and Iron company's stockades at Pratt City last night. Sheriff Dexter was killed and Jim Davis, one of the convicts, fatally wounded. Two other convicts were captured. The posse is in pursuit of the rest. The convicts had procured a lot of dynamite with which they blew down the iron gates to the mines and kept the guards at bay. One cartridge struck near Guard Patton and exploding inflicted fatal wounds. The convicts also used two shotguns and a pistol mysteriously secured, to advantage.

DES MOINES, Ia., Jan. 19.—General Master Workman Sovereign was seen by an Associated Press representative here tonight regarding the proposed injunction proceedings against Secretary Carlisle.

"It may be a good deal like a mouse tackling a lion," he said, "but we are going to do it."

A petition praying for an injunction to restrain Secretary Carlisle of the United States treasury from issuing bonds in the sum of $50,000,000, or in any other amount, Sovereign said, would be drawn up here by Judge Cole, sworn to by Sovereign and sent to Washington, to be filed in the United States circuit court of the District of Columbia the first of next week.

Tonight Sovereign sent a dispatch to Senator Allen of Nebraska, asking him to make an argument in the case before the court in Washington.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 20.—A special to the Republic from Dallas, Tex., says: This morning a cyclone, attended with thunder and lightning and rain, traversed Dallas and East Dallas, demolishing or damaging over one hundred buildings and killing Royal Seate, an orphan boy. A son of J. Mixter, sleeping with Seate, was seriously injured.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 20.—The worst snowstorm for twenty years is reported from points in the northern part of the state. At Redding the snow is drifting badly, causing a number of accidents. The river is rising rapidly, and the low lying country is threatened with inundation.

BERLIN, Jan. 20.—[Copyrighted by the Associated Press.]—A comparatively insignificant riot near Friedrichsrain Thursday morning has been magnified, owing to the brutality of the police, into an important affair, which will probably be brought up in the reichstag and lead to a very bitter debate. The socialists, and even the better class of workmen, are greatly excited at the apparently cruel manner in which the meeting at Lip's brewery was dispersed by the police, who, moreover, are accused of perfidy in a ruse said to have been employed in order to convert what was originally a legal into an illegal meeting.

According to the law, people intending to hold a public meeting must notify the police twenty-four hours previous to the time fixed for the assembly, and a written permit to hold it must be shown the policemen in charge of the meeting. In this case, due notice was given and the permit issued, but Rodrian, an anarchist metal worker, to whom the permit was given, was arrested on his way to the meeting with the permit in his pocket.

As no permit could be shown at the meeting, the unemployed gathered there were ordered to disperse. The people began to leave the hall quickly, but the police pressed on them without warrant, and a stubborn resistance was soon raised. The police, mounted and on foot, beat the crowd with the flat of their sabers and clubs, and the workmen finally broke and fled, followed by the police, clubbing them furiously, and attacking innocent pedestrians and spectators, continuing the onslaught unreasonably long, and actually following people into their houses, beating them.

The people finally barricaded their houses and fled to the cellars to escape police brutality. Men and women, old and young, were equally subject to the fierce onslaught of the police. Many were beaten until they sunk helpless to the ground.

DENVER, Colo., Jan. 21.—Thomas Holmes Tod, whose sentence for killing Patsy Desmond in Ogden, Utah, expired but a few months ago, today shot Antonio Vandett in a quarrel over a woman. One shot entered Vandett's face, inflicting a probably fatal wound.

Tod was sent up from Ogden on June 30, 1890, five years for killing Pat Desmond, the charge being voluntary manslaughter. He was pardoned by Governor West on September 27, 1893.

GUTHRIE, Okla., Jan. 21.—A dynamite bomb, charged with enough dynamite to blow up a block of buildings, was found in the office of the townsite board yesterday. It was a piece of lead pipe, three feet long. A party of newspaper men took the deadly instrument to the suburbs of the town and built a fire over it. It exploded, tearing a hole in the ground big enough to bury a horse, and the shock was felt for miles. It is believed the bomb was intended for Governor Renfrew and School Land Commissioner Blincoe, as it was found in close proximity to the executive buildings.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 21.—Rev. De Witt Talmage, at the close of his sermon at the tabernacle tonight, announced that he intend to resign, his resignation to go into effect on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his taking charge of the tabernacle. No intimation had been given by Dr. Talmage, and so the announcement was a surprise to the congregation.

KANSAS CITY, Jan. 22.—Advice from Monett, Mo., are to the effect that a negro rapist was burned at the stake near Verona last evening.

This is doubtless the outcome of the crime reported in the dispatches last night from Aurora, Mo., which is near Verona.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The President today sent to the Senate the nomination of W. H. Peckham, New York, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, the place for which Hornblower was rejected. Peckham is president of the State Bar association and an "anti Snapper."

The report comes from Lander, Wyoming, of a very rich pocket in the Burr mine at Lewiston. About forty tons of rock have been taken out which will run $500 to $5000 per ton. This is the richest pocket ever discovered in the Burr. Development work will be pushed all winter and the ore milled in the spring.

AMONG THE CHOCTAWS.

Crossing the hills southeast of Manard, we journeyed to Garfield, now a lone ranch, the store and town having been moved to Bragge, a railroad station on the Iron Mountain. Elders Hooper, Jeppson and Jensen accompanied their Salt Lake visitor part of the way on his southern trip, the latter two to bring the team back from Smith's, where we expected to meet Brother S. G. Mabry from Briartown. Our kind friend Uncle Hendricks furnished us the little blue horses, and by courtesy of Mr. Anderson we obtained a wagon.

For some distance we traveled through bottom land and finally climbed a rough hill about one hundred feet high, all the time winding through the dense woods. On the hill we crossed an almost level plateau covered with the various kinds of hardwood native to the sunny south for at least eight miles—a wilderness, undisturbed by hill or prairie and hardly a human being. Vegetation grows everywhere, scarcely a spot of land, a rock or place where trees, grass and moss do not grow.

We have now crossed the plateau and are descending along the hillside and on the bottom land we cross Green Leaf, a stream which in high water season becomes a small river, now almost dry. On the bottom lands and near the streams grows the beautiful sycamore tree, distinguished by its white bark and its height, as this famous beauty reaches above ordinary trees of the country. On the lowland is found a great variety of underbrush and shrubbery. In the summer may be found the dewberry, blackberry, raspberry, mayberry and other wild fruits, grapes in abundance, and in the fall a variety of tree fruits, such as cherry, plum, persimmons, pecan, hickory and walnut and many kinds of acorns. Among these groves hogs get their living from the mass that falls from the trees, and on the roots of vegetation. Here and there is a small farm made by the Indians, by clearing away the underbrush and young timber, allowing the large trees to stand—notched around, those mammoth oaks remain as monuments of what had once been a forest.

We did not stop at Garfield. The changed condition shed an unwelcome influence over the place. Our old infidel friends, Messrs. Cookston and Madden, merchants, have moved away and Mrs. DeArman recently died, the only occupants now being a family of white renters.

A gradual ascent, climbing a hill, and again we are rolling across another timbered plateau. After several miles travel we commence to descend by way of a rocky gulch, and following a stream for some distance, we are at Linder's. About a mile and a half from the pretty, clear Illinois river, and just below a rugged bluff on the rocky bank of a stream, in an enclosure well shaded by native cedars and walnut trees and the creeping vines of honeysuckle and ivy as green as spring, is the cosy little home of our friends the Linder family.

Word was sent out, and soon after our arrival the renters on the farm assembled and we held an evening meeting. The Linder farms, like many others on the bottom land, are separate by several miles from any others.

More like spring than the 28th of December, the sun rose in splendor. The air was warm, and as we again climbed the mountain, viewing the verdure of grass and trees, the cedars and moss, and listening to the singing of birds, warmed through by the balmy atmosphere, we almost forgot we were celebrating the holidays of 1898. Once again on this elevated plateau, we see far in the distance a continuation of just such rolling young mountains and valleys—a river, a small stream, a level tract of land, a valley with its rich fertile farms, an abrupt cliff, a low mountain, a plain. Descending from our elevated road we drink at the Sulphur Springs on the Webber's Falls and the Tabiquah road, and are soon amid the immense forests of the Arkansas bottoms.

The Iron Mountain is a branch of the Missouri Pacific railroad, connecting Arkansas and Kansas. Following along the river they pass our friend Smith's, about three miles above Webber's Falls. Mr. Smith is a white Cherokee, who does not speak a word of English, while his good little dark-skinned Indian wife is well educated in the English language and attends to all the business. Owning over 200 acres of cultivated land, these Cherokee landlords have several families of white renters working for them.

Opening their house to the Elders, the people assemble and these kind Indians, like many others, assist in placing before the people the everlasting Gospel. It seems almost providential—the openings that are being made in this territory for white people who have not had opportunities elsewhere. It will be remembered that Arkansas has passed laws prohibiting the preaching of the Gospel in their land, and many Missourians and others, not otherwise instructed in the plan of salvation, listen to the Elders of Israel in the land of the Lamanites.

Brother S. G. Mabry met us at Smith's. We parted with our brethren and proceeded southward. The Arkansas river is fully a half mile wide when the water is up. We forded it near the falls—simply a ripple in the water. On the north side is Illinois station and on the south Webber Falls.

Uncle Seab's young mule team being good travelers, by the time the sun was hiding behind the western forest we greeted our friends at our Briartown Indian house.

Along the Arkansas river bottoms may be seen a specimen of the poor suffering ignorant humanity, mainly from that state, which for fear of her people becoming contaminated have prohibited the Mormon Elders from preaching in that country. In this extensive cotton and corn growing country may be seen some of the poorest and most miserable wretches on earth, dwelling as they do in poor tenement log huts. Whole families may be seen sick. Men, women and children work in the field, dragging a sack under their arm in the dead of winter. These poor half-clad human beings are picking cotton, at scarcely a living price. All through the country are these poor white renters. They travel from place to place, rent a farm, make a crop of corn, load up and off again. Whole families are born on the road. Meeting a wagonload of these emigrants, as they may justly be called, we ask them where they came from and where they are going. "We-uns came from Arkansas, and we-uns gwyne to Texas;" and so they go, poor exiles! While standing at Sulphur Springs, Chickasaw nation, on the road to and from these places, the writer's feelings were moved with compassion on seeing a poor widow with several children, all the way from a grown daughter to an infant, the wagon drawn by a pair of ponies heavily laden, driven by a small boy. The remainder of the family were dragging themselves through the mud—half clad, their sunken faces showing the signs of poverty and sickness.

Briartown is built on a sandy elevation on the Canadian river where it is the dividing line between the Cherokee and Choctaw nation. A mile and a half from the river and the same distance from the postoffice, where the business part of the town is, on a round hill among the orchard trees, is the home of Brother S. G. Mabry; a double log house with a shed room and porch on one side, nicely whitewashed and neat and clean—this is our southern Cherokee home. During our brief stay, including New Year's day, we held several meetings.

A mile and a half drive brings us through the bottom land to the north fork of the Canadian river, ferried across and passing through Whitefield, a Choctaw town, we are soon out on the open prairie. In our one horse buggy, kindly furnished by our Mabry Saints, we are rolled over a vast, unoccupied country, now in the woods, crossing a hill, through a stream and over the bottom lands, next lost on the prairie. In this unsurveyed country people make roads to suit their convenience; and not knowing just where we are going, we often get lost. Finding our way again, we cross a sandy hillside and come to Enterprise, another small town. In this nation people locate in towns more than is the case in Cherokee country.

North of here is Younger Bend on the river, a place where the notorious Younger brothers held forth during the period of their depredations throughout the country. About twelve miles up the river is Standing Rock, a remarkable monument of ancient or early settlers' life in this country. In the middle of the river stands a rock fully eighty feet high with almost perpendicular sides; by aid of a glass peculiar and quaint inscriptions can be seen fifty feet above the water, seemingly painted on with some kind of cement paint. The river bed must have been washed much deeper since these inscriptions were placed here, presumably by Spaniards.

Leaving Enterprise we are directed across the prairie to our friends about a mile distant. Meeting two men well mounted on fine American horses, we inquired for Mr. Enoch Flack. Believing us to be insurance agents, deputy marshals or something beside Gospel message carriers, after a moment's hesitation one of these distinguished colored gentlemen answered: "I am that man, what do you want?" "We are Mormon Elders, and having heard of your courtesy to our Elders we did not want to pass by without calling upon you." "Drive up to the house," Mr. Flack said kindly; "make yourselves comfortable. The boys will take care of your horse, I will be back soon."

Between two rugged bluffs, where two low mountains come near together, to the north among the timber, the south opening out on a beautiful prairie, is a model southern home. On an elevation surrounded by a neat lumber fence, is a double frame house, a porch the full length of the building; and overlooking the prairie, also follows an opening between the two main structures leading back to the wing on the north. The well and smoke-house to the rear. The old-fashioned ashes leach and a partition fence are between the house and a seven-acre orchard, while to the east is the garden patch. A little to the west of the house across a narrow street or lane, is a model barn, its cotton bin, corn cribs, haylofts and cotton seed and grain departments. No halters for the horses and mules, the condition of which shows kind treatment and good care; each has an individual stall, separated by sliding lattice doors, where the stock have their freedom. Wagons stand under shed; boxes are bolted with ropes and pulley; the well and water-troughs, feed racks, fence and stock yards, all express plainness than word, that people who have been well trained live here. Agreeable to the custom of the sunny south, the sitting room, parlor and bedroom are all in one. Two rooms of this kind constitute the family room and visitors' apartments. At the end of the porch is a washing bench, and on a hook suspended from the porch ceiling by ropes is a cedar bucket with fresh water, and on a rack a clean towel. A huge oak fire is made on the hearth and the visitors are made comfortable in their cosy room. On a pole near the well, with a rope attached, is an engine bell. Supper time arrives—the bell rings—we are ushered into the dining room just back of the family apartment.

Mrs. Flack, part Creek Indian, having served her time, became an accomplished cook for a southern planter's home. Being provided with all the necessities, we were seated to a sumptuous repast. Before the war our colored friend, Mr. Flack, now about fifty years old, was the property of a distinguished Choctaw family. Thirty years ago he commenced for himself with 50 cents. Today he is worth $50,000. On his 950 acres of cultivated land they make homes for thirty-six white renters and families.

Offering his services and dining room, a meeting was arranged for our return.

A twenty-five miles' ride over a continuation of just such country as in the fifteen Choctaw miles just described, except more mountainous, as the Choctaw country is rough and broken, we descend the hillside and follow Mathilda creek down a way, and pass between two mountains, reaching the Massey settlement. Beyond the creek which flows towards the Canadian, the mountains in the southeast rise to considerable height for this country. North and extending south to Gaines creek is a high bald hill. To the foot and extending westward is the prairie. Following eastward where the open country is lost in the woods, at the foot of a little frame cottage, like other homes of the Elders in this country. Grandma Griffiths' house showed marks of refinement—separate apartments, papered walls, painted wood-work and ceiling, everything inside and out neat and clean. Surrounding this commodious cottage and in keeping with its neatness is the barn, the garden patch, orchard and farm, leach, mill and smoke house. Before the war Elder Higginson, who recently died in Santaquin, Utah, and Elder Cook, in their journeyings southwest from their Cherokee home on Grand river, were kindly entertained by two Methodist friends. Mr. Massey of this family had his ankle crushed. The Elders took the case in hand and in a short time, through administration, their friend was as sound as ever. Mr. and Mrs. Massey being very much interested in the Gospel, would have joined the Church, but the Choctaws became alarmed lest their people should be injured by Mormon teachings, and invited the Elders to leave. About five years ago while Elders Haslam and Barber were meandering their way eastward in the Choctaw nation, they met a Mrs. Hendrickson. This lady informed the Elders that her mother was a believer in Mormonism, and, she directing them, they traveled sixty miles and found Mrs. Massey. (Mr. Massey died a short time after the Elders were driven from their home, a sincere believer in the Gospel.) Some months later the two women, Mrs. Hendrickson and her again widowed mother, our Choctaw Grandma Griffiths, met at Cache, the daughter's house, and were baptized.

Yours in the Gospel,
ANDREW KIMBALL.

CHOCTAW CONFERENCE.

Conference commenced with fast meeting on Thursday, January 4th, at the house of Grandma Griffiths, Massey settlement, Choctaw nation. Children and all participated in the fast, and the Spirit of the Lord was enjoyed. Testimonies were numerous. Brother Nolley, a sufferer for many years with a wind (a swelling in the throat), had been healed by the power of God. His wife also had been miraculously healed of a long standing ailment in her head. Sister Wilkerson had been troubled with the chills all her life, was now well and strong. Grandma Griffiths, seventy years of age, and after a life with the Indian customs of coffee and tobacco and excessive eating of hog meat, lives the Word of Wisdom strictly, following the example of her "Brother Mormons," as she calls the Elders. She is pure and innocent as a child and is greatly blessed with the gift of prophecy. Their Choctaw sister, Grandma, as every one calls her, is loved by all. She must surely have nothing but righteous desires, for she realizes the fulfillment of almost every request. Her son, opposed to our people, sold his mother some property joining hers, and on this she managed to get a family of Saints, only just settled before our arrival.

Thursday evening Priests James

Nolley and his son were ordained Elders, the former placed in charge of the branch and the latter the Sunday School. After our organization was completed, Grandma related having told a nephew about a year before that she saw a church established on her place. At that time she was a lone Saint in the surrounding country.

Friday opened up like a beautiful spring morning. After our morning service, in which several spoke, there were general instructions given by Elder Harper and myself. At 12 o'clock we returned to a beautiful spot of ground between the two houses where Grandma, according to her previous impressions, this morning designated the spot for the building of a meeting house. I laid the cornerstone of our prospective meeting house, and kneeling on it, and encircled by the Saints, the spot was dedicated to the Lord. Songs of praise and expressions of gratitude were mingled with prophetic declarations concerning the growth and development of the mission.

Previous to our evening meeting Mrs. Hendrickson, daughter of our esteemed veteran, arrived, having traveled over sixty miles to get to her mother while her "Brother Mormons" were there, fulfilling another expressed wish of Grandma.

Through the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit the Choctaw conference was a spiritual success, and will no doubt result in a great amount of good to the Indian Territory mission. Our next October conference will be held here, when we hope to dedicate to the Lord another meeting house.

Respectfully,
ANDREW KIMBALL.

Written for this Paper.

A GREAT COAL FIELD.

RED CANYON, Wyo. Jan. 15, 1894.—The coalfield of Almy, if considered from a commercial point of view, when in full working order is one of the leading industries of the Bear River valley and finds employment for some six hundred workmen, in addition to a large number of persons outside the mining camps, who are more or less dependent on this business center for a livelihood.

The mineral lies on the east side of the valley and runs north and south from No. 5, a distance of eight miles and eastward about five miles, which gives an area of about 25,000 acres of what is generally considered our best coal. From the experiments made in different parts of the measure it is questionable whether the coal on the north side of the limit above named can be classified as good marketable coal; although it can be used for common if not for general purposes.

The overlying measures are about 7-20 feet thick and they are of a loose fragmentary nature, and contain no solid formation suitable for building purposes, but the underlying measures, in close proximity to the coal, contain a fine thin measure of clay of superior quality and it is to this clay the agent must look as the principal cause of the gradual upheaval of the floor of the entries and rooms of the mines.

The mines are opened from the surface on the side of the hills by means of open drifts, levels or slopes, and the mineral is got on the Sillar and Stall principle. The angle of inclination varies much—being greater at the south than at the north limit, say from 2 degrees n. to 20 degree s., and the center of the best coal is at No. 5 section and onward thence to the eastern limit.

Within the marginal limits above described we have an average workable seam of about 12 feet thick, which is slightly interstratified with "bastard fire clay" and a common dark slate-shale clay, neither of which can be used for public good, and both make much against the interest of the work and more or less deteriorate the marketable value of the mineral. In consequence of this the thickness of the seam may be limited to ten feet of clean coal. Ten feet of clean coal with a specific gravity of 1.38 would give 15,192.52 tons per acre; less one-tenth an allowance made for loss in working and one-tenth for fine dust would leave a marketable quantity of 12,305.98 tons per acre, and if that product be multiplied by 25,600, it would equal the entire amount of 315,083,088 tons within the area of 40 square miles—the limit above stated.

It is generally considered that good screen coal is worth two-thirds the value of the best coal, and when the best and finer coals are sold in a mixed state, or in what is commonly understood as unscreened coal, a medium price is obtained. There are some seams that contain two or three different qualities of coal, which invariably cost a little more for separation than for clean coal only, of house, steam and forge.

The Almy coal seam gives off two gases from the measures it contains, namely methyle hydrid ( $H_4 C_2$ ) and carbonic dioxide ( $C. O_2$ ). The former is given off from the upper section and the latter from the lower section. In addition to these, carbonic oxide and ethylene are given off from an exploded charge of gunpowder. The latter is also given off from a squeeze or pressure, and is the most subtle gaseous fluid of the mine. Its density is 0.979 and it is always found near the floor of the mine. Where fine reposed coal and other loose combustible debris are stored away in the rooms and old workings the gas is sure to find an abiding place, and if not dislodged by a complete cleaning out of the waste material, there will be a fire as sure as there is a mine. This gas is one of the hydro-carbons ( $H_4 C_2$ ) and forms 4-6 per cent of coal gas, to which the gas is indebted for its great amount of luminosity. But it is not a supporter of combustion, and although it will explode or burn when brought in contact with a naked light, there is little or no danger of a large gas explosion in the mine by it. Gas explosions in mines arise from a combustion of methyle hydride and common air in the proportion of one of the former to eight or ten of the latter; and when the proportions are one of the former to fifteen of the latter the proportions are then beyond the explosive point, and still then fit to breathe. The ventilation is considered to be in a proper sanitary condition in the mine when the proportions are one of gas to thirty of air. More anon.

R. R. H.

P. S.—The C. P. order was countermanded and the mines resume work on the 25th inst. instead of the 11th. Twenty-three more workmen have gone from here—some to Castle Gate and the others to Colorado and Rock Springs, and two more for Scotland. All leave their families here.

A LAND OF MYSTERY.

One of the most peculiar and interesting places on the American continent says the San Francisco Chronicle, is just being opened up. The section lies across the diagonal line that forms the southern boundary of the State of Nevada, spreading into California and reaching almost to the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. The old '49ers passed through this section during the California gold excitement. Many perished from thirst, and the remains of their wagons, such as the tires and other iron parts, may be found strewn about the valleys.

Near Resting Springs a man by the name of Lee has a ranch, an Indian wife and a family of eight children. Not far from there is what is believed to be the famous Gunsight mine. One of the pioneers, in passing through that section, picked up a piece of lead, almost pure, and made a sight for his gun with it.

It was so rich that when he told the story in civilization prospectors started out to locate it. The fact of the similarity of all the valleys led many astray and they perished from thirst. His description of the spot applied to so many spots that no one has ever been able to accurately locate the mine, but the present owners believe they have found it.

The valley adjoining that which is the route of the Nevada Southern is called Pahump. It is described by the Denver Republican as the principal one of them all for gold and silver and lead mines. Up in the valley, which is one of those dry, barrens and gulches between two perpendicular walls of rock, is the Mesquite stamp mill. On one side is the Keystone gold mines, from which $90,000 has been extracted. Up at the head of the valley is the Montgomery gold district. Several miles above the mill is the Pahump springs, where a hardy pioneer has settled in a beautiful oasis and reared a family.

Those who have visited the family say that away off there, imprisoned by canyon walls and sandy deserts, is the most beautiful woman in the west. She is one of nature's queens, and her fame for beauty is spreading quite rapidly since grim civilization placed his foot on the Pahump valley.

The Pahump valley has not been noted for its civilization. A band of renegade Indians—a mixture of the Mjoaves, Chingwayras and Plutes, all of which inhabit that country—have settled in it. They once had a chief, and when he died his son was the candidate for chieftanship. The tribe did not want him and would not elect him, so they went without a head, but not for long. Tecopa stepped into the job and has since held it, and is looked up to as the chief. Chief Tecopa's attire consists of a plug hat and an old striped shirt. Once in a while he wears trousers, but very seldom.

When Mr. Blake went there Chief

Tecopa said that he owned all that country, and that his consent was necessary before any railroads could be built. His consent could be bought for a plug hat and a red striped shirt. These being promised over the pipe, Tecopa allowed the white chief to proceed with his railroad.

SOCIAL AMENITIES.

AMERICAN FORK, Jan. 17. — The Old Folks' annual party came off in the Theater hall here today, (Jan. 17th) and, as usual, was a very creditable and pleasant affair. Dinner was served at noon, and judging from the quantity and quality of the good things provided, the rumor of hard times had better keep quiet and give us a rest, as everything necessary was up to its former standard of excellence.

After dinner the afternoon was spent in rendering an impromptu program of entertainment, consisting of speech-making, songs, recitations, and other means of amusement befitting the occasion. An interval in the proceedings was used for the purpose of distributing fruits, candies, cake and other good things, so that all might be made to feel as comfortable and happy as possible.

The committees and all concerned deserve the highest praise and commendation for their prompt and efficient services.

We were pleased to have with us our old time friends Geo. Goddard, William C. Dunbar, C. R. Savage and Nelson A. Empey, with their wives and friends, whose pleasing humor and comforting words lent variety and zest to the exercises of the hour. All passed off splendidly, and our old friends retired smiling all over, amid showers of kind wishes and fond congratulations.

A party in the evening, composed of committees, widows, missionaries' wives, our friends from Salt Lake and other worthy ones, concluded the exercises of the day. And thus another bright mark has been made on Time's vast record by the kind-hearted citizens of American Fork, of which they have great cause to be proud and thankful.

J. C.

A SURPRISE ON THE BISHOP.

WOODLAND WARD, Summit county, Jan. 4, 1893.—The sisters of the Relief society, with their husbands, met at the home of Bishop Ephraim Lambert today to surprise him. They followed him home from fast meeting with their baskets of picnic. After dinner the rest of the day was spent in speeches, songs and recitations. After an enjoyable time all returned home, hoping to have many such good times. L. B.

The Nebo Salt company of Nephi has written the following letter, which is self-explanatory, to the local Mid-winter Fair committee:

"Your letter to hand and in reply will say that a space 2x4 will not hold us. We would, therefore, prefer to stay at home. If we cannot go to the Fair and be seen we do not go at all. We have the best salt and the best building stone in the world, and the idea of placing it in a space 2x4 is an insult to the industry."

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Boulder, Colo., coal camps are shipping out more coal than ever before.

Confidence is expressed that Grand Junction, Colo., will be exporting oil before the close of 1894.

At Golden, Colo., Mrs. M. E. Harris of the Hotel La Veta fell heirless last week to $80,000 in Pennsylvania.

Reports from Salida, Colo., confirm the finding of a tellurium vein near that town, in Chaffee county, which yields $800 gold per ton.

Around Phoenix, Ariz., all the canals are running bank full and the prospect for big crops, it is said, was never brighter.

At Casper, Wyo., they haul oil from Salt creek in 8-horse teams for shipment of the East. A pipe line is being constructed.

The Crow Indians in Montana, north of the railroad at Billings, have commenced to raid the cattle herds, and the cowboys are arming and organizing for reprisals.

In Lander county, Nevada, the Big creek antimony mines have been bonded for $35,000. The antimony vein is about fifty feet wide.

They are still surveying the boundary between Arizona and Mexico. It makes money circulate, says an exchange.

Grand Valley, Colo., farmers, by the purchase of the Grand Valley canal, increase the value of their ranches 50 per cent.

Snow has fallen on the mountains around the San Luis valley to unusual depth. Water for irrigation will be very plentiful this year, it is stated.

At Mount Vista, Colo., the Farmers' mill is about to be absorbed by the millers' combine. Stock is being sold there at $15 on the $100.

On A balance creek, Gunnison county, Colorado, Chester Mobley wrestled with a trapped mountain lion last week and barely escaped with his life.

Silver Plume, Colo., is amused by the visits of two large mountain lions which playfully prowled about the main street at night. Thus far they have done no damage.

Cotopaxi, a few miles above Canon City, Colo., has got a little boom on. A contract has been let for 500 tons a month of iron ore and 100 tons monthly of quartz.

Montrose, Colo., is becoming a great cattle shipping point. Last week it shipped to the eastern market twenty-five car loads containing 375 head of fat cattle.

From Greeley and Eaton, Colo., a party of enterprising colonists have gone to colonize rich potato lands north of Cheyenne. It means business for Wyoming.

Las Animas county, Colorado, through its Chronicle, proudly boasts that all the hills and valleys of Las Animas county are enlivened by moving herds of fat cattle.

At Franktown, Douglas county, Colorado, a pack of ten gaunt, hungry wolves were seen on the main street early one morning. Wolves are very bold all over the state this winter.

Santa Fe enterprise manifests itself in an immense irrigation scheme proposed by a Chicago company, whereby the lands of the Santa Fe valley will all be placed under irrigation.

In Crook county, Wyoming, the skeleton of an Indian squaw was found hidden in the boughs of a large pine tree. The Indians formerly disposed of their dead by depositing them in trees.

San Diego, Cal., has solved the problem of idleness and furnishes work to every able-bodied man upon her streets. Those who refuse to work and continue to beg are promptly transferred to the chain gang.

At Reno, Nev., the hay shipments to California average 250 cars a month and 2,000 dairy cows are being fed at that point, besides about 20,000 sheep and 5,000 cattle. A scarcity of hay is anticipated in Nevada.

Hunters in the Yellowstone park have been captured by soldiers while killing elk on that reservation. Their horses and outfits were confiscated and they have been confined in the guard house at Fort Yellowstone.

A valuable saddle horse fell down the shaft of the American Nettle mine near Ouray last week, a distance of sixty feet, and was not killed. It then tumbled down thirty feet further and had to be shot to finish its existence.

The agricultural products of Nevada in 1893 were: Wheat, 190,151 bushels; barley, 280,179 bushels; potatoes, 305,189 bushels; hay, 285,978 tons; honey, 39,000 pounds; oats, 179,688 bushels. Wheat averaged 45 bushels to the acre.

Gloom begins to strike the cattle men of Bent county, Colorado. Their cattle are fat on last year's grass and fine sunny weather, but they wonder where the moisture is coming from to make early grass grow in the spring.

South Park ranchmen in the vicinity of Fairplay, Colo., are reveling in good markets for fat cattle in the New Balfour mines. Plenty of snow, lots of hay and sunshine are making the South Park people feel jolly.

At Fruita, in the Grand valley, Colo., the farmers raise seventy bushels of oats to the acre, then pasture the ground and raise sixty-five bushels of oats from volunteer growth the next year. Irrigation does it, adds an exchange.

Times will soon be booming, at least in the Potrero, very shortly, says the San Francisco Chronicle. The California Sugar Refinery, employing between 800 and 900 men, which has been idle for six weeks, has started up with a full force.

The San Luis valley, Colo., people feel sure the Rock Island road is coming in there by way of Trinidad from Liberal, Kan. The widening of the gauge of the Rio Grande over Veta pass is said to be a sign of a railroad contest.

The last of the 200 families of Hollanders who were imported into San Luis valley and swindled by real estate sharks have left Alamosa for Orange City, Iowa. They had been swindled out of all they brought with them from Holland.

Early on Sunday morning a heavy windstorm occurred in Portland, Or., and vicinity, the wind reaching a velocity of fifty miles an hour. A number of chimneys and signs were blown down and windows broken, though no serious damage resulted.

A monster icicle, thirty feet high and four feet thick, has been frozen at Truckee by C. F. McGlashen, an editor, by training a spray of water to one point. The curious piece of ice is to be sent to the Midwinter Fair for exhibition.

The Grand Valley, Colo., between Red Cliff and Grand Junction, nearly every ranchman complains of having lost stock this winter by cattle thieves. There is a hot war going on between cattle and horse men and alleged stock thieves.

At Casper, Wyo., the asbestos industry has received encouragement by the closing of a contract by the McConnell Asbestos Mining company to sink a tunnel 200 feet deep into the asbestos vein. The shipping product from Casper will begin this year.

Don Pedro Simpson of Albuquerque reports the discovery at San Isidro, N. M., of a soda spring which petrifies every substance placed in it. He brought back with him oysters, rabbits, acorns, pine burrs and other articles all encrusted with stone.

At Durango, Colorado, one butcher paid $20,000 in 1893 for hogs raised by La Plata county ranchmen. The same butcher says, while he pays more for Colorado fed pork than the Kansas article, he is obliged to import it by railroad.

Captain Ray of the Shoshone and Arapahoe agency near Fort Washakie, Wyo., is constructing with Indian labor an immense irrigation reservoir by means of a ditch from Little Wind river to a dry lake on high lands. It will be used to irrigate Indian lands.

Wages have been voluntarily raised at the Rudy-Anthraxite coal mine in Gunnison county, Colo., from 60 to 75 cents a ton. The miners are agreeably surprised. The company found that it pays better to employ experienced miners than to use cheaper labor.

John Smith, an Englishman, committed to the insane asylum at Stockton, Cal., labors under the delusion that he is being pursued by Piute Indians, who intend to burn him at the stake. He also imagines that he is to be butchered and sold for beef.

General G. Andrade of San Francisco and parties representing French and Scotch capitalists have gone to the mouth of the Colorado river for the purpose of selecting a place where they can locate a colony of French grape-growers and wine-makers of 1000 families.

The hatching of eggs at the state hatchery, says the Laramie (Wyo.) Republican, has commenced and quite a number of the little trout have already kicked out of their shells. Over 1,000,000 fish will be turned out, with which to stock the various streams in the state, during the present year.

The school children of San Francisco are going to feed the hungry men at the park. Each school will take a contribution one day in the week and see that there is a good substantial luncheon ready at noon to feed the men who have been standing in line waiting for a chance to get work.

Five hundred elk and several herds of deer and antelope, followed by a pack of wolves, invaded Bonanza, Wyo., last week. The deep snow drove them out of the mountains where feed is covered up. They were so tame that people shot them down by wholesale.

In Fremont and Uinta counties Wyo., over 5,000 elk and as many antelope are said to have been recklessly slaughtered and shipped from Idaho to the eastern markets by "pot hunters." The extermination of game in Wyoming will soon be completed, adds an exchange.

Wyoming people have discovered a sure and deadly bait for wolves. Blood from slaughtered animals impregnated with strychnine while it is warm, and then allowed to coagulate, will attract wolves from a distance. They will eat the poisoned blood with avidity, while avoiding a poisoned carcass.

A ten-weeks-old infant died on Friday night, at Seattle, Wash., from chloroform, taken under most peculiar circumstances. The mother was suffering from neuralgia, and took a small vial of Chloroform to bed. During the night the child got hold of it and drank enough to kill itself.

At Gunnison, Colo., the Equal Suffrage league is very active. The ladies meet every Friday and discuss political economy, civil government and practical politics. The ladies throughout the state are manifesting an eager desire to prepare themselves for the ballot.

In Southern Nevada, not far from Death valley, the handsomest woman in the West has been discovered by a party of railroad surveyors. She is the daughter of an extensive ranch owner who has built his home far from all settlements and in an almost inaccessible valley, surrounded by deserts.

Jack Williams, an employe of the Capital Electric company, while fixing a wire at Sacramento, which had fouled an iron awning, came in contact with a live wire and had his hand terribly burned. He could not free himself, and two men had to pull him loose. It was some time before he regained consciousness.

Wyoming furnishes all the wonders this year, says the Denver News. The alkali or soda lakes near Casper, and the petroleum of that region makes excellent soap. A soap factory and an axle grease establishment will be established. This petroleum soap is said to be as yellow as gold and of excellent quality.

Two De Beque, Colo., citizens, while visiting a deserted cabin in the Blue-stone valley last week, found a dying burro and a young colt shut up in the cabin. The pair had taken refuge in the cabin during a storm and the door blew shut. The mother kept her offspring alive while dying itself of starvation.

Todd M. Pettigrew has been placed in the penitentiary of Wyoming to begin a sentence of five years, having been convicted in the United States court at Cheyenne. He pleaded guilty to the charge of embezzlement of $4,600 of the funds of the Sundance National bank of which he was cashier up to the time of its failure last summer.

Frank Armstrong, an actor, has been arrested at San Francisco on a warrant from Oakland charging him with grand larceny. The complainant is Anita Fallo, an actress. She alleges that while she and Armstrong were taking the leading parts in a play, Armstrong relieved her of a valuable diamond pin. In one act she said it became necessary for him to put his arms around her neck and embrace her affectionately. While doing this she says he embraced the opportunity to steal her pin. The diamond was found in an Oakland pawnshop, where Armstrong had left it as security for a loan.

John Schrader, John Felderman and Oscar Johnson, residents of Sterling county, Colo., have been arrested for the murder of one Nelson last spring. Nelson, at that time, just before his death, was charged by Johnson with shooting certain stock belonging to him. He was arrested and acquitted. Nelson that night went home, about twenty miles from Sterling, in high spirits over his recent acquittal. Next morning he was found hanging in his stable, with his knees on the ground, with all indications of having been there many hours. He left home early the evening before to visit a neighbor, having never reached the neighbor nor having again returned home.

An immense tumor was removed this week from Mrs. John Crow of this city, says the San Francisco Chronicle. The tumor, which was of the ovarian cystic order, weighed forty-eight and one-half pounds. It is said that it was the biggest affair of the kind in the medical annals of this coast, and the success that attended the operation makes it notable. She has five children, the youngest of whom is three years old. One of her children is a cripple and her husband has been afflicted with the loss of an eye. She was the support of the family until eight months ago, when the tumor had grown to such proportions that she could hardly move. She had become very thin. The tumor had displaced and injured the other organs. Since the removal of the tumor she has developed a great appetite. The doctor said she would have died in a month had the growth not been cut out.

Hereafter (says the Helena, Montana, Independent) juries in the district court will be specially instructed by the judges not to gamble on a verdict. The case in point is that of Ralph Wells vs Jacob Darby, in which the court has granted a motion for a new trial. The grounds were, so far as the secrets of the jury room are known, simply these: When the jury retired they found for plaintiff, and then set about agreeing on how much should be allowed. Eleven of the jurors wrote on slips of paper the amount they thought the plaintiff should get. The agreement was that these slips should be shaken up in a hat, and the first three drawn out should be averaged up, and the average should be the verdict. The scheme was carried out; three slips were drawn from the hat, the amounts on them added together, the result divided by three and the quotient was the verdict. When these facts came to the knowledge of the losing side in the case a motion was made for a new trial, and on this showing of facts it was granted. It is the intention of the judges hereafter in instructing juries to warn them against referring any matter before them to the question of chance.

Mrs. John Rush, who resided at Fruitvale, Cal., died at her home in terrible agony a few days ago. The cause is a peculiar one and is exciting a good deal of interest among the local physicians. Mrs. Rush, a strong and healthy woman was using her sewing machine, when the needle caught one of her fingers and went into the flesh, causing a slight wound. A few hours later she was taken very ill, and kept growing worse, so a physician was sent for. But when he arrived Mrs. Rush was a victim of tetanus. In less than an hour after the accident she was in convulsions. The tetanus in her case took the form which is reported by the physicians as opisthotonos. After the first few convulsions the woman was in a distressing condition. The muscles in the arms, neck and body would contract until she bent backward like a bow, and then they would suddenly relax. This continued for a couple of hours. Nothing could be done to ease her suffering, and the convulsions continued for twelve hours. She passed away while in one of the convulsions. The case was a peculiar one in many respects. The wound on the finger was little more than a prick and did not pain at all when it was inflicted, and the physician arrived too late to stay the disease. Mrs. Rush died in terrible agony. The physicians who have looked into the case cannot account for the suddenness of the attack.

"HANDCART" INCIDENT.

In the News of the 12th inst., in a letter from John Crook, relating to Jonathan Clegg and family crossing the Plains in Captain Edward Martin's handcart company, in 1856, occurs the following:

"They were snowbound at Independence Rock and rationed to four pounds of flour per day commissary for 100 persons, and heard that fearful cry for bread."

The foregoing sentence is somewhat mixed. Martin's company was not snowbound at Independence Rock, but further eastward, on the North Platte, where the road left the river for the west; and again further westward, at Devil's Gate and at a ravine by the Sweetwater, three miles more or less on this side of Devil's Gate. The rations of flour came down to four ounces per head per day. The weather was very cold. Snow on the ground all the way from the Platte to this city. Independence Rock is a few miles beyond Devil's Gate and the Sweetwater bridge.

J. JACQUES.

Crested Butte, Colo., ladies are holding regular weekly schools of instruction to prepare themselves for the use of the ballot.

THE SCANDINAVIAN FATHERLAND.

Prepared from Special Cablegrams.

SWEDEN.

Editor Otto Sporsen, publisher of the Vexio-Bladet, died at Vexio.

Dr. Erik Nystrom and wife, the two well-known missionaries, have departed for Algiers, Africa.

Mr. J. F. Hondius of Næs, has been engaged as a teacher in "Sloyd" by the government of the Oranje Free State in Africa.

C. J. Barell, the most prominent merchant in the city of Kalmar died at the age of 80 years. He leaves a very large fortune.

Per Ny, of Vestanede, Norderon celebrated his 102nd birthday. He is still in good health. Ny has lived during the reign of seven Swedish kings.

Swedish granite is undoubtedly the best granite to be found in Europe. The great markets for the Swedish granite industry are in Germany, Denmark and England.

Chief engineer Andree, the Swedish aeronaut, has decided to cross the Atlantic in a balloon some time next summer. Preparations are already being made for the construction of the giant airship.

The social position of a lady teacher in Sweden—be it as a governess or a school mistress—is a highly esteemed one. Daughters of higher officers in public service or otherwise belonging to the best Swedish families devote themselves to this noble calling.

Prince Oscar Bernadotte, the second son of King Oscar, has always been very religious. During the last months he has made it a custom to attend the meetings of the Salvation Army once every week. On that account he has been given the surname "The Salvation Prince."

Mr. O'Neil, the American consul to Stockholm, who arrived there some time ago, is taking lessons in Swedish. He has already made himself very popular among the merchants of Stockholm. Hon. W. W. Thomas, the minister of the U. S. has assisted him in every way possible in forming valuable acquaintances.

The Norwegian consular question will probably come up before the Swedish Riksdag which was opened Jan. 8, S. A. Hedin, the most prominent politician in Sweden, and the standard bearer of the Left, will argue the cause of Norway, but surely in vain, as the majority of the members of the congress and all the members of the senate are anti-Norwegians.

The journalist, who makes the most money in Sweden is Alfred Hedenstjerna, editor of the Smalands-Posten. The Smalands-Posten, although a mere local paper, has a very large circulation on account of the editor's humorous articles. Mr. Hedenstjerna, who is better known by his pseudonym of "Sigurd," may be properly styled the Mark Twain of Sweden.

The industrial paper Norden some time ago arranged a prize competition.

Three prizes were to be given to the persons, who could best answer—in a newspaper article—the following questions: "What means ought to be taken in order to get emigrants returning from America, able and willing to remain in Sweden." One of the winners of the contest is Dr. Hugo Joll, Minneapolis, Minn.

The greatest dramatic actress of Sweden is Else Jacobson, afterwards Mrs. Hvasser. She left the stage in 1888, but will probably again appear before the public. Mrs. Hvasser's parts amount to nearly a couple of hundred, the types she has created were of various kinds, and the greater number of splendid effect. Amongst classical pieces may be mentioned, Mary Stuart, Ophelia, Desdemona, Clara, the Marquise, of Villemers; etc.

The greatest length of Sweden 1,600 kilometers, (about 1000 miles) falls on a line, which in the north stretches a good way into the arctic zone, and in the south reaches below the northeastern extremity of Russia, while the greatest breadth about 250 miles, falls on that parallel on which Haparanda, the most northern town of Sweden, is situated. The whole circumference, exclusive of the many fjords, which run up into the land, is 2,860 miles.

The whole number of physicians in Sweden amounts to about 900, or one to 5,500 inhabitants. The proportion, however, varies considerably for different parts of the country. Most favored in this regard are, of course, such localities where the medical schools are situated, for instance Stockholm, where the proportion between the number of physicians and the number of inhabitants is as 1:1,400, and the provinces of Upsala and Malmö whilst the ratio in several other provinces varies between 1:10,000 and 1:11,000.

The woods in Sweden consist chiefly of pine and spruce, which grow throughout the entire kingdom, either as pure forest or mixed, and provide the great bulk of the timber export. The pine appears unmixed on the gravel hills and more extensive heaths; the spruce on moist clayey soil and on brush; the larch, which in suitable situations attains a good size, has, of late, been largely imported. The birch occurs either as pure forest or in company with pines, firs and aspens. The beech is found only in the utmost southern part of Sweden. The oak appears in groves and parks. The island Visingo has a large oak plantation of 1000 acres belonging to the state. The ask, elm, maple, lime and elder are not so very numerous. The aspen occurs over the entire country and gives a much sought for wood for the Sweden safety matches.

NORWAY.

Gunnar Berg, the famous Norwegian painter, died at Berlin.

Four people were killed by large snow slides at Lofoten.

General Booth, of Salvation army fame, spent the holidays in Christiania.

An association for mutual benefit has been organized by the telegraph operators of Christiania.

More than one thousand cases of influenza were reported from Christiania the other day.

Colonel John Mellbye has been appointed major-general and chief of the Christianssand infantry.

Bjornstjerne Bjornson has left for Rome, where he will probably stay for some months.

The value of Norway's import from Sweden is estimated at $5,000,000, while the export is about $9,000,000.

Two thousand cases of influenza were reported from Christiania during the week December 24-31.

Five thousand francs in gold, which were deposited at the post office of Christiania some time ago have been stolen.

Jonas Lie's famous novel "Niobe," has been translated into German, and will soon be published by a Berlin book dealer.

The most northern railroad in the world is the Sulitelma Stock Company's railroad, which is running east from Bodo in Norway.

A Bjornson craze is reported from London. Lectures on Bjornson are being held, and several of his dramas are to be given at the theaters.

Matrimonial frequency is nearly as low in Norway as it is in Sweden. The number of marriages annually contracted per 1,000 inhabitants is about 6.84.

The most important articles of import are materials for spinning (principally cotton and wool), colonial produce minerals (coal and salt) and diverse industrial products.

At a low calculation founded on statistics of emigration the Norwegian population in the United States—counting the children born thereof in America—must be about 500,000 persons.

Editor Friele, who has been editor in chief of the Christiania Morgenbladet for 36½ years, severed his connection with the paper Jan. 1. His successor is Dr. Vogt, one of the assistant editors.

Crime seems to be decreasing in Norway, as in certain other countries, at all events as regard more criminal offenses. The annual number of committals for felony in 1893 3.60 per 10,000 inhabitants.

The government has refused to acknowledge the sale of the country-mansion Hafsund to an English syndicate, because such sale would give the syndicate full control of the land around the outlet of the Glommen river.

The higher education for boys and girls is differently organized in Norway. That of the boys is taken in hand by the State and is free of cost whereas the girls' education is a private undertaking. Private schools, however, sometimes obtain state and municipal grants.

J. Wolff, the Norwegian violinist, had recently the honor of appearing before Queen Victoria, who spoke very highly of his ability and presented him with a magnificent diamond stud after the performance. The King of Portugal has appointed Mr. Wolff a Knight of the Royal Order of Christ.

DENMARK.

A. Thorsen Schovelin, the celebrated Danish landscape painter, is dead.

Five fishermen were drowned off Hanstholm the other day.

A new daily paper named Tiden (The Times) has been started in Copenhagen.

C. C. Molley, the famous leader of the Tivoli orchestra, died at Copenhagen.

Rev. Lars Kjelderup, one of the ablest preachers in Denmark, died at Copenhagen at the age of 84 years.

The Casino Theater at Copenhagen has been sold to Director P. Rasmussen. The price paid was 400,000 kroner.

The schooner Albert, Captain Peterson, from Kalmar, Sweden, was wrecked at Ravnegrundet. Several of the crew were drowned.

Miss Munch, a Danish lady teacher of Aarhus, is making a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, where she will pray in the tomb of Jesus.

Large preparations are already being made for the celebration of the silver wedding of the Danish crown prince and crown princess, which will take place next summer.

Aarhus has the distinguished honor of being the first city in Denmark where, by mutual agreement between employers and employes, a general court of arbitration for all difficulties between the two has been established.

The first volume of the biography of Griffenfeld, the great Danish statesman, by A. D. Jorgensen, is out. Mr. Jorgensen has made exhaustive researches in preparing his work, and it bids fair to be of lasting value in the historical literature of Denmark.

Johannes Gelert, the Chicago sculptor, who is visiting in Denmark, was received by King Christian at a special audience at the Amalienborg castle, Copenhagen. His majesty conversed with Mr. Gelert for half an hour, and expressed himself very highly of the United States and its people.

Not until the age class 35-40 does Denmark show the same proportion of married men as Teutonic and Romanic Europe has, as a general rule. As to the women, the figures are still more unfavorable. The number of marriages annually contracted per 1000 inhabitants was 6.92 in 1892.

The Danish Prison society, the general aim of which is said to aid ex-convicts in different ways, have been in operation just 50 years. The first society was organized December 1, 1843. The total membership of the society is about 2,000.

About 80 ministers from North Slesvig, in convention assembled, elected three of their own numbers to go to Berlin and try to obtain permission from the Emperor of Germany to introduce two hours of Danish instruction in religion per week in the public schools of North Slesvig.

The rich brewer Jacobson, recently died at Copenhagen, donated the bulk of his fortune to the Danish Academy of Science. The interest on this donation will amount to 2,200,000 crowns ($594,000) a year, a sum almost unheard of in Denmark. All the money will be used for scientific purposes. It seems that Mr. Jacobson, although dead, can give the American multi-millionaire Rockefeller both cards and spades as to the donation business and still come out victorious.

THE SITUATION AT ALMY.

RED CANYON, Uinta, Wyo., Jan. 19. —The right to guess still exists or continues at Almy, and many theories are still floating in the air with regard to the Almy situation.

On Tuesday, the 18th inst., all the workmen belonging to the No. 6 C. P. mine, who had any money to draw off the company after their store bill was paid, were paid up in full, and were given to understand that their services would not be required in future, and the store credit was closed against all such persons.

Again, we hear that one mine will reopen and resume full work after this month is out. And again, we learn that when the No. 7 U. P. re-opens, only a small number of the old hands will be taken back to the mine.

Now, Mr. Editor, as the right of public opinion still exists, allow me to prod to the depth of this disease, in the hope that the true cause may be found.

The U. P. has imposed an additional advance on the freight of fifty cents per ton from Almy to Ogden, and a further claim is made on the C. P. that they pay all the wages of the workmen employed by the U. P. between Almy and Evanston who are engaged in the freight or employed on the track. We believe that this last demand has not yet been accepted and are inclined to think that it forms one part of the trouble. But we are satisfied that there is something else behind the screen. Let us draw aside the veil, that we may see the object clear.

What about this half dollar extra on the freight? Who is to pay it? Will the C. P. hand over to the U. P. $200 per day out of their own purse, or will they not rather hand it over by reducing the workmen's wages. Let us pause for the answer till February 1.

Well, Mr. Editor, we thought that the shutting down of the Union Pacific No. 7 mine was bad enough on the workmen of Almy, but to be branded with the "incendiary stamp" is rather more than was expected, and we think a little more than they deserve. Is there anything done by the late Union Pacific workmen that is to be a bar to their re-engagement at the Almy mine? We do not know of any act they have committed to justify such a step, and we hope that no such step will be taken. But the whisper is loud enough to catch our ear, that all workmen who have taken part in the different committees, such as petitioning the Union Pacific company, first, to give every workman a free pass to other mining centers; second, to leave a sufficient number of loaded cars with coals to set the families of the workmen through the winter; second, to grant a supply of provisions to aid the families while their bread-winners are from them hunting work. We have always understood that a gentleman who is identified with a business firm is ready to welcome an honorable committee to canvass wrong and establish right, and thereby keep the business steady-going; but in this case it seems otherwise.

But is there not something else in the distance? Let us see; a reduction will be needed on the working cost of the mine when reopened, and perhaps these men might not feel inclined to accept it and to prevent trouble it may suit the U. P. to prefer a darker colored class of workmen who would work for less money.

R. R. H.

OBITUARY NOTES.

JOHN JACKLIN.

At Mill Creek, Salt Lake county, Utah, John Jacklin died of old age January 13th, 1894. He was born August 6th, 1819, at Whaddon, Cambridgeshire, England, where he embraced the Gospel and was baptized June 11, 1846.

Brother Jacklin spent a great deal of his time in preaching the Gospel in his native land previous to emigrating to Utah in 1875. He was a kind and loving husband and father, and died a faithful Latter-day Saint. He leaves a wife and five children, two of whom are in England.

The funeral services were held at the Mill Creek ward house January 15th. The speakers were Bishops James C. Hamilton and John Neff and Elders John Cook Skidmore and O. P. Lemmon. [Com.]

Millennial Star please copy.

JAMES HAWKINS.

Elder James Hawkins, who died at Huntsville, Utah, Jan. 15, 1894, was the son of John and Elizabeth Kenyon Hawkins, born March 17, 1818, in Hudsonville, Yorkshire, England; joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in August, 1839; labored as presiding Elder in the Stockport branch, and emigrated to Nauvoo in April, 1846; he came from there to Utah in the year 1847, in the Jeddediah M. Grant's company; in the year 1850 was called on a mission in company with Elder George Q. Cannon and others to go to the Sandwich Islands, they being the first sent. He returned in 1855 and was recalled in 1857, but was confronted by Johnson's army and had to return. He was called again in 1869, and returned in 1874. He was one of the first settlers in Huntsville and acted as secretary in the Sunday school for a number of years. He took a lively interest in all the organizations and in the building up of the Kingdom of God as long as his health would permit, and he was faithful unto the end, leaving his wife and many relations and friends to mourn his loss. —[Com.]

ANNA K. SMOOT.

Provo, Jan. 21, 1894. —After an illness of five months, Sister Anna K. Smoot, wife of President A. O. Smoot, and president of the Primary Associations of Utah county, died on the 20th inst.

Deceased was born on the 13th of December, 1833, in the southern part of Norway, in the district of Onsu, near the town of Fredrickstad; her parents were well-to-do farmer folk, and had five other children. They were conscientious Lutherans and their daughter was brought up in that faith. As a child she was remarkably industrious, and at the age of twelve had become an expert in weaving and many other branches of industry, as well as skilled in the fine needle work considered essential in a gentleman's education. Mentally she kept pace with the activity of her hands, and was especially zealous in religious studies. At an age when most girls are considered children she stood at the head of a class of ninety young ladies who were preparing themselves for church members. Even at that time the strong practical common sense that has been one of her marked characteristics through life enabled her to see the inconsistency of her parents' faith.

It was in the summer of 1859 that she first heard the Gospel preached. The advent of the Elders caused great exulta-ment and the lady went to hear them preach partly out of curiosity and partly with the firm belief that she could refute their doctrine and convince them of their errors.

At the close of the services, which agitated her strangely, she had a talk with the presiding officer, Brother Dorius. He was able to show her that in all things it was like the doctrine of Christ, and while greatly troubled, she was too true and noble a spirit to deny the truth. In answer to prayer and by the grace of God she received the truth and was baptized on the 27th of April, 1853.

For the two years and a half that she remained in Norway, she was subject to the greatest trials that can be conceived—summoned before magistrates, beaten and abused by her parents, stoned and reviled in the streets. She is one of those who literally gave up home, country, parents, bright prospects, friends and treasure dearest to a good woman's heart, for the truth's sake.

In the summer of 1854, with her brother, Nels Arnereson, his wife and two children, she left Norway for the land of America; their ultimate destination being Salt Lake City. After a journey of great hardships, during which her brother's wife and children died, they arrived at the "City of the Saints." Here she and her brother separated, and after being engaged in different kinds of work she was at last employed in the family of A. O. Smoot, where she was loved and respected by the entire family, and afterward married Brother Smoot. She became the mother of seven children, four girls and three boys, all of whom are members of the Church, and at present all residing in Provo City.

Sister Smoot has worked in many departments of the Church, as teacher and in the Relief society. From 1883 to 1884 she acted as counselor to the Stake president of the Primaries, Zina Y. Williams, having been called to that position from the local presidency, where she had served from the first organization, a matter of six years. At a reorganization in 1884, Anna K. Smoot was set apart as Stake superintendent and for ten years she and her two counselors have worked in this capacity without change. One of the latest efforts that marked her ability and originality was the crystal globe with its silver fittings and onyx table that contained one grain of sand from each member of the associations, and was exhibited at the World's Fair, and is to be placed in the Salt Lake Temple on its return. In all her duties as either wife or mother, she was exemplary, and she died as she had lived, honored and respected. Her children were all present with her at the last, and her last words were "Peace, peace be with you all."

The funeral will take place on Tuesday, at 1 o'clock, at the Stake Tabernacle. The present intention is that the Primary children shall take a very prominent part at the funeral, and although it is dead of winter, they will each contribute a flower to the decorations, as a tribute of love.—[Com.]

EDMUND ELLSWORTH

Departed this life at Show Low, Apache county, Arizona, Dec. 29, 1893, of heart failure, after an illness of six weeks.

His life and history having been closely identified with that of the Church, a short sketch taken from his journal will perhaps be interesting.

"I, Edmund Ellsworth, am the son of Jonathan and Sarah Ellsworth, and was born July 1st, 1819, in Paris, Oneida county, New York. At the time of my birth my parents owned and occupied the whole tract of land upon which is now built the village of Paris. My father's origin I know but little of, any farther than that his father was an American and fought under General Washington in several battles. At the time of my birth my father was away rafting lumber down the St. Lawrence river, and while absent he died with yellow fever.

"My mother married Abram Hendrickson.

"When I was 19 years old I went down the Mississippi river to work. In the winter of 1839-40 I received a letter from my mother, stating that herself and family had joined the Church called Latter-day Saints. I immediately repaired home in the hope of delivering my mother from this supposed delusion. I took all pains to collect evidence against this people, but instead of obtaining anything against them I found much in their favor. When I arrived home I learned the truth of the Gospel, and in February, 1841, I was baptized by Luman Heath. The next September I started for Nauvoo, in company with Marcellus Bates and wife, where I arrived October 7th, and joined the Elders' quorum. I went immediately to work on the Temple quarry, where I worked the most of the winter. On the 10th of July, 1842, I married Elizabeth, eldest child of President Young. I was re-baptized after my arrival in Nauvoo by the Prophet Joseph Smith, also reconfirmed by him. In August I was ordained a Seventy under the hands of President Jos. Young.

"In the spring of 1844 I was called with about twenty others to pioneer and explore the Rocky mountains, but was recalled to go to the state of New York, in which place I labored until the death of the Prophet.

"I was present at the meeting where the mantle of Joseph fell upon Brigham Young with its power and spirit.

"President Young told us that the Temple must be built. We went to work as one in poverty. We watched, we worked, we prayed. When the Fourth quorum of Seventies was organized I was one of them. In the winter of 1848 we crossed the river en route for the mountains. When at Garden Grove, I was sent back to Nauvoo with a span of horses and carriage to trade them for oxen and wagon. President Young sent for many things needed in camp in case I could get them. I was greatly blessed in obtaining everything he sent for, and brought his wife Harriet Cook to the camp. This was at Winter Quarters. As winter set in I was sent in charge of Presidents Young and Kimball's cattle over 100 miles up the river to a man by the name of Lathrop, who took charge of the stock. I was one of the four men who started the first brass band in the Church; the names of the others were William Pitt, James Smithies and James Standing.

"In the early spring I was called to go with the pioneers to the Rocky mountains. We were thoroughly instructed to humble ourselves and go as men of God, that the blessings of the Lord might attend us. By the time we reached the upper crossing of the Platte the stream had swollen so that we were obliged to make a ferry boat. Before we were all over, the emigrants for Oregon began to arrive. President Young appointed ten of us to remain and ferry them over, promising us that we should share equally with those who went ahead to the valley. We arrived in the valley on the 12th of October.

"I was connected with General Wells in quelling the Indian troubles in Provo valley and was wounded in a battle with them. In the fall of this year our eldest daughter, Charlotte, was burned to death. In the spring of 1854 I was called on a mission to England, where I labored with a prayerful heart, and was released to return home in the spring of 1856. I received a letter from President Young requiring me to take charge of the first handcart company across the plains. We arrived in Salt Lake City on the 26th of September, with as few deaths as usual with wagons.

"Soon after my arrival I was elected alderman in the city council and major of the 2nd battalion of Infantry, Nauvoo Legion, which offices I held, both civil and military, until I moved to Heber county in 1866.

"In 1880 I moved two of my families to Show Low, Apache county, Arizona. In December, 1885, I was arrested for polygamy, taken to Prescott and bound in $2,000 bonds to appear at the next June term of court to answer to the charge. June 1st found me at Prescott. Court sat with Judge Howard on the bench. My counsel advised me to plead guilty to the third count of the indictment—unlawful cohabitation. This I did and was sentenced to pay $300 within twenty-four hours or go to Yuma prison for sixty days. The latter I did. I found Yuma the hottest place I ever was in. My health was very poor, yet God by His Spirit was with me. On the 1st of August I was released, went to Mesa and found two of my sons in waiting to take me home, where we arrived in safety. In 1886 I moved to Mesa City."

Brother Ellsworth moved back to Show Low in 1892. He attended the dedication of the great Temple at Salt Lake City in 1893. He leaves a numerous posterity behind, being the father of forty-two children, thirty-two of whom are now living, seventeen boys and fifteen girls; also eighty-seven grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren.

M. J. WEST.

THE DEAD.

Peaceful be their Rest.

ANDERSON.—In Salt Lake City, January 19, of pneumonia, Maud Lucille, daughter of James and Eliza Anderson; aged 1 year and 14 days.

CROWTHER.—In Salt Lake City, January 21st, of general debility, Sarah Dugard, widow of the late George H. Crowther, in the 83rd year of her age.

Logan Journal, please copy.

COON.—At Pleasant Green Ward, Jan. 15, 1894, of old age, Elizabeth Yarbrough Coon, wife of the late Abraham Coon. Deceased was born in Tennessee, Dec. 22, 1806. She died as she had lived a faithful Latter-day Saint.

ADAMS.—At Salt Lake City, January 22nd, Ada Adams, daughter of T. H. and Mary Robinson, and wife of Joseph S. Adams. Deceased was a faithful Latter-day Saint and a true wife and mother. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn her death.

BRUNT.—On Sunday, Jan. 14, 1894, at Holy Cross hospital of this city, of emphysema and the shock following the operation, Wm. John Brunt, aged 21 years, 4 months and 24 days. He was the son of George and Elizabeth Brunt, of Idaho Falls, Idaho. Funeral services were held at the residence of W. J. Burnett, No. 227 1st street, at 2 p. m., Tuesday, Jan. 16.

WALKER.—At Lewistown, Fremont county, Idaho, January 16, 1894, Diadama Walker, wife of Welby H. Walker, aged 29 years. Six days previously the deceased gave birth to a child which died one day after birth.

She was a kind wife, a loving mother and a faithful Latter-day Saint. She leaves a husband and four small children and many relatives and friends to mourn her departure.

WILLIAMS.—At Samaria, Idaho, Monday, Jan. 8, of liver complaint and general debility, Mary, wife of William W. Williams. Deceased was born June 16, 1832, in South Wales, where she joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints while in her youth. With her husband she emigrated to the United States in 1854 and to Utah in 1861.

Her husband has been known by many as a stone mason on both Salt Lake and Logan temples, while she was respected and honored by all her acquaintances for her devotion to the needy and suffering. Sixty well-laden vehicles forming the funeral cortege on a cold winter's day gave evidence of the general respect felt for her. She was the mother of twelve children, five of whom, with numerous grand children, survive her.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

Truth and Liberty.

No. 7.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, FEBRUARY 3, 1894.

VOL. XLVIII.

THE POWER OF FAITH.

Discourse Delivered at the Sixty-fourth Semi-Annual Conference, of the Church, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday Afternoon, October 8th, 1893, by

PREST. WILFORD WOODRUFF.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I have never attended a conference since I have been a member of this Church—now nearly sixty years—at which I have refused, when called upon by the proper authority and the Spirit of God, to speak and to bear my testimony according to the light that I had in me, and I disliked to pass over this conference without saying something. I have been in poor condition for public speaking, having had a severe cold upon my lungs during the past week, which has prevented me from doing almost any kind of business.

I have been deeply interested in the testimonies of the servants of God who have addressed us during this conference. They have laid before us many great truths. My mind rests upon the subject of faith. Faith is the first principle of the Gospel. What is faith? Paul, in writing to the Hebrews, undertakes to explain it. He says that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen;" and to prove this he goes on to tell what different men accomplished through faith. (See xi chap. of Hebrews.) I look upon faith as one of the most important principles that God ever revealed to man. Here we have four temples in these mountains, and hundreds of people are laboring in them. Who for? Both for the living and the dead. Why do they labor for the dead? Have they ever seen the resurrection of the dead? No, except by vision or revelation. But they have faith in it, and as an evidence of that faith they perform this work. They look forward to the resurrection and eternal judgment, to the celestial kingdom and the great blessings which God has revealed for the salvation and exaltation of the children of men. They do this by faith, and it is by this power that they have accomplished what they have during the last sixty years. By faith this tabernacle has been built, these temples have been reared, and these people have been gathered from the nations of the earth. Thousands of Elders have been called, not from colleges, but from the various occupations of life, and sent forth into the world to preach the Gospel without money and without price. Now for many years they have gone forth and preached this Gospel. Men have listened to them, and some spirit or power has convinced them that the testimony which these Elders have borne was true. These humble men of God have gone forth and said: "The fullness of the everlasting Gospel has been revealed by the administration of angels; the Lord has raised up prophets and inspired men; He has organized the Church on the earth as it was in the days of Jesus Christ and the Apostles; we have brought you this Gospel; hearken to it, and we promise you, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, if you will receive our testimony, repent of your sins, go down into the water and be baptized for the remission of your sins, you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, that shall bear record and witness unto you that what we say is true." What has been the result of this? Thousands have believed that testimony and proved that it was true. These Elders labored by faith; they traveled by faith; they worked by faith. It was faith that sustained them all the way through. They traveled without purse and scrip, and through their faith the God of heaven fed and clothed them, and opened the way before them. This has been the case now for sixty years. And many people believed the testimony of these simple men. They repented of their sins, were baptized for the remission of them, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; they received that Holy Ghost, and it bore testimony to them of the truths of the Gospel.

Brethren and sisters, it is by faith that you are here today, gathered from the nations of the earth. By that power you have been sustained, until you have accomplished these things that are now before you in your history. We ought to look at these things as they are. We ought to have faith, not only in what is past but in what is to come. It is by faith that we look forward to the resurrection of the dead. Our forefathers are in the spirit world. They died without the Gospel. They never saw the face of a prophet or an apostle. They laid down their bodies, and their spirits went into the spirit world. There they have listened to the Gospel of Christ. Jesus taught the Gospel in the spirit world while His body lay in the tomb. Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith and those Elders of Israel who have been martyred and who have died for the word of God and testimony of Jesus have gone to preach this Gospel there. Spirits in prison have received their testimony. The prison doors have been opened. These spirits will come forth in the morning of the resurrection, and they will receive these blessings and glories, the same as if they had heard and received the Gospel in the flesh. And these Latter-day Saints have built these temples and gone to work in them with just as much assurance of the truth of these things as though it had been sounded in their ears by the trump of the archangel of God. They have had this faith, and they will not be disappointed.

That is the condition the Latter-day Saints are in today. As to opposition, we may expect that, because the arch-enemy has labored against the work of God in all ages of the world. But we have reason to rejoice and to be thankful to our Heavenly Father that we are as well as we are today before Him. I want the Latter-day Saints to bear in mind that the ancient patriarchs and prophets spoke as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and they spoke the truth. The Lord has said just what He meant, and meant what He said. The word of the Lord will never fall unfulfilled. If you want to know what is coming to pass, read the revelations of God in the Bible, in the Book of Mormon and in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The revelations of the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith are glorious revelations. What the Lord promised in the commencement of this work has been fulfilled to the very letter up to the present. So it will continue. We should lay these things to heart.

There has been a good deal said with regard to our temporal affairs. That is all right. What the brethren have said concerning our temporal condition is of importance to us. I still am of the opinion that inasmuch as Zion is going to be built up on the earth, it is the mind and will of God that we should do something for ourselves. We ought to cultivate the earth. We bought not to wait for the world to come and plant and dig our potatoes, or plant and harvest our wheat, or to build railroads and carry them on. The Presidency of the Church have shouldered a very heavy load connected with this sugar factory. Why should we not make sugar? Utah sends a very great amount every year out of the Territory for sugar. This should not be. The soil is here and the talent is here to raise beets and to make sugar. Why should not the Latter-day Saints do this and keep their money at home? Is there any sin in this? Not at all; the more of these things we would do, the better, I think, the Lord would be pleased with us. I know there has been quite a feeling one way or another, because we have burdened ourselves with these labors. But it is our duty to try to get the Latter-day Saints to cultivate the earth and to produce what they eat and drink and what they wear. We have tried to do this. It is true, it cost a great deal to establish the sugar plant, and the Church had to shoulder a great measure of responsibility in connection with it, in order to carry it out. I do not think we have done wrong in that. When I go before my Father in heaven I am willing to bear my part of the responsibility, because if there is anything on earth that I was ever moved upon by the Spirit to do it was to unite in that enterprise with my brethren. I believe it is our duty to manufacture what we use, as far as we can, at home. We refer to these temporal things because they are and always will be connected with us.

I feel to rejoice myself that we are as well off as we are. There has never been a period when we have been any better off than we are today. I look back to the days when we came here. We found a barren desert. The man that led us here was Brigham Young. He was a prophet, seer and revelator. He was never destitute of revelation from the day that I first knew him until his body was laid in the tomb. He was a great man—a man of God. We see the result of his work here. He was our architect, so to speak. He fulfilled his mission in a great and wonderful manner, and when he laid his body down he went to mingle with his brethren and the Gods.

The Gospel of Christ is true. The Zion of God is true. We are here in fulfillment of the revelations and visions of the ancient patriarchs and prophets. Read Isaiah, Jeremiah and the other prophets, and see what they said. We came here by the revelations of God. Many of the brethren felt it hard to leave our beautiful Nauvoo and to go to the mountains. Had we not done this, some of the revelations of God would have fallen unfulfilled. I say to the Latter-day Saints, have faith. Let us have faith in the promises and revelations of God. Do you comprehend what is manifest in the earth today? The seeds of destruction are everywhere. The judgments of God are beginning to go forth. But who acknowledges the hand of God in these things? I rejoice that the cloud of darkness is being lifted from the eyes of our countrymen in regard to the Latter-day Saints, and that they are manifesting kindness towards us. Speaking of our visit East, I confess it was marvelous in my eyes to see how different these things are today to what they have been in the past. They begin to see that the people in the mountains of Israel are white men, and that they have some talent. I thank God for these things. I thank Him for the kindness we have received at the hands of the friends of our nation. My prayer to God is that His blessings may rest upon our nation and upon the leaders thereof, and that the spirit of liberty, of law, of righteousness and of truth may rest upon all American citizens and everybody that dwells under this great government. It is one of the greatest governments God ever raised upon the earth. What has it been raised up for? That in the midst of it the Lord might establish His Zion and His work.

Brethren and sisters, let us be true and faithful to our duties and to our God. Let us look forward to the exaltation and the blessings that God has in store for those who keep His commandments. Every man will be judged according to the deeds done in the body. There are laws celestial, laws terrestrial, and laws telestial. We speak of the celestial glory and of the heavenly hosts. Who are the heavenly hosts? They are those who have tabernacled on this earth, been faithful to God, and passed behind the veil. And they are interested in the welfare of the inhabitants of the earth. They are interested in the salvation of the human family. They have labored for it in the flesh; they do so today in the spirit world. These are the people we look to by faith. We are here upon a mission. We are trying to fulfil that mission. I hope we may be true and faithful to it.

I am thankful before the Lord for the blessings that I have enjoyed in this conference and for the testimonies I have heard from these Apostles. They speak as men having authority, inspired by the Spirit of God, and they speak the truth. Many of our friends that have labored with us have passed away. We ourselves shall pass away in our time. I may say that if it had not been for the prayers of these thousands of Latter-day Saints, I today should have been mingling with my brethren in the spirit world. I know that I have been preserved by the prayers of my brethren and sisters, and I am still with you. I feel very weak, and hardly qualified to magnify my calling as an Apostle, as the leader of the people of Israel; in fact, no man is, only as moved upon by the power of God. What little time I may stay here I hope my heart will not be set on the riches of this world, but on doing the will of God and uniting with my brethren in bearing off the great work and responsibility resting upon us. If we will do this, all will be right. When we get the other side of the veil, we shall know something. We now work by faith. We have the evidence of things not seen. The resurrection, the eternal judgment, the celestial kingdom, and the great blessings that God has given in the holy anointings and endowment in the temples, are all for the future, and they will be fulfilled, for they are eternal truths. We will never while in the flesh, with this veil over us, fully comprehend that which lies before us in the world to come. It will pay any man to serve God and to keep His commandments the few days he lives upon the earth. With regard to our position before we came here, I will say that we dwelt with the Father and with the Son, as expressed in the hymn, "O my Father," that has been sung here. That hymn is a revelation, though it was given unto us by a woman—Sister Snow. There are a great many sisters have the spirit of revelation. There is no reason why they should not be inspired as well as men. We dwell in the presence of God before we came here, and we have been sent here upon a mission, and I do not want to live any longer myself than I can magnify that calling. What benefit is it to any man to dwell here and to miss the object for which he was sent, even eternal life? Therefore, it does not pay any man to sin. When a man sins it is because he yields to the enemy, not because the devil has power over him irrespective of his agency. The devil is laboring for the destruction of the human family. But the Gospel is sent into the world to save them.

Brethren and sisters, God bless you. I am glad to meet with you and to have a little time to speak to you. I hope and trust we may be true and faithful to the end of our days, that we may be satisfied when we get through with our work; that our hearts may not be set upon anything that perisheth, but that we may do what we can to build up Zion and bring forth salvation to mankind as far as we have the opportunity while we dwell in the flesh. God bless us and guide us all in all our work, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Written for this Paper.

CAPITOL KITCHENS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24, 1894.—Congress wants new kitchens. A committee of the House has been appointed to investigate the matter, and the members are by no means satisfied with the dark rooms and old-fashioned cooking utensils with which the basement of that part of the Capitol is furnished. The restaurants of Congress do as big a business as any high-toned eating houses in the United States. Nearly a thousand people are fed daily at the tables of the House restaurant, and fully five hundred have their stomachs tickled by the appetizing viands dished up in the restaurant of the Senate. The Senate of the United States recently put in new kitchens, and there is no club house in the world that has a better culinary apparatus. Our greatest statesmen are more particular as to their bills of fare than they are as to the bills before Congress. They want all the latest frills in the fashion of their dishes, and they use everything that modern invention can supply to help them in their cooking. I have spent some time this week in sampling the good things of the restaurants and have made a study of the Senate kitchen. The latter cannot but be interesting to the women of the United States. They are away down under the ground. You go through winding stairways into the subbasement of the Capitol. You take a Sabbath day's journey through gloomy corridors, and you finally find yourself in a suite of bright rooms lighted entirely from the top, and floored, walled and ceiled with the cleanest of white tiles. These rooms are vaulted. They are the kitchens, storerooms and bakeries of the Senate and they form one of the busiest parts of the Capitol building. It takes about thirty employees to run them. You see white-aproned, white-capped men everywhere, and there are cooks and dish washers, oyster shuckers and bakers, making up a corps large enough to run a big summer hotel. The main room of the kitchen proper is 15 feet wide by 100 feet long. It contains two ranges, each big enough to roast an ox, and it has patent steamers and baking machines here and there about it. In one corner is the biggest soup pot in Washington. It will hold about two bushels of liquid and it is the size of the largest apple butter kettle. It is made of the brightest of red copper and it is used for keeping the stock for the making of the soup. Nickel-plated steam pipes run through it and the liquid is always hot. A little further over there is a copper pot of about half this size, heated in the same way, in which the cranberry sauce and apple sauce which is eaten by these Senators is cooked, and near this is a patent turkey roaster. It would make your mouth water to know just how good the turkeys cooked by this process are. They are roasted by steam, and the roaster is a double iron box about as big as the average dry goods box, within the walls of which steam is conducted by nickel-plated pipes, thoroughly roasting the mallard ducks and the twenty-pound turkeys which are laid away within it.

Another feature of this kitchen is the grill. It is a gridiron so large that you could lay the largest sheep upon it and broil it. This rests over a bed of red-hot charcoal, and the fire is such that the steak or chop can be well done in five minutes. This grill is kept going about six hours a day, and the juicy meat which comes from it has made most of the gray matter which you will find in the alleged brains of the Congressional Record. The chief cook presides over the ranges. He gets $100 a month as wages, and his cooking stoves are large enough for a Long Branch hotel. The main range is six feet wide and twelve feet long, and a curious thing about it to me is the holes in the top and the stove lids. These last are made of rings of metal, one inside of the other, so that you can make the opening over the coals as big around as a saucer or as large as a dishpan. Over the stove there is a great iron awning, above which is a ventilator, so that the smell of the cooking is drawn off into the open air, and in this vast kitchen where there are dozens of turkeys and all sorts of vegetables over the fire there is not as much smell as you will find in the rooms of a young married couple who are doing light housekeeping. Right under the range there are hot caverns for roasting, and one range is devoted entirely to the roasting of turkey and game. The bakery of the establishment is a great iron safe, as large as the vault of an ordinary bank. This is presided over by a baker, and every roll and loaf eaten in the Senate restaurant is baked in this safe. In the center of the room there are tables of zinc kept hot by steam, and upon these lie great dishes of roasts and stews ready to be cut up or dished out and sent to the eating rooms. Another room, almost as large as this kitchen, is devoted to keeping things hot, and there are more steam tables in this filled with hot tin boxes, in which are all sorts of viands.

I took a look at the refrigerators. One was filled with turkeys and game. The halves of beeves and sheep hung upon the walls, and the room was so large that I went inside of it and found it lighted with electricity and as cold as an ice house. In another room I was shown where the supplies of the establishment are kept. This was about fifteen feet square, and it was walled with shelves upon which was a stock large enough for a good-sized grocery store. There were wines, canned goods and eatables of all sorts. Bags of potatoes lay upon the floor. Barrels of apples stood here and there. There were crackers by the box, oranges by the crate and bottles by the dozens. In case of a siege Congress could be fed for a month on the supplies of this store house, and everything that a man can possibly order is here. In one of the rooms there is a butcher's block, upon which the meat is cut up, and another vault is devoted to oyster shucking and fresh oysters, and here the terrapins are kept. One great copper box in the kitchen is devoted to the steaming of oysters, and there are special dishes for the getting up of terrapin stews. The dishes used would stock a big queensware store, and it keeps one or two men continually washing at the dishes. The plates which are used for sending up food are kept warm in a patent dish warmer, which is heated by steam, and the ceilings of these rooms are filled with great hooks like those of a smoke house, on which the brightest of copper and tin pans and kettles are hung. A dumb waiter runs from the kitchen to the restaurants of the Senate, and about the only cold things served to the statesmen are the ice water and champagne.

The dining rooms of these Senators are worth looking at. Their walls and ceilings are frescoed. They sit around the finest of damask cloths on chairs of oak, cushioned with green leather. Their dishes are china and their forks are of silver. The most of them prefer steel knives, and silver is only used for the cutting of fruit. The common dining room is apart from that used by the Senators, and there is a pie and oyster counter presided over by waiters. At these the statesmen now and then take a snack, but the most of them are good liver, and they take a full meal at noon every day of the year.

It is funny to watch them eat and to see "Upon what meat these our Cæsars feed that they may grow so great." Take Don Cameron. He looks like a dyspeptic, and as he sits in the Senate he chews his red mustache as if he were hungry. He is as lean as a rail, and you would never suppose that he was one of the biggest eaters of the capitol. He likes rich food, and he washes his lunch down every day with a pint of champagne. One of his favorite dishes is calves liver and bacon, and he smacks his lips three times a week over a chafing dish stew. Senator Stewart of Nevada is another man who is fond of a chafing dish stew, and there are a baker's dozen of Senators who think that oysters served in this way form a dish for the gods. Senator Stewart cooks his oysters himself. He calls for a dozen of the finest selects and these are brought to him at the table and a chafing dish is set before him. There is no water used. The oysters are stewed in their own liquor in a large glass of the best sherry wine, and in addition he puts in a big lump of butter and the yolks of two eggs, and then salts and peppers to taste. It is one of the richest dishes known to public men and is very productive of gout. Senator Stewart drinks no wine with his meals, but he now and then has a bottle of beer. He is not very particular about his surroundings, but he likes to do his own cooking.

Senator Hawley knows what is good, but he usually takes a light lunch. His favorite dish is chicken soup, and after this he has a piece of apple pie and a glass of milk. If he has a friend with him he spreads himself out over the whole bill of fare, but when alone his lunch is a light one. Senator Sherman is another pie eater. His favorites are apple and custard, and he always takes a glass of milk with his lunch. Senator Frye lunches on apple pie and a cup of tea. Peffer of Kansas confines himself to a bowl of bread and milk or an oyster stew. Peffer never pays more than 25 cents for a meal, and he doesn't waste his change on waiters. Joe Blackburn and Arthur P. Gorman are both fond of good living. Blackburn likes a toddy made of old Pepper whisky to take with his meals, and Gorman eats his meats cold. He is fond of cold ham and turkey, and one of his side dishes is usually hashed brown potatoes served up with a poached egg upon them.

Senator Hoar of Massachusetts has the reputation of being a light feeder. He is, however, one of the richest gourmands of the Senate, and he is fond of filling his round stomach with a chafing dish of stew, and he dotes on sweet-breads served up in butter. There is nothing too good for Senator Wolcott. He wants his food highly seasoned and he is very fond of pheasants and other game. He likes a nice porterhouse steak served so rare that the blood runs down its sides. He eats a big meal every noon and the day is cold indeed when you find any wrinkles in his stomach. All of these western men live well. Hansbrough and Dubois want the best that the cooks can provide. Senator Perkins of California is a great feeder, and his colleague, Senator White, picks out half a dozen dishes and eats them all. These men seldom dine alone and the average statesman likes company at his meals. Henry Cabot Lodge usually brings a party in with him, and Tom Reed, Julius Cæsar Burrows and Dooliver of Iowa come to the Senate and eat their lunches together. Reed usually takes a course dinner at noon. He begins with blue points and likes to wash his meals down with champagne.

Senator Cush Davis is one of the big fish eaters of the Capitol. He likes anything that comes from the water, and he feeds his brain on black bass five times a week. He is fond of Mallard duck, and he washes his lunches down with a pot of hot coffee. He drinks a great deal of hot milk and takes a bowl of milk a nightcap before going to sleep. The New York Senators usually comes to lunch together, and they are both good feeders, though Hill merely nibbles at the dishes he orders, while Murphy eats all of the best and lots of it. Mitchell of Oregon makes his lunch off an oyster stew and a glass of sherry. Platt of Connecticut is fond of a bowl of custard or a chafing dish stew, and Senator Pettigrew likes lamb chops and cold roast beef. Power of Montana is a dyspeptic. He has no stomach to speak of, and he looks at his victuals with such a vinegar aspect that his milk has to be boiled before it is brought to him for fear it will sour. His regular lunch is a bowl of boiled milk and a plate of brown bread well toasted. He breaks the toast into the milk and dishes it up with a spoon.

Senator Squire of Washington is a good liver. He wants everything that is nice and he wants it served hot. He is fond of country sausage and corn cakes and he would eat these three times a day if they were set before him. He ends up his lunches with a small cup of coffee and a pony of brandy. He is a rich man and always has friends with him. He is very particular to have his account just right to the cent, and he would, I doubt not, fight with the waiter for the overcharge of a penny, and after he had gotten the matter settled his way would like as not give the negro a fee of a dollar. He is a queer man as regards money matters, and he believes in running everything, from his politics to his pancakes on a business basis. Another rich man is Senator Stockbridge of Michigan. He wants the best he can get, but he never drinks anything but water or milk. Turpie of Indiana lunches on oysters and wants fruit every day. Vance of North Carolina is satisfied with a sandwich, and Dan Voorhees eats enough country sausage and cakes to give any other statesman the gout. Wilson of Iowa, the great prohibitionist, usually dines off a glass of milk and a piece of apple pie, and Roger Q. Mills can fill up his bread basket with chicken salad and feel like a king.

One of the biggest feeders we have had in the Senate for years was Senator Stanford. He ate the richest of food and he would take dishes like calf's liver and bacon and chafing dish stews day after day for a week in succession. He generally drank brandy and soda or ginger ale with his meals, and he kept his system pretty well loaded with fats. He gave lunches sometimes to his brother Senators, and he seldom ate by himself. Don Cameron often gives his friends dinners at the Capitol, and one of the great lunchers of the past was George H. Pendleton. He used to feed statesmen by the dozens, and he had stand-up lunches in his committee rooms while he was in the Senate. The biggest lunch of recent times was given by Senator McPherson. This was about three years ago, and seventy-five gentlemen and ladies sat down at the table. Senator Gorman gave a lunch to Nat Goodwin in the Capitol this winter, and the menu was something like this: First, there were blue points on the half shell. Then quail, stewed terrapin and chicken salad in the order given. Champagne was brought in with the terrapin, and the dessert was Charlotte russe and coffee. An ordinary citizen would call this a course dinner, but with Gorman it was only a lunch.

I have always looked upon southern men as big eaters, but Senators from the south eat the least. George of Mississippi seldom takes more than boiled oysters and a glass of milk. Walthall is satisfied with milk and pie, and Vest, fat as he is, often lunches on the raw bivalves. He stands up, and he eats his saddle rock oysters standing. Old Joe Brown used to say that there was nothing so good on earth as puddle ducks and sweet potatoes, and Isham G. Harris seldom gets more than a glass of milk at the Capitol. Faulkner likes raw oysters. Higgins of Delaware fattens up on baked apples, and Chandler of New Hampshire, lean as he is, often takes a chafing dish stew. Ransom seldom eats more than a cracker and a glass of milk. Cockrell is satisfied with dry bread, and Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island and Morrill of Vermont are both milk drinkers. Nearly all of these Senators are oyster lovers, most of them are fond of terrapin, and on the whole they are fairly good liver.

Speaking of terrapin, these are more in demand every year here at Washington. No big dinner is now complete without them, and I am told that the terrapin crop now amounts to the enormous aggregate of $2,000,000 every year. They sell for all sorts of fancy prices, and $30 a dozen is a low average. I venture to say that there will be in the neighborhood of a million terrapin eaten this year, and there are now a number of terrapin farms along the Chesapeake bay which are said to pay, while there is one on the Patuxent river which contains thousands of terrapin, and in which they are hatched, raised and fed for the market. Another farm is run by New York parties, and the probability is that these farms will be increased in number and size with the present demand. The Chesapeake terrapin are twice as good as those which come from Delaware and other parts of the country and they will bring twice as much in the market. There are people who make a business of catching terrapin, and all the oyster boats catch them when they can. The terrapin often run in shoals and they are sometimes caught with seines. As many as a hundred have been taken at one haul. They are often caught in the fall and packed away in barrels. Provided they are kept in the dark, it is said that they can be held for weeks without injury, and those which come to Washington are brought here in barrels.

FRANK G. CARPENTER.

THE LOST FOUND.

The inclosed letter is another testimony of the appreciation of the value of your widely circulated journal. Enquiries similar to those to which inclosed is a response, are frequently made by people who have for years been widely separated and the knowledge of each other's whereabouts entirely lost. But such inquiries do but seldom reach the public in an intelligent manner and in consequence fail of their purpose, and that often to the grief of many who spend anxious days and nights sorrowing over the supposed lost loved ones. The missionaries abroad, as in the above instance, may often render valuable service to inquiring friends by forwarding their petitions to the part of Utah where they are supposed to be located or where they were last heard from. I have heretofore had similar inquiries from people in the states or in Europe, and am pleased to say I was enabled to furnish the information required to the joy of the enquirer.

The News containing my other letter has been forwarded to Elder T. L. Cox in New Zealand and will doubtless gladden the heart of Mr. Daniels. I intend also to send this to it appears in the DESERET NEWS—and I think its publication will be of much interest to many who may read it.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH HALL.

OGDEN, Utah, Jan. 19, 1894.

MAINT CITY, Utah, Jan. 17, 1894.

Mr. Joseph Hall:

Dear Sir—Your letter of the 12th inst., to the DESERET NEWS, enquiring for one Elizabeth Daniels—now Casto—was perused with the greatest of pleasure. She is here in Mant, and has been for many years; has been a constant worker in this temple since its opening. It was very gratifying to her to see the inquiry about her, and will be more so to obtain a few lines from her long lost brother. She hopes that you will also communicate with Elder Thomas L. Cox, now in New Zealand, that from him her brother may know that she is alive and has enjoyed good health till the past week, but is now regaining her usual health, and is about again; and that the usual address to Mant for this Territory will find her.

From your letter I would infer that if a letter were sent in the care of Thomas L. Cox, Owaka, Catlin River, Otago, New Zealand, it would find Mr. Daniels.

Respectfully, your humble servant,
JOHN L. BENOH.

Written for this Paper.

"RIPE" CREAM, AND SWEET.

There is a very general opinion that after cream is removed from the creaming vessel it needs no further attention. This is a mistake. As soon as the cream is removed it should be put in a cool place, and kept at a low temperature until ready for churning if sweet cream butter is to be made. If acid cream butter is to be made, warm the cream up and keep in a warm place from twelve to twenty-four hours. When it is acid enough it has a granular appearance and a slight acidity to the taste. There are certain advantages in such ripening. The cream will churn more easily and a larger amount of butter can be made from a given amount of cream if it is ripened, than could be if it was fresh.

Butter made from ripe cream has a superior flavor to that made from sweet cream; and to obtain a proper flavor is one of the chief objects of the butter-maker. Bacteriologists claim that the flavor is connected with the decomposition products of the bacteria growth, which is the direct cause of ripening. In a given specimen of cream will be found a large variety of this bacteria. During the ripening process there will ensue a conflict of the different organisms with each other, and the result will depend upon a variety of circumstances. It will be influenced by temperature, quality of cream, and length of time of ripening, as well as by the advantage which certain species of organisms may get from an early start. In such a conflict it will be a matter of accident if the proper species succeed in growing rapidly enough to produce its own effect on the cream un hindered by the other.

Now it certainly makes a great difference in the product which species of bacteria happens to grow most rapidly. The result of this bacteria growth has been found to produce all sorts of disagreeable flavors and tastes in milk or cream if allowed to act un hindered. It seems to be only the first product of the decomposition that has the pleasant flavor; the latter stage of decomposition gives rise to a very different flavor. Too long a ripening results in the production of butter containing a strong flavor, and one of the difficulties is to determine the right length of time for proper ripening. Indeed, the greatest difficulty which the butter-maker has to meet is in obtaining a uniform product. The best butter-makers will sometimes fail from causes not explained. While the trouble is of course not entirely due to difficulties in ripening, there is no question that this is the prominent source of difficulty.

While it is true that acid cream will churn in less time and will make a little more butter (about 1½ pounds in 100) from a given amount of cream with so little flavor that experts can not always tell the difference, would it not be better for those who cannot control the changes in the ripening process to make sweet cream butter? It certainly seems to me that it would.

To make sweet cream butter, churn the cream from 6 to 8 degrees lower temperature. It should in no case take longer than forty minutes to complete a churning. The operator should be able to tell by the sound when the butter is beginning to gather, but should take the cover off to be sure it is churned all right. When the granules are about the size of a clover seed draw off the butter milk, run in a few pails of water at about the same temperature as the butter in the churn. Draw the water off and run in as much more as would equal the volume of cream churned; place the cover on and revolve the churn very rapidly fifteen or twenty times. Draw the water off and let it drain thoroughly. Too much care and attention cannot be given to this part of the work, as this is where we produce the grain. And if the grain is spoiled the flavor is injured also. Take out the butter with a ladle, add one ounce of salt for every pound of butter; work the butter until the salt is thoroughly mixed, but not enough to spoil the grain. If worked too much it has a salty appearance, and if not enough it will be found streaked and mottled. Press the butter firmly into the molds and wrap in a clean wet paper prepared for that purpose.

Very respectfully,
ARTHUR BARRETT.

LOOKING BACKWARD.

MEHA CITY, A. T., Jan. 17.—Your invitation through a late issue to the "Old veterans of the Nauvoo exodus," to give items from their experience relating to that period, almost prompts a smile. For to those whose broader experience takes in from before the settlement at Kirtland and succeeding vicissitudes of the Church, the Nauvoo experience appears but modern. Who has yet written in detail the circumstances of poverty and persecution in which the Temple at Kirtland was built? That attended the gathering up of Zion's camp, with all of its experience in going and return from Missouri? That grew out of the Kirtland bank? The great property boom and financial crisis of 1837? The apostasy at Kirtland and the persecution of the Prophet by his friends? His flight to Missouri and the struggles of the poor left behind? Who has written the history of the "poor camp?"

The first large emigration company of the Saints of some seventy wagons, was organized and led by Joseph Young, E. Smith, Henry Herriman, Jonathan Dunham, Jonathan Hale and others. In great poverty it started from Kirtland on July 4, 1837, and arrived at Far West on October 20th, just in time to get every experience of mob violence and exposure through the ensuing winter. While Joseph Young and others were stopping at Haun's mill they barely escaped the massacre there. Where is published the appalling condition of the Saints at Adam-ondi-Ahman—driven in from the surrounding country and in the midst of deep snows without shelter for the aged, the feeble or the sick, when infants were born to a manger of snow and starvation was near to all; followed by the expulsion and gathering again at the "Old Commerce grave-yard," afterwards Nauvoo? In 1839 every house was a hospital, but without nurse or attendant for the sick, for at this time there were hardly well ones enough to bury the dead. This experience with the arrival of the Prophet and others from Missouri prisons with the building of another Temple under persecution and poverty, the martyrdom, etc., was all prior to our exodus from Nauvoo, and much of this still remains unpublished, if written.

Having since 1831 been near the front in each evolution of the Church you will pardon that "smile;" for to me the butt end of our experience appears prior to our expulsions from Nauvoo, in which, as in the others, I was near to the front. After the martyrdom of the Prophet, having been for years associated with him in business, I was called by President Young to occupy and keep open the Nauvoo mansion, vacated by his death, and having Sheriff Backus as boarder and all outside officers and strangers to entertain, I had excellent opportunity to learn much from the outside that interested us as a people. When it was decided or agreed that as a people we should leave Nauvoo, with others I was appointed to organize a company of fifty and to take measures preparatory to emigration. To this end we started the making of wagons, occupying as we had used the divisions in the basement story of a large brick barn belonging to the mansion. After the killing of Frank Worl by Sheriff Backus and posse, the hatred and hurry of our enemies generally increased. A report became current abroad that many anti-Mormons were being murdered in Nauvoo and the Nauvoo mansion was cited as the probable place for great crimes. To allay the excitement a troop of soldiers was by order of the governor sent to investigate and to examine the premises for bodies said to be secreted about the barn. They came and made a formal examination after which they appeared satisfied and quietly left. But the end was not yet, for the rumor continued as a number of our mechanics were seen about the basement of the barn, creating renewed suspicion. Such was the condition when President Young called for those ready to commence crossing the river, for which I was doing all possible to prepare. I am not certain of the date, but I think it was the 6th of February that private word was brought me in the evening that a squad of soldiers would be in the city before morning with an order for my arrest. There was no time to prepare. I must go at once. So with two of my family, leaving my wife and children in a skiff at midnight, in a fearful storm, we crossed the river, which the day following was closed up with ice. A waiting vehicle took us to camp on Sugar Creek, where on arrival we were without shelter from the storm or supplies for our comfort. But we were among friends and even John De Lee, who may now merit to be forgotten, then a stranger, opened to us his tent and made us welcome to its every comfort, and I cannot think of him even now and feel that he was wholly depraved.

Coming down to the present time, I would not forget to say that the affairs of this Stake are progressing fairly well. It is still a time of health considering the season, and of prosperity considering the country's financial condition. But I regret to say that our Stake president, Brother C. I. Robinson, is in perhaps a critical condition. Not long since from the kick of a horse he received a fearful compound fracture of the lower jaw, from which he is not fully recovered, which with an organic heart trouble now keeps him confined to his room, while we administer to him often and earnestly pray for his recovery.

B. F. JOHNSON.

EARTHQUAKE IN WESTERN UTAH.

The Millard County Blade, which came in with last night's mail, contains an account of a severe earthquake at Fish Springs at 11 a. m. on the 8th inst. The following are the salient points of the article: Mr. Stewart was in a rock house near the springs at the time of the shock, and describes the wave as coming from the northwest and passing to the southeast. The quaking of the ground was accompanied by rumbling sounds not unlike that of a railway train.

A party of hunters down on the swamp felt the boggy ground rise and fall, and noticed quite a disturbance of the water. The thousands of ducks that inhabit the sloughs and ponds rose from the water and circled about as if terror-stricken.

The earthquake has very likely left a permanent effect on one of the springs. Prior to the shock this spring had been almost too hot for comfortable bathing; it is now so cold that it is often covered with a thin sheet of ice.

At the Utah mine, some five miles distant over the mountain, the shock was equally severe. In the boarding house the table was being arranged for dinner, and the dishes were hurled from the table to the floor.

Mr. Comerford, who was in the blacksmith shop at the time, says that the shock was so hard that it shook the anvil. At the Emma mine, a short distance away, Leopold Zellecki, the bookkeeper, ran out of the office, thinking the magazine had exploded.

The indictments of the late grand jury in San Bernardino county, Cal., are likely to be held void on account of one of the grand jurors having been convicted of a felony, says a special dispatch to the San Francisco Chronicle. The following telegram from Jefferson City, Mo., has been received: "W. J. Bodenhamer was sent to this prison in 1837 for seven years for larceny from a dwelling." Bodenhamer is at present a resident of North Ontario, and was a member of the late grand jury. If current report is true he was very officious, especially in the matter of finding certain indictments against public officers. The grand jury as impaneled consisted of nineteen members, the minimum number necessary to constitute a legal body. Without Bodenhamer the grand jury would have been one less than the legal requirement. Rumors are afloat that Bodenhamer was pardoned by the governor of Missouri, in which case, it is contended, the jury's legality could not be attacked, as the pardon restored him to full civil rights.

THE EDITOR'S COMMENTS.

RELIGIOUS RESTRICTION.

A friend remarked lately to the writer that he could not be religious because it would "bind him too closely." The speaker was not one specially prone to wrongdoing; on the contrary he has a reputation for being straightforward in all his dealings. But he has paid no particular attention to religious matters, and is a fair representative of a class of people who fancy that obedience to the laws of heaven means a restriction of the rights and privileges which they are justified in exercising.

Such a view is not in harmony with truth and justice, and it shows a lack of comprehension of the divine will. The laws of nature are God's laws; they control in time and in eternity, in mortality and in immortality. If there is anything that produces good, that brings permanent joy and satisfaction, or that adds to the intelligence of men, it is in harmony with divine law, and therefore is a part of true religion. Whatever retards progress or results in evil is contrary to the will of God, and therefore is non-religious. In this view of the subject it may be easily understood that while religion forbids all wrongdoing it does not bind man too closely for his own protection and benefit.

There are, however, unholy desires that are possessed by men. These are antagonistic to the true religious condition, and are the outgrowth of false traditions and improper actions. The appetite shown by these should be overcome. There are propensities in mankind which, in moderation, are good; when they attain an abnormal growth they are the opposite. For instance, the desire to possess this world's goods is commendable so long as it is within the bounds of justice; but when it passes beyond that and covets the property which belongs to another it operates to the injury of those who are actuated by it, because its nature then is to infringe upon the rights of others. If a man is gluttonous and eats more food than his system requires it results in an injury to his physical being; while he who restrains an abnormal appetite and is controlled by nature's laws removes the unnatural desire, and receives health and strength as the blessing for doing the Lord's will in this regard. In the sphere of religion this proper control over the actions of men is exercised; no more, no less. If they insist on giving way to abnormal appetites or unholy desires in any direction, religion condemns the act, and is thoroughly restrictive in that regard.

All truly religious principles, all the commandments which the Almighty has given, are beneficial in their nature. They act as a restriction only in cases of departure from that which produces good. They deprive us of no right; they do not limit us in the exercise of any privilege that will improve or benefit. They warn us to avoid that which in its very nature results in evil, and they indicate to us the means of living in harmony with the forces that control in the physical and spiritual worlds and of reaping the benefits of such a life.

Of course, from a worldly point of view, sacrifices must be made in submitting to the requirements of the Lord. Yet every law and ordinance of the Gospel, when properly conformed to, works a lasting benefit to the individual. When seed time comes we spare a portion of our store of grain for planting; it passes from our possession, and to those who do not know of the subsequent processes it might seem lost in the earth. But in the soil it germinates, and in due time brings forth many fold for our sustenance. Thus it is with the sacrifices which we make in accord with the Lord's will; they produce more abundantly of the blessings of heaven for our enjoyment. The sacrifices responsive to religious requirements should be voluntary in their nature, that through intelligent conformity with law they may be fruitful in blessings. If they are not freely made, it is like taking seeds that need soil for their germination and development and scattering them amid the rocks or on the waters; they die and are lost to us, because the conditions which combine to maintain life are not made to exist. Upon the same principle that the harvest succeeds the planting so the blessings of heaven follow acceptable sacrifices. If we spread the seed of good words and work among men they bear a natural increase of fruit; if we give freely to the poor it is the planting of seeds that produce many fold; if we pay willingly of tithes and offerings to the Lord, His blessings will return abundantly to those who have faith to conform to this law. Thus it is with all sacrifices conformable with true religion, therefore they are made freely and joyfully by those who comprehend the workings of the unchangeable law which controls them.

The work of religion in this life is that of preparing us for the future which is steadily, surely closing in upon us. It cultivates all the capabilities of man to the utmost of his benefit; it eliminates or restricts in all that would retard or injure him. From the standpoint of self interest all mankind should be religious. This does not mean sanctimonious or gloomy; these are not religion, which is a cheerful compliance with universal laws under the direction of the superior intelligence of the Creator who would guide us into the next world as properly cared for persons were guided into the present sphere—in the full possession of all the faculties essential to their welfare.

The necessity of appropriate preparation for the future should be apparent to every thoughtful person who takes into consideration the lessons of the present. In this probation the child develops into the man by the natural, unyielding process of time. To qualify him for association with intelligent adults, he is subjected to a system of training by which his mind is cultivated and his judgment matured; by the time this is accomplished he is accounted a child no longer and takes his place among the men of his generation. By the inexorable law of nature all men go hence. Those who would be prepared for association with the Ruler of the heavenly worlds must receive the training necessary to fit them for that condition. The system of education which will give the perfect training required to qualify men for that exalted station is the religion or Gospel of Jesus Christ, which brings the flesh into submission to the will of the spirit, and teaches its disciples to follow the example of the Savior of the world and do the will of their Father in heaven, that in His presence they may enjoy the perfection of peace and love. Such a religion possesses naught of repulsion to the good and the pure but when properly understood exerts for them an attraction beyond all the powers of mortality.

ON SCRIPTURE INTERPRETATION.

It is noticeable that there is a strong tendency at present among Biblical exponents to give to sacred texts a figurative interpretation. Particularly is this the case with regard to narratives, the incidents of which seem incomprehensible to human reason. Recently President Harper of the university of Chicago characterized it as "nonsense" to suppose that the account of the Garden of Eden had any historical or geographical reality. The whole story, he maintained, is imaginary, intended to illustrate the writer's idea of the origin of sin. In a similar spirit a rabbi in San Francisco in a lecture on superstition, asks whether the account of Lot's wife turning into a pillar of salt is meant to convey a historical fact or not? And he repeats this question in regard to numerous other Old Testament events. To explain the Scriptures as being in the main oriental poetry, full of grand figures of speech, void of substantial facts, something akin to the imaginary phantoms of Arabian Nights, seems to be the drift of the latest rationalistic schools.

There is nothing entirely new in this. The Gnostics of the early ages maintained that there was a hidden meaning in the word, which was known only to the select few, while the literal sense, absurd as it was pronounced to be in some instances, was good enough for the common people who knew no better. Origen, although not a Gnostic, is famous for his allegorical and symbolical interpretations, many of which are utterly absurd. But the remarkable thing is that these modern interpreters have advanced no farther than the celebrated church father of the second century. His argument ran something like this: What edification can be derived from the history of Abraham's sin, for instance in the matter of Sarah and Abimelech? Or, how can the apparent discrepancies be reconciled? Either these things are true in a spiritual and allegorical sense only, or we must reject the claim that the Scriptures are divinely inspired. This is substantially the argument of today. But its validity has already been tested throughout the ages and found wanting. The sacred Scriptures have come out from the test, like the children in the burning furnace of Nebuchadnezzar, unharmed. Their accuracy as a historical record has been established with every new fact discovered, and the inference is, that if there still remain some points which seem clouded by impenetrable difficulties, these would be removed if all the facts in the case were known, just as in many instances difficulties have already vanished as our knowledge has grown more perfect.

To illustrate this truth, the point made by the Jewish teacher concerning Lot's wife will answer the purpose. He evidently denies the possibility of the narrative. But Michaelis, one of the most eminent Biblical scholars of the past century, holds that the sentence commonly rendered "And she [Lot's wife] became a pillar of salt," should properly be translated thus: "And to her became a pillar of salt," conveying the idea that a monument was afterwards erected to her of the material so abundant on the shores of the Dead sea. If this is the meaning of the verse, Josephus was probably correct in his statement that the pillar was to be seen there in later times. Whether Michaelis is right or wrong is for scholars to decide, but his suggestion shows conclusively that Biblical students need not resort to the allegorical interpretation in this instance, since a rational solution of the principal difficulty is so near at hand. And what is true in this particular instance is true of the Scriptures as a whole.

Probably nothing has done more harm to the cause of truth than the practice of spiritualizing and allegorizing the Scriptures. When first admitted as legitimate, there is no limit to it. The revealed word is then given up to the fancy of man, each one finding in it what he wants and not what the Lord intended to convey. By this method of reading the church has been made invisible, the ordinances unimportant, the power of the Priesthood obsolete, and the resurrection a figure of speech. In brief, all errors of Christendom rest ultimately on a false and fanciful interpretation.

When the Lord in this age again established His Church, His chosen messengers were not told that there was a hidden, mysterious sense in the written word which they should master and teach the people. On the contrary, they were given to understand that the Bible as existing contained the Word of God. Any imperfection was due to incorrect translation or mis-understanding. In this spirit the Prophets and Apostles of the Church proclaimed the Word of God as found in ancient and modern revelations. The Lord meant what He said. This was the great truth they proclaimed, and on this the very existence of the Church depends. In this fact is the power of the Gospel founded. If the world is to be benefited by religion, it will be by such exponents thereof, who cease the eternal spiritualizing and preach the word as it is written, in its sublime simplicity and unadorned truth.

WILHELM AND BISMARCK.

The week's great event in Germany is the reconciliation between Emperor Wilhelm and Prince Bismarck. It came all the more unexpected because only a few days ago the emperor, at a reception, almost insulted Herbert Bismarck by passing him by in silence.

Since the present chancellor, Caprivi, accepted the office, the Hamburger Nachrichten has continually attacked the government. As that paper was known to be Bismarck's special organ, the ex-chancellor was looked upon as responsible for these attacks. Lately, however, the paper has asserted that it is not inspired by Bismarck, thereby removing one of the greatest obstacles in the way of reconciliation. The emperor was not slow to take the hint. He sent the ex-premier some excellent wine and a congratulatory letter upon his recovery from his recent illness. Bismarck accepted the gift and sent word that he would come to Berlin and personally pay his respects to his young sovereign. At once preparations were made at the capital for the reception of the prince. His visit, which will take place Friday, Jan. 26th, will be made a memorable occasion.

It is not probable that the position of Caprivi will be changed in the least by this happy turn of affairs. Notwithstanding the odds against him, he has filled his place with so much skill as to compel the admiration of even his adversaries. He is in perfect harmony with the emperor and a brave defender of his political views. Bismarck has reached a high age and is no more in possession of strong health. It is not likely that he will be called upon to take any leading part in politics. However, if it be known that the aged statesman, the creator of a united Germany, is in sympathy with the government, that fact alone will gain for the government party hosts of voters throughout the empire. That Caprivi may have had this in view when devoting himself to the task of a peace-maker is not impossible, but it is more probable that the parties concerned have at last given way to a natural desire for peace. The aged prince can have no more aspirations to fight for; Germany's young ruler could not afford to have it recorded on the pages of history, that he allowed the greatest man Germany ever had and the friend of his grandfather, to go down to the grave in disgrace. To do this would, in the language of Richelieu, be more than a sin; it would be an error. Germany rejoices over the occurrence and so do all who love peace and union more than contention.

A BOSTONIAN'S IDEA.

Among the various roads to notoriety and fortune, the one selected by a Bostonian, whose name is given as John Paul, is the most unique. Mr. Paul wagers that he will be able to circle the globe, starting without money and without clothes, and earn $5,000 clear of expenses on the trip, all of which is to be accomplished in a year. The adventurer will commence on February 22. On that day he will present himself at the club and be stripped of every vestige of garment. In this condition he will begin earning his way by cleaning the shoes, brushing the hats and clothes of club members. When he has saved enough to buy himself a suit of clothes he will commence his operations on the street and give all unemployed an object lesson. By selling papers, running errands, etc., he feels confident that he will soon be able to leave Boston and start on the trip. To earn enough to save $5,000 he considers an easy undertaking.

It is probable that the hardest part of the work will be in the beginning. No doubt when part of the journey is completed he will have gained so much notoriety that as a curiosity in a dime museum he would be a decided financial success. It would not be surprising if he should be able to accomplish his purpose in even a shorter space of time than contemplated.

The ingenuity of an individual in planning such a scheme, and his persistency, if he follows it out until completed, deserves to be admired. But had these qualities been made use of with a view to the benefit of others as well as to their possessor, great results might have followed. It is very well to give the unemployed an object lesson, but when this kind of lesson is given the naked fact remains that not all persons in that condition can make freaks of themselves and circle the globe. If they did, the patience and curiosity of the public would of course soon be exhausted and the unfortunates would again be compelled to fall back on honest, productive labor for support. Curious may be well enough in their line and their place, but for any really useful purpose in society they are generally almost worthless. In fact, as they become common they also cease to be curious.

THE UTE REMOVAL.

The Durango, Colorado, Southwest has the following on the subject of removing the Southern Ute Indians from their present reservation in Colorado over into San Juan county, Utah:

The thing to do is to move the Utes to Utah. Give them the reservation they have picked out for their occupation. Every lever should be brought to bear now, before the passage of the Utah admission bill. It is not wise to change the direction of the pull, if pull we have. If there were no chance of getting the proposed bill through, or if there were serious objections to the Blue Mountain reservation, it would change matters somewhat; but as the principal opposition to the bill comes from the Indian Rights association, which objects simply to the removal and not to the reservation, it is wiser to direct all our energies towards the main question of removal in accordance with the bill and entertain no other proposition unless as a last resort.

The Journal quoted from would give people to understand that the Indians desire to be removed to "the reservation they have picked out" and that there is no particular opposition to the measure except that of the Indian Rights association. The facts are that the Southern Utes, when they were crowded from their former reservation, "picked out" their present location in southwestern Colorado; the desire to have them removed is wholly on the part of greedy white men in the Centennial state who are eager to gain possession of the lands of the Indians; the effect of the removal would be to crowd many of the settlers in San Juan county from their hard-earned homes and deprive them of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property. The sum of the scheme is to rob the San Juan settlers to give to the Coloradoans, and it is strenuously opposed by all the parties interested except those eager to grab the Indian land.

OH, BE WISE!

The News wishes every member of the Legislative Assembly, before voting on the bills now pending affecting financial matters, such as the taxing of mortgages, trust deeds, etc., could glance over a paper that came to the table of the editor this morning. It contains a mighty powerful sermon on this particular subject, and if there is anything in logic, analogy and experience, it ought to warn us as a Territory from the brink of the chasm into which some of the proposed legislation would surely plunge us.

We refer to the Rocky Mountain Herald of Denver, for Saturday, January 20. It is a large twelve page issue; and of these twelve large pages, fully nine and a half are filled with solid advertisements in the smallest type announcing trustees' sales of property. By actual count this one paper alone contains two hundred and forty notices of such sales!

Does any one want to know what has caused this deadly rush of money-lenders to realize their cash, regardless of its effect on the borrowers and on the credit of the community? The answer is easy: Colorado's legislature is also in session, specially convened by a governor holding fallacious and extreme views of national and local finance, and there has been much talk of cranky legislation on money matters—just such legislation, in fact, as the News has deprecated here in the Utah Legislature. Is there any need to multiply words, in the presence of such an example as this?

The gentleman who brings the above-named paper to our attention, says: "Your position is sound; stick to it!" Indeed we will stick to it; and we appeal to the members of the Legislature who may be on the opposite side, or still in doubt, to come over to the right; refuse to pass or favor the vicious legislation; and brush away from the credit of our unsullied commonwealth any cloud or doubt which, strengthened, could not fail to bring wholesale ruin.

DECIDEDLY NOT.

"A Subscriber," writing from one of the southern counties under date of January 16, submits the following:

Will you please tell us whether or not Presidents Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball participated in masked balls or masked themselves at such balls in Salt Lake City at any time during their lives?

There is a man down here who is trying to make the young people believe that masked balls are the proper thing; hence the above question.

The most diligent inquiry fails to reveal the slightest foundation for an affirmative answer to "A Subscriber's" query. On the other hand there is no difficulty whatever in finding among those who knew Presidents Young and Kimball best, and were most closely and intimately associated with them up to the time of their death, the most decided kind of a negative answer. The News does not believe for a moment that either of them at any time or in any place countenanced masquerade balls; and it feels perfectly safe in characterizing as ridiculous and false any statement that they or either of them ever participated in such mummery.

The counsel of the Church authorities during President Young's lifetime and during that of his successor, President Taylor, was always strongly denunciatory of masquerade parties. They were forbidden with all the emphasis that words could be made to bear, as offering opportunity for wrongdoing, at least a cloak under which temptation could be brought needlessly and dangerously near to the innocent and unwary. The attitude of President Woodruff and his associates today is precisely the same. The Church is radically opposed to such nonsense, and warns its members solemnly against it; and it is the duty of the authorities in any Stake or ward where such persuasion is attempted as our correspondent alludes to, to lift their voices and set their faces sternly and firmly against it.

A STATE'S DISGRACE.

Two men by the name of Mitchell, at present in the state of Florida, are fair recipients this morning of all the sympathy that is deserved by those who think they can do things which they quickly find they cannot do, and of all the contempt that goes to those who make loud claims as to what they intend to do and wind up without giving any real evidence that their talk was anything more than an impudent play for effect. If the persons named are entitled to a certain measure of pity, therefore, they are also objects at which to hurl a long, loud laugh of derision. One of them has been soundly pummeled by a bigger and stouter bruiser, and the other has been shamefully beaten by two prize bullies backed up by a gang banded together and pledged to compass his defeat. It's a sweet spectacle, truly, view it from whatever standpoint we may!

The one deserving of most attention is of course the governor of the state. During many weeks he has kept the public prints full of bombastic promises that the fair and flowery face and name of Florida should not be soiled by a prize ring blot. In a weak and desultory sort of fashion he has announced first one scheme, then another, for preventing the encounter. The club managing the details of the fight were thus kept fully advised of his intentions—who knows but this was his chief desire?—and managed to circumvent him at every turn. At last he committed the insane blunder of gathering troops in Jacksonville and fulminated dire threats of martial law. Now, if there is any one thing that more than another disgusts and angers an American community, it is the meddling of soldiers and the promise of military rule. This is not the country for that sort of thing—it might do in Russia or Germany, but hardly for the greatest Republic under the sun; and there is no doubt that in this his last resort, the governor estranged mere friends and chilled the ardor of more civil officers for the enforcement of the law, than if he had been an open and willing tool of the Duval club all the way through. It is a fine commentary on the strength of American institutions, is it not, that in order to prevent two human brutes coming into conflict and thumping each other into gory unconsciousness for the delectation of an audience hardly less brutal, a sovereign state of the American Union must be placed under martial law and the armed tread of troops wake the echoes of its chief city's streets!

No; if the governor had really meant all that his dramatic utterances seemed to imply, there would have been no fight in Jacksonville or in Florida yesterday. He could have had the two ruffians taken into custody and locked up in jail for threatening to defy the law of the state. If these had been in need of choice company, he could have sent to them the officers of the Duval club for the same reason. No requirement of law can be construed to demand that officers, knowing of an intended crime, must dumbly wait until the crime is actually committed or is in progress. A little resolution and earnestness would have knocked the whole program of the fighters and their abettors sky-high, and the moral sentiment and common sense of the entire nation would have applauded the act.

As to the brawny principals in the disgusting mill, no more acceptable display of their physical strength and perfection, and no more appropriate ending to their long weeks of preparation, could be desired than the exercise of their seasoned muscles in breaking rock a few months for the improvement of the public streets of the Florida capital. But of course, that need not be expected. The words of the dispatch announcing their arrest, will be easily believed in view of all that has already transpired: "It is understood that the arrest was merely formal and that further proceedings will be of like character."

NAPOLEON III. POISONED.

It has always been supposed that the death of Louis Napoleon, the last emperor of France, which occurred at Chislehurst in January, 1873, was due to the operation of lithotomy performed on him. This was the cause assigned by the attending physicians. There seems, however, to be room for doubt as to the correctness of this story, and the true particulars may yet be given to the public.

A writer in the St. Louis Globe Democrat claims to have obtained the facts from Dr. Thomas W. Evans, the American dentist who assisted Empress Eugenie to escape from Paris during the war and who was familiar with many details connected with the ill-fated emperor. According to this authority the real cause of death was a dose of chloral administered two days after the operation.

The removal of the calculus was successfully accomplished, it is claimed, by Sir Henry Thompson with the assistance of several physicians. Napoleon endured the operation well and everything looked favorable to the patient's recovery, and to the great joy of the family. On the day following the operation the patient's temperature was normal and he enjoyed the food offered to him. The surgeon regarded him as being out of danger. Sir William Gull, the emperor's physician, had charge of the prescriptions, and on the evening of the second day after the operation, he ordered a dose of chloral. The emperor objected and obstinately refused to take it at first, but finally yielded to the combined entreaties of the eminent doctor and the empress. He swallowed the dose. Its effect was at first great depression and then sleep, but it was the sleep from which the science of man could not arouse him. Notwithstanding all efforts to revive him, he soon expired. Dr. Gull, who is said to have ordered the fatal dose, is now dead, and it is thought the full particulars will soon be published.

Recently, it will be remembered, the death of Professor Tyndall was charged to the same deadly drug given by mistake. Many more "mistakes" of the same kind, that do actually occur, will perhaps never be known. But from all reports, care enough is not exercised in the handling of the narcotics so extensively used by certain schools of the medical fraternity.

A TRIPLE STANDARD.

In these days when financial science is being discussed as never before in modern times, if at all in the world's history, data that will help to elucidate its problems is being sought for everywhere. Financial, like political science, must depend largely for its development upon lessons drawn from the experience of mankind, and its study must consist mainly in ascertaining what those lessons have been. One of the strongest arguments in favor of the use of silver as money is drawn from the history of our race, which shows that, from the most remote ages of antiquity to the present, it has been so used, generally if not always in connection with gold, and with beneficial results.

There is in existence an authentic history of an ancient people who had not only the double standard of gold and silver with which to measure values, but a third standard, viz: grain. The nation here referred to flourished on the American continent, before the Christian era, and was called Nephites. Some account of their fiscal system is given in the eleventh chapter of Alma, one of the Book of Mormon writers, from which we quote the first nineteen verses:

Now it was in the law of Mosiah that every man who was a judge of the law, or those who were appointed to be judges, should receive wages according to the time which they labored to judge those who were brought before them to be judged.

Now if a man owed another, and he would not pay that which he did owe, he was complained of to the judge; and the judge executed authority, and sent forth officers that the man should be brought before him; and he judged the man according to the law and the evidences which were brought against him, and thus the man was compelled to pay that which he owed, or be stripped, or be cast out from among the people as a thief and a robber.

And the judge received for his wages according to his time: a senine of gold for a day, or a senum of silver, which is equal to a senine of gold; and this is according to the law which was given.

Now these are the names of the different pieces of their gold, and of their silver, according to their value. And the names are given by the Nephites; for they did not reckon after the manner of the Jews, who were at Jerusalem; neither did they measure after the manner of the Jews, but they altered their reckoning and their measure, according to the minds and the circumstances of the people, in every generation, until the reign of the judges; they having been established by King Mosiah.

Now the reckoning is thus: a senine of gold, a seon of gold, a shum of gold, and a limnah of gold.

A senum of silver, an amnor of silver, an ezrom of silver, and an onti of silver.

A senum of silver was equal to a senine of gold; and either for a measure of barley, and also for a measure of every kind of grain.

Now the amount of a seon of gold, was twice the value of a senine;

And a shum of gold was twice the value of a seon;

And a limnah of gold was the value of them all;

And an amnor of silver was as great as two senums;

And an ezrom of silver was as great as four senums;

And an onti was as great as them all.

Now this is the value of the lesser numbers of their reckoning;

A shiblon is half of a senum; therefore, a shiblon for half a measure of barley;

And a shiblum is a half of a shiblon;

And a Leah is the half of a shiblum.

Now this is their number, according to their reckoning.

Now an antion of gold is equal to three shiblons.

At the period of their history to which the foregoing relates the Nephites lived under a free government, practically a republic. They were so far advanced in civilization as to have an elaborate system of coinage, multiplied in character with an exact ratio between gold and silver. "A senum of silver was equal to a senine of gold." As to what that ratio was we are not informed.

The weights and values of the respective coins were fixed by law, as also were the measures and values of grain. While the declaration is not specifically made that grain was constituted a legal tender, such would seem to be the practical effect of fixing by law the measures and values of it. A certain silver coin, and a certain gold coin, were by the law made equal to a certain quantity of barley, or other grain. Under such a law, grain would, apparently, at least in a practical sense, be money. And there was no reason why it should not be. Easily stored, capable of being kept an indefinite length of time without deterioration, it might readily change owners without changing location, and its intrinsic value could never be questioned. Further, a given quantity of it always represented a given amount of human labor.

There is no intimation that the Nephite nation suffered any disadvantage on account of their triple standard. On the contrary, what is known of their history while it was in force would indicate the contrary. They lived in a region in which the precious metals abounded, and no doubt mining was an important industry with them. They were also an agricultural and pastoral people. Under their triple standard, certain products of their farms as well as of their mines, were money. In other words, it mattered not whether a man labored to till the earth or to extract its riches from beneath its surface, the direct and immediate results of his labor were money.

The law which created this state of things fixed the wages of at least one class of workers, the judges, and probably of others, and no doubt it sought, by the measures of grain and values of coin which it prescribed, to so adjust the relations between capital and labor, and producer and consumer, as to secure protection and justice to all. It was a law that had been decreed prior to the establishment of the republic, by a good and wise king named Mosiah, who reigned over and taught his people under the inspiration of the Almighty. It is more than probable that modern legislators and statesmen might, were they willing to investigate such a source of information, obtain valuable suggestions by studying the history, laws and institutions of the ancient inhabitants of America, as set forth in the Book of Mormon.

WHERE MONEY MAY BE SAVED.

One cause to which a great measure of the "hard times" in Utah may be attributed is the lack of economy exhibited by so many people. Of course each head of a family will resent the imputation that he has connived at waste or extravagance, and wife and children alike will lay the flattering unction to their souls that in general they have been paragons of economical living. Yet the fact that there has been dire wastefulness on the part of a great portion of the community is heralded in every business street of every city and town, and is depicted in such glaring letters that he who runs may read.

This particular waste is not in a wanton destruction of property, but is in a line that proves even more injurious to the community from the fact that it is not so easily curbed by general regulations. It consists in a failure of people to utilize the time, talent and resources at hand in a way to add to the material wealth of the community as well as the individual. Of course everybody is not chargeable with this lack of economy; some out and contrive and do the best they can with the means at their command. And not all of those who are blameable are at fault in the same particulars. There are almost as many channels for waste as there are different avocations for workers.

An illustration in one feature may serve to apply the general rule. For instance, an inquiry into the business of the city markets discloses the fact that thousands of pounds of poultry are annually imported into Utah for local consumption, and millions of eggs are brought into the Territory each year for home use. At the same time much of the food that would go toward producing good poultry and poultry products at home is permitted to waste, and the time necessary to care for the birds is spent in less profitable occupations.

When the facts are pointed out to those who should render this situation otherwise, there is little attempt at justification because there is no reasonable excuse to offer; but affairs are permitted to go on in about the same old way. The tariff or some other subject comparatively foreign to the issue is charged with being the main cause of all trouble, when the fact is that neither tariff nor anti-tariff legislation will help a community that refuses or neglects to utilize its own resources and produce more than it consumes.

So far as the raising of poultry is concerned, there is no better place in the country for the business than in this Territory, and instead of importing, Utah should have for export millions of dollars' worth of chicken, ducks, geese, turkeys, and other fowl, as well as eggs, and thus obtain a large income from the outside, besides retaining at home the money that now goes out to purchase these commodities. To attain this desirable end it is not necessary to institute big poultry farms or to invest a large amount of capital. In fact the purpose can be effected in an easier and better way. Large poultry farms have not been attended with the success that small yards have met with, for numerous reasons; but a limited number of poultry properly cared for proves a profitable investment.

Those who have plots of ground in the suburbs or small tracts of land or farms close in to cities and towns can do the best at poultry raising. A flock of a hundred fowl is large enough in one yard to achieve profitable and satisfactory results. It is better to have less than this number rather than go above it, because of enemies of the feathered tribe, in the form of thieves and disease. There are scores of families close to market who could attend to flocks of twenty-five or fifty chickens, or even larger, without inconvenience, yet who do nothing in that line at present. The ordinary work of feeding, etc., could be performed by such members of the family as usually attend to household duties.

Like everything else of which a success is to be made, the start must be right and systematic operations be continued. A comfortable poultry house should be provided, with suitable surroundings. The cost for this is comparatively small, while the annoyances of the ordinary loose-jointed hen coop are dispensed with. Good breeds of fowl should be selected, and everything should be kept clean, to guard against vermin. Then with regular feeding the financial returns will come in as regularly. As chickens thrive upon that which they gather in the yards or fields which otherwise would go to waste, the expense of feeding them is but little, and the reward for their care even at low market prices is gratifying. This is conclusively shown in the experience of some families near town who annually net a considerable sum by the method suggested.

The News is desirous of doing its level best for the good of the people in any direction, particularly in the development of local industries and resources, and its columns are open for the dissemination of information regarding any branch of the subject. As poultry raising has been named, an invitation is hereby extended to all interested in poultry, and particularly those engaged in poultry raising, to contribute their views and experiences in this matter, that our readers may be placed in the possession of further general and special information regarding this industry, the proper development of which means the saving of a large amount of money for home use and benefit.

WE LIVE, AND LEARN.

A very influential and widely read periodical among those for whom it is especially conducted, as indicated in its title, is Primary Education, a monthly published in Boston and now fairly started on its second year. It seems to be carefully edited, and within its 36 pages may be found a great variety of interesting and valuable information for those great evangelists of light and knowledge—the primary teachers. The News has read the January number with much pleasure, and has been particularly struck with a letter published on the "Correspondence" page, treating upon the public schools of Salt Lake City.

"Only three years ago," says the writer, "the public schools were organized. Until that time all children who received an education were obliged to attend a church or private school. In most cases these schools were held in small buildings near or attached to the 'meeting-houses.' The majority of parents were too poor to pay the required tuition, consequently only a small number of children received even the rudiments of an education." (The italics are ours.)

Then follow a couple of paragraphs about the great educational avalanche that came with the election of a board of education in 1890, the employment of about one hundred teachers, the use of "stores, dwelling-houses and the old schoolhouses which were made as comfortable as possible," all resulting in an amount of work that "would have astonished a quiet eastern city." It was a grand opportunity to establish ideal schools, the writer continues, because "there were no old ideas to overthrow"—it was like beginning in a new and untrodden field; before, a virgin wilderness; lo, now, an educational paradise.

But progressive modern thinkers were needed! Where could they be had? Primary Education's correspondent is candid; she [for the writer is a lady] says that "good experienced teachers from many parts of the Eastern states were called." The attractions of the wonderful Salt Lake Valley, its historic interest, its ever-snow-clad mountains, its healthful climate, etc., etc., were something of an inducement. But in addition to scenery and climate "they were given large salaries." No wonder that "many responded to the call." Alas, they found "Mormon and Gentile children attending the same school," and "all craving mental food." They are bright, smart children, and "having been deprived of the advantages of public schools for so long, they look upon them as a special privilege," etc., etc. Very complimentary reference is made to the efficiency of Dr. Millepugh and the harmony of the associations between him and the teachers—all of which every local reader will endorse—and there are a few pleasantly given figures as to school expenditures and the increase in scholars and teachers; finally, signed, "M. Adelaide Holton, supervisor of Primary schools."

We thought our readers would be pleased with this article, hence we have given it a hasty review. Particularly will they find delight in those portions relating to the dense ignorance that prevailed prior to the advent of the eastern people, whose affection for snowy mountains and healthful climate was not diminished by the prospect of large wages or the appalling discovery that Mormon and Gentile children were attending the same school, with but very few receiving even the rudiments of an education. Of course we all know that the present schools of Salt Lake City have received the benefit of the expenditure of vast sums of money, and are giving good evidence that the money was well spent. But we all did not know, until we received the dictum of some of these recent importations, that our educational condition before they beamed the light of their intelligence upon us was so hopelessly pitiful. All ought to be able to rejoice, therefore, that the self-sacrificing response to the call on the part of these "good experienced" eastern emigrants was so generous; it has resulted not only in elevating our children, but also in hammering a little knowledge into our older heads.

EDUCATION AND THE CHURCH.

The discourse delivered to the Seventies in the Assembly Hall last night, Jan. 30th, was felt by all present to be one of vast importance. If the suggestions given could be acted upon by the various quorums, the result would be felt in increased efficiency, in every respect, of those called to bear the Gospel message to the nations of the world. The speaker proved conclusively that the Elders of Israel by divine commandment are bound to acquire knowledge, and also that their mission to the world necessitates ardent study. There is not the slightest foundation for the charge, sometimes brought against the Saints, that their cause can best be advocated by an ignorant ministry.

The justice of these remarks is apparent to all familiar with the history of the Church. It is true enough that those first chosen to proclaim the restoration of the Gospel were, when called to the great mission, without much secular learning. Joseph the Prophet was at the time a mere boy. But neither he nor his associates remained ignorant. The divine light that shone in their hearts and illuminated their intellects revealed to them the fact that all nature is the handiwork of their Father; that history is but the record of His dealings with mankind; that the future is in much but a repetition of the past, and that all truth emanates from the same source, from God. Standing on these fundamental principles, broad and strong enough for the grandest philosophical superstructure ever conceived by mortal man, they were naturally led to seek a knowledge and understanding of all that is subject to human inquiry, so far as it was within their reach. It became part of their religion. And they succeeded well. Joseph in later years astonished visitors from far and near by his familiarity with languages, history, political economy and other branches of learning. And he was surrounded by men who used every opportunity of improving themselves in knowledge. Noted theologians were met on their own ground in argument, and the work attracted the attention of learned men as well as of the uneducated.

The analogy between the establishment of the Church in this age and in the beginning of our era is remarkably striking. The great Prophet of Nazareth called certain among His disciples to become His special messengers. They were mostly illiterate men from the humbler ranks of the people. But they did not remain in a condition of ignorance. During the years they followed the Master they received instructions that made them afterwards capable of dealing with the great problems of their age in a manner that their adversaries, with all their learning, could not approach. True, it was the endowment of the Holy Spirit which constituted their power, but this power does not exclude the necessity of knowledge. A mind well stored with facts and filled with the Holy Spirit is a mind that exercises influence on the world for good.

The history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is full of proofs that education is one of the greatest objects of that Church. Amid cruel persecutions and subsequent poverty and destitution the members have struggled to give their children the best education possible under the circumstances, and as conditions have assumed a more favorable aspect, the educational efforts have been extended until today, as is well known, Utah intelligence is in the foremost ranks, wherever the bearers thereof are found. Indeed, the Gospel of Christ brings this with it. Those who understand its principles thirst for knowledge, for the more they know the better they can appreciate those truths which were revealed to the servants of God in this age for the enlightenment of the world.

THE "NEWS'S" OLD HOME.

The Millard Progress, referred to elsewhere as having started publication in Fillmore, contains among other interesting matter the following reference to a historic building still standing in the former capital of Utah Territory:

In the center of the city, on what is known as the State House block, stands the first capitol of Utah Territory.

It is a large three-story brown sandstone structure, and was erected 1852-1853 at a cost of $100,000, $60,000 of which was furnished by the national government, the balance by the people of the Territory.

The building at the present time is the property of the city of Fillmore, and is occupied by the city council on the first floor, while the upper floor or hall has been divided into three spacious school rooms, which are now occupied by the district school.

Two rooms on the first floor, also, have been granted for the use of the Millard Progress, and this paper is now being printed in the same rooms that were once used by the DESERET NEWS company for the printing of that journal.

THE CZAR'S TRAIN.

In providing for his comfort and safety while taking a ride on the railway, the czar of Russia has special regard for the nihilistic attempts that have been made upon his life, and the arrangements of the royal railway train just completed at the Alexandrowski shops at St. Petersburg have a special provision in this direction. Unusually powerful automatic brakes are provided, which can be operated from each seat in each car. By this means the train can be brought to a standstill in a minimum of time from any point at which danger may be discovered. This feature furnishes an important means of protection in cases of efforts to derail or blow up the royal traveler.

The czar's railway train is an elaborate affair. It consists of eleven carriages, one of which is reserved for railway officials, some of whom accompany it on every trip. The interior of all the carriages is appointed with taste and skill. The windows on each side differ in size, in accordance with the requirements of the various compartments. The passages between the coaches are vestibuled. The carriage of the czar and czarina is connected directly with the dining room and an elaborately furnished saloon car. The material of which the whole train is made is of Russian origin and manufacture with the exception of the wheels and axles, which were made at the Krupp factory at Essen, Germany.

It is said that the Russian ruler is very strict in insisting that whatever he has for the use of himself and the royal family should be so far as possible purely Russian in manufacture, and that in the case of the car wheels he only consented for them to come from elsewhere because of special considerations which could not be easily overcome. He is an ardent supporter of home industry and in that respect must command the admiration of all people imbued with a patriotic sentiment, for, while they differ with him as to methods of government, they must recognize his consistency as a true-hearted Russian who stands by his own country products and the handiwork of her mechanics and laborers as against all comers. In this one respect at least the example of Alexander III might be profitably followed by more people in this part of the world than it now is.

SPEAKING FOR THEMSELVES.

The Indian boys at the industrial school, Carlisle, Pennsylvania, do the mechanical work of an eight-page quarto which, under the name of The Red Man, is published twelve times per year. They also furnish a goodly portion of the literary contents, if all the issues of their paper may be judged by the one just to hand, which contains many specimens of choice Indian eloquence, essays, etc. The editorial work of the paper is evidently under able direction—the articles being trenchant and entertaining, and the comments unusually spicy and critical. In the Red Man the red men have a sturdy champion, one who is not only able to see their grievances and the innumerable abuses to which they are still subject, but is also courageous enough to strike boldly at these wrongs and pillory their perpetrators for public scorn. The educational endeavors of the Catholic church among the aborigines receive a sharp assault in the present number, and the failure of the government and its agents to fulfil certain well-defined articles of agreement and treaty with the "original owners of the country" is visited with deserved rebuke. Even the highly-lauded civil service, that utopian and seemingly impracticable political reform, comes in for a smart rap, as the following paragraph will show:

The civil service movement largely rests its claims to universal application on the assumption that the frequent changes under the so-called spoils system will be done away with, because civil service means permanence. Let some member of Congress kindly ask the Indian office for the number of transfers of employees and teachers from one agency to another during the two years since civil service has applied in the Indian service, and then call for the number of such transfers during the forty years previous, and he will find that the number of transfers the past two years will more than double those of the forty previous years. Every disgruntled civil service employee now applies at once for a transfer and gets it as an antidote for discontent. Just how long it will take to establish the more ruinous character of this method remains to be seen. We know one school superintendent who, in two years, by transfers, managed to quarrel with three agents and temporarily ruin three schools before civil service could admit his disqualifications. It seems a fairly safe conclusion that an employee who cannot adjust himself to the work in one place won't do it in another.

ONE OF the leading and most intelligent men in one of the most important agricultural sections of Utah writes as follows with reference to the proposed union of University of Utah and Agricultural College:

As a farmer who has sorely felt the want of technical education in my youth, let me say that if the University be removed away from Salt Lake City, in my judgment, it will lose. Probably the Church farm would be a good place for parts of the great institution. But the technic and mining departments must be in or in the suburbs of the city. I think it should all be as near together as possible and within easy connection.

A BOSTON correspondent of the Christian Cynosure writes:

Mohammedans proselyting in New York, and Mormons in Massachusetts? Two converts to the latter faith were lately baptized in Haverhill, Mass., through a hole cut in the ice. What are we coming to?

Two of you are coming to their senses, and laying the foundation for life eternal. Isn't that worth paying some attention to?

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for this Paper.

THE ALABAMA MOBOCRATS.

LOGAN CITY, Utah, Jan. 24, 1894.

Please find enclosed a copy of the original petition that was signed by some of the Elders and Saints of the South Alabama conference and forwarded to Governor Thomas G. Jones of Alabama. Also reply from the governor, which we very much desire published, as proof to wives and parents of Elders, that we can look for and receive protection in the South. This petition was sent to the governor by our request.

Very truly yours,

J. G. KIMBALL.

THE PETITION.

To the Honorable Thomas G. Jones,
Governor of Alabama:

Dear sir.—For some months past Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ have been traveling and preaching the Gospel in Geneva county, Alabama.

They have been honorable, upright men and have made many friends and some converts to their unpopular and much misunderstood doctrine. They have not been interfered with until recently.

On Sunday night Nov. 5th, 1893, after holding public meeting six Elders and four members of the Church were staying at the home of John McElvin, near Warwick P. O., Geneva county. At 11:25 p. m. all were rudely awakened from slumber by blasphemy and several volleys of musketry fired into the four corners of the house by some unknown parties reported to be forty in number. Several of the shots entered the house but fortunately no one struck.

The marauders dispersed after leaving a notice which was found next morning at the gate, warning the Elders not to preach any more or they would be harshly dealt with.

The same night a notice was left at Westley Starling's (also a member of the Church) in Watford, telling him to stop entertaining the Elders or he and family would be severely punished. About five days later two Elders remained at his house all night. At 11 p. m. several guns were fired just outside the yard and a notice left, stating he had been twice warned and must now look out for himself and family, as they would shoot lower next time.

Mr. Peele, another member of the Church, was warned to leave the county with his family or be exterminated.

Mr. Rufus Strickland, of Watford, who has been a friend, was warned to stop receiving the Elders into his home or he would meet with violence.

John McElvin received a second note, saying they would visit him again. Several other friends have received similar threats, and the Elders have been warned to absent themselves from the county or they would be bushwhacked.

Some of these communications are signed "White Caps," and some are not.

We realize the bitter feeling existing against the Latter-day Saints, due largely to a lack of knowledge regarding their belief and practices.

In the states where they are best known they are protected by the officers of the government.

Several counties of Alabama through prejudice and misrepresentation have allowed many hardships to come upon the defenseless Elders. Only last spring two who had violated no law were brutally whipped by a mob in St. Clair county, not a word being said by the county authorities against it.

The members of the Church are taught to obey the law as construed by the courts and to do good to all men. These rules are found in the twelfth and thirteenth Articles of Faith, which you will find enclosed.

We desire nothing that is unjust and will only ask that you will assist us in securing protection under the law; believing that a loss of life will result in a continuation of this recklessness we bring it to your attention.

A few words from you in the present case will likely stimulate the county officers to do their duty and cause the law breakers to respect law-abiding citizens and their rights. Knowing as we do your stern opposition to all kinds of outlaws we entreat you to use your influence in our protection so long as we uphold the law.

We are your fellow-citizens and taxpayers.

THE REPLY.

STATE OF ALABAMA,
Executive Department,
Office of the Governor,
MONTGOMERY, December 23rd, 1893.
Mr. Z. T. McElvin, Warwick P. O.,
Geneva County, Ala.:

Sir—The governor has received your letter enclosing the petition of the traveling Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and accompanying documents, and directs me to reply.

It is the law of the land, and not the governor's feelings in the matter, which determines his duties and your rights in the premises.

It is hardly necessary to say that in all free governments the civil authority has no right to deal with religious beliefs or opinions. It is "time enough for the rightful purposes of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order." Hence the constitution of Alabama guarantees to every one the right to speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty, "and forbids the establishment of any religion, or the giving of any preference to any religious sect or mode of worship.

As long as your Elders obey the law, they are entitled to the protection of the law, and if in any way transgress its bounds are responsible only to the appointed tribunals of the country, and not to mobs and lawless combinations. All officers of the law are solemnly bound to see that no one is punished except by due course of law, and to use every means in their power to preserve the peace.

I am sure that the civil officers in Geneva will readily aid in bringing to justice any of the marauders who sent the threatening notices, fired into dwellings and did the other lawless acts of which they justly complain. Such acts bring worse evils to society than any evil they can seek to redress.

To start the machinery of justice in motion, the guilty must first be detected, and steps taken to bring them before the appointed tribunals. If you will lay all the evidence before the civil officers, I am sure they will aid in bringing the guilty to justice.

The governor has referred your complaint to the sheriff for appropriate action. Very Respectfully,

HARVEY E. JONES,

Recording Secretary.

Written for this Paper.

THE SITUATION AT ALMY.

RED CANYON, Uinta, Wyoming, Jan. 26, 1894.—The relief committees of Evanston and Almy have done a good work here up to the present, and they are making laudable efforts to secure sufficient provisions to meet the urgent demands of those who are entirely depending on the charity of others for support.

Our near neighbors, the Woodruff settlement, some twenty miles lower down the river, have sent to the relief committee of Almy three large and well loaded wagons with provisions for the people.

There is considerable sickness in the district at present, but it is mostly confined to children. Six children have died this month and a small number of persons of medium age are confined to their room with "chronic rheumatism."

Reports have been put into circulation that the Almy miners are an improvident class of people, that they have made good money for a long time, but have spent it in drink instead of food for their families. I am sorry to say to some extent this is true, but as this class are the exception and not the rule, it would be a gross act of injustice to couple the innocent with the guilty. And with regard to the men making good money, so they have, but it is a long time since. I am quite satisfied that a large number of workmen at these mines have not made more, while an equally large number have made much less, than would pay off their store bill for many months past, in consequence of which the people were ill prepared for such calamity.

The superintendents of the U. P. and U. P. mines gave their workmen of No. 8 liberty to gather up loose coal about Nos. 1, 2, 8 mines, but some of them stepped over the right of private use; they gathered the coal and sold it in Evanston, and, it is said, they bought drink with the money. This thing coming to the superintendent's ears, a notice was put up at the mines which reads thus: "Notice, any person found gathering coal around these mines in future, will be prosecuted as the law directs."

We hope this will be a warning to all whom it may concern—respect your rights and privileges, but do not abuse them, for by so doing you commit a serious injury upon the innocent.

On the resumption of work at the C. P. No. 6 mine on the 22nd inst. some of the men went to the store, after working half a day, to draw a check for provisions and expenses, (powder and oil). The officials gave them a check for $5 and as this amount would only cover the expenses, they wanted another check for provisions, but were refused. In consequence of this the men allege they could not work without food, so under these circumstances the relief committee considered that these families must have their share of what was going out of the relief fund. But from a statement made by Mr. Beeman, it would appear that there was a misunderstanding in the case. He, Mr. Beeman, said they did not require the men to work without food and would allow the men to draw every cent they make out of the store but could not allow them to overdraw the amount they made and thereby add to the old outstanding debt. And we understand that Mr. Beeman further advised the men to economize their expenditure and take care of their means for it may be in the course of a couple of weeks that those who are now at work may have to lay off and another set of men take their places.

We are pleased to learn that the company expect to receive a large order in a few days which we understand, if got, will keep both mines in full work and give steady employment to their men; but in the event of not securing the order, it is hard to say what may be the result. R. R. H.

Written for this Paper.

NEWS FROM MEXICO.

COLONIA PACHECO, Chihuahua, Mexico, Jan. 18, 1894.—In my past correspondence I have written of incidents and the approach of death in varied form, with attendant sorrow and bereavement; but last Sunday, on the occasion of funeral services over the remains of our esteemed brother and friend, Elder Josiah G. Hardy, I am constrained to say it was an occasion of joyous feeling and thanksgiving.

For the past four months Brother Hardy had endured much pain in his right foot from the effects of blood poisoning, or gangrene, beginning in his toes, ultimately affecting the entire foot and leg, terminating in his death on Friday noon, the 12th inst., in his 81st year. He had steadily attended meeting as long as he was able to put his foot on the ground, and when unable longer to attend, realizing that his allotted time was approaching, having previously located and staked out his resting place, he told Bishop J. N. Smith Jr., and myself his will and wishes in regard to burial services, requesting that no expressions of sorrow be manifested, no flattering words of praise be used, and only such uttered as would encourage and stimulate to good works.

The casket, covered with white and beautifully trimmed, was carried to the meeting house at 10 a. m. by six High Priests, of which quorum he was a member. Bishop Smith, after singing and prayer, called on Elder A. F. McDonald and myself to speak appropriate to the occasion and to the wish expressed, and such was the happy flow of the Spirit, giving light and utterance, that not a tear seemed to be shed, but the holy, happy, peaceful feeling, that a good father, a faithful friend to God and man, had ripened and passed to his rest.

From the meeting house we carried and laid him in his chosen place in our pleasantly located cemetery, and under the shadow of these long-leaved mountain pines. His companion, children and many friends in Utah and elsewhere can only rejoice with us in the tried worth and steady integrity of the deceased. Alonzo L. Farnsworth dedicated the ground and grave. The day was beautiful and pleasant throughout.

Elder Josiah G. Hardy was born in the town of Bradford, Essex county, Mass., U. S. A., the 17th of March, 1813. He was the third son of Sylvanus and Mary Boynton Hardy, who early in life taught him strict habits of industry, he learning the carpenter and shoemaking trades, also helping to care for the farm. At the age of twelve years he became impressed with the necessity of repentance, and earnestly sought the Lord for a forgiveness of his sins. At the age of nineteen years he joined the Methodist church, being chosen as steward and class leader. On the 17th of March, 1835, he married Sarah Clark Parker. Afterward becoming dissatisfied with Methodism, he visited many denominations, and finally was impressed to visit the despised Mormons. His visits continued until he was convinced that the Mormons had the truth if his mind could only be satisfied that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God. His doubts were dispelled in the following manner: While passing through the woods on his way to the Sabbath meeting he was impressed to kneel down in prayer by a fallen tree, and humbly ask the Lord for light, and before rising to his feet he received a convincing testimony of the divinity of Joseph's mission, which ever afterwards continued with him.

On the 6th of November, 1842, he was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by Leonard W. Hardy. On March 22nd, 1844, he was ordained to the office of Teacher. On September 4th, 1847, he was ordained to the office of Priest. On May 16th, 1848, he was ordained an Elder, and called to preside over the Bradford branch of the Church, and so continued until emigrating west. On August 20th, 1852, he reached Salt Lake City, Utah. On August 29, 1852, he was ordained into the Twenty-ninth quorum of Seventies, and he was present at the dedication and breaking of ground for the Salt Lake Temple on the 14th of February, 1853. On April 14th, 1856, he was chosen to be first counselor to Leonard W. Hardy, Twelfth ward, Salt Lake City, and on October 19th, 1856, was ordained a High Priest, under the hands of Bishop Edward Hunter and counselors, and set apart as Bishop's counselor as chosen previously. Having resided in St. George for many years, on the 8rd of February, 1892, he started from that place with a part of his family for Mexico, arriving at Colonia Pacheco March 2nd of the same year. With unusual energy for his years he commenced the work of building a new house, and did much in a general way towards building up the colony.

The people of this mission have felt the effects of the prevailing epidemic of la grippe, or influenza; otherwise our conditions and prospects are much improved; and notwithstanding all the flottitious reports of rebels and war, we feel at home, happy, and hopeful for the future. We expect soon to have a telegraph line and be in communication with all the world.

If not too late, I wish all my many friends a happy New Year.

HENRY LUNT.

Written for this Paper.

AUSTRALASIAN MISSION.

AUCKLAND, New Zealand, Dec. 28, 1893.—The semi-annual conference of the Australasian of Mission the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was held at Tupekerunga, Waikato District, New Zealand, December 22nd to 24th inclusive. There were present fourteen Elders from Zion: Wm. T. Stewart, mission President; Wm. Gardner (president), and James S. Abbott, Waikato; L. C. Rasmussen (president), and Christian Petersen, Tauranga; Benjamin Hamblin (president), J. M. Tolman and Ephraim Ellertson, Hauraki; C. B. Bartlett (president), and Thos. J. Morgan, Bay of Islands; Edward J. Palmer (president), Tauranga-nui; D. B. Stewart, Australia. Some 150 natives were in attendance, together with a number of outside Maoris and Europeans.

After singing and prayer, President Stewart opened the first day's proceedings with a short address of welcome to all present. Elder L. C. Rasmussen, president of Tauranga, then reported his district, some 145 members, in good condition, though some were negligent. He gave a very powerful Maori discourse, touching on repentance and latter-day judgment. He was listened to with attention by all. Elder Christian Petersen followed on the restoration of the Gospel and the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The meeting closed with singing, "Ha ka puta mai a Ihu," and prayer by Elder Reiha Aperahama, president of the Te Aroha branch.

The afternoon session opened at 3:30 by the singing of "E Ihu, e te Kīngi nūe," and prayer by Elder Paora Hopervi, president of the Ngaruawahia branch. Elder E. J. Palmer reported his district and spoke on the need of sincere repentance, with obedience to the Gospel. Elder Ephraim Ellertson, spoke to the conference, (L. C. Rasmussen being interpreter) bearing testimony to the Gospel. After singing benediction was offered by Elder Hoani Tautahi Pita, President of the Whangaruru branch.

At the evening service, 8 p. m., "He hari to te tangata" was sung, and prayer was offered by Elder Mita Wepiha, president of the Waikare. Twelve native brethren and sisters bore strong testimonies to the Gospel and to the gifts of healing by the power of God. It was 10 p. m. when Elder Bartlett offered the closing prayer.

On the morning of the 23rd, at 10:30, after singing "Koutou katoa ra, mea iti nei," prayer was offered by Elder Palmer. Elder Bartlett reported his district, and pointed out why the world did not enjoy the blessings and power of the Gospel of Christ. Elder Morgan spoke on baptism, and gave good counsel to the Saints. Elder Finlayson, president of the Opuawhanga branch (European), also spoke, Brother Rasmussen interpreting. Elder Paora Hoperri followed, and encouraged the people to live good lives and keep in the straight and narrow path. Elder Benjamin Hamblin reported Hauraki in good condition. Dismissal prayer was offered by Elder Rewi Mokena.

In the afternoon, at 2:15, the meeting was addressed by Elder Gardner, who reported the Waikato (five branches) in good order, having lately reorganized some of them. He spoke very feelingly of his labors when here in 1884 among the Waikatos. The closest attention was paid by the natives, whose eyes demonstrated the affection they entertained for him. He counselled them to stand firm against every temptation and receive the glorious reward of eternal life. Elder Mita Wepiha followed in a few choice remarks, urging the natives to spread the truth by precept and by example. Elder J. M. Folkman then testified to the work of God and Joseph's divine mission.

The evening meeting was opened at 8:30, when Brother Hamblin delivered his "poroporoake," or farewell address. Eight natives testified. Prayer was offered by Elder Kaihimo.

Dec. 24th, at 10:30 a. m., Elder D. B. Stewart (Brother Rasmussen interpreting) reported the work in Australia as on the improve. The Elders were unable to fill all the calls made upon them. The Lord is softening the hearts of the people, new avenues are opening up and the brethren have their hands full of work to attend this "Hui Maori." Elder Goff spoke a few words in Maori, followed by Elder Hollingworth, who reported this district, six branches, one European, four natives and one mixed.

At 1:30 there was held a short European service in the school house, but a heavy rainstorm prevented a large attendance. President Stewart spoke on the first principles of the Gospel.

At 3:25 we held Sacrament meeting. A few appropriate remarks were made by President Stewart, when the general authorities of the Church were unanimously sustained by the vote of the conference; also Elder Wm. Gardner, as president of the Australasian mission, and Elders Palmer and Folkman as presidents of Waikato and Hauraki districts respectively. President Stewart explained the doctrine of "common consent," and how a forgiveness of sins may be obtained by believers. Advised the Saints to be true to their covenants, that the labors of the servants of God among them may bring forth fruit, and gave much good advice. The house was filled to its utmost capacity, many standing outdoors during the services. The Spirit of God was poured out on the whole congregation, and it was a time long to be remembered by all present.

At the evening services prayer was offered by Elder Te Auapouri. Elder James E. Abbott addressed the conference, and thirteen native members responded to the call for testimonies. Elder Wm. Gardner cautioned the Saints not to allow the Evil One to find them asleep, but manifest in their lives the instructions given during conference. Elder Stewart then thanked the kind-hearted people who had fed the natives and Elders during the "Hui," and asked the Lord to bless them for their untiring efforts. Conference adjourned till April next in Te Mahia district. Thus closed an important event in the history of this mission, and all joined in saying they never experienced a more divine influence than was present during the conference.

The meetings were all made under the shade of lovely weeping willow trees by the side of the Waikato river, except those in the evening and sacrament meeting on Sunday afternoon.

The following day many visitors were present to see the innocent sports and pastimes that were indulged in by all. It seemed peculiar to wish each other a happy Christmas under such circumstances. Though there was a large gathering, not a single incident occurred to mar the unalloyed pleasure and joy of our "Hui." On Tuesday morning, the 26th, at 10:30, the visiting Saints prepared to leave for their homes, and the parting was hard. Many wept. The little steamer owned by Brother Te Whiu, towed our big "waka" (canoe) with its heavy burden, up the Waikato, to the shouts of "Haere ra, Haere, Haere," of the people who remained, with the waving of handkerchiefs, and the singing of hymns by those departing. Slowly we traveled against the current, reaching Rangiriri railway station two hours late for the train, the time of which had been changed owing to the holidays. It was decided to remain till next morning in the goods shed. Some of the Ngaruawahia Saints, who left for their homes at 1:30 p. m., made a collection to buy us food to eat while waiting for the train. Next day our train came along, and we of the north proceeded to Auckland, dispersing from thence to our homes and several fields of labors.

We had a Priesthood meeting Christmas morning, in which the Elders received necessary instruction from Presidents Stewart and Gardner, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

B. H. HOLLINGSWORTH, Conference Clerk.

CHURCH THEOLOGY CLASS.

After the opening prayer by Elder George Reynolds and the consideration of incidental questions, a review of the previous lesson was taken. Instructor James E. Talmage then proceeded with the lecture, outlines of which had been distributed to over 1100 students present. The subject was the fifth article of faith which, as given through the Prophet Joseph Smith, reads: "We believe that a man must be called of God by 'prophecy and by the laying on of hands' by those who are in authority to preach the Gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof."

Authority from God was one of the characteristics of the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. An array of men, sectarian ministers, stand up against them claiming none and having no authority, yet in the Holy Scriptures no instance is recorded where any true Prophet of God delivered any message or performed any act without being authorized to do so. Indeed this speaking with authority was a power that distinguished them. The instances of Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Aaron, Joshua and Samuel were particularly referred to, their authority among the people being unquestioned, while all the prophets and servants of God down to Malachi and Zecharias made specific declarations concerning their authority and calling. Also the Apostles of Christ were specially commissioned.

This authority was bestowed on others by prophecy and laying on of hands. Prophecy was the right and power of interpreting and knowing the will of God. That the imposition of hands was general cannot consistently be doubted. In cases of ordination where such is not mentioned, no other details are given and this cannot be taken as proof that this method was not used.

The Patriarchal Priesthood descended from Adam to Noah and from him to Moses under the hands of the fathers.

Authority thus bestowed is respected of God. Not alone on earth but in heaven is it honored and jealously guarded. It is according to reason and order that men who officiate in the ordinances of the Gospel should be divinely commissioned. The nations of the earth in civil and military organizations regard authority and the respect due to it, as most important. Yet none can be more jealous of their power than is the Lord with His Priesthood, as He repeatedly declares.

Unauthorized ministrations were punished severely, and even aspirations toward such are sinful. How swift this punishment did overtake the guilty when the Lord saw fit to make such examples was strikingly shown in the cases of Korah and his associates, Miriam, Uzza and King Saul. This subject was to receive further consideration at the next session of the class.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder H. P. Richards.

Elder Thomas Hicken, of Heber City, called at the News office and related a sad story to a reporter regarding the death of his wife.

Elder Hicken left his home eight months ago to fill a mission in the Southern states. On the 21st inst. he received a letter while in his field of labor, in Sullivan county, Tennessee, from the president of mission notifying him that he was released to return home on account of the serious illness of his wife. That evening he boarded the train for Utah and arrived here today over the Rio Grande. How ill his wife was he knew not though he worried greatly along the route of travel and had strange forebodings as to the result. The shock he sustained this afternoon on being informed that his wife was dead was a severe one. The particulars beyond the fact that she gave birth to a child a few days before her demise are not known. The funeral took place several days ago. The deceased was the mother of six children whom she leaves for the sorrowing husband to care for. The eldest is but twelve years old.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

On Friday night the Mount Pleasant Equitable Co-operative store made an assignment, the liabilities being $18,420.18; assets $16,830.

Word has just been received from the special correspondent of the News in Washington that President Cleveland is said to contemplate the inauguration of a policy hostile to the admission of new states during his term.

Jan. 25 County Treasurer Lynn received from Ex-County Collector Hardy a check for $7,294.73 for the Salt Lake county school tax fund, the questions relating to the retention of the amount by the collector up to the present having been settled. About 60 per cent of the amount which the check calls for will go to the city board of education.

A serious accident was narrowly averted in Richmond Thursday, says the Logan Journal. Apostle Merrill started out for a drive with a fractious team. They ran away, struck a horse with the sleigh pole, killed it, threw Mr. Merrill out and got back to his corral without much further damage. A small boy riding the horse that was killed escaped without injury.

Elder George C. Naegle and wife, of Pachuco, Mexico, paid the News a parting call January 24, just previous to their taking the train on their way to Europe. Elder Naegle leaves on a mission, and is to succeed Elder J. J. Scharrer in the presidency of the Swiss and German mission. Elder Naegle and wife were in good spirits and take with them the best wishes of the people for success in the labor of love in which they will be engaged.

A vacancy having been occasioned in the Hunter ward Bishopric, of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion, by Brother Alfred A. Jones tendering his resignation as second counselor, Brother Joseph N. Morris was unanimously sustained to fill the vacancy, and was ordained a High Priest and set apart to labor as second counselor to Bishop William Miller, under the hands of President Joseph E. Taylor last Sunday.

Thursday afternoon about three o'clock James H. Morgan, deputy auditor and recorder of Ada county, Idaho, was found dead in the woodshed at his residence, 108 Bannock street.

Mr. Morgan was well known in Salt Lake and Ogden, and, says the Boise Statesman, had for months been troubled with dropsy, which a few weeks ago developed alarming symptoms, affecting his heart.

The Bear Lake Post says: "Some time last Monday night, between 11 and 12 o'clock, the district school house at Auburn, Star valley, by some way as yet unknown, caught fire and burned to the ground. All the school furniture, consisting of desks, charts, maps, etc., and a great many books belonging to the students were also destroyed. The loss to the district is estimated at not less than $500. The school will probably be continued in the meeting house until another school house can be erected.

The following named gentlemen have been appointed by the Chamber of Commerce as delegates to attend the Trans-Mississippi congress which will begin a four days' session at San Francisco on the 18th of February: O. J. Salisbury, J. H. Bacon, George M. Scott, W. S. McCornick, George Y. Wallace, M. J. Gray, B. F. Grant, A. H. Cannon, C. O. Whittemore, F. W. Ross, W. H. Culmer, L. C. Crossman, D. C. Adams, W. H. Rowe, ex-officio.

News comes from San Francisco to the effect that ex-Policemen Curran and Johnson, who recently skipped out from Salt Lake, are in the Midwinter Fair city looking, like Micawber, for something to "turn up," but up to the present have been very unfortunate and are in very hard circumstances. Mize Sullivan, who did work for Salt Lake at Chicago under Chief Bonfield, and who went to the coast at the close of the great Exposition, has not yet been given employment but expects an appointment in a few days.

The patiently awaited commission of Colonel Merritt, as Chief Justice for Utah, arrived by mail from Washington Saturday, Jan. 27. Having qualified subsequently before Judge Bartch, in chambers, by taking the required oath of office, his Honor, promptly on the stroke of ten o'clock, took his seat on the bench of the Third district court and proceeded at once with the hearing of the usual Saturday motions. There was a large attendance of members of the bar, many of whom seemed anxious to take up matters which have been subjected to annoying but unavoidable delay for the past two weeks.

A case had been worked up by the officers against Alex. Ogilvie in relation to the late cattle-stealing episode, says the Richfield Advocate, and Deputy Marshal Bean notified Clate Gannett that he was wanted as a witness in the case, but Mr. Gannett took the first good opportunity to leave the county. The fact was made known and Deputy Marshals Mount and Bean followed and brought him back and he was taken before Commissioner Jensen and bound over as a witness to appear before the grand jury at Provo. The officers are on the track of Ogilvie and he is liable to be collared any minute. The commissioner supposes there will be a clear case against him.

Tuesday night Officer Ferris picked up at Ogden one M. J. Murphy, a Salt Lake railroad man, on the street, in a state of helpless intoxication, and Murphy asked the officer to show him the Broom hotel, which Mr. Ferris very kindly did. Yesterday morning Murphy declared that he had been robbed of $300 the night before, and insinuated very strongly that it was the officer who had done it. Officer Ferris heard the story and hunted Murphy up. Later, says the Standard, Mr. Murphy emphatically denied the statement that he had been robbed by the officer or any one else, or that he had ever said so, as he only had a few dollars when he left Salt Lake.

For several months past the public has been informed of periodical fires at the drug stores of Leyman & Company at the corner of First South and West Temple streets and also at the corner of Fourth South and Second West streets. In each case there was heavy insurance and strong suspicion of incendiaryism. The indications were so pronounced at the blaze which occurred at the last named store on Sunday night that the fire chief yesterday notified the insurance companies that they had better cancel the policies in order to protect themselves, but before they had taken action another fire destroyed a good deal of property at two o'clock this morning.

Lizzie Zeiglnhart strayed away from her home in Ogden Jan. 25 says the Sun of that place January 26, and although diligent search was made for her all day no trace of her whereabouts could be obtained. Early this morning David Burns, who resides near Uintah, saw a young girl traveling along the road near his house. He accosted her and asked her where she was going, when she replied "to California." She was benumbed with cold, and thinking everything was not right Burns took her to his house and provided her with food. He communicated with Sheriff Beinap, and the girl was brought back to her home. When she left she took with her all the wearing apparel she could readily carry, and these articles were found strewn along the road.

At 4:30 yesterday (Monday) afternoon the dead body of John W. Martin was found in his room in the Weston residence on Lincoln avenue. In the room were also found a letter and a small box which had contained morphine. The letter was dated Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock and stated: "I have suffered for three years with what the doctors call locomotorataxia. There seems to be no hope for my recovery, so I take this mode of ending my suffering. This is premeditated. I hope it will be success."

The deceased was a veteran railway man and acted in the capacity of conductor on the Union Pacific, Rio Grande Western and Southern Pacific. He was divorced from his wife in Ogden four or five years ago. He had a brother in Indiana who was notified of the suicide.

The Twentieth ward has probably been the scene of as many if not more bold hold-ups and brutal assaults than any other outlying district of the city. In it Jan. 25 near the corner of I and Second streets, George Davis, a plumber, was brutally felled to the ground by a blow from a slung shot in the hands of a thug two of whom were standing under a shade tree as he approached them.

The blow was so violent that the point of the left cheek bone was crushed in. While their unfortunate victim sought to rise he was relieved of his watch and chain. Before a complete ransacking of his pockets had been made they appeared to become frightened and accordingly decamped without the few dollars they might have secured had they been less hasty. They were heard to remark as they started off. "We struck the wrong man."

Davis laboriously and painfully made his way to the police station.

where he related his story and gave a pretty accurate description of his assailants.

THURBER, Wayne county, Utah, Jan. 25, 1894.—We are having excellent weather for this time of the year, only windy. We will soon have a new town. We have got it all laid off and I think it will be a beautiful town sooner or later.

We have had quite a lot of sickness this winter, but it is abating somewhat.

We had quite an exciting horse race last Monday between the Tanner horse and Peterson mare. The horse came out best. G. W. B.

There was a case of suicide at the Penitentiary farm at the mouth of Parley's canyon yesterday afternoon. The victim was an old man named Wilson Tuttle, who has been allowed to stop at the farm and do chores for some time past for his board. He was about 70 years of age and came here from Maine about a year ago. So far as known he has no relatives in this Territory and but very few friends.

He was found in a semi-conscious condition and Drs. Root and Witcher were summoned. It was known from the first that it was a case of self-destruction, as the old man left the following note:

"I have taken morphine with suicidal intent. But there is no one to blame but myself. It was all my own fault."

The physicians sought for hours to resuscitate the old man, and all of the restoratives known to the profession were used but without avail, and at one o'clock this morning he stopped breathing and was pronounced dead.

BEAVER, Jan. 30.—Last night, or early this morning, Charles Williams, aged about 32, dark complexion, black eyes, about five feet nine inches in height, and George Thomas, alias Edwards, about thirty years old, five feet eight and a half inches in height, light complexion blue eyes, nearly all his front teeth out, sawed out four iron bars in the window of their sleeping cells in the jail in the basement of the court house here and escaped. Both are of slim build. They were arrested at Frisco, this county, during the early part of this month, for stealing ready-made clothing out of the Horn Silver Mining company's store there, and on preliminary examination before a justice of the peace, who found the evidence clear against them, he held them to await the action of the grand jury of the court here.

The Rob Roy mine was sold at 10 o'clock this morning by Sheriff Andrew Morris, to satisfy a judgment rendered the last term of court here in favor of Wolf, Case, Hall and other miners, for $895.56, and was bought in by Charles Woolfenden, superintendent of the Mansfield, Murdock & company's store here for $677.68.

There was a very interesting and in some respects an instructive incident on a street car on one of the principal thoroughfares of the city Jan. 30. An aged lady, burdened with bundles and packages after exerting herself to the utmost managed to get on to the step and then the platform before entering the car. The conductor offered no assistance and as she took her seat in the corner near the door she gave a knowing wink to the passengers, and then turned towards the conductor and said sharply, "You young sprigs have a good deal to learn: some of you don't appear to think you will ever get old, but you will. Had I been a strong, strapping young chap like you nothing would have pleased me more than to have got down off that platform and assisted a lady to get aboard. Had I been a maiden with a painted face and forehead covered with bangs you would have got right down in the mud to help me. But, my boy, I am an old woman—over seventy-five—with gray hairs and feeble step and you allow me to help myself. Now don't let the next old lady who rides on your car do the same thing."

Then the aged passenger turned to the people in the car and in a modified tone added: "I'll warrant that that boy will do his duty in the future." When the car stopped for the old lady to get off five or six blocks further along, the conductor got down into the mud almost up to his ankles, and gracefully assisted her on to the ground after which he handed her the packages she had temporarily left on one of the seats, doffed his cap, and to the astonishment of all said smilingly, "I'll remember."

ITEMS FROM WASATCH.

HEBER CITY, Jan. 28, 1893.

The sixty-third quarterly conference of the Wasatch Stake of Zion convened in the Stake house at Heber City on the 27th inst. at 10:30 a. m.

After the usual devotional exercises Elder Abram Hatch opened conference with a few timely remarks, saying the Stake was in a good condition; abundance exists, and good health prevails as a general rule. He compared our prosperity with the adversity of most of the cities in the United States.

Elder John T. Giles, from Provo, on a visit to relatives, bore a strong and eloquent testimony of the Gospel truths, and of his missionary labors on the Sandwich Islands.

The next speaker, J. T. Giles (a cousin of the former speaker), gave a few timely remarks to the young, and related a few incidents of his late missionary labors in the state of Kentucky.

Elder Geo. H. Booth occupied the remaining time of the morning service relating some of his experience and incidents while serving as physician and surgeon in the Hindostan army.

The afternoon service was devoted to the several bishops, who reported their wards as being in a prosperous condition.

Sunday morning conference convened at 10 a. m. Some 700 persons were present. After the usual devotional exercises, Bishop Henry Clegg presented the Stake authorities while the sacrament was being passed around, after which four lately returned missionaries (three from the Southern States and one from Ireland) were called upon to address the audience in the following order: Andrew Johnson, E. D. Clyde, J. E. Moulton and Morton Gerber.

Bishop Henry Clegg then announced that the funeral service would be held, commencing at 1 o'clock in this room, over the remains of the wife of Thos. Hickens, Jr., whose body had lain in state for the last ten days waiting for the return of the husband from his missionary labors in the state of Tennessee.

Conference adjourned for three months.

At 1 o'clock the funeral procession left the residence for the Stake house, a quorum of Seventies preceding the sleigh containing the corpse, following which were 117 other sleighs.

Service commenced at 1:30. After devotional exercises Bishop Henry Clegg delivered a funeral discourse over the body. He dwelt upon the good character and amiable disposition of the lady who was a devoted wife and loving mother. He gave consoling words to husband, children and relatives.

Elders A. Hatch and J. M. Murdock also gave a few appropriate and consoling remarks to the many friends and mourners.

The house was filled to overflowing, many having to stand, others could not find seats standing outside and in the street. There were in the house some 1,050 persons and all of 200 outside; 85 sleighs followed the corpse to the city of the dead. Preceding these were the quorum of Seventies. This was the largest funeral ever known in Heber City. The good lady has left a devoted husband and seven small children, the oldest child is some 12 year old, the youngest two weeks old.

NOTES ON THE FLY.

Plenty of the beautiful snow, two feet deep on the level; three feet loose snow fell this month, up to date. From the 15th to the 25th some snow fell every day. The 5th and 8th inst. were the coldest mornings of the season so far—19 and 21 below zero respectively.

A slight accident occurred to two of our girls the other night, by being knocked down with a team and pushed along in front of the sleigh; nothing serious, only a few bruises.

Justice courts are lively and interesting to the loafers—several cases being on the docket lately.

John Giles, late sexton of Provo City, also oldest son John T. and wife, have been visiting with friends and relatives the past week.

Thanks to friend Jaques for correction of the hand cart incident. A mistake in identity of figures, I expect, by the printer. I think I wrote  $\frac{1}{4}$  pound of flour per day; he mistook for  $\frac{1}{4}$  pounds of flour, no doubt.

JOHN CROOK.

Deming, N. M., records the completion of a new pumping enterprise for filling a 40,000,000 gallon irrigating reservoir. Several thousand acres of suburban land will now be converted into orchards around Deming.

The other night a masked robber entered the house of a Major Burney, at Monterey, California, and compelled his wife and himself to kneel and submit to having their hands tied behind them. After a thorough search he succeeded in finding only about $6 in the house and with this he made his escape, having first unbound them, remarking that he had "got into the wrong house."

INDUSTRIES, COMMERCE AND MINES.

Will the Union Pacific build west from Milford this season? That this question will be answered in the affirmative is the way things are beginning to look in the southern country. Vast quantities of ties are being forwarded to Milford, and every side track on that section of the line has a number of cars of ties waiting for use at that point. A gentleman just up from the south says that eighty carloads were brought in in one day this week, and that shipments are steadily going on.

It is more than likely that the prospective advance of the Nevada Southern to Pioche and on to the coal fields in Iron county has awakened the Union Pacific magnates to a realization of the necessity of moving at once into that district to secure its traffic. The road already has more than a hundred miles of grade west from Milford in a condition to receive ties and rails, so that it would not take a great while to get into the heart of the mining region of southwestern Utah and southern Nevada. The recent purchase, for $450,000, by D. H. Moffatt and others of Denver, of valuable mines south of Pioche, as noted in the NEWS at the time, is a certain indication of the opening up of that district. If the Union Pacific does not get in the Nevada Southern will. The latter will not come to Salt Lake, but after reaching the coal fields of Iron county will make as direct connection as possible with Denver, thus cutting out the Union Pacific. If the latter goes in, the trade will come direct to Salt Lake and Ogden. Therefore the question is one of deep business interest in this section. Of course if the Union Pacific extends to Pioche this season, it probably will continue its line to the coast.

Another place where large lots of ties are being stacked up for use in the early spring is at the stations on the Salt Lake and Western branch of the Union Pacific. These supplies are for the spur to be put in from Fairfield station to the mines at Mercur. The assurance that this work would be done at an early date had some influence, it is said, on the negotiations by which Senator Wolcott, his brother, and others, of Denver, agreed to purchase the Mercur for $1,000,000.

Shortly after 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon the extensive clothing store of Goldsmith & Co., on East Temple street, in this city, together with its contents, was taken possession of by Deputy U. S. Marshal Dyer, three attachment suits having just previously been filed against the firm amounting in the aggregate to $48,386.29, as follows: M. Ring & Sons, Baltimore, Md., for $31,019.57. McCormick & Co., bankers, for $15,146.72, and the Utah National bank for $2,200. Later the same evening another attachment suit was filed against Goldsmith & Co. by the Stein Bloch Company, Salt Lake, for about $3,700.

In addition to the foregoing the following now have to be named:

Peck & Hanchhaus, claim.....$ 5,633 50

Soloman Frank et al, claim..... 12,909 00
Naumburg, Kraus, Lauer & Co., claim 10,740 47
Drovers' & Mechanics' National Bank of Baltimore, claim..... 8,000 00
American Hand-Sewed Shoe Co., claim..... 880 85
H. Wallachs & Sons, claim..... 2,574 00
Samuel Rosenthal, claim..... 700 00
J. & H. Mann & Co. claim..... 10,981 70

Three more attachment suits were filed against the firm in the Third district court Tuesday morning.

Attachments aggregating over $62,000 were filed against Goldsmith & Co., the North Main street clothiers, yesterday, says the Butte, Montana Miner, of the 28th inst. The establishment is now in the hands of the sheriff.

Frank J. Cannon returned home from the East January 24, says the Ogden Sun, where he has been in the interest of the Pioneer Electric Power company of Ogden. Notwithstanding the general financial depression Mr. Cannon and C. K. Bannister (the company's engineer, who is still in the East) have succeeded in arousing interest in the great enterprise, and influential business men have pledged themselves to support the project financially. Mr. Cannon came home on some important business and will leave shortly for New York and from thence he and Mr. Bannister will go to London, where they have appointments for next month. Such prominent gentlemen as Mr. George Westinghouse, of the famous Westinghouse company, have been interested in the project; and the experts of the General Electric company are studying the details of the scheme.

One great factor in the building of the power works here is that a market must be created for the power, and this can only be done by establishing great industries. One party in New York has promised a quarter of a million for a certain industry if certain conditions are fulfilled, and Mr. Cannon is confident that they can be.

There were filed with Territorial Secretary Richards January 30th articles of incorporation of the C. A. Smurthwaite Produce company, whose headquarters will be at Ogden City.

The capital stock is placed at $5,000, divided into 250 shares of the par value of $100 each.

The incorporators all reside in Ogden and are as follows: C. A. Smurthwaite, 16 shares; George E. Hyde, 7; Margaret A. Smurthwaite, 1; William Hope, 1, and Charles F. Fewster.

The object of the new company is to deal in grain, seeds and produce generally, to farm land and engage in a mercantile business generally; to erect, operate and sell warehouses, elevators, machinery, etc., to acquire building sites for the same, water rights, and such like privileges. C. A. Smurthwaite is president, G. E. Hyde vice-president and W. Hope secretary and treasurer.

Articles of incorporation of the Cedar City Terminal Railway company have been filed with Territorial Auditor Caine. The capital stock is $200,000, divided into shares of the par value of $100 each. It is organized for the purpose of operating a line of railway commencing in Cedar City, in Iron county, running thence east up Coal Creek canyon. The length of the proposed line is about ten miles, all within Iron county. The cost is estimated at $200,000.

The stock is thus subscribed for: W. W. Cluff, Coalville, 1,940 shares; Orson Smith, Logan; Charles Adams, Parowan; Elias Morris, Salt Lake; J. E. Langford, Salt Lake; Charles H. Wilcken, Salt Lake; Arthur Winter, Salt Lake, 10 shares each.

The people in the vicinity of Pocatello are exceedingly suspicious regarding the action of the Pacific Mining Co. in that locality. The corporation consists of E. E. Calvin and V. C. Roeder, of Pocatello; W. H. Rampton and W. H. Bancroft, of Salt Lake City; and F. W. Vogler, of Blackfoot. The company was organized with the ostensible purpose of developing mining claims near Pocatello, but now some of the people fear that it is a gigantic scheme to obtain control of all the mineral lands on the Fort Hall reservation, to the exclusion of all prospectors and locators, when the reservation shall be thrown open. It is said that the corporation now has agents in Washington trying to effect a lease on the lands. Meanwhile those locally interested are endeavoring to ascertain whether or not their suspicions are well founded.

T. H. Roberts, formerly of this city, but now a proprietor in two mercantile houses in Star Valley, Wyoming, reports the people up there as being in a very prosperous condition. Business with them has been in the main better than any year since the valley was settled. The seasons have been favorable for the pursuits in which the people mostly engage—stock-raising, and the growing of wheat, potatoes and vegetables generally. Mr. Roberts insists that for comfort, health and longevity Star Valley is so far ahead of a city home that an occasional visit to town is good enough for him. He will make a trip to the Midwinter Fair before returning to Wyoming.

Isaac Colby, of Vermillion, who went to Kansas City with a train of cattle about ten days ago, has returned, says the Richfield Advocate. He says he has gained a deal of experience in that little trip that will be a big advantage to him in the future. He found a good sale for prime steers, but poor or medium steers and cows were away down, being bought up for canned beef. A man must employ a licensed salesman to dispose of his cattle, and the possibilities are that they are in with the canneries. Mr. Colby came near having a calamity, as a train ran into his outfit when he was unloading and scared some of his stock so that it took three days to find them.

Park City shipments of ore go on at a lively rate from the Crescent, Silver King and Anchor mines, but it appears to be only a question of a very short time when all will have to shut down, as the rapid falling in prices during the past week of both silver and lead is very discouraging to the various mine owners. It is claimed by one well informed in mining that none of the mines here are making any money for their owners.

The Crescent has shipped during the week thirty cars of first class ore and several cars of concentrates.

Last Wednesday Hon. J. J. Story, Col. Frank Riblett and Major Crate Hawkins with an outfit, left town for Snake river where they will locate and survey some of the richest lands ever found in Cassia county, says the Albion, Idaho, Times. These men are experienced and practical miners, and have done more to develop the mineral resources of Cassia county than any other of her citizens. Besides their mining properties, these men have under consideration the building of one of the largest reservoirs ever constructed in the United States and perhaps in the world.

The outlook for large developments in the Henry mountains this summer is good, says the Eastern Utah Telegraph. From the reports of several prospectors we have talked with, work is going on in almost any direction and the indications are good for a large emigration there this summer. The recent strike made in the middle mountain will cause more prospecting to be done there. Taken on the whole, the prospects for the Henry mountains have a bright outlook, and with the melting of the snow increased work will be the rule.

William Henderson, of this city, has returned from Simpson Springs, Tooele county, possessed of a glowing idea of the future of the Indian Springs mining district out there. About forty men are now at work in the district, and veins of gold are being developed in all directions. The ore runs high in the precious metal, and the indications are that the number of discoveries will be greatly increased. This district is already in a situation to come rapidly to the front, and Mr. Henderson is sanguine that it will prove a second Mercur.

Fremont county has a coal mine she can well be proud of, says the Rexburg, Silver Hammer. It burns better, gives more heat and leaves less ashes than any coal we have ever burned. The mine is not yet thoroughly developed, and when it is, it will do more towards bringing a railroad through this country than any other one thing we have. The proper way to develop that mine is to patronize it. Every dollar spent for coal from it means just that much towards home labor and bringing our country to the front.

Richfield Advocate: Mr. L. Cuddiback, Mr. Hyrum Colby and several other sheepmen report their flocks in excellent condition, and much better than at this time last year. Mr. Cuddiback says he will feed salt and sulphur to his sheep in the future, which the experience of sheepmen find more effective than dipping and much less expensive; and that the itch or scab is caused by tape worms which eat into the liver and eventually destroy the sheep. The sulphur and salt destroys these worms.

At a non-partisan meeting of citizens of Manti, held on Wednesday evening, the following was adopted unanimously: "Resolved, That we the citizens of Manti, Skapete county, Utah, irrespective of political affiliations, in mass meeting assembled, most earnestly protest against the passage of the Wilson bill, and urgently request that the bounty of sugar be not reduced, and the duty on wool, lead and lead ores be not removed or reduced."

A Prescott, Arizona, dispatch says: W. A. Clark, millionaire mining man of Butte, Montana, and owner of the United Verde Copper company's mines at Jerome in this county, has placed a corps of engineers in the field to survey a line for a narrow gauge road from a point on the Santa Fe, Prescott & Phoenix railway to his mines, a distance of twenty-eight miles. He expects to complete the road during the present year.

SARATOGA, Wyo., Jan. 26.—Active mining operations have been commenced at Gold hill. A company was recently organized to work the Acme group of mines in that district. Considerable work has already been done on the Acme-claim. It has a 170-foot tunnel which crosscuts the vein 185 feet from the entrance. Gold hill is one of the most promising placer camps in the state.

The fruit growers of Weber county are getting down to business. A call, signed by the leading fruit raisers of the county, has been issued, appointing a meeting for Saturday February 3, at the old federal court room at Ogden. The meeting begins at 2 p.m., and all interested in fruit culture are invited to be present. The purpose of the meeting is to organize a county fruit growers' association.

An inter-state wool growers' convention is to be held at Denver on February 5. The governor of each state and territory is requested to appoint ten delegates to this congress. Each wool growers' association is entitled to five delegates and the commissioners of every county in which there is no wool growers association are asked to appoint five delegates.

Albion, Idaho, Times: J. M. Pierce came in Monday from Salt Lake and Ogden; he sold and delivered 300 head of cattle in Salt Lake last week. He has sold the balance of the cattle he is feeding and is to deliver in March next. There will be about 200 head.

Ephraim Enterprise: O'Neil & Koffman, of Kansas City, shipped a train load of cattle and hogs from this point last Friday. They left about $7,000 in this city. Ole Olsen, of this city, did the buying of them.

ONEIDA STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Oneida Stake of Zion convened in the Franklin meeting house Saturday and Sunday, January 20th and 21st, 1894.

There were present on the stand of the First Presidency, Joseph F. Smith; of the Council of the Apostles, Marriner W. Merrill; of the First Seven Presidents of Seventies, C. D. Fjelstedt; the Presidency and most of the High Council of the Stake; most of the Bishops of the various wards, while the body of the house was filled with Saints from all parts of the Stake.

The speakers, in the order in which they addressed the conference, were Presidents George C. Parkinson, Sol.

H. Hale, Elders Joseph Schvanerveldt, Andrew Marrison (returned missionaries), President Joseph F. Smith, Elders Marriner W. Merrill, C. D. Fjelstedt, M. F. Cowley, Samuel K. Parkinson, George Marshall (returned missionary), John E. Dalley and C. W. Nibley.

The subjects were, briefly stated, repentance of sins and importance of observing the principles of the Gospel to secure the promised blessings and companionship of the Holy Spirit; the binding force of the sealing ordinances, when received and administered in the spirit of righteousness; the care that should be used in promoting brethren to the grades of the holy Priesthood, that blessings may not be unworthily bestowed; signs not given as a means of conversion, but as the legitimate fruit of the observance of the laws of the Gospel, Jesus having said, "A wicked and an adulterous generation seeketh a sign;" the great kindness with which we are being treated by the world (the time will come when they, the world, will invite us to come and preach the Gospel to and instruct them in the principles of civil government.—Cowley); tithing, religion classes, Stake academy, the close relationship between the spiritual and the temporal, a steady persistence in the performance of our various duties, not waiting for the presentment of some grand opportunity to show our devotion to the cause of truth.

President Smith was most powerful in his sermons during the conference; in fact the Holy Spirit was abundantly poured out upon all who addressed the Saints. It was a time to be long remembered for the peaceful and instructive spirit which characterized the various meetings of the conference.

John E. Dalley, principal of the Oneida Stake academy, gave a very favorable report of the attendance at and progress made in that worthy institution.

Robert H. Williams Jr. and Joseph Schvanerveldt were sustained as counselors to Bishop Ephraim Bennett of the Mound Valley ward.

Sister Esther Parkinson Rogers, president of the Y. M. M. I. A. of the Stake, having permanently moved from the Stake, Sister Nellie Greaves was sustained as president to fill the vacancy, with Sisters Fiske Benson and Amy Chadwick as her counselors.

Saturday night a very fine concert was given in the meeting house under the direction of Prof. L. D. Edwards of Preston and the Logan Glee club.

A very pleasing feature of the conference and one that added greatly to the enjoyment of the Saints present was the excellent singing of the Franklin choir under the direction of Brother James Herd.

The general and local authorities were unanimously sustained by vote of the conference.

Conference adjourned for three months.

JOHN E. DALEY,
Clerk of Conference.

Melbourne the rainmaker's proposition to the Cheyenne people is to furnish not less than ten inches of rain in each of the years 1894, 1895 and 1896 for a fee of $5000, $7500 and $10,000 in each successive year. No pay unless the rain is furnished to cover an area of eighty by fifty-two miles.

THE LEGISLATURE.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 24.

Today a NEWS representative interviewed a number of members of both houses on the question of uniting the University and Agricultural college. There is less reticence upon the subject than there has heretofore been, and it has been so much discussed among members that their views upon it are becoming crystalized, and many of them no longer hesitate to state their attitudes. It is conceded by nearly all of them that union is a foregone conclusion. Only one member is known to be opposed to uniting the two institutions, while many are emphatically in favor of it, and others who have not yet definitely taken that position lean towards it.

The public may dismiss any doubt about the union taking place, but there is a contest on for the location. Only three sites so far have been prominently mentioned, viz., some point between Ogden and Salt Lake, perhaps in Bountiful, a strip off the west side of the Fort Douglas reservation, and the present Agricultural College at Logan. The first site would be desirable because of its being central, easily accessible from all parts of the Territory, and on the line of transcontinental travel, and for the further reason that plenty of land could be obtained for the purposes of the agricultural department, which would be rich, well watered, and in an average climate for this inter-mountain region. It is urged that an experiment station should by all means have an average climate of the region which it is designed to benefit.

The Fort Douglas reservation site has every argument in its favor as a location for a great university, except possible scarcity of land and water for irrigation. Given these two requisites, and both may be obtained if Congress will be sufficiently generous, and it will receive more support than will the first named site, among members of the assembly.

But it is not to be denied that a strong sentiment exists among members of the assembly at the present time in favor of having the Union take place at Logan. The principal argument in favor of this proposition is economy. It is argued that the present Agricultural College plant can accommodate all the students of the University, with only slight expenditures for any needed increase in the capacity of buildings, and in the faculty. The contest on this question is one for location from now on.

The medical contest is fairly under way in the Assembly. The House committee on public health, in whose hands are several petitions for the amendment or repeal of the present law regulating the practice of medicine, is devoting much time and attention to the subject. A member of that committee today recounted some of its labors to a NEWS representative. He went so far as to say that the present law would undoubtedly be revised if not repealed, and intimated that the committee would very likely prepare a bill with a view to meeting the objections to the present law. He cited the fact that, at present, one school had control of the medical board, and expressed the opinion that this ought not to be.

In conversation with a NEWS representative today, a member of the House committee on ways and means, a gentleman of marked business ability and thorough business training, deplored the harm that was resulting from the printing muddle. He said the Assembly was working in the dark as to the Territory's financial condition, which could not be known until the reports of the auditor, treasurer and other public officers and institutions could be examined, and this could not be done until those reports are printed. The printing muddle makes it impossible to get the printing done, and the interests of the Territory are suffering in consequence. He spoke of the resolution offered by Varian on Monday, and adopted by the House, calling upon the ways and means committee for a report on the financial condition of the Territory, but said the committee were helpless to comply with it until certain public documents were made accessible by being printed.

On Monday evening last the House committee on counties gave a hearing to persons interested in the proposition to create the new county of Carbon, and the hearing was continued until this evening. The petition asking for the creation of the new county which, as previously stated in the NEWS, is intended to include the northern part of Emery county, bears about 600 signatures. A protest has been filed bearing 62 names. It seems a foregone conclusion that the committee will report in favor of making the new county, and the contest before it is mainly in respect to the location of the county seat. A man named Crowley, who lives in this city but owns a saloon in Helper, argued in favor of that place, but a delegation from Price, embracing Mr. A. Ballinger, formerly county attorney, and Mr. S. J. Paradise, editor of the Price Telegraph, insisted that Price should be made the county seat. Price is a town of permanent and varied industries and resources, whose population is steadily increasing, while Helper is only a railroad town.

The House claims committee is very busy. It has so much to do that the chairman, Mr. Sears, was obliged to ask an addition of two members, which the House granted yesterday, making the membership seven. Some of the claims that have been presented are of a character to call for thorough investigation and the taking of considerable testimony, and if reported upon favorably at all will be cut down very much in amount by the recommendations of the committee.

THURSDAY.

Up to 10 o'clock this morning the Council chamber was locked, and ingress was prohibited, although a number of Democratic members were within, and the chaplain and other officers had, for some time prior to that hour, been in attendance. At 10 o'clock the doors were open and a number of spectators entered. The roll was called, but there was no quorum. Williams called for a report from the sergeant-at-arms, which was to the effect that none of the missing members had been found.

Hart stated that Seeley had been seen in the corridor of the building by Mr.

Backman. The latter is a committee clerk, and was one of the six sergeants-at-arms sworn in to arrest the absent members.

President Breeden requested W. H. Payne, the watchman and another of the six recruits, to bring in Mr. Backman.

Hart objected to sending Payne after Backman, for the reason that the two were in collusion. It then transpired that it was Payne who had seen Seeley, and on motion of Williams, Payne was interrogated before the bar of the house. He replied that he had seen Seeley in the corridor, and had forthwith notified the sergeant-at-arms, but before the latter could act he had disappeared.

It was decided that employees of the Assembly could not lawfully act as assistant sergeants-at-arms, and Payne with others was discharged from the latter position.

Shortly after 11 o'clock, the missing members came in and took their seats. Thereupon H. E. Booth was arraigned before the bar of the Council for contempt; and was given an opportunity to purge himself by stating the reasons why he had absented himself without leave. Williams and Hart assumed the right to cross-examine the accused, and J. E. Booth claimed they had no right to do so, holding that all questions put to the accused must be propounded by the president. The latter overruled J. E. Booth's objection, and Hart proceeded to question the prisoner at the bar.

The latter replied that the reasons why he absented himself were two in number: To get some official statistics, and to prevent the defeat of the lead memorial.

While H. E. Booth was under cross-examination, Eldredge attempted to interpose. Williams rose to the point of order that Eldredge was himself in contempt, and had no right to speak until purged. The Chair sustained the point of order, and ordered Eldredge to remain silent.

Williams and Hart made speeches, insisting that the prisoner's excuse was wholly insufficient. The former urged that it was the duty of the President of the Council to fine the prisoner in a sum commensurate with his offense. This point was debated, and the Chair ruled that the matter of fixing the punishment ought to be left to the house. Thereupon Williams presented a resolution, reciting the facts comprising the contempt, and presenting the punishment as a reprimand by the President of the Council, and a fine of $100, the prisoner to remain in custody until the fine should be paid to the chief clerk.

An important amendment, offered by J. E. Booth, was lost, when a question arose as to whether the members, whose arrest had been made, had the right to vote on the resolution. The chair ruled that all members of the Council except the prisoner had the right to vote, and in reply to the objections of Williams and Hart, stated that the only member of the Council who had been arrested was Lund, a Democrat, who had absented himself without leave, last evening.

Williams then said that, in view of the ruling of the chair, he desired to withdraw his resolution. The withdrawal was opposed by J. E. Booth, claimed that the resolution was now property of the Council, and evidently desired to see it voted down.

The chair ruled that the resolution could not be withdrawn without unanimous consent, and the question recurred on its adoption. It was lost on a strict party vote, and by this action the Council acquitted the prisoner.

There was considerable personal feeling shown by several members of the Council during the proceedings of the trial of H. E. Booth, and the discussion of questions connected with it.

On motion of J. E. Booth, Lund was brought before the bar of the Council on a charge of contempt. J. E. Booth moved that he be excused for his contempt. This was seconded by Taylor. Lund said that it was a matter of endurance and he had to succumb. Hart moved to fine Lund $10. Eldredge moved to amend it by acquitting the offender, and spoke in support of the motion.

Seaman wanted to know if the Council had any dignity and if so why it was not maintained.

J. E. Booth moved that the Council adjourn. Thus, after some sparring on both sides, the Council adjourned until 2 p.m.

At that hour, the Council resumed. The motion to fine Councillor Lund was the pending question. The Councillor was excused.

The motion of Lund to adjourn was lost. A motion to take a recess was then made but withdrawn and Williams's motion to adjourn prevailed. This ended the business of the Council today.

The House committee on ways and means held a session yesterday and another this morning, in the effort to prepare a report in response to Varian's resolution calling for a statement of the financial condition of the Territory. It was at length decided to request the territorial auditor and treasurer to furnish, in recapitulated form, the information contained in their respective reports, for the benefit of the committee.

Mr. Stanford, chairman of the committee, stated to a News representative today that while the figures showing the exact financial status of the Territory had not been prepared, he believed they would make a very favorable showing. He spoke of an oversight of the last Legislature, in authorizing county collectors to receive Territorial warrants for taxes, but in failing to authorize the treasurer to receive the warrants from the collectors. Owing to this anomaly the collectors cannot settle with the treasurer, and for the purpose of removing it Mr. Stanford yesterday introduced a bill authorizing the treasurer to receive the warrants and settle with the collectors.

After this bill becomes law it will take two weeks or more to make this settlement, so that it will be late in the session before last year's business can be close up.

FRIDAY.

Towards the close of the third week of the session, the House is beginning to show definitely its disposition regarding the disposal of measures that are up for final action. That disposition is to dispose of them quickly. In about an hour yesterday afternoon the House debated and passed three bills, and killed three more.

One of the bills passed, H. B. 42, was designed to correct an oversight in a law passed at the last session, which required county collectors to receive Territorial warrants for taxes, but did not authorize the Territorial treasurer to receive the warrants from the collectors. In consequence of this legislative blunder a number of county collectors cannot settle with the Territorial treasurer, until the relief afforded by this bill shall be extended to them. The House did itself credit by the careful investigation it made into the scope and effect of this bill, before passing it.

The next bill passed, H. B. 51, was also designed to correct an omission in the present law, by allowing city councils to elect a mayor pro tem from among their own number, during the absence or disability of the mayor.

The next bill passed was H. B. 53, extending the time of redeeming real property sold under mortgage or execution, to one year, the present term of redemption being six months. The bill also gives one year in which to redeem real estate sold under trust deeds. By its terms, however, it is made to apply only to mortgages, executions and trust deeds, given or issued in future, and does not affect existing obligations. In an able speech Sears opposed the bill, fearing that it would operate hurtfully rather than beneficially to the borrower. He argued that lenders would be unwilling to renew existing mortgages and trust deeds, because such renewed contracts would come within the operations of the law. He deprecated meddling with our present statutes upon such subjects, because frequent changes of such laws made capitalists shy, whereas if our Legislature would show a disposition to impart a stable character to them, the confidence of money lenders would be increased.

Varian replied, conceding weight to Sears' objections, and stating that the bill related to a question of policy which the Assembly must decide. The judiciary committee, which had drawn this bill as a substitute for others, had given a hearing to attorneys, financiers and others, and had reached the conclusion that the relief to the borrower which this bill would afford, should be given, and that the result would be more good than harm to the debtor class.

The bills lost were: H. B. 25, amending the chattel mortgage law; H. B. 36, regulating the practice of medicine, and H. B. 45, relating to the befouling of waters. The medical bill was a drastic dose which the House, by a unanimous vote, rejected. It peremptorily forbade any person to practice medicine or obstetrics without a diploma, except in districts where no physician with a diploma, resided. The House will not entertain any more such propositions as this, judging by its action yesterday.

It seems highly probably that the petition, having about 600 signatures, which asks for the creation of the new county of Carbon, with the county seat at Price, will be granted. The bill creating the new county was favorably reported by the House committee on counties yesterday, and no opposition to the measure seems to show itself.

While the contempt proceedings were pending in the Council yesterday, and especially after the case of H. E. Booth was disposed of, there was a cross-fire between Democrats and Republicans, which did not relate to any parliamentary question before the house, and was largely personal in character. In fact, considerable acrimony was developed, and it was a wise thing to adjourn, which the Council did for the day, after the contempt case of Mr. Lund was disposed of by his acquittal. No legislative business whatever was done in the Council yesterday.

In the debate on the wool memorial in the House this afternoon, Ivins led off in opposition to it. He claimed that the allegation in the memorial, that the development of the wool industry would have been impossible but for protective legislation, was untrue. He favored tariff for revenue, with incidental protection. He was of opinion that placing wool on the freelist would reduce its price but that the wool industry was so well established that it could take care of itself without protection. He did not think the price would go lower than it is now were the tariff removed, but it would be less than the average for several years past. He gave figures, compiled by himself, on the cost of caring for and profits on 8000 sheep in this Territory. He put the sheep at $2 per head, or $6,000 for the capital invested, the expenses at $3,805, the product in wool and lambs at $4,805, and the net profit of $1,000. He claimed that the sheep industry was suffering now, not because it was not profitable, but because of the general financial distress, which makes all industries suffer. He held that the low price of wool had stimulated the manufacture of woollen goods in this Territory.

SATURDAY.

After the close of the News' report yesterday, Sears replied to Ivins' speech. He gave statistics to show the importance of the wool industry to this Territory, and the loss that would ensue to Utah as a consequence of a removal of the wool tariff. To show that the wool business was not as profitable as Ivins has represented, he cited the fact that Sanpete county shippers now had 50,000 pounds of wool stored in Boston, for which they had been offered by telegraph, a few days ago, 8 cents per pound, which meant about 4 cents per pound at the point of shipping. The expenses of insurance, storage, interest, on advances, etc., would consume the remaining 4 cents, and leave the growers of the wool nothing.

Tolton followed Sears. He claimed that many of the largest sheep owners in southern Utah were Democrats, who favored the policy of that party in respect to wool. He dwelt upon the damage done to the ranges by sheep, and held, with Ivins, that even with the present low price of wool the industry would be profitable.

Parsons said that all stock and sheep owners were trespassers on the public domain, and neither could make a point against the other on that ground. He claimed that much Utah wool this year had brought less than six cents. Sheep for mutton would not bring anything, not even the freight to an eastern market.

Hubbard said mutton was no lower than other products. If free wool would ruin the industry in Utah, it would ruin it all over the Union. He did not think the tariff materially affected the price of wool. He read figures to show that the price of wool under a protective tariff had gradually fallen, and repeated a number of the staple arguments in favor of free wool.

McBride gave some figures from his expense account as a sheep owner, which considerably modified those of Ivins, and he used them to show the necessity of protesting the wool industry.

Monson made a humorous and sarcastic speech, illustrating what he held to be the inconsistencies of the theory of protection.

Johnson took part in the debate. He claimed that Utah wool could not be cashed today at 4 cents. He was followed by Moore who thought that the low price of wool would benefit this Territory by enabling our woolen mills to run. He was opposed to the memorial. He was followed by Clark in support of the memorial.

Powers spoke in opposition to the memorial. He talked in an ironical vein about the tariff, and delivered a long free trade argument.

Varian made a speech arraigning the Democratic party and its practices, charging it with inconsistency. He asserted that it "stood under the shadow of a great name," and had had no defined policy since Jackson's day.

Allen followed Varian in a speech replete with figures and arguments in support of the protectionist's views.

MONDAY.

Two impressions at least seem to have been made upon the minds of members of the Legislature in regard to the insane asylum at Provo, as a result of their visit and inspection of that institution. One was that the asylum is well conducted and in excellent condition; the other is that the expense of maintaining it ought to be cut down if possible. Members are free in expressing approval of the buildings, and their adaptability to the purposes intended, and in giving the management credit for the neat, cleanly and orderly appearance which the premises, in every part, presented. But the necessity of reducing the expenses of the institution is being insisted upon. The board of directors ask for an appropriation of something over $100,000 for the maintenance of the asylum for the next two years, but it is doubtful if the Assembly will give so large a sum.

The visit of the legislators to the Brigham Young Academy was almost a revelation to some of them, and that institution excited the unqualified admiration of all of the visiting party. The large number of students in attendance, the excellent, thorough and peculiar organization of the academy, and particularly the cheapness with which it is conducted in comparison with the excellence of the work done, were features spoken of in high praise. The cost of educating students there was compared with the cost of the University and Agricultural College, with a result highly creditable to the academy. One example will serve as an illustration: An instructor in a certain branch at the Brigham Young Academy, who devotes only a part of the day to his classes, and engages in other employment the rest of the day, is paid $54 per month. He is a thoroughly efficient instructor, and gives excellent satisfaction. The member of the faculty of the Agricultural College, who does precisely the same work, giving to it about two hours per day, is paid $168 per month.

The visit that had been made by the Legislature to the several public institutions, and the investigations so far made into the expenses of maintaining them, are having the effect of creating a retrenchment sentiment among members of the Assembly. Further investigation in this line, and into the general financial condition of the Territory, and of the people who pay the taxes, will, it is thought, strengthen this sentiment. Fancy salaries, adapted to boom times, will doubtless be cut down, and the necessity for economy will be brought home to public officers, and the managements of public institutions. Such is the talk among members of the Assembly.

An innovation in the method of auditing and passing upon claims against the Territory has been devised by Mr. Sears, chairman of the House committee on claims and public accounts. His committee has a subcommittee with a sub-chairman, and the two parts of the whole committee divide the work between them. Claims are coming in rapidly, creating much work. An arrangement has been effected between the claims committees of the two houses under which both meet conjointly and consider and pass upon all claims amounting to $200 or more. Thus a claimant whose account is for $200 or over, and who is granted a hearing, appears before the claims committees of both houses at one sitting, instead of consuming the time of each successively. Claims of less than $200 may be passed upon by the committee of either house, and inserted in the general appropriation bill on its recommendation; but after being passed upon and inserted in the general appropriation bill, any claim is open to objections from any member of the Assembly, and liable to be stricken out.

Mr. Eldredge is chairman of the claims committee in the Council, and both he and Mr. Sears show a disposition not to let a dollar leave the treasury which is not justly due a claimant.

The members of the Assembly did not derive as much satisfaction from their inspection of the sugar factory, where they spent half an hour while en route for Provo, as they would, have done had it been in operation. This institution is a bone of contention between Democrats and Republicans, and they refuse to view it from the same standpoint.

TUESDAY.

Yesterday afternoon the bill creating Carbon county came up on third reading. Pigman offered a substitute for the first section, which, as originally drawn, fixed the county seat at Price. The substitute provided that Price should be the county seat temporarily, but that an election should be held to determine its permanent location.

Powers opposed the substitute and supported the bill as reported by the committee. He described the rivalry between Helper and Price, for the county seat, and the advantages of the latter. He referred to some restrictions bearing upon the locality of county seats, contained in a law of Congress, but thought they did not apply to counties being newly created.

Tolton thought the Legislature had the right to fix the seat of a county being newly created, and favored Price. He called attention to the law which allowed the voters of the new county, by an election, to remove the county seat, if a sufficient majority of them so desired.

Stanford opposed Pigman's substitute, and favored Price as the seat of the new county. Hatch, a member of the committee on counties, said the committee had heard many parties interested, had considered the petitions bearing upon the subject, and had thoroughly investigated the whole matter. At least two members of the committee had visited the proposed new county, and were thoroughly posted regarding it. The whole committee thought Price the proper place for the county seat.

Sears said he had seconded the substitute in order that it might be discussed, but was willing to accept the report of the committee. Johnson favored the substitute, on the ground that a majority of the voters of the new county ought to be allowed to fix its seat. If the bill passes as reported by the committee, it will take a two-thirds vote to change the county seat.

Varian asked how the creation of the new county would leave the old county of Emery, and how it would affect the Territory. What proportion of the property of the present county of Emery would be taken by the new county? He cared nothing about the amendment, but should not vote for the bill until shown the necessity for the new county.

McKay, chairman of the committee reporting the bill, explained the need for the new county, and that the present property in Emery county, would be about equally divided. There was practically no opposition to the new county, all controversy being confined to the location of the county seat. Nebeker said there are several counties having a smaller revenue than that of Emery cut in halves, and Hubbard read the names of counties having a smaller revenue than the new one would have.

Pigman's substitute was lost, and the bill passed the House by a vote of 21 to 2, Varian and Pigman being the negatives.

The petition introduced in the House by Tolton this afternoon, bears a remarkable number of signatures, covering a remarkable extent of country, considering its subject. It asks to have a piece of road, about five miles long, leading eastward from Milford, put in good condition. The signatures are those of residents in Beaver, Garfield, Iron, Wayne and Washington counties, and the reason why the interest in it is so widespread is because almost the entire traffic of southern Utah passes over that piece of road, which crosses a swampy or marshy piece of land, and is often the scene of mired wagons. It is scarcely possible that there can be objection to putting that piece of road in order.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

BERLIN, January 23.—The emperor has sent Bismarck a bottle of very old wine with an autograph letter congratulating him on his recovery from his recent illness. Bismarck sent a reply, saying he would call on the emperor next week.

WHEELING, W. Va., Jan. 23.—Twelve hundred pottery employees are on strike as a result of a proposed cut in their wages. The managers demand a reduction of ten per cent and in case the Wilson law is passed twenty per cent. The men quit and appealed to the National Brotherhood of Pottery workers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 22.—The memorial of the Hawaiian Patriotic League says:

"Last January a political crime was committed, not only against the legitimate sovereign of the Hawaiian kingdom, but also against the whole Hawaiian nation, who, for the past sixty years, have enjoyed free and happy constitutional self-government. This was done by the coup de main of United States Minister Stevens, in collusion with the cable conspirators, mainly faithless sons of missionaries, and local politicians, angered by continuous political defeat, who, as a revenge for being a hopeless minority in the country, resolved to 'rule or ruin' through foreign help."

Commenting on the landing of United States troops, the memorial continues: "The queen and her government, realizing the situation, but unwilling to make war with the United States forces and to occasion the useless bloodshed of innocent Hawaiians, yielded, under protest, to the superior force and moral power of the United States, and, while waiting the result of the appeal, with full confidence in the American honor, the queen requested all loyal subjects to remain quiet and passive, and to submit with patience to all the insults that have since been heaped upon both the queen and people by the usurping government. The necessity for this attitude of absolute inactivity on the part of the Hawaiian people was further endorsed and emphasized by Commissioner Blount, so that if the Hawaiians have held their peace in a manner that will vindicate their character as law-abiding citizens, yet it cannot and must not be construed as evidence that they are apathetic or indifferent, or are ready to acquiesce in wrong and bow to the usurpers. Had it not been for the request of our sovereign there would doubtless have been a tremendous uprising throughout the islands to crush the usurpers, but there would have been a sad tale of blood and destruction which, from the first, was sought to be avoided, if possible.

"The advent of Blount as special commissioner was hailed with satisfaction by both the contending factions. His course in Hawaii was marked by dignity, courtesy and discretion, highly creditable to his country, and gained for him the respect and confidence of all classes. His report to the President has been characterized by great impartiality and absolute respect for the truth, so that this Patriotic League have fully indorsed it, and can solemnly testify to its veracity and reliability."

The memorialists claim that the question of right and equity, and that the objection to this public restoring the monarchy is not well founded. The paper closes as follows:

"Therefore, the Hawaiians, as a nation, appeal for justice and redress to the impartiality of the American nation, in whose honor, integrity and love of fair play, we have so long and so patiently trusted. As peaceful and law-abiding citizens, ever ready to submit to the constitutional rule of the majority, we ask that, in the place of the present temporary usurper, who are hostile to the native race, our own government, in the person of Queen Lilioukalani, be restored to us, with a new constitution, more equitable to us than the one wrested from the late King Kalakua in 1887, through force of arms."

The Irwin papers have been given to the press heretofore. Under date of January 6th, Willis notifies Gresham of changes in the provisional government, already made public.

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—The steamer Normania, of the Hamburg-American Packet company, which sailed from this port Thursday of last week for Genoa and Naples, returned today, so severely damaged by a tidal wave, which struck the vessel early Sunday morning, that she was rendered unseaworthy, and had to put back to this port in order to secure the safety of the passengers. The damage to the ship is estimated at $50,000 to $100,000. No one was killed, but the second officer was injured internally it is feared, and six seamen were more or less injured.

The wave was encountered 780 miles from Sandy Hook at six o'clock in the morning. All day Saturday a severe storm had raged. At 1:50 Sunday morning the wind was strong and the seas so high that it was deemed advisable to reduce the speed. Before five a. m. the weather improved and the vessel was put at three-quarter speed. Six boilers were used and the screws were revolving fifty-six times a second.

At 9:15, while the ship was pitched down by the head, an immense wave boarded her. It struck on the promenade deck on the forward part of the vessel. The deck was literally bent by the force of the wave. The damage did not stop there. With even greater force the promenade deckhouse forward was struck. This contains six compartments, and all were carried back to the promenade deckhouse, where the captain and second officer slept. The latter fell from his bunk and was badly hurt.

In the cabin any vestige of ornament, mirrors, etc., was broken and carried off. The grand piano was smashed into a thousand pieces, the wave picking it up and hurling it down the promenade stairs. The cupola over the main dining-room had all the wrought iron work smashed to pieces, through this the water entering the dining room, doing great damage. The flood proceeded as far as the cabins, entering some and frightening the occupants. The great crash awakened and frightened all on board, but there was no panic. The deck was so weakened that if another wave had struck the ship, the captain says, it would have gone right through the deck.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Carlisle has sent a communication to the Senate, showing the amount due the United States from Utah on account of costs and expenses of prosecution. The expenditures began in 1875 and have continued ever since, the total amount being $225,555. It appears that the law requires that these expenses be paid by the Territory, but Congress has annually appropriated the money required.

OMAHA, Jan. 24.—A special to the Bee from Boone, Iowa: The building on the Boone county poor farm, in which incurably insane are confined, was burned last night and eight of the nine inmates were burned to death. Only one woman, Mrs. Hibbard escaped. The origin of the fire is unknown. The dead are: Mary Tucker, John Anna Snigge, Anna Soterburg, Christina Peterson, Mrs. Scott, Tom Lease and Jos. Craig.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—Advices to the Associated Press indicate unusual severe weather throughout the entire West and Northwest. At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the thermometer this morning registered 18 degrees below zero. At Rockford, Iowa, it was 23; at Dows, Iowa, 30; at Esterville, Iowa, 34; at Albert Lea, Minn., 24; at Watertown, S. D., 34; at St. Paul, Minn., the government thermometer marked 20 below; at Winnipeg, 40 below; at Minnedosa, 36; at Huron and Bismarck, 30; Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, Manitoba, Wisconsin, report 8 to 40 below; Ainsworth, Neb., 38, the coldest ever known there. A most beautiful and dazzling mirage was seen this morning. Snow fields, farm houses, towns and distant hillsides appeared in the air. It was a reflection of a part of South Dakota, over a hundred miles away.

At St. Louis the record was 11 below; at Springfield, Mo., 16 below; throughout Kansas 9 to 16 below; at Guthrie, Ok., 11 below, the lowest on record there, causing great suffering among the recent settlers. Drifting snow fell in the neighborhood of Chicago all last night. The temperature this morning was at zero, with the promise of much lower temperature tonight. The cold wave is proceeding eastward, and is just beginning to be felt throughout Indiana. The snow is two feet deep in many places throughout the region of the blizzard.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 25.—The time of the fight is finally set for 1:30 this afternoon.

At noon Referee Kelly stepped into the Duval Club's bank and cashed the famous $20,000 check.

Time was called at 1:45 p. m.

FIRST ROUND.

First round, Corbett led with his left on Mitchell's chin. They clinch, exchange body blows and Jim reached Charley's left eye heavily. Corbett uppercuts Mitchell and lands with his right on his ribs. Mitchell is reaching Jim's chin, Mitchell gets in on Corbett's neck, Jim lands his right and right again, just as time was called. Honors even.

SECOND ROUND.

Wild excitement and a clineb; Corbett uppercuts his man as they come together. Mitchell lands hard on the ribs, and as Mitchell came in there was a sharp rally with Corbett having the best of it. Mitchell got in twice on Corbett's neck; Corbett knocks him down twice in succession. The gong saved Mitchell.

THE THIRD AND LAST.

Mitchell was rather groggy. Corbett rushed at him, swung right and left heavy on Mitchell's neck; Mitchell went down, took the full time to rise, then Corbett rushed at him like a tiger. Mitchell clinched; Corbett threw him off; floored him with a stiff facer; again he took all the time to rise and when he advanced toward Corbett, the latter swung his right with deadly effect on Mitchell's nose. Mitchell reeled, fell on his face helpless. The referee counted one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten—Mitchell was knocked out.

The referee declared Corbett the winner of the match and champion of the world.

The fight was all Corbett's though Mitchell made a show in the first round. Mitchell's face at the end was covered with blood. He was carried to his corner in a helpless condition.

The time of the fight was nine minutes. The men did not shake hands at the beginning of the fight. The referee called on them to do so, but neither responded.

ROCK SPRINGS, Wyo., Jan. 25.—A slight earthquake shock was perceptible to the residents of this vicinity the other morning. A rumbling noise like distant thunder was followed by a tremor which rattled the windows in the houses.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Jan. 27.—A dispatch from Buffalo states that Howard West, ex-assessor of Johnson county, started from that place to go to his ranch on Pinney creek, eighteen miles north, Tuesday afternoon in a terrible blizzard. His team was unable to pull the sled through the deep snow drifts, and West was compelled to unhitch them and endeavor to ride one of the horses. The horse stepped off a bridge over a deep ravine, and fell into a drift. West was unseated and his horse escaped from him. The unfortunate man attempted to make his way on foot, but was soon lost in the blinding storm and wandered about until the next morning, when he was discovered by a teamster between Fort McKinney and Buffalo. His feet, hands and face were frozen and the driving snow had completely blinded him. It is probable that Mr. West will lose both his hands and feet as well as his eyesight. It was a terrible experience.

BUFFALO, Wyo., Jan. 27.—There is an immense coal bank in Johnson county, which was on fire long before the first white man visited the country. There is many traditions among the Indians as to the origin of the fire, but all point to its great antiquity. It is possible that the mountain has been burning for three or four hundred years. The subterranean fire is indicated by the intense heat of the earth in that vicinity and the barren appearance of the ground.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—No conquering

general ever had a more triumphant entry into a city than that accorded to Prince Bismarck today. Ever since his reconciliation with the emperor he has been apparently a new man, his demeanor has entirely changed. He has been happy and light-hearted as formerly and he has greatly gained in general health and strength.

The Magdeburger cuirassiers, Bismarck's old regiment, were brought to Berlin for the purpose and placed on guard over the apartments in the palace assigned to him. After Bismarck had entered the palace, the people remained near, singing, "Die Wacht am Rhein," and other patriotic songs and jubilitating so enthusiastically that the emperor, empress and Bismarck were frequently compelled to appear at the window throughout the afternoon. Later in the day Chancellor Caprivi and other officials called and left cards for Bismarck.

DENVER, Jan. 26.—A peculiar railroad war between the Sanpete Valley road and Rio Grande Western is reported from Manti, Utah. The former line is forty-four miles long and runs down into the valley from Nephi, where it connects with the Union Pacific. For over half of this distance it parallels the Western and for the purpose of compelling this line to come to terms on the local rate, the Sanpete is carrying passengers and freight free. The manager declares he is able to keep this up for seven years, unless the Western comes to time. The Sanpete road is owned by an English company and is a narrow gauge.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—There is no truth in the sensational statements coming from Salt Lake that the Democrats have decided against Utah statehood, and that Utah is to be taxed up with a million dollars for past expenditures. The better view is that the Utah statehood opposition is neither Democratic nor Republican, but it lives in both parties as an opposition to the increase of western influence in Congress. It is the opposition of the same monometallic, monetary regime that dictated the Sherman law repeal. The fact is the opposition must be charged against Wall street pure and simple. There are more Democrats than Republicans in Congress who favor western representation.

JACKSONVILLE, Jan. 18.—The Duval club no longer exists. It broke up in a row today. Some hard names were passed between one of the members and Bowden, whose management was severely criticised. Bowden has washed his hands of the whole business. Other members of the club are going to reorganize with outside capital.

Bowden said tonight the club took in $31,000 in admissions to the fight, and out of this the $20,000 purse and $5,000 training expenses of the principals had to come, making a balance to the club's credit of $6,000, and out of this attorney's fees and other expenses have to be met.

"We are $5,000 loser by the governor's interference," he said.

The statement that the total receipts were only $31,000 is generally accepted with a grain of salt.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 27.—Receiver

Sholey sold this morning the mine located in Shoshone county, Idaho, to Charles F. Pfister, for $178,000, subject to mortgage and bills which bring the amount up to $251,000.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 27.—Foreign miners along the Panhandle road near Mansfield, Pa., angered at the English-speaking miners for returning to work at a reduced rate, this morning armed themselves with revolvers and other weapons and began going from mine to mine driving out the men at work. Several conflicts occurred in which a number of persons were hurt. The sheriff was informed that the situation was critical and left at once with 25 deputies with orders for more to follow.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—The thirty-fifth birthday of Emperor William was celebrated throughout Germany today with more enthusiasm than ever before; for with it was mingled the delight of the people at the reconciliation with Bismarck, which has added greatly to the young emperor's popularity. The streets around the palace were packed with people early. The decorations of yesterday were largely added to, one feature of the display being numerous busts of the emperor and Bismarck in the windows of shops and private houses.

The day opened with a royal salute. Then the emperor received the congratulations of his family, followed by those of civil and military officials. Later the whole court attended the impressive service in the royal chapel; then a grand reception was tendered all notables of Berlin in the White Hall of the castle, at which the kings of Saxony and Wurtemberg and the grand dukes and princes of various German states were present. Soon after, amid a scene of military splendor, the giving out of the parole and countersign occurred. Later the emperor was presented with a falchion in behalf of the guards corps. The weather was fine.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 27.—James B. Chapin, one of the best known men in the Northwest, committed suicide here last evening. He was aged 72 years and had acquired wealth from mining in Montana, after which he returned to Moorhead, Minn. Subsequently he lost it in real estate. Despondency over the losses was the cause.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—George H. Painter was executed at four minutes past eight o'clock this morning for the murder of Alice G. Martin.

The execution was horribly bungled. At the first attempt the rope broke and then the victim was carried back limp. Another rope was secured and he was strung up again.

Painter was a gambler and murdered his mistress. He was a thorough believer in hypnotism and made the peculiar request that he be hypnotized, in which case he claimed he could be compelled to repeat his actions on the night of the murder. The request was refused by the court. Strenuous efforts were made in his behalf and he was twice reprieved on affidavits tending to fix the crime on a man named Dick Edwards, a desperado bearing some resemblance to Painter, and now under sentence in Texas for the murdering of another woman. Last night, however, Governor Altgeld declined further to interfere with the course of justice.

On the gallows Painter called on God to cast him into everlasting flames if he was guilty of murder and asked if there was any true American present to hunt down the girl's murderer.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 27.—The California International Midwinter Exposition was opened at noon and San Francisco celebrated the greatest holiday of her history. The streets were gaily decorated, flags and banners flying from a thousand staffs. The ships in the harbor were adorned with the standards of many nations. Business was at a standstill, every road leading to the Golden Gate park and Fair grounds was crowded with visitors many of whom had crossed the continent to be here, and thousands had arrived from all parts of California and the Pacific coast.

The great procession made its way through the crowded streets to the park this morning and every car line was packed to the utmost capacity.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 29.—[Special.]—At a meeting of the Senate advisory committee last Saturday at which there were present Allison, Dubois, Quay, Dolph, Washburne, Callow, Aldrich, Manderson and Hale, the Utah case was fully discussed.

Union with Nevada was discarded as unadvisable. The final action taken with regard to Utah was the adoption unanimously of the resolution to recommend that the Republican members of the Senate interpose no obstacle to immediate statehood for Utah.

Senator Dubois, who has been very active and efficient in behalf of Utah interests, authorizes the statement that there will be no opposition to statehood for Utah on the part of the Republican members of the Senate.

Platt says he will interpose no objection to Utah's statehood.

The advisory committee make the same recommendations in regard to Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma, although Oklahoma presents difficulties in consequence of the condition of the Indian population in the territory occupied by the five tribes which is to be included in the grant of statehood.

As an absolute majority of the Democrats will vote for Utah statehood, the outlook is not discouraging.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 27.—A wave of anarchy, in whose train followed bloodshed, arson and destruction of property, passed over the Mansfield coal region today. It began at dawn and at dusk it was estimated that $200,000 worth of property had been destroyed.

Maddened by fancied grievances and liquor, a mob of several hundred foreigners, Hungarians, Slavs and Italians, swept over the country surrounding Mansfield and through the valleys of Teems and Painter's Run, attacked the mine owners, miners and the few scattered deputy sheriffs, wrecked cars and destroyed railroad property.

Until noon the mob met hardly any resistance. It reached the mines of Beadling Brothers, near Federal, on the Pittsburgh, Chartiers & Youghiogheny Railroad. Here the rioters met a determined resistance and were checked. With repeating and Winchester rifles, Thomas F. Williams and Harry Beadling stood their ground and opened fire upon the mob. They fired four volleys in quick succession, fatally wounding one and injuring half a dozen others.

PARIS, 27.—There was a turbulent scene in the chamber today, and the sitting was finally suspended by the president. Clovis Hugues interpellated the government on the recent arrests of anarchists, and reproached the government with the persecution as a pretext for suppressing the socialists.

Raynal, minister of the interior, replied that the government only applied the laws passed by the deputies. It was difficult to distinguish between socialists and anarchists.

Then followed a scene that has rarely if ever been equaled in the chamber. Men cursed and swore at each other, and shook their fists beneath each other's noses. Several breaches of the peace occurred, and one pugnacious deputy went so far as to challenge a fellow member to decide their differences by recourse to le savate.

M. Thivrien, the so-called "Workman's Deputy," who has already made himself notorious by wearing a blouse in the chamber, became so excited that he threw his cap in the air and shouted "Vive la Commune," and a number of commune exclamations, which entitles him to censure and expulsion from the chamber.

President Dupuy thereupon invited the excited deputy to withdraw his expressions. M. Thivrien refused to do so, in the most violent language, and loudly repeated the objectionable words several times, and in addition making an offensive gesture towards the president. This caused the president to firmly request the deputy to leave the chamber.

Then followed another scene of extreme disorder, all the socialists rising in their seats, gesticulating violently and uttering all kinds of insulting remarks. The socialists then formed a circle around M. Thivrien, who hurled defiance at the president, positively refusing to obey the order to leave the chamber.

M. Thivrien is excluded for the chamber for a fortnight, and, in addition, will be deprived of half of his salary.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—Rosina Vokes, of the famous Vokes family, is dead.

Miss Vokes was 40 years old. She went on the stage at the age of six years; in 1877 she married Cecil Clay and retired from the stage for a time but returned to it again. She has been suffering from overwork in the United States and closed her tour there, sailing for England the middle of last December.

ROME, Jan. 29.—Burglars last night broke open a safe in the American legation, wrecked the room, broke the bust of Washington, burned all the papers they could lay hands on, and destroyed the valuable library of the legation. There is no clue to the burglars.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 29.—Advices by steamer from China announce the complete annihilation by earthquake of the beautiful city of Ku Chan, Fehai, containing 20,000 inhabitants, of whom 12,000 were killed. Ten thousand bodies have been recovered. Fifty thousand cattle were also destroyed.

DENVER, Jan. 29.—Adjutant General Tareney, just returned from a visit to the Southern Ute agency, says: "The Indians are in very bad humor over the government delay in ratifying the treaty made three years ago, for their transfer into southern Utah. Unless the authorities at Washington take speedy action on the matter, the Utes will pack up and go into Utah without orders."

SHERIDAN, Wyo., Jan. 29.—Wm. F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill," visited Sheridan last week, and it is now announced that he has purchased an interest in the Sheridan Inn, the leading hotel of northern Wyoming. Cody has a scheme on foot to establish a hunting and fishing park in the Big Horn mountains in the vicinity of the Big Horn Hot springs, where game and fish is plentiful. A number of New York capitalists are interested in the enterprise.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Arguments were heard today by Judge Cox, of the District supreme court, in the application of Grand Master Workman Sovereign, of Knights of Labor, for an order restraining Carlisle from issuing bonds, as proposed. The court announced that he would render a decision tomorrow or Wednesday.

PARIS, Jan. 29.—The government has given notice of its intention to levy an increased import duty on wheat to seven francs and on flour in proportion.

TRALEE, Jan. 29.—The British bark Port Yarrock has been wrecked and all of the crew, numbering 25, drowned.

TOPEKA, Jan. 29.—The general passenger agent of the Mexican Central railroad at Chihuahua, Mex., telegraphs General Passenger Agent Nicholson, of the Santa Fe road, that the government troops overlook and surrounded the bandits at Arroyo del Mangona and defeated them, killing twenty-six, including the famous Lujan, and taking twenty-five prisoners. Victor Ochoa escaped, but it is certain he will be captured.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 29.—Judge Willis of the district court, rendered a decision declaring that the law for the suppression of railroad ticket scalping, by requiring the scalpers to have licenses, is unconstitutional, on the ground of class legislation.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The authorities have been in active communication the past few days with Minister Thompson and Admiral Benham at Rio. The nature of the interchanges cannot be learned, but it is believed they confirm the Associated Press reports as to the attempts to bring about an amicable settlement.

Seventeen tramps in a freight car on the Union Pacific barely escaped freezing to death on the summit of the mountains west of Cheyenne during the recent blizzard. They were in a box car and on a sidetrack all night. All were badly frozen and in a pitiable condition when they reached Cheyenne.

Well may Arizona be proud of her public school system says the Flagstaff Democrat. It gives a larger per capita to the child than almost any other state in the Union and the teachers throughout the Territory are endeavoring to raise and improve the standard of education in many directions.

Written for this Paper.

SOME OTHER THINGS.

Every man is interested in the ways and methods of business, because he has business with somebody, and he is affected by things with which he is not always familiar. If he is a buyer of goods the price is set for him. He knows nothing of the cost, or rate of profit, and it is not every man who runs from place to place to see whether he can get an article cheaper than the last or any other offer. If a man is a seller of potatoes, eggs, wheat or other of his own product, he does not often visit the stores around to see if he can get a cent more for the bushel or dozen. In fact the majority of retail buyers go to a store from habit; often in the old world because their fathers dealt at a place, so do they. But in this locality there is more or less of an unsettled disposition in regard to such things; sometimes from unacknowledged suspicion, at other times from curiosity to see what can be done, particularly where a person gets an idea that he is extra smart himself; mainly, however, from restlessness, independence, or just to try. Where time is no object a good deal of familiarity with goods and trade is acquired, and yet after all the ordinary buyer never becomes much more than a novice, and is always subject to deception as to quality even when he thinks he secures a standard price. But few are aware of the extent of adulteration, and of those who buy a keg of pickles or syrup, only one here and there makes any query as to the contents, or knows whether a so-called five gallon keg holds anywhere from fifteen to twenty-five per cent less or more than what is assumed. These are trade secrets so-called, and the inexperienced wholesale man only fathoms the deception after a course of training which tells a story of unexpected and, till discovery, unexplainable competition. Some of the shrewd ones though get posted in all the intricacies of deception. They know all brands and will run a block or two to save a fraction of a cent per dozen or pound, as the case may be. They become "close buyers" and every seller has to adapt himself to this reputation even to save himself. Diplomacy is often resorted to by a salesman with such a customer, and occasionally so strong a feeling of antagonism has been aroused that an advantage was taken when it was possible to take it.

A little incident of some years ago will illustrate this, where a certain traveling salesman was so pertinaciously "beared" by a buyer of domestic that a quarter of a cent a yard was allowed from the going price; some purchases the same day of buttons and combs made the salesman's discount good and gave a handsome profit besides. Another instance (and they are numerous) was where some men's clothing was sold below the price of another house—the same goods exactly—but near two dollars per each was added to some boys' suits; and the transaction if sharp was considered sound. So that if such a buyer makes a few cents through pressure or familiarity with one article, human nature is not big enough yet for one to "know it all," so not unfrequently "the bitter is really bit."

The late condition of trade has brought out this feature in unusual degree. Storekeepers and buyers have become so anxious in regard to their salvation that economy without precedent has been inaugurated; and to increase trade or secure a larger profit some buyers have run everywhere at home to save a cent, and when they have done so, as President Young once said, they have "nipped it until the eagle squeaked." But it is doubtful whether these, if they did have a margin, made any more profit; because much of this wild trading had behind it a lack of principle—in this, that buyers who thus went out of their way to save a dime, paid their money for goods when it was owing to another, and that other had for years been a lenient, staunch and ready helper.

Conversing with a friend on the street the other day, concerning a house in the same line, the prosperous cash business of the latter was discounted upon, and several buyers of that class were mentioned. "Ah," said the first speaker, "every one of those is indebted upon our books." Human nature—trade nature—we all know is very peculiar, but ingratitude is a blighting feature everywhere, and it is one which should find no place in a trading community of ostensible brethren. Yet all business men of this class know from experience that to befriend some men is to make them enemies, and if you give them too much leeway as credit they will become jealous and irritable, suspicious and petulant, and for little excuse or none you may lose their trade and an account as well.

Some time ago the representative of a large wholesale city house visited a country store which had a heavy indebtedness. Something in liquidation was suggested, but the reply, given in a cavalier kind of way, was: "We have to meet So-and-So at such a date, and So-and-So." "Well, but our claim is a prior one and settlement is desirable soon." Security was eventually given, but failure was inevitable—and it came; came as the result of divided trade, and justly, because it was a dishonorable one. Purchases East, West and elsewhere, precipitated a desirable and a profitable business into irredeemable delinquency. As a set-off to this in another direction was an accommodating store. They were heavily in debt too; they had book accounts, but a poor harvest made them uncollectable; patience and leniency on the part of the one debtor, helped to tide over the year and that store has flourished ever since.

There are men now, and stores, whose indebtedness is scattered, and the little they have coming in will not keep them going. Paid out, by division, their receipts hardly count, and each creditor is on the qui vive to see what his brother creditor will do. Here is antagonism in another form, and the trader, at his wits end, knows not which way to turn. He would like to placate them all—the one in Omaha and St. Joe and the one in Salt Lake; the one in San Francisco and Chicago and the one at home; but it cannot be done and so you see now and again scheduled, preferred and unpreferred accounts, as if the victim had found himself "between the devil and the deep, deep sea."

This all grows out of the insanity of competition, which is as bitter here (more so, for many reasons) as elsewhere in the West. Yet eastern papers declare that save in rural districts this class of competition is unknown. The grocer there asserts that he makes a living profit on sugar. Here in Salt Lake City for this article, wholesale and retail are synonymous terms; and many other goods are reaching consumers through a margin which means disaster and loss to the seller. The great public claims that it gets the benefit of this depression and competition. It may for the moment, but it is at the expense of principle, of honesty and of dealers, here or elsewhere. A fair profit is in the nature of a fair wage for services rendered, and those who out and out, to please the public or themselves, are the cause of demoralization in trade and deal. But whether in this way or by adulteration, this class are not the friends but are enemies rather of a reputable, stable, honest, conscientious community at last.

The press voices the coming of a mighty change. Bankruptcy in excess is creating strange comment, and every department of trade and manufactures is turning upon financial matters the search light of personal and broader interest; and bye and bye every buyer and seller will be called upon to give security for his integrity and for the disposition of all property or merchandise which may be entrusted to him on credit. Competition will be less reckless then. It will assume a more healthy phase in all directions. Trusts or state supervision will annihilate the bankrupt's Gazette. The world will be richer, and the galling chain of competition will be lifted from the neck of all human endeavor to the glorification of man.

Written for this Paper

SPRAYING ORCHARDS.

William Laurensen, writing from Mill Creek, Salt Lake county, under date of January 17th, offers some suggestions as to the spraying of fruit trees, that are perhaps worthy the attention of orchardists or this region, and that will be of genuine interest to fruit-eaters generally. He says:

I would like to say a few words through your valuable paper about spraying fruit or apple orchards. I sprayed nine orchards in the spring of 1898 and know that the operation is not an experiment; while it is not a cure-all, it is a preventive and a success if only carried out.

I will say that I do not have anything to sell and am not after money, but will give any information free to those who have orchards and wish to help themselves and neighbors to destroy the cooling moth—the terror of the orchard. In many instances undoubtedly species that are now very formidable were in existence here before, but in such small numbers as to remain unnoticed until multiplication of their numbers compelled recognition.

There are a great many here who do not take any care of their fruit-growing orchards—and there are orchards here of two acres or eighty trees that do not return the owner eight bushels of poor worm-eaten fruit a year, where they should produce 800 bushels if pruned and sprayed.

Firstly, all the extra wood that is on an apple tree deprives it of sap and vitality; secondly in importance is spraying, to grow healthy fruit and destroy the moth. How often the hopes of people are disappointed by mildew on gooseberries, when it can be helped by a mixture of bluestone and lime applied twice or three times a year!

But the worst we have to fight in the orchard is the codling moth or apple worm which broods twice in one year, first in May and June and second in July, August and September. We have several other species, such as the canker or measuring-worm, tent caterpillar and bark louse, woolly aphid and red spider; which can all be nearly destroyed by a few applications if taken in time.

The apple crop of the last season was almost a failure, mainly due to these insects and fungus diseases. The spring was exceedingly wet and cold when the orchards were in bloom, heavy rain fell after the blossoms withered and the leaves began to blight during the early part of the season. It is a fact that insects and parasites flourish best in cool, moist weather in the spring.

As I do not wish to take up too much space in your paper I will merely say, let not the people get lured into buying a brass tube for a pump such as certain advertised combinations; it is worthless as a spray; agents are selling the same for $5.00 and $6.00, and they also wanted $9.00 for a right to you to spray your own orchard, and 50 cents for a box of the mixture. I cannot sympathize with people that get bit that way; for I will give you the address of a firm that will send you a pump for $2.50 that is better; if you will call on me I will cheerfully give you the information where to get your pumps and also the arsenic to spray with.

Now, I wish to ask any readers of this, why we cannot make a success here in fruit-raising as well as Colorado, California, Illinois, New York and Wisconsin or Montana? They all have to spray both fruit and vegetables.

To the above communication are appended many testimonials from neighbors of our correspondent, well-known residents of Salt Lake county, who speak from experience concerning the benefits of spraying their orchards, not only in increasing the yield and improving the quality of the crop, but also in eradicating the destructive insect life above referred to. Among other signers are T. G., William and Mrs. Mary Boam, of Mill Creek; John and Joseph Sutherland, Mary Samuels, Walter Templeman, J. H. Brinton, Thomas H. Peirce, Sarah F. Bawden, Mr. Hobbs, of South Cottonwood; Mr. "Jack" Hill, etc. ED. D. E. NEWS.

THE PIONEER PLOWMAN.

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 25, 1894.

On my return home from the East some months ago, I found waiting me the following letter from William Carter, of St. George, Utah. It speaks for itself, and treats upon a subject that is of historical interest to all the people of Utah; it also throws additional light upon the matter referred to in a statement published in the EVENING NEWS of August 19, 1888.

ANDREW JENSON.

St. GEORGE, 12th Sept., 1893.

Elder Andrew Jenson, Salt Lake City:

Dear Brother—I have been laboring in the mountains for the past month, but on my arrival home, my attention was called to an article published by you in the DESERET NEWS, requesting more information regarding who had done the first plowing in the valley of Great Salt Lake.

Before the first celebration was held to commemorate the Twenty-fourth, President Young called upon all the pioneers to meet with him at his office; it was then and there decided that William Carter should carry the plow at the celebration, as he was the man who laid off and plowed the first half acre in the valley—Brother Marble drove the team. When Brother Heber told me I was to carry the plow, I told him I was not the man who had first broke the sod, Brother Heber said: "Yes, yes; we understand about that, but you are the man to carry the plow," and I always carried the plow on the 24th while I remained in Salt Lake City, no one disputing my right to the honor. Those ahead of me broke their plow before they got to the land to be plowed. We met them coming back to camp as we were going out to plow.

When we got to the ground chosen by Colonel Marham for our farm operations Brother Marham said: "Brother Carter, are you ready to plow?" I answered, "Yes." He then said: "You start from here and I will go to the point I wish you to plough," which I did, and thus plowed half an acre before any other team got upon the ground. The Knutsford hotel is now built upon the same block, and I think the first plowing was done where the hotel now stands.

It is rather late in the day for Brother Kendall to claim the honor of doing the first plowing 46 years ago. And then he only drove the team that turned the first sod, which was of no practical benefit. I have no objections for him also receiving a medal, if the judges feel disposed to give him one. I don't think it is at all necessary for me to go before a justice of the peace to establish my statements; they are incontrovertible. It would please me and my friends if you also publish these statements in the DESERET NEWS. I am,

Your Brother in the Gospel,
WILLIAM CARTER.

AROUND THE CAMP-FIRE.

SPRINGVILLE, Utah,
Jan. 24, 1894.

As chairman of the general committee of the Black Hawk reunion, I have requested our correspondent, Mrs. Ellen Jakeman, to send the minutes of our entertainment to you for publication, believing that it will reach more of our friends through your paper; and in doing so I believe I express the sentiments of a majority of my comrades.

Yours truly,
J. M. WESTWOOD.

At 2:30, Jan. 24, the comrades in arms of the Black Hawk war were ordered by Lieutenant Westwood to fall in line. Reynolds's hall had been beautifully decorated for the occasion. A motto at the east end said in gold and green, "Welcome Comrades." The walls, window arches and pillars were draped and swathed with flags. Guns that had served with the veterans in their arduous labors, were stacked at the base of the pillars, and one gun belonged to Enel Stewart, just deceased. Some arms were there also that belonged to Battalion boys, deceased.

Twenty old veterans sang a song composed especially for the occasion, entitled, "The Black Hawk War," the tune being, "John Brown's Body." The entire assembly joined in the chorus.

Comrade Beardall offered the opening prayer.

An old time song, "Our Leaky Tents," was sung by the same band of veterans; tune, "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching."

Comrade Frank C. Boyer made a very happy speech of welcome. Among other things he told of the origin of the war these comrades were engaged in. When the history of Sanpete and Sevier counties should be written it would be acknowledged that they owed their prosperity and homes to the brave boys who had risked their lives in fighting Indians.

At the close of his remarks he introduced two old veterans of the Mormon battalion, Jutahen Averett and James Oakley, who were received with enthusiasm.

Dancing was then indulged in until 4 o'clock when the visitors present, numbering some three hundred, formed into line and gallantly marched to supper.

There were present nearly five hundred people who partook of an elegant and profuse repast; waiters, committees and cooks having gathered up everything in fine style. George Harrison had general charge and sustained his reputation.

Then followed a lengthy program of speech and song and recitation, commemorating the deeds of heroism, self-sacrifice and devotion of those who had taken part in those stirring scenes of early days.

The dancing and feasting continued until 5 o'clock in the morning, interspersed frequently with parts of the program. The greatest freedom and good feeling prevailed, and everybody declared it to be one of the most enjoyable events in a decade.

Before dismissal Lieutenant Westwood in a short, terse speech suggested the desirability of making a permanent organization. After some discussion it was agreed that a committee should be elected to consider the matter and lay the results of their deliberations before a Campfire meeting sometime during next summer.

The committee are as follows:

Lieutenant Westwood, chairman, Springville; Roger Farr, Provo; J. S. Page, Payson; S. W. Brown, Alpine; Daniel W. Thomas, Lehi; Alvin Green, American Fork; W. O. Creer, Spanish Fork; D. W. Driggs, Pleasant Grove; Francis Beardsall, Springville. F. C. Boyer, secretary.

Mayor Hall made a speech of welcome to the visitors, and of commendation to the people of Springville on the action taken. He commended the remarks made in behalf of women as participants in all the hardships of pioneer life.

Milando Pratt moved that a hearty vote of thanks be tendered to the comrades and people of Springville, which was heartily responded to. Everybody dispersed feeling that the reunion had been a grand success.

The following are the names of those present who actually participated in engagements with Indians during the Black Hawk war:

Springville—Henry Curtis, J. H. Neeks, Lyle Curtis, David Dibble, W. L. Johnson.

Payson—M. H. Daley, John Turner, Henry Elmer, William Loveless.

Pleasant Grove—L. O. Lurd, Frederick Thorn, Robert Thorn, Robert Cobbley.

Spanish Fork—John Jones, E. P. Thomas, S. M. Hicks, A. R. M. Beck, John Houghton, John Hill.

Provo—Byron Pace, T. E. Fleming, Horatio Clark, Erastus Snow.

FATAL SNOWSLIDES.

With a mighty roar as of thunder, a terrific snowslide came down the mountains at Mullin, Idaho, on the 18th, carrying everything with it, says the Rexburg Silver Hammer. Several miners' cabins in its path were crushed and buried. Cornelia McVey and John Lion were eating dinner at their cabin, and before they realized the danger, the slide was upon them, crushing the life out of them in a twinkling. It is feared others are buried under the immense slide of snow. Not until spring comes will it be known how many perished. The town of Mullin narrowly escaped being carried away.

Today's Logan Journal contains the following: "A snowslide occurred in Strawberry canyon near Mink Creek the other day. Three teams were coming down with loads at the time. Drivers, horses, wagons and all were completely buried. Two other men were partially covered up. Aside from the killing of three horses and the injury of two men there was nothing fatal though one Hans Nelson was under the snow for two hours."

It is hoped that this account represents the full extent of damage by the snowslide, but a much more serious report has reached Salt Lake. A young lady, of Mink Creek, Miss Hilda Graham, is now residing in this city, and has received a letter stating that her brother was caught in the snowslide, and that he was taken out dead. His body, when found, was standing head downwards in the snow. No further particulars are given. As the letter comes from a friend, it is possible that the full details of the accident were not known at the time of writing, and that the occurrence was not so bad as at first reported. In the meantime Miss Graham is in a state of deep grief and anxiety regarding her brother.

Four girls were killed in the snowslide which occurred on Wednesday of

